MUNICIPAL PLANT WILL SHOW HANDSOME PROFIT

Estimates of Superintendent Boehm indicate approximately $10,000 will be credited to power outfit for fiscal year.

That the Chelsea Municipal Power plant will show a profit of approximately $10,000 over operating expenses for the fiscal year was the estimate given the village council at their regular meeting on Monday evening when Superintendent Boehm of the plant appeared before council with a hastily made up and abbreviated report of the financial standing of the plant.

While orders drawn in favor of the Municipal Electric Light and Water Works plant total $24,000 for the year to date, all but approximately $900 of this money has been returned to the village treasury by slides material for improvements purchased at a cost of more than $9,000 which have been bought for the village by officials of the plant. That this latter amount would reach $10,000 was the better of the superintendent. No extra labor cost has been charged against the plant for these improvements.

Arrangements for a new fire alarm to take the place of the old steam whistle when enough of the village is changed over to alternating current so that it will be unnecessary to keep up steam for emergency purposes, were discussed but no definite action was taken. An electric horn mounted on an elevated position at the power plant, with outlying stations from which it could be "touched off" in case of fire, was proposed by Superintendent Boehm and received favorable comment on the part of councilmen.

A proposed ordinance regulating installation of electric wiring and providing for inspection of same before connection with village power lines was read by Clerk Walworth but was laid to one side as being unnecessary, the belief being expressed that state laws providing for all precautions necessary to the safety of property from this standpoint. Allowance of bills and routine work finished the session which was one of the shortest held in recent months.

ST. MARYS TEAMS WIN TWO MORE VICTORIES

Ann Arbor basketball team bunched up against defeat at St. Marys hall last Friday evening when the Kelly Greens defeated the Ann Arbor Y. M. C. A. 24 to 8, and the St. Marys All Stars defeated the Hoover Club 18 to 12.

In the main go of the evening the fast St. Marys Kelly Greens played a whirlwind game from the start. Ann Arbor took the lead in the first quarter but was overtaken in the next quarter by fast short passes of Eisele, Wheeler, Hoffman and the guarding of Conk and Howe. Stapish and Eder were very tight in the piches. Line-up as follows:

Chelsea: Ann Arbor Y. Hirth, Steger, Beyer, Claife, Brindel.
Goals: Hoffman 3, Eisele 4, Wheeler 3, Stapish 1, Eisele fouls 2 in 2.

Substitutions: Eder for Conk, Stapish for Eder, Palmer for Claife.

Stapish is a new man in the Kelly Greens line-up and showed very well. More will be seen of the flashy guard this season. Keusch was called away on business and was greatly missed in the line-up.

In a fast preliminary the St. Marys All Stars and Ann Arbor Hoover Club played a nip and tuck game throughout. McKernan was the outstanding star of the game, his passing and doubling being a feature. Eder, Tuttle, Howe and Loeffler should also receive special mention. The line-up:

Chelsea: Ann Arbor Hoover Club. McKernan 1, Loeffler 1, Howe 1, Hoppé 4, Nordman 1, Steele 1.

Goals: Eder 3, Tuttle 2, McKernan 1, Loeffler 1, Howe 1, Hoppé 4, Nordman 1, Steele 1.

POWER COMPANY WILL MAKE IMPROVEMENTS AT CHELSEA

Added Facilities for Handling Increased Demand for Current Prompt Action by Consumers Officials.

Consumers Power Company is planning extensive improvements to take care of increases in its Chelsea business. In the substation where the electricity is started on its way to the village are switches, transformers and regulators to control the "juice" and regulate the pressure. The additional requirements of the several factories served by Consumers Power Company together with the load which the contract with the village has created has rendered some of this equipment inadequate.

Within the next few months a new automatic pressure regulator will be installed. This will improve the character of Consumers service by keeping the pressure or voltage constant.

Since the Cement Plant was acquired by the State plans have been perfected which will increase the present output. The additional machinery installed calls for more power to operate it. Three large transformers are to be installed which will provide the capacity required. These transformers reduce the pressure on the Consumers lines so that the current can be safely distributed around the plant. The present transformers provide electricity for 2,000 horse power in motors. When the new transformers are installed, electricity for 3,000 horse power in motors will be delivered to the switchboard in the Cement Plant.

New switches and other devices will be placed to control the additional current demanded for the 1924 program of the Cement Plant.

JUSTICE ALMOST OFFICIATES AT WEDDING

That there is a disappointed justice of the peace in town seems certain. Following statements made to friends that the first young couple who appeared before him and aspiring to reach that period in life where two can live as cheaply (?) as one, would be united in marriage free of all charge, this particular justice (and he lives in the east part of town) thought his time had come when on Monday a young couple hailing from Jackson appeared at the home of the justice and asked to be married. Having received previous warning that the request would be made in a few minutes, all preparations had been made, and then the blow fell. A license? Here was the oversight. The would-be married couple had harbored the supposition that a justice of the peace could produce a license, perform the ceremony and send them on their way rejoicing. Thus officialdom suffered the disappointment which takes the joy out of life to say nothing of the young aspirants turned from his door.

AM. LEGION WINS GAME FROM JACKSON WOLVES

Also Take Fast Game From Ann Arbor National Guards Wednesday Evening.

A basket by Kaercher in the last half minute of play gave the Chelsea American Legion team a well earned 21-20 victory over the Jackson Wolverines Sunday afternoon in a game played in Chelsea. Throughout the contest, the Jackson outfit was in the lead but could not retain it long enough to score a win in the final quarter. The game was one of the fastest ever played on the Chelsea court and exciting throughout with neither team holding a decisive lead at any stage.

During the first quarter the Wolverines pointed twice on field goals and led at the end of the initial period, 4-3. At the end of the half the Wolves took a 7-5 margin when they scored three points to two for the Chelsea outfit.

Both teams began to work more on the offensive in the third period. The Wolverines stringing up seven scores and the Legionaires eight, the count being 14-13 at the end of the quarter.

Then in the final period, Chelsea scored eight more while the Jackson outfit was counting six times from the field, winning out by a single point.

Both outfits passed effectively and neither excelled the other in all around play. O'Holman with eight points and Russo with six, starred for the Jackson team while Kaercher with four baskets, led the Chelsea point getters. Munroe was second in the scoring department with three field goals. The summary:

| Chelsea | Jackson |
|--|------------------|
| Wolverines 20 | Chelsea 21 |
| O'Halloran 2 | Kaercher 4 |
| McClure 2 | Munroe 3 |
| Jackson 1 | Schoenhals 0 |
| Hilfinger 0 | Hesselschwerdt 0 |
| McClure 0 | J. Eder 0 |
| Field goals: O'Halloran 4, Russo 3, McClure 2, Kaercher 4, Munroe 3, Schoenhals 1, J. Eder 0, Hesselschwerdt 0, Jackson 1, McClure 1, Schoenhals 1. Substitutions: E. Eder for Hesselschwerdt. | |

In a fast and snappy game played at the Armory in Ann Arbor on Wednesday evening Chelsea American Legion team defeated the National Guards of Ann Arbor to the tune of 28 to 20.

Editorial

A QUESTION OF AIMS
John St. John, Seattle lawyer, has become a policeman to earn more money. Fourteen years out of law school he finds the profession too crowded and his bank account discouragingly slender. Another white collar yields to the bigger pay envelope.

Meanwhile Dr. Thomas, head of Pennsylvania State College, says that no calling offers a more contented mind of a staid and eager income than farming—with modern machinery and according to best modern practice.

The lawyer's defeat will not deter
many from poring over dry statistics books with an eye on the bench, and Dr. Thomas' optimism will not swamp our agricultural colleges.
But serious-thinking youths will ponder, at least a few minutes, over what is back of both situations.

Building trades report a big scarcity of recruits, despite big wages.
Employment agencies say office jobs are favored by uneducated and college men alike. When a New York millionaire turned chauffeur and a Vanderbilt became an office boy,
the former got more publicity; it was more unusual.

Probably Mr. St. John realized he wasn't fitted to practice law, and may become a doctor or minister or teacher or business man later on.

Finding oneself a misfit is no disgrace. And a very small percentage of modern boys are fitted by training, tendency, personality, industry, and ambition to make good on the farm. Every calling is roseate to an outsider. Also, each has big drawbacks.

Naturally, most depends on one's aims in choosing a calling. Unless Mr. St. John really wants to be a policeman very much, he'll make a mess of his life. If a city youth is attracted by Dr. Thomas' picture to study agriculture and become a farmer, he'll be miserable about 364 days every year unless he finds in farming the things he wants with all his heart and soul.

White collars are a more phase
where life is concerned.

MAN EXPERIMENTS

Science moved fast last week. A New York promoter applied to Washington for permission to harness the vast tides of the Bay of Fundy, off Nova Scotia. He expects to generate 500,000 horse power with upkeep the only expense. Steam boilers and electric generators furnish far less and cost thousands to run.

An automobile in Paris ran sixty miles, driven solely by gas from forty cents worth of charcoal burning under the hood. Prophets, start guessing.

A British scientist declares if the energy bound up in a glass of water, which we are told is composed of billions of atoms racing about, could be put to work, it would run a big factory for a year.

We're scratching on the surface
with here and there a puny success.
Every time we think we know everything, can do everything, and that our creations are perfect. Think again. Look at house and factory chimneys belching good coal dust, which we call smoke. Try to call a town a hundred miles away on the telephone, and see how faint is the response and how much buzzing and crackling is heard. Touch an electric bulb and note enough heat to cook a meal going to waste every night. Ask a neighbor where Madagascar is, or try to write a letter without using a lot of staccato, overworked, bromide phrases, or attempt to build a set of shelves in the cellar. When we get settled singly in the fullness of our knowledge, some one is sure to open a door and show us a new world. Thus we progress.

ON GETTING OLD

Mrs. Roberta Marez, the oldest woman in America, is dead at 135, in Colorado. Young chicks of 85 and maiden of 35—may take a back seat. You're just beginning. Mrs.
Marez hung on long enough to get her name in all the papers when she passed on. We wonder if it was worth while, and if she loved life so well, or was like many of us, afraid of eternity.

A leading British surgeon says we do wrong by encouraging others to get old or continue living after we stop work. Not original, but worth arguing about. He says we merely clutter up the earth, hinder progress, worry our friends, and are useless after we quit producing.
Since modern youth mocks away hairs, old age can't do much good in the advisory line. Since business, education, and even religion move
on so fast as to make its instruction futile, age has to sit back and watch
the rest of us experiment, fall, plod, probe, ponder. In 1924 we don't have much use for rules good in 1884.
The world is reborn every half century, we believe. And since most old people are loved and respected for what they have been, rather than for what they are, this London surgeon thinks we ought to think more of living well than long.

But few are so cold-blooded. We don't know what's coming, but we do like to cling to this life. It's rough in spots but has compensations. Most of us feel that we work hard enough in fifty years to be supported in our dotage. And occasionally an old man refuses to give all he saved to his children and can support himself and rest awhile.

NOBODY BELIEVES HIM

Late Fyffe, aged prospector, who made and squandered $15,000,000,
died in Colorado the other day claiming to the last that he was happiest
when he didn't have a cent. "I felt uncomfortable with so much money," he said. He threw his mittens to the winds, sometimes literally,
and with pick and blanket tramped
the hills until he got too old. Then he passed on.

About once a month on the average, some rich man tells us that no matter how much we enjoy making money, or how much good it does us, once we get a lot of it won't have any charm for us. Old Fyffe put it in a nutshell, we are told, although a number of us would be willing to be uncomfortable that way. It seems better than the other—the present—
way.

So old Fyffe laid down his pick and went prospecting over that highest knoll. We hope he made his strike.
As for his unhappiness, we put our tongues in our cheeks. One thousandth of his pile would make most of us content. A hundredth would be hilarious. We know that WE would be happy if rich. Yet Nemry every month some rich man declares that the happiest man is often the poorest, and that wealth seldom brings as much real content as penury. We wonder if there's anything to it.

PUBLIC PROTECTORS

Bob Wheatly, Los Angeles policeman, shook his head when the father of a girl he had found handed him his offered reward of $2,000. Just doing his duty and didn't deserve
any reward, is the way he put it.
Thus he enriched himself in self-respect and public confidence far more than money could have done, and we hope though we are not sure he has set an example which will be followed, in spirit at least.

On occasions like this, we find that policemen are delightfully human,
and not all the grifters cartoonists depict. A man has to see his own home on fire, or hear a window being opened at midnight, to appreciate policemen and firemen. They are no more servants than one's banker or doctor. All help us take care of what we have. They are often derided and nearly always unappreciated, but the sooner and the more fully they are appreciated the more sensible we can claim to be.

General Butler is finding a few lazy, treacherous, and grating policemen in Philadelphia, but the good things he says of most of them are many and sincere. He had to clean up Philadelphia, not because policemen felt kindly toward law-breaking, but largely because city and national officials higher up gave them neither encouragement nor aid. Believe intensely human, like any of us, they waited for a sign. Now that they have it, they have about cleaned up an extremely wet city.

We hold that policemen and firemen, like city and county officials, are not appreciated according to their worth and service. Usually,
however, they are broad-minded enough and have such a good sense of humor that their neglect doesn't worry them a mite.

BLAME HIS IDEAS

Nine-tenths of Russia is mourning its liberator, leader, and near de-god, Nicolai Lenin. When a man's passing creates such a ripple in world news, and makes eighty million peasants forget their own acute troubles in deploring his going, he evidently did not live in vain.
Not that he was good, as we say it.

He was cruel, tyrannical, ambitious, ruthless, and not very consistent in his altruism. He robbed Peter handsomer to pay Paul a little.

But in any other channel than Bolshevism he would have been a world idol. Any nation would have been proud of him. We don't believe in Communism over here, although some of us have traces of it.
But Lenin had a mania for distributing wealth equally, no matter how honestly some had secured a surplus, or how little others deserved to share it. He discounted human nature on the theory that such forcible distribution would make the poor happy, ambitious, prosperous and good. We know it won't; that unearned wealth tends to do just the opposite. We know one man can't be trusted to take ably his share
and help his neighbors get theirs.
Men aren't ready for a Utopia.

But in asizing up Lenin, blame his ideas if you will but admire the man. He was a leader, consecrated to his mission, loyal to his creed and his friends of the hovels. He was idolized by followers while respected by foes. That betokens true greatness. White, black, and yellow men applaud one who rises from nothing by his own pluck, works hard for a definite goal, keeps his ideas and ideals straight, and arrives. Bolshevism may crumble or become anarchy or worse. The world may never take it more than it does now.

The cause he fought for may finally prove so illogical, futile, and foolish as to fade into derided oblivion. But some or otherwise, Lenin fought a good fight for his very real ideals.
What more need one say of any man?

A California youth was found to be carrying a powder puff, rough rube, an eyebrow pencil, a lipstick, and a pocket flask. Yet the latter was the only charge booked. Such a menace to society should have been sent to the penitentiary, at least.

Every Disease Has a Cause

Disease in its infinite variety may express itself in a multiplicity of forms. In all of these forms, however, one thing exists in common: It is the cause. Every disease, whether acute or chronic, has a cause. Clinical results have proven that this cause in over 90 per cent of all cases is a subluxation of a vertebra (misplaced bony segment) in the spinal column. This subluxation exerts a pressure upon the nerves which emit
from the tiny windows of the spinal column, which diminishes the amount of nerve energy being transmitted to the organ to which that particular nerve leads. In consequence that organ undergoes a change in its structure or function, or both, resulting in what is known as a disease. Happily this pressure can be removed by a Chiropractor, and complete normal function restored.
Why delay any longer in seeing your Chiropractor when every day's delay means that much more time in overcoming your disease. Delay will do you no good, and may result in disaster.

that President Wilson had no right to rather than a set plan which he proposed to force upon them. This complicated the situation and the rush climb on the barnwagon began.

Contemporary estimates of President Wilson at home were as wide apart as the poles. Senator J. Thomas Heflin (Dem., Ala.), when representing spoke on the floor of "Woodrow Wilson, the greatest apostle of world unity for democracy since Jesus Christ." Senator Thomas W. Hardwick (Dem. of Georgia, said January 21 in the senate: "I believe in a written constitution. I believe in a strict interpretation of it. I believe that unless we leave and abandon this mud and maelstrom of imperialism here at home, we return to the ancient principles of Rome, and the world will be a better place."

After the preliminary sessions of peace conference President Wilson returned to the United States in February, returning to Paris March 15. He signed the peace treaty June 28, 1919, and returned to the United States July 8. His second term as president expired March 8, 1920.

After his retirement from the presidency Mr. Wilson lived quietly, but a partly successful fight to regain his health. He occasionally went to the seashore and rode much in his car in the environs of Washington. He bought a home in Washington and informed a law partnership with bridge colony, who had been his family of state, succeeding Robert Taft. He took part in the funeral procession of President Harding in 1923.

Tax Returns Show More Women Are in Business

Washington.—Women are more active now in the business world than ever before in the history of the nation, Treasury department sta-show that since the war the rate of women who earn incomes enough to be taxed has tripled. For the tax year 1921 there were 89,934 wives who filed income tax returns separately from their husbands, upon which a tax of $348 was paid. For the same year, 115,856 women were heads of families who filed income tax returns, upon which $10,945,457 was collected while all other women filed income tax returns, on which $10,964 was taxed.

Abraham Lincoln.

Once again we Americans honor the great Lincoln whose trials and tribulations in the days when this nation's fate hung in the balance were of such momentous proportions as would have "broken" many another man. Yet, Lincoln's constant cheerfulness and his utmost confidence in the future carried his aims to a successful conclusion.

Let's all try to emulate his virtues. Let us move about in our daily tasks with a cheerfulness that bespeaks our confidence in the future and in the end—we can't help but succeed.

CHELSEA HIGH DROPS TWO GAMES TO DEXTER

Boys Lose In Overtime Period After Tie Finish With Dexter High Girls Play Hard Game.

A field goal by Walsh in the last minutes of play in an overtime game at Dexter last Friday evening put Chelsea High on the short end of a 13-11 score. The game was not an easy one, being a fight from start to finish. At the end of the fourth quarter the Green and White were officially announced the winners. After being hailed as the victors with the score 9 and 7 the Chelsea boys were summoned back on the floor to play off a tie. Both scorekeepers agreed that Chelsea held a two-point margin. The dispute which followed concerned a basket made by Dexter that the referee had ordered not to count. After the game he reversed the decision and the Green and White were called upon to break a 9-9 tie. An element of good sportsmanship brought the Chelsea boys back on the floor to play another five minute quarter. This was one of the hardest fought periods of the game and ended in a 12-12 tie. Another five minute quarter was demanded and the endurance of the boys was put to a test as no substitutes were used on either team. In this period a field goal by Walsh, scoring star of the game, spelled victory for Dexter high school. The so-called "defeat" gave the boys a grim determination to defeat Dexter in the return game here Friday night.

Summary and official score:
Chelsea 12
Dexter 14
Walsh 1
Kinner 1
Brooks 1
Mayer 1
Vogel 1
Field goals: Kinner 1, Brooks 3, Walsh 6.
Foul goals: Witherell 0 in 1, Brooks 1 in 4, Mayer 0 in 1, Kinner 0 in 2, Walsh 0 in 4, Beard 0 in 1, Ernest 0 in 1.
Personal fouls: Witherell 2, Kinner 2, Mayer, Vogel, Brooks, Walsh, Schaiter, Beard, Ernest, Shavton.
Referee: Warner, U. of M.

In the preliminary high school girls lost to the Dexter girls, 11 to 7. This game was played hard but the poor decisions of the referee figured in the girls defeat. A great improvement was shown in the girls team over the team which played Saline two weeks ago. Their defeat gave them a determination to defeat Dexter in a return game to be played here Friday evening, February 8. In a sportsmanlike manner the girls gracefully abided by the poor decisions of the referee.

Summary and score:
Chelsea 7
Dexter 11
Ellsworth 1
Weinman 1
King 1
Knapp 1
Anderson 1
Brooks 1
Substitutions: Grubill for Knapp, Beard for Stout.
Field goals: Ellsworth 2, Stout 1, Cushing 3, Beard 1.
Foul goals: Weinman 3 in 3, Stout 0 in 2, Beard 1 in 2.
Personal fouls: Weinman, Anderson.

Referee: Finels, Ypsilanti.
Umpire: Staffan, Chelsea.
Both boys and girls are determined to bounce the Dexter teams here Friday evening. These games will be the best of the season and it is the duty of all to attend and support the home team. They desire to win and need all the help and support they can get.

Ypsilanti—Thrift systems have been established in the central grade schools here and every child has opened a savings account.

Saline—The rear chimney of Lutheran Trinity church burned out Sunday morning and it was thought everything was all right afterward. As Ernest Towler was coming up town at 1:30 in the afternoon he noticed a blaze in the roof near the chimney, promptly turning in an alarm. The fire department was on the scene in a few moments and with rare good judgment, by the aid of a little water, judicious use of axes and chemicals, soon had the fire out with but little damage to the roof or the interior of the edifice. Rate off to the Saline Fire Department.—Observer.

Forecasting A Tremendous Spring Demand

more Ford cars and trucks were produced last year than the previous year, an increase of over 50 per cent.

In spite of this tremendous increase in production, it was impossible to meet delivery requirements during the spring and summer months when orders for 350,000 Ford Cars and Trucks could not be filled.

This year winter buying for immediate delivery has been more active than ever before—and in addition 200,000 orders have already been booked through the Ford Weekly Purchase Plan for spring delivery.

These facts clearly indicate that the demand during this spring and summer will be far greater than ever, and that orders should be placed immediately with Ford Dealers as a means of protection against delay in securing your Ford Car or Truck or Fordson Tractor.

How wonderful, that word—Faith! You can cultivate it. You'll find your faith in the future a good deal stronger when you cultivate that admirable habit of laying aside a few dollars each week for the day when you no longer are able to earn them. When that time comes, you'll realize what the Faith of your younger days meant.

Start today. Take what dollars you can spare and put them in a Savings Account with us. We'll pay interest to help along. And best of all, you can have Faith that your money is safely protected in this institution.

TIPS FOR TAXPAYERS

In computing his net income for the year 1923 a taxpayer may deduct from gross income all losses, incurred not only in his business, trade or profession, but in any transaction entered into for profit, not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

To be allowed, losses not incurred in trade or business must conform closely to the wording of the statute. For example, a loss incurred in the sale of a taxpayer's home, which at the time of purchase was bought without intention of resale, is not deductible because it was not a transaction entered into for profit.

Losses sustained in the operation of a farm as a business venture are deductible. If sustained in the operation of a farm operated merely for the pleasure or convenience of the taxpayer, such losses are not deductible.

HELPS TO MARKET FARM PRODUCTS

The importance of radio in the production and marketing of agricultural products is brought out in a special survey of about 1,200 representative farmers just completed by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. More than 50 per cent of the 1,200 farmers replying reported that they owned tube sets employing three or more tubes, while approximately 50 per cent of the farmers reporting having home made sets ranging from simple crystal detectors to tube sets.

"The Rosary" Popular. Eighty thousand copies of the song, "The Rosary," were sold in 1913, the year of its publication, and many thousands of copies have been sold each year since then. It has been translated into most languages, including Esperanto.

Sudanese Eat Lice and Ants. Notices of the Sudan, who now number about 10,000,000, subsist chiefly on a diet of roots, berries, insects, and such animals as lizards, white ants and dried caterpillars. In some spots in their land the finest cotton in the world is raised. An English party recently made a 2,500-mile trip across the Sudan to Belgian Congo, and among other things discovered that the population has doubled in the last twenty years, while the big game of the country is rapidly disappearing from the jungle with the advance of even primitive settlement.

HEROES FOR AN AGE

The twenty-two men who were in the Shenandoah during her wild night ride recently could have asked no quicker road to fame. They did nothing, at least until the giant dirigible, as big as a small town, tore loose and started over the Atlantic. But Adventure and Thrills with capital letters were theirs; they can tell grandchildren of a ride in the storm in a crippled dirigible.

Fiction goes much further, of course. Jules Verne, in one of his yarns, was shot to the moon in a huge hollow cylinder. Twenty-first century Vernes will go up in gasbags. Today they relate equally intriguing stunts. Yet reality shames the wildest imagination.

Chance creates heroes daily. A famous general kisses a baby girl, and her grandchildren will walk more proudly because of it. A boy rescues the glove of the Prince of Wales, and leads the gang from then on. A policeman foils a bandit plot, overheard by accident, and is made a sergeant. A pedestrian near a lonely stream hears a cry and saves a life. One cannot successfully set out to be a hero. By keeping wide awake to opportunity, one can act more quickly. Most heroes are created just that way. In addition, almost every hero has prepared himself for the emergency which made him. Physical strength, intimate knowledge of a subject, alertness, developed courage—such things breed and underlie heroism. And, usually, the heroism is no more lasting than qualities behind it.

"I'll be a motorcar, it seems—don't know anything about it. Must have stepped right in front of it, I guess. I sort of remember a lot of yelling, and the next thing I knew I was in a bed in St. Luke's hospital. I'm not damaged to speak of. Broken collar-bone and something in my arm. Half a dozen stitches in my scalp. They thought my skull was fractured at first, but it isn't that kind of a skull. Don't amount to anything—any of that. Tried to saddle a nurse on me—D-d nonsense! Only I've got such a headache I'm kind of mixed up. I can't seem to remember."

"I'm going to be your nurse," she said. Then she asked, in a more or less automatic attempt to explore his lack of memory. "Where were you when all this happened?"

He stared hard at her, and that same frightened look came back into his face. "I don't know," he admitted. "Must have been wandering round, myself, I guess. I'd been to see— I'd been to some office or other. There were some papers— You see, they undressed me at the hospital. I had Anson look through my clothes, and he says they aren't there."

She volunteered to go through his pockets for the papers she understood him to say were missing. This was what he meant, wasn't it? And if she didn't turn them up she could telephone the hospital and find out if they were there. What sort of papers were they?

"You let my pockets alone," he commanded her, truculently. "I didn't say I'd lost any papers. I'll remember all right in a few hours, anyway. My head's clearing up. Just a little more letting alone—that's all I need. You'd better go away now and let me see if I can't get to sleep."

She rose obediently, moved the chair out of the way, minutely readjusted sundry small articles on the night-table, started toward the door at last, and then with a long-sustained sob came back to him, knelt down beside the bed and laid her cheek gently upon his hand.

"I do love you, Dad," she cried. "I want you to love me again. I want you to forgive me for being such a beast to you."

He did not speak, but his hand stirred and lightly stroked her face. She kissed the palm, sat back upon her heels and a little later, when the nurse came in, she squeezed the tears out of her eyes and smiled at him. "I hope you're going to be sick a good long time so you can find out I really love you."

It was while she was eating her solitary meal and wishing she'd telephoned Jennie MacArthur to come down and share it with her that she heard the door-bell ring, and a wonder whether it mightn't actually be Jennie made her listen intently when Anson opened the door. It was, though, a rather coarse-sounding man's voice asking for Mr. Greer. Anson shut a door at this point and she heard no more, but it struck her as odd that it took him as long as it did to get rid of the visitor. He explained upon resuming his duties in the dining-room—that the man had found something her father had evidently found and had been disposed to insist on seeing Mr. Greer with the idea of being rewarded for his trouble. Anson had satisfied him by paying him five dollars out of his own pocket.

"Was it those papers, Jennie, been crying about?" Beatrice asked. Anson couldn't say as to that, but they were what appeared to be some papers to a very dirty envelope, addressed to Mr. Greer. He had put them on Mr. Greer's writing desk in the library.

"I sort of remember a lot of yelling."

It was in a spirit of sheer idleness that the girl, when she had repaired to this room for an after-dinner cigarette, went over to the desk and looked at the envelope. It was a plain legal-size envelope that had been sealed and roughly torn open. It was crumpled and smeared with mud, and the sheet of typewritten sheets it contained bulged out a little and was threatened with contamination. The impulse that moved her to withdraw it altogether was perhaps half curiosity as to whether this was, after all, the document whose loss had so distressed her father, and the other half mere fascination.

With a gingerly pinch of her fingertips she conveyed the envelope to the wastebasket. The stiff sheets in the other hand sprang open, and she glanced idly at their typewritten contents. She had no sense of prying. She had assumed all along that the papers related to some matter of business, and business was something in which she took the most tepid interest. But her attention was caught by the first line her eye fell upon.

"Harry was met at corner of Broadway and— Why, that was the drug-store corner where she used to meet George! By young lady driving 1918 model Archer roadster, license number—"

It was the report of a detective agency upon her and George, from the twentieth of October, the week of her father's return from the Northwest, to the fifteenth of November, when she'd gone North with him again. It was a pretty thorough job of spying, she noted; not many of their meetings had been missed.

The thing was loathsome—this was what she felt first, before any thought of the consequences of its revelations had time to form in her mind; loathsome in the chop-licking, leering nastiness of its attitude, its implications—even its very English, though here an attempt had been made to give it a businesslike, impersonal cast.

That detective's report had put her out of conceit with love—made it seem dirty to her. It was hard to realize that it was only this afternoon she had been looking at Mrs. Henderson's rooms, pretending to be George's wife. But he was her friend, anyhow. He and Jennie MacArthur were the two queerest people she knew. So she couldn't kill herself. She couldn't even run away without seeing him first.

At half-past eight or thereabouts she slipped out of her room, made it seem dirty to her. It was hard to realize that it was only this afternoon she had been looking at Mrs. Henderson's rooms, pretending to be George's wife. But he was her friend, anyhow. He and Jennie MacArthur were the two queerest people she knew. So she couldn't kill herself. She couldn't even run away without seeing him first.

She obeyed him without a word. He waited a moment longer before he spoke again. Then, "I've got the goods on you, Trix. I know what you've been up to with this man Burns."

"Yes, and I know what you've been up to, too," she countered. "I've been reading this. You tossed the document contemptuously upon the bed. This good-had-grown-for-it, but couldn't quite reach it. 'Trix, the report of your detectives,' she added. 'Where in H-did you get hold of that?'" he asked.

"A man brought it to the door while I was at dinner," she told him. "He wanted a reward for it, and Anson paid him. The envelope was torn open and all muddy. It fell out of your pocket. I suppose when you were hit by that car. The man had read it, of course, and goodness knows how many other people. Not that that matters much to anybody. I spent an hour reading it myself. It's pretty good. Gave you what you wanted, anyhow. And I'll save a lot of sob-stuff—between you and me, I mean."

She was elated by the knowledge that she was hurting him savagely. His withered and then, at the pain this movement cost him, groaned out, "Oh, God!"

"You'd better lie still," she went on, quietly. "I'm going to tell you what I mean about the sob-stuff. We had quite a lot of it the other time, when George brought me home drunk. All about how you loved me and were going to trust me just the same. Jennie was going to stay here to take care of me and be my friend while you were away. But the past was going to be forgotten. It was a clean slate, you said. I suppose you thought she'd spy on me, anyway. Maybe you told her to. But she didn't. Jennie was square with me and with you, too. But when you came back she hadn't anything but to tell you about me. So, before you'd been home a week you hired detectives—to get the goods on me like you said."

He contradicted her here. "I didn't put detectives on you. I put 'em on that dog-of-a-chauffeur. I'd fired for getting too familiar with you. And God knows I was right to do it." "Oh, yes; you were right," she admitted. "You thought you'd get me that way, and you did. But if you'd trusted me like you pretended to, or loved me one little bit—you wouldn't have thought so. That's why I say we can cut out the sob-stuff."

"You sort talking a minute and listen," he commanded. "I happen to want you to get this straight. Burns gave me as a reference when he applied for this job in the air mail. I was fool enough to write them a good strong letter about him. Said he had left me voluntarily to improve his position and I thought he deserved it. I put in everything I could think of to help him. So when I came home after he'd got the job, I wanted to see how he was getting on. Asked the superintendent about him. I stopped; at the field one morning, thinking I'd see him take the mail out; wish him luck and so on. It happened I was too late. He was still in sight, headed south along the lake when I got there. But I stopped and talked with him a while. The man had quite a lot to say about him and his luck. One thing he said was that Burns was a bit with the women. There was one swell Jane, he said, used to meet him quite often. Came out sometimes in a big car.

"Trix, I swear I didn't think it was you. Wouldn't believe it was you. But I knew you were sore because I'd let him go. You gave that away. The first night we had dinner after I came back. Down at the restaurant—remember? I thought if I could prove to you that he was running with somebody else you'd quit thinking about him. That's why I told the agency to look him up. I never thought they'd get you with him."

"Why not?" she asked. Her reason had been his explanation as about half true. "Why shouldn't it have been true?"

"His face darkened. 'Why not?' he echoed. 'Because I couldn't believe it of you. I couldn't believe that a daughter of mine could ever lower herself to be the private snapper of a discharged chauffeur. Why, good God, Trix, when I read that paper this morning in Nathan's office—something queer happened to me. I didn't know where I was. I don't know now where I went after I left there, until the car hit me. When I came to I thought—perhaps the whole thing had been a kind of nightmare that I'd had since I got hurt—going to Nathan's office and reading that—d-d paper—and all. And when you put your face down on my hand a while ago and said you wanted me to love you again—"

His voice broke at that, and she felt the tears coming up into her eyes. "Trix!" he cried at sight of them. "Tell me it isn't true—the stuff in that paper. Tell me it's a lie from beginning to end. Say the bare word, and I'll believe you, even now."

"She took him up. 'It isn't true,' she said, quietly. At the blindingly incredulous stare this drew from him she uttered a short laugh. "What it says is true," she went on. "But what that detective thinks isn't true. Not what you think, either. George is in love with me, but he wants to marry me. I didn't know whether I wanted to marry him or not, but I'm going to now."

There was a long silence between them after she said this. It was a full rather than the one she had waited comfortably, feeling very cold and vindictive. Jennie never said outright before—even to herself—that she was going to marry George, and the declaration startled her.

"If that's true," her father began at last, but he flinched under her smile and revised the sentence. "As long as that's true, say the word and I'll buy tickets tomorrow for a trip abroad. Mediterranean cruise. A-g-l-e-r-s. Cairo, Nile, round on camels and things. We could start right after Christmas. I could get away by then."

Her momentary security collapsed. It was a dazzling bribe he offered. Trix, however, had seen the light in the sunshine, but under a cloud. But he didn't stop there; he hardly paused. "I wish we could start tomorrow! It's this next couple of months—That's only half the bargain. Trix, you'll have to cut this other business—"

"I don't know," she said, hesitatingly, and she stopped him short with a dull flush and a shifting of the eyes. "I wonder," she persisted, "if you ever saved a girl—against her self, the way George has saved me. 'Drop that line, right there!'" he commanded. "That isn't decent."

"I wasn't trying to be decent," she said, listlessly, "but that's as you like. Only I don't see why you should be so down on me marrying him."

"Then you don't read the papers. Good-bye, Trix; you're out of your head! Just about every other day there's some fool daughter of a rich man runs off with her father's chauffeur, and it always ends either in a shooting or in the divorce court. This is my fault, in a way. I was a fool to let you run with him the way you did when you first came. I didn't wake up till it was most too late. But I'm awake now, all right. There's no argument on George Burns. He's out!"

"Dad—" she began, but paused a moment to search her mind. She'd never been so deeply serious in her life, nor felt so compelling a need to dig out the truth. "Dad, I'm in love with George. I want him. I'm not silly about him any more. I was at first, like those girls in the papers. But I've learned a lot in these last six months—and I always did love more than you thought I did. I didn't want to fall in love with him. I was frightened about it. But I couldn't stop. So I don't see what else there is for me to do. If I married some body else, that I wasn't in love with, I don't know what I might do. And if I don't marry anybody—Dad, you must know how it is! I'm like you. I must be, because I'm not like mother or a bit. Dad, he's good! He's kind and he's square. He's never tried to take any advantage. He's believed in me—through everything. And he's seen enough, goodness knows! And if you'd be friendly to us and help him a little—He isn't a chauffeur now and he isn't ever going to be again."

She saw she was getting nowhere with this plea. Her father's face was set. "Good," he flared out. "He's too good for me; that's the only trouble. He's the best man I know, it's better than either of us."

"Like him?" she asked. "I didn't mean to spring this on you, but I guess it's time I did. I'm going to show up this bird. Go to the small middle drawer in my desk and bring me a plain sealed envelope you'll find there. Bring it in just as it is," he called after her when without a word she had gone on to the errand. She hated herself for being frightened, but there was no disguising the fact that she was. "Now, open it," he commanded when once more she stood before him. "Look and see what's inside."

It was a canceled check for a thousand dollars, made out to George Burns, and bearing her father's signature. "Turn it over and look at the endorsement," he added. "You know his handwriting, I guess."

She obeyed him mechanically. "What was that for?" she asked. "He managed to make her see that he was good and hard enough, but she set down quickly in the chair she had recently quitted."

"Doesn't the date tell you anything?" he asked. It was back in August. "Why, that's the day I fired him. This day he brought you home drunk. As you say, he'd seen enough." She repeated, word for word, her former question, this time with a peremptory emphasis. "What was this check for?"

It stung him to an outburst of anger. "Why, if you want it straight, it was the price he got for keeping his mouth shut and for letting you alone." "Blackmail?" she asked. "Call it that if you like. That was the understanding between us. He's weighed—half of it, it seems. Whether he has on the other or not I don't know. Anyhow, there's your bargain. And there's how much I love with you is. Less than a thousand dollars' worth."

"She felt herself strangled, drowning, and she beat her way frantically back to breathable air. 'I know you're a liar,' she gasped, and I believe you're lying about this.' Then, more to the purpose, as her intelligence came to the rescue, "If that's what he is, why did you recommend him for the air service? And why did you go down to see him off and wish him luck the day his mechanic told you about me?"

"The tenderness of her attack had won her a moment's breathing-space. She folded the check and tucked it into the bosom of her dress. "What are you doing with that?" he demanded.

"I'm going to show it to him tomorrow; see what his side of the story is. Maybe he's what you say he is. I don't know—about anybody, any more. But I want his own word for this."

With that she rose to leave him. He struggled to sit erect, but dropped back with an uncontrollable groan of anguish.

"Never mind about that," he told her. "But listen to this so there won't be any mistake about it. Back last April, some time, I asked you to come and be my daughter. I'd got along without you all right till then. I can get along without you now. And if you see that dog again, even if it's only to match his word against mine, I'm through. Perhaps you'd better not tell him so till after he's married to him. I mean it, Trix. That's a promise I won't break, anyhow."

"Oh, we're at the end, all right, whatever I do about George. We'd have come to smash about something. I suppose, if it hadn't been for him, we'd be too much alike; that's the trouble with us. Just a little more difference and we might have made it. I wish we had."

Now, she added roughly. "No use dragging out the agony any longer, is there?"

She left the room swiftly without waiting for a reply, but a few minutes later, clad in a big fur coat he had given her before they went North and with her purse in the pocket of it, she reappeared in his doorway. She could perfectly well have taken time to change and pack, but it was better drama like this, and she needed all the support she could get. The little tug in the downtown hotel made it easy.

"You don't mean you're going now?" her father cried. "Not at this time of night! Where could you go?"

She saw he didn't believe she meant it. "It isn't late," she said. "Not much after nine. And there are plenty of hotels. I've still got that good old original five hundred, you see. Most of it, I do mean it, Dad. I'm really going. It wouldn't do any good to wait till morning. It would only mean that we'd have another big fight—and they aren't good for you when you're like this."

When she went over to the side of the room where he was, moving warily as she approached the bed, and, bending down, rang his bell. "Some farewell orders to Anson," was all the explanation she vouchsafed.

When the man answered the summons, she said, "I'm going away, Anson. I'd like you to telephone Miss MacArthur. Tell her how things are, and say I want her to come here and take charge till father's round again. And I think you'd better telephone the doctor, too. He said Dad was to be quiet and we haven't been very well. Perhaps he'll be worse. That's all I guess."

Anson hesitated, expecting, perhaps, some contradictory word from his employer, but none came, and he turned to go. "Wait a minute, Trix called, and held out her hand to him. "Good-bye," she said, as he came back and took it. "You've been awfully nice to me, Anson."

"Good-bye, Miss Beatrice."

He bowed gravely, without the slightest change of manner, and went away to telephone. "That's the kind of person to be," she commented, as she turned, wet-eyed, to her father.

She wanted a breath and a gulp or two before she could be sure of any voice to go on with. "I'd kiss you good-bye," she said, with another laugh mostly sob, this time. "If I wasn't afraid you'd wring my neck if you got hold of me. Because I do love you. Dad, I guess I always will, whatever happens. I'm glad I came last April—and I'm sorry I've got to go away now."

"You don't have to," he asserted. "This is all your own doing. But she merely said good-bye and went out."

She took a taxi to the hotel, where she checked her hand-bag, with the idea of stopping there for the night, but telephoned to Mrs. Henderson. The rooms she'd looked at this afternoon were still vacant, she'd come down and occupy them tonight. She couldn't promise to rent them permanently until she'd shown them to her husband, but she'd pay for the night's lodging, anyhow. Mrs. Henderson was agreeable, and within another half-hour Beatrice was installed in what might become her home.

She fell asleep at once, having had since she'd awakened in the Minneapolis train that morning, a pretty full day. But later, in the dead of night, she found herself broad awake and unable for a few minutes to remember where she was. A high wind had sprung up and was banging the loose window-shades furiously. The bed was cold, and warm, down into an uncomfortable hollow.

The thought of sharing that bed with George Burns presented itself to her as fantastic—impossible. She must have been clean out of her head to have entertained it; to have come to wait for him in a place like this.

What sleep she managed to get during the rest of the night was troubled by dreams and half-awakings, and by morning she was pretty well washed out.

Is Winter Time Your Backache Time?

DOES every cold, chill or attack of grip leave you lame, aching and all worn out? Does your back throb and ache until it seems you just can't keep going another day? Do you know these troubles are often due to weakened kidneys?

Winter's colds and chills throw a heavy strain on the kidneys. The kidneys are apt to weaken and fall behind in filtering the blood. Poisons accumulate and upset blood and nerves.

Then comes constant backache, rheumatic pains, headache, dizziness and kidney irregularities.

Don't wait! Delay is often serious. Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Doan's have helped thousands. They are recommended by users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Good Folks:

Mrs. D. J. McMillan, 111 N. Mansfield St., Ironwood, Mich., says: "Backache bothered me a lot. Mornings I got up feeling stiff and sore across my kidneys and my back was weak all through the day. My kidneys were in an unhealthy condition all the time and caused anxiety. Doan's Pills drove all signs of kidney complaint away and I haven't had any trouble since."

John I. Lafay, 610 N. 10th St., Gladstone, Mich., says: "My back caused me a lot of suffering and mornings when I got up it was lame and sore. I couldn't straighten up from a cramped position. I couldn't sleep well at night and became so weak I could hardly work. My kidneys were unhealthy and caused me to get up three or four times at night. I used Doan's Pills and they fixed me up in first-class shape."

WHY SUFFER SO?

Why suffer from a bad back, from sharp, shooting twinges, headaches, dizziness and distressing urinary ills? Chelsea people recommend Doan's Pills. Ask your neighbor! Could you ask for stronger proof of merit? John Kelly, W. Middle St., Chelsea, says: "My work started my kidney trouble. The secretions which were highly colored and contained sediment passed irregularly and were painful in passage. I suffered from rheumatic pains in my back and got sore and stiff. Mornings I felt tired and it took an hour or so to get limbered up. I was often nervous and dizzy, especially when I stooped. I used different remedies but received no relief until I saw Doan's Pills advertised and tried some. Doan's completely relieved me." (Statement given March 1, 1913).

On April 27, 1920, Mr. Kelly said: "Doan's Pills are all right, and I gladly confirm the statement I gave some years ago." Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y. Adv.

"MASTERS OF MEN" COMING TO PRINCESS

A splendid cast has been afforded "Masters of Men," the great sea story by Morgan Robertson, which the Princess Theatre will show next Wednesday and Thursday, February 13 and 14, headed by Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis and Wanda Hawley. The story is striking, vivid pictorialization of life at sea with the background of a heart stirring love drama involving the four principal characters.

It is a picture of American youth and it is as fresh and wholesome as a breath of the sea upon which the action occurs. Dick Halpin, an orphan living in a small town, is falsely accused of a theft committed by the brother of the girl he loves. He accepts the blame in order to spare her humiliation, runs away and joins the United States Navy. While on shore leave Dick and Lieutenant Breen, his superior, are shanghaied and flung into the fore-castle of the "Mary Earl" commanded by one of the most brutal of old time sea masters. The boys fight their way out of their difficulties and manage to escape and rejoin their ship just as the Spanish fleet is coming out of the harbor of Santiago. Dick's heroism helps save the day.

Two phases of sea-life are realistically portrayed; the clean, wholesome conditions on board a United States battleship and the brutality and cruelty men suffered on board a sailing ship. Vitagraph has spared no expense in staging the ordinary seaman's days before the mast, and assisted by the United States Navy Department the producers have been enabled to show the most authentic scenes of naval life ever filmed.

SYLVAN

John Geddes of Chelsea visited Mr. and Mrs. Abner Spencer, Sunday.

Homer Boyd received word last week of the serious illness of E. H. Boyd of Chicago. He was a former resident of Chelsea.

The Consumers Power Co. have been repairing their lines and putting in new poles in this section. Mrs. Herbert Roy and children called on John Merker, Saturday.

Mrs. Eugene Smith of Cavanaugh Lake, reports that her father, George Phelps, is very poorly, and is falling. George Smith of Ann Arbor, was a week-end guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Smith, and accompanied his mother to Stockbridge on Monday.

The snow plow came through on Tuesday forenoon and cleaned the pavement.

CHARACTER NEED IN FICTION

Fewer Complexes and More Personalities Is Essential in American Scenes, Canby Says.

Character is essentially what the American scene has to offer the makers of literature—character, the essence of the novel (to which plot is only a convenience), the chief ingredient of all literature not lyrical or philosophic. The characters that have escaped description so far in the United States! I know a dozen which, properly interpreted, and transmogrified into art, would be worth all the realistic, erratic, erotic naturalism in a thousand book shops. Men and women are dying daily who would have made novelists' fortunes and been our delight. Can't we have fewer complexes masquerading as humans, less social conscience, not so many dusty, dirty details of suppressed lives and more people of blood, gristle, and passion? Can't we have more personality, self-sustained and convincing, which embraces all true motives and impulses, of being merely compounded of psychologists' terms? Can't we have men, women and children whose names we remember although we have known them only in a book? Russian literature will not give them to us, not at least our own brand, nor French, nor British. The job waits upon American writers. Perhaps in serene old age our younger generation will find the time to smile and do it.—Henry Seidel Canby, in Century.

HAPPY WOMEN

Plenty of Them in Chelsea, and Good Reason for It.

Wouldn't any woman be happy, after years of backache suffering, days of misery, nights of unrest, the distress of urinary troubles, when she finds freedom? Many readers will profit by the following:

Mrs. Sarah Rothbun, Madison St., Chelsea, says: "I have had a good opinion of Doan's Pills ever since they cured me of an attack of kidney trouble. My kidneys were weak and my bladder was affected. I felt tired and wasn't able to do any kind of work until I began using Doan's Pills but they cured me up in good shape."

Price 80c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Pills—the same that Mrs. Rothbun had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y. adv.

GROVE BROS. VARIETY STORE

The Store That's Different

GEORGE ELIOT wrote "As our thoughts follow close in the slow wake of the dawn, we are impressed with the unusual sameness of the human lot which never alters in the main headings of its history—labor and hunger, seed time and harvest, love and death."

It is entirely fitting that a profession should have developed to care for every detail that perplexes and disturbs the family when the end comes to one of its members.

There is a funeral director in your community who merits your confidence and who has dedicated his life to a sympathetic and efficient service to his fellow beings. He realizes fully the desire of people in time of sorrow to be relieved of all necessary details, and their further desire for a character and quality of service that will leave the family with the assurance that everything humanly possible was done for the departed.

LIMA RESIDENT ARRESTED AS PROHIBITION VIOLATOR

Hazen Gardiner of Seventh street, Ann Arbor, and Robert Morris of Lima were arrested Sunday and placed in the county jail awaiting arraignment on charges of violating the prohibition law. With these two arrests police and sheriff forces completed the most active week in their drive against alleged liquor law violators, having arrested four within the past seven days.

After the arrest of Gardiner, following a raid upon his residence Sunday afternoon, officers said they believed they had cut off one of the main sources of liquor supply in Ann Arbor.
