WILBUR HINDERER WEDS MANCHESTER GIRL TUESDAY

Will Be Held in Newly Furnished Home on East Street After Return From Honeymoon to Niagara Falls.

One of the season's prettiest weddings and one of much interest both here and in Manchester, occurred at four o'clock Tuesday afternoon at Emanuel's church, Manchester, when Mr. Wilbur Hinderer, Chelsea, and Miss Matilda Haarer of the neighboring village, were united in marriage, Rev. A. A. Schoon officiating. The double ring ceremony was used, Miss Helen Haarer and Master Pearl Widmayer, niece and nephew of the bride, acting as ring bearers.

The church was beautifully decorated in a color scheme of pink and blue with an archway of the same colors interspersed with roses, constructed at the altar.

Immediately preceding the ceremony P. F. Niehaus, Chelsea, sang "I Will Love You Always," and to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, played by Mrs. Dora Keyser of Manchester, principals of the wedding approached the altar accompanied by ringbearers, Miss Lena Haarer, sister of the bride, and bridesmaid, and Mr. Alfred Weinmayer, nephew of the groom, as best man.

The bride was beautifully gowned in a dress of pink satin and carried an arm bouquet of pink roses, the bridesmaid being gowned in a frock of blue silk, and also carried an arm bouquet of roses.

After the ceremony a three course wedding dinner was served at the home of the bride's sister, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Widmayer.

Mr. and Mrs. Hinderer left Wednesday noon for a wedding trip to Niagara Falls, expecting to return in a week and take up housekeeping in their newly furnished home on East street, Chelsea.

The bride of Tuesday is one of Manchester's most popular young ladies, a graduate of Manchester high school, and for several years a teacher in the schools of that village. Mr. Hinderer is a highly respected young man of Chelsea, and has for some years been associated with his brother in the successful conduct of a prosperous grocery business. Both young people are widely known and held in the highest esteem by friends and acquaintances who join in wishing them a happy and prosperous wedded life.

CIGARET STUB CAUSES DAMAGE TO AUTOMOBILE

Conrad Lehman has brought home his Lincoln sedan which had been in the factory at Detroit for more than a week undergoing replacement of the top. Two weeks ago, while parked on the street in front of the postoffice during band concert, someone carelessly threw a cigarette butt on the top of the car, burning a hole about eight inches in diameter. Fortunately Mr. Lehman discovered the fire before it had penetrated to the inside of the car and prevented a disastrous blaze. Construction of the top is such that the material would not burn readily, and it was not until Mr. Lehman had taken his car home and put it in the garage that smoke was smelled and an investigation made which disclosed the charred surface of the top.

THE SALVATION ARMY DRIVE

The Eastern Michigan Division of the Salvation Army, Home Service Department, are with us again to make their annual request for support. Last year Chelsea did more than the quota asked for, so let us do as well this year.

The work of the Army needs no special word from us, for all are familiar with their type of work, and most heartily approve of it. Let us again give them our most earnest support. Next week the canvass will be made, September 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12. Saturday, the 12th, is "tag day." The local committee will have charge of the work. Arrangements have not all been completed, but will be soon. So when solicited for help, do your best. Every penny of it goes into the regular work, so you need have no fear as to what is done with your money. The same plan as was worked last year will again be used. This work is most worthy one and we hope that no one will turn down the opportunity to assist.

The money collected will be turned over to the local committee, who will bank it and then send it in to headquarters. Mr. Hamilton, who was here last year, as organizer, is here again to assist in the work.

COMMITTEE.

NOTICE

The ship's itinerary calls for principal cities between New York and Minneapolis-St. Paul, passing over Chelsea on the return trip.

How She Saved It

Betty's mother had been away all day shopping. When she returned home Betty met her at the door and proudly announced: "I saved a penny today." Her mother patted her on the head and said: "That's fine, Betty. How did you do that?" The little girl looked up and smiled. "It wasn't easy," she replied, "but this is the way I did it. I didn't ask daddy for a penny!"

India's Deep-Sea Fishing
Deep-sea fishing schemes are being investigated by the government of Madras with a view to augmenting the food supply of India. The prospects of this development are not only advantageous to the increase of food supply but also to the production of manure.—Familly Herald.

SALINE—George Needham has a cow that liked to help herself from a barrel of feed that was handy to get at, daffily removing the cover at will. George tried all sorts of tricks to cure her of the habit, to no avail, until he rigged up a shotgun, loaded with a powerful blank cartridge that would fire when the cover was disturbed. Once was enough for the animal and she now takes her feed when it is doled out to her.—Observer.

BRIGHTON—It is with a great deal of pleasure that we are able to announce this week that a factory will be started in Brighton in the very near future. There has been a great deal of talk about some kind of a factory for a long time but nothing has developed so that we dare make an announcement. ### View of Friendship

I have never given much encouragement to friendship; I have done little for my friends, and they have done little for me. One of the ideas which I have so often to come with is that friendship, as it is generally understood, is an injustice and a blunder, which only allows you to distinguish the good qualities of a single person and blinds you to those of others who are perhaps more deserving of your sympathy.—Ernest Renan.

Making Mucilage

To prepare mucilage take the desired quantity of gum arabic and add sufficient water to dissolve the gum.

Odd Christmas Custom

On Christmas eve in South Slavonia barren fruit trees have a bad time, for a peasant threateningly swings an ax against them, and only on the three-repeated entreaty of a neighbor standing by does he at last consent to spare the tree.

The Rock of Ages

The lowest rock in the earth's crust is granite—called, for this reason, the mother rock. It is also the least revealing, since it shows no evidence of animal or vegetable life. In thickness it is from two to ten times that of all the other rocks combined. A hard "mother"—but, like all motherhood, enduring!

Pretty Things that are made at Home

under sleeves prove very useful, worn under three-quarter length sleeves in the frock, because they can be easily kept clean.

Costume flowers, employ both ribbons and millinery flowers—mostly the latter—and are used on the majority of afternoon dresses and practically all evening dresses. Nothing flourishes with equal exuberance except the boutonniere. Everybody wears a flower of some sort, pinned somewhere, about the neck or on the coat lapel. Gardenias, chrysanthemums, roses, pansies, and many other blossoms finish the summer costume.

Even palm leaf and other plain fans come in for a colorful finishing touch in the hands of beauty-loving women. A palm-leaf fan is shown in the picture with a floral pattern sketched on it with bright silk floss and a small heart-shaped bamboo fan is painted with flowers and a bright-winged bird.

But the small palm-leaf fan is at its prettiest when it is trimmed with narrow satin ribbon and finished with ribbon or millinery flowers. Ribbon about an inch and a half, or two inches wide, in any desired color is used for winding the handle and making a finishing bow at the top of the handle. Here a cluster of flowers or a little nosegay is posed. The binding is usually shirred on and the fans may be painted, but are pretty anyway.

The Baseball Umpire

By ARTHUR B. HERBERT

(© 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

"RUNNER OUT!"
First Baseman Crowley glared at Umpire Tom Hayden, glared and twisted his lips in significant threat. Hayden's flattened hands, palms downward, stopped in midair, hesitated; then the left dropped dejectedly, the right moving shamefully over his shoulder in the gesture that spells failure to a baserunner.

"Runner out!" Hayden announced it doggedly and closed his ears to the catcalls from the stands. But he could not close them to the unmerciful denunciation from within, the sickening realization that once more he had betrayed his position to save himself.

Five years of faithful service behind the umpire's mask stood to Hayden's credit, five years that would this season culminate in promotion to the big leagues. Five years of faithful and joyful service, until this season Red Crowley had made his appearance with the Pointers—Red Crowley, the one man who could point to that one spot in Hayden's past that would not stand exposure.

In humiliation and self-condemnation Hayden made the trip to his hotel. Absent-mindedly he received his mail, then lightened at the familiar script on one of the envelopes.

"My big chance at last!" Manager Tompkins has promised to let me start a game in the Pointers' series—a regular berth if I win—but you know that I have the stuff, and I'll stand that Pointer crowd on their ears!"

It seemed but a few years back that Hayden had romped on the floor with the writer of that letter—now Recruit Pitcher Tom Emerson of the Panthers. All the sentiment of his bachelor heart Hayden had centered in this boy, his nephew and his pitching heir.

The figure of Crowley crossing the foyer terminated Hayden's reverie abruptly. What would Crowley do? Would Crowley interfere in young Tom's game? Umpire Curran would be behind the plate during the Panthers' season; Hayden would not have to call Tom's delivery to Crowley.

A week later the Pointers came to the plate for the last game of the series with the Panthers, to face the delivery of young Tom Emerson. His last game with the Pointers, Hayden reassured himself as, from his station near first base, he tried to keep his gaze from the repellent Crowley and on his protégé in the pitcher's box.

In the third inning fate took a hand to upset Hayden's assurance. Curran went down, hit by a wicked foul tip, and the injured man took the field. Hayden donned the mask and chest protector with a feeling of foreboding, which increased to near panic when his gaze fell upon a gray-clad, patriarchal figure in one of the boxes. Caruthers, the league president.

Crowley opened the Pointers' fifth. Three balls, two strikes. He turned to glare at the umpire, then nodded significantly toward Caruthers' box. Panic seized Hayden. The pitcher wound up for the first strike his uncle had taught him to use in emergencies. It split the plate.

"Ball four—take your base!" Hayden could not miss the look of puzzled hurt on the youngster's face. And had he looked toward the boxes he would have seen a gray-clad figure viciously chewing a cigar and crushing a letter in his hand.

In the sixth the Panthers scored twice; the Pointers went out in order. Another for the Panthers in the seventh. Crowley strode to the coach's box, but his attention was fixed not on the Pointer runner on first base, but on the umpire. And again Hayden quailed. Before the seventh inning terminated the Pointers scored two unearned runs.

Hayden did not dare to meet the accusing eyes of his nephew as he called each added run decision. The ninth—one more nightmare inning, and freedom. Three to two for the Panthers. In the last half of the final inning Emerson showed his first unsteadiness—two passes in a row. Then two easy outs.

Crowley glanced at the umpire, then sauntered toward the presidential box. One more put-out and this fearful game would be over! But panic seized Hayden again and two bad decisions walked the batter, filling the bases. With a confident leer Crowley stepped to the plate.

Strike one—Crowley swung for it. Strike two, straight over the plate; Crowley glared at the umpire.

"The next is a ball unless I kill it," he warned evenly.

Again panic seized Hayden. Young Tom out there in the box, the great old game of baseball itself—what did they matter? He had himself to look out for; self-protection is the—

The ball cut the plate. Hayden stood mute while Crowley turned viciously.

"Strike three—batter out!" Hayden lifted his head proudly and walked past the cursing player, out to the boy he had trained, the boy who should have had a shut-out. And the gray-clad, patriarchal figure spat out a chewed cigar butt, smiled contentedly. Then he slowly and methodically tore up first a printed resignation which had been ready for Hayden's signature, and then the miserable switch-letter which had brought him to the park. Its contents had been old knowledge to him, and Hayden had just vindicated his chief's original judgment.

A fig bush and a fig tree do bloom, but the blossoms cannot be seen without cutting into the fig. It is probably for this reason that some people have the impression that they do not bloom.

No Infidel Hands

Infidel hands had little to do with the building of the Mohammedan mosque in Paris, for workmen were brought there from Mohammedan countries, but the Mohammedan wood-carvers sent from Morocco to finish the woodwork used electric tools in their work.

Menu Terms

The terms "table d'hôte" and "table d'hôte" are both French. The former literally means "according to the order" or "bill of fare." This means that any dish listed on the bill of fare may be selected at the given price. "Table d'hôte" literally means "table of the landlord." It implies a meal of several courses which is served at a fixed price.

Land of Silver

The Argentine republic, called Argentina, is Spanish and derived its name from the Latin word meaning silver. The original name for the country was De La Plata. The reason that silver has been thus associated with the name of the country is that Diaz de Solis, the discoverer, so named it in consequence of the silver ornaments worn by the natives.

Important Southern City

Pensacola is the home of a large fishing industry. Its fleets go as far off as the coast of Yucatan. Pensacola is also a large exporter of lumber. The United States aviation station for the Gulf is located here. A few miles west is the Perdido river, the boundary between Florida and Alabama.

Curious "Cures"

To wear a spider in a nutshell round one's neck is supposed to cure fever. The superstition comes from Brittany. But the practice might imply that the wearer of the spider suffered from mental trouble, or perhaps the fever would be preferable! Some of the Breton superstitions are astonishing. Sunstroke is said to be curable by eating a fried mouse!

Sailors' Superstitions
Sailors in the good old days had many curious ideas about the wind, but they seem to have varied a good deal as regards latitude and in the different oceans and routes. Thunder, also, according to its nature and the quarter from which it came, meant evil in one form or another. But the modern seafaring man does not bother his head about most of these things.

The shell of the earth beneath the Pacific ocean is relatively thinner than it is in any other part of the world. Nanking Once Populous Nanking, the "southern capital" of China, was founded by the first emperor of the Ming dynasty, who came to the throne in 1368. It was built on the site of a city known to be two thousand years old. At one time Nanking was said to have a population of 4,000,000. The Tai Ping rebels stormed the city in 1853 and swept away its magnificent buildings, including the famous porcelain pagoda.

Many Famous Alumni

Christ Church college, Oxford, in its 400 years has contributed its share of illustrious names to history. American as well as English. William Penn was a student of the house until he was sent down for his religion, as was George Grenville, whose stamp act led to the Revolution and the loss of the American colonies.

Standing Causes Strain

Standing causes more strain on the arches of the feet than walking because there is no relief from weight bearing. In standing, many persons can walk miles without tiring, but suffer considerably if compelled to stand in a street car or elevated coach for 30 minutes.—Hygeia.

Derivation of "Mary"

Authorities have found that the name "Mary" so frequently used in the Bible, does not carry with it the connotation of bitterness, as had been supposed for so long. It comes from moria, the name or salvia of Palestine, a flower of pleasant fragrance. Mount Moriah was named for it—and later it was contracted into Mary.

Planted in West

There are many species of roses in our great western region, few of them in cultivation, not all of them yet locally ticketed by science, says Nature Magazine. Most planted is Prickly Rose, a relative of the Cinnamon, the leaflets downy, even purplish below.

What He Saw in the Transom
By MILES OVERHOLT
(© 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

A CIGAR is a whole lot like a woman, isn't it? You give it a few puffs and it'll glow and bluish and adjust itself to any mouth.
But I guess Jerry Bristol, who, until only a short time ago, thought women were only stenographers and machines, has had a stranger experience with them than I ever had.
Jerry is the junior partner in the firm of Belknap & Bristol. One day old man Belknap handed Jerry a cigar, and Jerry lit it up. Miss Brooks, the firm's stenographer, was taking some dictation from the senior partner that day, which is why Jerry smoked. She worked in Jerry's office every other day and those were the days Jerry omitted the cigar. But if he knew the women I know—
Well, sir, Jerry set fire to one of those gift cigars, half closed his eyes, and went and enjoyed his cigar.
It must have been after about 25 minutes of ordinary, talkative silence that Jerry, suddenly, rubbed his eyes and turned toward me, grinning foolishly.
"Hap," he said, "I've found her! The ideal of my dreams—THE girl! I see her in the smoke! I see her as if in a vision... she is working over a small table—and—she is making cigars—these cigars. I see her place the tip of her tongue to the wrapper, so it will hold the cigar together!"
I didn't pay much attention to his remarks, so he ambled right along: "A big bully goes over and scolds her—shakes his fist—the brute! She's bending over the table now—he's gone. No, he's back—talking to her—berating her, I suppose, poor little kid. Now he's gone—and she's rolling cigars again—"

I don't know what else he would have seen, but the postman dropped in just then, and Jerry rubbed his eyes dazedly, looked around the room like maybe he thought the wicked enchantment had gone, and went to work.
But Jerry was plumb ruined for commercial purposes. Yes, ma'am, he had gone and fallen in love with a vision.
"Poor little girl, I'll bet that slave-driver works her to death," he muttered to himself that evening after he had come home to our bachelor place. "I wish I knew how to find her. There must be some reason for it," he went on, ignoring my kind words. "You don't see visions every day, I wonder if she could be real?"
Well, sir, the next day after Miss Brooks had finished his work and had gone into the old man's office, Jerry touched a fire to his second torch—after having touched Belknap for three cigars—and in a few minutes I heard him mutter:
"She's there! I see her again, rolling cigars. Her boss is standing there—he's waving a hand—scolding her again, I guess. Oh, I'd like to get at him!"

His voice trailed off and he puffed in silence for several minutes. Then he took his feet off the desk and began to get busy as someone entered the office.
But that vision, or the cigars, or something began to affect him terribly. He was worrying about that vision girl, you could see that. So Belknap urged him to take a vacation. A couple of weeks later he packed up and went to Cuba, to the Philippines, everywhere they make Havana cigars, looking for that girl, and he came back in six months almost a wreck.

It was summer by the time Jerry had given up looking for his girl, and then he came home and was as sad as an oyster till one day.
He was sitting at his desk and he elevated his feet just as he used to do when he smoked, and gazed upward like he used to peer into the smoke—and he saw his vision—a smokeless one, now!

He took his feet down and went over to his partner's door, looked inside, came back, looked up and again saw the vision.
Then he went to the door again, looked up at the wide-open transom, and solved the whole mess. The dark background of the ceiling, centered the glass into a mirror, and he plainly saw his own reflection. Stepping back to the desk, he looked up, got the angle of the reflection from the transom, and saw—what he saw.

A few minutes later he went to the door and spoke to Miss Brooks, the stenographer.
"Will you come into my office?" he asked.
She would. She went in.
"Will you marry me this afternoon?" he asked. She said she would. And she did.

Those brown catalogues and stamps did look something like cigars through the transom and smoke that way, I reckon. But it wouldn't have made much difference, love being kind of blind and deaf.
Old man Belknap does look a bit fierce when he dictates, gesturing like he meant it, and all—
But the way it worked out just goes to show what smoking will do to a good man if he doesn't curb the vice in time. Look at Jerry Bristol—it drove him to marriage.

Fine American Scenery

Near Fountain City, Wis., is scenery that rivals that along the Rhine river in Germany to the extent that Fountain City is called the Rhine city of the Mississippi valley. The tributary to the Mississippi that possesses this beauty is the Waumadsee river, and among its sights is a bluff naturally chiseled into the form of a gigantic man.

Words of Length

The word "anthropomorphologically," which has 23 letters, is quoted by one authority as the longest English word. If you consult a textbook of organic chemistry you will find numerous words longer than this, but as they are technical and compounded words, such as "arabinoxylomethylethylhydrazonol," they should perhaps be excluded from the discussion.—Exchange.

"THE GOOSE HANGS HIGH"

IS REAL-FILM TREAT

"The Goose Hangs High", the new Paramount picture, which shows at the Princess Theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, September 3 and 4, is further proof that James Cruze's claim to directorial greatness is not based on one or two successful films. The producer of "The Covered Wagon", "Merton of the Movies" and other cinema hits has turned out another photoplay that bids fair to attain screen immortality.

The story is an adaptation of the popular stage success by Lewis Beach and deals in intimate, human style with the common, every-day experiences of an average American family. Three children of Bernard and Eunice Ingals, after demonstrating their complete modernness in a selfish disregard of everyone's feelings except their own, show their real fineness when they learn their father has lost his money.

The cast, apparently chosen for suitability rather than established name, is perfect. The various players portray their parts with such sincerity and feeling that for the time being you forget they are acting. Particularly deserving of honorable mention are Constance Bennett, Myrtle Stedman, Esther Ralston, George Irving and Edward Peil, Jr., who effectively handle the featured roles.

Peculiar Snake

The glass, or jointed, snake is a harmless snake-like lizard, a large species occurring in the southeastern states. It takes its name from the brittleness of the tail, which is so slightly connected with the rest of the body that it will easily break off.

The species found in this country is usually of a greenish gray. This lizard eats great numbers of ground insects and crickets.

Colors Affect Growth

Experiments on guinea pigs, carried on in the research laboratory of the Paint Manufacturers' association, show that young animals, and presumably children, as well, grow more rapidly and thrive better in rooms with walls painted in light, cheerful colors than in darker-tinted apartments. The tests were conducted by Dr. H. A. Gardener, who found that the colors were red, blue, white and light tan.

Yaph's Spinnaker

A spinnaker is a large, loose, ballooning sail used as a supplement to the ordinary sails of racing yachts, only used since 1895. It was at first known as a "Whip" because of the yacht Niobe, owned by an English yachtsman named Gordon, in the Royal London sailing race of the above-mentioned year. Next year the Sphinx also carried such a sail, and the seamen dubbed it the Spinnaker and later the spinnaker. Answer.

ENSCONCED in the doorway that gave access to the offices above Sildam's jewelry store, Jim Prescott alternately poked out his head and glared into Sildam's window and then ducked backward as his wife seemed about to turn away from the counter within. The fact that she had already turned away half a dozen times and had turned back again did not ease the rage that seethed in his heart against her and against the good-looking man who stood by her side.

Only six months married, he raged, internally, and his wife was receiving letters from another man and meeting him on the sly. He might have known that a widow would be up to tricks especially a widow named "Dolly"—of all names in the world. But he—Why! He had believed in her so utterly that he had not even resented her keeping her first husband's photograph on the table under his very nose!

He had followed her downtown to Sildam's. He would wait till she went away. Quick. She was going now! Barely he managed to get back into the doorway and to turn his back to the street when he heard her high heels tip-tap past behind him.

But the man was still in the store. Here he came now! Out on the sidewalk, directly in front of the man, Jim stepped. "I want to have a word with you," he rasped. "Good God! You're Tom Maddox! You're my wife's husband!"

The stranger frowned with apparent perplexity. "Well, no," he demurred. "I'm not Tom Maddox; I'm Tom Haddon, which is pretty near it. But I'm not anybody's husband. I'm sorry, old man," he rejoined. "But I've never seen your wife and—"

"Never seen her! You were standing by her in that store, buying her jewelry, and—"

"What? Was that lady your wife? I congratulate you, sir! But I never saw her before. And I'm getting rather fed up on this line of talk. Understand!"

"You'll get plenty besides talk before I'm through," grated Jim. "If you're telling the truth, come home with me and say that to her face in my presence."

The stranger considered. "Yes! I'll go with you."

"All right. Here's our trolley car. Jump in."

Side by side, without interchanging a word, the two rode to Jim's house and entered. Jim went to the foot of the stairs. "Dolly," he called. "Come down to the parlor. I want you to meet some one."

"All right," floated down the stairs as Jim ushered his companion into the parlor and pointed to the table.

"There!" he jeered. "Say that isn't your picture, if you dare."

"Tom Haddon, indeed." "Of course it's my picture," he said. "But—"

But Dolly tripped in at the door, and Jim turned on her. "Here's your husband," he shouted.

Dolly looked at Haddon and gasped. "Goodness!" she cried. "I thought your face looked familiar when I caught a glimpse of it at Sildam's. My! This is a surprise! What's it all about?"

Haddon shrugged his shoulders.

FORD MAKES STATEMENT CONCERNING NEW CARS

Edsel B. Ford, president of the Ford Motor company, in a statement issued yesterday following the announcement of improved Ford bodies and chassis refinements, said:

"We do not want the impression to prevail that we are producing new Ford cars."

"Bodies for Ford cars have been materially improved—but the Model T chassis remains unchanged except for a lowering of the frame and a few other important changes. Bodies in four types, have been completely redesigned and built lower to contribute to better appearance, driving and riding comfort and roadability of the cars."

"Body improvements—and chassis refinements at this time are more pronounced than at any previous time since the adoption of the Model T chassis. They are, however, entirely in accordance with the policy of the Ford Motor company to give to the public the benefit of every improvement which we find practical for Ford cars."

"By preserving the design of the Model T chassis, the company is safeguarding continued good service for owners of approximately 9,000,000 Ford cars and trucks now in use throughout the country as well as for new car purchasers."

"Ask your husband," he counseled. "He insists that I am your husband."

"Oh! He would, of course. I told him you were, you know."

"What! Both men spoke at once, but in very different tones."

"Certainly. That is, I told him that that photo was my husband's. That was a fib, of course. I pretended to be a widow to protect myself; and I had to play the part. I bought a ring and some crepe and a photo of my late husband and I changed my boarding house. I made a pretty good amateur."

"Ah! Can that stuff," roared Jim. "You needn't think you're going to fool me with that sort of stuff. You've been writing letters and meeting such other—and you're married. That's all there is to it."

"Oh! All right! If you insist! Behind Jim's back Dolly winked at Haddon. "There's no use in denying it, Jim dear," she went on. "I confess, I never was divorced from Tom; and now that you've found me out I might as well go back to him."

"Bully!" cried Haddon. "I—"

"No you don't!" Jim sprang between the two. "You're not going to walk off with my wife that way. You've got to prove you're her husband; and then you've got to fight me for her."

Jim hushed, as from behind Dolly's soft arms went round his neck. "You dear boy," she half sobbed. "I was only fooling. I wouldn't leave you for the world. I—I didn't pretend to be a widow for protection. I did it because widows caught all the beaux and I was afraid they'd catch you."

"Huh! Jim straightened up. 'Catch me when you were around.' Not much."

"You dear! And Jim, I went to Sildam's to see about your birthday present. The letters you saw were about it."

"Don't say another word, dear."

"I won't. If you'll apologize to Mr. Haddon!"

And Jim did it.

A SWEET JOB

B

ERTRAM DARAND, M. D., almost passed by. Only the most capricious of impulses turned him in at the huge, imposing gray
stone mansion of the Coswells, and so brought him knowledge of the one matter which, above every thing else, he wanted to know. This supreme impulsive question was:

What had happened to Kitty Hewitt?
It had been amazing to him how fast for her safety had, during the past week, dominated his thoughts;
the more amazing whenever he re-ckoned the hours—not four, altogether—through which she had been an actual factor in his life. Were he merely to obliterate the memory of half of one night, drop out one short flight of time between two in the morning and dawn, Kitty Hewitt—and whatever might have happened to her—would become nothing to him. Yet Bertram Darand, M. D., could not have obliterated that memory had he wanted to;
and, decidedly, he did not want to.
That night, at the beginning of those nervous hours, he had been in bed at his somewhat shabby lodgings—an ordinary, insignificant, unsuccessful young doctor.

Outside in the storm, at the door behind his window, had stood that girl—that strange girl who had breathlessly summoned him: "Oh, hurry, please!
Surgical bag, doctor!" She proved to be young and fair and lithe and most extraordinarily alive. Her name, she said, was Hewitt.

One of the gang had been shot; a young man he was scarcely more than a boy and rather handsome. Bertram recognized the pale face: Eddie Pel-len—"Eddie the Immune," newspapers called him—renowned gangster, so serious was his wound that he was likely to die; that was why the sinister, pig-eyed man called Gramme, who watched over him, had sent Hewitt—Kitty, Gramme called her—in such haste for a surgeon. It was too late now to correct her mistake in the man she had brought, so Gramme had set Bertram Darand, M. D., to work.

And there, in the bedroom of the flat, with the lovely Kitty Hewitt helping him, he had executed the most skillful operation of his life to save the wounded gunman, "Eddie the Immune." And when the job was done, Bertram knew that Gramme meant to take no chances with him; Gramme meant to make him perfectly "safe."

He had paid him a generous fee, but in the same moment posted men to follow him from the flat and "get him." Beyond a bit of a doubt they would have finished him but for what Kitty Hewitt did. For she, who had by mistake brought him into that place, also got him out and away, safe from them.
She had disappeared—to return, to them. But what was the price she had to pay? How had the gang finished her for double-crossing them?

It tormented Bertram Darand whenever he had thought about her; and this torment formed a habit of surprising him at sudden intervals when he was consciously occupying his mind with other matters. After all, who was Kitty Hewitt—and what was her relation to those men? There was nothing he could do in her behalf; for her punishment—death or whatever else the evil-looking Gramme had decreed—must, several days ago, have been wrought.

Oddly enough, Kitty Hewitt's punishment visualized itself in startling images at the hour of half-past four on this cool November afternoon as Bertram, having concluded a period of formal idleness at his downtown office, office (where patients, as he insisted, were a rare and January stream-let), was sauntering northward along Lake Shore Drive. Approaching the curved gray stone residence of Hugh Coswell, he recalled that Mrs. Cos-well was entertaining.

Bertram loathed afternoon tea. He was not the sort of chap one encounters at stuffy functions of the sort, surrounded by platoons of chattering, fashionably gowned women; there was none of that about young Doctor Darand. Yet he turned and went in.
An obsequious footman in mulberry livery took his things and another ushered him toward Mrs. Coswell's enormous drawing room, done in ivory and gold and hung with tapestries;
and at once Bertram became the center of an accusing circle.

"Bertram, where have you been keeping yourself?"
"You can't tell me you're so frightfully busy yet?"
"My dear, one must resort to tonsillitis at least to have any hope of seeing Doctor Darand these days!"

Arista Coswell was known as a smart hostess; today the yellow-paneled music room and the spacious lounge beyond were cluttered with tables of the Chinese gambling game mah-jong, and for the instruction of novitiates at the game and as a sort of umpire to smooth over perplexities of the scoring, a Chinese girl in colorful costume moved gracefully from table to table.

Glancing up from a table where she had just settled a dispute over the scoring, her gaze encountered Bertram. He stared at her suddenly startled. For she was not Chinese at all—she was a white girl; she was the girl who had summoned him that amazing night; the girl who had been the messenger of Gramme—and the friend of Eddie Pel-len—"Eddie the Immune"—she was Kitty Hewitt!

So Gramme had not "got" her! Bertram thrilled at the sight of her, and drew a deep, exultant breath. Kitty Hewitt, this fair, graceful girl, had not been too outrageously punished because of him!

Gazing across the room, she recognized him.
"How do you do?" he murmured stupidly.

Kitty Hewitt bowed prettily and made a slight, graceful gesture with her beautiful hands in keeping with her part as a Chinese girl.

When Arista Coswell was beside him, "This is Miss Wing," she said to Bertram. "She's wonderful at mah-jong. Have you met her?"

"Yes," answered Bertram uncertainly.
"Yes, I know her." Stupid he felt—yet to deny acquaintance with her would have been more stupid still.

Miss Wing interposed, in her pleasing, light manner: "Doctor Darand goes about so much."
The hostess was saying: "Then you must know the game, Bertram. Just find a place somewhere, will you?"
And, smiling, she moved on.

Miss Wing, teacher of mah-jong, smiled even more placidly and prettily, and turned to the nearest table to continue her picturesque profession.

Watching her, gay and smiling as she moved among the tables, young Doctor Darand compared her with the other girls in the room, and saw no one to rival her in alacrity, in personality, in aliveness and grace. The loveliest of the debutantes, the most attractive of the younger married set, failed to match up with this Kitty Hewitt—companion of gunmen.

Abruptly Bertram crossed to a window.
"She's here," he said to himself, "to find out something for them, of course.
Oleiver, her learning mah-jong and setting up as an expert. She can get in anywhere with that!"

Bertram thought of that meager flat wherein Gramme had greeted him and set him to work on the gunshot wound of "Eddie the Immune." Then he looked across at the bright figure in the blue and rose silk costume, moving so blithely between the tables; and his shoulders jerked in an involuntary shudder. What was the real plan behind Kitty Hewitt's presence here?

Doctor Darand sauntered back into the mah-jong room, his nervousness lessening. Nothing had happened, and now people were going, groups at the tables were breaking up; by the thousands of dollars each moment the loot in jewels and platinum was disappearing. Miss Wing had deserted her tables. He caught a glimpse of bright blue silk among the green palms of the sun room beyond, and, entering,
found her.

"Well?" he challenged.

"Very," she assured him confidently.
He closed a heavy glass door which shut off the sun room from the lounge;
the door at the other end was already shut; they were alone.

"So," he said, half accusingly,
"Gramme didn't do much to you?"

"Thanks to you, no." There was a note of gratitude in her voice.

"Thanks to me?"

"Of course. Didn't you keep quiet?
You were wise enough to stay away from making trouble. That's what saved me when I went back."

"What's the game here?" he demanded abruptly.

"Why do you want to know?" she counted.

"No—harmless curiosity, perhaps."

"And if I don't tell you, what'll you do? Call the police?"

"Perhaps," he threatened.

"Really?" she said lightly. "And if I do tell you—then what?" Her blue eyes regarded him for a second, then she glanced away casually and smiled.

"Maybe it would surprise you if you know what a moral errand brought me here today." She seated herself on the top of a low, white enameled stepladder, used for reaching the flowers which grew in boxes and baskets hung from the glass arch of ceiling, and, reaching up, plucked a crimson petunia and tossed it down to him. Anyone glancing through the glass door would believe that Bertram Darand was merely playing with the pretty mah-jong teacher; and no one, just now, would interrupt.

"I assure you," she went on coolly,
"that what you saw here—my teaching people to play mah-jong—is the most evil part of my work in this house. The other part is tracing a mystery."

"Mystery," he asked, "of what?"

"Lost jewels, doctor. A wonderful string of pearls. The price paid was,
I understand, thirty-seven thousand dollars."

"Price, paid by whom?"

Kitty Hewitt glanced toward the glass doors; no one was near; she leaned toward him. "Our host—who ought to be here today, wouldn't you say—hasn't he?"

SPIRITUALITY, THE WORLD'S BEST
COURSE, Mrs. Bessie Seeger, Box
98, Green Lake, Mich. 9-3

Supply About Exhausted
Research may soon be working for more diseases to conquer.

"Hugh Coswell?" Bertram's eyes brows lifted. "Why, I happen to know he's out of town on business. What about the pearls?"
"That's it, doctor—what about them?"
She reached up and plucked another petunia. Last week, in New York, Hugh Coswell bought a certain string of pearls for thirty-seven thousand cash, and brought them with him to Chicago. Now, thirty-seven thousand is quite a price—even for Hugh Coswell—to pay for a string of pearls.
He'd hardly forget he had them; he'd mention them, wouldn't you think?
"Well—he hasn't."
"How do you know?"
"Oh—I have ways of knowing.
Pearls, pearls, is a subject I've been bringing up between squabbles of mah-jong all afternoon. I've made myself almost a pest with my passion for pearls; I've started conversation about them until I flatter myself I know who possesses about every fine string of pearls in so-called Chicago society.
The surprising fact, really the shocking fact, Doctor Darand, is that Mrs.
Coswell owns practically no pearls at all; she does not like them; she prefers sapphires; all her friends know it; surely her husband must know, yet he's recently invested thirty-seven thousand dollars in a string of pearls."
"Perhaps he is playing pearls for a rise, Doctor Darand? Perhaps it is merely an investment—what do you think? Perhaps, on the other hand, these pearls mean definite danger to our host who happens to be away. He and his wife are supposed to be happy; they have three beautiful children; his home is a great advantage to him in the important position of public trust he holds. He could scarcely survive a scandal; yet, believe me, one threatens him and this house, Doctor Darand.
Believe me, no talk of his friends, no argument, no persuasion can save him.
There is only one way out for him. I am here today to help prepare the way."
"You mean," he accused, "Pellen is preparing to hold Coswell up and shoot him?"
She raised her head and looked up

She Seated Herself on the Top of a Low, White-Enamelled Stepladder, and, Reaching Up, Plucked Up a Crimson Petunia and Tossed it Down to Him.

at the flowering basket above. "You're thinking about that policeman," she said. "That Eddie happened to— Tell me, doctor, don't surgeons ever kill people by mistake?"

"By mistake, of course," he admitted.

"That's how that killing happened, by mistake," Kitty Hewitt said emphatically. "This won't be like that at all. This is going to be a sweet job.
I'm perfectly sure."

"A sweet job?" said Bertram.
"I'm sure of it."

She stepped down from the ladder blithely and stood, slight and graceful in her bright Chinese garments, gazing up at him, smiling. "I'll give you a ring at your office tomorrow. I must be going now."

Next day, toward noon, as he sat idly in his downtown office, where so few patients found their way, the telephone rang sharply. It was Kitty Hewitt's voice—and at sound of it Doctor Darand's heartbeats quickened.

"Do you know the cement roads northwest of the city?" she began abruptly. "Do you know the Rand road? Well, stop where it turns off and I'll be there at nine tonight. And wear evening clothes, doctor; dinner coat."

"What?" he said in wonderment.

"Evening clothes, or nothing doing."
Ironically he asked: "Surgical bag, too?"

She replied lightly: "You might bring it. No harm to have it along.
But this is a sweet job, I told you; an evening clothes job. Dinner and dinner. Well—you're coming?"

"I am."

"You'll be alone, of course; that's understood!"

Whistling Marmosets Cowboy guides make pets of the whistling marmosets in Glacier National park. They tame these marvelous whistlers in some instances so that the little animals sit up for them like a dog and freely give their musical entertainment as a begging prelude to being fed. It is estimated there are a million marmosets in this great animal colony that inhabits the rocky mountain country.

Freckles
Freckles is a form of tan, the pigmentation or discoloration of skin collecting in spots instead of being distributed evenly, says a noted doctor.

Where We Get "Clabber" Clabber is derived from the Irish "clab," meaning thick milk. An old Provincial name for milk in this part of Scotland was "clabber," meaning "bony," being an adaptation of the Irish "balloine," meaning milk.

Justice Great Virtue
As to be perfectly just is an attribute of the divine nature, it is the utmost of our abilities to glory of man.—Addison.

"To take your things, sir," offered the maid; and a lady's hand came forward to help Kitty Hewitt with her wrap.
As Bertram watched this amazing girl who had led him into two adventures—tonight's yet to be known ventures—his eyes lighted with admiration.
"Ready?" she turned to him gaily:
"You haven't had dinner?"
"No."
"Come along, then." She led the way through the dining room and across to a table set for two.
The dance floor beyond the row of tables was small and intimate; and upon it, to the mad harmonies of the jazz orchestra, four or five couples danced—danced with a certain pagan abandon. With a start Bertram recognized Hugh Coswell, the eminently respectable president of the Midwest Trust company, the husband of Arista, and the father of three children and he was not dancing with Arista—no, nor with any of her friends. The partner who clung to him was a petite, Titian-haired young woman whom Bertram vaguely recognized; some one had pointed her out to him once, he remembered, and mentioned her name. Suddenly the name bobbed into his mind: "Sally Kiddieston." Four other men, with partners, were dancing; they were all older than Hugh Coswell; they were gray-haired, all of them over fifty. Bertram knew two of them; men whom many thousands in Chicago knew by reputation, at least; by good reputation. And each man held in his arms a yellow-haired or a brunette Sally Kiddieston of his own.
Bertram's friends smirked when they recognized him; and they waved and called cordial—too—cordial—greetings.
Confused for the moment, he brought his gaze about to the table as a water pitcher—a cocktail—before him.
"Dinner, sir?" the man asked.
"Dinner," replied Bertram mechanically. Evidently, serving so few people, the establishment offered a prepared meal.
Suddenly Bertram recollected the pearls—those so Kitty Hewitt had said—Hugh had bought in New York, and not for Arista. Glancing toward Sally Kiddieston, Bertram saw her plenty of jewels, but no rope of pearls.
Once more, as he watched, Kitty Hewitt seemed to read his thoughts.
"He's not given them to her yet, I guess," she murmured. "That makes it a little easier."
"Jewels!" he exclaimed with sudden pleasure as Kitty Hewitt stepped into his arms and they moved off in the rhythm of the dance; for she was quite the most superb dancer he had ever encountered. As they circled the little room to the softly played melody, "Marchetta," he thought how lovely this girl really was.

As the dance music stopped and they returned to their tables, Kitty Hewitt spoke: "It's hot in here. Do you mind opening one of those windows?"

There were no waiters in the room and Bertram himself crossed to the middle window, unfastened the catch and opened it a few inches. As he seated himself opposite Kitty Hewitt again, he saw that she was turning her vanity case, open, upside down.

A pale yellow powder spilled out and lay in a conical pile on her plate.

"I put in a whole box," she explained, "and it broke."

"That's funny-looking powder," he said.

The music had begun again, and the people at the other tables were dancing. Kitty Hewitt rose.

"Come along," she smiled.

"Shall we dance?" Bertram rose and came around the table to her. She interrupted: "Please give me a match."

"A match?" He stared at her. She did not smoke, he knew. What then?

"Oh, her's one!" She had caught up a box of matches from the table and glanced quickly round the room.
The prominent men and their partners danced on merrily; intent upon their own affairs. Suddenly Kitty Hewitt struck a match.

"What are you doing?" demanded Bertram.

"Stand back!" she warned him, and flung the burning match upon the powder on her plate. For a second it flickered there, as Bertram watched, spilling, bound, then a blinding explosion filled the room.

"Flashlight!" Bertram heard himself gasp. Two women screamed; a man shouted hoarsely; the dance music stopped; and as a dense cloud of flaming powder smoke rolled across the ceiling, panic paralyzed the dancers.

"Who did that?" Hugh Coswell's frightened voice. "Everybody quiet!
What?"

A window was opening of itself—that is, was being pushed up from the outside—the window Bertram had partly raised, and as the people standing huddled on the floor stared in terror, a man stepped over the sill and into the room.

He was a tall, slender young man, in a checked suit, with a black velvet hat slightly tilted over one eye. His face was pale and square-jawed, with cold blue eyes and a hard, straight mouth. Something vaguely familiar about these features—Then, with a start, Bertram recognized him. It was the youth upon whom he had operated, whose life he had saved, that amazing night, six weeks before—Eddie Pellen, "Eddie the Immune."

"A woman—it was Sally Kiddieston
—screamed shrilly again:
"Easy, there!" "Eddie the Immune" spoke harshly. "And stand where you are."

A curious smile twisted one corner of his mouth. "Don't get excited. We just took a flashlight of the bunch you, in fact we took two pictures."

"I did what I could—"

No thanks at all. Instead, the man frowned at Kitty Hewitt. "Oh, in back to town with him, are you?"

"Yes, Eddie."

Abruptly, without another word, he turned and walked out of the room.
Bertram glanced at Kitty apprehensively; then a second later they heard powerful automobile leaving the drive outside.

"Come," said Kitty Hewitt, "let us get out of here!"

Speeding along the highway toward town under
