MURDERERS.

Four thousand men, convicted of murder, have been executed in America since 1890.

Some were innocent and, about them, Alexander Herman writes an interesting series of articles.

Modern America has an average of at least 9,000 murders a year. There probably were just as many 30 years ago, though fewer were discovered. Crime of all kinds is harder to cover up now than in the nineties.

On the basis of 9,000 murders a year, the score since 1890 stands, 4,000 executions, 1280,000 murderers escaping chair and noose.

A considerable percentage of the latter go to prisons or criminal insane asylums. But we are concerned only with actual executions.

The executions of a few innocents attract more attention than the escape, from death penalty, of a great army of guilty.

That is, to use an old expression, a sign of the times.

It shows a national desire for justice and an increasing valuation placed on human life.

It is not long since accused men, under the Napoleonic criminal code, were presumed guilty until they proved themselves innocent.

It's the other way now—presumed innocent until proved guilty.

An amazing system of safeguards has been built up to prevent execution of "the wrong person."

Despite all these safeguards, an innocent person is occasionally convicted and executed for a murder committed by some one else.

As long as we have capital punishment, innocent people occasionally will be executed. This is inevitable, by the law of averages or its reverse working, the law of exceptions.

There are loopholes and weaknesses in every system devised by the brain of man.

The only comforting thing is that the system slowly but surely become fairer and less apt to make the innocent pay the penalty for the guilty.

BURYING MISTAKES.

Picture a funeral passing your house with 38,000 hearses, each hearse containing an American business firm.

That gives you an accurate idea of the number of business failures since prices began to tumble in May, 1920.

But all is not gloom.

Standing thoughtfully on the curbstones, watching their deceased brethren going to Dun & Bradstreet's cemetery, are nearly 2,000,000 business organizations that have weathered the storm without sinking.

In two years of very severe depression, only one business in each 53 has failed.

In a flash this illustrates the great underlying strength of our business organization, the Gibraltar that cannot be toppled by any storm.

As usual, of course, attention centers on the ships that sink. Ships that weather the storm are ignored. Thus the financial ocean, like the Seven Seas, gets a worse reputation than it really deserves.

In May, only 1,960 failures. Many will snort and wonder why the "only."

If they turn back four months, they find 2,723 failures in January.

Steadily the storm subsides. Observing this, young blood desires to put to sea—to try its hand. So, in May, 954 new companies were incorporated in the principal states, with capital of $100,000 or more apiece. Thousands of smaller ones also ventured forth. They are the rowboats.

How much did they fail for? That is the important question. Failures, during the depression that now is nearing its end, have had total liabilities or debts at a rate of about $600,000,000 a year.

Assets have averaged enough to pay about 50 cents an $1.

The total or net loss, due to failures, has been running around $300,000,000 a year—or about $3 a year for each American. That after all, is not such a big price to pay for getting out of the woods.

BOOM.

More bales of cotton were consumed by American mills in May than during May, 1919, during the big boom. Exports also were larger.

Many other industries make favorable reports, including steel and autos.

Profits may be small, but production and consumption are booming. The commercial crop is ripe, ready to be plucked. The business organization that does not go after orders hammer and tongs, both by personal salesmanship and advertising—is over-looking a good bet.

The road is clear. Take off the brakes.

FARMERS

Are the farmers soon going to be organized as union labor in the cities? The possibility is suggested by the American Farm Bureau federation's report that its membership now exceeds a million and a quarter farmers.

While this organization does not operate like a labor union it reveals the farmers' ability to get together when they want to.

It also raises the very interesting question: What would happen if the farmer of these days locked their tools in their barns and announced that they had started a national strike for shorter hours and more pay?

The street car system could be improved by granting stop-overs.

Health hint: Send the bootlegger on his vacation.

Biliousness and Constipation. "For years I was troubled with biliousness and constipation, which made life miserable for me. My appetite failed me. I lost my usual force and vitality. The tablets relieved all feeling at once, strengthened the digestive functions, helped the system to do its work naturally," writes Mrs. Rosa Potts, Birmingham, Ala. Adv.
