

TWO KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT NEAR GRASS LAKE

P. C. O'Mara of Detroit and a Woman Die in Smash-up.

Two people were killed in one of the worst auto accidents of the year, last evening when struck by a D. U. R. car. P. C. O'Mara, age 41 of 5066 Cass avenue, Detroit and a woman thought to be his wife were instantly killed, about 5 o'clock, when O'Mara drove his car directly into the path of an interurban at the Updike crossing, two miles west of Grass Lake.

The paved road, M 17 lies between the Michigan Central and the D. U. R. tracks, just west of Grass Lake. The road is closed at the Updike crossing while construction work is being completed.

O'Mara was driving an Essex coach and was racing the Michigan Central train No. 23, westbound, according to witnesses. He evidently was not aware of the road being closed, because as he reached it he swerved his car to the left in order to take the detour and avoid colliding with the obstruction in the road.

It seems evident that he did not look because there is no obstruction in either direction for hundreds of feet.

A D. U. R. car motored by George Dykema of Jackson was traveling at a terrific rate of speed. O'Mara's car was squarely on the tracks when the crash came. The interurban could not be brought to a stop until it had put over 500 feet between it and the crossing. Of the machine nothing was left but the chassis, shorn clear of everything and bent double. It was clinging on the front of the car.

Between the interurban and the crossing, the right-of-way was strewn with wreckage, splinters of wood, torn cushions, broken glass and an occasional piece of metal. The body of the car was literally torn to bits.

O'Mara's body was found about 35 yards from the crossing. Life was extinct. His neck was broken, an arm fractured, and his head crushed in. The woman, her clothes partly gone and torn, was lying about 10 feet from him. Her right leg was broken, her fractured and she was severely bruised about the head. She too, was dead.

Identification of O'Mara was made possible by means of a bank book found on his person. Later his operator's license and other papers indicating his identity was discovered among his effects. There was nothing on the woman's person to indicate who she was. She had $35. O'Mara had $1.

After learning that the victims were beyond help, Dykema brought his car into Jackson under its own power. Its pilot was gone and the front steps were crushed in. Dykema miraculously escaped injury from flying glass.

O'Mara and the woman were taken to E. J. Foster's undertaking parlors at Grass Lake upon orders of W. K. Craft, deputy coroner of that place who was called on the scene. An inquest will be held Monday night at Grass Lake at 7 o'clock. A jury was impaneled shortly after the tragedy and viewed the bodies before removal. The police department of Detroit was notified of the accident.

CHELSEA-DETROIT PICNIC.

A picnic of the people of Chelsea who are now living in Detroit has been planned and will be held sometime in August. The picnic is to be held in Palmer Park, the date will be given later.

Everything is being done to make this a real time and it is hoped that many people from here will go.

Mr. E. E. Winans is the local member of the committee and he is endeavoring to build up a big bunch to go from here. He will appreciate any assistance anyone can give him.

DOLLAR DAY A BIG SUCCESS

Bargain Hunters on The Streets At An Early Hour.

Dollar day was a wonderful success as reported by the merchants. The customers must have been satisfied or they would not have purchased as they did.

The first dollar day that Chelsea has had in a long time was held yesterday. With a fine day greeting the early people who were out after many bargains the day started with almost a bang. At an early hour there were many people on the streets and many cars parked.

All morning the trade kept a steady pace and kept merchants and clerks busy filling the wants of the many customers. At noon a dark sky threatened rain but this soon passed over and all during the afternoon there were many people still in search of bargains.

Better Than Expected. It was a successful day. One merchant reported that the mark he had set for all day had been passed by noon. Other merchants reported rushes that kept them so busy they could not tend to the needs of their windows etc.

Some people who were not lucky enough to be on hand early found the things they had hoped to get were gone long before. All in all it was a real Dollar Day and everyone was satisfied. The big question of the public was when will there be another one?

BEET TRUST GETS FAVOR FROM RAILROADS EQUAL TO REBATES.

George L. Record of New Jersey, who once led Roosevelt's forces, tells how packers and coal barons control trade.

Special to Chelsea Tribune.

By ROBERT TULLER. The Beef Trust and the Coal Trust are vicious in their methods of controlling trade in necessities of life. They crush the small producer and exploit the consumer, and must be dissolved, says George L. Record, of New Jersey. The way to do this, he says, is for the people to own and operate the railroads.

George L. Record is a progressive leader of the United States Senator Joseph S. Foraker, who has been fighting the Beef Trust in his charges against the Beef Trust and the Coal Trust.

Record says, "I had an extensive experience which supports the argument I am making that the Beef Trust, as well as the Coal Trust, depends for its control of the market upon railroad favors equivalent to rebates which are denied to competitors. The Federal Trade Commission has described this process in detail after an elaborate investigation."

"The railroads have few or no refrigerators cars to carry meat or perishable products. The five concorns constituting the Beef Trust have their own private refrigerator and other cars. A competitor either has to put on the road his own cars or hire cars from one of the Beef Trust concerns.

"If he puts on the road his own cars the railroad managers delay them and divert them, and allow the ice to melt, and thus prevent prompt or adequate deliveries."

A Farmer's Experience. A man recently gave me his personal experience, which confirmed the facts which I had stated. He said he had been a letter carrier in New Jersey, but ill health compelled him to go to Florida and start a truck farm.

"When his first truck was ready for the New York market he applied to the local freight agent for a car, and to his surprise was told that the railroad had no cars for perishable products, and that he

CLOVER SHOULD BE CUT AS HEADS TURN TO BROWN.

For Seed When Over, Ripe Cutting Should be When the Dew Is On Plants.

Under normal conditions, clover should be cut when the heads have turned a dark brown, J. H. Hedgecock of the University of Illinois has suggested. He added, "If the clover is a little over ripe, the loss of the heads may be materially reduced by cutting early in the morning or in the evening when there is dew. The clover should be cut as high as possible as it will enable threshing to be speeded up as there will be less straw to handle."

"Many farmers use a mower with nine fingerlike attachments behind the cutter bar. As this buncher is tripped by the foot the guide rods push the hay to one side from bunches behind the wheels, so as to be out of the way of the horses on the next round. It usually requires at least four days to properly cure clover for hulling. Rotting or sweating clover is unnecessary. The seed from rotted straw is usually inferior, in grade, as the exposure in field or stack causes swelling and sometimes the germination of seed coats."

Clover Must Be Dry to Thresh.

"It is the usual custom to hull clover with a special red clover huller. In principal this machine acts as an ordinary grain threshing machine in removing and breaking up the heads, which are then passed underneath the cylinder where the individual clover seed pods are ruffed out by rasps or other special devices. The huller will not do good work when the clover is at all damp even from dew. A grain thrasher with a clover attachment is sometimes used but this is only more or less satisfactory. Where large acreage of clovers with heavy straw is to be hulled, it is thought by many to pay to use the thrasher to break and separate the heads from the coarse straw and to elevate them thru the grain spout to the regular huller to be hulled and cleaned. When one goes to the expense and trouble of putting clover to the huller it does not pay to let a large per cent of the seed go into the stack."

SCHOOL BOARD MEETS.

A meeting of the school board was held Wednesday evening. The regular business was enacted. The resignation of Mr. Kalmback was accepted, but the vacancy was not refilled. Plans were discussed for systematizing school expenditures and the like, but no definite plan was hit upon. The staff of teachers for next year is about filled, with the exception of one or two vacancies.

KANSAS CITY TO REGULATE SHORT SKIRTS.

Cops Go Around Now With Yard Sticks Measuring Girls' Limbs.

Police regulation of limbs threatens to start a social revolution in Kansas City.

Cops go around with yardsticks in their hands and a glad light of enjoyment in their eyes, greeting flappers thus:

"Excuse me, lady, have you had your limbs measured this morning? You'll pardon my stare, but that looks like more than nine inches to me."

The censor is Lieut. Walter E. Fitzsimmons, inspector of police (who, by the way, is only 32). He and his cop-pers are expected to carry out an edict by the municipal government that skirts of all city employees—400 nurses, clerks, stenographers, police matrons and telephone operators—should "not be higher than nine inches from the ground."

Then the Kansas City Telephone company posted this notice at the Benton exchange:

"Girls of this exchange must not wear dresses which come higher than two inches below the knee. Pink things, of all descriptions, together with underneath laces, must not show through open work sweaters or revealing waists. Waists must have sleeves of modest length."

Inspector Fitzsimmons has been deluged with letters of protest. Cops with yardsticks don't object to measuring limbs—but their wives do. Another puzzle is what's to be done in the case of short ladies whose knees are less than 11 inches from the ground.

The agitated inspector has appealed to the women's clubs for guidance.

THE COMING CIRCUS.

Sparks' World Famous Shows are billed to exhibit at Ann Arbor Tuesday, August 15th, and from the newspaper reports preceding them their exhibition will be worth going miles to witness.

Of the many features carried by the show this season, some of the Animal Acts are without doubt the most wonderful and thrilling ever presented to an American audience. The big group of fighting forest-bred lions, all full grown males, give an exhibition that is full of thrills, and the audience is left with a positive feeling of awe at man's wonderful mastery over the brute creation.

Another extraordinary feature with the show is Capt. Tiebor's troupe of educated Seals and Sea Lions. These interesting sea animals perform the most seemingly impossible feats: Balancing chairs, umbrellas and whirling brands of fire while climbing ladders, walking tight ropes and riding the backs of galloping horses. This feature baffles description and must be seen to be appreciated.

Many other wonderful things are to be seen with this mammoth show and the main performance beneath the big tents will present a number of the most marvelous foreign acts of the century.

The menagerie of wild animals carried with the show is complete in every detail, and contains rare and curious specimens of the earth's most interesting and curious animals.

A mile-long street parade of dazzling splendor, beautiful women, and handsome horses, interspersed with three brass bands and a steam calliope will traverse the streets shortly before noon, and this feature alone will be worth going many miles to see.

Don't forget the date and the place of exhibition, Ann Arbor, Tuesday, August 15th.

Hundreds of reserve police, city detectives and regular officers swooped down on the Patview district in Flint's north end, shortly before midnight in a cleanup of the city rum dives. In the first series of raids 800 were arrested, both as frequenters of the dives and as owners, still operators and sellers.

According to all indications Michigan university will have a larger enrollment of women this coming fall than ever before in her history. Even at this early date all the dormitories and larger league houses at Ann Arbor are full, and most of the dormitories already have a considerable waiting list.

Ambrose Fritz of Northville, an employee of the Globe Furniture company there, was injured seriously while adjusting a pulley. He slipped and the board with which he was at work in shoving over the belting caught on the wheel and was thrown with such violence that it penetrated his left side.

General Mitchell, assistant chief of army air service, was at Selfridge field near Mt. Clemens, last week to make an inspection. He declares that the first pursuit group will be kept permanently here. "Selfridge is the best flying field the government owns," Mitchell said he believed.

"GOES OFF THE HANDLE."

There's always a madman lurking at your elbow. You have seen the common type that insanity experts call the unstable personality.

This individual is highly emotional. "goes off the handle" easily. He is not exactly crazy—just on the borderland, the under sufficient excitement some of them have periodic fits of violent insanity.

The trouble with this individual is, as he claims, "nerves." He reacts excessively to the ordinary emotional irritants of life. Unstable personalities haven't any brakes. Dr. A. Warren Stearns, neurologist, says: "It is their uncontrolled excitement which often touches the match to the mob, and their lack of emotional control is one of the important elements in homicide and suicide."

According to this description a lot of these unstable personalities—lacking in judgement and calm deliberation—are running amuck these days in our midst.

Another interesting type of mental deficient is the inadequate personality. With these individuals, says Dr. Stearns, we can never be sure whether they can but do not want to, or whether they want to but cannot.

This type of individual is constantly undecided what to do. He is a ship without a rudder. In prosperity, he is dazed by inability to understand his luck. In hard times, he is almost mentally paralyzed, gives up hope, sees no way out.

Such personalities have to be steered or carried along by their associates who, mentally stronger, do the planning for them even in such minor details as explaining where would be the best place to hang their hats.

Some of these inadequate personalities would become petrified if left undisturbed. They are what mentally agile workers call "boneheads" or "dumbbells." They are below normal.

The study of various degrees of mental ability is being carried on intensely by neurologists and alienists.

It is an opportune time, and their findings should be passed on to the public, for the war left the world in a highly nervous condition, in which mental deficiencies become intensified.

Civilization does so many insane things, that it is high time we began seeking and isolating the madmen responsible.

MARRIAGE LAXITY.

A bundle of thruths has been prepared for the American public by the commission of the Episcopal church which will report to the Episcopal convention next September at Portland.

The commission finds that the nation is periled by birth control, that it is imperative that the marriage of feeble minded and physically unfit be barred and that if we are to endure as a people health certificates must be prerequisite to marriage.

The lack of parental control and the absence of instruction concerning the purpose of marriage, which is the perpetuation of the race and the decent happiness of the persons joined in wedlock, the commission finds, has resulted in indiscriminate matings, the begetting of misfit children, neglect of family religion, the home and the church for vapid pleasure hunting and the pursuit of dollars.

Never was there a better or more timely arraignment of our failings.

Never was there a better time to turn over a new leaf.

It is the time to determine that our children shan't marry unless they are wed to sound persons.

It is the time to recognize that family life must be honored, wedded unfaithfulness punished by prisons as well as social odium, that the noblest institution of marriage is physically clean children.

Every day we should have the good propaganda that the lightly entered marriage and the easy divorce are disgraceful and the ways of folks without class.

We should stand for uniform marriage and divorce laws throughout the United States and impress our attitude upon those delegated to make our statutes.

The churches should go on record, so should lodges, fraternal societies, athletic clubs, the schools and universities.

Let us have a hue and cry once, for something worth while, in the greatest meaning of the phrase. Let us shout not merely to hear ourselves, but to let the world know that we demand, that we insist on a better place for our children to live in. Let's have some stamina.

UNUSUAL.

A museum of death is started at the University of Brussel, in Belgium. Susan Minns, of Boston, donates her large collection of mummies, poison cups, coffin nails, stuffed buzzards and other cheerful objects.

You wonder why Susan's hobby ran in the direction of the graveyard. She would be equally perplexed at your hobby.

A wise nature gives us different tastes to make us interesting to each other. If we were all exactly alike, life would be stupid, boring.

CONSOLING.

It's consoling to find someone else cursed with our faults. Human nature eternally seeks alibis. It's pleasing to see our good qualities mirrored in others. All of us admire ourselves in the looking glass.

Study of human nature is popular because we use others as dim mirrors of ourselves. All based on vanity.

We think the weather is mighty warm. To make sure and flatter our judgment, everyone parrots: "Is it warm enough for you?"

If a broom doesn't sweep when it's new, you might as well get rid of it at once.

A full stomach is at the basis of most idealism—hungry people are not idealists.

FARM LIVE STOCK

BABY BEEF MOST PROFITABLE

Young Animals Give Greater Return Than Older Ones—Can Be More Economically Fattened.

The phrase "baby beef" has been in existence for many years. At first it was to some extent a term of reproach, but any stigma attached to it has worn off, and it is now part and parcel of modern farming.

Baby beef is early maturity in concentrated form. An animal that loses its calf flesh may yet be finished at a fairly early age, but it will never make baby beef. The latter in addition to early maturity, must combine quality, finish, and thickness of flesh. There are many cattle that cannot be fattened early; breeding will play its part in this as in other things.

Experiments carefully planned and carried out have demonstrated that young animals will give a greater return in beef for food, and can, therefore, be more economically fattened than older ones.

The advantage is from 25 to 50 per cent in favor of the younger animal. This is quite sufficient margin to induce many who have not yet acquired baby beef to try it. It has no other advantage in being ready for the market at any time, and can be sent off if trade is good or held back if prices are low. There is a quicker turn-over, a greater profit, and a better choice for markets. The main factors are better breeding and better feeding, both good in themselves apart from baby beef.—English Livestock Journal.

WOOL AND MEAT FROM SHEEP

Animals Require Very Little Grain and Are Valuable in Destroying Noxious Plants.

An average high grade sheep can produce a fleece weighing from five to eight pounds, and raise a lamb weighing 80 pounds in a year. If necessary it can live without a single mouthful of grain, since forage crops and permanent pastures will carry the sheep the year round. Sheep have two important advantages over other classes of live stock. They require practically no grain and they destroy brush and bushes.

MINERAL MIXTURES FOR HOGS

Wood Ashes, Salt and Lime Increases Appetite for Feed and Improves Health.

Hogs crave something in addition to the feeds given to them. When fed mineral mixtures containing ingredients such as wood ashes, salt and lime, they not only seem better satisfied, but have a greater appetite for their feed and the general health is improved.

MIGHTY GOOD FEED FOR HOGS

Oats Are Recommended Where Scattered on Clean Floor—Barley Also Is Favored.

Oats is a common crop on most farms, and oats is a mighty good feed for hogs. It is better not to feed it in a self-feeder for brood sows, but to scatter on a clean floor all the sows will eat up quickly. Barley is also good for swine and may be soaked and fed whole.

Scours and Thumps. Scours and thumps are among the dangers which are apt to beset the young pig during the first few days of its life.

Purebreds Bring More Money. Pure bred live stock costs no more to feed than common stock and brings more money.

Horses Easily Poisoned. A horse is very easily poisoned and many deaths have resulted from feeding moldy silage.

Marol and Guy Woodward, of Battle Creek, and Percy Sulgman private in Camp Custer, are held following their arrest in connection with the sale of moonshine to soldiers at the camp. They were caught by Captain Kells, who dressed as a sergeant and bought a quantity of liquor from the Woodward's, he declared.

Walter Banyon, for 23 years an employee of the Benton Harbor postoffice, has been made postmaster there to succeed Harvey J. Campbell.

Michigan Happenings

Angered, it is said, by a request from five young motorists to show them the way back to the main road, George Palmer, lying near Bristol, discharged a shotgun at the party, according to the story the frightened travelers told the sheriff's office. The boys lost their way while driving home from South Bend. Palmer was at the supper table and, they say, annoyed at the interruption when one of the party came to his door, he seized a shotgun and began firing. The boys are Cleon and Michael Crov, Glenn and John Whitehead and John Turner, all of Colon.

More than 20 members of a far and feather party that gave a coating of tar to Bert Lenters, a resident of Saugatuck, were assessed costs and fines totaling more than $600 by Justice Herman Simonson, of Saugatuck. The inhabitants of East Saugatuck are nearly all either Hollanders or of Holland descent and hold their minister in high esteem. It is alleged that Lenters circulated stories derogatory to the pastor, which members of the congregation resented and so angered them that they took into their own hands his punishment.

Police officers of Pontiac are seeking a small boy with an interest in babies. They believe the lad can shed light on the mysterious disappearance of two $20 bills from the purse of Mrs. J. B. Thompson. Mrs. Thompson left her baby in its crib before the home of a friend while she visited a few minutes. She left her purse also. The boy stopped in passing and talked to the baby. On her return Mrs. Thompson missed the money.

Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, famous American ace, in an address before the Mt. Clemens Kiwanis club, said that he felt sure the future of commercial aviation is assured. Captain Rickenbacker prophesied that Detroit would be the hub of the airplane manufacturing world within the next 10 years, and outlined a great growth for Detroit and its environs as the result of the growth of this new infant industry.

What were the relations between Benjamin Corvet and Captain Stafford?

Corvet thought a moment. "Corvet," he replied, "was a very able man; he had insight and mental grasp—and he had the fault which sometimes goes with those, a hesitancy of action. Stafford was an able man,

Father Percon Went to a Desk and Took Therefrom Some Notes Which He Had Made.

too, considerably younger than Corvet. Twenty years ago, when the conflict of competing interests was at its height, Corvet was the head of one line; Stafford was head of another, and the two lines had very much the same connections and competed for the same cargoes.

"I begin to see," Father Percon exclaimed. "Please go on."

"In the early nineties both lines still were young; Stafford had, I believe, two ships; Corvet had three."

"So few? Yes; if grows plainer?"

"In 1894, Stafford managed a stroke which, if fate had not intervened, must have assured the ultimate extinction of Corvet's line or its absorption into Stafford's."

Stafford gained as his partner, a wealthy man whom he had convinced that the lake traffic offered chances of great profit; and this connection supplied him with the capital whose lack had been hampering him; as it was still hampering Corvet. The new firm—Stafford and Ramsdell—projected the construction, with Ramsdell's money, of a number of great steel freighters. The first of these—the Miwaka, a test ship whose experience was to guide them in the construction of the rest—was launched in the fall of 1895, and was lost on its maiden trip with both Stafford and Ramsdell aboard. The Stafford and Ramsdell interests could not survive the death of both owners and disappeared from the lakes. Is this what you wanted to know?"

The priest nodded. Alan leaned tensely forward, watching; what he had heard seemed to have increased and deepened the priest's feeling over what he had to tell and to have aided his comprehension of it.

"His name was Caleb Stafford," Father Percon began. "This is what Benjamin Corvet told to me when he was dying under the wreckage on the ferry. 'He was a fair and able man as the lakes ever knew. I had my will of most men in the lake trade in those days; but I could not have my will of him. With all the lakes to trade in, he had to pick out for his that traffic which I already had chosen for my own. But I fought him fair, Father—I fought him fair, and I would have continued to do that to the end.'

"It was at Manitowish, Father, in the end of the season—December fifth of 1895. The ice had begun to form very early that year and was already bad; there was cold and a high gale. I had laid up one of my ships at Manitowish, and I was crossing that night upon a tug to Manitowish, where another was to be laid up. I had still a third one loading up on the northern peninsula at Manitowish for a last trip which, if it could be made, would mean a good profit from a season which so far, because of Stafford's competition, had been only fair. After leaving Manitowish, it grew still more cold, and I was afraid the ice would close in on her and keep her where she was, so I determined to go north that night and see that she got out. None knew, Father, except those aboard the tug, that I had made that choice."

"At midnight, Father, to westward of the Foxes, we heard the four blasts of a steamer in distress—the four long blasts which have sounded in my soul ever since! We turned toward where we saw the steamer's lights; we went nearer and, Father, it was his great ship—the Miwaka! We had heard two days before that she had passed the Foxes; we had not known more than that of where she was. She had broken her tow shaft, Father, and was intact except for that, but helpless in the rising sea."

"The priest broke off. 'The Miwaka! I did not understand all that that had meant to him until just now—the new ship of the rival line, whose building was for him failure and defeat! There is no higher duty than the name of those in peril at sea. He—Benjamin Corvet, who told me this—swore to me that, at the beginning none upon the tug had any thought except to give aid. A small line was drifted down to the tug and to this a hawser was attached, which they hauled aboard. There happened then the first of those events which led those upon the tug into doing a great wrong. He—Benjamin Corvet—had taken charge of the wheel of the tug; three men were handling the hawser in ice and washing water at the stern. The whistle accidentally blew, which those on the Miwaka understood to mean that the hawser had been secured, so they drew in the slack; the hawser, tightened unexpectedly by the pitching of the sea, caught and crushed the captain and deckhand of the tug and threw them into the sea."

"Because they were short-handed now upon the tug, and also because consultation was necessary over what was to be done, the young owner of the Miwaka, Captain Stafford, came down the hawser onto the tug after the line had been put straight. He came to the wheelhouse, where Benjamin Corvet was, and they consulted. Then Benjamin Corvet learned that the other owner was aboard the new ship as well—Ramsdell—the man whose money you have just told me had built this and was soon to build other ships. I did not understand before why learning that affected him so much."

"Stafford wanted us (this is what Benjamin Corvet said) 'to tow him up the lake; I would not do that, but I agreed to tow him to Manitowish. The night was dark, Father—no snow, but frightful wind which had been increasing until it now sent the waves washing clear across the tug. We had gone north an hour when, low upon the water to my right, I saw a light, and there came to me the whistling of a buoy which told me that we were passing nearer than I would have wished, even in daytime, to windward of Boulder reef. There were, Father, no people on that reef; its sides of ragged rock go straight down forty fathoms into the lake."

FARMERS GOT NEEDED HELP FROM CONGRESS.

Farmers got results in the last session of Congress. In their interests the American Farm Bureau Federation interested itself in some thirty bills of great importance to farmers. Many of these are now law; others were defeated as unfavorable to farmers' interests, says the Michigan State Farm Bureau, which assisted the national Farm Bureau organization in presenting the farmer point of view to congress.

Congress passed at the last session more agricultural legislation than any other congress in the history of the nation, said the Farm Bureau. The law-makers required not a little help and considerable prodding. The American Farm Bureau furnished both and got satisfactory results, largely through its active support of the Farm Bloc.

Laws Bureau Supported.

Farm Bureau supported bills which are now law follows:

The Agricultural Credits Act extending life of the War Finance Corporation, making possible the extension of many loans.

Bill legalizing co-operative marketing. Removed legal uncertainties hampering farmers' co-operative marketing.

Bill regulating packers and stockyards. Producers' interests are now protected.

Federal Farm-to-Markets road program in place of automobile boulevard system.

Provided funds to carry on tuberculosis eradication work.

Put farmer on Federal Reserve Board to protect farmers' interests.

Kept U. S. Department of Agriculture appropriation at efficiency point.

Passed Federal highway appropriation bill as desired by farm interests.

Prominent among the measures opposed by the Farm Bureau as hostile to farmers' best interests was the proposed sales tax. It was defeated outside of Congress.

Mrs. Mahala Burns, Savanna, Mo., relates an experience, the like of which has happened in almost every neighborhood in this country, and has been told and related by thousands of others, as follows: "I used a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy about nine years ago and it cured me of flux (dysentery). I had another attack of the same complaint three or four years ago and a few doses of this remedy cured me. I have recommended it to dozens of people since I first used it and shall continue to do so for I know it is a quick and positive cure for bowel troubles."—Adv't.
