CARS COLLIDED ON GOOD ROAD

A bad accident occurred yesterday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock when two cars came together just west of Sylvan Center. Miss Nina Greening was driving north on the Liebeck road and at the pavement after looking both ways and not seeing any traffic she proceeded. Just after getting on the pavement a Hupmobile travelling at a fast rate came upon them. Miss Greening stopped and the other car swerved and scraped the Ford. In severing the car went into the ditch and tumbled completely over.

The damage done to the Ford was small. The Hupmobile belongs to a Detroit party and was badly wrecked. No one was hurt except for a few scratches from flying glass. Both cars carried insurance.

WHAT MAKES A LEADER.

The population of Windsor, N. H., is reduced to 15, but it still has a complete town government with seven official jobs. A community after a politician's own heart! A wardheeler would describe it as "the right proportion."

Windsor was founded in 1798 in the heart of the New England deer country. Ten years ago it had 65 registered male voters. Observe that, with population shrunken to only 15, Windsor still finds it necessary to maintain governmental machinery—townclerk, treasurer, selectmen (councilmen), school board and board of health.

The philosophical anarchist, follower of Joseph Warren, with a beautiful system for imaginary Utopia, should be interested in what Windsor has recognized as necessity.

Shipwreck two men on a desert island and a government would be set up within 24 hours. The man with the largest club and the strongest arm would elect himself ruler. He would start out by announcing, with emphasis, "the best thing to do." If his companion manifested a stubborn will, force would be applied to compel submission. That is the germ of legislative and police powers.

From books like Jack London's "Call of the Wild," you know that every community of beasts, such as wolves, has for its ruler the one that can whip any comer. The animal ruler is deposed when he runs against a fellow that can conquer him.

So it was in the early stages of civilization. Then, with the dawn of intelligence, force had to share its throne with brains, personified in the medicine man of the tribe. Church clashed with state. Government by appeal to the emotions began.

We still have politicians swept into office by their shrewd knowledge of psychology—play on national emotions. Gradually, with our flexible system of democracy, we are working toward government by intelligence—horse sense.

SPIRITUALISM.

After the soul leaves the body, it dwells 30 to 40 years in the spiritualistic world, then moves on to a higher plane, says Conan Doyle, who asserts he has talked with the dead.

This sort of speculative philosophy does not appeal to the average Christian, for it is a form of Brahmanism.

The Brahmins of one school believe in transmigration of souls—deeds in this life determining conditions in the next, with the wicked born again as outcasts or unclean animals, the good passing on to the moon to work out their eventual salvation thru a series of existences, then back to earth as a plant, later reborn as a man of one of the three higher castes.

The extremely good Brahman attains Nirvana—as refined as gasoline.

BOOK WORMS.

Robertson Smith might have been valedictorian of his class this year at the University of Chicago. He was put out of the running because he couldn't chin himself 10 times.

Smith had all the mental record qualifications for official class orator. But after he had chinned himself seven times, his muscles went back on him.

It will amaze oldtime graduates to learn that an A-1 student no longer is a star unless he measures up to certain athletic standards. A good many will consider it ridiculous, which it is, despite the value of gymnasium training.

One of the troubles with Americans is that we go to extremes in everything.

EXPLOITING.

The forests of Russia could be made to pay off the world's debt in less than 100 years.

Economists make that claim. It dovetails in with the Lord Milner plan, now guiding British reconstruction policy.

Britain thinks the way to get rid of war debts is to develop her wealth—exploiting for instance, Africa and Russia.

Milner probably got his idea from America, which a half century ago made its civil war debt fade into insignificance by a great railroad building boom that unlocked the vast riches west of the Mississippi river.

COINCIDENCE.

Bell applied for a patent on his telephone Feb. 14, 1876. The same day, Prof. Elisha Gray rushed into the patent office with almost identically the same device.

After years of litigation, the national supreme court decided in favor of Bell.

Bell got to the patent office a few hours ahead of Gray. The short delay cost Gray what patent attorneys call "the most valuable single patent ever granted."

Being punctual pays. Delay usually means absolute failure, in the long run.

GRAIN.

Russia will not be able to export grain for at least five years. That is the report of a special agent of the department of commerce.

With Russia out of the running until 1927, American grain growers could be reasonably sure of good foreign markets, also better prices than if a flood of grain were pouring down through the Dardanelles.

There's many a slip, etc., however. Five years is a lot of time.

We shall have smiling friends as long as we keep still and let our money do the talking for us.

It doesn't take so much money to live as to make other people think you are living.

Some people are unable to distinguish between flattery and praise.

ROCKEFELLER TODAY

Richest man in the world poses for this special picture

John D. Rockefeller attended church at Tarrytown, N. Y., on Sunday following his 83d birthday, July 8. He made it the occasion to do his bit for humanity, even though it caused him to break a rule of long standing of not posing for pictures. He bargained with newspaper men, agreeing to pose for this special picture if they would attend church with him. It is health, not wealth, that now interests the retired oil king.

The Friendly Path

By Walter L. Robinson

YOUR OWN DOORSTEP

SWEEP your own doorstep! It always is easier to find fault with others than with oneself. And it is just as true that when one goes around looking for trouble, he's likely to miss more serious difficulties of his own making.

Neglect is never excusable. If one is fair to his fellows, as well as himself, he will always have his own house in order before he starts out to make others' clean house. If one wishes to find fault with the treatment accorded him by his fellows, he should survey his own record of actions to wait his fellowmen.

Many persons are constantly making their own lives miserable and adding to the sorrow of the world by complaining that "the world is going to the bow-wow," and contending that nothing short of another deluge will bring sinfulness to an end. They overlook entirely all the many good things and good deeds which are constantly being brought about by self-sacrificing individuals. Because people spend so much time discussing the sordid side of life, they come to think little of the better side.

With all the disappointing evidences of lawlessness and disregard for moral laws and modesty, it is still a fact that the vast majority are clean-minded, hard-working, law-abiding,

God-fearing men and women. If they were not, there would be nothing new in the wicked pathways about which we hear so much. If the majority were following the wrong trail the story of sin and misery and missteps would attract but passing attention. The exception, as usual, proves the rule.

If all those who are worried about the "tendencies" of the age would keep their own course straight and would try to encourage others by their cheerful examples, there would be less sin in the world. For there are few who intentionally take the wrong path.

One always will make his own life happier and the world more cheerful if he keeps his thoughts and words focussed on the better side.

It never pays to play with fire or to occupy one's time reading trash.

And So They Parted.
She flushed embarrassedly as she caught sight of him at a party.
"Harold Moonleigh!" she murmured.
"Poor fellow. How broken-up he was over my refusal of him."
Moonleigh wrinkled his forehead as he caught her looking at him.
"Now where the devil have I seen that woman before?" he asked himself irritably. —American Legion Weekly.

Mephistopheles.
The name Mephistopheles, is from the Greek, and it means "He who loves not light." The name was given to a Satanic personage of the Middle Ages, who in the Faust legend is appointed to obey Faust's commands, according to the terms on which the latter has sold his soul to Satan.

PRACTICAL THEMES.
"Our sweet girl graduates are getting practical, eh?"
"I understand most of the essays this year will be on such subjects as dress reform and the cost of living."

One of the greatest obstacles encountered in hog production is the parasites which are found where hogs have been raised for a number of years. Probably the round worm is the one which is most numerous and causes the most losses. There are many worm remedies but the best cure is prevention.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I—Wealthy and highly educated Chicago business world, Corvet is something of a mystery to his associates. A stormy interview with his partner, Henry Sparrman, Corvet seeks a mysterious stranger, who disappears from her a woman not known to Corvet. He has written to a certain Corvet in Kansas, and the latter has written to Corvet, asking for a return of the latter's name.

CHAPTER II—Corvet's letter summons a youth of unknown parentage.

CHAPTER III—From a statement of the latter, Corvet learns that the latter is a legitimate son of Alan.

CHAPTER IV—Alan takes possession of his home.

CHAPTER V—That night Alan discovers a man ransacking the desks and drawers in Corvet's study, which the latter has mysteriously agitated. The man disappears, and Alan is left in a state of confusion.

CHAPTER VI—Next day Alan learns that Corvet has decided to sell the property to the latter, and that Alan is to be introduced to the latter in the house the latter occupies.

CHAPTER VII—Alan tells no one of his discovery, but in a private interview with Sparrman, the latter reveals to Alan the fact that Corvet is a man of mystery.

CHAPTER VIII—Corvet's Indian servant, Wassaquam, tells Alan he believes Corvet is dead. He also tells him that the latter has been seen on the Great Lakes. Two years before, the great freighter, the "Wassaquam," had been foundered on the Great Lakes, and the latter had gone down with twenty-five on board. The latter had been found on a person had been saved, since it was general belief that a stranger who had a disturbance at his house, Alan, had been the man who had been saved.

CHAPTER IX—Corvet recovers, and a man remains a mystery.

CHAPTER X—Alan learns from Wassaquam that the latter was Corvet's habit to sum of $10,000 in the house, apparently to be distributed to the latter, and that the latter appeared periodically in the house of Wassaquam. The latter comes to the house of Wassaquam, and is found in a dying condition, due to alcohol and exposure. Corvet tries to get him to explain his connection with Corvet. The man dies, and Wassaquam gives Corvet a paper on which is a list of names.

CHAPTER XI—From the document Alan learns he may have a clue to the mystery surrounding Corvet's life and death. He leaves Chicago, and goes to Lake Michigan ports in search of the names whose names were on the list.

CHAPTER XII—Constance receives news that Corvet was wearing on the day he went away. It contains a new watch, and a woman's wedding ring. She believes them to have been the property of Corvet, and accepts them as proof of his death. Sparrman urges Constance to marry him. She consents, and releases her demand for an immediate return of the property.

CHAPTER XIII—Inquiries show that a watch in the package had been the property of a Captain Bradford, commander of the Milwaukee, who had gone down with his ship.

CHAPTER XIV—Working on a lake freighter, Alan becomes acquainted with a man known as "Jim Burr." He seems to be possessed of information that Alan believes would only be known to Corvet.

CHAPTER XV—Alan secures a position on the freighter of which "Burr" is the captain. He is satisfied he has found a man he believes to be his father, Burr, at the wheel of the freighter, and is determined to follow him to the end of the world, if necessary, to change the vessel's course, and to follow him to the end of the world.

CHAPTER XVI—Corvet recovers his watch and ring in the wreck of the freighter. He and Alan are on board under the debris. Alan discovers the identity of Corvet's father, Sparrman, who had killed his father. Alan is unable to get him to explain his connection with Corvet. Sparrman, however, promises to help Alan in his search for Corvet, and Alan leaves them in the vessel.

CHAPTER XVII—The news of the death of the freighter reaches Chicago, and Sparrman, feeling that Corvet had found a way to escape, is amazed to find that Corvet actually has returned.

CHAPTER XVIII—Learning that Sparrman had left for the north, Constance fears he has gone not to help but to hinder the sailing of any who might be in the north. She follows him, and is told that she loves Alan.

CHAPTER XIX—Twenty-two had been her count, as she counted the drum last had beat, when she counted at all; the drum had been silent with what the Indian woman had heard. Two had died, when she counted at all; the drum had been silent with what the Indian woman had heard. Two more than before; that meant five were left!

CHAPTER XX—Constance caught up her woe from the table and put it on. Her action seemed to call Henry to himself.

CHAPTER XXI—"What are you going to do?" he demanded.

"I'm going out."

"Not alone, you're not!" His heavy voice had a deep tone of menace in it; he seemed to consider and decide something about her. "There's a farmhouse about a mile back; I'm going to take you over there and leave you with those people."

"I will not go there!"

"I'll carry you, then!"

She shrank back from him as he stretched toward her with hands outstretched to seize her; he followed her, and she avoided him again; in his guilt and terror had given her mental ascendancy over him, his physical strength could still force her to his will and, realizing the impossibility of evading him or overcoming him, she stopped.

"Not that," she cried. "Don't touch me."

"Come with me, then!" he commanded; and he went to the door and laid his snowshoes on the snow and stepped into them, stooping and lighting the straps; he stood by while she put on hers. He did not attempt to put hands upon her as they moved away from the little cabin toward the woods back of the clearing; but went ahead, breaking the trail for her with his snowshoes. He moved forward slowly; he could travel as fast as he wished, three feet to every two that she could cover, but he seemed to be wishing for speed but rather for delay. A deep, dull resonance was booming above the wood; it boomed again and ran into a rhythm. No longer was it above; at least it was not only above; it was all about them—here, there, to right and to left, before, behind—the booming of the Drum, Doom was the substance of that sound of the Drum beating the roll of the dead.

Henry had stopped in front of her, half turned her way; his body averted and bent to the booming of the Drum, as his swollen lips counted its soundings. She could see him plainly in the moonlight, yet she drew nearer to him as she followed his count—"Twenty-one," he counted—"Twenty-two," the drum was still going on. "Twenty-four—twenty-five—twenty-six!" Would he count another?

He did not; and her pulses, which had halted, leaped with relief. He moved on again, descending the steep side of a little ravine, and she followed. One of his snowshoes caught in a protruding root and, instead of slowing to free it with care, he pulled it violently out, and she heard the dry, seasoned wood crack. He looked down, swore; saw that the wood was not broken through and went on; but as he reached the bottom of the slope, she leaped downward from a little height behind him and crashed down upon his trailing snowshoe just behind the heel. The rending snap of the wood came beneath his shoe or snapped her own? She sprang back, as he cried out and swung to follow her, and she ran a few steps away and stopped. At his next step his foot entangled in the mesh of the broken snowshoe, and he stooped, cursing, to strip it off and hurl it from him; then he tore off the one from the other foot, and threw it away, and lurched after her again; but now he sank above his knees and floundered in the snow. She stood for a moment while the half-frenzied, half-drunken figure struggled toward her along the side of the ravine; then she ran to where the tree trunk hid her from him. He gained the top of the slope and turned in the direction she had gone; assured then, apparently, that she had flown in fear of him, he started back more swiftly toward the bench. She followed, keeping out of his sight among the trees.

CHAPTER XXII—She tried to lift him, to carry him; then to drag him. But she could not.

To twenty-six, he had counted—to twenty-six, each time! That told that he knew one was living among those who had been upon the ferry! What one? It could only be one of two—to dismay him so; there had been only two on the ferry whose rescue he had feared; only two who, living, he would have let lie upon this beach which he had chosen and set aside for his father, while he waited for him to die!

She forced herself on, unspontaneously, as she saw Henry gain the shore and, believing himself alone, he hurried northward. She could not see him; she could not let herself be seen. Merciless minutes after minutes she raced him thus—A dark shape in the distance lay stretched upon the ice ahead; beyond and still farther out, something which seemed the fragments of a lifeboat tossed up and down where the waves thundered and glenned at the edge of the ice.

Henry's pace quickened; hers quickened desperately, too. She left the shelter of the trees and scrambled down the steep pitch of the bluff, shouting, crying aloud. Henry turned about and saw her; he halted, and she passed him with a rush and got between him and the form upon the ice, before she turned and faced him.

Defiant—defiant of whatever purpose he had had—was his now that she was there to witness what he might do; and there to witness that he burst out in his realization of that, he burst out in oaths against her—He advanced, she stood, confronting—he swung past slightly in his walk and past those things on the beach and kept on along the ice hummocks toward the north.

She ran to the huddle of figures of the man in mackinaw and cap; his face was hidden partly by the position in which he lay and partly by the drift-snow; but, before she swept the show away and turned him to her, she knew that he was Alan.

She cried to him and, when he did not answer, she shook him to get him awake; but she could not rouse him. Frustrated in her attempt to herself, she opened his jacket and felt within his clothes; he was warm—at least he was not frozen within! No; and there seemed some stir of his heart! She tried to lift him, to carry him; then to drag him. But she could not; he fell from her arms into the snow again, and she sat down, pulling him upon her lap and clasping him to her.

She must have said, she must get him to some house, she must take him out of the terrible cold; but dared she leave him? Might Henry return, if she went away? She arose and looked about. Far up the shore she saw his figure rising and falling with his thud over the rough ice. A sound came to her, too, the low, deep reverberation of the Drum beating once more along the shore and in the woods and out upon the lake; and it seemed to her that Henry's figure in the stumbling steps of his flight, was keeping time to the wild rhythm of that sound. And she stooped to Alan and covered him with her coat, before leaving him; for she feared no longer Henry's return.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS
is greatly relieved by constitutional treatment. HALL'S CATARRHAL MEDICINE is a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced, your hearing may be destroyed forever. HALL'S CATARRHAL MEDICINE acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system, thus reducing the inflammation and assisting Nature in restoring normal conditions.
Circulars free. All Druggists.
