Ernest R. Danger was seriously injured about 3:30 Saturday afternoon at the Four Mile Lake plant of the Michigan Portland Cement Co. when he was caught by a piece of sheet metal that weighed about one ton which was being unloaded from a freight car on the siding in the yards at the plant.

Mr. Danger was taken to the University hospital at Ann Arbor and as his left foot and ankle were so badly crushed it was necessary to have an operation performed immediately after he reached the hospital. The left leg was amputated about midway between the knee and ankle.

The men who were unloading the piece of sheet metal had it on iron rollers, but did not have any ropes attached to keep it from getting away from them. When Mr. Danger walked by the car he was caught between the building and the car. Men were working on the roof of the building removing cement from it and probably he was not aware that the men in the car were about to push the heavy metal to the ground until he heard their warning yell which came too late for him to save himself.

The side track at the point where the accident occurred has an elevation of three feet and the car five feet from the track made a drop to ground of eight feet.

Unless some unforeseen complications set in Mr. Danger will recover, but he will be detained at the hospital for a number of weeks.

HAD NEVER DINED IN A RESTAURANT

Mrs. Grace Axtell, teacher of commercial branches at the Part Time school, found a little girl Monday who never had dined at any restaurant or hotel, and invited the little miss to accompany her to the Crescent for luncheon. Many viands brought onto the table were new to the girl, for instance, she said she never had tasted apple sauce. She didn't know apples could be cooked. In the strange place and surrounded by many persons at nearby tables, the girl was so excited she could scarcely eat anything. She is the breadwinner for a family of a mother and seven children, the stepfather having disappeared. One important phase of the work of the Part Time school is to come in contact with neglected children and give them advantages they have thus far lacked. The studies are of a practical nature and designed to increase the usefulness and happiness of boys and girls who had to go to work early in life.—Jackson News.

"RUSTIC ROMEO" PLEASURES LARGE AUDIENCE FRIDAY

Playing to a house filled almost to capacity, members of the Independent and Carry On classes of the Methodist Sunday school presented in a very creditable manner the play, "A Rustic Romeo," a comedy in two acts.

Backed by a chorus of eight young women who took their parts exceptionally well, principals staged a performance which reflected much credit to the instructors who so painstakingly trained them. Efforts to pick out "stars" was without result, each player proving herself or herself particularly adapted to their part, and the audience was kept in a roar of laughter from start to finish.

Special numbers were given between acts by Miss Katherine Fletcher, Geo. Atkinson and Miss Norma Pittsley. Music was furnished at the beginning and between acts by the Methodist Sunday school orchestra. An oriental dance was exceptionally well given by Misses Lois Grabill and Hazel Anderson.

The play was given under the direction of Mrs. H. D. Litteral and S. P. Foster. Chorus parts were directed by Miss Marguerite Israel.

One of the Really Big Novels of Recent Years

Joseph Greer and His Daughter

By HENRY KITCHELL WEBSTER

A novel of enterprises and emotions. The clash between a strong, forceful, dominating man and his daughter; good looking, undisciplined, with a will as strong as his own. And it is at once a character study and a story of big business; a complete story of a whole group of people; a living, moving, human story—a sort of thick cut off the roast of life, carved with skill and with an eye to the appetite of the reader. Here again appear characters from Mr. Webster's books, "The Real Adventure," "An American Family" and "Mary Wollaston."

FAMILY REUNITED AFTER ELEVEN YEARS SEPARATION

Family of Aron Marofsky, Local Junk Dealer, Reaches Chelsea After Five Weeks Journey.

Mrs. Aron Marofsky, two daughters and son arrived here Monday from their native home in Russia-Poland. They were five weeks making the trip, traveling across Russia and through Germany, and landed in New York from the steamer last Friday. This is the first time that the family has been united since Mr. Marofsky left his native home eleven years ago last August.

For the past eight years Mr. Marofsky has been trying to get his family here and has had many obstacles to overcome during that time. He had to take out his full U. S. citizenship papers during the time that he was endeavoring to get the family here.

Last December he forwarded to them tickets for their transportation to this country and from that time until recently they awaited anxiously for the necessary papers that would allow them to emigrate to the United States.

Mr. Marofsky spent from 8 o'clock Saturday morning until 9 o'clock Monday morning in the Michigan Central passenger station at Detroit where he expected to meet his family, but instead of leaving the train at Detroit, they came through to Chelsea and a telegram was sent to him informing him of their safe arrival here.

Mr. Marofsky informs the Standard that in the portion of Russia-Poland where the family resided that about all of the means the residents have to support themselves with are what is sent to them by relatives in the United States. He also says that as soon as his children recover from their tiresome journey he will place them in the Chelsea public schools. They are able to read the English language but do not understand the meaning of the words. The daughters are 16 and 13 years of age and the son 11 years.

LIMA CENTER WILL ENTERTAIN WITH BOX SOCIAL

Patrons and friends of Lima Center school will be entertained at a box social and Thanksgiving program at the Lima town hall on Friday evening, November 23. A prize will be given for the prettiest box offered for sale. Fish pond and other amusements.

Judging from the crowds usually in attendance at such affairs when sponsored by this school it is believed the hall will be packed to capacity for this coming social event.

LARGE CROWD ATTENDS SYLVAN BOX SOCIAL

A crowd taxing the capacity of the Emerson Lesser home west of town, gathered there last Thursday evening in attendance at the box social given by Sylvan Center school. Patronage was liberal and a nice sum was realized from sale of boxes, candy, pop corn, fancy work, fish pond and other sources.

PUBLIC SCHOOL NOTES

Chapel exercises were held in the high school assembly room Monday morning. The orchestra of the M. E. Sunday school, consisting of Mrs. McClesmie, Mrs. Houck and the McClure Brothers, was present and played several very entertaining selections. Miss Blanche Pittsley sang a song and Miss Jayne read "Poppies of Flanders Field." Rev. Sutherland of the Congregational church gave a splendid talk. He touched upon the conditions of worldly affairs. He stated that as long as corrupt living and selfishness were elements of the characteristics of the nations there would always be war. He also reminded his audience of the fact that if something did not at once change conditions there would be another world war, perhaps in this generation and that in such a case our soldiers would have given their lives in vain during the past war.

Hazel Dixon has entered school here in the ninth grade.

"Scotty" the Sailorman, was at school Wednesday morning and gave a short entertainment. His program consisted of athletic stunts and was very well liked by the high school. "Scotty" spent several long months in the service of the World War and his voice was somewhat impaired but he did very splendidly and received the most hearty applause of the high school.

Friday evening, November 23, a team from Ann Arbor will play the boys' basketball team. This will be a hard game and everyone should attend and support the team. The respective lineups will be announced later.

Editorial

THE PRESIDENTIAL JOB

What are the duties of an American President? No one has ever catalogued them—a very strange thing when you think of how many people are engaged in producing books to be published at government expense.

A few days ago a citizen from the Mexican border led two young grizzly bears to the front of the executive offices and demanded that the chief magistrate come out and designate the one that should be sent to the National Zoological park. The other affairs of state were pushed aside while the gentleman from the Southwest obtained the benefit of expert mammalogical opinion. As this task was being performed, the Oklahoma City fireman's band marched into the White House grounds, unlimbered and played a circus tune. It appears that both as a judge of bear cubs and as a musical critic Mr. Coolidge gave satisfaction. The following day a special messenger delivered a tub of ice cream to the President, a gift from the convention of the National Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers' association, meeting in Cleveland. It may be that the executive is known to members of the trade as a particularly severe or vicious punisher of ice cream. These things do get about. Yet it does seem as if it is straining matters a bit to expect the President to make a noticeable dent in a whole tub of the stuff. Or was it the idea that he should bathe in it?

Variety is the spice of life and yet human creatures can overdo the consumption of spices. For all the tireless constitution of Mr. Coolidge and his heartfelt desire to do whatever his fellow countrymen ask of him he may some day break down after reviewing a parade of visiting Non Rust Barbed-Wire and Stio Equipment sales managers, looking over a Boy Scout's collection of saw-bugs, listening in on a new-fangled dictaphone, drink a soft drink in course of commercial promotion and being moving pictured in knickerbockers, hand woven by admirers in Eggemoggin, Maine.

Perhaps what is needed is a President-by-proxy—an official with nothing else to do except to pick bears for zoological gardens, listen to circus tunes and eat tubs of ice cream. He could be replaced every month or two as he wore out.

SILENT CAL

Washington newspaper correspondents are worried over the silence of President Coolidge, which, though admittedly characteristic and not assumed, makes it hard for them to earn their salaries.

A correspondent must have news. When there is no news, he must make some, and to continue that daily for several months is a grind. Also, it is dangerous. Political observers there cast an anxious eye upon the Executive Mansion and issue statements to the press which match in 'vagueness' the secretiveness of the President himself.

Congress is not in session, so that source of news is missing. Notables are out in the cities, making speeches, issuing statements, writing books, traveling to Europe for 'intimate studies of the situation.' The press oracles have the capital to themselves, and don't know what to do with it.

It is our private opinion that the President will atone for his silence with much action, and when he speaks the correspondents and the nation will heed his words more than they have the words of others. Talkers seldom match deeds with their speech. It is the nature of a reserved man to inculcate respect in the minds of those about him. If Mr. Coolidge does not cury his silence too far, we shall be afforded a welcome relief from volubility and official press agenting.

A RICH MAN'S FAITH

A new story of John D. Rockefeller is told by a friend. It seems that his oil industry faced a crisis, due to lack of funds. His associates favored selling out at a great loss, but Rockefeller arose and pointed to the ceiling, saying, "The Lord will provide." It is said a new source of capital was quickly forthcoming, and the industry was saved.

A child's story, some say. But Rockefeller's private and church life verifies his precept. He is said to place more trust in his Creator than in himself, which is no common experience today. His associates are paying more and more respect to their chief's faith.

Such an attitude of a very rich man may have more influence than many sermons by ministers who cannot afford a car. Not all of us worship money, but we respect it. Perhaps by such association, prayer and things relations may be changed.

HYPO-COD RID HIM OF STOMACH TROUBLE

Lenox Man Had Bad Case Of Indigestion Until He Took Earle's Hypo-Cod

Fred Snyder, a carpenter of Lenox, Michigan writes that he had been a sufferer with stomach trouble for some time. One day a friend recommended Hypo-Cod to him for his trouble. As he says, "I certainly was in a bad way until I started to take Hypo-Cod. I could not eat without suffering for it afterwards. I was losing weight all the time and was subject to dizzy spells. At night I would have to go to bed for I knew that I would not secure any rest. After taking several bottles of Hypo-Cod I find all of my ills have left me, and I am now in better shape than I have been for a long, long time." Thousands of people right here are suffering with indigestion and stomach trouble as Mr. Snyder did, and if they will give this wonderful health building tonic a chance they will be as enthusiastic over it as Mr. Snyder. OBTAIN SUGAR FROM GARDEN

Process Devised Whereby Syrup Can Be Extracted From Beets by Amateurs.

The speed with which farmers have taken up radio for practical and social purposes is shown in a recent survey made by the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington. County agricultural agents estimate that there are approximately 40,000 radio sets on farms in 780 counties. This is an average of 51 sets per county. Applying the average to 2,850 agricultural counties, a total of more than 145,000 sets on farms throughout the country is estimated.

The county agents' estimates cover every state.

Gardeners who cannot raise sugar cane are interested in a process, devised abroad, for extracting sugar from beets, a process designed especially for the amateur.

Great care is exercised in harvesting the roots, that the tender skin be not broken. The first operation is to remove all dirt by washing, after which the beets are boiled in water are next cut into thin slices, placed in a pan, just covered with water, brought to a boil once more and then left to simmer for ten hours. The resulting pulp is then put into a muslin bag and squeezed until all the juice is extracted. The juice is boiled down to a very thick syrup that makes a good substitute for commercial sugar. As the syrup will not keep for more than a few weeks, it is found advisable to make only a small quantity at a time. The roots, however, can be stored for a long period without deteriorating if they are kept dry and free from frost.

Internal cleanliness protects against disease

It is but a step from those immediate results of constipation—headache, heaviness, loss of appetite—to serious disease. Such minor ailments are a warning that poisons from food waste are flooding your body. Keep clean internally.

In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in Nujol a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a laxative and cannot gripe. Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world.

CAPTAINS OF ADVENTURE

By ROGER POCKOCK

THE MAN WHO SHOT LORD NELSON A. D. 1805

This story is from the memoirs of Robert Guilleminard, a conscript in the Grand Army of France and, to his horror, drafted for a marine on board the battleship Redoubtable.

The fleets met off the sand-dunes of Cape Trafalgar, drawn up in opposing lines for battle, and when they closed, young Guilleminard's ship, the Redoubtable, engaged Lord Nelson's Victory, losing thirty men to her first discharge.

Some seventy feet overhead, at the caps of the lower masts, were widespread platforms, the fighting tops on which the best marksmen were always posted.

one, were ordered to occupy their post in the tops. While we were going aloft, the balls and grapeshot showered around us, struck the masts and yards, knocked large splinters from them and cut the rigging to pieces.

Guilleminard goes on to describe a duel between the topman of the Redoubtable and those of the Victory only a few yards distant, and when it was finished he lay alone among the dead who crowded the swaying platform.

"On the poop of the English vessel was an officer covered with orders and with only one arm. From what I had heard of Nelson I had no doubt that it was he.

"An instant afterward the Victory ceased from firing, the deck was abandoned. . . I hurried below to inform the captain. . . He believed me the more readily as the smothering of the fire indicated that an event of the highest importance occupied the attention of the English ship's crew.

English vessel, found it abandoned, and returned to notify that the ship had surrendered. . . However, as part of our crew, commanded by two officers, were ready to spring upon the enemy's deck, the fire recommenced with a fury it had never had from the beginning of the action.

When these were taken on board the Victory, Guilleminard learned how the bullet which struck down through Lord Nelson's shoulder and shattered the spine below, had come from the fighting tops of the Redoubtable, where he had been the only living soul.

It seemed at the time that the very winds sang Nelson's requiem, for with the night came a storm putting the English shattered fleet in mortal peril, while of the thirteen captured battleships not one was fit to brave the elements.

When the day broke Admiral Villeneuve was brought on board the Victory, where Nelson lay in state, for the voyage to England, Villeneuve, wounded in the hand, was unable to write, and sent among the French prisoners for a clerk.

Prisoners of war are generally released by exchange between fighting powers, rank for rank, man for man; but after five months Villeneuve was allowed to return to France.

Of this it seems the captain got some warning, and decided that, for the sake of their own health, Villeneuve should not reach Paris alive.

That night the admiral had gone to bed in his room on the first floor of the inn, and the secretary was asleep on the floor above. A cry disturbed him and, taking his sword and candle, he ran downstairs in time to see the five strangers sneak by him hurriedly.

When he reached Paris the youngster was summoned to the Tuilleries, and the Emperor Napoleon made him tell the whole story of the admiral's assassination.

Guilleminard lived to fight in many of the emperor's battles, to be one of the ten thousand prisoners of the Spaniards on the desert island of the Canaries, whence he made a gallant escape; to be a prisoner of the Russians in Siberia; to assist in King Murat's flight from France; and, finally, after twenty years of adventure, to return with many widows to his native vil-

Wreck survivors tell how tobacco kept them going

When food and water gave out on third day, they smoked until rescued

Perhaps they were only pirates of the sea, and deserved no great charity from the hand of Fate.

With two days' supply of food and water, they confidently expected to be rescued in plenty of time.

One of the victims, crazy with thirst, suggested that they divide a bottle of iodine and end the agony quickly.

"The tobacco hasn't given out yet," said another. "Let's stick it out a while longer."

Late in the afternoon of the fifth day a tramp schooner saw their distress signals and came valiantly to the rescue.

"The only thing that kept us going at all was tobacco," one of the survivors admitted when he was safely deposited on dry land again.

Tobacco is certainly a poor substitute for food and water—but under the stress of trying circumstances smoking a pipe is a big help.

Pipes filled with Edgeworth probably have no more soothing effect than pipes filled with other tobaccos, but most Edgeworth smokers somehow feel that they need Edgeworth to get complete pipe satisfaction.

If you have never smoked Edgeworth, send your name and address on a postcard to Larus & Brother Company. They will be glad to send you free samples—generous helpings both of Edgeworth Plug Slices and Ready-Rubbed.

Smoke a few pipefuls and judge for yourself whether or not you wish to become a permanent member of the Edgeworth Club.

Edgeworth is sold in various sizes to suit the needs and means of all purchasers. Both Edgeworth Plug Slice and Ready-Rubbed are packed in small, pocket-size packages, in handsome humidor holding a pound, and also in several handy in-between sizes.

For the free samples, kindly address Larus & Brother Company, 78 South 21st Street, Richmond, Va. If you will also include on your postcard the name and address of your regular tobacco dealer, your courtesy will be appreciated.

To Retail Tobacco Merchants: If your jobber cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus & Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-dozen carton of any size of Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

Considerable Reduction in Calf Raising Costs

The high cost of raising calves can be considerably reduced by supplementing their expensive ration of milk with other food, says Prof. S. W. Mead, New Jersey State College of Agriculture.

"The supplemental food method of raising calves has been used with considerable success, and while the calves so raised will not be quite as fat and sleek as calves which are raised on the maximum amount of milk, they will, nevertheless, develop into healthy, normal animals.

"Allow the calf to remain with the dam for 48 hours. The first milk or colostrum is laxative in its action and insures the proper action of the bowels for the first few days.

"Take the calf from the cow at the end of 48 hours and feed it from a pail. The amount to be fed depends on the size and vigor of the calf. On the average, three feedings a day, totaling six to eight pounds, are given during the first few days.

"This amount should be increased gradually as long as the calf's appetite remains good and as long as scours do not set in. If the calf does scour, the milk should be taken away for one or two feedings and a dose of castor oil administered.

"By the time the calf is three or four weeks old it should be given all the alfalfa and clover hay it will eat and a good grain mixture. The following has been used with success:

400 pounds of 200 pounds of oil corn meal 100 pounds of meal, old process wheat bran 100 pounds ground

"The more grain and hay the calf eats the less milk will be required. In parts of the country where skim milk is available the calf should be changed gradually at two or three weeks of age from whole milk to skim milk. The amount of skim milk fed, however, should not exceed what would usually be given of whole milk.

"By the time the calf is four months old the milk feeding may be discontinued and the calf raised on grain and hay. But remember, the calves will not look as fat and sleek as those fed milk to a later age, though their ultimate development will be the same."

New Publication Gives Practical Information

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)

The raising of dairy calves, beginning with the cow before the calf is born and carrying the young stock along to two years of age, is the subject of a recent Farmers' Bulletin, No. 1236, Feeding and Management of Dairy Calves and Young Dairy Stock, now ready for distribution by the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

The new bulletin is full of practical information covering all the essentials in the production of good dairy animals for breeding and milk production. It includes chapters on feeding before birth, weaning the calf, teaching to drink, cleanliness, pasteurization of milk for feeding, quantity and quality of milk fed, frequency of feeding, roughage for calves, grain feed, milk substitutes, quarters, strangles, prevention of horns, water and salt, marking calves for identification, diseases and several chapters on the feeding and management of young stock beyond the calf age.

The bulletin may be had free of charge by writing to the department as long as the supply lasts.

Calves to Develop Well Must Have Sanitary Pens

If calves are to remain healthy and develop perfectly they must not only be correctly fed but must have sanitary quarters when in the stable. Recent investigations have shown that lack of sunlight is a powerful contributory cause of rickets in all young animals. Direct sunshine kills germs and, therefore, lessens the liability to scours and other calfhood ailments. Calf pens are too often dark, damp, dirty and badly ventilated. Foul bedding is even more common and is equally detrimental.

Dairyman Should Know Every Cow in His Herd

No dairy cow has ever produced her maximum unless her feeder knew her. Knowing her means more than simply calling her by name and reciting the names of her ancestors. It means understanding her every need, desire and condition. By means of a pair of scales, a Babcock testing outfit and a little work, every dairyman could know what each cow in his herd produces, and thus have a sound basis on which to feed and judge the individual merits of each cow in his herd.

Best Milk for Calves. For the first few days give the calf eight to twelve pounds of milk from its dam in three feedings a day, making the intervals between feedings as nearly eight hours as possible. Milk containing not more than 4 per cent butterfat is considered best for calves.

Meat From Dairy Herd. Bulls that are no longer desired in the herd for various reasons make up a part of the meat from dairy cattle. They are seldom suitable for dressed meat.

HELP FOR GIRLS WHO WORK

Mrs. Lodic Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Tyrone, Pa.—"A friend told my husband how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped his wife, so my husband bought me a bottle because I was so run-down, had a nervous weakness, no strength in my body and pains in my left side so bad that I could hardly do my work. Before I was married I used to work in the factory, and I had pains just the same then as I have had since I have done my housework. I would not be without a bottle of it for the rest of my life. It has stopped the pains all right and I have found out that it is a wonderful body builder, as it has made me well and strong. It is going to be the 'old reliable' with me hereafter, and I am always willing to tell other women how it has helped me. You can see this letter as you wish as I can hardly say that my words are true."—Mrs. M. Lodic, R.F.D. No. 4, Box 40, Tyrone, Pa.

"DOESN'T IT BORE YOU FRANTIC?"

"Really, though, except as a show, to look at now and then, doesn't it bore you frantic? The whole thing, I mean—our sort of thing—the sort of people we are?"

"I don't know any of you very well," he said, laudly. "I'm not bored now."

"You keep going," she said, "from the time you're quite small, thinking that life's going to open out, somehow, like a door. And then some day you wake up and realize you're thirty-five or so, and that it doesn't mean to open out at all; there isn't any door—not to the thing you're in. And then you hear about somebody who's never been shut up, in anything; somebody the whole world's always been open to. And you try to get people to tell you about him, John and Jimmy Wallace and Henry and Margaret Craven—Margaret's funny about you. You wonder what that kind of freedom feels like. I should think you'd feel," she looked around at him suddenly, "with us, you know, like a big moose, or something, that finds itself shut up in our pasture with the Holsteins."

These two talking are Joe Greer and Mrs. John Williamson, about whom Henry Kitchell Webster's fine story, "Joseph Greer, and His Daughter" revolves. It's their first meeting. Greer is a latter-day pirate of the Chicago business world who has fought his way up from the bottom. Violet Williamson is the wife of a society millionaire who is backing Joe in the promotion of an invention. Joe has in California a wife who is planning to divorce him, and a nineteen-year-old daughter, Beatrice, whom he has never seen. He is taking his daughter away from her mother and planning to force her into Chicago society. Beatrice turns out to be an individual and dynamic as her father—an interesting feature of the story is their clash of wills and the resulting adventures that fall to Beatrice. Joe and Violet are irresistibly attracted to each other with results that lead them to the very brink of destruction more than once. There are other strong characters—Jennie MacArthur, for instance, Joe's 100 per cent efficient secretary. And these strikingly individual men and women go ahead and work out their own story, apparently without guidance from the master craftsman who has created them.

For beyond question Webster is a master craftsman in the construction of the modern novel of American life. And his life story reads like one of his own romances. He began his writing at twenty-four in Evanston, Ill., in 1899 in collaboration with Samuel Marwin, who has also achieved popularity as a novelist. Their "Calumet K" (1901) was a big success, as were other joint stories. Then Webster had a sort of intellectual shock and in the hope of recovering from it traveled all over the world. In desperation he made a complete change in his literary methods. He dictated fifteen "howler" stories that he sold readily under a pseudonym that he will not reveal. And his hand and brain regained their cunning—witness his latest novel, "Joseph Greer and His Daughter."

CHAPTER I

The Pawn.

On the face of it, John Williamson's invitation to lunch was nothing that Henry Craven need especially wonder, let alone worry, about. It was unusual—Henry couldn't remember, indeed, that it had ever happened before in just these circumstances—but surely one needn't feel on that account that there was anything ominous about it. The manner of giving it had been a little overbearing, perhaps; high-handed, anyhow. But that was John Williamson's way, and he would give his place in Chicago's financial world as easily as he would take it.

Henry had been attending a letter—around eleven o'clock this was—when one of the bank's more important customers spoke to him from across the marble rail. Evidently the man didn't care to come inside, so Henry went to the rail to see what was wanted. His telephone rang while he stood talking with the customer and, of course, his stenographer answered it. He heard her say, "Yes, Mr. Williamson." And then, "He's right here. Should I call him?" But John, evidently, hadn't thought it necessary to wait, even a minute. There was another pause while she made a notation on a pad, and finally, "Very well, Mr. Williamson, I'll tell him."

What Henry's stenographer had written on her pad was: "He at J. W.'s office at twelve-thirty. Lunch." No "ifs" at all. Not even an "if possible."

Well, of course there were no "ifs." John was one of two or three Olympians who, among their other cloudy vast affairs, directed the policies of this great bank, in which his cousin by marriage, Henry Craven, after sixteen years of faithful service, had recently been promoted to be one of the assistant cashiers. Naturally, then, if John wanted him for any reason, big or little, Henry would come.

It was unlikely, wasn't it, that the thing was of any serious importance? It mightn't be a last-year's matter at all. Some little domestic problem or other. Violet (she was John's wife and Henry's cousin) had a birthday coming next week. It was possible that Henry's cultivated taste was going to be requisitioned to pick out a present for her. Only would John have wanted a priceless lunch hour—the most important hour of his hard-driven day—upon a trifle like that? It was inconceivable. The lunch-table was just where men like John talked over and arrived at their major decisions.

Yet what major decision of John's could imaginably concern Henry? Unless—unless it was a question of Henry's own job in the bank. They weren't going to promote him again; they'd just done that. But suppose—suppose they felt he hadn't made good, and they were about to do the thing that door into Mills' office was brusquely opened. Henry heard young Mills, evidently at the other door, say, "You can get out this way, Mr. Greer."

The man addressed stood there in an attitude of arrested motion, grinding back into the room. And Henry, while he stared at the sight of him, held his breath. All his adgey annoyances were forgotten, swallowed up in the sensation which the man's appearance produced.

His beard was the first thing you saw. It was cut round and short—not fashioned at all—and it was black, as black as if it had been drawn upon his face with India ink. His hair was just as black and thick, and it was cut quite short enough to hide a tendency to curl. Against this blackness of hair and brow the gleam of his teeth and the whites of his eyes made a dazzling contrast. But indeed, as you took him in, you saw that he was a bundle of contrasts; the lightness of his pulse, as he stood there holding the door, against the burly breadth of those shoulders and the bull-neck; the look of gentility that you got from his smile, contradicted by his nose, which jutted out in so bluntly aggressive a manner as to be—practical almost, Henry felt.

He had answered Kollie Mills by saying in his peculiarly resonant voice that he always thought he was lucky, coming to a place like this, if he could get out the same door he'd come in by; and he continued for a minute rubbing this in. All these rubber barons of finance had he supposed, a chute down which the unwary visitor, having been shown, was permitted to plunge.

John looked absent-minded when he appeared a moment later. He did not come out of his abstraction until just as they were turning into the club; then he took Henry by the arm.

"Did you know that fellow?" he asked. "The man who was up in my office?"

"No," Henry said. "I don't believe I've ever seen him before. I'm sure he's not one of the customers over at the bank."

"His name's Greer," said John. "Joseph Greer. Ever heard of him?"

"The name's vaguely familiar, perhaps, but I can't place it. I'll be glad to look him up for you, if you like."

"We've looked him up," said John. "I guess we know pretty much all there is to know about him. He's got a proposition we're going to take up. Going into business with him. I'll tell you the whole thing at lunch."

By this time Henry perceived that danger of his job being taken away from him did not exist and he breathed easy again. When the two men sat down to the table John launched into a description of Greer's business. It seemed that the farmers of the country, who were growing plants for linseed oil, were throwing away the linseed straw from some two million acres of land every year and that Greer had discovered a process by which to make linen from it at a price that would permit America to compete with the cheap hand labor of Europe.

John finally wound up his talk by telling Henry that he had picked him as treasurer of the new company at a salary of ten thousand a year. Frankly, he stated, the directors had faith in Greer's ability in a practical way that they feared his handling huge amounts of money without some sort of a check being kept on him, and that was to be Henry's duty. John did not press Henry for an immediate answer and told him to sleep on it before giving him his answer.

The offer was a splendid one for Craven after the fifteen years of terrible struggle on the part of himself and his sister to keep up appearances. His father had died when Henry was a mere boy, leaving his family practically penniless but the brother and sister, aided by powerful friends of their father, had managed to keep up the home.

Henry arrived home ahead of his sister and when the buzzer announced a caller he rushed to the door, expecting to see Margaret, although she usually came later.

were two people coming up, and they proved to be Violet Williamson and young Dorothy. The latter, when she saw who was waiting for them, left her mother behind, took the remaining flight of stairs two at a time, flung her arms around him, gave him a tight hug, and kissed him soundly. Just as she'd used to do when she was unequivocally a little girl. It was a heart-warming experience. The two foraged in the pantry and through the icebox for materials for tea.

"I am practicing on you," Dorothy admitted. "She wants me to."

"Your mother?"

The girl nodded. Henry was still speechless over this when he heard Margaret talking to Violet in the other room. It was only a moment later that his sister, without stopping to remove her wraps, swooped down upon them in the pantry. "She's dining and dancing somewhere tomorrow night. I don't in the least remember where. All I know is I accepted eleven invitations for her for Easter week."

"You're a delicious-looking young thing," she said.

"I wish I looked like you," the girl retorted, a little flushed but easily enough. "I always have, you know."

People had just one adjective for Margaret—good-looking. She fell short of beauty and there was nothing pretty about her. She had regular features, rather finely modeled, a good skin, and enough hair. Had her life run on in the channel that it had started in, she might have attained an effect of style, smartness anyhow. As it was what she had achieved was a crispness of movement and inflection, an air of adequacy to any situation that might arise, which men, in the main, found a little formidable. The men who liked her best were older than she and married. But just this quality, it was easy to guess, was what young Dorothy admired. And you could not mistake the sincerity of what she had just said.

Abruptly, Margaret shooed them out into the sitting-room to keep Violet amused while she got the tea. Just as Margaret was coming in with the tray Violet said, "It must seem strange to be leaving the bank, doesn't it?"

He answered quickly, "Margaret doesn't know." Then to his sister he went on, "John offered me a new job at lunch today and I'm taking it."

Her eyebrows went up with an expression which betrayed nothing but good-humored surprise. Then she said, "It must be pretty good if you could make up your mind as quickly as that to take it."

"Well, I'm sure it must look good to John," Violet observed. "The whole scheme, I mean. Because, unless I had looked—well—marvelous, he'd never have gone in with that man."

"Greer, you mean," Henry said, and turned once more to Margaret with explanations. "He's an inventor and he's found a way to make linen out of American fax straw. They've never been able to do it before and the farmers have burned it—thousands, or maybe millions, of tons of it every year. I don't understand Greer's process in the least. I'm not even sure that John does. But he seems to have no doubt it works. John wants me to be treasurer of the new company," he concluded. "The inventor himself is to be president."

"Have you to meet him yet?" Violet asked.

"I just got a glimpse of him," Henry answered. "I hadn't time to see anything but his beard."

"That's the man, all right," Violet said, with a nod. And went on, since they were both visibly waiting for more: "Why, he sounds amusing to me; really attractive. Jimmie Wallace likes him quite a lot. He likes to play with theatrical people—that's how Jimmie knows him. But, of course, Jimmie himself isn't exactly what you'd call austere. He's got an apartment—Greer, I mean—up on Sheridan road, in the same building that Bella and Bill Forrester are in. Never met him, of course. But she meets up with him, accidentally, you know, every now and then, and they get very pally. She's hoping, she says, that he'll invite her to one of his parties. They must be pretty terrific from all accounts."

"I got the impression," Henry observed, "from John's biography of him that he's a bachelor."

"I don't know," said Violet. "It comes to that, anyhow. He lives in that big apartment all by himself. At least," she qualified, and broke off with a glance toward her daughter.

"You haven't mind me," Dorothy said quietly. "I'm reading the Literary News. All the same," the girl went on, looking up at Henry from the magazine her glance had fallen upon, "I think that sort of inventor would be a wonderful person to have about. Mostly they're so awfully noble and innocent, aren't they, and about a hundred years old? Or is that just in the movies? Anyhow, I think you'll like it a lot. I wish father would give me a job in the new company."

She rose then, put down her cap, and, coming round behind her mother's chair, took her hands in both of hers and kissed her forehead.

"You're the only stenographer in the world," he said.

"I'm desolated that I can't dine with you," Dorothy cried.

"I'm desolated that I can't dine with you," Dorothy cried.

(Henry noted how she had evaded using any term of address.) "It's nearly that now, and you haven't done your errand yet."

"I'm having a dinner tomorrow night," Violet explained to Margaret, "and as things have turned out, I'm simply gorged with men. Can I steal you away from Henry? It's going to be frightfully dull, I'm afraid."

Margaret thought she could come. Dorothy had come over to Henry and offered him her hand, "for luck." He retained it as he turned to her mother and asked, "How about an even exchange? Or wouldn't it be proper? Or are you going to commandeer Dorothy, too?"

"Yes, it's all right," Margaret said, from her desk in the corner. "Love to! Seven-thirty?"

"Oh, Dorothy's perfectly unattainable," Violet told Henry. "She's dining and dancing somewhere tomorrow night. I don't in the least remember where. All I know is I accepted eleven invitations for her for Easter week."

"I'm desolated that I can't dine with you," Dorothy cried in the best of cents of Vanity Fair. "It would be much more amusing."

"I call that," Henry grumbled, after he had closed the door behind them, "an infernal outrage. Oh, not your going out to dinner!" he added, for he had caught a look in his sister's face that startled him. "I meant the way she's trying to spoil that lovely child. John said today that seventeen was a devilish age. He's wrong. It's thirty-eight that is."

"I didn't suppose you meant about the dinner," she said, her voice coming rather flat, "and I suppose you did mean Dorothy. But there was just a chance, I thought, that you rejected the way John had treated you."

"John! In offering me the new job, you mean? That's because you don't know about it yet. Violet spoiled things, rather, making me tell it backward. It's ten thousand a year, Peg, to begin with—stock in the company—Independence again, if the thing goes right—something like old times."

She asked him abruptly, "When did you first hear about this?"

"Why—just today at lunch. You don't think I'd keep a thing like that from you. I'm sorry I told Violet first, but it came up naturally, somehow, and then I took it for granted that she'd know anyway."

"And you accepted it finally—right there at the lunch-table?"

"No, of course not. As a matter of fact, John didn't ask me to. He knew I'd want to think it over—talk it over with you."

"How long did he give you to decide?" she asked.

"Well, the meeting is tomorrow afternoon," said Henry, and all the wind went out of his sails on the admission. "They'll want to know before then. I told John I'd call him up in the morning."

"That's what I thought you might resent." Her voice flattened down upon the words and, as she'd turned away from him, they were hardly audible.

"I don't feel I'm being unduly hurried," he assured her. "If that's what you mean, I've already decided, unless you've some serious objection to urge, that I'll take it."

"You haven't decided anything," she contradicted. "You haven't had any chance to decide. You don't know whether the process works or not. I don't believe you know whether it's ever been tried or is just a theory. John's decided it for you. He's going to take a flier. He can afford to lose as well as not. He's used you like a pawn in a game of chess—pushing you in. It won't matter to him whether you're taken or not."

"You're the only stenographer in the world," he said.

"I'm desolated that I can't dine with you," Dorothy cried.

Many people speak of the State, the school, the church, the lodge, as if they were the great powers of today. Forgetting that they are not sources of power, at all, but rather pieces of machinery that need power to make them useful. Where must the power come from?
As we have just passed the fifth milestone of the Armistice let us all try and have the same spirit that the boys had who gave their lives for us. Then and only then will we have world peace.

Lay aside the excuses, and make next Sunday a banner day of the whole country side for Church going. Every Minister will greet you and will be glad to see you. Do not wait for the minister to call upon you, but call on him at the service next Sunday.

WILL MAKE FLIGHT TO NORTH POLE

Without doubt, the advent of the Shenandoah (ZK-1) heralds the creation of a new field for those of the younger generation who find the ordinary pursuits of life a trifle too tame for their roving temperaments.

If the position of radio operator on an ocean liner seems fascinating to the imaginative youth of today, what will the post of radio operator on the huge dirigibles of the future be to the boys of tomorrow.

Take for instance the Shenandoah—that giant dirigible, a fitting acquisition of the United States Navy.

Many of the residents of our eastern cities have seen this tremendous vehicle of the air. Most of us have only read about it. But a few facts relative to its construction and size may prove interesting.

It was built at Lakehurst, N. J., by the U. S. Navy. Many of the parts being made at the Naval Aircraft Factory, at Philadelphia.

It is 680 feet long, 78 feet in diameter and from the bottom of its cars to the top of the bag, it is 96 feet.

It is powered by six 300-horsepower specially built Packard motors (1800 h. p. in all) which, it is estimated will give the huge craft a speed of 70 miles an hour. Its 5,000 gallons of fuel is carried in tanks placed along a center keel compartment. The cruising range is over 4,000 miles.

Instead of hydrogen which has been used as the supporting gas for dirigibles and all other lighter-than-aircraft for many years past, a new and very valuable gas known as helium has been used to inflate the Shenandoah.

Helium gas is found as 1 per cent to 3 per cent of certain natural gases found in the Texas and Kansas oil fields. As explained by officials of the flying field at Lakehurst, the United States has practically a world's monopoly on this valuable gas, 2,150,000 cubic feet of which are needed to fill the bag of the Shenandoah. Though nearly as buoyant, it has not the explosive qualities of the hydrogen.

Contrary to the general belief that the gas is contained solely under the outer covering, it is enclosed in twenty gas cells within. The sole purpose of the outer covering is to give the ship stream-lines, to reduce the effect of the sun's rays on interior gas cells and to keep out rain and snow.

The metal framework is made of duralumin, a metal compound of aluminum, copper and manganese. It is as strong as mild steel, weighs only one third as much, but its cost is about fifty times greater.

In the outside cars are contained the six engines. The forward car is called the control car and, in addition to containing its engine, it is to the airship, what the bridge is to the battleship. It contains the lift controls, steering controls, telegraphs, radio, gyroscopic and magnetic compasses, etc., and is the point from which the ship will be steered, piloted and navigated in the air.

Special 12-volt Exide batteries are used to furnish current for engine ignition and running lights. These batteries in order to combine high capacity with light weight, have very thin plates, assembled in hard rubber containers. One battery is located in each of the six engine cars.

For radio, where the demand for current may require 20 amperes or more for a few minutes, four Exide batteries of the same type as used for ignition and running lights are used in series-parallel on a 24 volt circuit. The series-parallel arrangement was adopted instead of using larger batteries, in order to insure absolute interchangeability of all batteries on the ship. The radio batteries are located, together with all the radio equipments, in the control car. All the batteries receive their charges from a generator system in much the same manner as an automobile starting and lighting battery receives its charge.

The huge building in which the Shenandoah is housed, cost approximately $2,000,000. It is 962 feet long, 348 feet wide and 200 feet high. The clear door opening is 258 feet wide.

It is understood that the ship will probably make a flight to the North Pole, some time this fall or next spring. Such a trip would require about five days.

The ZR-3, being built in Germany for the United States Navy, will probably be completed this fall or winter, and on arrival in the United States will be placed in the same hangar with the Shenandoah.

BREVITIES.

Howell—The Howell city council has just passed an ordinance against allowing fowls to run at large in the city. Also prohibits housing poultry within 85 feet of any dwelling house.

Howell—Armistice Day was observed here on Monday under the auspices of the American Legion, G. A. R. and Board of Commerce. The program for the afternoon was carried out in the auditorium of the high school building and ex-Congressman P. H. Kelley, of Lansing, delivered the address.

Ypsilanti—Leslie Barber was leisurely walking by the city hall Thursday forenoon when a voice from the second story said "Hello, Leslie! Come on up, I want to see you." When Leslie arrived upstairs he was told by Chief Connors that he was under arrest on a warrant issued upon complaint of his wife, Margaret Barber, who accuses him of assault and battery.—Record.

Ypsilanti—Due to unsatisfactory weather Washenaw road paving will not be finished this fall. Only one concrete mixer is running at present and may be stopped at any time. Concrete cannot be laid successfully in wet weather. Paving will be finished except about one and a half miles half way between. All paving within Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti is done except the asphalt covering.—Record.

Saline—Several years ago Elwood C. Rogers spent some time in the south, superintending the sawing of timber, and while there found a tract of 150 acres of land in Alabama, which he thought, at the price, he could pay for and later profit by the deal. A few days since Mr. Rogers received his deed of the property and he has every reason to believe his venture a wise one. On this property there is considerable fine timber, and at the price of lumber today the timber alone is worth several times the cost of the property.—Observer.

Brooklyn—Rain this week temporarily delayed grading on M-23 (Chicago Turnpike). Otherwise the work is progressing satisfactorily. The work through the Irish Hills is now centered on the new road between the Ed Brighton and E. M. Kelly farms. The hill west of the Sand Lake school has been cut almost to a level and the deep fill north of the Kelly home is now being taken care of. When finished this will make one of the most picturesque points in the Irish Hills drive, affording an unobstructed view of Iron and Wampler Lakes for nearly one-half mile.—Exponent.

Ann Arbor—Pleading guilty to a charge of violating the prohibition law Sam Stocker of Detroit was in circuit court Friday afternoon fined $1,000 and $100 costs with the alternative of from six months to a year in Jackson prison, the longer term being recommended. It is understood that Stocker will pay the fine. Stocker was arrested for speeding on November 2 and taken to police headquarters. Search of his car revealed 60 gallons of alleged whisky contained in specially constructed copper containers, each the exact fit of the average sized traveling bag. Officer Norman Cook, who made the arrest, noticed that the springs of the automobile were sagging and this, in addition to the fact that Stocker was speeding, aroused his suspicions.—Times News.

Milan—Alfred Stronik will spend the next three months as the guest of Sheriff Robinson at Ann Arbor as the result of drinking too freely of some moonshine whisky and then trying to drive his car through Milan. Stronik drove into Milan early in the day on Monday and made himself a general nuisance. Tom Goodridge, Village Marshall, arrested Stronik and he was arraigned before Justice of the Peace, E. O. Loveland. He pleaded guilty to the charge of driving a car on the public streets while intoxicated. Justice Loveland sentenced Stronik to spend ninety days in the County Jail and pay a fine of fifty dollars. Stronik gave to the court information as to the source of the supply of the liquor and several arrests will probably follow. Deputy Sheriffs of both counties are working on the information given by Stronik.—Leader.

Jackson—A new feature of our election polls is that some voting places are "manned" exclusively by women. With men controlling, the bleak rooms seem appropriate enough but with a corps of the smiling gentler sex in charge the surroundings are ostentatiously at discord. Some flowers, a few pictures on the walls and a rug or two would seem more in consonance. Very likely the Town Improvement Society will yet see that the voting temples of the town are thus decorated and "made home-like." Meanwhile what is to be done with the masculine American sovereign who cannot spare the time necessary to a public expression as to what he does or does not desire? With a formidable assortment of tickets on candidates and measures and street-paving, water-extension and sewer bonds, the necessity for which no one is well-informed, hallo! casting these days is somewhat bewildering and nerve-racking, but the lady clerks keep smiling.—Saturday Evening Star.

MAKE WORK EASIER

Chelsea People Are Pleased to Learn How It Has Been Done.

It's pretty hard to attend to duties with a constantly aching back; with annoying urinary disorders. Doan's Kidney Pills have made work easier.

So thousands have gratefully testified.

They're for bad backs.

They're for weak kidneys.

Chelsea people gratefully recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

Mrs. E. Hooker, N. East St., Chelsea, says: "I was in bad shape with kidney trouble brought on by hard work. There were times when I could hardly get about because of the sharp, shooting pains across my back and many a night I was kept awake with my back. I was so dizzy I had to catch hold of something for fear of falling and I felt tired and nervous which interfered greatly with my work. I read about Doan's Kidney Pills and went to Freeman's Drug Store and got two boxes. After using them I was better."

Baking Adobe.

Adobe may be made from any material which becomes hardened on exposure to the sun. The process of baking consists in first exposing the molded bricks to the direct rays of the sun for a day, then turning them, exposing different faces for from seven to fourteen days. Because of the lack of coherence, adobe can be employed only in regions of limited rainfall.

Freedom—Miss Walsh, teacher of the Silver Lake school, district No. 6, reports the following pupils neither absent nor tardy for the month of October: Margaret Hieber, Rubina Blumenauer, Edwin Glutz, Clarence Pfau, Alta Scherdt, Margaret Uphaus, Marjorie Sott.

Gregory—Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Marsh left by auto Saturday forenoon, accompanied by a friend, Mrs. Kellogg of Pleasant Lake, for Chicago, to visit their son for a short time, and will make the remainder of their trip to Florida by railroad, where they will spend the winter.

Brighton—E. R. Shoultz left Monday for Rochester where he will be employed as caretaker at the Detroit Silver Black Fox Farm. He expects to remain for a year after which time he will return to South Lyon and will devote his spare time to the fox industry. Building operations for pens and kennels will be started next summer on the Shoultz farm south of the village and buildings will be erected as per the latest governments specifications. The place will be known as the "Indian Trail Fox Ranch." The parties have purchased six pairs of Silver Black Foxes which will be wintered at Rochester.—Argus.

Manchester—Erasmus Logan, who had lived in this township since he was a small boy excepting while serving in the Civil war, died at his home just south of the village, Monday, November 5th, aged 83 years. He enlisted in the 20th Michigan Regiment and served from August, 1862 to 1865, being in several engagements. He was captured at Spotylvania by the rebels and held at Libby prison at Richmond and then taken to the famous Andersonville pen, spending a year or more in those loathsome places before being exchanged. For a long time following the war he was in bad health, indeed we doubt if he ever regained his health. The past few months his health had failed rapidly.—Enterprise.

Curious Tree.
One of the most curious trees in the world is found in Mexico. The natives call it the handflower tree. From the center of each flower springs a stem shaped like a human hand and arm. The points are curved like finger tips with overgrown nails. Each tree possesses thousands of these curious blooms, and at a distance they resemble blood-red hands waving in the air.
