REV. H. R. BEATTY EXPIRES SUDDENLY

Beloved Pastor of Methodist Church
Answers Summons As About to Return From Fair.

It is with deep sorrow that we are called upon to publish the passing of Rev. H. R. Beatty, the beloved pastor of the Chelsea Methodist/Episcopal church.

The summons came sudden, about 5 o'clock yesterday as Rev. Beatty was about to return home from the Washtenaw county fair, the cause being heart trouble.

Mr. Beatty, daughter Helen and sons Wayne and David drove to Ann Arbor to take the latter to attend college. On their return father and children stopped at the fair grounds to visit the exposition. When ready to return home and as he came to the gate he was suddenly stricken, passing away quickly and peacefully.
Mrs. Ernest Adams and two children, who were to accompany Rev. Beatty home, and Helen Beatty arrived at the scene just after the passing of the spirit. The body was taken to Ann Arbor and later brought to the sorrowing home in Chelsea.

H. R. Beatty was born at Corunna, Mich., in 1874 and would have reached his 48th birthday had he lived until October 12, next. In August, 1899, he was united in marriage to Miss Cleo Culver of Williamston. To this union were born five children,
Joseph, who died in infancy, Howard,
David, Wayne and Helen. These four with the bereaved widow, who shared life's burdens and joys with him, survive.

Mr. Beatty graduated from Alma college and preached in Williamston for a time. He was ordained into the ministry in 1899 and appointed to his first charge at Prescott. His subsequent charges in order were Pinconning, Romulus, Dundee, Grass
Lake five years, Blissfield four and Chelsea two, receiving the appointment at the district conference just closed to return here for his third year.

Rev. Beatty was a preacher and religious worker of more than ordinary ability, his sermons giving evidence of a studious nature devoted to the work he loved. He has left success behind him, and each charge he has filled will mourn his seemingly untimely death.

Deceased was a member of the Masonic fraternity, passing to a high degree, and was affiliated with Knights Templar Commandery of Jackson, Blissfield F. & A. M., Chelsea Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and the Grange.

Besides the immediate family above, Mr. Beatty is survived by two sisters and five brothers, Mrs. Jennie Ottaway and Mrs. Newell of Flushing, Will of Los Angeles, Cal., Louis of Flint, George, Charles and Edward of Flushing.

The funeral will be held at the church here Saturday afternoon at one o'clock. Burial will take place at Williamston under Masonic auspices, with Olive Lodge, No. 156, F.
& A. M. of Chelsea conducting the ceremonies.

WASHTENAW FAIR IS GREAT SUCCESS

Children's Day, Tuesday, Is Record
Breaker—Large Crowd Yesterday.

Washtenaw county fair opened with a record breaking crowd Tuesday, the first day, which was designated as children's day, the schools of the county closing generally to allow the children to attend the exposition.

The appearance of the grounds indicates that much work had been accomplished during the past week to make possible the transformation that made the place such a busy one,
with its large amount of displays and feature attractions.

Yesterday the crowd was also large, many from Chelsea and vicinity attending. In the afternoon the grounds were formally dedicated with auspicious ceremonies. On the program were: State Senator Charles A. Sink, Representative E. B. Manwaring, Regent Junius E. Beal, Mayor George E.
Lewis, Mrs. N. W. Laird, head of Pomona Grange and J. Smith also a Grange official.

H. H. Halladay, secretary of M. A.
C., after inspecting the fair this afternoon, declared that the automobile exhibit was as good as any of the larger fairs he had seen, and stated that the Washtenaw fair had wonderful prospects and unusual advantages. Mr. Halladay was formerly state commissioner of agriculture.

Today is another record breaker as far as attendance is concerned, judging from the crowd that attended from Chelsea and vicinity.

Washtenaw county fair has been favored with ideal weather. The kind that allowed out of door mingling with community neighbors.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

NEW FACES IN STATE SENATE.

Returns from the primary election last week would indicate that there will be sixteen new faces in the Michigan state senate when that body meets next January, and these will all be Republicans unless the Democrats "slip one over" and elect one or more in the November election.

In a number of state districts some old timers have been turned down by the voters and new men have been nominated in their places. This action would indicate a direct protest against the service rendered or attitude of the "old timer."

Often it is wise to make changes in government official positions, and this is particularly true when office holders join the gang to spend the people's money unwisely, but on the other hand, there are instances when it is wise to keep the old man on the job. In national representation it requires some time to gain recognition and a new man in congress or senate stands little chance to accomplish much to benefit his constituents during the first year. The "old timers" who know the ropes are always ready to put it over on him.

The Republican congressional and senatorial districts which include Washtenaw county made no mistake in renominating their representatives, who will no doubt be returned to Washington by the November election vote.

RAILROADS AND COAL.

Despite the handicap of the big strike, the railroads combined in the New York Central lines have accomplished some heroic work in loading cars with coal and transporting the fuel, according to a report from Pitt B. Hand of the New York executive office. This statement says this year's coal loadings have been 46.4 per cent greater than in the same period last year when there was no strike.

A total of 25,707 cars of bituminous coal was loaded in the eleven working days ended September 6th, as against 17,558 carloads for the same period last year, an increase of 8,149 cars, or 46.4 per cent. The increase in loadings averaged 740 carloads per day; on several days the loadings were more than double that of last year.

Each day since coal mining became general, August 24th, showed increased loadings up to the peak on September 5th, when 2,760 cars were loaded, as against 1,736 cars last year.

The New York Central records show that the sudden termination of the miners' strike was followed by a greater demand for cars than ever before known, and that during the past fortnight this railroad system has supplied a number of cars for coal loadings greater than ever previously applied for by the mines, even at their peak season in years when there was no railroad strike.

Special efforts are being made by the railroad organizations to secure the utmost co-operation of shippers toward securing maximum service from every unit of coal-carrying equipment. The plans being carried out provide for the most expeditious possible movement and prompt unloading and return of coal cars to the mines. To this end the railroads are urging that orders for coal should not be placed in excess of actual immediate needs, to prevent delay in unloading at destination.

The New York Central lines early last spring placed orders for more than 18,000 freight cars of the most modern type, with a large quota of coal cars having a capacity of 50 and 55 tons. The construction of these cars has gone forward rapidly and a considerable number are already in service, new coal cars being placed upon the tracks daily and sent to the mines.

Railroad officials stress the point that consignees can contribute greatly toward prevention of serious fuel shortages, if railroad cars are unloaded and released promptly, so that they may be available for the maximum of moving service.

GOOD TIMES ARE IN SIGHT

There is an element of hope in the recent statement of the Wall Street Journal that this year's crops, measured by last year's output, will be no less than $12,000,000,000 and in all likelihood considerably more.

Such a staggering sum of money, going into the liquidating of loans, the erection of new buildings and the purchase of new machinery means that the wheels of progress will begin to hum.

The crops should prove particularly satisfactory to the farmers as they seem certain to bring good prices and are being cultivated under deflated wage conditions.

Unless some new form of hocus pocus is devised to strip the farmer of his profits, the year should be a helpful one.

Manufacturers may hold back from production fearing the coal and railroad strikes will check distribution, but when the dollar goes into the pocket of the farmer, nothing will stop for long the general prosperity of the country.

When sound demand is heard, we will soon get down to normal production and adequate distribution.

The public, of course will pay the cost of the strikes. But higher prices will not halt consumption, which, in the last analysis, is the basis of American happiness and prosperity.—Ex.

THE COST OF PUBLIC APATHY

Though the people of America are one hundred per cent opposed to any more taxation and are heartily sick of the burdens that have been placed on them, they fail utterly to make their feelings known with sufficient vigor to cause their representatives in congress to take notice.

Every man dodges the issue by saying to himself: "What's the use of my saying anything?" As Mark Twain said of the weather: "Everybody grows but nobody does anything."

Best authorities agree that additional federal taxation this year is unescapable. National receipts will be less than figured on and expenditures more. President Harding has announced an unbridled span of $69,700,000, and if Great Britain fails to pay interest on money lent her here during the war the deficit will be $900,000,000.

Against this may be deducted $272,000,000 of the balance in the treasury at the close of the fiscal year, and this spells additional taxation.

The farming interests are flatly opposed to a sales tax, the business interests shriek at the thought of screwing up the corporation taxes, which would undoubtedly prove a final blow to a business revival. There remains then the income tax, now outrageously high, but standing out as "the best bet of the politicians."

If the public remains apathetic, as is its custom, then there will be no justification for complaint when the new burden is added.

It is questionable if any country in the world is as unsentimental in its taxation as the United States. This is because the people refuse to take an interest in what is being done in their name.—Ex.

If you want to retain the good will of a politician keep him guessing. Time is too precious to waste on fish that are already hooked.

When we get ready to go bankrupt we will buy a sissy for what he thinks he is worth and give him away.

Sir A. Conan Doyle asserts that he can talk to spirits in the other world but we doubt their ability to hear him warble.

A good way to kill off a windbag is to encourage him to talk himself to death. Even physical endurance has an end.

If you have anything good to say about us don't wait until we are dead. Everybody spreads it on then.

Lady Astor says that "one sex can not govern alone." We know of some men who can't govern at all.

FRED J. BEAMAN RECOMMENDED FOR JACKSON POSTOFFICE

Townsend, and for the last four years clerk to the committee on postoffice and post roads, was recommended Monday by the senator to the post-office department at Washington for the appointment as postmaster at Jackson. Following a recent civil service examination, Beaman was returned on the list of three eligibles, and his recommendation by the senator is equivalent to a nomination. Burr Cook, present postmaster of Jackson, and Bert E. Burnett, former assistant postmaster, were the other two to pass the required tests. HATS USED TO DENOTE RANK

In China Headgear to the Value of Many Thousands of Dollars Is Not Uncommon.

The natives of the Philippines and South Sea islands wear large sun-hats as a protection from the heat. Palm leaves of various kinds furnish the material generally used, but the shapes differ. Some are woven flat and some with a peak. The commonest form in the Philippines is made of palm leaves covered with cane, a cane bandeau giving an air space above the head. The ornamentation of these hats is very simple; no colors are used, with the exception of brown, which is occasionally introduced in the use of hemp.

In China, in addition to the large, peaked coolie hat used as a protection against heat, there is the hat which is emblematic of rank. The social position of a Manchian woman, for instance, can always be determined by the ornaments on her bonnet, often consisting of precious jewels. These hats range in price from a few dollars to as high as $10,000 apiece. One of the most interesting specimens on exhibition at the Brooklyn museum is a hat covered with delicate ornaments of turquoise blue kingfisher's feathers, an imitation of jewels formerly used, fastened to a frame of a stiff black open mesh. These ornaments, which are made with a metal foundation, stand out about half an inch from the hat itself, and are beautiful both in design and color.

Onions as Medicine.

The Hebrews regarded the onion merely for its culinary value. The Greeks were fond of both onions and garlic, the former apparently used when drinking to increase thirst and enhance the pleasures of the cup. But in palmy days of Rome the two vegetables had become largely the badge of the rabble. In the Middle Ages any well-set table contained a plate of red onions. The chief repulse of the onion in medicine was as a diuretic and remedy for dropsy. This belief has persisted up to the present time and it is somewhat strange to find that as early as 1853 onions and a milk diet were pronounced the best remedy for dropsy.

RELICS FROM EGYPT

Interesting New Discoveries on View in London.

At the Courtiers and Royal Serenades at Abydos Belong to Date as Unbelievably Remote as 5,000 Years B. C.

London.—Most intensely interesting of the relics brought back by Prof. Petrie, the great Egyptologist, and his colleagues from the tombs at Abydos. The precious fruits of the winter's search are on view at the University college.

The graves at Abydos were those of courtiers and royal servants of the first dynasty kings, and the treasures were buried with them being to date almost unbelievably remote—about 5,000 years B. C. These tombs were not known 20 years ago when Professor Petrie explored the famous tombs of the first dynasty kings. There are hundreds of them, and it is thought from the evidence of many graves at one time, that in those days the servants of a king were sacrificed wholesale on his death.

The bodies were not mummified but were on their sides with their belongings around them—finely-made flint knives, copper tools, and of special interest, pieces used in games. There are some exquisitely carved figures of lions in ivory, probably part of a game in which these little figures were pushed along a board in pursuit of a hare. There are delicate copper needles, perhaps from the stock-in-trade of the court dressmaker; and a great deal of pottery and vessels in alabaster, all nearly perfect after 7,000 years.

One is struck once more by the evidence of a very finished civilization in the delicacy and refinement of these implements and decorations brought from the dark backward and abysm of time.

The exhibition is rich in tablets of later dynasties from the same site. One of the eighteenth dynasty is memorable because the dead man does not pray for funeral offerings in the common form, but only that the gods may grant him "a heart that is sweet every day."

A great deal of important work was done also at Oxyrhynchus, notably in exploration of the great Roman theater which held 10,000 people—one of the noblest theaters of antiquity.

C. Lehman, 420 Garfield street, Chelsea, says: "I was bothered with weak kidneys and backache. There was a lameness across the small of my back and my kidneys were irregular in action. Nights I was restless and felt all tired out, but finally I used Doan's Kidney Pills and their use put a stop to the trouble. My kidneys became normal and the lameness left my back. I am glad to recommend Doan's because I have found them to be a splendid remedy."

(Statement given March 1, 1913.) On April 27, 1920 Mr. Lehman added: "I still use Doan's now and then when I find my kidneys require a tonic and they always bring the same good results. My former statement holds good today."

The Big Muskeg

On the following morning, as he left the shack, the workmen came running toward him, jabbering and gesticulating. The foreman, hurrying up behind him, shouted and pointed in excitement in the direction of the muskeg.

When Wilton reached the shore he found that his worst fears had been exceeded.

Two-thirds of the trestle-work had disappeared, including a great stretch of the foundation, over which the locomotives and ballast trucks had passed the day before. The subsidence was twenty or eighty yards in length. The two alone remained above the treacherous swamp, and the rails hung festooned in midair.

The whole embankment would have to be reconstructed. As the mere mechanical process of dumping might serve merely to add to the weight superimposed upon the treacherous bottom, Wilton determined to lay down a corduroy over the sink-holes—a mass of tree-trunks. The depositing of the ballast on this would serve to compress the muskeg and loose rock, making a firm foundation, and the trucks, as they became water-logged, would garden, increasing the strength of the whole structure as time went by.

But for a few hours he almost abandoned hope. At the best, it meant holding up the construction of the line, for the permanent way was now only a few miles behind, and he dared not start operations on the east shore until he knew whether the muskeg could be spanned.

He spent the morning in his office, writing a report for the directors. The news would reach Clayton as soon as it could be telephoned, but at least he would have another chance. It was too late now to think of changing the route without throwing the company into liquidation. And Kitty held control.

The thought of that strengthened his resolve. He could not bring himself to go to Molly with the despondency upon him, but busied himself that afternoon examining the wreck.

For about a month he had had a strange protégé. One evening Jules Halfhead, the deaf-mute, appeared at the door of his shack, and quickly assumed the care of it. He was nearly always to be found there in Wilton's absence. Sometimes, however, he would betake himself back to the portage, and he was free of the camp, where he ran errands and messages for the engineers, and was the butt of mild practical jokes.

Wilton came to the conclusion, however, that the Muskegon's mind was as acute as any man's, and that his apparent simplicity was nothing but the outward aspect of his infirmity.

When Jules had cooked Wilton's supper that evening he came into the office in a state of excitement. The man had loved the work. He was often to be seen on the trestle, clinging for dear life to a plank as the trucks rumbled past within an inch of his head. When he saw the wreck of the embankment that morning, the foreman said that he had burst into tears. Now he was evidently trying to describe something to Wilton in pantomime; but Wilton could not follow his meaning.

Suddenly he seized a pencil from the desk and, stooping, began to draw a picture of the trestle upon the wall with remarkable skill.

Wilton's interest was at once aroused. "Yes," he said, nodding to Jules. "What about it?"

It was his habit to talk, although the mute could not hear his voice. He had an instinctive faculty of understanding. He looked at Wilton and nodded back.

He next drew four uprights—the heavy trunks of considerable size that were driven into the ground to support the trestling. Then he made a muddy line across each. Then he drew a hatchet. He looked up at Wilton in pathetic eagerness, and nodded.

You mean that some one tampered with the trestling?" shouted Wilton. Jules, who had watched his lips, nodded eagerly. But, as he always nodded.

When he was spoken to, little meaning could be attached to that. Wilton wondered if that was what he meant. If the uprights had been tampered with before they were set in the ground, by ax-cuts or otherwise, the weight of the ballast would not have broken them. The trestling would not have been immediately pulled down, but the trestling would have been practically imposed upon by the weight of the swamp, without support of the ballast would have spread the muskeg, causing the entire trestle to subside.

Wilton asked Wilton, speaking carefully. "Was it still watching him, and with lightning bolts, a caricature of Lee and the woodwork of the breath. Then he nodded. Jules nodded in return, smiled, and left the room. Wilton reflected deeply.

Wilton drew in his

If Chambers was a spy of Bowyer's, why had he shown him the bedrock at all? On the other hand, assuming that Wilton must eventually discover it himself, Bowyer might have sent Chambers to make a virtue of a necessity and to secure a position at the camp, where he could be of service to him.

In any case, Wilton could afford to take no further chances with him. It would serve no purpose to accuse him of having tampered with the trestling. He would give him a post somewhere where he could do no harm, and thus get rid of him.

Fighting down the burning rage in his heart, he went down the road toward the shack which the engineer occupied. This was a reconstructed shed. There was only one room in it, but Chambers had asked to have this rather than share the quarters of the other engineers.

The men were back in the bunkhouses, but the door of the shed was padlocked. Thinking that Chambers might be in the camp, he made his way toward the other quarters. But presently he heard some one calling him, and turning, saw Andersen running after him.

"Where you looking for Mr. Chambers, sir?" asked the foreman.

"Yes. Where is he?"

"Why, he went back to Clayton this noon, Mr. Carruthers! He said he was going in for you."

Wilton's suspicions suddenly flamed up. "The key!" he shouted, pulling at the padlock.

"I guess he took it with him," said Andersen.

"Have the staples pulled out at once!"

Wilton waited, fuming, until Andersen reappeared with the tool. The foreman wrenched out the staples and Wilton burst open the door. As he had expected, the shack was completely empty of all Chambers' belongings.

The two men looked at each other. Slow understanding came into Andersen's face.

"He was a bad yun," said the Swede. "I guessed you knew your business, Mr. Carruthers, when you took on Tom Bowyer's right-hand man. It wasn't for me to say nothing."

"Keep your mouth shut still, Andersen," said Wilton, shutting him on the shoulder. "We'll just start working again. And keep your eyes open. Some time we'll get him, and I'll telephone Inspector Quain to pick him up if ever he sees him in Clayton."

CHAPTER IX

The Face at the Window.

It was five days since Wilton had been to the portage. He had not meant to see Molly in his despondency, but now the discovery of Chambers' treachery came with an invigorating shock and aroused his fighting instinct against Bowyer.

He took the road across the Muskeg. Wilton saw the girl upstairs, at the factor's side. A book was on her knees and a lighted lamp behind her. She was not talking to him, however, but staring out of the window, and yet she did not see Wilton as he came to the door.

At his knock she came downstairs more slowly than usual. When she opened the door to him he saw that she was trembling. Her cheek was icy cold beneath his kiss.

"Come in, Will—I have something to say to you," she said.

He put his arm about her, and they went into the store together. He could feel that she was trembling all the while.

"What is it, Molly?" he asked, looking into her face and seeing tears in her eyes. "What is it, dear?"

"I'm afraid that we've both made a mistake, Will," she answered.

Wilton laughed. Once or twice Molly had questioned his love for her, but he had never had any difficulty in convincing her, in the usual lover's way.

"Molly, dear, I know I have neglected you," he said penitently. "But you know that until the work's finished I can't ask you anything. And I've been rushing it through, feeling that then I should have the right to."

"It's not the work, Will," she said, slowly. "I want you to release me."

The laughter died on his lips. He put his hands upon her shoulders and turned her toward him. She raised her face; her lips were quivering, and the tears had fallen, leaving her eyes hard and bright.

"You mean that, Molly?" asked Wilton gravely.

"Every word, Will."

"Why?"

"I have ceased to care for you."

She was keeping control of herself with a strong effort, and she shook more violently. She had never before self to offer an explanation, but now, face to face with him, she could not tell him that she had been moved by pity for him, and self-deceived. It was impossible for her to lie to Wilton.

"Molly"—she saw that his face was set hard as on that night of the riot—"I don't play with love. I love you and trust you. If you mean that, tell me again, and that will be enough for me."

"I meant it! Oh, can't you understand that I have changed?" she cried desperately. "I can never care for you, Wilton!"

He released her and turned away. "Good-night, Molly," he said.

Yet he went slowly out of the door, and, because the shock had come with stunning force, he was amazed that she did not call him back. He could not make himself understood that all his dreams and hopes of five minutes before were broken. Not until he had reached the portage. Then he stopped and looked back. The door of the store was closed. The light still burned in the factor's room and he saw Molly cross toward him and fling herself on her knees beside him.

"Good-Night, Molly," He Said.

He clenched his fists; but somehow the violence that relieved his feelings usually seemed to have no place here. He couldn't understand. He went home slowly across the portage.

The factor looked up when Molly entered, and was astonished to see the tears upon her face. When she kneeled down he put his hand clumsily upon her hair.

"What has happened, lass?" he asked. "Was it Will Carruthers ye quarreled with?"

"He will never come here again," said Molly.

A dull fire burned in the factor's eyes. He seemed to be struggling between two impulses: One was to comfort his daughter; the other, his gratification.

"Ah weel, lass, ye'll find another," he said.

But he abased his head before her indignant glance. At that moment the girl felt that her father and she were farther apart than they had ever been.

When Wilton reached his shack he took off his coat and flung himself down on his bed. He would not speculate on Molly's motives. He would not think of her at all. He would neither condemn her nor pity himself.

He forced his mind back to his task. The trestle—he would lay down a corduroy—he would drive the men all the summer, if need be, for Joe's sake. Poor Joe! The presence of the dead man seemed to fill the camp just as of old. Joe was the guiding spirit of this work. He had loved Joe more truly, than it seemed possible to love any woman.

He completed the few routine duties of the office and went to bed. He dozed off to sleep when something made him start up in bed and listen intently. He thought he had heard a slight sound in the office.

It was so slight that even his trained ears sent the message to his brain doubtfully. But it came again. Some one had very softly clicked back the catch of one of the windows.

He had the sense of a listener beneath it, and, all alert, Wilton crept noiselessly to his feet and stood listening in the darkness. Now there was no doubt. The window was being pushed very softly open. It was the window between the safe and his bedroom door. In the moonlight Wilton could see that it was opening by inches.

His own door was slightly ajar, and, inch by inch, he pushed it open, too. He saw a pair of hands, white, not work-roughened, placed against the bottom of the window-frame. A face appeared, and was thrust cautiously inside the room in reconnaissance. Wilton recognized Lee Chambers.

Satisfied, apparently, that Wilton was asleep in the next room, Chambers began to climb over the sill. Wilton waited till he was balanced there, and then, leaping forward, he drove his fist with all his force into his face. He felt the bone of the nose smash under his hand.

With a muffled cry Lee Chambers flung up his hands, slipped backward and fell. As Wilton ran to the window the ex-engineer leaped up and raced toward the trees. The thought of his treachery came into Wilton's mind and turned his sardonic humor into red rage. He reached into his desk drawer and pulled out the loaded revolver which he kept there. But by the time he was at the window again Chambers was gone.

Three months later an engine pushed two ballast trucks from the west to the east shore of Big Muskeg. The swamp was spanned. The corduroy had been laid upon the sink-holes, and had borne the ballasting. The trestling ran from bank to bank and carried the metals firmly, but the foundation was only as yet laid half-way, and the final proof had yet to be made.

However, Wilton had no doubts of the result. He had tried out the danger-spots. The trestle would contain the ballast. His work had been accomplished.

After the subsidence he had paid a flying visit to Clayton. He had not seen Kitty, and Kitty had not returned to the camp, but he had had a stormy meeting with the directors and, as he had foreseen, had been given his chance to try once more. There was, indeed, nothing else to be done. Bowyer had made the most of the disaster; but it was to Bowyer's interest that Wilton should try again and fail. That would put the Missatibi promptly into liquidation.

Now Wilton had succeeded. Big Muskeg was conquered, and on the east shore the vanguard of the line was driving the cleared way forward and pegging out the way for the metals. Soon grading would begin. Wilton's camp would shrink, and the engines would be moved ahead, and—he would have time to think.

He dreaded that. He had not seen Molly or the factor since that night of the subsidence. He knew that Bowyer had paid more than one visit to the store, but he shrugged his shoulders and put it out of his mind.

The workmen, after their months of arduous labor, had begun to grow slack. There was restiveness in the camp. Once or twice Wilton had seen signs of liquor. He detected it in the slowing up of work; he had smelled it in the bunkhouses—the penetrating odor of cheap alcohol, with its suggestion of gasoline.

Andersen, forestalling him, came to him about the time of this discovery.

"They're getting that rot-gut again, Mr. Carruthers," he said. "I don't know where. I'm keeping my eyes peeled, but I ain't said nothing."

"The best policy," said Wilton. "The men have worked hard. When this job's finished we'll let them slack up for a day or two. Then we'll get down to business on this proposition. But if you find out anything let me know at once."

A few days later came, the spanning of the swamp. On the same afternoon a summons came from the court, together with a letter from Quain. The police had at last picked up Papillon and Passepartout, and had recovered the rifle and transit compass. Wilton was wanted in Clayton to give evidence against the men.

The call was opportune. Wilton had already determined to put into execution a plan that he had formed. It was now October, and little more than two months remained before the loan would be called. That would give Bowyer the control of the Missatibi. Driven by the ironical realization that he was working for Bowyer, Wilton had resolved to go to Clayton as soon as the trestling was completed, and try to raise the money to pay Phayre, who, he knew, would not renew the note.

Big Muskeg was spanned. And, on the strength of that, Wilton believed the time had come to give Joe's secret to the world. He would publish far and wide the secret of the wheat lands. He would establish sufficient confidence in the line to make the raising of a loan a possibility.

Before leaving he placed a night guard on duty over the office, and arranged with Andersen to have three or four reliable men on watch in the event of the laborers attempting to cross the portage. He went to Clayton and laid his statement before a directors' meeting. They heard him in frigid silence.

"That's an old story," said Curtis,

"That's an Old Story," said Curtis, the Vice-President, When He Had Finished.

the vice-president, when he had finished.

An angry wrangle followed, which led nowhere. They flatly refused to spend any money on advertising. All the while, Phayre, leaning back in his chair, looked on and took no part in the proceedings.

"It comes to this," said Curtis finally, ly, thumping the table energetically. "We'll have to increase our capital. The delay has eaten into our reserves. We'll have to push straight toward our objective, the Transcontinental. Then we'll have the monopoly of a steady freighting business."

He could not get them to listen to the story of the wheat lands. Wilton wanted to advertise it widely, to open it up to homesteaders. He had plans for elevators. But the directors, who resented Kitty's control, were dead against him, and he got no thanks for what he had done.

The following morning the Sentinel—Phayre's paper—came out with a cartoon showing a widow dropping her mite into a bottomless pit marked "Missatibi," which boiled over a slow fire of wheat stalks.

Somebody had betrayed the secret, thus forewarning Bowyer and enabling him to open his campaign to deride it. But Wilton would not open his mind to suspicion.

He took counsel with Jim Betts. The old man was frankly pessimistic. "It looks to me," he ruminated, "as if them two snakes'll get the line. Joe must have been mad, or mighty hard put, when he hypothesized them shares." He turned to Wilton. "What d'ye want to worry about it for, anyway?" he asked. "If Joe took a chance like that, he couldn't have felt too strong about it."

He laid his hand on Wilton's shoulder. "Whisky's good," he said in his odd way. "So's ginger pop. But the mixture's b—ll. So's women and business, boy. I'd help ye with that loan if I could see my way. But I can't. I've been stung too had already, and I've got a grandson to look after. Ye'd better make terms with Phayre."

FRANCISCO

Obituary.
George W. Richards, youngest of seven children of Mary Bell and Nathan Richards, passed away September 14, 1922, at the age of 83 years, 8 months and 1 day.
His parents were pioneer farmers living about four miles north of Francisco, where their sons and daughters grew to young manhood and young womanhood. When a young man he was united in marriage with Miss Elize Griffith. To them was born one daughter, Ella, and soon after the little one came to bless and cheer, the mother was called by death. Soon after this affliction, Mr. Richards joined the Union Forces of the Civil war, and on his way home from service, at the close of the war, while firing a salute at Fort Detroit he was painfully wounded, being one hand just below the elbow and part of the other hand.
After his recovery from this accident he was married to Miss Julia Dean with whom he lived until she was called by death, some 20 years ago. He later married Mrs. Nancy Dowd, who survives.
He lived in Francisco a number of years, but for the past 45 years has been a resident of Chelsea, where, until a short time ago, he was a familiar figure on the streets. His brothers, James and Fred, will be remembered as residents of Chelsea by the older citizens, as will their sister, Mrs. Marion Ryler, who reached the unusual age of more than 93 years. A brother, Edwin Richards, of Barry county, was a frequent visitor in Chelsea, and he reached the advanced age of 96 years. The brothers Edwin, Fred and George, and the sister, Marion, have all died within the past six years.
He is survived by two grandchildren and a number of nieces and nephews. The funeral was held at the residence on Harrison street Saturday afternoon, Rev. E. A. Carnes officiating. Burial was made in Oak Grove cemetery.

COMMUNICATION.
Editor Chelsea Standard:
At the funeral of a Civil War veteran recently, there was little of the military character in evidence. There were three comrades in attendance, probably the only three in or around Chelsea physically able to attend. Would it not be fitting for the veterans of the World War, young men, to turn out and escort the few remaining G. A. R. soldiers to their last resting place and at least sound taps? To the writer, it seems it would be only a little mark of courtesy and respect they could well afford to show their senior veterans.
Respectfully,
Etta B. Frey.

UNIVERSITY OF FLYING
Advanced School Soon to Be Established in Texas.

Newest Form of Training in Air Service to Be Provided by United States Army—Ninety Listed in Initial Class.
San Antonio, Tex.—Development of one of the largest flying bases of the government air service at San Antonio is expected by air service officials with the transfer of the primary and observation schools to this point recently. The latest development of the flying base here is the establishment of an advanced flying school.
The opening of the advanced school, designated by air service officers as a "flying university," is the newest form of training in the air service, according to Maj. John N. Reynolds, officer in charge of the new courses. The school is located at Kelly field. Thirty cadets and 80 officers have entered the initial classes, and it is expected this number will be increased greatly with the opening of the fall term in September.
The advanced instruction offered in the "flying university" is divided into four branches—bombardment, pursuit, observation and attack, the primary groups of the air service. Embryo flyers will be graduated from the primary school, just removed from Carlstrom field, Florida, to Brooks field here, and then advanced to the higher training. The two schools will bear the same relation as high school and university, air officials state.
The present strength of Kelly field is 1,165 men and 108 officers, according to air service officials, while that of Brooks field is 350 men and 45 officers. This number will be greatly increased with the opening of the fall course, when 180 planes will be put in operation, at Brooks field, it is said. Approximately 100 planes are now in operation at Kelly field.
