The Man Who Borrows

The man who borrows gets the habit. And it's a bad habit. The chronic borrower is shunned by his friends, and soon becomes his own worst enemy.

The best way to keep from borrowing is to have a savings account at the bank. Then, if you need money, draw it and you are under obligations to no one.

Most men and women make a fizzle of saving, because they put a great deal of thought into earning of money and none at all into the saving of it.

COMPLIMENTARY CONCERT

The Saturday evening crowd which is always prevalent in Chelsea on that evening, was agreeably surprised last Saturday night when the strains of a lively two-step was heard as the opening of an unannounced band concert by the Chelsea band. After the playing of two numbers there was a recess of about an hour, caused by the inability of the municipal light plant to furnish current for the village for that length of time. But sticktiveness is characteristic of all band men and the Chelsea boys are not exceptions to the rule. When the streets were again flooded with light, at 9:15, they proceeded to finish the well prepared program, which consisted of several marches, overtures and waltzes.

The concert was in honor of J. L. Smith, member of the band, who will soon leave Chelsea. Mr. Smith, who has lived in Chelsea for the past two years, has always been an active worker in all band and orchestra activities. He was leader of the band for some time. The band boys regret the loss of such a good and faithful member.

Although the concert was in honor of Mr. Smith, everyone seemed to thoroughly enjoy it and we wonder why there isn't enough interest in Chelsea to promote a band concert every week.

Miss Mary McIntee.

Miss Mary McIntee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene McIntee, was born in Lyndon, October 27, 1880, and died Sunday, July 31, 1921, at 6537 Linwood Avenue, Detroit after an illness of two weeks.

She was a graduate of St. Mary's Training School for Nurses, in Detroit. During the recent war she was stationed at Camp Custer and during the influenza epidemic at that camp she assisted in the care of many of the soldier boys who were stricken with that disease. She was afterwards transferred to U. S. A. cantonment at East View, New York. Miss McIntee was a member of the Army Nurse Corps. The hearers were members of Herbert J. McKune Post, The American Legion.

She is survived by her mother, Mrs. Mary McIntee, two brothers and three sisters: Rose and Herbert of Lyndon, Mrs. Howard Collings of Stockbridge, Owen McIntee of Sylvan, and Miss Frances McIntee of Detroit.

The funeral was held from St. Mary church, Wednesday morning, Rev. John Mullen, of Collegeville, Indiana, a cousin, conducted the services. Interment at Mt. Olivet cemetery.

Masons to Hold Basket Picnic.

The Masonic Lodges of Chelsea will hold a basket picnic at Eisenbeiser's grove, North Lake, on Thursday, August 18, to which all Masons and their families are invited. A big time celebration is being planned under the supervision of able committees.

Although the program has not been completed, it is certain that an able speaker will be on hand and the Chelsea band will be there with their usual good music. Among other things a base ball game and other athletic sports are being planned so that there will be plenty of amusement for every one.

Transportation will be furnished those who have no way to go; the first group of machines leaving the Masonic hall at 9:30 and the second group of machines at 10:30. Extra trips will be made if necessary.

Read at Our Meeting August 3.

As members of the Woman's Baptist Missionary Society, we thank our dear heavenly Father for the long and loving ministry of Mrs. Lucie E. Chase.

The last few years, the ripening of the sheaf for her eternal home, prevented her rendering active service, but the younger members gladly carried on the work, and were pleased to keep her our president to the last.

We miss her counsel and co-operation in the affairs of Christ's Kingdom, but feel she can say with Paul in Philippians 1:21, "For me to live is Christ and to die is gain."

Enjoyable Social Event.

The Service Class, with Mrs. Carl Rutan as teacher, of the Methodist Sunday school, gave a miscellaneous shower in honor of Mrs. Edwin I. Gaunt, of Detroit, formerly Miss Louise Ives of this place, at the Koehne cottage at Cavanaugh Lake, on Friday evening, July 29.

One of the features of the evening was Cupid's announcement of the marriage of Berniece A. Prudden to J. Austin Palmer, which will take place in the near future. A very enjoyable time by spent by all.

It is not true that automobiles can legally drive at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour in this state yet. A law to that effect was passed some time ago, but it does not go into effect until the 19th of August, 1921.

BOUND OVER TO CIRCUIT

COURT ON MURDER CHARGE

Peter Orlando, Sam Morceri and Tony Spero, of Detroit, charged with the murder of George Burg, Saline township farmer, and his hired man, Henry Fulmer, on July 15 were Friday given an examination in Ann Arbor and bound over to the October term of circuit court.

The men were not placed upon the stand, but extracts from signed statements they have made were read into the record by Sheriff Pack, the statements being in the nature of confessions.

Each defendant, however, mentioned three other men. Spero, the only one of the three held, who was in the Burg barn at the time of the shooting laid the blame for the shooting on a tall man whose name was not divulged. It was this man, according to Spero, who shot both Burg and Fulmer, when Burg refused to allow the four men to bind his hands with a rope they had brought for that purpose.

The statements by Morceri and Orlando agreed with that of Spero, their knowledge coming from the conversation between the men after the murder had been committed and while the car was speeding toward Detroit. That robbery and not murder was the motive of the trip to the Burg farm was claimed by all three.

Primary School Fund.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Thomas E. Johnson, Tuesday announced that the apportionment to counties from the state primary school fund for this year will amount to approximately $10.50 per child of school age. The total amount to be received by the various counties and municipalities have not yet been compiled.

The total amount to be distributed this year will be $10,260,568.50. The total and the per capita apportionment will be the highest this year of any single year in the history of the state, except in 1907 when the fund for three years was apportioned because of court action which held up the primary money in the two preceding years.

According to the figures upon which the apportionment will be based there are, this year 997,197 children between the ages of 5 and 21 in the state. Last year there were 935,622. The total fund distributed in 1920 was $9,346,024.50 and the per capita was $10.

Mrs. Henry A. Wilson.

Stella Muriel Parks was born in Dallas, Clinton Co., Michigan, April 17, 1867, her parents being Morris A. and Helen Wimple Parks. She was married to Henry A. Wilson, April 25, 1888, moving to the farm in Lima where she spent her entire married life.

She leaves, beside her husband, two daughters, Mrs. Jay Clark, of Salem, Michigan, and Mrs. Walter Crippen, of Van Nuys, California, four grandchildren, her father, one sister, Mrs. C. D. Monroe, of Pittsburg, Pa. a nephew, besides a host of friends, to mourn their loss.

She was a charter member of the O. E. S. and a member of the Methodist church.

Short funeral services were held from her late home at 1:30 p. m. and from the First M. E. church, Chelsea, at 2:30 Saturday, July 30. Rev. Philip Wittich of Salem, officiating. Services at the grave were in charge of the Order of the Eastern Star. Interment in Oak Grove cemetery.

Accident on Michigan Central.

An accident about midnight Monday tied up traffic on the Michigan Central railroad for several hours. Near Inkster a rail on the west-bound track had been removed and No. 7, westbound, consisting of an engine, club car, and the remainder Pullmans, were derailed. The engine went into the ditch and the club car square across the eastbound track. The eastbound No. 20, which was made up the same as No. 7, ran into the club car and demolished it.

Both engineers were injured and engineer Black of No. 7 had both of his been caught under his engine, which had to be lifted with jackscrews before he could be released. The railway detectives found the tools that had been used to remove the rails.

No. 7 is due in Chelsea at 12:48 a. m. and No. 20 at 10:40 p. m.

Gleaner Picnic.

Waterloo Arbor of Gleaners will hold their 23rd annual picnic in Riemenschneider's grove, at Cavanaugh Lake, on Saturday, August 13.

Addresses will be delivered by Grant H. Shocum, of Detroit, president of the order, and Judge George W. Sample, of Ann Arbor.

The Waterloo band will furnish the music. A base ball game between Francisco and Lyndon teams and sports of all kinds will help to make the day a very enjoyable one.

Canning Notes.

No vegetable is more delicious in the winter than sweet corn properly canned.

The cold pack method is the safest and best.

Remove husk and silk. Blanch in boiling water for five minutes on cob. Dip in cold water. Cut corn from cob and pack into hot jars, one-fourth inch from top.

Fill jars with boiling water. Add level teaspoon of salt per quart. Put on new rubbers, and screw covers down as tight as possible with thumb and little finger.

Put into boiler or canner with boiling water over the top of the cans and let boil for three hours.

Remove and tighten covers. Corn seems to give home canners more trouble than do most products, but if these rules are followed, there need be no difficulty.

Select the corn just between the milk and dough stage.

If one person works alone, only just enough corn should be cut off for one jar at a time and the jar packed at once.

Due to the starch present, the corn expands a little in boiling, and therefore the jars should not be quite full.

Corn should never be allowed to remain in the cold dip water. Be sure to sterilize cans well and use only new rubbers.

Ancient Customs Observed.

The marriage of Miss Sofia Athanassou and Mr. Charles P. Johnson, which took place in Macabee hall last Thursday evening, was attended by a large number of relatives and friends and many of the residents of this place. An altar was placed in the west end of the hall and a circle was formed around the contracting couple by those present.

The Greek Orthodox ceremony was performed by Rev. Geo. Pathredes and his assistant and was an unusually long one. At the close of the services the bridal party and their attendants formed a circle and marched around the altar and the priest several times and were the recipients of a liberal shower of rice and candy.

Dance music was furnished by a Greek orchestra and many who were present danced with the bride and groom. Many of those who danced presented a pretty figure on the floor and executed many fancy steps. The music was all ancient Greek as well as were all of the dances.

A wedding dinner was served at 8:30 o'clock and it was a feast that was enjoyed and partaken of liberally.

Relatives and friends of the couple were present from Pennsylvania, Ohio, and from several places in Michigan.

German M. E. S. S. Picnic.

The Sunday school of the Salem German M. E. church, near Francisco, held their annual picnic, Saturday, July 30, in Riemenschneider's grove at Cavanaugh Lake.

An unusually large crowd was present for the bountiful dinner which was served at noon. After dinner, a program was given in honor of Rev. Beal, former pastor of the church. The girls' chorus sang some of the songs they used at the time of Rev. Beal's pastorate here. At the time Rev. Beal left, which was ten years ago, he asked that all boys and girls of the church write a letter to him, to be opened ten years from that date, and tell what they would like to make of their future lives. These letters were read, much to the amusement of the grown-up "children" who wrote them, and to all others present.

Much Grain Wasted.

Hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain are lost to consumption each year on American farms because of improper adjustment and lack of efficiency in the operation of threshing machines. The United States Department of Agriculture has given considerable attention to this loss with a view to ascertaining how far improved methods can be economically introduced to adjust waste. It is true, experts point out, that sometimes the time and labor involved in checking a small loss is worth more than the saving. Nevertheless, there are many leaks on almost every threshing job which might easily be stopped if the farmer or machine operator would spend a few hours in the study of the problem and a few dollars in replacing worn and damaged parts.

Feeding the grain into the machine, adjustment of the cleaner, and other small items go to make up a total that may mean gain or loss. Much grain is wasted by failure to clean up at the end of the setting. The United States Department of Agriculture has issued Farmers' Bulletin 991, "The Efficient Operation of Threshing Machines," which contains much good advice on this subject. This bulletin may be obtained by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

The road builders of Michigan are seeking heavy, according to landscape engineer, C. F. Roehler, of the State Highway Department. If his predictions come true, the trunk line highways of the state may, in the next few years, be flanked with trees and shrubbery.

Where the going is specially heavy with snow, mud or sand, in hilly country where maximum traction on the road is a factor, no other tire tread yet devised is quite so effective, or so wholly approved by motoring opinion, as the U. S. Nobby Tread.

Its very simplicity—three rows of diagonal knobs, gripping the road—is the result of all the years of U. S. Rubber experience with every type of road the world over.

Acceptance by Japan Makes Way Clear for the Conference in Washington

SILESIA CRISIS PASSING

France and Britain Reach Agreement and Germany Is Warned—Harding's Plan for Financial Relief of Railroads, Farmers and Cattle Raisers.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

With a mind not yet quite at ease in the matter, Japan has sent word that she will accept President Harding's invitation to the Washington conference to discuss limitation of armaments and questions of the Pacific and the Far East. But this is to be with certain reservations. These are expressed in the closing part of Tokyo's latest note to Washington, which reads:

"The Japanese government have been made aware through the communications and the published statement of the American government and the conversations between the secretary of state and Baron Shidehara that the proposition of the American government to discuss the Pacific and Far Eastern problems is based on the question of limitation of armaments, which is the original and principal aim of the conference, and that, therefore, the main object of discussing these problems is to reach a common understanding in regard to general principles and policies in the Pacific and Far East.

"In order to insure the success of the conference, the Japanese government deem it advisable that the agenda thereof should be arranged in accordance with the main object of the discussions as above defined, and that introduction therein of problems such as are of sole concern to certain particular powers, or such matters as may be regarded as accomplished facts, should be scrupulously avoided."

Of course, among what Japan considers "accomplished facts" are the cession of Shantung to Japan and the Yap mandate. But our State department is confident the Japanese can be satisfied in the drawing up of the agenda for the conference, and therefore is now preparing the formal invitations to the powers.

There is a chance that some of the British dominions, which consider themselves full-fledged nations in most respects, will kick up a little trouble because the British empire is to be represented as a unit, with only one vote. Australia already is wailing that she is entitled to a vote as a nation on the Pacific problems. Probably New Zealand, and possibly Canada, feel the same way. Rene Viviani and Albert Sarraut, minister of colonies, are to represent France at the conference; and Premier Briand also may come.

No decided opposition to holding the conference in Washington has developed, but the date of its opening remains to be settled. The United States tentatively mentioned November 11, Armistice day, because it would be sentimentally suitable, but again the British dominions protest. Many of their legislative bodies are in session during the fall months, and as their premiers wish to be present at the conference, they are urging that a later date be selected for its assembling. It may be they can be satisfied by preliminary informal consultations between Pacific powers which will enable them to put their views on record.

Through mutual concessions—France yielding the most—Great Britain and France have reached an understanding on the Upper Silesian question, and the threatened break in the entente will not occur just yet, anyhow. France abandoned her intention of sending immediate reinforcements to the Silesian garrison and agreed to a meeting of the inter-allied supreme council in Paris August 4. But she insisted the question of strengthening the allied forces in the region must first be settled, and also warned the British that any hostile act against the French troops or the Poles in the disputed area would result in the immediate occupation of the Ruhr basin, regardless of allied action.

Premier Lloyd George, on his part, consented to a meeting of experts to examine into the Silesian problem, and also conciliated the French by giving the German government a sharp rebuff. When France was preparing to send more troops to Silesia, she asked the Germans to supply the transportation. Berlin sent a note to London, asking if the British endorsed this demand. To this Downing street replied curtly that it was an inter-allied affair and not discussible with outsiders. British Ambassador Lord D'Abernon in Berlin also told the Germans that if the French or Poles were attacked the British would help in the occupation of the Ruhr basin.

For some time there have been rumors that former Emperor Charles was planning another coup to regain the throne of Hungary. Last week Roumania, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia signed a treaty providing for a declaration of war against Hungary if Charles should return. It is officially announced in Madrid that negotiations are under way for giving the ex-emperor and his family asylum in Spain. The consent of the other powers is necessary.

Having destroyed a considerable part of the Turkish nationalist army and advanced so far that even Ankara, the nationalist capital, is threatened, the Greeks are restoring their lines of communication and preparing for the second phase of the offensive. General Papadoulas, their commander-in-chief on the Smyrna front, says: "We are not going to let up on Mustafa Kemal Pasha until we have so completely dissolved his forces that he will never again be able to put an army in the field." Apparently Kemal realizes that he is being thoroughly whipped, for he has appealed to the government at Constantinople to intervene and stop the warfare. How this can be done is not clear. Kemal's own government is said to be abandoning Ankara and transferring its archives to Sivas.

Evidently Kemal has not been receiving the aid he expected from the Russian bolsheviks. Lenin and Trotsky and their soviet crew are themselves in hard straits due to the rapid spread of famine and cholera in Russia. They have appealed loudly for help, but the governments they have so long flouted are deaf to their calls. Even the United States, always generous in response to the walls of the suffering, has told the soviet government, through a note from Secretary Hoover, that any relief measures would depend largely on the treatment of the Americans held prisoners by the bolsheviks. "This was reinforced by a note from the State department formally and cordially demanding the release of those prisoners, and the soviet rulers already had been told there would be no consideration of closer relations with Russia until the Americans were set free.

The distress in Russia is such that Trotsky has been given dictatorial powers to handle the situation, and all government projects except those for relief have been suspended. The Irish affair is still in status quo. De Valera and the Sinn Fein cabinet have been studying Lloyd George's offer, but have let it be known that it cannot be accepted until the British have released the imprisoned members of Dail Eireann so that parliament can have a full meeting to discuss the plan. The British government is willing to free these men if De Valera will make the request, but the Sinn Feiners feel that for him to do this would be in effect a recognition of the government's right to imprison representatives of Ireland. Lord High Chancellor McKenna in a speech in the house of lords, asked that parliament and the country have patience.

with the trouble De Valera and his colleagues may be having in Dublin to reach a decision, and intimated the negotiations may continue several weeks.

A recent rumor concerning Lloyd George's plan is that it provides for two senates in Ireland, one for Ulster and one for the rest of the island, each managing its own affairs but subject to an Irish parliament in Dublin in which the members of the lower house shall be elected on a popular representation basis and the upper house shall have equal numbers from the two provinces.

President Harding and Director General Davis of the railroad administration having worked out a plan for the relief of the railroads, the President last week presented it to congress in a message and asked for legislative action. Briefly, he urged that the War Finance corporation be permitted by congress to purchase about $500,000,000 of securities deposited with the railroad administration as evidence of the railroad debts to the government, the railroad administration then to apply the purchase price against claims which the roads have against the government, thus giving the roads funds that they greatly need. "There is no thought to ask congress for additional funds," said Mr. Harding. "No added expense, no investment is required on the part of the government; there is no added liability, no added tax burden."

Less definite was the part of the message asking congress to approve assistance to farmers and cattle men. But his plan here, too, rests on added authority for the War Finance corporation, and later Senator Kellogg introduced the administration bill providing that whenever the corporation is of the opinion that conditions arising out of the war have resulted in an abnormal surplus accumulation of any staple agricultural product, which is normally exported in substantial quantity, and that the ordinary banking facilities are inadequate to carry such products until they can be exported, advances may be made for periods not exceeding one year and up to $1,000,000,000.

Either the public health service has been receiving a lot of false information, or the public officials of southern states refuse to admit the truth. Recently Surgeon General Cummings received reports that the South is threatened with an epidemic of pellagra and a resulting semi-famine, and thereupon President Harding called on the public health service and the American Red Cross to investigate at once, and devise measures of relief. It was said the low price of cotton, with resulting shortage of money, was to blame. The two agencies got busy at once, and at the same time in came the protests of the southern states. In all cases the state health officials took issue with the reports of the public health service, most of them denying vigorously that there was any increase of pellagra and all denying that the situation was serious or that a semi-famine threatened.

The Illinois scandal, or comedy—whichever way you look at it—had an amazing development when Governor Small, indicted for embezzlement of state funds, decided that he was immune to arrest during his term in office and considered the calling out of state troops to protect himself. His lawyers, appearing before Judge Smith of Springfield as "amici curiae," advised the court that the governor was immune, ridiculously basing their assertion on the old maxim that "the king can do no wrong." The judge humored their solemn dignity with a long and erudite opinion, in which he completely riddled their position, turned their authorities against themselves and made it quite clear that in his view these friends of the court were offering decidedly unfriendly advice. He ruled that the governor, like any other man, was not immune to arrest and prosecution for crime, and ordered the sheriff to take him into custody after giving him reasonable time to surrender. At this writing Mr. Small is still at large, conferring with his political friends, presumably trying to find some way out of the dilemma.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

More Power to the President's Elbow

WASHINGTON.—Widespread approval of the proposal to give President Harding power to veto single items in appropriation bills through the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution is being manifested in scores of letters received, says Senator Kenyon of Iowa. According to him the public has been quick to sense the value of this delegation of power not only as a measure of economy, but also in putting a check on the practice of adding legislative "riders" to appropriation bills.

"Just as soon as I can complete the necessary examination of the Constitution itself and determine the precise phraseology that must be employed," said Kenyon today, "I shall introduce the amendment and press for its consideration. I have been surprised at the interest it has attracted. I have received letters from practically every section commending it and urging its submission to the people. The authors of these letters have been men from many different walks of life, including doctors, lawyers, college professors and business men."

Senator Kenyon is convinced that his amendment should be so drafted as to give to the President the right to veto "riders" where they occur in an appropriation bill as well as being empowered to cut out single appropriations without destroying an entire supply bill, the funds in which are appropriated for carrying on the business of a great department of the government.

He reiterated his belief that the adoption of such a constitutional amendment would be of immense value in the drive for economy and says that when the public understands the importance of the matter, sentiment will be sufficiently strong in its favor to obtain ratification by the necessary two-thirds of the state legislatures.

Uncle Sam and Railroads Negotiating

NEGOTIATIONS looking to the funding of the railroad indebtedness of approximately $800,000,000 to the government and the settlement of the claims of the railroads against the government are under full way between government officials and the railway executives. These negotiations have resulted in progress toward definite conclusions.

Railway officials estimate that the net amount due the railroads from the government is somewhere between $575,000,000 and $600,000,000. They admit that it is difficult to make a definite estimate of the total amount due because of the items in dispute. Roughly, however, they place the amount yet due for the period of government control at $383,000,000 and for the guaranty period of six months after federal control at $226,000,000.

Director General Davis estimates that the claims of the railroads against the railroad administration will aggregate $1,250,000,000. Forty-seven railroads have already settled with the government, and they were allowed approximately 25 per cent of the amounts claimed by them. The total claims of these roads aggregated $124,040,867, of which $35,450,914 was allowed.

Applying this percentage in the total estimated claims against the railroad administration, railway officials figure it would appear that the railroad administration will owe the railroads approximately $868,000,000 for the government control period. The government owes the short lines about $25,000,000, making a total for the government control period of $893,000,000.

It is further estimated that the government owes the railroads a total of approximately $632,000,000 for the guaranty period. Of that amount, $403,000,000 has been paid in advances, leaving a balance due of about $229,000,000.

The government's indebtedness to the railroads, therefore, which is not disputed, is approximately $600,000,000.

Secretary Mellon had that estimate in mind, it is believed, when he said approximately $500,000,000 would be paid to the railroads in the next six months, provided the funding provisions go through and the railroads agree to settle with the administration.

Is Uncle Sam Now Penalizing Marriage?

IS UNCLE SAM penalizing marriage in the government departments? Miss Elsie Hill of the National Woman's party states that several of the government departments which are now reducing their payrolls have issued questionnaires to their women employees in order to find out which are married and which are single. A questionnaire sent out by the air service is evidently designed to gain further information about the circumstances of the married women. It asks each of these to tell whether she is living with her husband; if not, whether she is legally separated from him; whether the husband is dependent upon her for support, and whether any members of her immediate family are employed by the government, and if so, how much each earns.

The object of the various departments in dropping married women from their rolls is plain. They are compelled to drop those who will suffer least hardship as a result. Obviously, the married woman who has an employed husband is less apt to suffer from the loss of her job than the single woman entirely dependent upon her own resources.

The women recognize this motive and its practical justification. They realize that the bureau chiefs are not trying to strike a blow at marriage. But they claim that in effect it is a blow at marriage, and also at the right of a woman to work and be independent. It is this latter phase of the question which chiefly interests the women politicians.

Following the issuance of these questionnaires, Miss Hill states, "a large number of married women have been dropped from the rolls of the departments, without regard to their efficiency. In many cases, she says, married women of long experience and established value have been dropped for no other discoverable reason than that they are married. At the same time, she says, the civil service is holding examinations for employees of similar grade and kind."

Hays Would Coax Out Timid Savings

THROUGH the postoffice savings system Postmaster General Hays is trying to run the American Stock-bank out of business. He plans to take the money now hidden away and put it in circulation by encouraging the people to put their money in Uncle Sam's bank. As a banker Uncle Sam stands supreme. He has the confidence not only of the American born, but of the foreign born. Half a million depositors have funds in the post-office bank, drawing but two per cent a year interest. How many more persons, particularly of the immigrant classes, are there who are keeping their savings in their stockings because the interest rate is not very attractive?

The postmaster general is seeking to bring into circulation and profitable employment the $1,000,000,000 which he claims is now being hoarded and therefore lost to industry. In order to accomplish the end he has in view he intends to have the postal savings system revised so as to make it more attractive to potential small depositors. He makes eight suggestions, of which the principal ones are to increase the rate of interest from 2 to 3 per cent, to pay interest on deposits held less than one year, to remove the restrictions against depositors under ten years of age and to give greater facilities for this class of business by establishing savings branches in 50,000 postoffices instead of the present 6,814.

Mr. Hays has no design to put the postal savings system in competition with private savings banks. He recognizes that that would be an unfair as well as a disastrous policy. As a matter of fact the growth of postal savings will insure to the benefit of private banks, for the money will be deposited with them by the government. Bankers already committed are in favor of the project now proposed.

Precautions Against Rinderpest.

Every possible precaution is being taken through the Federal quarantine service to prevent the entry into the United States of rinderpest, probably the most fatal disease which affects cattle. As an additional safeguard the United States Department of Agriculture, through its Bureau of Animal Industry, has obtained from the Bureau of Agriculture of the Philippine Islands a fresh supply of anti-rinderpest serum, so that no time may be lost in utilizing every effective method known in combating an outbreak should one occur in the United States despite the precautions taken.

Rinderpest, which has not appeared in Europe since 1881, has prevailed extensively in western Europe since the war, and has been found also in South America.

Clinic Plans Routes.

Clinic schedules and itineraries for the traveling physical examination clinic of the Michigan department of health are now being arranged for the fall and winter seasons. Clinicians will finish their first year's work August 1, starting on the road again September 1.

To complete the future schedule of the clinic, local women's clubs, Red Cross chapters, and other organizations under whose auspices clinics are held, are urged to make arrangements for reservation of dates immediately. In the past the clinic has been forced to turn down convenient routings which were received too late to be included.

Since September, 1920, the clinic has examined 7,474 persons in 33 counties and turned away a like number because of lack of time. The department expects to cover the remainder of the state during the coming year, in addition to holding several return clinics.

Besides the two main units of the clinic which specialize in examination of adults for tuberculosis and examination of children for remedial defects, the clinic holds special periods for thorough examination of ex-service men. Local physicians have approved the work of the clinic in every community visited.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

Hugh bowed gravely. "My only regret is that it failed to function," he remarked. "As I told you outside, I'd quite forgotten your menagerie. In fact"—his glance wandered slowly and somewhat pointedly from face to face at the table—"I had no idea it was such a large one."

"So this is the insolent young swine, is it?" The bloodshot eyes of the man with the scarred face turned on him fiercely. "What I cannot understand is why he hasn't been killed by now."

Hugh wagged an accusing finger at him. "I know you were a nasty man as soon as I saw you. Now look at Henry at the end of the table; he doesn't say that sort of thing. And you do hate me, don't you, Henry? How's the jaw?"

"Captain Drummond," said Lakington, ignoring Hugh and addressing the first speaker, "was very nearly killed last night. I thought for some time as to whether I would or not, but I finally decided it would be much too easy a death. So it can be remedied tonight."

If Hugh felt a momentary twinge of fear at the calm, expressionless tone, and the half-satisfied grin which greeted the words, no trace of it showed on his face. Already the realization had come to him that if he got through the night alive he would be more than passing lucky, but he was too much of a fatalist to let that worry him unduly. So he merely stifled a yawn, and again turned to Lakington.

"So it was you, my little one, whose fairy face I saw pressed against the window. Would it be indelicate to ask how you got the dope into us?"

Lakington looked at him with an expression of grim satisfaction on his face.

"You were guessed, if you want to know. An admirable invention of my friend Kauffman's nation."

A guttural chuckle came from one of the men, and Hugh looked at him grimly.

"The scum certainly would not be complete," he remarked to Peterson, "without a filthy Boche in it."

The German pushed back his chair with an oath, his face purple with passion.

"A filthy Boche," he muttered thickly, lurching toward Hugh. "Hold him the arms off, and I will the throat tear out."

It all happened so quickly. At one moment Hugh was apparently intent upon selecting a cigarette, the next instant the case had fallen to the floor; there was a dull, heavy thud, and the Boche crashed back, overturned a chair, and fell like a log to the floor, his head hitting the wall with a vicious crack. The bloodshot being resumed his seat a little limply. Hugh resumed his search for a cigarette.

"After which breezy interlude," remarked Peterson, "let us to business yet."

Hugh paused in the act of striking

"Kill Him Now—Throw Him in a Corner and Let Us Proceed."

a match, and for the first time a genuine smile spread over his face.

"There are moments, Peterson," he murmured, "when you really appeal to me."

Peterson took the empty chair next to Lakington.

"Sit down," he said shortly. "I can only hope that I shall appeal to you still more before we kill you."

Hugh bowed and sat down.

"Consideration," he murmured, "was always your strong point. May I ask how long I have to live?"

Peterson smiled genially.

"At the earliest request of Mr. Lakington you are to be spared until to-morrow. At least, that is our present intention. Of course, there might be an accident in the night; in a house like this one never can tell. Or"—he carefully cut the end off a cigar—"you might go mad, in which case we shouldn't bother to kill you. In fact, if you go mad, we shall not be displeased."

Once again he smiled genially.

"As I said before, in a house like this, you can never tell."

The intimidated rabbit, breathing heavily, was staring at Hugh fascinatedly; and after a moment Hugh turned to him with a courteous bow.

"Laddie," he remarked, "you've been eating onions. Do you mind detecting the blast in the opposite direction?"

His calm imperturbability seemed to madden Lakington.

"You wait," he snarled thickly; "you wait till I've finished with you. You won't be so d-d humorous then..."

Hugh regarded the speaker languidly.

"Your supposition is more than probable," he remarked, in a bored voice. "I shall be too intent on getting into a Turkish bath to remove the contamination to think of laughing."

Slowly Lakington sank back in his chair, a hard, merciless smile on his lips; and for a moment or two there was silence in the room. It was broken by the unkempt man on the sofa, who, without warning, exploded unexpectedly.

"A truce to all this fooling," he burst forth in a deep rumble; "I confess I do not understand it. Are we assembled here tonight, comrades, to listen to private quarrels and stupid talk?"

A murmur of approval came from the others, and the speaker stood up waving his arms.

"I know not what this young man has done. I care less. In Russia such trifles matter not. He has the appearance of a bourgeois, therefore he must die. Did we not kill thousands—aye, tens of thousands of his kindred, before we obtained the great freedom? Are we not going to do the same in this accursed country? Kill him now—throw him in a corner and let us proceed."

He sat down, amidst a murmur of approval, in which Hugh joined heartily.

"Splendid," he murmured. "A magnificent peroration. Am I right, sir, in assuming that you are what is vulgarly known as a Bolshevik?"

The man turned his sunken eyes, glowing with the burning fires of fanaticism, on Drummond.

"I am one of those who are fighting for the freedom of the world," he cried harshly, "for the right to live of the proletariat." He flung out his arms wildly. "It is freedom; it is the dawn of the new age."

Hugh looked at him with genuine curiosity; it was the first time he had actually met one of these wild visionaries in the flesh. And then the curiosity was succeeded by a very definite amazement: what had Peterson to do with such as he?

For the moment his own deadly risk was forgotten: a growing excitement filled his mind. Could it be possible that here, at last, was the real object of the gang; could it be possible that Peterson was organizing a deliberate plot to try and Bolshevize England? He looked up to find Peterson regarding him with a faint smile.

"It is a little difficult to understand, isn't it, Captain Drummond?" he said, carefully flicking the ash off his cigar. "I told you you'd find yourself in deep water." Then he resumed the contemplation of the papers in front of him.

Hugh half closed his eyes, while a general buzz of conversation broke out round the table.

Fragments of conversation struck his ears from time to time. The intimidated rabbit, with the light of battle in his watery eye, was declaiming on the glories of workmen's councils; a bald-headed man was shouting an inspiring battle cry about no starvation wages and work for all.

"Can it be possible," thought Hugh, grimly, "that such as these have the power to control big destinies? And then, because he had some experience of what one unbalanced brain, whose owner could talk, was capable of achieving; because he knew something about such psychology, his half contemptuous amusement changed to a bitter foreboding."

"You fool!" he cried suddenly to the Russian; and everyone ceased talking. "You poor d-d fool! You—and your new earth! In Petrograd today bread is two pence four shillings a pound; tea, fifteen pounds a pound. Do you call that freedom?" He gave a contemptuous laugh.

Too surprised to speak, the Russian sat staring at him; and it was Peterson who broke the silence with his suave voice.

"Your distress, I am glad to say, is not likely to be one of long duration," he remarked. "In fact, the time has come for you to retire for the night, my young friend."

He stood up smiling; then he walked over to the bell behind Hugh and rang it.

"Dead or mud—I wonder which," he threw the end of his cigar into the grate as Hugh rose. "While we deliberate down here on various matters of importance we shall be thinking of you upstairs—that is to say, if you get there. I see that Lakington is even now beginning to gloat in pleasant anticipation."

Not a muscle on the soldier's face twitched; not by the hint of a look did he show the keenly watching audience that he realized his danger. Lakington's face was merciless, with its fiendish look of anticipation, and Hugh stared at him with level eyes for a while before he turned toward the door.

"Then I will say 'Good night,'" he remarked casually. "Is it the same room that I had last time?"

"No," said Peterson. "A different one—specially prepared for you. If you get to the top of the stairs a man will show you where it is." He opened the door and stood there smiling. And at that moment all the lights went out.

"TWO."

The darkness could be felt, as real darkness inside a house always can be felt. Not the faintest glimmer even of greyness showed anywhere, and Hugh remained motionless, wondering what the next move was going to be. Now that the night's ordeal had commenced, all his nerve had returned to him. He felt cold; and as his powerful hands clenched and unclenched by his sides, he grunted faintly to himself. Then very cautiously he commenced to feel his way toward the door.

At that moment someone brushed past him. Like a flash Hugh's hand shot out and gripped him by the arm. The man wriggled and twisted, but he was powerless as a child, and with another short laugh Hugh found his throat with his other hand. And again silence settled on the room...

Still holding the unknown man in front of him, he reached the foot of the stairs, and there he paused. He had suddenly remembered the mysterious thing which had whizzed past his head that other night, and then clanged suddenly into the wall beside him. He had gone up five stairs when it had happened, and now with his foot on the first, he started to do some rapid thinking.

If, as Peterson had kindly assured him, they proposed to try and send him mad, it was unlikely that they would kill him on the stairs. At the same time it was obviously an implement capable of accurate adjustment, and therefore it was more than likely that they would use it to frighten him. And if they did—if they did...

The unknown man wriggled feebly in his hands, and a sudden unholy look came on to Hugh's face.

"It's the only possible chance," he said to himself, "and if it's you or me, Laddie, I guess it's got to be you."

With a quick heave he jerked the man off his feet, and lifted him up. His head was above the level of his own. Then clutching him tight, he commenced to climb. His own head was bent down, somewhere in the region of the man's back, and he took no notice of the feeble kicking legs.

Then at last he reached the fourth step, and gave a final adjustment to his semi-conscious burden. He pressed his head even lower in the man's back, and lifted him up another three inches.

"How awfully jolly!" he murmured. "I hope the result will please you."

"I'd stand quite still if I were you," said Peterson suavely. "Just listen."

As Hugh had gambled on, the performance was designed to frighten. Instead of that, something hit the neck of the man he was holding with such force that it wrenched him clean

"I'd stand quite still if I were you," said Peterson suavely. "Just listen."

As Hugh had gambled on, the performance was designed to frighten. Instead of that, something hit the neck of the man he was holding with such force that it wrenched him clean out of his arms. Then came the clang beside him, and with a series of ominous thuds a body rolled down the stairs into the hall below.

"You fool," he heard Lakington's voice, shrill with anger. "You've killed him. Switch on the light..."

But before the order could be carried out Hugh had disappeared, like a great cat, into the darkness of the passage above. As luck would have it the first room he darted into was empty, and he flung up the window and peered out.

A faint, watery moon showed him a twenty-foot drop onto the grass, and without hesitation he flung his legs over the sill. And at that moment something prompted him to look upward.

It was a dormer window, and to an active man access to the roof was easy. Without an instant's hesitation he abandoned all thoughts of retreat; and when two excited men rushed into the room he was firmly ensconced, with his legs astride of the ridge of the window, not a yard from their heads.

Securely hidden in the shadow, he watched the subsequent proceedings with genial toleration. A raucous howl from the two men announced that they had discovered his line of escape; and in half a minute the garden was full of hurrying figures. One, calm and impassive, his identity betrayed only by the inevitable cigar, stood by the garden door, apparently taking no part in the game; Lakington, blind with fury, was running round in small circles, cursing everyone impartially.

"The car is still there." A man came up to Peterson, and Hugh heard the words distinctly.

"Then he's probably over at Benton's house. I will go and see."

Hugh watched the thickest, massive figure stroll down toward the wicket gate, and he laughed gently to himself. Then he grew serious again, and with a slight frown he pulled out his watch and peered at it. Half-past one—two more hours before dawn. And in those two hours he wanted to explore the house from top to top; especially he wanted to have a look at the mysterious central room of which Phyllis had spoken to him—the room where Lakington kept his treasures. But until the excited throng below went indoors, it was unsafe to move. Once out of the window, any one would be able to see him crawling over the roof in the moonlight.

At times the thought of the helpless man for whose death he had in one way been responsible recurred to him, but he shook his head angrily. It had been necessary, he realized: you can carry someone upstairs in a normal house without him having his neck broken—but still...

And then he wondered who he was. It had been one of the men who sat round the table—of that he was tolerably certain. But which...? Was it the frightened bunny, or the Russian, or the gentleman with the bloodshot eye? The only comfort was that whoever it had been, the world would not be appreciably the poorer for his sudden decease. The only regret was that it hadn't been dear Henry...

He had a distaste for Henry which far exceeded his dislike of Peterson. "He's not over there," Peterson's voice came to him from below. "And we've wasted time enough as it is."

The men had gathered together in a group, just below where Hugh was sitting, evidently awaiting further orders.

"Do you mean to say we've lost the young swine again?" said Lakington angrily.

"Not lost—merely mislaid," murmured Peterson. "The more I see of him the more I admire his initiative."

Lakington snorted.

"It was that d-d fool Trotsky's own fault," he snarled; "why didn't he keep still as he was told to do?"

"Why, indeed," returned Peterson, his cigar glowing red. "And I'm afraid we shall never know. He is very dead." He turned toward the house. "That concludes the entertainment, gentlemen, for tonight. I think you can all go to bed."

He disappeared into the house, and the others followed slowly. For the time being Hugh was safe, and with a sigh of relief he stretched, his cramped limbs and lay back against the sloping roof. If only he had dared to light a cigarette.

"THREE."

It was half an hour before Drummond decided that it was safe to start exploring. First he took off his shoes, and tying the laces together, he slung them around his neck. Then, as silently as he could, he commenced to scramble upward.

It was not an easy operation; one slip and nothing could have stopped him sliding down and finally crashing into the garden below, with a broken leg, at the very least, for his pains. In addition, there was the risk of dislodging a slate, an unwise proceeding in a house where most of the occupants slept with one eye open. But at last he got his hands over the ridge of the roof, and in another moment he was sitting straddlewise across it.

A sudden rattle close to him made him start violently; only to curse himself for a nervous ass the next moment, and lean forward eagerly. One of the blinds had been released from inside the room, and a pale, diffused light came filtering out into the night from the side of the glass roof. He was still crouching backward and forward to try and find some chink through which he could see, when, with a kind of uncanny deliberation, one of the panes of glass slowly opened. It was worked on a ratchet from inside, and Hugh bowed his thanks to the unseen operator below. Then he leaned forward cautiously, and peered in...

The whole room was visible to him, and his jaw tightened as he took in the scene. In an armchair, smoking as unconcernedly as ever, sat Peterson. He was reading a letter, and occasionally underlining some point with a pencil. Beside him on a table was a big ledger, and every now and then he would turn over a few pages and make an entry. But it was not Peterson on whom the watcher above was concentrating his attention; it was Lakington, taking a red velvet box out of a drawer in the desk. He opened it lovingly, and Hugh saw the flash of diamonds. Lakington let the stones run through his hands, glittering with a thousand flames, while Peterson watched him contemptuously.

"Baubles," he said, scornfully. "Pretty baubles. What will you get for them?"

"Ten, perhaps fifteen thousand," returned the other. "But it's not the money I care about; it's the delight in having them, and the skill required to get them."

Peterson shrugged his shoulders. "Skill which would give you hundreds of thousands if you turned it into proper channels."

Lakington replaced the stones, and threw the end of his cigarette into the grate.

"Possibly, Carl, quite possibly. But it boils down to this, my friend, that you like the big canvas with broad effects; I like the miniature and the well-drawn etching."

"Which makes us a very happy combination," said Peterson. "The pearls, don't forget, are your job. The big thing"—he turned to the other, and a trace of excitement came into his voice—"the big thing is mine."

The sound of the door opening made both men swing round instantly; then Peterson stepped forward with a smile as Irma entered.

"Back, my dear. I hardly expected you so soon."

In a few words he told the girl what had happened, and she clapped her hands together delightedly.

"Assuredly I shall have to marry that man," she cried. "He is quite the least boring individual I have met in this atrocious country." She sat down and lit a cigarette. "I saw Walter tonight. He came over especially to see you. They want you there for a meeting, at the Ritz."

Peterson frowned.

"It's most inconvenient," he remarked with a shade of annoyance in his voice. "Did he say why?"

"Among other things I think they're uneasy about the American," she answered. "My dear man, you can easily slip over for a day."

"Of course I can," said Peterson irritably; "but that doesn't alter the fact that it's inconvenient. Things will be shortly coming to a head here, and I want to be on the spot. However—" He started to walk up and down the room, frowning thoughtfully.

"Your fish is hooked, mon ami," continued the girl to Lakington. "He has already proposed three times; and he has introduced me to a dreadful-looking woman of extreme virtue, who has adopted me as her niece for the great occasion."

"What great occasion?" asked Lakington.

"Why, his coming of age," cried the girl. "I am to go to Laidley Towers as an honored guest of the duchess of Lampshire." She threw back her head and laughed. "What do you think of that, my friend? The old lady will be wearing pearls and all complete, in honor of the great day, and I shall be one of the admiring house party."

"How do you know she'll have them in the house?" said Lakington.

"Because dear Freddie has told me so," answered the girl. She blew two smoke rings and then laughed.

"Freddie is really rather a dear at times. I don't think I've ever met any one who is so nearly an idiot without being one. Still," she repeated thoughtfully, "he's rather a dear."

LEGION MAN FED UP ON WAR

Veteran of the World and Other Conflicts Returns to Greece and Is Nabbed for Service.

John P. Poulos, veteran of the World war and a member of Albert V. Braden Post No. 58, the American Legion, Ishpeming, Mich., is getting tired of going to war every year or so. He has the United States government at work trying to get a red chevron that will keep him out of battle long enough to at least recover his breath.

John is a native of Athens, Greece. When he came to this country his name was John Peter Contogiannopoulos. On account of his great difficulty in making his intensive handle understood, he cut off several yards of it and became John P. Poulos. He was drafted for service with the Greek army during the first Balkan war. After being mustered out he emigrated to America and found employment in the copper mines of Michigan.

After a few years in this country he returned to Greece for a visit. Greece was having another little scrap then, and he was drafted for the second Balkan war. He did his bit and left for America again. America entered the war just after John got back, and he enlisted for his third time in the infantry. He did it well, and after Uncle Sam had given him his discharge, he decided once more to visit Greece. Result, he's in again!

This time the Greeks have drafted him for service against the Turks. John recently appealed to his congressman, W. Frank James of the Twelfth Michigan district, hoping that he was fed up on wars and that he wanted to get out of the army and be married. Mr. James has taken up the case with the State department. Poulos is a fully naturalized citizen, but in the absence of treaty agreements between the United States and Greece, his citizenship papers were not sufficient to prevent his being drafted.

HE FOUND THE EXCITEMENT

Hoosier, Seeking Battle Lines, Discovers Liberal Share of What World War Offered.

Few bucks can equal the record of Ralph C. Patterson, Hoosier of strong Irish extraction, who went A. W. O. L. looking for the battle. He found it.

Patterson left his quiet home in Muncie, Ind., early in search of excitement. He found what he wanted in the cattle ranches of the Northwest. His life in riding the ranges was the most exciting career he had heard of until he conveyed a carload of cattle to Chicago in April, 1917, and found out that America had entered the war. So did Pat.

Going to France with Headquarters Troop of the First division shortly after Pershing, Private Patterson was stationed in the peaceful French village of Gondrecourt for weary and drab months while the battle was going on without him. Finally he and two buddies hopped a French meat truck bound for the front. It took them as far as Bar-le-Duc, from which place they hiked in the direction of the firing. They found the front line trenches around Luzeville, introduced themselves to the amazed poilus and declined to leave because they couldn't understand what the horizon blues were so excited about. After ten days an American officer came to the front after them. They polished the company's pots and pans for two weeks for their pains.

Patterson finally found enough excitement. At Cantigny he came through unscathed. At Solissons a machine gun bullet hit him through both ankles. At Selcheprey he jumped into a shell hole on top of a German with a bayonet. High explosive which got him in the armpit on October 4, 1918, left his right leg stiff, tore open his shoulder and broke his nose.

INDIAN BOYS AS LEGION MEN

Charter for Post in South Dakota Bears the Names of Four Sioux Braves.

When adjutants of a number of western posts of the American Legion call the membership roll at meetings, it is not always the easiest thing in the world to "make out" the names for American Indians who served during the World war, are lining up with the ex-service men's organization, according to applications for post charters received at national headquarters.

A recent charter request for a post at St. Charles, S. D., bears the names of four Indians who sign themselves: Benjamin Comes-Out-Bear, Charles Owl-Walks-In-the-House, Narcis MacKenzie and John Bluebird.

Sixty Sioux Indian braves have been engaged to stage a real war dance for the Legion's third annual national convention in Kansas City next fall. The Indians performed valiant service against the enemy in the World war as intelligence scouts.

Very Considerate.

"Did the motorist who ran over you show any consideration whatever?"

"He certainly did," said the victim. "And I marveled at the exhibition. He examined that confounded car of his from stem to stern to see if it had been damaged anywhere."

WHY I TRADE AT HOME
I trade at home and never roam
Seeking "bargains" elsewhere.
I love the town in which I live,
For all my interests are there.
And then, again, I buy from friends,
We all need one another.
When I run short I can approach
My dealer as a brother.
When buying here with conscience clear,
I put my money down,
I know it stays right here and works
For the welfare of my town.
Another thing, right here, I bring
The produce that I raise
And always get an honest deal—
I've found that it pays.
And then, I know when buying here
It helps things to relax.
And also helps the man who pays
His portion of the tax.
And when I'm sick or in hard luck
The man I buy from's here
With the pocket book, if need be,
And kindly words of cheer.
So that is why I trade at home;
I'm a booster through and through,
For a town that's good to live in
Is good to buy in, too.
