KUSTERER-HOFFMAN WEDDING WEDNESDAY EVENING EVENT

Popular Young Chelsea People Will Be at 223 Harrison St. After Short Wedding Trip.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Hoffman was the scene of a very pretty fall wedding Wednesday evening, October 1, at 8 o'clock, when their daughter, Katharine, was united in marriage with Waldo H. Kusterer, son of Mrs. Louise M. Kusterer. Rev. P. H. Grabowski, pastor of St. Paul's church, performed the ceremony.

The bride was lovely in a gown of caramel georgette beaded in amber and a corsage of Ophelia roses. The groom wore a tuxedo and a boutonniere of red and white flowers. The bride's attendants were Misses M. J. Strieter, sister of the bride, and Misses M. J. Schmitt, half sister of the groom, and Miss M. J. Schmitt, half sister of the groom, acted as best man.

The bride was a graduate of Chelsea high school with the class of 1917, and for the past four years has held a position as stenographer and bookkeeper at the Chelsea Screw Co. The groom is also a graduate of the Chelsea high school with the class of 1916 and is one of Chelsea's most promising young business men, and a partner in the O. D. Schneider and Co. grocery.

Following the ceremony a three course dinner was served to the immediate families. Five girl friends of the bride served the dinner. The house was beautifully decorated in pink and white and large baskets of lovely cut flowers. After a short wedding trip the young couple will be at home at 223 Harrison street.

WOMEN TO HOLD PROFESSORSHIP AT U. OF M.

Women will occupy the chairs of three full professorships at the University of Michigan when the Alice Freeman Palmer professorship in history, established by the board of regents Friday, is filled. One associate professorship also is on the staff of the university along with several woman instructors. The oldest of these chairs is that in public nursing held by Dr. Barbara H. Bartlett since January of 1922. Dr. Margaret S. Bell was made professor of physical education and physician to the University Health service last year, while the assistant professorship in personnel management is held by Margaret Elliott. This position is on the staff of the new college of business administration and will not be occupied before the beginning of the second semester.

S. P. I. CLUB STAGES MOCK WEDDING FOR BRIDE-TO-BE

A most delightful time was enjoyed Monday evening by the members of the S. P. I. club when they gathered at the home of Mrs. O. D. Schneider and had as their guest of honor, Miss Katharine Hoffman.

A mock wedding was the enjoyable feature of the evening. The cast of characters were as follows: Miss Katharine Hoffman; groom, Miss Amanda Koch; maid of honor, Mrs. J. M. Stetler; bridesmaids, Mrs. O. D. Schneider, Mrs. Emanuel Bahmiller; best man, Mrs. Lester Winans; flower girl, Dorothy Pielomalar; ring bearer, Miss Anna Schneider; clergyman, Miss Lilla Wackenhut. Before the ceremony Miss Katharine Fletcher sang a solo and Mrs. J. H. Niehaus played the wedding march. The bride was given in marriage by the father, Mrs. Emma Pfeiffer. The mother was Mrs. Lewis Epler. Following the ceremony the guest of honor was presented with a serving tray by the club.

A dainty luncheon was served in the dining room which was beautifully decorated in pink and white and baskets of gladiolus. The dining table was centered with a large wedding cake and a miniature bride and groom. At a late hour the guests departed for their respective homes.

FIND DUSTING GOOD WHEAT SMUT CONTROL

That copper dusts are satisfactory and safe in treatment of seed wheat to prevent "stinking smut" is indicated by experiments and later practical tests carried out under the direction of the Michigan Agricultural College, and this treatment is being recommended this fall by Dr. George Coombs, of the college botany department.

"Many farmers tried copper dusting in the fall of 1923," says Dr. Coombs, "and reports are satisfactory. Stinking smut causes heavy losses, and its control is important. The use of copper dust treatment has advantages over the old formaldehyde treatment which smothered considerable quantities of seed."

Three candidates were initiated, Mrs. A. H. Schumacher, Mrs. Sam Bohnet, and Mrs. J. A. Park. Before the initiatory work Mrs. Blanche Palmer gave a violin solo, "Star of the East," accompanied by Mrs. Milda Lindauer. The work of the past matron was perfect in every detail. ## 150-MILE AUTO RACE AT STATE FAIR GROUNDS

The greatest long distance auto race ever held in the middle west outside of the big 500-mile event on the brick at Indianapolis has been arranged for Sunday, October 12, on the mile speedway at the state fair grounds in Detroit when a 150 mile race will be held. The track has been widened and banked on the turns so that speed of 85 miles an hour is possible. The speedway for much of this time has been literally made over for the race and has been oiled so that there will not be a particle of dust. Entry blanks have been sent to all the prominent drivers in this country. Strict rules will be followed and the highest speed will be hung up are the highest ever offered for a long distance auto race in Michigan.

Because of the large number of entries that are expected the qualifying trials will be run off on Saturday afternoon, October 11, starting at 2 o'clock. The 150-mile race will start at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, October 12 and grand stand and box seats tickets will be placed on sale at downtown stores the week before the race. The long distance race is the real dedication of the new track and 12,000 seating capacity grandstand that has been revamped and built at a cost of $100,000 and General Manager Geo. W. Dickinson of the state fair expects 25,000 people to see the race.

TEN DAYS TIME EXTENSION ALLOWED LOCAL TAXPAYERS

Approximately One Hundred Accounts Still Outstanding on Village Books, According to Treasurer Hinderer.

Laxity of taxpayers in turning in the village taxes due September 30 necessitated an extension of ten days to the village council at a special session on Tuesday evening of this week. Approximately one hundred accounts are still outstanding, according to Treasurer Hinderer, and it is hoped that these will be cleaned up before expiration of the ten-day extension.

Authorization of the assessors to go ahead with assessing each property owner's portion of the sum to be paid on pavement was also made by council. Latest estimates submitted by the state on the cost of South Main street pavement within the village limits and to be paid by the village and abutting property owners amount to approximately $12,500. Of this amount two-thirds will be assessed against abutting property owners and one-third will be paid by the village at large. Assessment of the amount to be paid by property owners will be made on the foot frontage basis in accordance with a resolution passed several weeks ago.

In view of the fact that considerable amount of "fill" has been practically decided that curbing through this section will be postponed until spring to allow for settling of loose dirt used to fill in. It was thought by the state engineering department that it would not be satisfactory to lay curb in the loose dirt and their opinion has been concurred in by local persons in charge of the project. The balance of the pavement is expected to be finished according to original plans. Money for the extension outside the village limits is rapidly being turned in to the committee having this in charge and it is believed that within a day or two this matter will be cleaned up and available for state authorities.

CHANGE IN TIME TABLE OF D. J. & C. RAILWAY

The eastbound expresses will leave Jackson at 6:28 a. m., then 8:45 a. m. and every two hours. The last westbound local will leave at 12:32 a. m. and the last through eastbound local will leave at 10:32 p. m. with another for Ypsilanti at 11:47 p. m.

Editorial

A DEAD MAN'S PROPERTY

Another fight about inheritance taxation was waged last week at the National Tax Conference, at St. Louis. One faction—there are always factions—wanted only states to collect the taxes; another wanted Washington to do it; one wanted a big cut; one wanted no tax at all. A uniform state law was planned. Federal collection would require another amendment to the already allied-up constitution, and would deprive states of revenue without relieving the people. State taxation alone would be unfair to some which had few rich men and would not be in keeping with the broad theory which backs the tax in the first place; namely, that society as a whole, not a tiny part, helped make the inheritance possible, hence should share it when the nominal owner passes away.

The theory, with the hairs split fine, signifies that nobody owns anything; that when a man builds a fortune or a business he is just a figure-head and society as a whole helps him. Apparently the man with fifty dollars or a house or a factory doesn't own it, but just holds it in trust. And, to follow that, the person who inherits it seemingly has done nothing to deserve it; has not benefited society to the extent of the estate left him, so must share it with everybody else by paying a huge tax. The Federal inheritance tax minimum is forty per cent.

The same principle underlies all duties which the state or government, which is just organized society, lays upon man and his effects. He pays dues for membership in the world as in his lodge. He goes "dutch treat" in paying for city policemen, county roads, war, the national capitol building, the Panama Canal, and both weevil campaigns. The Modern notion which even our American forefathers did not act on and a few centuries ago was not considered is that we are just one big family. Socialists run that idea to an extreme, and the Communists go one further.

So, strictly speaking, a dead man has no property. By going out he relinquishes his feeble claim to his fortune, and society denies his right to will it to his son, so taxes it heavily. If it is left to a non-relative, the tax is multiplied.

But this theory, like many others, can be concisely stated but in practice is seemingly impossible to realize. Mothers with fine theories about raising their children know how they have to compromise. We claim that necessity every day, whatever we do. Taxation is one of the world's most intricate problems, and after thousands of years we are still shifting our perspective and changing our methods seeking the ideal way and the Utopian life. And perfection is still far away.

THE PASSING OF CITIES

Henry Ford says big cities must end. The modern city has done its work and must go. Industry of the future will move to the country where labor is steady and overhead costs are low, he prophesies.

Perhaps industries by themselves don't make cities, and a big plant town ten miles from a railroad. Meanwhile, all big cities are getting bigger; so are all towns. The whole world is growing.

Big cities are condemned for residence, by lovers of freedom and neighborliness, and for aesthetic reasons. But they are convenient for transacting business; they make for efficiency and competitive industry; they keep man moving. That alone prevents stagnation. Noise and bustle of cities are provoking, but they signify action. People are crowded there, but many like crowds and others would amount to nothing living on Main street. There is no evidence that big cities are doomed; rather they seem to be spreading out as big factories are built on their outskirts and in nearby towns, scattering cottages between. Mr. Ford himself has done that, his plants attracting others as well as laborers; then come banks and schools and presently there is a small city. The tendency seems to oppose his forecast.

REWARDS ARE SCARCE

John McIntyre, a New York policeman, is going to Europe with all expenses paid because a rich man appreciated his routine service. That is unusual, of course, and may not do the police discipline any good. For appreciation of services rendered by policemen, janitors, neighbors or workmen, is a rare bird. But that is what makes such service, generally of daily occurrence, so blessed. The neighbor who helps another, un solicited and unthanked, gets a tremendous kick out of it. We are told about one who "went about doing good." He got no ocean trips. These occasional tokens of appreciation just emphasize its lack.

Magazine feature writers who interviewed W. L. Douglas, shoe manufacturer, always mentioned that he frequently got letters of acclaim from admirers addressed simply with his name. One letter bore only his picture on the outside, a slightly bald gentleman holding a shoe. That shows how well he was known. The story of his rise from shoe-pegging to position of Governor of Massachusetts and a millionaire shoe manufacturer, is still told in his advertisements.

Anyhow, he died last week at the age of seventy-nine. That isn't old as we now reckon age. Men ought to live to be a hundred now, even though our grandfathers rarely reached ninety. We ought to have pressed.

When he died, his going seemed like that of a familiar friend. But it brought to the fore his rise from obscurity, an American tradition. Newspapers have paid glowing tribute to him, giving American opportunity and spirit part of the credit. He deserves most. He was so typical of what America creates. His story is duplicated a thousand times. As inspiration it never gets old, and however details vary the underlying principle remains the same—that ambition, not vague longing, and a definite goal, not a hazy desire, sought with indomitable energy and enthusiasm spell success. Thus simply is the universal formula stated; some say that carrying it out is equally simple.

A TIME FOR CLARITY

Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, sentenced a negro girl to the electric chair for killing a policeman. Chicago has had another boy slayer sentenced to the gallows. The Franks case was nauseating, but it revealed things to us as they are and should have established a "precedent." Yet here are two young folks, both poor, going to their death when a few days before two rich boys got only imprisonment.

We don't like to brood over such things, but unquestionably, it is a time to get things straight, once and for all. If capital punishment is good, or necessary, then let it be that way. If it is not, abolish it; or if it must be for some and not for others, let us know why. Our judicial system must not be clouded by suspicion of partiality.

Under the magic of modern science, hardwood scraps and sawdust from the Ford saw mills and smelt, gashed and otherwise useless tree limbs from the Ford forests are now made to give up a score of valuable products...

The charcoal, pressed into briquettes, is suitable for producing the intensely hot fires required to purify high grade iron and also is being sold through Ford commissaries as an exceptionally clean and economical fuel for home use.

The group of by-products containing methyl alcohol and acid, after being neutralized with lime, go to stills where the alcohol is driven off. This, combining with the acetic acid makes calcium acetate and from this there is produced ethyl acetate, great quantities of which are used at the Highland Park plant of the company in the manufacture of leather cloth for automobile tops and upholstery.

The methyl alcohol coming off goes to the refinery and emerges as methyl acetone and menthol alcohol, useful as solvents or denaturing agents. The remaining oils and the gas are used as fuel.

Comprising the giant wood distillation plant at Iron Mountain are two main buildings, each with four and six-story sections. The carbonization building, where the process starts, is 300 feet long and 90 feet wide, and the distillation building, where chemical products are made, is 300 feet by 90 feet.

The buildings are furnished with heat by a steam power plant, a unique feature of which is a horizontal smokestack ten feet in diameter and more than 200 feet long, which connects the two big buildings, furnishing heat for wood drying.

Mechanical installation, drivers, reports, condensers, stills, etc., are the largest ever placed in a plant of the kind. The Stafford process of wood distillation which effects the greatest measure of wood conservation, is used, instead of the old oven process. The latter requires good sized pieces of wood, while the Stafford process can use anything of a cellulose structure—sawdust, shavings, chips, bark, corpeous, even nut shells, and convert it into charcoal and valuable by-products.

In every respect the Iron Mountain plant presents a high example of the extreme limits to which the Ford Motor Company goes in its endeavor to effect every economy and to contribute at all times as large a measure as possible to the conservation of national resources.

Williamston—For a short time last week, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Thompson held the highest offices in the world in their respective branches of Odd Fellowship, Mr. Thompson having assumed the duties of his office as Grand Sir, a short time before the retirement of Mrs. Thompson from the office of President of the Association of Rebekah Assemblies, which she has held for the past two years.—Enterprise.

Milan—The convention of the Second District of the American Legion and Auxiliary will be held in Milan October 24th. The local Post and Unit will for the first time act as hosts to the many delegates who are expected here. The meetings scheduled are the annual gatherings and it is expected that business of importance will come before the two bodies. Stockbridge—Here's some wonderfully interesting news for the patrons of our high school. As things are looking now, we have great hopes of getting back on the University list. Mr. Haight tells us that he thinks there are but two things in the way: First that two of the furnaces need to be changed to comply with the regulations; second the teaching force is not large enough to meet the state requirements with regard to the number of pupils in the school and the course that is being given. We understand that the School Board is working on the first and it seems to us that the second would be an easy proposition to meet.—Brief-Sun.

Manchester—One year ago Joe Bucos and Leo L. Watkins went to Monroe and dug up some roots of the Egyptian Lotus that mysteriously appeared in great numbers at the mouth of the River Raisin and along the shore of Lake Erie for some distance, making the locality famous, as the Lotus is found in only a few places outside of Egypt. The men used great care in securing the plants as well as in planting them in the upper pond in this village, but they are satisfied that the plants did not live and they talk of going after more roots. There are many German carp in the pond and river and it may be that they ate the plants. There are some ordinary white pond lilies in the river and it was among them that the Lotus roots were planted. We hope they have better luck next time.—Enterprise.

Nice Warm Blankets of All Kinds

You cannot afford to buy blankets of any kind without seeing our stock and getting our prices. We think you cannot get the equal of our blankets at our prices. Blankets are usually bought by the retailer three to six months ahead of the time that he has them shipped. When merchandise was very cheap this method was alright but in late years we have always been in the market for anything "special" and have not ever bought "futures." We are now receiving several big lots of blankets bought last week at decidedly less than most stores have paid. We can afford to, and will sell them at lower prices than any competition. This we promise to do. Further, we buy none but the best standard makes of blankets and standard make qualities that "outside" mills are continually striving to copy or equal. Why not buy the best, especially as we offer the best for less money.

- Pure Wool, (100 per cent) full size heavy fluffy blankets, in large even checks at $9.75, $12.50 to $20.00 pair
- Pure wool filling blankets, full size beautiful quality, all colors of large plaids at $7.50 and $8.50 three generations of the Barrett family... As a result of his interview it was arranged that Mr. Jones, second luminary of the firm of legal light...

"Not so bad, sir; not so bad, considering the shock of the accident, sir. And we are all so glad to see you—we who know you before, sir."

"Listen, Murdy," said Grant. "What's the idea of all this?" "Why," said the somewhat abashed official, "you know you are now the head of the firm, sir."

"Quite so. Because a chauffeur neglected to look over his shoulder I am converted from a cow puncher to a sir. Well, go easy on it. If a man's native dignity in him he doesn't need it piled on from outside."

"Very true, sir. I hope you will be comfortable here. Some memorable matters have been transacted within these walls, sir. Let me take your hat and cane."

"What for? Have you rattlers here? Oh, I see—more dignity. No, I don't carry a stick. Perhaps when I'm old."

"You'll have to try and accommodate yourself to our manners," said Jones, when Murdoch had left the room. "They may seem unnecessary, or even absurd, but they are sanctioned by custom and you know, it is a built-in feature of the position."

"So this was the room which had been the inner shrine of the firm of Grant & Son. The quarters were new, since he had left the East; the furnishings revealed that large simplicity which is elegance and wealth."

"What had life brought to his father that was worth the price those eyes reflected? Dennison found his own eyes moistening with memories now strangely poignant."

"Environment," the young man murmured, as he turned from the portrait, "environment, master of everything! And yet..."

A photograph of Roy stood on the mantelpiece, and beside it, in a little silver frame, was one of his mother. Grant pulled himself together and fell to an examination of the papers in his father's desk.

Grant's first concern was to get a grasp of the business affairs which had so unexpectedly come under his direction. To accomplish this he continued the practice of the London ranch; he was up every morning at five, and had done a day's work before the members of his staff began to assemble.

"Not so Miss Bruce. Miss Bruce had tapped on the door and entered with the words, 'I was your father's stenographer. He left practically all his personal correspondence to me. I worked at this desk in the corner, and had a private office through the door there into which I slipped when my absence was preferred.'"

"How do you think you're going to like your job?" she asked. Grant swung around quickly in his chair. No one in the staff had spoken to him like that; Murdoch himself would not have dared address him in so familiar a manner. He decided to take a firm position.

"Were you in the habit of speaking to my father like that?" "Your father was a man well on in years, Mr. Grant. Every man according to his age."

he had spent most of the day in death grips with some business rival. You see, I wasn't afraid of him; not the least bit. And I'm not afraid of you."

"I don't believe you are," Grant admitted. "You are a remarkable woman. I think you are able to distinguish right from wrong and to stand up for your independence and bravado. He turned to his desk, then suddenly looked up again. He was homesick for some one he could talk to frankly."

"I know what you mean," she said. "There's too much servility in it. And yet one may pay these courtesies and not be servile. I always 'air'd' your father, and he knew I did it because I wanted to do it because I had to. And I shall do the same with you once we understand each other."

"I think we can accept that as a working basis," she agreed. She produced notebook and pencil. "Very well, sir. Do you wish to dictate?"

Grant found a little apartment house on a side street, overlooking the lake. Here was a place where the vision could leap out without being beaten back by barricades of stone and brick. He rested his eyes on the distance, and assured the invigilating landlady that the rooms would do, and he would arrange for decorating at his own expense.

"As he was arranging the books on his shelf a clipping with the account of Zen's wedding fell to the floor. He sat down in his chair and read it slowly through. Later he went out for a walk."

It was in his long walks that Grant found the only real comfort of his new life. To be sure, it was not like roving the foothills; there was not the soft breath of the Chinook, nor the deep silence of the mighty valleys. But there was movement and freedom and a chance to think. The city offered artificial attractions in which the foothills had not competed; fastidiously kept parks and lawns; splashes of perfume and color; spraying fountains and vagrant strains of music.

He reflected that some merciful principle of compensation has made no place quite perfect and no place ever desirable. He remembered always that in his life in the middle of the physical hardship, the strain of long hours and broken weather. And here, too, in a different way, he was in the saddle, and he did not know which strain was the greater. He was beginning to have a higher regard for the men in the saddle of business. The world saw only their success, or it may be their pretense of success. But there was a different story from all that, which each one of them could have told for himself.

On this evening when his mind had been suddenly turned into odd channels by the finding of the newspaper clipping dealing with the wedding of Y.D.'s daughter, Grant walked far into the outskirts of the city, paying little attention to his course. It was late October; the leaves lay thick on the sidewalks and through the parks; there was in all the air that strange, sad, sweet dreariness of the dying summer.

Grant had tried heroically to keep his thoughts away from Tranley's wife. The past had come back on him, had rather engulfed him, in that little newspaper clipping. He let himself wonder where she was, and whether nearly a year of married life had shown her the folly of her decision. He took it for granted that her decision had been folly, and he arrived at that position without any reflection upon Tranley. Only Zen had been in love with him, with him, Dennison Grant; Booner or later she must discover the roguery of that fact, and yet he told himself he was big enough to hope she might never discover it. It would be best that she

But his attention was at once to be turned by very different matters. A stock market, erratic for some days, went suddenly into a paroxysm. Grant escaped with as little loss as possible for himself and his clients, and after three sleepless nights called his staff together. They crowded into the board-room, curious, apprehensive, almost frightened, and he looked over them with an emotion that was quite new to his experience. Even in the aloofness which their standards had made it necessary for him to adopt since he had grown up in his heart, quite unattached, a tender, sweet foliage of love for these men and women who were a part of his machine. Now, as he looked in their faces he realized how, like little children, they leaned on him—how, like little children, they feared his power and his displeasure—how, perhaps, like little children, they had learned to love him, too. He realized, as he had never done before, that they were children; that here and there in the mass of humanity is one who was born to lead, but the great mass itself must be children always, doing as they are bid.

"My friends," he managed to say, "we suddenly find ourselves in tremendous times. Some of you know my attitude toward this business in which we are engaged. I did not seek it; I tried to avoid it; yet, when the responsibility was forced upon me I accepted that responsibility. I gave up the life I enjoyed, the environment in which I found delight, the friends I loved. Well—our nation is now in a somewhat similar position. It has to go into a business which it did not seek, of which it does not approve, but which fate has thrust upon it. It has to break off the current of its life and turn it into unwhimpered channels, and we, as individuals who make up the nation, must do the same. I find myself, instead, and expect that you will, in a few hours I shall be in the Joseph place of you are single boys on a war."

"Oh, Miss Bruce, I beg your pardon. I am glad to see you." "Should forget him, as he had—almost—forgotten her. There was no doubt that would be best. And yet there was a delightful sadness in thinking of her still, and hoping that some day—He was never able to complete the thought."

He had been walking down a street of modest homes; the bare trees groped into a sky clear and blue with the first chill prelude of winter. A quick step fell unheeded by his side; the girl passed, hesitated, then turned and spoke.

"You are preoccupied, Mr. Grant." "Oh, Miss Bruce, I beg your pardon. I am glad to see you." "I find myself, instead, and expect that you will, in a few hours I shall be in the Joseph place of you are single boys on a war."

similar steps. For the rest—the business will be wound up as soon as possible, so that you may be released for some form of national service. You will all receive three months salary in lieu of notice. Mr. Murdoch will look after the details. When that has been done my wealth, or such part of it as remains, will be placed at the disposal of the government. If we win it will be well invested in a good cause. If we lose, it would have been lost anyway."

"No one knew just how the meeting broke up, but Grant had a confused remembrance of many handshakes and some tears. He was not sure that he had not, perhaps, added one or two to the flow, but they were all tears of friendship and of an emotion born of high resolve."

As he stood in his own office again, trying to get the events of those last few days into some sort of perspective, Phyllis Bruce entered. He motioned dumbly to a chair, but she came and stood by his desk. Her face was very white and her lips trembled with the words she tried to utter.

"I can't go," she managed to say at length. "Can't go? I don't understand?" "Hubert has joined," she said. "Hubert, the boy! Why, he is only in school—"

"He is sixteen, and large for his age. He came home confessing, and saying it was his first lie, and the first important thing he ever did without consulting mother. He said he knew he wouldn't be able to stand it if he told her first."

"Foolish, but heroic," Grant commented. "Be proud of him. It takes more than wisdom to be heroic." "And Grace is going to England. She was taking nursing, you know, and so gets a preference. We can't all leave mother."

"He found it difficult to speak. 'You wanted to go to the front?' he murmured. 'Of course, where else?' Her hand was on the desk; his own slipped over until it closed on it. 'You are a little heroine,' he murmured. 'No, I'm not. I'm a little fool to tell you this, but how can I stay—why should I stay—when you are gone?'"

She was looking down, but after her confession she raised her eyes to his, and he wondered that he had never known how beautiful she was. He could have taken her in his arms, but something, with the power of invisible chains, held him back. In that supreme moment a vision swam before him: a vision of a mountain and a girl as beautiful as even this Phyllis, who had wrapped him in her arms and said, "We must go and forget."

And he had not forgotten. "When he did not respond she drew herself slowly away. 'You will hate me,' she said. 'That is impossible!' he corrected, quickly. 'I am very sorry if I have let you think more than I intended. I care for you very, very much indeed. I care for you so much that I will not let you think I care for you more. Can you understand that?'"

"Yes, you like me, but you love some one else." "He was disconcerted by her intuition and the tears trickling with which she stated the case. 'I will take you into my confidence, Phyllis, if I may,' he said at length. 'Do I like you? I did love some one else. And that old attachment is still so strong that it would be hardly fair—it would be hardly fair—'

"Why didn't you marry her?" she demanded. "Because some one else did." "Oh!" Her hands found his this time. "I'm sorry," she said. "Sorry I brought this up—sorry I raised these memories. But now you—who have known—will know."

"I know—I know," he murmured, raising her fingers to his lips. "Time, they say, is a healer of all wounds. Perhaps—"

"No, it is better that you should forget. Only, I shall see you off; I shall walk my handkerchief to you; I shall smile on you in the crowd. Then—you will forget."

Four years of war add only four years to the life of a man, according to the record in the family Bible, if he happen to spring from stock in which that sacred document is preserved. But four years of war add twenty years to the gray matter behind the eyes—eyes which learn to dream and ponder strangely, and sometimes to shine with a hardness that has no part with youth. When Captain Grant and Sergeant Linder stepped off the train at Grant's old city there was, however, little to suggest the aging process that commonly went on among the soldiers in the great war. Grant had twice stopped an enemy bullet, but his fine figure and unburned health now gave no evidence of those experiences. Linder counted himself lucky to carry only an empty sleeve.

They had fallen in with each other in France, and the friendship planted in the foothills of the range country had grown, through the strange prunings and graftings of war, into a tree of very solid timber. Linder might have told you of the time his captain found him with his arm crushed under a wrecked piece of artillery, and that could have recounted a story of how he dragged unconscious out of No Man's Land, but for either to drink upon these matters only aroused the resentment of the other, and frequently led to exchanges between captain and sergeant totally incompatible with military discipline. They were content to pay tribute to each other, but each to leave his own honors undisturbed.

Together They Watched the Fire Die Out in the Silence of Their Empty House.

"Oh, Miss Bruce, I beg your pardon. I am glad to see you."

That Was When They Pulled Him—No Man's Land.

In No Man's Land. As he lay there waiting... he knew he had been forgotten. And he had thought many times of Phyllis Bruce. At first he had written to her, but she had not answered his letters. Obviously she meant him to forget. Nor had she come to the station to welcome him home. Perhaps she did not know. Perhaps... Many things can happen in four years.

Suddenly it occurred to Grant that it might be a good idea to call on Phyllis. He would take Linder along. That would make it less personal. He knew his man well enough to keep his own counsel, and eventually he reached the gate of the Bruce cottage as though by accident.

"Let's turn in here. I used to know these people. Mother and daughter very fine folk." Linder looked for an avenue of retreat. Grant barred his way, and together they went up the path to a strange woman, with a baby in her arm, met them at the door. Grant quivered for Mrs. Bruce and her daughter.

"Oh, you haven't heard?" said the woman. "I suppose you are in luck. Well, it was a sad thing—these have been sad times. It was when Hubert was killed I came to see you. Poor dear, she took that best awful, and couldn't be left alone. Phyllis was working in an office. I came here part-time to help. Then she was just beginning to get on again when we got the word about Grace. Grace, you know, was on a hospital ship. That was too much for her."

Grant received this information with a strange catching about his heart. "What became of Phyllis?" he asked to ask the question in an even louder voice. "Moved into the house after Mr. Bruce died," the woman said. "As my man came back declaring about that time Phyllis tried to go on as a nurse, but couldn't manage. Then her office was moved to another part of the city and she took her somewhere. At first she came in on my train, but not lately. I suppose she's trying to forget."

"Trying to forget," Grant muttered to himself. "How much of life is up of trying to forget?" Further questions brought no other information. The woman did not know the firm for which Phyllis worked; she thought it had to do with munitions. Suddenly Grant found himself impelled by a tremendous desire to locate this girl. He would not do it at once; possibly Joseph Murdoch could give him information. Strangely enough, he now felt that he would prefer to be rid of Linder's company. This was a matter of mere alone. He took Linder to a hotel where they arranged for lodgings. He located Murdoch without difficulty. It was now late, and the clerk came down the stairs with the stentorian impressions upon the heels of his untidy call, but his manner was soon given way to a cry of delight. "My dear boy!" he exclaimed, embracing him. "My dear boy—good evening, sir. You're a little old man, but still a boy, boy, you're home again. There was no doubting the depth of Murdoch's welcome. He ran Grant into the living-room, switched on the lights. In a moment he was back with his arm around Grant's shoulder; he had his restraining caresses, and he said, "My dear boy, you're home again. This is no night for you. Why didn't you send us word? There is a tradition that you are right in advance." Grant smiled at a tradition. There was a tradition that a Scotsman is a dog in any sentiment. Well, the woman!

He hurried up the stairs, took her in his wife, and she who had almost kissed him in the welcome of his home. He was a moment before he was aware of the presence of a woman in the room.

"First thing in a place is a woman," he remarked, when they had been in a moment. Words of similar import had, indeed, been the first remark upon every suitable opportunity for the last four months. An old woman, who had been four years in the making, is not to be enticed overnight and Grant, being better fortified than usual against the stress of a great meal, sought to be always last to suggest it. Linder accepted the situation with the complacency of a man who has been four years on army pay.

"Got any notion what you will do?" "Got any notion what you will do?"
