MR. KRUTTSCHNITT'S VACATION

The chairman of the executive committee of the giant Southern Pacific Railway Company, Julius Kruttschnitt, observed his seventieth birthday by making his usual frequent trip over the line to plan improvements. Railroad tradition has it that seventy is the age to retire, employees do that on pensions. Officials usually do, but have to watch things closely from their easy chairs until they retire into another world, their road loss money and their dividend-pensions stop. It seems to be the modern tendency for men to stick in the harness until they drop off. Such stories no longer interest space writers for city newspapers, Edison and Rockefeller and Schwab and Depew keep digging away. Why stop? They could, of course, for they worked hard when young. They banked time as others saved money. Men who plan to rest a bit after forty-five have to do that. Youth, wasted, means plugging away after gray hairs come, usually with the wolf yapping near by. Mr. Kruttschnitt was a school teacher when he joined the Southern Pacific as an under engineer. He probably had about as much luck as the average man, no more. Now he can afford to take a vacation, but doesn't want it or need it. That's just opposite to the general lot.

THE FARMER'S INNING

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace says he is delighted with the wave of higher prices for farm products. In that joy he is joined by every tiller of the soil who for many seasons has gotten little crops or had to sell them for a pittance. He says boys are going to be the salvation of the farmer this season. Seven-dollar-a-hundred hogs beat hundred-dollar dogs in shooting wolves from the back door. Two dollar wheat, corn at $1.50, oats at sixty-five cents, and the like will sound fine to the world's hardest workers. What a tremendous price farmers have been paying through the years for their much-vaunted but little realized independence!

Secretary Wallace says farmers have had to economize during the past year. "It's been a hard lesson and they won't forget it soon," he says. The question is, when haven't farmers had to economize?

Other things he says are more to the point. "The prospects for the farmer are better this year than for the past four years. The farmer isn't out of the woods, but he will be better off at the end of this year than he was before. But farming generally still has to carry the burden of the doubling mortgage debt, doubling the tax rate, especially local taxes. An important problem to the western farmer is increased freight rates. It is as important to him today as before. Another one is economy in government, especially local government where the tax burden falls heaviest on the farmer."

Evidently this belated inning of the farmer isn't a windfall. It won't boom farm prices much, nor build good roads, nor lower freight rates. It is just a breathing spell. How long will it last?

Two men in Budapest died the other day after drinking beer. The keg was opened and a dead viper found. In the days of tracts that would have been made the subject of many a booklet or sermon. Even yet there are plenty of people, an increasing number in fact, and intelligent folks to boot, who say vipers live in all booze.

Women's hands are growing larger, say the British glove makers, because of athletic tendencies and masculine imitation. This may delight parlor lounge lizards, but what will small boys think?

Young men in Tampico, Mexico, have the habit of mobbing girls who appear in public with bobbed hair. And some folks think Mexicans aren't civilized!

A DOG IN PRISON

Governor Baxter, of Maine, has just sentenced a large white collie to prison for life, to cheer up the inmates. Last reports indicate that the dog is fulfilling all expectations, the convicts are more cheerful and the dog has all the affectionate attention he could wish.

Men who write from inside stone walls complain most of the loneliness. Without work they would go insane. When they do nothing but work they become as cold and unresponsive as the stones which enclose them. Imagine the good effect of good hearted fine women living and working with men in prison! What couldn't a child do to hearts twisted by crime and trouble? A dog will be almost as good. A collie was picked in this case from a large number of breeds. Why it was chosen any collie owner can tell. Any boy or man who has a dog will understand a little of what effect a dog can have on hungry stifled hearts in the Maine bastille. Wouldn't it be great if the dog also knew?

COOLIDGE BOYS, MINISTERS

A ship-load of Boy Scouts leaving for Europe the other day heard President Coolidge over the telephone tell them what Scouts should be. They should reverence nature, law, and God, he said. These are the cardinal principles of Scoutcraft. Incidentally, ship reporters say they found the Scouts to be the finest bunch of boys they ever saw. That is a boost for the Scout movement. No boy who becomes a first class Scout can ever be called a "lissy" or weakling. They are trained for real manhood.

The president's counsel was simple, kind and true. They must live close to nature to retain truth, courage, and strength, he said. They must respect the law because, no matter if mistakes were occasionally made in formulation, the principle of law was just. They must keep faith in God because they needed trust in something higher than themselves, no matter what they believed. No skeptic or cynic ever created, or helped the world, the President said. An Atlantic pastor, the Rev. W. Hambrick, declared Sunday that Coolidge should have named "God first." He takes the president to task and says "he dishonored his office." That's the way some ministers quibble, bicker and squabble. This one would spoil the climate, the beauty, the influence of the president's faith by orating a verbose rebuke to gain big headlines. He got them but he now wishes he hadn't. A minister may also "dishonor" his office. Only one out of a thousand ever does it.

that makes it the more culpable when it happens. Fubbling over details isn't the way to save or inspire or teach the world. Hair-splitting is good copy for newspapers but poison for hearts. Mr. Coolidge did the world in general more good with his simple counsel than the Reverend Mr. Hambrick does in a year. That's the way with such things.

BREVITIES

Manchester—Manchester broke the tie and went into first place in the South Michigan League when the team defeated the Dundee team on the local diamond Sunday afternoon before the largest crowd that ever witnessed a ball game in Manchester, there being over 1200 in attendance. —Enterprise.

Ypsilanti—Roy Hale, of Defiance, Ohio, charged with passing checks amounting to $300, on which he had forged the name of the foreman of the construction company building the new Consolidated school, was placed on probation Friday by Justice D. Z. Curtis and will report to Prosecutor Mansfield at his home in Defiance once each month. —Record.

Brighton—Mrs. James Avis went out to burn some Canada thistles on the back part of her place in the village Saturday and the fire got away from her and into a field of hay. An alarm was turned in and the fire department and a large number of other citizens quickly responded and put a stop to the creeping flames before any serious damage was done. —Argus.

Williamston—Eleven boys from here left Friday morning for Camp Custer where they will spend a month in military training. The camp is a branch of the Citizens' Military Training Camp, which is intended for boys of high school age. We understand that about 4500 boys have been enrolled this summer. —Enterprise.

Howell—The schedule for base ball games for Livingston County Fair, at Howell August 26 to 29 inclusive, has been arranged as follows: Holly vs. Lansing, Wednesday; Stockbridge vs. Williamston, Thursday; and the winners final on Friday. All ball games will start at three o'clock in the afternoon and as usual there will be no extra admission. —Democrat.

Pinckney—The annual picnic of St. Mary's church, Pinckney, will be held in Jackson's grove, south of the village of Pinckney, Tuesday, August 12. A chicken pie dinner will be served by the ladies from 11:30 to 2:00 p. m. Arrangements are being made for a very interesting program. Speaking by E. C. Shields of Lansing, and others: Ball game at 4:30 between Pinckney Stars and Dexter. —

Pinckney—Negotiations for the sale of the Van Winkle property have been under way for some time and last week the water power rights and 5 acres of beautiful grove on the of the Reeves Mill Pond, were sold by R. Owton to Detroit real estate parties. Five hundred and seventy-five acres, all of the C. V. Van Winkle property, are under option which is expected to be taken up very soon. —Dispatch.

Dexter—The township Board met Friday afternoon and accepted a replating of Evergreen Little Farms, which are located on the Ann Arbor road, being a portion of Kuehnle farm. Several plats in other parts of the township have also been accepted: The Morrison River front subdivisions, the Western Hills subdivision, Killins Lake view subdivision and Potowottomi Park subdivision. —Leader.

Brooklyn—Harrison Lambert had the bad luck to lose his new Ford coupe at the Onsted homecoming celebration last Thursday evening. Some "tall man with a white shirt and straw hat" was seen to enter the car and drive away after he had made some adjustment under the hood. The car was locked with a switch key and the adjustment the thief made was to change the wire connections so that he could get away with it. —Exponent.

Michigan Center—Impressive ceremonies marked the institution of a new Masonic lodge Thursday evening, to be known as Cooldidge Lodge, No. 532. The ceremonies were conducted at the Masonic hall here and the work was done by Most Worshipful Grand Master Benjamin Henderson, assisted by William H. Gallagher, grand chaplain, and nine other grand officers. The lodge was then consecrated and the hall dedicated. —Times.

Milan—With the threshing season in full swing and the typical hot weather at hand, the wheat and other small grain crops look unusually good and from all indications, the farmers in and around Milan will have a good year in spite of the late and unfavorable spring. Wheat is averaging about twenty-two bushels to the acre east of town. On one field of wheat which was threshed last week the yield was a little better than twenty-seven bushels and another ran a little light of twenty-five. —Leader.

Jackson—Jackson county has solved the problem of cutting weeds and brush along the roadsides and at the same time giving the prisoners crowding the county jail a chance at the outdoor air. The sheriff has contrived a grub wagon in which the men go to the job each morning. An inmate cook prepares dinner while others cut weeds and brush. At night they return to the jail. The prisoners get two good meals a day instead of the regular jail fare if they work. Besides this, they get out into the fresh air which most men prefer to the stuffy jail atmosphere. —

Protection—If, as one woman writer says, girls seldom marry the men who waste money on them, there evidently is method in some men's madness.

Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance."

TALMADGES AND PICKFORD MOST POPULAR STARS

Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and Mary Pickford are, among high school students, the most popular motion picture actresses in the United States, according to a report that was just made public by Clarence Arthur Perry, chairman of the National Committee for Better Films of New York City.

It is interesting to note that, for the first time in the history of the stage or screen, two sisters, Norma and Constance Talmadge, share the heights of popular favor. This discloses the fact that Constance is the best liked actress classed as a comedienne in motion pictures. These preferences are based upon the returns to a questionnaire which was filled out by 17,000 boys and 20,000 girls in the high schools of 76 cities and towns. All sections of the country from Maine to California and from Minnesota to Texas are represented, large cities as well as towns and villages.

Norma Talmadge will be seen in "Ashes of Vengeance," which was directed by Frank Lloyd for Joseph M. Schenck Productions, at the Princess Theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, August 20 and 21. In addition to these, four thousand extras in the costumes of the period take part in the production.

"Ashes of Vengeance" is a dramatic romance of France in the days of Charles IX. Forty-eight sets, among them the most massive interior ever built, are used in the spectacular scenes of this gorgeous production.

CAPITOL SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY PASSES NINE MILLION MARK

We are in receipt of the Annual Report of the Capitol Savings and Loan Company of Lansing for the year ending June 30, which shows a gain in assets of $1,654,909.00, according to Chester D. Woodbury, President and Manager of the Company.

"Our total assets are now over NINE MILLION DOLLARS ($9,010,983.63)," says Mr. Woodbury. "We made 1522 home building or home buying loans during the year amounting to $5,335,626." The average size of the loans were $2,192, which shows that the loans were made on homes of moderate cost.

The annual report shows that the Company made and distributed to its customers over $450,000 as interest or earnings made during the year on their investment.

"One of the finest things about our business," says Mr. Woodbury, "is the fact that the borrower also shares in the earnings made on the money paid back on his loan." "Because The Capitol Savings and Loan Company is under State supervision and examination, as are all banks, and because all the money placed with them is loaned only on First Mortgages on Real Estate (people's homes) for the purpose of helping deserving people become home owners and thereby better citizens, it is considered one of the best and safest depositories for the people's money." The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Chester D. Woodbury, President and Manager; Arthur C. Stebbins, Vice President; Myron A. Chapin, Secretary-Treasurer; Ernest I. Dall, Assistant Secretary; George W. Amsden, Auditor; Joseph W. Knapp, Vice President; Chas. F. Harper, Office Manager.

AUTO POLO TO BE DAILY EVENT AT COUNTY FAIR

The Board of Directors of the Washtenaw County Fair have announced that they have been fortunate enough to secure for this year's fair one of the fastest Auto Polo teams in the United States.

Auto Polo, the most sensational sport ever conceived by human mind, is similar to hockey or pony polo, and is played on a gridiron marked out on the race track in front of the grand stand. Steel hoops, mounted at the rear of the "Tim Lizzie" protect the driver, but in spills the malletman is forced to seek safety as best possible. Goals are set 75 yards apart and it is up to each team to protect itself from all dangers.

Few rules govern the sport, one of the reasons why many writers and newspaper men have called it motor insanity. Drivers must keep their machines out of danger of attacking opponents or suffer the consequences. When one car is damaged beyond further use, mechanics rush it to the side lines and bring in a substitute car, causing no delay.

In each contest, sufficient thrills are produced to satiate the appetites of the most blood thirsty sport lover, as cars turn turtles, crash head-on, break through fences, take half-nelson holds upon each other and create havoc in general in the wild battle for the possession of the ball and goal.

It is announced that two performances will be given daily, and the lovers of fast and exciting games will find the thrills and excitement growing with each game.

Zen of the Y.D.

A NOVEL OF THE FOOTHILLS
by Robert Stead

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Transley's day-cutting outfit after stacking 3,000 tons, is on its way to the big Y.D. ranch headquarters. Transley is a master of men and circumstances. Linder, foreman, is a substantial, but not self-assured, George Drak, one of the men, is an irresponsible chap who proposes to marry Zen, Y.D.'s daughter. Transley and Linder dine with Y.D. and his wife and daughter Zen. Transley resolves to marry Zen. Y.D. instructs Transley to cut the South Y.D. "spite o' h-l an' high water" and a fellow named Landson.

CHAPTER II.—Drak proposes to Zen and is nearly refused. Transley pitches camp on the South Y.D. and Linder's outfit cutting hay. Landson Grant, Landson's manager, notices Transley that he is working under a lease from the legal owner, and warns Transley of all of which means war.

Her father and mother knew her disposition, loved it, and feared for it. They knew that there was never a rider so brave, so skillful, so strong, but some outlaw would throw him at last. So at fourteen they sent her east to a boarding school. In two months she was back with a letter of expulsion, and the boast of having blacked the eyes of the principal's daughter.

"They couldn't teach me any more, mother," she said. "They admitted it. So here I am."

Y.D. was plainly perplexed. "It's about time you was halter-broke," he commented. "Who's going to do it?"

"If a girl has learned to read and think, what more can the schools do for her?" she demanded.

And Y.D. never having been to school, could not answer.

The sun was capping the Rockies with molten gold when the rancher and his daughter swung down the foothill slopes to the camp on the South Y.D. Strings of men and horses returning from the upland meadows could be seen from the hillside as they descended.

Y.D.'s sharp eyes measured the scale of operations.

"They're hitting the high spots," he said approvingly. "That boy Transley is a hum-dinger."

Zen made no reply.

"I say he's a hum-dinger," her father repeated.

The girl looked up with a quick flush of surprise. Y.D. was no puzzle to her, and if he went out of his way to commend Transley he had a purpose.

"Mr. Transley seems to have made a hit with you, Dad," she remarked, eagerly.

"Well, I do like to see a man who's got the goods in him. I like a man that can get there, just as I like a horse that can get there. I've often wondered, Zen, what kind you'd take up with, when it came to that, an' hoped he'd be a live critter. After I'm dead an' buried I don't want no other dead one spendin' my allmoens."

"How about Mr. Linder?" said Zen, naively.

Her father looked up sharply. "Zen," he said, "you're not serious?"

Zen laughed. "I don't figure you're exactly serious, Dad, in your talk about Transley. You're just feeling out. Well—let me do a little feeling out. How about Linder?"

"Linder's all right," Y.D. replied. "Better than the average, I admit. But he's not the man Transley is. If he was, he wouldn't be workin' for Transley. You can't keep a man down. Zen, if you got the goods in him, Linder comes up over the average, so's you can notice it, but not like Transley does."

Zen did not pursue the subject. She understood her father's philosophy very well indeed, and, to a large degree, she accepted it as her own. The only quality Y.D. took off his hat to was the ability to do things. And Y.D.'s idea of things was very concrete: it had to do with steers and land, with hay and money and men. It was by such things he measured success. And Zen was disposed to agree with him. Why not? It was the only success she knew.

Transley was greeting them as they drew into camp.

"Glad to see you, Y.D., honored to have a visit from you, ma'am," he said, and he helped them from the demerit, and gave instructions for the care of their horses. "Supper is waitin', and the men won't be ready for some time."

Y.D. shook hands with Transley cordially. "Zen an' me just thought we'd run over and see how the wind blew," he said. "You got a good spot here for a camp, Transley. But we won't go in to supper just now. Let the men eat first; I always say the work horses should be first at the barn. Well, how's she goin'?"

"Fine," said Transley, "fine," but it was evident his mind was divided. He was glancing at Zen, who stood by during the conversation.

"I must try and make your daughter at home," he continued. "I allow myself the luxury of a private tent, and as you will be staying over night, I will ask you to accept it for her."

"But I have my own tent with me," the demerit said Zen. "If you will let this man pitch it under the stars where I can hear the water murmuring in the night."

"Who'd have thought it, from the daughter of the practical Y.D.!"

Always Opportunity
Wherever there is a human being there is an opportunity for a kindness.—Seneca.

"I suppose he's right," Linder confessed, "but I've always been shy. I get along all right with men."

"The truth is, Mr. Linder, you're not shy—you're frightened. Now I can well believe that no man could frighten you. Consequently you get along all right with men. Do I need to tell you the rest?"

"I never thought of myself as being afraid of women," he replied. "It has always seemed that they were, well, he replied, just out of my line."

"They had reached the tent but the girl made no sign of going in. In the silence the sibilant flap of the steam rose and down them."

"Mr. Linder," she said at length, "do you know why Mr. Transley sent you down here with me?"

"I'm sure I don't expect to show you to your tent."

"That was the least of his purposes. He wanted to show you that he wasn't afraid of you, and he wanted to show me that he wasn't afraid of you. Mr. Transley is a very self-confident individual. There is such a thing as being too self-confident, Mr. Linder, just as there is such a thing as being too shy. Do you get me? Good night!" And with a little rush she was in her tent.

Linder walked slowly down to the water's edge, and stood there, thinking, until Zen's light went out. His brain was in a whirl with a sensation entirely strange to it. A wind laden with snow-smell from the mountains, pressed gently against his features, and presently Linder took deeper breaths than he had ever known before.

"By Jove," he said, "who'd have thought it possible?"

CHAPTER IV

When Zen awoke next morning the mowing machines of Transley's outfit were already singing their symphony in the meadows; she could hear the metallic rhythm as it came borne on the early breeze. She lay awake on her camp cot for a few minutes, stretching her fingers to the canvas ceiling and feeling that it was good to be alive. And it was. The ripple of water came from almost underneath the walls of her tent; the smell of spruce trees and balm-o'-Gilead and new-mown hay was in the air. She could feel the warmth of the sunshine already pouring upon her white roof; she could trace the gentle sway of the trees by the leafy pattern gliding forward and back. A cheery glimmer explored about the door of her tent, ventured in, and sitting bolt upright, sent his shrill whistle boldly forth. She watched his line bravely for a minute, then clasped her hands together, and laughed at him.

"Therein we have the figures of both Transley and Linder," she mused to herself. "Upright, Transley; horizontal, Linder. I doubt if the poor fellow slept last night after the fright I gave him."

Slowly and calmly she turned the incident over in her mind. She wondered a little if she had been quite fair with Linder. Her words and conduct were capable of very broad interpretations. She was not at all in love with Linder; of that Zen was sure. She was equally sure that she was not at all in love with Transley. She admitted that she admired Transley for his calm assumptions, but they nettled her a little nevertheless. If this should develop into a love affair—if it should—she had no intention that it was to be a pleasant afternoon's center. It was to be a race—a race, mind you—and may the best man win! She had a feeling, amounting almost to a conviction, that Transley underrated his own possibilities in such a contest. She had seen many a dark horse, less promising than Linder, gallop home with the stakes.

Then Zen smiled her own quiet, self-confident smile. The idea of either gallop home with her! For the moment she forgot to do Linder the justice of remembering that nothing was further from his thoughts. She would show them. She would make a race of it—almost to the wire. In the home stretch she would make the leap, out and over the fence. She was in it for the race, not for the finish.

Zen contemplated for some minutes the possibility of that race; then, as the imagination threatened to become involved, she sprang from her cot and thrust a cautious head through the door of her tent. The gang had gone, and she sneaked out to the stream, and from the cool car. She drew on her boots, shook out her hair, threw a towel across her shoulders, and, snip in hand, walked boldly the few steps to the stream rippling over its shiny gravel bed. She stopped and steeled the water with her fingers; then brought it in fresh, cool handfuls about crumpled my knife like so much soap."

"I did worse," said Fred, with a grin. "I bust my cuttin'-bar."

The two men exchanged a steady glance for half a minute. Then the newcomer gave vent to a long, low whistle.

"So that's the way of it," he said. "That's the kind of war Mr. Landson makes. Well, we can fight back with the same weapons, but that won't cut the hay, will it?"

By this time Y.D. and Transley, with four other teamsters, were served coming in. Each driver had had the same experience. An iron stake, carefully hidden in a clump of grass, had been driven down into the ground until it was just high enough to intercept the cutting-bar. The fine, sharp knives were crumpled against it, in some cases the heavy cutting-bar, in which the knives operate, was damaged.

Y.D.'s face was black with fury. "That's the lowest, meanest, cowardliest trick I ever had pulled on me," he was saying. "I'm pulled equal to ride down to Landson's an' under his nose, an' one of them stakes through under his shirt ribs!"

"But can you prove that Landson did it?" said Zen, who had an element of caution in her when her father was concerned. She had a vision of a fight, with Landson pleading entire ignorance of the whole cause of offense, and her father probably summoned by the police for unprovoked assault.

"No, I can't prove that Landson did it, an' I can't prove that the grass my steers eat turns to hair on their backs," he retorted, "but I reach my own conclusions. Is there any shootin' iron in the place?"

"Now, Dad, that's enough," said the girl, firmly. "There'll be no shooting between you and Landson. If there is to be anything of that kind I'll ride down ahead and warn him of what's coming."

"Darter," said Y.D.—it was only on momentary occasions that he addressed her as daughter—"I brought you over here as a guest, not as manager o' my affairs. I've taken care of those affairs for some considerable years, an' I reckon I still have the qualifications. If you're a-goin' to act up obstreperous I'll get Mr. Transley to lead me a man to escort you home."

"At your service, Y.D.," said George Drak, who was in the crowd which had gathered about the rancher, his daughter, and Transley. "That Pete-horse an' me would just see her over the hills a-whoopin'."

"I don't think it would be wise to take any extreme measures, at least, not just yet," said Transley. "Let's put the question to suppose that Landson had picked the whole valley with those stakes. It is now quite clear why we were left in peace yesterday. He wanted us to get started, and get a few swaths cut, so that he would know where to drive the stakes to catch us the next morning. Some of these machines can be repaired at once, and the others within a day or two. We will just move over a little and start on new fields. There's pretty good moonlight these nights, and well leave a few men out on guard, and perhaps we can catch the enemy at his little game. Let us not let one of Landson's men with the goods on him."

Y.D. was somewhat pacified by this suggestion. "You're a practical devil, Transley," he said, with considerable admiration. "Now, in a case of this kind I just get plumb fightin' mad. I want to bore somebody. I guess it's the only kind o' procedure that comes easy to my hand. I guess you're right, but I hate to let anybody have the laugh on me." Y.D. looked down the valley, shading his eyes with his hand. "That son-o'-a-gun has got a dozen or more stacks down there. I don't wish nobody any hard luck, but if some tenderfoot was to drop a clear

"In that case I suppose you'd pray for a west wind, Dad," Zen suggested, "but the winds in these valleys, even with your prayers to direct them, are none too reliable."

"Everybody to work on fixing up these machines," Transley ordered. "Linder, make a list of what repairs are needed and Drak will ride to town with it at once. Some of them may have to come out of the city by express. Drak can get the orders in and a team will follow to bring out the repairs."

In a moment Transley's men were busy with wrenches and hammers, replacing knives and appraising damages. Even in his anger Y.D. took approving note of the promptness of Transley's decisions and the zest with which his men carried them into effect.

"A he-man, that fellow, Zen," he confided to his daughter. "If he'd blown into this country thirty years ago, like I did, he'd own it by this time plumb to the skyline."

"Well, it's seven years since I heard from him—I haven't corresponded very regular of late, but they was six."

The story of Transley's family was cut short by the arrival of a team and mowing machine.

"What's up, Fred?" called Tompkins through a window of his dining car to the driver. "Breakfast is just over, an' dinner ain't begun."

For answer the man addressed as Fred slowly produced an iron stake about eighteen inches long and somewhat less than an inch in diameter. "What kind of shrubbery do you call that, Tompkins?" he demanded.

"Well, it ain't buffalo grass, an' it ain't brome grass, an' I don't guess it's alfalfa," said Tompkins, meditatively.

"No, and it ain't a grub stake," Fred replied, with some sarcasm. "It's a iron stake, grown in a nice little clump of grass, and I run on to it and bust my cuttin'-bar all to that is, all to pieces," he completed rather lamely, taking Zen into his glance.

"I think I follow you," she said, with a smile. "Can you fix it here?"

"Napa. Have to go to town for a new one. Two days' lost time, when every hour counts. Hallelu! Here comes someone else."

Another of the teamsters was drawing into camp. "Hello, Fred!" he said, upon coming up with his fellow workman, "you in too? I had a bit of bad luck. I run amash on to an iron stake right there in the ground and crumpled my knife like so much soap."

"I did worse," said Fred, with a grin. "I bust my cuttin'-bar."

The two men exchanged a steady glance for half a minute. Then the newcomer gave vent to a long, low whistle.

I've taken care of those affairs for some considerable years, an' I reckon I still have the qualifications. If you're a-goin' to act up obstreperous I'll get Mr. Transley to lead me a man to escort you home."

"If you had been a cow puncher instead of a contractor," she said, "I'm sure you would long ago have ended your life in some dash over a cutbank."

Meanwhile Drak pursued his way to town. The trail, after crossing the ford, turned abruptly to the right from that which led across country to the North Y.D. For a mile or so he skirted the stream in a park-like drive through groves of spruce and cottonwood. Sunshine and the babble of water everywhere filled the air. Sunshine, too, filled George Drak's heart. The importance of his mission was pleasantly heavy upon him. He pictured the impression he would make in town, galloping in with his horse wet over the back, and rushing to the implement agency with all the importance of a courier from Y.D. He would let two of the boys take Pete to the stable, and then, seated on a mower seat in the shade, he would tell the story. It would lose nothing in the telling. He would even add how Zen had thrown a kick at him in parting. Perhaps he would have Zen kiss him on the cheek before the whole camp. He turned that possibility over in his mind, weighing nicely the credulity of his imaginary audience. . . . At any rate, whether he decided to put that in the story or not, it was very pleasant to think about.

Presently the trail turned abruptly up a gully leading into the hills. A huge cutbank, jutting into the river, barred the way in front, and its precipitous side, a hundred feet or more in height, kept continually crumbling and falling into the stream. These cutbanks are a terror to inexperienced riders. The valleys are awed, lowered in the tawny sameness of the ranges; the vision catches only the higher levels, and one may gallop to the verge of a precipice before becoming aware of its existence. It was to this that Zen had referred in speaking of Transley's precipitancy.

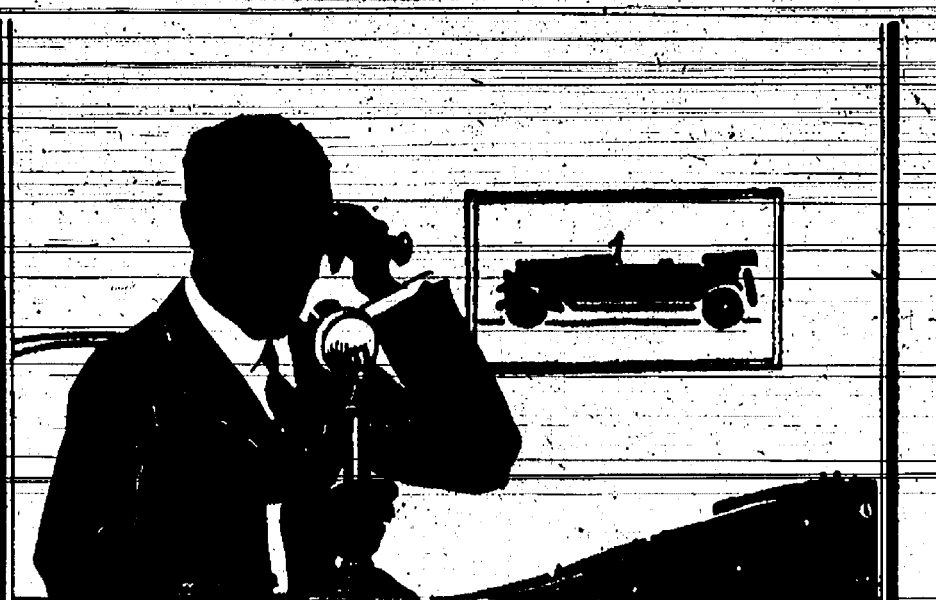

Drak followed the gully up into the hills, letting his horse drop back to a walk in the hard going along the dry bed of a stream which flowed only in the spring freshets. Pete had to pick his way over boulders and across stretches of sand and boggy patches of black mud formed by little springs tawking out under clumps of willows. Here and there the white ribs of a steer's skeleton peered through the brush; once or twice an overpowering stench gave notice of a carcass not wholly decomposed.

It was not a pleasant environment, but in an hour Drak was out again on the brow of the brown hills, where the sunshine flooded about and a fresh breeze beat up against his face. After all his winding in the gully, he was not more than a mile from the cutbank.

Drak expended his limited but expressive vocabulary. It was against all human nature to look on such scenes unmoved. He recalled Y.D.'s half-spoken wish about a random cigar. Then suddenly George Drak's mouth dropped open and his eyes rounded with a great idea.

Of course it was against all the rules of the range—it was outlaw business—but what about driving iron stakes in a hay meadow? Drak's philosophy was that the end justified the means. And if the end would win the approval of Y.D.—and of Y.D.'s daughter—then any means was justified. Had not Linder said, "Burn the grass on the road?" Drak knew well enough that Linder's remark was a figure of speech, but his eccentric mind found no trouble in converting it into literal instructions.

RESULTS THAT REMAIN

Are Appreciated by Chelsea People. Thousands who suffer from backache and kidney complaint have tried one remedy after another, finding only temporary benefit. This is discouraging, but there is one kidney medicine that has earned a reputation for lasting results and there is plenty of proof of its merit right here in Chelsea.

Here is the testimony of one who used Doan's Pills years ago, and now makes his testimony even stronger. Mr. W. D. Arnold, 22 Middle St., Chelsea, says: "I suffered greatly from dull nagging backache and a distressing pain through my kidneys which gave me a great deal of trouble. Doan's Pills from Fenn's Drug Store helped me wonderfully. They rid me of the backaches and corrected the action of my kidneys. I was better in every way after using Doan's."

The above statement was given July 7, 1909 and on April 27, 1920, Mrs. Arnold added: "I have the same good opinion of Doan's Pills now as I did when I recommended them before. They cured me and the cure has lasted."

A FIRM FOUNDATION

Stone on stone the buildings rise about you, so rapidly that you feel as if unseen hands had been working over night. Construction is rapid enough but it is the result of many long months of careful planning and the slow correlation of many forces.

A WELL-CONCEIVED PLAN is second only to a firm foundation. Begin now to plan your future savings policy. Haphazard methods end in haphazard results. Plan definitely to save something every pay-day, not how little, but how much.

MEMBERSHIP in the MICHIGAN MUTUAL SAVINGS ASSOCIATION is the firmest foundation upon which you can build your savings plan. The foundation should be ample as well as firm. Memberships for each one of the family should be your aim. Only a few memberships remain open on our books. A telephone call will bring one of our representatives to explain our savings plan.
