OUR POLICIES

Let us all get together for a bigger and better Chelsea.
A sewerage system for Chelsea.
A building program that is bound to build.

KIDDING OURSELVES.

About 200 years ago Richard Bradley published a "Family Dictionary" in which he said: "To attain o an advanced and even extreme old age, take three pounds of rosewater, five ounces of orange and lemon peel dried in the shade, nutmeg, clove and cinnamon, of each three ounces; a pound of red roses that have been gather two days, a pinch of laurel leaves; put all these together with some rosewater, bed upon bed, into a glass of limbeck, distill them gently with a Bath-Mary, and keep the water that comes out for your use."

This concoction, according to Bradley, would prolong life and meantime effect all the cures for infirmities and disorders ever claimed for any patent medicine by a street faker.

There are many home brewers ambitious enough to attempt to manufacture Bradley's formula, no doubt. He had other formulas for living to a ripe old age—and played them up so strongly that it is evident the folks of 200 years ago were as keen for long life as we eager observers of monkey gland experiments.

Life is a merry go round, the same old things over and over again in different disguises in succeeding generations.

Death and trouble seem to ignore the campaigns against them.

The trouble with these attempts to find a method of making people live 150 or more years is that, even if scientists discovered how, no one would live up to the rules.

It's like going to a doctor. We want him to give us a pill and send us away magically cured. If Doc prescribes starvation diet, a long course of obitimermedicinorhard physical exercise, the patient is apt to consider the cure worse than the disease.

After all, we're kidding ourselves about wanting to live 200 years or so. Most of us are ready to quit at 70, tired, bored.

THE FARMERS IMPROVED OUTLOOK.

The farmers lot at the present time is hard. He is toiling while others are sleeping, is still at work long after they have quit in the evening and his pay is little more than his keep. Not so many years ago he was getting prices that permitted the paying off mortgages with one year's crop. Now he has to strive with might and main to pay running expenses and taxes.

But a brighter day is dawning. Europe is beginning to buy more of the surplus, the population here is increasing and there are less farmers now than a year ago to supply the food. Values of crops cannot but help go up under these conditions. The farmer will either get more money or more goods for that which he raises. This is sure as that the sun rises and set.

Lately the stock market, a prosperity barometer had commenced to advance. It had been declining for weeks tho there appeared to be great prosperity in the cities. Traders knew that the prosperity was without foundation because the farmer wasn't getting any return for his work. Now apparently they believe the farmer is to come into his own. Prices are going up because there is confidence in the future. Good traders look six months to a year ahead. They are concerned little with the fluctuations of the day.

HOW'S YOUR HEALTH?

How many days' work, how much money do you lose yearly as a result of sickness? The National Health council says sickness costs our country 900 million dollars a year in lost wages and that the total loss from preventable diseases and deaths is 3000 million dollars a year. This is a conservative estimate, too low, for it figures the average earning power at only $3 a day and does not take into account the money paid for doctors, nurses, etc.

The medical profession, instead of trying to make us live 150 years, might intensify more at making us healthy while we live our short span. Elimination of "colds" would be more valuable than any possible result of monkey glands.

LIKE TO TALK

A committee of lawyers, reporting to the American Bar association, is alarmed because it understands that there are a million and a half radicals in the United States.

This shouldn't alarm even an 1890 model mind. For, out of those 1,500,000 radicals, at least 1,450,000 of them don't want to do anything except talk.

Free speech is democracy's safety valve.

AMERICANS TRY ANYTHING ONCE.

Politics, usually dull, seems due for a resurrection of its old time interest. Henry Ford, building the largest radio broadcasting station in the world, may campaign for the presidency by wireless. From Germany comes a report that the former crown prince will run for presidency of the German republic at the next election. In his favor Ford has American curiosity—the desire to try anything just to see what results.

DEAR A. LEDA: What are the words that R. S. V. P. stand for? A friend told me that this expression was not used much today. If that is true, what takes its place? Thank you.

A. READER.

R. S. V. P. are French words. Repondez si vous please, which means, "answer if you please." Your friend was correct in saying it is rarely used on invitations now. The reason is, that people are supposed to have the politeness to answer invitations without having to be asked to. However, one would drop a hint: It might be put this way: "Kindly send response to " and then give the address.

DEAR A. LEDA: (1) Is one expected to send a written acceptance for an afternoon tea or "at home" card? (2) If one cannot attend should calling cards be sent? If so, how many.

Mrs. E. L.

(1) No. (2) Yes. If it is impossible to put in an appearance at the affair, a visiting card should be put in an envelope and sent to the hostess. Try and have it arrive while the tea is in progress. This may be done by the services of a messenger or by post. (3) A husband and wife if unable to appear would each send a card. If a hostess and a daughter are giving the reception two cards each are sent.

DEAR A. LEDA: (1) What should be done if one drops his fork at dinner? How should celery be salted?

A. V. R.

If there is a servant allow her to pick it up. Otherwise do so yourself, unless there is a gentleman beside you, in which case he will do it. FARMER-BANKER CONFERENCES THROUGHOUT NATION DEVELOP WAYS TO AID AGRICULTURE

Collective Marketing, Diversified Farming, Promotion of Agricultural Education and Use of Bank Instead of Mercantile Credits Chief Lines of Suggested Action.

By D. H. OTIS,

Director, Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association.

D. H. Otis

Four lines of action to improve the business of farming stand out in the discussions that have occurred at a series of farmer-banker conferences now being held throughout the United States. They are collective marketing, diversified farming, the promotion of agricultural education and the use of the more economical bank credit rather than mercantile credit. At many points active steps to foster action along these lines have been taken.

The conferences were initiated by the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association to the end that the condition of the man on the farm be improved. The first conference was held in conjunction with the Wisconsin College of Agriculture at Madison. An important point of contact for the work of the Commission was established at this meeting in the form of cooperation with the agricultural colleges.

In five other states—California, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Utah—It was agreed at subsequent conferences that bankers' agricultural committees would meet at the state agricultural colleges and, in cooperation with the college officials, work out a program that they would recommend to the banks.

The Texas Plan

It was at the Texas conference that it was developed that the officials of both the bankers' association and of the state college felt the big problem for that state was the establishment of a system of collective, orderly marketing. In order to bring this problem effectively before the farmers and the bankers it was agreed to hold a banker-farmer meeting in December. Efforts will be made to get from 200 to 250 bankers to attend, each banker to bring with him several representative farmers of his community. The program and demonstration will emphasize the need of meeting the marketing problem and point ways to a satisfactory solution.

At Athens, Georgia, the conference recommended that the State Bankers Association take steps to raise a fund for assisting deserving students to complete a college course in agriculture or home economics. This conference, recognizing the valuable work being done by county agricultural and home demonstration agents, also went on record as favoring the employment of agents in each county.

At Raleigh, North Carolina, conference the pressing problem, in addition to loans for worthy students, was held to be encouragement of the farmer to practice greater crop diversification. The conference felt that the first big step was to get farmers at least to produce sufficient vegetables, fruit, milk, meat and poultry to live on.

THE GREAT SCOURGE OF HALF TRUTHS

By JOHN OAKWOOD

A soap-boxer pointed at a great factory. "Who built that factory? Workmen!" he yelled. "Who run the machines? Workmen! Who get the profits? Capitalists!"

The soap-boxer told a half truth that amounted to a whole lie. His listeners did not know that that particular factory, typical of thousands of others, was a complete refutation of the lie—if only the other half of the truth were told.

It is true the factory was capitalized—for a million dollars. The net profits gave annual dividends of 6 per cent, or $60,000, to the stockholders. All that was true.

But it was also true that the million dollar capital was divided up into ten thousand shares of $100 each. The ownership of these shares was distributed among about one thousand people. Several hundred of them were workmen in the factory. They were saving out of their weekly wages and buying shares on the installment plan. They were Capitalists.

It was likewise true that shares were also owned by workmen in other factories, by clerical workers and by small merchants. A good many were also owned by widows and orphans whose modest estates had been wisely invested for them by their bankers. They were Capitalists.

It was also true that the factory corporation had issued a million dollars in bonds to raise funds to buy the material and pay the wages of workmen to build the factory. These bonds were owned as investments not only by persons of wealth but also by many people of moderate means who had saved out of their wages and salaries. They were Capitalists.

And it was also true that out of the receipts of the factory, before a cent was taken to pay interest on the bonds, before a penny was used to pay dividends on the stock, a good many dollars were taken to pay wages to the workmen.

The workmen were Capitalists too. They were investing their strength and their talents and their skill in the factory—they were getting their dividends out of its earnings as well as the stockholders and bondholders.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Returning to her home in a small town, Milton Center, from a visit to New York, the widowed mother of ten-year-old Ann Hyman announces her wedding to Hudson Cortlandt, socially and politically prominent. Her husband has not been told about Ann, and the new wife fears he will be displeased.

CHAPTER II.—With Ann, Mrs. Cortlandt returns to New York. To the house of Hendricks Cortlandt, her husband's brother, with whom the latter is living. Hudson practically refuses to have anything to do with Ann, and the child is gladly adopted by Hendricks Cortlandt. Bailing, with his position as United States minister to Switzerland, the pair are lost in the wreck of the vessel.

CHAPTER III.—Ann satisfactorily fills a gap in Hendricks Cortlandt's lonely heart and their affection becomes mutual.

CHAPTER IV.—At sixteen years of age Ann is confronted with the bugles of the Civil war. As Hendricks Cortlandt's acknowledged heiress she is naturally prominent socially, and the situation is resented by Mrs. Hendricks. Hendricks's sister, who is also Hendricks's guardian, looks upon Ann as the natural heir of the Cortlandt wealth. The Civil war breaks out, the fall of Fort Sumter causing consternation in New York and the North generally.

CHAPTER V.—A tentative engagement between young Rensselaer and Ann is underfoot. Ann is attending in a New York regiment on the first call of the North to the colors.

CHAPTER VI.—His brief term of enlistment expired, Hendricks Rensselaer returns to New York. Ann is instrumental in causing him to re-enlist. War hospitals are established in New York, and Ann is eager to help in the work, but her guardian's opposition from her guardian and his sister.

CHAPTER VII.—Ann has her way. Ann spite of Mrs. Rensselaer's open opposition, she goes to the hospital, and is underfoot. The idea, taken up by the work of cheering the unfortunate wounded who have been sent back from the front.

CHAPTER VIII.—With her guardian, Ann visits Hendricks Rensselaer in his encampment on the outskirts of Washington. He approves of her work in the hospital, but she refuses to give it up. There is a rift in their affection.

CHAPTER IX.—From Liberty prison Denesley Howard, forgotten boyhood comrade of Ann, is brought to the New York hospital. The girl has her share in caring for him. Beyond possibility of recovery, Ann has him removed from the hospital to his home, where he passes his last few days in comfort.

CHAPTER X.—Dispatches from the front announce the death of Hendricks Rensselaer. Ann had written to him, breaking off their engagement, but had confided in no one, and her guardian and relatives naturally believe her heartbroken. Hendricks Cortlandt is sent by the President on a diplomatic mission to Europe.

He pulled a folded paper from his pocket, and, sure enough, it was a pass. It bore the governor's necessary signature, and it was made out to a Mrs. Edward Blake. When she looked up at him, the young man observed that the girl's gray eyes seemed suddenly black. "Why isn't she—this Mrs. Blake—going?"

"Her son died before she could start."

"Oh, the poor woman! . . . Don't you think it seems a pity to waste it?"

He looked bewildered at this direct attack, so she added smoothly, "Of course I know that the governor would give me one—he is a great friend of my uncle's, you see—but I can't bear to delay. . . . There's going to be this battle. . . . I want to get there before it's fought. . . . I want to find some one. If I could only have this pass!"

"It wouldn't do you any good. It isn't made out to you."

"Would anyone know that?"

"It wouldn't be right," the young clergyman said firmly, but a wave of color swept from his inordinately low collar to his blond hair.

"I suppose not," Ann drooped again, hopelessly.

"I wish I could give it to you."

She turned pleadingly to him, and she laid one beseeching hand upon his arm. "Oh, do give it to me! If you will, I can start for Baltimore at once. Please let me have it—please!"

He looked at the slender white fingers irresolutely. Somehow, his was not an arm upon which beautiful young women often leaned, and he burned to be worthy of this appeal. Ann swept her gray eyes up to his. "You will, won't you?" she said confidently. She held out her other hand, trustfully.

Her evident dependence was too much for him. He put the folded paper in her outstretched fingers, and tingled with a delightful feeling of wickedness. "Of course," he said truthfully, "I shouldn't let you have it, if it were not a case of life and death!"

"No, of course not. . . . I can never thank you—I'll never forget you! . . . Come on down with me, and help me find my cab."

As she took her seat in the train, Ann observed that there were fewer women traveling that day; the car was filled for the most part with soldiers. They were interested in her, that was quite evident, for she never looked up without meeting a pair of smiling, happy eyes, but she was disposed to be discreetly shy with them, and she struck up a protective acquaintance with a grizzled major who was returning to his regiment with one empty sleeve.

She consulted him about her probable destination. "Where do you think the Army of the Potomac is?" she demanded.

"I am ordered to Frederick City, as the nearest railroad point. I should try to go there, if I were you. It's your best chance for information. You might even run into the Fifty-Fifth. No one knows. You'll have to spend the night in Baltimore."

"The night?" Ann echoed, with a sinking heart. Nights on trains were all very well, but nights in strange cities were more than she had bargained for. "I—don't know anyone there," she faltered childishly.

The major frowned. "I do," he said at length. "I think the woman who runs the Eutaw house would remember me. I was taken there when I lost my arm, and she was very good to me. She'll look after you, I am sure. I'll take you to her."

"Oh, thank you!" murmured Ann. How would the world revolve, she wondered, if it were not for kindly men?

The hostess of the Eutaw house welcomed Ann questioningly. "Take you in?" she said doubtfully. "Well, I don't see as I can do anything else. There ain't a mile of room—but I'll have to manage. There's a sofa in my room. I reckon you can have that."

"I shan't sleep anyway," Ann said hastily. Nothing seemed more impossible to her than that.

"That's what they all say," her hostess remarked, with sinister cynicism.

Ann shut her eyes experimentally; she was certain that she could not sleep: when she opened them again the morning sun was streaming into the room, and her hostess was standing over her, arguing upon her the necessity of haste, if she were still determined upon her mad idea of catching the train to Frederick City.

She dressed in a bewildered hurry, and protested impatiently as she choked down the hot coffee and corn bread brought her by a weeping darky maid. She had but one thought in her mind—to get to the train before it started, for now added to her wish to find out if it were true that Hendricks lived, was a desire to drink more deeply this exhilarating draught of excitement. She would find out about Hendricks, and then, somewhere, she would find a hospital.

Her drive to the station—dashing through the crowded streets and swinging crazily around corners—was gorgeously exhilarating, and her spirits soared in response. The station was the center of excitement, and the streets leading to it were filled with people; they tossed aimlessly about, regardless of the hot July sun, and shouted and gesticulated. As she drove through the crowd Ann caught scraps of news; the Confederates were concentrating their forces north of the Potomac river, and Harrisburg was in great danger. Here and there she heard exclamations of General Lee, but she had no time to dwell upon them, for the train stood puffing and ready before the station, and six or eight soldiers hung out of every window, shouting to their fellows on the platform, and waving indiscriminate greetings.

Ann was a Godsend to them; the entire train waved at her, with wild gaiety. She could scarcely make her way through the crowd, and when she finally reached the ticket window the agent hesitated over her request for transportation to Frederick City, but the eloquent plea of her deep mourning, as well as the governor's signature on the pass she mutely offered him, overcame his scruples. When the train started she was sitting in it, surrounded by admiring young soldiers who were joyfully disposed to forget their threatened baptism of fire in the presence of the pretty girl. There was no question, today, of her withdrawing from their attentions; the boys were wildly excited at the prospect of an immediate battle, and Ann was softened by a grim realization that these skylarking youngsters might be among the ill-fated ten thousand for whom stunner preparations were being made; she would not have snubbed them even if she could have done so, which was doubtful. They swarmed about her, firing eager questions at her, and told one another that she was "a plucky one, all right!" Their very numbers made her at ease with them.

"The train made poor time; often it backed mysteriously up the track it had so laboriously traversed, while the boys shouted hilariously. 'We've changed our minds! We aren't going to fight the Johnnies, after all!'" and sometimes it stopped for long intervals, for no apparent reason. When that happened the soldiers swarmed out along the right of way, shouting and leaping like little boys. One of them brought a stink of goldenrod back to Ann, and she stuck it in her belt. It made a gay note of color on her black tweeds. She nodded an easily at each new delay, for she was still afraid of being turned back. Ever a trainload of forlorn prisoners caught in a raid and rushing northward, did not distract her for long.

At the Monocacy river three miles from Frederick City, they came to a final halt. The bridge was unsafe, the train men announced, and every one was hurried off the cars into the blinding heat of a late June afternoon. Immediately the officers began collecting their men in some sort of order; as Ann stood, bewildered, waiting for events to shape her next move, she saw the advance column march of down the rutted, dusty road.

As she stood somewhat forlornly a young captain came hurrying up to her. "Where are you going?" he asked curtly.

"To Frederick City," Ann replied, turning wide and confident eyes upon him. "I am trying to find Captain Rensselaer. He was with the Fifty-Fifth New York. Do you know where that regiment is?"

"No—and you can't go wandering around this country. There's likely to be a battle almost anywhere, any time. The best thing you can do is to go back to Baltimore."

"I wouldn't think of doing that," Ann protested.

"Sorry," he said, "but back you go. Get right into this train again—the one you came down in. It will be leaving in a few minutes."

"I won't do anything of the kind," Ann declared furiously.

The officer laughed. "I'm in command here," he reminded her. "It's an order."

To escape further humiliation Ann went into the car and sat down. She was vehemently angry, but quite impotent. Presently a covered black wagon drove up to the train, and a crooked old driver climbed laboriously down to open the door in the rear. Ann watched him curiously; there was nothing else for her to do. A heavy young woman swarmed surprisingly out of the wagon; it was incredible that it could have held so many hoop-skirts, and so many agitated and fluttering girls. A calm man followed them, prim and self-contained and hot, in her cold and black habit; while her flock boarded the train she stopped to speak to the driver. The girls came trooping into Ann's car, chattering excitedly.

"Where are you all from?" Ann demanded.

"The Convent school at Emmitsburg. We all live in the N. Y., and the mother superior is sending us home just because she thinks there may be a battle around here somewhere. Isn't it mean?"

"The other girl interrupted eagerly. "There were soldiers in the convent grounds this morning," she declared, round-eyed. "They gave their horses a drink, and the mother superior sent milk out to the men."

"What regiment?" Ann asked in idle curiosity.

"The Fifty-fifth New York."

Ann shot to her feet. "I'm going!" she declared hotly.

"Going where?"

"To find the Fifty-fifth."

"She has a lover in it!" one of the girls whispered romantically.

Stooping, Ann remembered. The man had turned toward the train, and the old driver was beginning to climb to his high seat. Ann swung herself into the aisle. . . . At the door she almost ran down the placid man. . . . On the step she halted. The bus was beginning to move off, in a leisurely and inviting fashion. The train, under a convulsive start, and Ann leaped to the ground. The door in the end of the departing bus had swung open with a jolt of its first motion; there was dark sanctuary within. She sprang after it. The horses were barely started; she caught up easily, and grasping the handrail in the rear, she bolted into the dusty hot interior of the covered wagon. She settled herself deliberately in the most comfortable corner, and marveled at the ease of her escape.

It was a forlorn way they traveled, for the fences had been torn from before the horses, to be used for fuel, and the struggling gardens had been trampled by careless hundreds.

Ann wondered uneasily what her reception might be at the convent. Suddenly the bus ceased lurching and groaning, and ran smoothly over a good road. Ann looked out; her unconscious driver had turned in between iron gates, and was taking her down a well-kept driveway. She stood up and peered through a tiny peephole in the front. All that she could see was the austere black outline of a cross, high against the angry sky. In a moment they had arrived before a high front stoop, and stopped.

A woman's voice asked, "Any mail, David?"

"No, Sister."

"Did you bring anything back with you?"

"No, Sister."

"The bus vibrated uneasily, as the tired horses gathered themselves together for a last effort, which should carry them to the barn. Ann knew that the moment of reversion had come, and she reluctantly poked her abashed face out of the door. "Yes, he did," she said falteringly. "He brought me."

Michigan Happenings

Michigan penches are going as far south as Tampa, Fla., as far west as Omaha, Neb., and as far east as Boston, in carload lots, according to a report by the United States department of agriculture. This is a countrywide penetration of approximately 1,000 miles in three directions. "Production for the state this year is forecast at 30 per cent of last season's, or 1,172,000 bushels, compared with 1,440,000 bushels in 1922. Aggregate shipments from Michigan last season were 1,650 cars," says the report.

The state has a cash balance of $26,953,170.58, the monthly report of State Treasurer Frank M. Gorman issued recently, revealed. Retaining in the various funds of the state is $26,497,158.38. Disbursements for the month of August from all the funds amounted to $4,333,126.58. For the year up to September 1, the disbursements totalled $12,051,103.06. The secretary of state's office made the biggest deposit with the state during the month, contributing nearly a million dollars to the cost balance.

Deputy Secretary of State Elbert V. Chilton has returned from Chicago where he attended a conference of secretaries of state from all mid-western states held for the purpose of discussing uniform traffic laws. The Lansing official was named a member of two important committees, being placed on the committee for drafting uniform laws for automobile light regulation, and on the one appointed for uniform automobile signals.

The executive committee of the State Association of Farmers' clubs has decided to hold its thirty-first annual convention in Lansing, December 4 and 5. The committee is composed of Leo Noble, Oxford, president; W. A. Cutler, Grass Lake, vice-president; Mrs. I. R. Johnson, Rushton, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. J. S. Brown, Howell; G. A. Millepaugh, Oxford; Edgar Burk, St. Johns, and W. J. Brookline, Ovid.

The Michigan Trust company, as receiver for Manistee & Northeastern R. R. Co., asked the Interstate commerce commission for authority to abandon its Honor branch extending from Platte river, to Empire Junction, a distance of 16 miles. The branch served only the village of Honor, which has a population of 150, and was not earning maintenance costs.

There was 10 feet of water in the well, and coming to the surface, he grasped the steel pump shaft and climbed to the top.

Illness has been unknown among the 600 men in the prison road camps maintained by the state since their establishment, according to reports to the state health department. Not a single case has developed where a man was unable to do his work. This condition is said to be due to the rigid health rules maintained by the state department.

Nordman - Yuerhs

A beautiful and interesting wedding took place at St. Catherine church Tuesday, Sept. 18, at 9:30 in Detroit when Miss Helen Lucile Yuerhs, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. J. Yuerhs of Detroit and George Edward Nordman, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. George Nordman of Chelsea were united in marriage. Rev. J. J. Young of St. Marys, Ont., celebrating high mass and Rev. Fr. Brokaw of Detroit read the marriage ceremony.

The procession was led by Mrs. Nancy Polk as matron of honor, Edna Frey as honor maid and Martha Borsick as bride's maid. Mr. Nordman was assisted by William Callahan and Frank Nordman as groomsmen. June Margaret Byerast and Ruth Virginia Koch nieces of the groom and gownned in white organdy and carrying baskets of white and pink asters and pink roses acted as flower girls.

The bride was charming in a gown of white Pannet velvet with court train, her veil was made with a crown of Dutch lace and caught in numerous places with orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of white roses, lilies of the valley and baby breath, heavily showered with baby ribbon. The bride's attendants were dressed similar wearing orchid Tortoise blue and Peach color georgette over a dress of silver cloth with a flourish of silver lace. Their head dresses were coronets of silver lace and carried Ophelia roses.

Mrs. Yuerhs, mother of the bride wore gray georgette heavily beaded and a black picture hat. Mrs. Nordman mother of the groom wore blue Trisham and a picture hat of purple. Arthur Becker and Gilbert Polk acted as ushers. A large reception was held at the home of the brides parents, 3650 Concord Ave. Detroit.

Many beautiful and numerous presents were received. Those attending from here were Mr. and Mrs. George Nordman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Byerast and Mrs. Ed Koch, Mr. Paul Nordman of Stockbridge. After a short trip east they will make their home in Fisher Ave, Detroit. The groom is well known here being a graduate of St. Mary high school and later graduated from Pharmacy department in Sandusky and has started in business on the corner of Kerchervil and Chalmers in Detroit.

Entertained

Mrs. Otto Hinderer and Mrs. H. R. Schoenhals delightfully entertained at the home of the former, sixteen tables of bridge and five hundred, Wednesday evening. Dainty souvenirs of roses marked the places for each guest. Delicious refreshments were served by the hostesses.

No Substitute Offered.

Say what you will about druggists offering something "just as good" because it pays a better profit, the fact still stands that ninety nine out of a hundred druggists recommend Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy, when the best medicine for diarrhoea is asked for, and do so because they know from what their customers say of it, that it can be depended upon.—Adv.

Beats Hard Luck by Drowning Self

Chicago.—"I dreamed that I was going to have some bad luck. I guess I'll beat that bad luck."

These were the last words of Stanley Janik of this city. He plunged into the river after speaking them and was drowned.
