

TO LIGHT SIGN AT END OF MAIN STREET

At the regular meeting of the Village council it was voted to instruct the Electric Light and Water Works Commission to place lights on the sign at the intersection of South Main street and trunk line M-17.

At last the travelers on the paved road will no longer have to look for landmarks to tell him that it is time to turn if he wants to hit Chelsea.

The sign erected by the county road commission is not a display advertisement but it is accurate and neat. With lights to illuminate it there should be no more question of where to turn.

This step is one that will interest every person driving a car because for some time the question of finding M-92 has been a hard one. No longer such difficulty.

CHELSEA HIGH TO DEBATE WITH CHARLOTTE

The Chelsea High debating team is busy now preparing for the first debate of the season to be held Saturday night. The team will debate the Charlotte High School team at Charlotte, and the question is: "Resolved that the United States and Canada should jointly construct a Great Lakes to Atlantic Ocean waterway by way of the St. Lawrence River, in accordance with the advisement of the International Joint Commission."

The question is one of considerable national interest and is the question debated by all the High Schools and Colleges in the state.

The Chelsea team is composed of Ruth Dancer, Gordon Reithmiller and Paul Risley. They will take the negative side of the question. Superintendent Clark will accompany the team to Charlotte. They will leave Saturday afternoon and return Sunday morning.

Superintendent Clark informs the Tribune that during the next semester there will be training given in debating in the Sophomore English classes.

THERE IS A REASON

Things just naturally get quiet about now. Even the school children feel the same thing. But there's a reason for them. Superintendent Clark informs us that diversified interests are not so plentiful now, because all the pupils are getting ready for first semester examinations. These start the week of January 22nd and from now until then means work and review for all.

TWO OVERTIME PERIODS TO DECIDE GAME

Fans were given their moneys worth last evening in the games played in the St. Mary Hall. The Midgets and the Junior High teams furnished a fine preliminary game and the Regulars vs. the Huston Brothers of Ann Arbor was a close game and a hot one.

The Dundee team which was to have played here last evening notified the local team early Thursday morning that they would not be here. The Ann Arbor team was then secured and a fine game played.

The game ended a tie and a five minute overtime period was played. At the end of the first overtime period the score was tied again. Five minutes more were played and the game ended 27 to 26 in favor of the Hustons.

Both teams played a fine game. The score at the end of the first half was 11 to 11, at the end of the game, 22 to 22. At the end of the first overtime period 25 to 25 and a final score was 27 to 26.

Brooks was the main scorer for the St. Mary team and Gallagher proved a good basket eager for the Hustons.

Chelsea took the first game, but the second was won by Ypsilanti by three pins. The third was another close one and the final count showed that Chelsea had won the match by 78 pins. High score was made by Radky of Ypsilanti, his high mark being 265.

WANT RENEWAL OF 13 CENT STAMPS

Washington—Postmaster General Work has received from members of the American history class of the Shepherd College State Normal school, Shepherdstown, W. Va., a petition that the postoffice department again issue stamps of the 13 cent denomination, which was recently abandoned.

The petition declares that the entire history of the United States is bound up in the figure 13 and gives the following historical reasons why the 13 cent stamp should be issued:

America was discovered on the thirteenth of the month. The republic originally consisted of 13 colonies.

The first official flag had 13 stars and 13 stripes. The American Eagle requires 13 letters to spell it, as does also the motto, "E Pluribus Unum."

The first word to pass over the trans-Atlantic cable was transmitted on the thirteenth of the month. The silver quarter is written all over with 13. Around the head of Liberty are 13 stars; the eagle bears an olive branch with 13 leaves in one jaw and 13 thunderbolts in the other. On his breast is a shield bearing 13 bars and in his beak is a ribbon bearing the motto with 13 letters; each wing has 13 feathers and it takes 13 letters to spell quarter dollar.

There are 13 letters in John Paul Jones' name. There were 13 ships in the first American navy. Perry's victory on Lake Erie was won on the thirteenth of the month. The stars and stripes were raised over Fort Sumter on the thirteenth of the month.

It would not cost any more to make a 13 cent stamp than any other one. The petition to Postmaster General Work also suggests several designs for the stamp, all commemorating the 13 colonies.

INSIDE STUFF

Some one finally says a good word for the former Kaiser. The "one" is Sir Basil Thomson, former head of Scotland Yard in London.

Thomson, now lecturing in America, and revealing "inside" of the British secret service, says:

The (German) general staff had resolved upon the invasion of Belgium and they put their plans before the Kaiser. He vetoed

This situation continued for 48 hours and later the general staff issued orders for the army to advance. Von Moltke went to the Kaiser's bedroom at 2 in the morning and asked him to sign the order. He refused. Von Moltke then said that the safety of the fatherland had devolved upon the general staff and, "if the Kaiser refuses to sign, the general staff must take the responsibility."

In other words," according to Thomson "the Kaiser must choose between abdication and approval, and he took the latter course."

Thomson's lecture, instead of absolving the former Kaiser of his guilt, distributes the guilt to the shoulders of many, Bill Ingham.

A melodramatic picture of the death of Rasputin, "sacred" of Russia," is given by Thomson.

Rasputin, taken to a palace basement dining hall, was given a glass of poisoned wine that had been tried out on a dog.

Rasputin, when the poison got to him, breathed heavily, and foamed at the mouth, but showed no signs of dying. So Prince Sapozhnikoff, when Rasputin staggered at him, gave him a shot out of a pistol, "and the monk fell backwards with a terrible cry."

A doctor, called, examined the body and pronounced it dead. Youssapov approached the corpse and "put his hand under the robe to feel the heart. It seemed to be still, when Rasputin slowly sat up and seized him by the throat."

Youssapov escaped. Rasputin staggered to the door, out into the snow. Three more pistol shots brought him down. But it took a long time to finish the work.

He died hard. You do not wonder, Youssapov decided that Rasputin was a devil himself.

Sir Basil Thomson thus adds a few more pages to the "inside story" of the world war, already contributed to so heavily by William H. Chamberlain, Lloyd George, Franklin K. Lane and others.

The "inside stuff" is coming out on the very heels of the war. It is contrary to custom, for diplomats usually leave their memoirs to be published after death.

We are fortunate. It is rarely that a generation that fights lives to learn what took place behind the scenes.

MUHAMMEDIANISM

Christendom is aghast at what Turkey is doing. And yet she is doing now just as she has been doing for ages, just as she believes she has a perfect right to do, just as according to her ideals, she thinks is honorable, and just as she will continue to do, whenever she has opportunity, until she changes her religion. For the Turks are not atrociously inhuman so much because of their peculiarities, but because they are Mohammedans.

When Turkey's representatives were dismissed from Washington, during the world war, they defended their nation in her behalf, then they tried to make light of it all, and in a crowded tauntingly retorted "You are another," making fun of our race riots and class crimes.

With shame we must hang our heads because of lynchings, trouble brutalities and sporadic outbreaks of ignorance and cruelty. It is true that such events as the East St. Louis holocaust and the Herrin massacre are expressions of as depraved and bloody savagery as any thing of which man was ever guilty. Some of the things done in the United States are as inhuman as any thing done in Turkey. But there is a difference, a vital, fundamental difference.

The men who are committing such acts in America are anti-Christian to the last degree, they are not representatives of our nation, they are not government agents acting under official sanction, they are anti government, anti society, and are branded as the enemies of humanity, they are criminals, of whom we are working morally, socially, legally to be rid.

In Turkey those, who are committing indescribably outrages against Christian men, women and children are consistent, sincere, fully organized Mohammedans pious and faithful, they are acting according to their standards of faith, they do represent their civilization, they are loyal, respected, often honored citizens, actually rewarded for acts that our standards regard as diabolic.

It is all a question of religion. What Turkey is now doing is a manifestation in practical life of her religion. Such snap shots of a faith give a more correct view than does a picture from a studied pose.

NATURE'S MISTAKE

The body of a male infant, imperfectly formed but recognizable as a sort of sack inside the abdomen of a man dead in Chelsea, Mass. Dr. Schillander, who performed the autopsy, found the infant probably had been there since the man's birth. A man almost but not quite Siamese twins. A freak of nature like this would pack a circus tent or museum for minutes. It's "strange," all right, but stranger still is that things don't happen oftener, considering the millions upon millions of humans who are born. Nature standardizes and makes few errors.

Here is a fortune. Get up something to take rouge off coats.

SOME NEW PRACTICAL IDEAS ON SAFEGUARDING GRADE CROSSINGS

M. P. Robson of Houston, Tex., has advanced an idea on the safeguarding of railroad crossings that is being hailed as a very valuable suggestion by railroad safety men and traffic men generally.

The two drawings illustrate Mr. Robson's plan. The upper drawing shows the proposed method where the roadway is parallel to the railway tracks. Take the driver in the car as pictured. If a train is coming toward him, he sees it while on the main highway. If a train is coming in the opposite direction, that is to his rear, he ing in the same direction with him, he can't fail to see this train when he makes the acute angle turn for the railroad crossing and is headed obliquely back in the other direction.

In addition, the motorist, in order to make the acute angle turn must slow down. He will be headed toward the tracks at a very low rate of speed. He will be entirely able to stop, and, under the circumstances, it is not likely that he will have any ambition to beat the train to the crossing.

Safety at Turn.
In case the motorist finds himself approaching the turn at too great a speed to make the acute angle turn safely the plan calls for a short runway straight ahead, where the motorist can turn around at his leisure.

The plan works in exactly the same way if the motorist is traveling in the opposite direction to the one indicated.

The second drawing illustrates the method as applied to roads that cross tracks at a right angle. The zig-zag forces a slowing down, there being one broad turn first, then an acute one. By making the acute angle turn the motorist is given a good view of the tracks in both directions before he crosses. He is forced to a very slow speed and will have his car under control.

Always a Danger Spot.

The principal thing in safeguarding grade crossings is to make the motorist understand that every crossing is a danger spot, to impress on him, as he approaches, that he is at a place where he must take precautions. Any plan which tends to make the motorist feel that the grade crossing has become safe is worse than no plan at all.

Auto men and railway men generally who have been approached on the subject have agreed that Mr. Robson's plan is superior to any of the others suggested and they express the hope that it will speedily be given a thorough test.

While it is recognized that the plan would make railroad crossing a slow process, it is believed that motorists would not object to this if a large number of the present grade crossings are eliminated altogether. Especially it is not believed they will object to the minor delays when it is remembered that 1,600 people were killed on grade crossings in the United States last year and some 12,000 injured. This tremendous slaughter can be avoided by the adoption of an adequate safety system. Motorists generally are invited to join in the perfecting of such a system.

CHAPTER XI.—Concealed in the knife set under a woman's hand, West is taken to a room, where he is held by a man named Coolidge, who he believes to be a man named Coolidge.

The three men stepped over the low wall and moved off across the deck, the older talking fluently, and pointing to various things of interest. The man never spoke, and West gave thought to his presence. He had an rarely fortunate so far, and was waiting for an opportunity to question his guide on the purpose of their voyage.

The man opened the cabin door, and West stepped inside, the interior lit by a single lamp. The man was looking at West, and he stood still for the first step, hearing the latch click behind him.

A hand gripped his shoulders as though in a vise, and swung him around; the muzzle of an automatic confronted him, and behind it the threatening eyes of his guide glared directly into his own.

"Not a move, you d—d spy," a voice said coldly. "Now, Mark, that's the way; I thought so. Give it to me, get the card over there and give them a pair of two. A very good job, by the fellow is safe enough, I say."

Turned his eyes away, searching vainly, confident that West was safely secured.

"Who is that, Mary?" he said sharply. "Who is this guy, anyhow?"

"The man came forward through the door, West had a glimpse of her face, the features were unfamiliar, but she looked familiar, and she said:

"He's the Lad, Ain't He?"

"Home Sweet Home"

"YOU GIVE A YOU E... 'LIE! ARGUE. POINT OUT WITH HIM."

"THAT'S THE TROUBLE WITH YOU MEN YOU WIN BY FORCE NOT BY SOUND LOGIC."

"GOODNESS GRACIOUS AUNT HATTIE I ADMITTED IN THE ARGUMENT THAT I WAS WRONG!"

"YES - BUT YOU NEVER ADMITTED THAT I WAS RIGHT!"

trative in appearance, with dark hair and bold black eyes that met his own defiantly. So this was the woman he had seen on board; not Natalie Coolidge at all. There had been a mistake of some kind; but if so, why had these people given him this sort of reception aboard? These thoughts swept his mind in a flash, as the woman peered forward to see his features more clearly. For a moment she said nothing, and the man broke out impatiently.

"He's the lad, ain't he?" he asked. "We ain't gone and picked up the wrong guy?"

"No; he's the lad, all right. I never jumped him but once before myself. I heard his name then, but forgot it. He's her friend, there ain't no doubt of that, Joe, and it ain't likely he's laughing around here just for fun. Is his name West?"

"Sure; what's yer name, young fellow?"

Concurrence was useless; they evidently had him correctly spotted; to the would do no good.

"Matthew West."

"That's the name, Hogan," the woman exclaimed eagerly. "He is a soldier—a captain, or something like that. Jim told me about him; he's the same fellow who was sniping about Mike's place last night, before we pulled out."

"Is that so? How the h— did you get out of there?"

"We had a little trouble," West admitted, "but they let me go."

"Yes, they did! I know better than that; Hogan don't do business that way. I reckon we've played his game all right taking you in. Well, you got out of here so easy, let me tell you. How'd you come to get onto us?"

"That's my business."

"Oh, is it? Well, we'll make it ours from now on. There is one thing pretty sure—you were here playing a lone hand. So it don't make much difference what your idea was. We'll take the bird along with us, Mary; then he'll be out of temptation."

The woman nodded.

"Jim will know what to do with him," she said. "All we got to do is keep him safe."

"I'll attend to that; come on, Mark, let's throw the d—n snake into that left-hand stateroom. Hell stay there all right. Aw, take hold; don't be afraid of hurting the fellow."

They roughed him forward, but West made no attempt to resist; his hands were bound, and he was helpless. The woman threw open the narrow door, and he was bundled unceremoniously across the threshold, and thrown heavily to the floor. He struggled partially upright, protesting against being left in that helpless condition, but the red-mustached man only laughed, shutting the door tightly, and locking it. The single port hole was covered by heavy drapery, the stateroom in total darkness.

West could distinguish the movement of feet in the outer cabin, and then the closing of a door. Undoubtedly the two men had gone on deck, leaving the woman there alone. His feet were not tied and he could sit up, although the hands were tightly bound behind him. With eyes accustomed themselves to the gloom, he could discern something of his surroundings. He was in the ordinary stateroom of a small yacht, with barely space in which to move about comfortably. Two bunk beds were at one side, with a metal stand at their foot for washing purposes. A rug covered the floor, the beds were made, and a stool, screwed to the deck, occupied a position just below the porthole. A few hooks were in evidence on the opposite wall; but no garments dangled from them to tell of previous occupancy. Indeed the place was scrupulously clean, as though unused for some time.

West made his way to the port, pushed aside the curtain with his shoulders and looked out. The smallness of the opening made any hope of escape in that way impossible; nor could he expect to attract the attention of any one ashore. Convinced of his complete helplessness, he sat down on the stool to consider the situation.

He had been a fool; there was no doubt as to that; the only thing now was how he could best retrieve his folly. He had walked blindly into a trap, suspecting nothing, confidently relying on his own smartness, believing himself unknown. Now he must find his way out. It occurred to him to return how easily it had been accomplished; not so much as a blow struck; no opportunity even for him to cry out an alarm—only that dark cabin and the threatening revolver aimed against his chest. He wondered where McAdams was; perhaps hunting him even then on the pier; and Sexton, what had he succeeded in discovering out at Fairhaven? That Natalie Coolidge had returned home, no doubt. At least he no longer believed she was with that gaudy party—evidently there was but one woman on board. Yet, whether she was there or not, it was clear enough from what he had heard that this sudden voyage of the Scimitar had some direct connection with the mystery he was endeavoring to solve. That was why he had been decoyed aboard, and made prisoner; to keep him silent; to lead him secretly out of the way. Yet this knowledge revealed nothing as to what their real purpose was.

What did they intend doing with him now that he was in their hands? Joe had declared his fate would be left with Hogan. Then it must be that they had a rendezvous arranged somewhere where with that arch-conspirator, some hidden spot along the lake shore where they were to meet shortly, and divide the spoils, or make further plans. Hogan unquestionably was the leader of the gang; but who was the woman? She had evidently been in Mike's place the night before, and had a glimpse of his face. She must have left with that party in the automobile, yet surely was not the one who had dropped that note begging the police to search this vessel.

What then had become of the other? If she was being held prisoner, it was not at all probable she had been left somewhere ashore; apparently she had reason to know where she was being taken—to the Scimitar; otherwise she would never have written as she did. She must have overheard their plans, before she hastily scratched off the note desperately; and yet those plans might have been changed. However, if so, why were these people—accomplices of Hogan no doubt—hiding in the yacht, seeking to conceal their identity in an effort to disappear? What were they being from? Why were they so fearful of discovery by the police? What would cause them to kidnap him, merely on suspicion that he was a friend of Natalie Coolidge? The very act was proof positive of the desperation of their crime. It could be accounted for on no other theory.

West paced the narrow space, his brain whirling, as he attempted to reason the affair out, his own helplessness becoming more and more apparent. What could he do? There was but one answer—absolutely nothing as he was then situated. He could only wait for some movement on the part of the others; his fate was out of his own hands; he had been a fool, and must pay the price. The cork about his wrists chafed and hurt with each movement. The metal wash-stand gave him an inspiration; its upper strip was thin, and somewhat jagged along the edge; possibly it might be utilized to sever the strands. It was better to try the experiment than remain thus helplessly bound. With himself free he could at least defend himself.

He made the effort, doubtfully at first, but hope came as the sharp edge began to bite at the rope. It was slow work, awkward, requiring all the strength of his arms, yet he felt sure of progress. He could feel the strands yield little by little, and redoubled his efforts. At last, exercising all his muscle, the last frayed strand snapped. His wrists were bleeding, and the hands numb, but the severed cord lay on the floor and he had the free use of his arms. The sudden freedom brought new hope and courage. He listened at the door, testing the knob cautiously. There was no holding and for the moment he crept toward him from without. The door was doubtless there on guard, but any effort he might make to break down the door would only bring the whole gang upon him. Unarmed, he could not hope to fight them off. As he stood there, hesitating, unable to determine what to attempt, he became aware of a throbbing under foot, increasing in intensity. West knew instantly what it meant—they were testing out the engine; if all worked well, the boat would cast off.

He sprang back to the port and stared out, eagerly hoping that, as they swept out into the lake, he might find some opportunity to communicate with some one on the pier. Perhaps by this time Mac would have arrived, and be watching their departure, unable to intervene, as he had no warrant for arrest, or any definite knowledge that the yacht was being used for a criminal purpose. He had not long to wait. Hasty steps echoed along the deck; a voice shouted out some order, and the end of a loosened rope dropped splashing into the water astern; the boat trembled to the pulsations of the engine, and West realized that it was at last slowly, then more swiftly, slipping away into the broad water. He still stood there, gazing back at the fast receding pier; gradually becoming blurred in the distance, but hopelessly. He knew now he must face his fate alone.

THE REASON
"I wonder what made them put this station so far from town," said a isolated traveler to the solitary official. "I never thought about it, sir," was the answer, "but perhaps they thought it would be handy to have it as near the railroad as possible."

THE NEW COSTUMES OF SATIN

Popular Material Holds Sway Among the Best Sellers—Twills for School Wear.

Satins which have not been observed to a conspicuous degree in other lines for this season are said to be among the best selling numbers at present. For parties the changeable taffeta georgette and velvet are chosen. Pansies, plating and metallic ribbons are favored trims on the high-colored or pastel georgette frocks. Slightly-fitted linguo effects and full skirts are noted on the more buxant taffeta modes. Velvets for afternoon dress wear for the flapper and little girl are in dark shades for the most part, with embroidery in brighter tones as decoration. Gay-colored leather is applied with heavy embroidery stitches in a smart frock of black velvet.

Patent twills are in demand for school wear, and Anne Segura, the novelty wools, Brakils and hoods and additions of contrasting colored crapes de chine are means of flouting the patent twills for practical wear. Velvets are expected to be added in great proportion in the line, in order to anticipate a demand that is already being felt. The party dress is of increasing interest to the buyer as the season goes, it is said, the numbers being in good demand now.

Khaki for Children.
Khaki is surprisingly developed in little costume suits for children. Being a practical material it has been trimmed with gay-colored braids and kept from having any of the drabness often prevalent in the use of khaki. The models are attractive and very sensible for hard wear.

To Prevent Sagging.
To keep one-piece dresses from sagging at the side seams, pin them onto the clothesline by the hem of the center front and the center back.

Greater Detroit has a population of 1,184,425, according to the estimate of the publishers of the Detroit City Directory just issued. The present population includes Highland Park, Hamtramck and the villages adjacent to Detroit.

The body of Victor Secor, 12-year-old son of Ames Secor, was found in a field near An Sable. The boy had left home with a shotgun to go hunting, and it is believed that he accidentally shot himself.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS
is greatly relieved by constitutional treatment. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced, your hearing may be destroyed forever. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the blood on the mucous surface of the system, thus reducing the inflammation and assisting Nature in restoring normal conditions. Circulate free. TO KEEP CAR RUNNING WELL DURING WINTER

Good, Clean Oil is of Most Vital Importance.

Just a Few Changes From Summer Running Are Necessary and Six Helpful Suggestions Are Offered to Owners of Automobiles.

A motorist should have no more trouble with his car in winter than he does in summer, if he takes the right precautions. Cold weather operation requires just a few changes from summer running, and the following six helpful suggestions are made in these operating motor cars in cold weather.

- 1. Use a good, clean oil with a low cold test. It will flow at the first turn-over.
2. A little alcohol in your radiator will prevent a frozen radiator, cause less inconvenience and preclude cracked cylinder blocks.
3. A radiator cover will keep your engine and radiator warm. It also makes for easier starting and saves your storage battery.
4. Drain your crank case more frequently in winter than in summer. Every 500 miles is a good plan.
5. Easy starting even in coldest weather, will result from the use of volatile gasoline, because of its low boiling point.
6. There are more than fifty points on your car that need lubrication. See that they get it this winter.

Constipation.
Constipation of the bowels is a stoppage of the sewerage system that removes waste matter from the body. It is as necessary that your bowels move regularly once each day, to carry off this waste, as it is that the waste pipes of your home be kept open and carry off the waste from the house. If you would enjoy good health, keep your bowels regular by taking Chamberlain's Tablets when needed.—Adv.
