Increase Your Egg Profit!

Whether or not your hens lay regularly depends to a great extent upon yourself. As you know, most farmers recognize the fact that proper fertilization of land will greatly increase the yield. So it is with hens—a tonic and appetizer will cause what they eat to properly digest and they will in turn lay more eggs. Poultry men everywhere testify to the good results of using.

Dr. Hess Poultry Panacea has stood the greatest test—the test of time.

STORMY SESSION MARKS SPECIAL COUNCIL MEETING

Question of Sewer System For That Portion of South Main Street to be Paved in Spring Leaves Council "Up in Air"

Whether council should proceed with plans for a new sewerage system for the entire village, building only such sections as the village may be able to pay for, or whether the South Main street should be "sewerized" with the information already threshed out in a special meeting of the council body on Tuesday evening.

W. R. Drury, of the firm of Hoag, Decker, Shoecraft & Drury, of Ann Arbor, was present at the session and explained the advantages to be gained by "laying out" the entire village as for a complete system and then building only such sections as the proposed South Main street improvement so that when completed the whole would fit into one completed unit. Cost of making a survey and drawings of such a system was roughly estimated at between two and three hundred dollars, a sum of which council seemed reluctant to pay in view of statements that other similar surveys have been made and should be sufficient for the project being considered at the present time. Question as to the legal right of council to appropriate money for the making of the South Main street improvement caused the whole proposition to be tabled until determination of this right.

Under plans advanced by the state highway department for the paving of South Main street from the D. U. R. to M-17 this spring or summer, it will be necessary for the village of Chelsea to install sewers along the proposed route of the pavement before it is laid. Permission will not be given by the state to tear up any pavement for the laying of such sewers after it is completed, it is said, hence the desire of council to hasten preparations for building the drain. While it is not certain that the state will do the paving this

OSCAR SCHEITLER ELECTED GEN. MGR. OF NEW CONCERN

Former Chelsea Boy Resigns Position With Federal Motor Truck Co. and Enters New Field.

Oscar Scheitler, well known in this vicinity and graduate of the Chelsea high school, has resigned his position as auditor of the Federal Motor Truck Co. and been elected treasurer and general manager of a new corporation in Detroit. This company is preparing to place on the market, in a very large way, patented window hardware which can be used on standard sash and permits the washing of the outside of the window from the inside, and many other desirable features.

One of the principle ones of these is the ventilation by simply tilting the window which is equipped with this hardware. Perfect ventilation is afforded without any direct draft, which makes it very convenient for the sick room. Also, a full size screen can be installed on the window and there is no occasion to ever remove it for any purpose because the windows can be cleaned and removed from the frames from the inside.

Due to the construction of this hardware, which is solid brass, it is practically impossible for the window sash to stick under any weather conditions. It is possible to be fitted much tighter than an ordinary window sash and it is not subject to the variations of ordinary windows.

Mr. Scheitler extends an invitation to friends, when in Detroit, to visit him at the Flat Wash Window Company, 1036 Beaubien street.

ROAD COMMISSIONERS PURCHASE MORE LAND

Weston road commission have purchased 30 acres of ground about three-quarters of a mile south of Salem, 10 acres of which is gravel. The purchase price was announced as $5,000.

The commission secured an option on the land some time ago and funds were sunk to determine the quality of gravel. According to the reports, the gravel is of exceptional quality, more than meeting the state requirements for maintenance for which it will be used. It is not likely the gravel will be used for only the road in that section of the county.

According to the commission, there is enough gravel on this plot to furnish maintenance for many years.

WILL SOON START ROAD IMPROVEMENT

County Road Commission Will Build Part of Chelsea-Manchester Road During Present Year.

At recent meetings of the Board of County Road Commissioners they have discussed the subject of using during 1924 the Construction Fund now available on the road between Chelsea and Manchester. The Board of Supervisors last October appropriated $27,000 toward the construction of this road in addition to $10,000 which was asked by the Road Commission to be used in maintaining the road during 1924, also for making complete surveys and plans for the improvement of the road during 1925.

The survey party has been at work for some time between Manchester and Chelsea and just as soon as the plans can be completed for the northerly portion of the road the work will be advertised and a contract let. It will undoubtedly be the middle of the summer before actual work can be started but it is planned to expend all construction money available during the present season and complete the portion of the road to be put under contract so that it will be ready for traffic before next winter. The Commissioners have taken an option on one gravel pit from which they expect to get a part of the gravel for this section of the road and they plan on getting at least one more such gravel pit in the very near future.

It was because of the fact that the portion of the road needing construction first is the three or four miles nearest Chelsea that the Board of Road Commissioners recently passed a resolution authorizing the spending of the $27,000 on that section of the road.

MICHIGAN MUST GO WITHOUT ITS FIREWORKS

Fireworks of all description were placed under the ban Tuesday, making it illegal to use or sell fireworks containing explosives or combustibles. It also prohibits the use of toy pistols and cannons, cap guns and torpedoes. The only exception is in the case of fair associations and amusement parks which may be granted permits provided there is a competent operator to do the firing. The order was issued by Harry H. Jackson, Commissioner of public safety, and Homer Rutledge, state fire marshal, who gave as their reason that eight deaths and $300,000 worth of property damage resulted from the Fourth of July in 1923.

BOTH POLITICAL PARTIES MAKE TICKET ALTERATIONS

Withdrawal of Several Candidates During Past Week Results in Different Line-up for Ballots.

Withdrawal of original nominees on both the Independent and People's Party tickets during the last week has made substitution necessary in a number of cases and at the present time leaves the People's party with an incomplete line-up. On the Independent ticket withdrawal of A. G. Hindelang and Geo. Seitz, resulted in placing of Roy Harris and Henry Heschelwerdt on the list for trustees.

The People's party is without a candidate with the exception of committeemen, Howard E. Canfield, Geo. Walworth, Jacob Lehman, and Otto Hinderer having withdrawn, according to latest reports today. Whether these vacancies would be filled could not be learned today.

The two tickets are: Independent: President—Warren R. Daniels. Clerk—E. C. Maroney. Treasurer—Otto Hinderer. Assessor—John B. Cole. Trustees—Oscar Schneider, Roy Harris and Henry Heschelwerdt. Committeemen—L. P. Vogel, C. Lehman, and L. T. Freeman. People's:

President—No candidate. Clerk—No candidate. Treasurer—No candidate. Assessor—No candidate. Trustees—Jacob Hummel, Ellsworth Hoppe, and L. B. Lawrence. Party Committee—R. D. Walker, Henry H. Fenn, H. D. Witherell.

Buick Cushions Are Comfortable On All Roads

The cushions on Buick open cars are supported on double-deck springs. The upper springs, light and easy acting, smooth out slight road irregularities, while the larger and stronger lower springs absorb the bumps that cause the ordinary seat to "strike bottom". Two pads of curled hair between springs and French plaited upholstery give that final softness and assure the purchaser a cushion that will stand up.

Editorial

A TOO-GENERAL ATTITUDE

The test case brought against a New Jersey hotel by Hudson Maxim, famous inventor, to prove that the Volstead Act also forbids serving coffee and tea will have but one result: Mr. Maxim will be ridiculed by most intelligent people for his obvious motive, and the court will rule that by no stretch of sometimes elastic legal wording could coffee and tea come under the Congressional ban.

Mr. Maxim's attitude, that of the wilfully blind, the sullen and stubborn scuffer, is altogether too general. The Volstead Act is conceded, all over the world, to be the best if not the only method of drying up the country which obviously needs drying up. All it needs is enforcement, and it is getting more of that every day. Mr. Maxim is well known as a scientist, but his greatness has not included humanitarian reasoning. His silence for pistols brought him a fortune, but how much good has it done the world, and how many silent murders has it made possible? He is not a good man to argue for the cause of the wet. Almost anybody else would have made a much better spokesman. Few others would have brought such a silly suit in the first place.

When he and others of his ilk finally get it into their heads that any savage, knowing nothing of our traditions and tendencies and desires, but trained in the laws of logic and sociology and sympathetic humanitarian reasoning, would immediately vote any attempt to get rid of liquor as right and good, then perhaps we shall see the Volstead Act and its enforcers get the support they deserve.

ON TO THE POLE

The fight in Washington to keep the Shenandoah from making a trip to the North Pole when the ice is paired is amusing, because it brings out some interesting phases of human nature. It will cost some money—quite a bit. But possibly because it is a Navy proposal and not that of an influential constituent, Senators think it a wasted trip.

Perhaps the Shenandoah will not bring back so much as an "olive branch." Perhaps she may break down on the way. Yet to the layman—which means most of us who know little of dirigibles—she seems the very means of verifying the rumors of rich lands, mines, new islands, wondrous sources for northern Canada and the rest.

Besides being a first class way to test the stamina and usefulness of such a big craft, and to put an end to wild speculation of Arctic wealth, it will be a proper governmental project in that it will save private citizens a lot of money and will prevent any of Dr. Cook's disciples from trying to "hookwork" us again. It will not endanger life as much as a land or water journey, and even a government should appreciate the value of a dozen lives. Columbus discovered America in 1492. He left quite a bit for us to discover. We have been a long time about it. Why not finish the job?

THEY SERVE SILENTLY

Miss Esther Miller, a Philadelphia Supervisor of Nurses, emphatically denied a charge that girls become nurses to marry more easily. The woman who made the charge needed a nurse's treatment, we think.

More logic would assure one that no girl would work twelve hours a day at heavy and oft-times dirty work for four years on the faint chance that of her future patients, at least one would be an eligible and adoring youth. Any girl has a better chance outside, for quality and quantity of men. Such service requires a bigger urge than matrimony. It is the exception who weds at all, and a miracle if he be rich and young.

Like a number of other professions nursing is almost all giving and little getting, except for the real joy one always gets in helping others by hard work. Nurses are as near angels as humans ever become. One must indeed be hardened to slur their motives.

Pennsylvania physicians joined and hired a collector to gather in money which patients owed them. The collector wears a bright red uniform with brass buttons. We learn that debtors are swarming to pay their bills before the tell-tale uniform is seen at their door. What would happen here if this newspaper or any merchant were to adopt the same plan?

VANDERLIP SLIPPED

The mildest thing the newspapers said about Frank A. Vanderlip was that he talked too much. That isn't a small sin, by any means. It has hampered many a man and ostracized many a woman. Yet in reading the comments in newspapers which he condemned for not being as eager as he to spread vicious rumors, we verify our first opinion that the press is more fair than he.

Everybody, but he, knows that he did wrong in linking President Harding's newspaper sale with the oil scandal. Since he has been punished, that part can rest in peace. He has been reproached, satirized, and condemned for ignorance. Yet when he declared that he had been "misquoted" he showed a weaker trait that deserves special rebuke.

It isn't the first nor the last time that a man has aired his opinions regardless, had them brought home to him in the cold dawn of the morning after, and in panic tried to shift responsibility to the press which he had so infamously challenged. That is frequently done, and people generally accept that charge as they should—with a handful of salt. A newspaper, prepared with care and with the tremendous responsibility of performance, is trusted far more than hasty retractions of one who in the heat of passion and abandon of wild enthusiasm made statements which have a rebound. Speaker and listeners often forget the spoken word, but cold print brings folks to task as it makes permanent the voice of wisdom.

We have had a few examples of close-mouthed statesmanship in Washington, and almost without exception that trait has won our un-mixed admiration. Silence may indicate emptiness, but it generally betokens shrewd wisdom and dearly bought experience. Almost anybody can talk, and it isn't unusual for those who talk to say things worth while. Yet it is more remarkable, efficient and admirable to be able to keep silent and let that silence have more influence than an hour's hectic oration. We have had men who could do that. The other extreme is of the character of Mr. Vanderlip, whose millions and remaining years might well be utilized in learning the golden aspects of keeping still.

George H. Putnam, publisher, sees in literature the means of more friendly relations between England and America. The literature which does that will most likely become official drafts and bills of lading.

FOR POSTERITY'S SAKE

The New Jersey Assembly has passed a law requiring medical examination of all applying for marriage licenses and postponing the marriage of those afflicted with certain diseases.

Most states now have a question on the application blank, inquiring if either party has an obnoxious and contagious disease. Yet how can loving couples be expected to tell the truth if admission would forbid their union? The law will encourage truth telling, to put it mildly.

A cable from Constantinople tells us that Turkey has just made such a medical examination compulsory. Yet the harem could not have known any worse evils from the standpoint of diseased wedlock than we have here. Every State Health Department will furnish statistics showing how many babies are born blind or otherwise afflicted; how many women are made sterile or sufferers for life; how many men receive and spread disease. Politicians don't talk about such things much, and writers of fiction and happy-ending movies seem to forget that there are other things than love to consider in contemplating matrimony.

Every child has a Heaven-decreed right to normal birth. Some of them get proper care afterward. Yet as some parents are unfit for raising children it is a crime against society, the children, and themselves that they have children at all.

This is one phase of the so-called birth control in which sentiment and reason are quite agreed. Logic is all on the side of preventing venereal persons from marrying at all, just as it is emphatically on the side of purity in the first place. New Jersey, one of our foremost American states, and Turkey, one of the leaders of the old world, are working together for the benefit of mankind.

The tip of a jilted woman caused Michael Sonco, of Lancaster, Pa., to be killed by a bluecoat. The fury of a woman scorned is not a thing to be trifled with.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hart, of Delaware, is 93 but doesn't need glasses. You and I know others who will look natural in waskets. Science tells us tendency to eye trouble is inherited, but common sense screams louder, that we pay a big price when we aguse our eyes by wrong reading. Man ought by this time to know how to take care of himself.

KING TUT-ANKH-AMEN

Three thousand years ago lived an Egyptian King named Tut Ank-Amen. The name sounded like a stutter, so fellow Luxorites called him "Tut" for short.

When "Tut" reached the Dangerous age and finally succeeded in producing the "Staycomb" effect with his somewhat luxuriant he-up and died. Dying was one of the leading indoor sports then and "Tut's" death was a major-league event.

They proceeded to wrap him as per costume in a series of layers and finally deposited the remains in a tomb in the valley of departed Kings. Three thousand years later a party of anti-Volsteaders while looking for a fit spot for still development work dug up "Tut's" tomb with all the medieval relics buried with him. Then the advertising men stepped in and took charge and in a few weeks gave "Tut" a reputation which shades Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford in oblivion by comparison.

Dead three thousand years, forgotten, then "Bang" advertised and the whole world clamored for more news of "Tut."

If advertising can put that much life into something dead for three thousand years what will it do for a real live subject or product for a live business? Our Business, they might have dug up a hundred "Tuts" and if they had kept the news to themselves only a few Bookworms and Historians would have ever heard of it.

MORAL—You might have the best product in the world but unless you tell them about it, your Business will slumber peacefully to death and that is why I advertise to you people in Washtenaw County. I want you to know that I have a science that really and actually adjusts the cause of such troubles as Paralysis, Heart Trouble, Diabetes, High Blood Pressure, Tonsillitis, Pneumonia, Neuritis, Tuberculosis, Fevers, Mumps, Diphtheria and almost every other disease you ever heard of.

When you stop to think about it, wouldn't it be about the most suicidal business policy to spend real money to tell you these things if I couldn't make good on what they say?

The reason Packard, Wrigley and Victrola spend real money to advertise is because they have the best in the world in their line. So have I. I practice the most nearly perfect Health Method in the world for all diseases. Bar None.

Oat Smut Caused by Minute Plant

Enters Developing Kernels and Turns Them Into Powdery Masses.

Oat smut is caused by a very minute plant which lives parasitically within the tissues of the oat plant. It gains entrance in the seedling stage, about the time the plant is emerging from the soil. When once inside it grows upward through the tissues of the stem, giving little or no external evidence of its presence until the heads are produced. At this time it enters the developing kernels and destroys them by forming black powdery masses in their place.

Important Parasite.
The black powdery substance is found to be made of millions of small, spherical, dark bodies called "spores." Spores represent the reproductive phase of the parasite and are important in that they are the means by which the smut is spread. They are of very light weight and easily carried by air currents for long distances. They find lodgment upon, or underneath, the chaff of healthy grains and remain there until the grain is sown. Under favorable conditions the spores germinate soon after germination of the grain itself. They produce a tiny transparent infection thread which soon penetrates the young tissues of the growing seedling and thereafter keeps pace with the upward growth of the stalk.

Produce Dark Spores.
By the time the plants arrive at maturity the original infection threads have grown so extensively that they encase the characteristic large masses of dark spores. This simple life cycle of the smut fungus is completed but once during the growing season, and unless it is checked by means of effective seed treatment, may continue indefinitely in succeeding crops. Top-Dressing Alfalfa Is Proper Thing for Spring

The practice of top-dressing alfalfa with manure during the winter is not recommended by the Ohio experiment station. It frequently results in injury to the stand and is not a sure preventive of winterkilling. Top dressing in the spring with a moderate application of acid phosphate is to be preferred.

If from very late cutting in the fall or other cause the stand is too thin in the spring for a good crop, a full harvest of hay may be secured by drilling in oats in March or early April with a disc drill, at the rate of three or four pecks per acre. The mixture of oats and alfalfa will make a hay of good quality.

If an early variety of oats, such as Fulgum, Sixty Day, Emerson or Burt is sown, the mixture may be cut when the alfalfa is coming into bloom, and will make a hay of good quality. The second cutting will be almost pure alfalfa. A mixture of three pounds of timothy seed and two of alsike per acre may be seeded with the oats. This will gradually fill the spaces between the scattered alfalfa plants.

Breeding Cows and Sows Like Sweet Alfalfa Hay

The man who has some nice, sweet alfalfa hay stored away need not have much trouble with his breeding stock, if he will make liberal use of it. Cows fed on good alfalfa hay will drop strong calves. Sows will farrow strong, vigorous litters if they are fed plenty of alfalfa and oats or barley, and sparingly of corn. Breeding cows or sows should not run with nor be fed with the fattening stock. Some breeders allow their sows to run with the general drove up to within two or three weeks of farrowing time. It's a mistake, and small litters with cross mothers are the outcome.

Alfalfa hay is a good conditioner, and it's a good-bone builder; you can't find anything better, and the good, careful live stock feeder will see that his stock has plenty of it during the next two or three months.

Digging in Now to Help

There are many things that a farmer can just as well do now as to wait till summer time is here. Putting the farm tools in shape is one of the first of these. Doing this work now gives us time to get repairs and to do the repairing as it should be done. Another is getting the manure out of the yards and onto the fields. Draw it out as fast as it accumulates. This hauled the manure is of more value to the fields, keeps yards in better shape and next summer will be less of the fly nuisance about the premises. A third duty for the cold months is the putting of the fences in order. This will save much annoyance and waste of time by keeping the live stock in place.

Good as Rat Eradicator

One of the best rat eradicators is a combination of equal parts of carbide and powder of paris. In special amounts in the holes and ditches, about the barn buildings, and in and around the burrows themselves. It is superior to poison bait and the safest combination to use on the farm.

Diversified Farming Is Winning Friends

Find Stock Profitable Side Line in the West.

The effective farm plan in the West, the hog, and the hen have recently won many friends in a wheat-growing community of the West, Douglas county, Wash. This dry-land section had been planting wheat and buying most of its butter and eggs and using much canned milk and cream. For the last three or four years the county agricultural extension agent, leading farmers, and business men of the county have been endeavoring to bring about the gradual addition of enough live stock on the wheat farms to help feed the family and make a good contribution toward running expenses. Most of the Douglas county men have made the change in their farming systems by degrees, beginning with only a few animals, generally three or four cows, two brood sows, and about 50 chickens. As the growing of feed crops permits and skill in handling live stock develops, the flock and herds usually are built up to the amount of live stock the farm should carry.

How generally this diversified farming plan has been developed in the county is shown by the fact that instead of importing butter, eggs, and cream, as was the case three years ago, there was shipped out of the county during the year ending May 1, 1923, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture, a surplus of over 6,000 cases of eggs, 13,000 pounds of butter, and 40,000 gallons of cream. In addition, it is estimated that the amount of poultry and dairy products used in the county has more than doubled in the three years.

Plowing Up Barn Lots Is Beneficial to Animals

Hog raisers may accomplish two desirable results by plowing up the barn lots at least once a year. In the first place, hogs need good succulent pasture as much of the time as possible, and in the second place, they need protection against internal parasites, such as round worms, the eggs of which remain in the soil. Turning the soil in the lots helps to get rid of the pests and the crop of forage makes it a profitable operation, writes Jack L. Baker in the Indiana Farmer's Guide. In addition to providing cheap protein feed, pasture crops aid as a laxative and requires the hogs to take a certain amount of exercise which is necessary to breeding animals and growing pigs. Rye is probably the best crop to use for winter and spring pasture for hogs. By putting in successive plantings from two to four weeks apart it is possible to have fresh pasture all the time. Seeding for pasture should be much heavier than for grain crop; from three to four bushels per acre on a good soil is best. Pasturing can begin six weeks after seeding, and may be continued if the rye is not covered with snow, until the following April.

Cultivate Acquaintance With Trees in Woodlot

Cultivate an acquaintance with your trees. In nearly every planting of any age there is need for some thinning. Exercise your best judgment as to the most desirable trees to be left permanently, space them as uniformly as possible and remove the superfluous trees. Most towns have a large number of trees that should be removed in order that the remaining ones may be developed symmetrically, true to the best type of their species. Remember that isolated trees must protect themselves and the branches must shade the trunk. Sun scald is nearly always followed by an attack of borers and many trees are lost by improper pruning. An attempt to grow trees with too small trunks is likely to be fatal to many of them. The woodlot should be carefully inspected, leaving the trees that promise to be of the most value in coming years.

Composition of Kohl-rabi Very Much Like Mangels

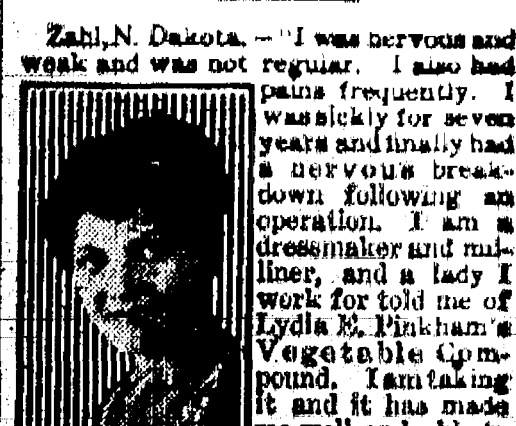

Kohl-rabi is very much of the same composition as mangels, but the dry matter content is lower, and since the yield is generally less than that of mangels the cost of nutrients in kohl-rabi will be higher. The value of the dry matter will be almost equal to that of grain in the ration, pound for pound, but there is so much water that it is impossible to feed enough of kohl-rabi to replace grain. On the whole, kohl-rabi should occupy the same place in the ration that is occupied by mangels or other roots. Where there is a choice between growing kohl-rabi for stock or growing mangels, other things being equal, the mangels will make the most feed.

It Is Necessary to Feed Sows Plenty of Protein

It is necessary to feed sows plenty of protein. The number of pigs born per sow is not the less a good indicator of the quality of the feed. A sow that produces a large litter of pigs is a good one, but a sow that produces a large litter of weak pigs is a poor one. A sow that produces a large litter of strong pigs is a good one. A sow that produces a large litter of weak pigs is a poor one. A sow that produces a large litter of strong pigs is a good one.

ALL WOMEN WHO WORK

Should Know how this Worker was Made Strong and Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Zahl, N. Dakota.—"I was nervous and weak and was not regular. I also had pains frequently. I was sickly for seven years and finally had a nervous breakdown following an operation. I am a housewife and milliner, and a lady I work for told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am taking it and it has made me well and able to do my work again. I have even helped take care of a sick neighbor recently, so you can see how fit I am. I highly praise your medicine and you may use my letter as you see fit. I hope it will help some other woman."—Mrs. O. M. NORD, Zahl, N. Dakota.

Over 121,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?" 98 per cent. of these replied answer "Yes."

This means that 98 out of every 100 women taking this medicine for ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it. For sale by all druggists.

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER COMPOUND

Horses and Mules can be kept on their feet and work if owners give "SPOHN'S" Distemper, Indigestion, Shipping Fever, Coughs and Colds. Cheapest and surest means of escaping these diseases. Occasional doses work wonders. Give "SPOHN'S" for Dog Distemper. Used for thirty years. 50 cents and $1.00 at drug stores.

Blood Stain Lasts Ages

How long will a blood stain last? A British scientist has discovered the fossil remains of a mammoth buried untold ages ago. The sand under the fossil was stained black and was cemented together with iron, forming a dark patch which did not extend far beyond the limits of the bone. He suggests that the stain was due to iron in blood which oozed out of the meat and bone of the defunct mammoth.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Denby Resigns From Cabinet and President Is Urged to Drop Daugherty.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BY SAID repeatedly that he would not resign from the cabinet. Monday of last week, to save the President and the Republican party further embarrassment, he tendered his resignation, effective March 10, and it was promptly accepted.

Attorney General Daugherty, more persistently attached even than Mr. Denby, declared he would not resign from the cabinet. The Republican party leaders in Washington sent Senators Lodge and Pepper to the White House with the message that it was the unanimous opinion of the Republican members of the senate that the President should get rid of Mr. Daugherty. The attorney general again said he would not resign, but at this writing it is believed he will do so, and within a few days.

Mr. Denby stepped out with a smile, and to the correspondents he repeated his defense of the wisdom of the oil reserve leases. In conclusion he said: "My own vindication and that of the Navy department will come with the proper ventilation of all questions connected with these leases in the impartial courts. As a private citizen if I have committed any offense against the law, I am still subject to action. I am able to fight my own battles, but I cannot fight slander protected by senatorial immunity. No more than I can more deeply deplore fraud or corruption in public or private life, and where such guilt is shown it should be rigorously punished."

"The President has stood up manfully for right and justice. The sportsmanlike thing for me to do is to relieve him of the further embarrassment of continued political maneuvering and partisan political trickery."

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Theodore Roosevelt retains his office. He was attacked in the senate by Senator Harrison of Mississippi and defended by Senator Moses. Mr. Denby's successor has not yet been named.

Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, author of the resolution for an inquiry into the conduct of the attorney general and the Department of Justice, led the assault on Mr. Daugherty, whom he charged with protecting instead of prosecuting crime and criminals. He asserted that offenders had purchased impunity by payment of large sums to Thomas B. Felder, the attorney general's associate in the Merse pardon case, and to Jesse Smith. Mr. Daugherty's confidential aide, who committed suicide last year under mysterious circumstances, leaving the attorney general a legacy of $25,000. Senator Wheeler raised the question of whether the attorney general received a share of such payments and declared that if he had not "he is a bigger fool than the people of the United States give him credit for being."

Mr. Daugherty denied Mr. Wheeler's charges specifically and generally, and said that, though he had been excoriated in one inquiry, he was quite ready to undergo another. He then sent a letter to Special Prosecutors Pomeroy and Roberts, placing at their disposal the machinery of the Department of Justice. The senate had confirmed the nomination of Mr. Roberts by a vote of 68 to 8.

THROUGH the senate investigating committee held no public hearings during the week, it was busy looking into the alleged "million-dollar slush fund" and fifth preparations to bring to light stock transactions connected with the oil leases. There was a lot of "sneaky talk" circulating and various prominent men were mentioned. Mr. Daugherty finally admitted that he had bought and sold stocks, as he had been doing for years, and Senator David McKim of West Virginia issued a statement saying he had bought Sinclair oil stocks, but "without any knowledge with respect to the oil lease." Harry Francis received from Europe and is expected to be called before the committee this week, as are Harry Payne Whitney and E. B. McLean.

WHAT has been neatly termed the process of "candling" William G. McAdoo was carried out according to program by the conference of his leading supporters in Chicago, and he was declared to be a good egg. In other words, he was told that his availability as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the presidency was not lessened by the fact that he had been in the employ of Edward Doheny and that he must continue his campaign. There was no doubt at any time as to the decision the conference would reach. If there had been it would have been dissipated by a telegram from Senator Walsh of Montana, chairman of the senate investigating committee, endorsing McAdoo and his candidacy in unreserved terms. Republicans noted with amusement that this message was sent to the Montana representative in the conference, who happened to be Thomas Arthur, a stockholder and employee of the Continental Oil company and formerly in charge of a legislative oil lobby in Montana.

Mr. McAdoo of course accepted the mandate of his followers and then made a long speech in which he not only explained his Doheny fees but told what he proposes to do when he becomes President—if ever.

James M. Cox of Ohio, Democratic candidate for the presidency in 1920, is willing to try again. Having been informed that his Ohio friends wish to present his name to the convention in New York, he has given his consent.

IT BEGINS to look as if the taxpayer would get no relief from congress this session, despite the fact that all its members agree with him that there should be a reduction. Of course, he doesn't get it, partisan politics will be to blame. Last week the lower house, sitting as committee of the whole, approved by a vote of 222 to 160 the Garner amendment to the tax bill embodying the Democratic surtax and normal tax rates and increased personal exemption. Voting with the 203 Democrats were 17 insurgent Republicans, one independent and one Farmer-Labor member. The Mellon plan was rejected by a vote of 152 to 244. All efforts of Representative Longworth and other Republican leaders to arrange a compromise that would suit their recalcitrant fellow Republicans failed.

The Garner plan provides: Normal taxes of 2 per cent on incomes below $5,000; 4 per cent on incomes between $5,000 and $8,000; 6 per cent on incomes exceeding $8,000. A graduated surtax scale, beginning at 1 per cent on incomes between $12,000 and $14,000 up to a maximum of 44 per cent on incomes exceeding $92,000.

Exemptions of $2,000 for single persons and $3,000 for heads of families. Many economists and financial experts have held that this plan is not comparable to that proposed by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon. Since President Coolidge already has publicly declared that it is "impossible in practice," it is fair to assume that, if the bill gets through congress as now framed by the coalition, it will be vetoed by the Chief Executive. The Republicans assert that the entire Garner plan would mean an annual deficit of $300,000,000 after the law is in full operation.

SECRETARY HUGHES is trying to guide the house toward the adoption of an immigration bill that will not be likely to involve the State department and its agents abroad in troubles. He already had told why the proposed Johnson measure is objectionable to Japan and last week he called the attention of the immigration committee to the protests of Italy and Rumania against the plan to make the 1930 census figures the basis for quota restrictions. Chairman Johnson read the Rumanian protest on the floor of the house. It said adoption of the 1930 census as a restrictive basis would "deeply wound the pride of the Rumanian people" and "strongly affect their material interests."

"These impudent Rumanians" received from foreign governments "large sums of money" at the expense of the American people will have the result soon," he said, "I hope, of insuring enactment of really restrictive immigration legislation."

Pontiac—The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, will be beneficiary of the entire estate of $41,000 left by Peter Hanes, Farmington township resident, whose will has been filed in probate.

Pontiac—The Oakland County Pioneer and Historical Society celebrated its 50th anniversary. Residents of Farmington township had charge of the program in commemoration of the settling of that township 100 years ago this year.

Pontiac—Robert W. Warren, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry L. Warren, has received an appointment to West Point military academy, and has been ordered to report to Columbia barracks March 4 for examination. He has been a Boy Scout for many years.

Battle Creek—Transfer to the city of Battle Creek, of two unsurveyed islands in the Kalamazoo river, has been asked of the government by Representative Arthur Williams. The two islands are within the corporate limits of the city, and all rights and ownership were requested for public use.

Grand Rapids—The new automobile rates which became effective recently, show a decrease of 20 per cent in cost of liability insurance in Grand Rapids, according to safety Director James Sinks, who says he has been informed that reduction of deaths and injuries during 1933 was held a contributing factor in the change.

Lansing—The State Highway Department will make strenuous efforts this summer to control the dust clouds that follow traffic along the gravelled country roads, and will for that purpose, receive bids on 7,600 tons of calcium chloride, 150,000 gallons of light oil and 3,500,000 gallons of various surfacing materials.

Kalamazoo—Two of the oldest residents of Kalamazoo County died recently. Edward P. Titus, 95 years old, one of the best known builders of Kalamazoo in pioneer and later days, and Mrs. William H. Morgan, 85 years old, who last December celebrated with her husband the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding.

Ann Arbor—The University of Michigan ranks second in the list of leading universities of the United States in enrollment in the liberal arts department, according to statistics just compiled. The University of California, with the southern branch included, leads the list with 5,815. Michigan's total is given as 4,805.

Alpena—Owing to the great depth of snow in woods and swamps, wild deer have lost their footing places. Various hunting clubs of this section are straining to get in the accustomed feeding places. At this time of the year, the deer are so tame they come to lumber camps and are fed on the ground around the camps.

Ann Arbor—June 13 has been set by the alumni association of the University of Michigan, as reunion day for this year. Sixteen classes will return for reunions under the Dix plan, which brings each class back at three or four-year intervals. Included in the classes expected this year are '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, JUNIOR LEAGUE PARTY

Forty-two Junior Leaguers celebrated Washington's birthday with a sleigh ride and coasting party—the boys under the care of Mr. Steiner and the girls chaperoned by Miss Knapp.

At 9:30 everyone returned to the church for "eats" which the mothers had so cheerfully furnished. The tables fairly groaned with the good things they sent, but they soon disappeared even to the last sandwich—a few things being reserved for the waiters.

The dining room was prettily decorated in red, white and blue. Washington stories were to follow the supper but the fresh air, followed by the big supper and the warm fire proved too much, it seems, as only three were able to respond. Songs and yells followed, Mr. Benton, who furnished the sleighs and horses, being the hero of the hour.

The next big event on the Junior League calendar is the banquet on April 25, to which all the mothers and fathers will be invited.

When One Feels That Way.
When a man feels the rejuvenation of a friend succored by his own heart, he is easily inclined into resentment. Doctor Johnson.

His Training.
The Farmer—"Not a brain cell working in you! Where did you learn farming?" The New Hired Man—"Me? Why, I've studied every old homestead and back to the farm play that's been screened."

BREVITIES.

Jackson.—The jurors for the March term of the Jackson County circuit court have been drawn and among the forty names eight of them are women.

Dexter.—John Thompson, editor and publisher of the Dexter Leader, has been confined to his home for the past week with a severe attack of tonsillitis.

Stockbridge.—Frank Gergenski, Dan Hartwick, James Hendy and Arthur Jeff, were notified to appear in Mason Monday and explain why they were hunting rabbits out of season. They paid fines of $20.50 each.—Brief Sun.

Ann Arbor.—Deputy Sheriff John Osborn and Ira Fisher arrested Jack Frazier negro, at the state cement plant near Chelsea Thursday on a warrant issued by his wife Mary Frazier, charging him with assault and battery. He was brought to the county jail.

Grass Lake.—At the county meeting of the Legion and Auxiliary in Jackson Wednesday, Mrs. J. Fred Rohrer and Mrs. C. B. Wilcox were elected to serve on the refreshment committee. Miss Zita Foster was elected treasurer and Floyd Allen was made a member of the entertainment committee.—News.

Ann Arbor.—Deputy Sheriff Ira Fisher and John Osborn arrested J. P. Fleming, 130 Chittick Ave., Jackson automobile dealer, late Thursday afternoon about five miles west of Ann Arbor on M-17 on a charge of speeding. According to the officers he was traveling from 46 to 48 miles per hour.

Saline.—Some smart aleck spent a part of Wednesday night driving his car on the sidewalks in the business district. Fortunately no damage resulted, but that is a result of good fortune rather than any intent of the culprit who so far forgot himself as to indulge in a rather precarious pastime.—Observer.

Ypsilanti.—Richard Elliott, deputy sheriff at Ypsilanti, left late Thursday from Detroit for Atlanta, Ga., to assist in taking prisoners to the federal prison there. A large number were taken to the prison on this trip, mostly for violations of the prohibition laws, and the federal officers in Detroit found it necessary to ask for outside officers to assist them.

Manchester.—It has been the custom with most farmers when they decide to kill one of their hogs and have the meat for family use, to truck the hog to town and have one of our market men butcher and dress it, cut it up and make the sausage. We learn that the custom has changed somewhat and some farmers are doing their own butchering, same as their father used to do in the "good old pioneer days."—Enterprise.

Howell.—Sunday night during the evening service unknown parties, strangers they must have been, entered the Baptist parsonage close beside the church and took Rev. W. H. Ambrose's overcoat, also ransacked the house taking some change belonging to the daughter and some jewelry. The next day a discarded overcoat was found in a freight car on the Ann Arbor tracks, the thief evidently liked the preacher's coat better.—Republican.

Saline.—The work on the concrete bridge east of Saline is now at a standstill on account of cold weather. Also, there seems to be some question as to the position of the east side of the bridge. The state engineers were out recently and took another survey and declared that the east abutment is out of place one way over a foot, and some inches the other. It appears now that the abutment forms on the east side will have to be torn down and moved to the correct position. If this is the case the people on Michigan avenue will have to wait just that much longer for their pavement, for the latter cannot be laid until the grades are determined from the bridge both ways.—Observer.

Millan.—The Noble department store at Azalia was held up and robbed about three o'clock Wednesday afternoon. The robbers got away with something over a hundred and fifty dollars in cash. Several people were in the store when an Essex Coach, with the rear window broken out, stopped in front of the store. Three men stepped into the store while one remained in the car, keeping the engine running. The customers and proprietor were told to throw up their hands. Thinking it a good joke, Charles Barnes, who was in the store, refused. One of the men hit the aged gentleman over the head with the butt of a revolver. Mr. Barnes was unconscious for a short time, but was able to go home alone in a little while. The men were not masked and from a description given by Mr. Noble, the leader of the gang appeared to be about thirty-five. The other two were about twenty-two and twenty-eight. The robbers made no attempt to rob the safe used for government funds. The Azalia post-office is located in the Noble store.—Leader.

OBITUARY

The following obituary is taken from an Owosso paper, and will be of interest to many friends here who made the acquaintance of Mrs. Converse while a resident at the Home.

Mrs. Lewis Converse died in Chelsea, Michigan, at the Methodist Home, Tuesday afternoon, January 29, at 3:15, in her 88th year.

Deceased had been a great sufferer for the past eight months and everything that loving hearts and kind hands could do, was done to the very last by her only daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Randall, ably assisted by every member of the Home, all warm personal friends. Two weeks before the death of the patient, Mrs. Randall was summoned to her bedside, where she remained a watchful attendant and a faithful daughter to the end.

For over 30 years the deceased was a most worthy and a highly respected resident of our village, and a member of the M. E. church. Always ready to help the needy, and being possessed of a cheerful and happy disposition, she made faithful friends wherever she went.

All the friends at the Home were loving and kind to the sufferer, and did everything in their power to relieve her sufferings, which were borne most patiently to the end, and the only prayer uttered by the sick one was "That she might be patient and uncomplaining to the end" and so she was.

Deceased was born in Southfield in 1836, and experienced religion at Pontiac many years ago under the teaching of Rev. Seth Reed, now of Flint, a Methodist minister over 100 years of age. Funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Risley of Chelsea, and Rev. Julian T. West of this place.

She leaves to mourn her death, many friends wherever she has lived, and children, Mrs. Elizabeth Randall of this village, and two sons, E. B. Converse of Pontiac, and Benjamin L. Converse of Owosso.

The floral offerings were numerous and very beautiful. The Home folks at Chelsea, the Masonic Lodge at Owosso and the Ladies' Relief Corps of Owosso sending large and appropriate floral condolences, besides many other personal remembrances.

There will also be a representative from the Dairy Department to make the meeting complete.—Dispatch.

Romance of Whaling Days Revived in "Down to the Sea in Ships"

Marguerite Courtot

Clara Bow

Raymond McKee

Top center: Whaling crew attacked by wounded monster, just before being capsized. (Note tall of whale under boat.) Left: Attacking party rescued by shipmates after small boat smashed to splinters. Right: Ready to hurl the harpoon.

At the Princess Theatre, Wed. and Thurs. March 5 and 6.

SCREEN SENSATION AT THE PRINCESS THEATRE

One of the biggest and most sensational thrills ever recorded by a motion picture camera can be found in Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships" the feature attraction at the Princess Theatre, next Wednesday and Thursday, March 5 and 6.

This scene shows where Raymond McKee, who plays the leading male role in this production, harpoons a whale, and later the wounded and angry monster of the deep turns upon the small boat and catapults the occupants into the water, smashing the boat to kindling.

When Mr. Clifton decided on paying a last tribute to the now almost forgotten whaling industry, by filming the actual harpooning of a whale he planned to photograph the real stuff. As a result Mr. McKee was forced to sign ship's papers and enlist upon a regular whaler.

This particular scene, it is said, shows the small boat being towed to express train speed through the water by the angry whale. It then shows the whale make a turn and charge the boat. Critics and experts have said, wherever this production has been shown, that this thrill is one of the biggest sensations ever seen upon the screen. It plainly shows Raymond McKee risking life and limb in the taking of these realistic scenes.

The management of the Princess Theatre feels confident that the motion picture public will find this scene truthful in every detail, and recommends "Down to the Sea in Ships" as one of the best and most interesting photoplays of the year.

ONLY a few generations ago the barber with his limited knowledge and skill was the community surgeon. Today surgery is a very highly specialized and respected profession.

As in the medical profession so in another calling, one who does not often think about or appreciate, the progress is similarly striking. The service of the modern funeral director is founded on a large fund of scientific knowledge. It is backed up with facilities that provide for every possible requirement and take the place when desired of hospital, church and home.

It is a service that knows no eight hour day or any social or financial distinction, that places no limitations on what you may wish, that serves you this very day, through its complete preparedness.

Among those of district No. 2, Sylvan, who were neither absent nor tardy during the month of February were: Fern Fauser, Ardea and Dale Loveland and Victor Winter. Dale Loveland was not absent or tardy for the winter term. Elma Walz, teacher.

Most attractive in every detail was the George Washington party given by Mrs. O. J. Walworth and Mrs. D. C. McLaren at the home of the latter on Friday evening. Miss Hall's reading, miniature cherry trees and the refreshments emphasized the episode of the cherry tree and the hatchet. Many beautiful baskets of daffodils were used about the rooms. Seven tables of "500" were in play.

The Methodist church parsonage at Whitmore Lake was burned to the ground about 10 o'clock Sunday morning. The pastor of the church, Rev. A. B. Rice, was conducting services when the blaze was discovered.

Mrs. Rice and infant child were removed from the dwelling by the near neighbors. The loss on the parsonage and contents is placed at $7,000, partly covered by insurance. The church board at a meeting following the fire decided to rebuild the parsonage at once.

Miss Georgia Smith was pleasantly surprised on last Friday evening when Mesdames W. C. and C. W. Smith entertained the honored guest and nineteen of her friends at the pleasant country home of the latter east of Grass Lake. The occasion was in observance of the birthday anniversary of Miss Smith. Decorations in pink and white were profusely evidenced about the home and refreshments were served during the evening. Music, games and dancing made up a delightful program of entertainment which was enjoyed by guests from Chelsea and Grass Lake.

Elmer Clifton's

"DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS"

The Supreme Thrill of Motion Picture History!

A FRAIL boat and its six occupants towed at express-train speed toward three-thousand miles of open water, through a sea lashed into foam by a maddened whale.

A sudden turn, a shout, "Look out, he's heading for us!" The oars are splintered along one side of the whaleboat; before the startled crew can back-water, the monster of the deep is upon them!

A flip of its death-dealing "flukes," and both craft and its occupants are tossed high in the air. The boat falls back into the sea a battered wreck, its crew floundering about in shark-infested waters.

Such is the climax of the most astounding piece of realism ever photographed—a motion picture made in the broad reaches of mid-Atlantic, with a 90-ton sperm whale as the principal actor, and the hand of chance directing as fierce a battle between man and animal as the long history of whaling has ever known.

SEE IT AND YOU WILL AGREE THAT IT IS THE MOST ASTOUNDING SENSATION OF THE CENTURY!

"That's what I'm down here on," said Joe, "but the trouble with me is that I don't know my way about. I've been getting an idea the last day or two that these different people I've been talking to are in cahoots."

John stared at him. "Great Scott, man!" he said. "Of course they are. Most of the industries that are administered from New York are pretty well tied together inside themselves. But the fact is—"

"Well, I don't know anything about that," Joe grumbled. "That's out of my head. It looked like a perfectly straight merchandise proposition to me. I had something good that they wanted. But this inside stuff—"

Look here, Williamson, I don't see why this shouldn't be put up to you. Why don't you stay on for two or three days—and earn your dividend?" He managed to throw in a smile with this, but it didn't take off much of the edge of his words. "You can play this pussfoot game. You know all the inside stuff."

"I'm afraid I can't take it on," John said. "I've got to be home Monday morning for an important meeting."

The tightness combined with the finality of his tone stung Joe to a flare of temper. "Look here, Williamson," he said, leaning suddenly forward, half across the table, "this is serious. We've got thirty million pounds of that stuff coming in—three million to buy at an agreed price. We're beginning to come in now. We've got to sell it or we're swamped."

John moved his chair a few inches back from the table and leaned back in it. "Do you mean to say," he asked, "that you've committed your self as deep as that without having made any arrangement whatever in advance for turning the stuff over or for carrying it? You're in a very serious position if that's the case."

"You've known that that was the case from the beginning," Joe said. He was as quiet now as John, and very alert. "You made no criticism of that plan at the April meeting."

"I certainly assumed that your program involved taking care of your commitments," John assured him, steadily. "After a moment he went on. 'Times have changed a lot since April. That was the end of a boom. This thing that's on now is the beginning of a panic. I think. That's the general expectation here in New York, anyhow. I very much doubt if you can sell that flax here before the first of the year—and not then unless times change for the better.'"

"Well, if you are right about that," Joe said, after a thoughtful silence, "why, it takes us over into your department."

"My department?"

"I mean we'll have to be carried. Up to now I've carried my end of the load. I've made thirty million pounds of raw linen out of stuff that farmers were burning in the fields. There it is. It's good, useful stuff. It's got value. There's no argument about that. And now I say it's your turn. That's plain enough, isn't it? We're all in the same boat."

"What's your position?" John answered mildly. "Of course we'll have to take some action on it. It's much too important a matter for me to deal with offhand. Come up to my office, say Wednesday afternoon—oh, about four o'clock—and we'll have something in the way of a program to offer. I've got to run along. I'm taking the Century this afternoon. You aren't taking that train, are you?"

Joe shook his head. "Waiting over till Monday, I think," he said. "All right, Wednesday afternoon at four, then."

Joe went back to his hotel, a modest little one in the upper Twenties, withdrew to his own room, where already he had passed the morning, drank the whisky he needed, telegraphed his address to Jennie MacArthur, and said she could look for him Tuesday, and then spent most of the afternoon writing a letter to Violet.

It was the only hint he could apply to the burning pain of his disappointment. The letter began stiffly—it was his first love-letter he had ever written to Violet, or to any woman for that matter—but after the first few sentences he ceased to be conscious of it as a thing that must go through the post office in an envelope, to be read at Lake Forest on Monday morning along with the rest of Violet's mail. It became a simple, unmediated revelation of a collected mass of emotions which had been wound up by waiting for the breaking point. He reproached her with being spoiled, his plan for not coming to New York, and then approached her with having, perhaps, spoiled her by not having come to Chicago. He told her crudely how he wanted her and how unbecomingly too hard the waiting had become. He didn't want her by ceremony and bliss. John Williamson's leaving. He might come to Chicago early in the week, or he might not, but in no case would he come to her until she sent for him. She must know her mind by now—

There were sheets and sheets of this. The utter recklessness of dispatching a missive of this sort to a woman who was living upon any sort of terms with her husband, was apparent enough to him, but it suited his mood. He gathered the scrawled and blotted sheets into an envelope, addressed and stamped it, took it out, and dropped it down the chute by the elevator. Then he came back into his room, lay down on the bed, dressed as he was, and almost at once fell deeply asleep.

He was awakened several hours later by a pounding on his door, and when he opened it and angrily demanded what the devil the row was about, he was told by an obviously relieved bellboy that Chicago was trying to get him on the telephone. They had rung his bell several times without rousing him. He made out that it was Jennie MacArthur who was calling him. She was talking about some stock. Had he been selling any?

"Stock in what?" he asked.

"Stock in the Greer company, Joe," she told him. "Have you been selling any of yours?"

"He told her she must be crazy to ask him a thing like that. Of course he hadn't. What had put such an idea into her head?"

"Well, there's a lot of it for sale," she told him. "Up in Fargo and other places. There's a lot of it sold already. I guess. It's the other crowd that's selling it, then."

He asked her angrily what other crowd she meant.

"I'll write you all I know about it tonight," she told him, in a rather odd-sounding voice. "I'll send it special delivery so you'll get it the first thing Monday morning." He told her this would be all right, he guessed, and at that she hung up. He understood and went back to bed.

His memory of this incident when he awakened Sunday morning was, oddly enough, perfectly clear. And of course now that his mind was working again, the inference from what she had told him was clear too. For a long time he lay contemplating it, and other matters, too, in a sort of crystalline detachment.

Williamson and Corbett and Crawford had sold out—stood from under. They had sold their stock right up there in the flax country, too. Under his own nose. But why had they done it? They were playing him for a fool, wasn't he? He had been quite unaccountably a fool—for months, blindly unaware of what was going on about him. Williamson had started back to Chicago under the satisfied conviction that he had been a fool.

He didn't waste much time trying to forecast the terms of the offer they would have ready for him Wednesday afternoon. The broad outline of the situation was plain enough. In default of selling his flax, he would have to borrow the money to pay for it, and as the price of finding the money for him they would exact their pound of flesh; namely, his share in the enterprise which his imagination had conceived and his energy made real. What particular form of boresomely they resorted to didn't matter.

Well, he was broad awake now. Certainly he would need all his wits to meet this next week. No good waiting time going to Chicago to listen to the terms of the bargain they'd propose to him. He'd tell Jennie to go to the meeting.

He wanted a drink. That was the first thing. He went over to the bag. There stood the bottle, but it was empty. Queer! It had been practically full when he had opened it on coming in from his lunch with Williamson, and he hadn't been out of the room except to walk down the corridor to mail that letter to Violet.

The contents of that letter, forgotten until now, began coming back into his mind as he stood staring at the discarded desk and the empty whisky bottle.

He had been drunk when he wrote that letter. No getting away from that. He had been drunk, too, when Jennie telephoned, and she had known it. That letter to Violet! What could he do about it? It was too late to risk the comparative publicity of a telegram. Williamson himself would be home before it arrived. Then the fact would be in the air. He needed a drink. He would be able to think after he had had a drink.

He was on the way to the belt to summon the bell, who provided him with liquor, when he stopped short, turned back, and lay down again upon the bed, staring at the ceiling with sweat.

His whole body was crying out for the drink he wanted. But the thing that frightened him was the realization, brought home at last, that this was what had been the matter with him for months. In a way, he had known it all along. His shame over the habit gave him away; his careful concealment from his associates of the amount of whisky it took to see him through the day.

He got up and took the empty bottle and the glass into the bathroom, washed them out thoroughly, and then washed his hands. The only way to quit was to quit.

There had been nothing in Joe's experience that was comparable with the tortures of the ensuing week.

He was starving for food was something he could hardly bring himself to touch; he was consumed by what seemed like thirst, except that no drink he would take could satisfy it; he was dragged down by a heavy lassitude, his nervous irritability was that of a man excoriated; he was utterly and terribly alone. Worst of all was the obsession that one drink, even a small drink, of whisky would make him instantly himself again. He asserted to himself that this was a lie; that at the worst he was a better man than the money-witted fool he had been for the past six months; but this was an assertion that he had constantly to make anew.

The only thing that supported him was the other fight he was engaged in, the fight to keep himself and the enterprise which he had made a part of himself out of the waiting clutches of John Williamson and his friends.

Jennie's letter when it came on Monday morning made it clear that they must have been waiting and ready for a good while. There was no doubt in Jennie's mind, nor in Joe's, that the other crowd were completely un-loaded.

Joe got her at once on the telephone and told her that he was going to keep on trying to market the flax in New York. He was going after a new lot of people. Jennie said to go to the meeting and receive their terms, and transmit them to him. Also she was to avoid saying anything about his plans or present whereabouts. He ended the conversation by telling her that she wasn't to feel discouraged. He believed he was going to win out yet.

He had begun, as he told Jennie he meant to do, with a new crowd, none of them as big as the men in the flax country, but on Friday, when he had talked to a dozen of them together at a prearranged lunch, this awakened sensitiveness of his told him the tide had turned against him. He tried to shout this instant down, but he knew he was beaten.

He went back to the hotel, and there found Jennie's letter containing in full the terms offered by Williamson, Corbett and Crawford. The mental effort involved in reading the letter was an agony in itself. In the broad outline, however, it was simple enough. The first move had been on Monday morning, when the three of them formally tendered their resignations as directors in the Greer company, the resignation being offered in each case that they were no longer stockholders in the company. They now proposed to organize a new corporation which would enter into a five-year contract with the Greer company to buy the entire output of raw flax which the Greer company was committed to buy from the subsidiaries, at the price which the Greer company had paid the subsidiaries plus a broker's commission of one-eighth of one per cent. The Greer company was given thirty days in which to accept this offer.

Joe grinned savagely over the news of the thing. He was to be left undisturbed in control of the Greer company. The Greer company was to be saved from bankruptcy, allowed to collect its meager royalties, if it could.

It was from Jennie. He had hardly the heart to open it. But the woman's name which was signed to it was not Jennie's. It read:

Arriving Pennsylvania a train, I received your morning note. I was away for five hours only.—Violet.

He was still incredulous when he saw her walking toward him, down the platform. He had expected to find at the same time with a sense of great adventure, as he could see she was, she had once more the look of a schoolgirl to him. Not merely that; she looked to him like a frightened, sleepless creature, like a probationary angel come down to change the whole face of the world.

Her face brightened joyously when she saw him, then in an instant composed itself into the look of amiable indifference appropriate to being met in the station by a man whom her husband might have requested to look after his wife.

He took her dressing-case from the red-cap, tipped the boy, and said to her, "You're just about got it. To make the other train. We'll go around this way."

With a demure gleam of mischief which made him want to kiss her where she stood, she accepted this contentedly, as a maneuver for getting away at once, out of the Chicago crowd that was pouring along the platform.

"I don't care where we go," she said, when they had changed levels and were walking down a transverse corridor, "only I must be back here in the station at six o'clock. That's when I am supposed to be getting in from Chicago."

"That'll be all right," he assured her. "I'll get you back here on time. You can leave it all to me." For an instant the sense of the fortiveness of their escapade elated him. He gave a short laugh, and his arm inside her, and pressed it against his body. She returned the pressure, but at once, with a nervous glance around, released herself. "If we're going where we can really be alone for a while," she said, "there's no good taking chances here."

She hesitated a moment in clear surprise when she found him showing a pair of tickets and taking her through the gate to one of the Long Island railway trains, but she asked no explanation, and he made none until they were seated in an almost empty coach.

"This is a little branch line," he said. "It goes down to one of the beaches where there's nobody about, this time of year. I found it when I was wandering around, just a week ago today. Had it all to myself, including a little hotel that a fat man is keeping open because he hasn't anywhere else to go. We can get lunch there, I guess. It was only last Sunday I was there," he added, "but it seems like the longest year I've ever lived."

She had stripped off one of her gloves and peeled her bare hand into his, upon the seat between them. At this confession, though she misunderstood it, she darted a glance around, and perceiving that there was no one else in their part of the car—not even a brakeman—she raised her hand and stroked the back of it with her lips. "Poor old Joe," she whispered.

He had a blissful hour before they left the train at the little way-station he had picked out, despite the rattles of the windows, the slamming of the doors, the sudden stops and starts, and the bawling of the brakemen, which kept beating a dreadful tattoo upon his drawn nerves.

She was looking around pretty dubiously, he saw, at the surroundings they descended into from the train.

"Where are we going?" she asked. "We've got to find some shade somewhere."

"I don't believe there's any on the beach," he said. "There's a veranda at the hotel over there, though," he added.

She cast another dubious glance at the shabby little gable-roofed building, his gesture had pointed out, and for a moment stood still, visibly casting the dice for an alternative. Just before they reached the inn she stopped and faced him. "Joe," she asked, "why do you bring me here?"

"I don't think it's that," Joe said, "but it does look as if it were alone. There used to be some chairs and things standing around on this veranda." He tried the door and found it locked, but after rattling and knocking upon it for a while, they heard heavy steps within, and presently the fat proprietor came, and opened it. It was in his shirt, but he was clean and he was friendly.

The proprietor made a strong contrast with the outside look of the place. It was unpretentiously but agreeably furnished, and it was immaculately neat. There was a wide fireplace flanked with settees, where the fat man said they could have a fire whenever they wanted it. He'd have lunch ready about one, if that would suit them. He took a childish pleasure in Violet's approval of the place, which she warmly expressed.

Willingly, he set about to refresh the veranda, carrying out with Joe's help, a small rattanavenport, two or three chairs, cushions and striped cotton blankets, gray-colored.

"It's perfect, Joe," Violet said. "I suppose he thinks we're a couple of honeymooners."

Joe leaned against the rail, devouring her with burning eyes. She had tucked herself up in a corner of the davenport, taken off her hat, and dropped it negligently on the floor beside her.

"You took the part," he said.

"You don't," she retorted, returning his gaze. "You look horribly tired—and ill. Oh, don't sit away off there. Come here where I can feel you. Wait, though. It's horrid to have to do it, but look up the train first, Joe. See how long we're going to have. I've absolutely got to be back in the Pennsylvania station a little before six."

He consulted a time-card that he had in his pocket. "That means leaving at four-fifteen, to be sure of it."

Her eyes filled up with tears. "And it's nearly noon now," she cried. "Four hours—and I thought it was a whole day."

"Well, never mind. We won't waste any of it."

He had dropped down on the sofa beside her, but she wasn't content with the way he sat. "You're so tired," she protested. "So dead tired. Can't you just be happy and relax for a little while. Lean down on me, like this. No, you're not too heavy—not half as heavy as I thought you'd be. Joe, is it all my fault you're like this?"

"It's not your fault at all," he told her. "And it isn't all your doing either. I've had a terrible two weeks—and there are more of them in sight. But I'm through the worst of it, I guess. I'll come out right side up in the end, anyhow. It isn't the first fight I've had, by a good many."

She said dryly, "I'd like to see John get the better of for once. Don't you let him beat you, Joe. I'd always think it was my fault."

"John Williamson?" he asked, slowly. "Don't worry about him. He hasn't got me yet."

She wanted to know, over a little laugh, what John he thought she meant. "I believe you're going to sleep," she added. "You're so tired."

But she couldn't keep with like this. It isn't ridiculous? I'm the one that's supposed to be sick. I'm packed off to Doctor Brown. He's got a place out here on Long Island, for nervous wrecks, where he treats good-for-nothing women like me. A mixture of Freud and Christian Science he gives us. It works pretty well, too. I've been to him once or twice for insomnia. Well, I had it all right after I got that letter of yours, Joe."

Despite her effort to hold him where he was, he sat erect. "You must have hated me for that," he said.

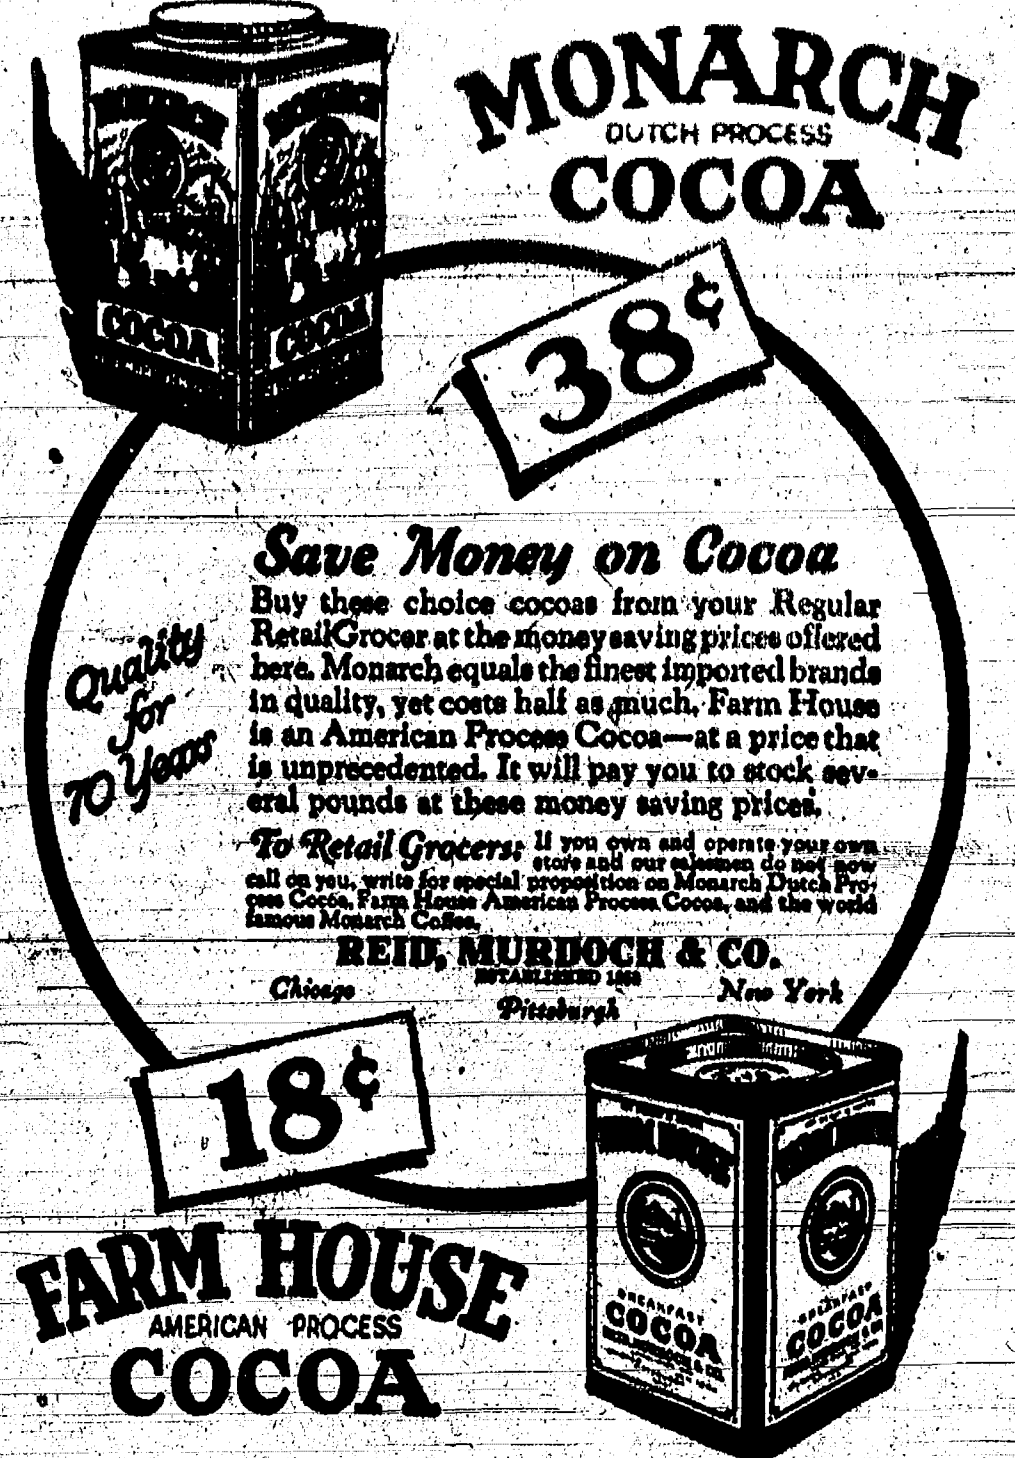

"Silly! I adored you for it—but it frightened me out of my five wits. It was wild to take a chance like that, Joe. But I'm glad you did it once. I never knew what it was before. I felt as if I had to go to you then, without waiting a minute. And of course it got worse during the week, as I found out what John and the others were doing to you. I was afraid if John tried to talk to me about it I'd blow up and give everything away; so I didn't dare talk to him at all. Locked myself up, and had a nervous breakdown. It seemed pretty real at the time—even to me. But I was all right again as soon as he suggested Doctor Brown. I had to go, or he would have insisted on sending somebody down with me. He suggested Margaret Craven, as it was. I promised to stay with Alice Wentworth instead of going to a hotel, and I told him I'd telegraph her what train to meet me at. I did—but it wasn't the one I was on. And that's how I got our day—! It isn't much, is it, for all that? Four hours—and already they're slipping away."

"They're enough, though, if we don't waste them—No, you've got me about half hypnotized now. I haven't any grip on my mind when you hold me like that. We've got to talk this thing through somehow; find out where we are, and what we're going to do."

She drew a long sigh. "What's the use of spoiling this, Joe? That's all we should do, trying to talk. I'll be time enough on the train, when we go back, won't it? After all, there can't be very much to say. It's no heavenly still here. Put your head down, where you can see the clouds that make those big purple shadows—Do you know what I wish? I wish Mount Vesuvius was right behind us, here; and after we'd been here a long time—as long as we wanted—it would all at once smother us with ashes, the way it did those Pompeian people."

Beware, Self-Love.
 Self-love makes men idolize themselves and would make them tyrants over others if fortune were to give them the means.

Neglected coughs

A cold often leaves behind a cough that hangs on and on, wearing you out with its persistent hacking. Dr. King's New Discovery will stop it quickly by attacking the mucous membrane in throw off the clogging secretions. It has an agreeable taste. All druggists.

METHODIST HOME

Mrs. Florence Berthard and Miss Helen McDonald of Detroit, Mrs. Wm. Kiddle and Duncan McDonald of Marine City, attended the funeral of Miss McDonald Monday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Frederick of Jackson, spent Sunday afternoon with their aunt, Mrs. Jane Howe.

Miss Jessie Everett and Mrs. Coe visited their many friends at the home Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Dolph of Ann Arbor, spent Sunday afternoon with Mr. and Mrs. Brodus.

On Wednesday 60 members of the Phoebe Best Circle of the Kings Daughters came to the home and brought a pot luck dinner for the entire family, with a treat of ice cream. Dinner was served at 12:30, after which a splendid program was carried out, with Mrs. Jay in charge.

Mrs. Wm. Wheeler of the School of Music gave some wonderful selections, followed by a 5-minute talk by Mrs. Stalker. A school play was given by seven of the ladies, that was especially pleasing. Also a talk by Rev. Risley, much enjoyed. All left with a promise to come again next summer.

Miss Margaret McDonald passed away Saturday morning, February 23, after an illness of a few days. She had spent nearly her entire life in Marine City and Bay City teaching school. She came to the home as a member, November, 1909. A brother, Duncan McDonald, at Marine City and a number of nieces and nephews survive. Services were held at the home Monday afternoon, February 25, conducted by Rev. Jones and Rev. Risley. Her remains were placed in the vault in Oak Grove cemetery until spring.

NORTH FRANCISCO

Herbert Harvey and son Wayne are spending this week at Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Fauser and daughter Fern, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Lehman.

Erle and Chester Notten are spending a few days at Hastings.

Mrs. Rhonda Peterson and children spent Sunday at the home of her mother, Mrs. Geo. Ortbling.

Mr. and Mrs. Rex Dore and son, and Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Klump and Irene Richards spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Richards.

Lois Harvey of Ann Arbor, spent Sunday at home.

The wood bee which was held at the church Thursday was well attended considering the bad weather. The ladies served a dinner in the basement at noon.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Riemenhagen are spending a week with their daughter at Milford.

Fern Fauser and Ardea Loveland spent Saturday night with Mrs. Erle Notten.

Birth Rate in Germany Shows Steady Decline

Berlin.—Germany's birth rate for the second quarter of 1923 shows a decided decline according to official figures for 46 German cities. In the corresponding quarter of 1922 there were 75,728 children born, as against 65,924 this year. For the first quarter of 1923 the number of children born was 69,980. The birth rate now is down almost to the lowest level of the war period. Commenting on the figures the medical weekly says:

"As there is a firm ratio between the dollar rate and the birth statistics a further big decline is expected." On the other hand the mortality rate is not so high for the second quarter of this year as it was in 1922. There were only 52,446 deaths in the second quarter of this year as contrasted with 55,345 for the same period last year.

Mushrooms Decay Rapidly.
 Edible mushrooms decay rapidly and will often produce symptoms of poisoning when they are not used in their fresh condition.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION
 State of Michigan, County of Washtenaw, ss.
 At a session of the Probate Court for said County of Washtenaw, held at the Probate Office in the City of Ann Arbor, on the 13th day of February, in the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty-four.
 Present, Emory E. Leland, Judge of Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of John Row, deceased.
 On reading and filing the duly verified petition of Bert E. Turnbull, executor of the will of said deceased, praying that the court adjudicate and determine who are the devisees, and who are entitled by the provisions of the last will of said deceased, to take title to the said farm as set forth in the codicil to the last will of said deceased.

It is Ordered, That 15th day of March next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said Probate Office, be appointed for hearing said petition. And it is further Ordered, That a copy of this order be published three successive weeks previous to said time of hearing, in the Chelsea Standard, a newspaper printed and circulated in said County of Washtenaw.

(A true copy)
 Emory E. Leland, Judge of Probate.

IT IS SERIOUS

Some Chelsea People Fail to Realize the Seriousness of a Bad Back.

The constant aching of a bad back, The weariness, the tired feeling, The pains and aches of kidney ills May result seriously if neglected. Dangerous urinary troubles often follow.

A Chelsea citizen shows you what to do.
 Lewis Eschelbach, farmer, R. F. D. No. 2, says: "I was in bad shape with kidney trouble. I wasn't fit for any kind of work as my back was painful and there was a constant weakness and soreness just over my kidneys. My head ached and I was nervous. I didn't get any relief until I started taking Doan's Pills from Freeman's Drug Store. Three boxes of Doan's cured me, so I am glad to recommend them."

Price 60c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Pills—the same that Mr. Eschelbach had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y. Adv.
