J. L. FLETCHER AUTOMOBILE IN COLLISION ON M-17

Considerable Damage Done When Driver of Kalamazoo Car Is Deceived to Have Slept at Wheel.

Two persons were slightly injured in an automobile accident Monday night in which a car belonging to Arthur White, of Kalamazoo, collided with one driven by John L. Fletcher of Chelsea west of Leoni about one-half mile. The White car carried six passengers, Mr. and Mrs. White, their two children and two elderly ladies, Mr. White and one of the elderly ladies suffering minor injuries while occupants of the local car, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher of Chelsea and Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Boyer of Cattaraugus, N. Y., escaped unhurt beyond a shaking up.

According to occupants of the Fletcher car, they were nearing Leoni about 10:30 in the evening when a car approached from the east whose driver refused to dim his lights as he approached. Putting over as far as possible to the right side of the road Mr. Fletcher was amazed to see the approaching car turn toward him enough so that left front wheels of both cars locked, turning them in such manner that the local car headed for the ditch on the left side and stopped squarely on its front end at the bottom. The Kalamazoo car was more or less damaged and its occupants suffered slight injuries as a result of the impact.

In statements made to occupants of the Fletcher car after the accident, Mrs. White, wife of the injured driver of the second car, said that her husband had been driving since noon of the day preceding and that she believed he had momentarily slept at the wheel causing the crash. And at the sheriff's office in Jackson on Tuesday blame for the accident was settled on the Kalamazoo driver, according to Mr. Fletcher, who was in Jackson at the request of the sheriff's office.

Damage to the Fletcher car will probably reach the $200 mark but is amply covered by insurance. The other car, while damaged to a greater degree, was not insured.

SALVATION ARMY MEETS SUCCESS IN LOCAL DRIVE

The Salvation Army drive is meeting with very good progress. As before, Miss Hutzel is doing the house to house canvassing instead of teams as last year. Mrs. Frank Leach, who was president of Ladies' Relief Corps and chairman of the house-to-house canvass, is unable to take over this proposition this year on account of sickness. She is a woman who, when she takes hold of things, works hard and makes a success of it and that was the outcome of her work last year. She and her committee brought in $68.65 from the canvass last year and on tag day $76.81. A. E. Hamilton, campaign manager, says that in all of the towns he had visited in the interest of the Army, he never found a woman who was so faithful and worked as hard as Mrs. Leach.

The organization appreciated the hard work and success given them in the last year's campaign. They hope Chelsea will succeed this year even as last year.

Saturday, September 12, is Salvation Army tag day. Let us come across and help this cause, at this time for the year as this is the only time the Salvation Army will make for money in 1925. Let us sacrifice the price of a movie and of a pleasure ride, and help the local girls on this tag day.

Next week's Standard will carry the full report of the financial success of this year's campaign as headed by Mr. Hamilton.

401 PUPILS ENROLLED AT OPENING OF SCHOOL YEAR

With every department functioning one hundred per cent and with an unusually large enrollment, Chelsea public schools opened the 1925-26 term on Tuesday of this week. Only a half day session was held the first day but on Wednesday the entire day was taken up with regular school routine work when both pupils and teachers settled down to a year of intensive labor and study.

Four hundred and one pupils were enrolled with the school opening and it is expected this number will be increased before the end of this week. In a statement made Wednesday Superintendent E. L. Clark said that his organization was working with less friction than ever before, no conflicts appearing in any of the several departments.

HOW HE DID IT

A Texas newspaper newspaper publisher, who retired with $50,000 in the bank, was asked how he did it, and replied as follows:

I attribute my ability to retire with a $50,000 bank account, after 30 years in the country newspaper field, to close application to duty, always hewing to the mark and letting the chips fall where they may, the most rigorous rule of economy, never spending a cent foolishly, everlastingly keeping at my job with a whole heart—and the death of an uncle who left me $45,999.50.—Thrill Magazine.

HUGE CROWD ATTENDED COUNTY MASONIC PICNIC

Masons and Families, Estimated at 2500, Enjoy Day's Program of Sports and Entertainment.

A morning of inclement weather failed to dampen the spirits of Washtenaw county Masons who, about 2500 strong, went to North Lake Labor day for their fourth annual picnic. Cloudy skies kept the attendance low during the morning, but when the weather cleared about noon a steady stream of automobiles began arriving at Eisenbeiser's grove, where the outing was held.

The contests, which began early in the day, attracted many entrants and competition in the events arranged for the men, women, and children was keen. Much rivalry between the various lodges also was evinced in the events arranged especially for them. The Chelsea band played for the crowd during the day and radio concerts were furnished through the courtesy of Stofflet Photo shop.

Early in the afternoon, a speaking program was held at which Dr. Arthur W. Stalker, pastor of First Methodist Episcopal church, Ann Arbor, gave the address of the day. He spoke on "The Dignity of Work." Mayor Robert A. Campbell, of Ann Arbor, who presided at this program, also introduced to the crowd, Milton J. Baxter of Chelsea, president of Washtenaw County Masters' association, and Paul E. Gibson of Ann Arbor, chairman of the picnic committee.

Motion pictures of the crowd, the contestants in the various events, the speakers and other features of the picnic were taken under the direction of E. E. Mack, vice-president of the Calkins-Pletcher Drug Co., which concern loaned the motion picture machine for the occasion. These films will be shown at the eight county lodges during the winter months and will constitute a permanent record of this year's outing.

In the contests of the afternoon Leon Shutes, master of Olive Lodge, No. 156, won the 50-yard dash for worshipping masters; George Baxter, Chelsea, won second in the cracker eating contest, and the local tug-of-war team defeated Phoenix Lodge No. 19 of Ypsilanti, depriving the latter team of the association cup which the Ypsi team has won for two consecutive years.

CURIOSITY WILL BE SATISFIED

Curiosity of a lot of people is going to be satisfied this week.

Anyway, indications point in that direction.

Ever since announcement of the improved Ford cars was made just about every man, woman and child in town has been on the alert for a glimpse of the new cars.

A few of the touring cars reached dealers during the last week, but not near enough of them were distributed to satisfy the curiosity of the populace. In the first place, every dealer experienced some difficulty in securing cars—some were only able to get one—and in the second place, after the dealer got the car he had a hard time keeping it someone wanted to buy it right away.

Several hundred people, however, have been able to get a peep at the new touring cars and every one of them is firmly convinced that they sure are attractive automobiles.

LIGHT BEER A FAILURE

We have with us always those who contend for light wines and beer, which might be had with the eighteenth amendment still functioning. In the Province of Ontario, Canada, there was a persistent clamor for beer with more of a kick than was possessed by the old per cent. The beer advocates wanted 4.4 per cent beer, it was stated, so the Parliament desiring to give them what they wanted, gave them four-four beer. Now it is a failure, reports Congressman Grant M. Hudson of East Lansing, Michigan, who has been investigating the liquor situation in a number of the larger towns and cities of Ontario. It is too strong for the dregs and too weak for the wets.

FASCIST ARMY GROWS

The smaller nations of Europe, particularly the Balkan states, are expressing uneasiness over the growth and the size of the fascist army.

Premier Mussolini of Italy, responsible for the fascist army, and modern Italian plans, declares that Italy is spending less on her army now than at any time before or since the war. Observers in the Balkan states, however, deny this and declare that not nearly all Italy's expenditures on her army and war preparations are shown in her military budget.

The inquiry that the United States made in regard to Italy's army expenditures has somewhat alarmed the Balkan countries.

NEW PLANE CARRIES TON

Colonel William Mitchell, deposed air chief, now stationed at Fort Sam, Houston, Texas, states in an interview that airplanes have been built that can travel continuously without replenishing gasoline, for 60 hours, and that they can make an average of 133 miles per hour, carrying a ton of deadly explosives.

"These planes have not been given a trial because the army and navy will not order the test," said the doughty airman.

Colonel Mitchell again raised the question of a separate air service free from army or navy control. "We must develop an air service independent of army and navy, and responsible of itself for its own future," he intimated as saying. Most of the American people agree with him.

With England, France, Italy and Russia, holding the supremacy in long cruising range, it is next to criminal folly for America to fall in meeting this threat of air control, which would mean absolute despotism for the nation with the greatest number of planes and the widest cruising range, with a disposition to use them for their own ends.

PLANT LIFE IN ARCTIC

One discovery is already reported to have been made by the MacMillan expedition to the region of the North Pole. Men with the expedition who have been making tours of discovery and investigation by airplane, and over the ice and snow, report that they have discovered blue grass and other plant life growing in the vicinity of the pole.

This would seem to add further proof to the theory that where the poles are now was once a part of the temperate, or even the torrid zone of the earth, and that in swinging away from the North star the North pole will ultimately, in the course of thousands of years, take for its affinity Vega, a star of the first magnitude, and now one of the most brilliant in the heavens, and the poles may again be populated places of the earth.

RETAIL TRADE BETTER

The Federal Reserve Board at Washington, more closely in touch on business conditions in this country than any other body, reports that retail trade is better the country over, than it was in 1924. July showed substantial gains over July a year ago.

Milk prices are higher, truck farmers and farmers generally, have had good crops, and employment is above normal. There should be the best fall trade this year that has been enjoyed for a long time.

PLENTY OF COAL

Metropolitan newspapers tell us there is plenty of anthracite, though a strike is called, and that no home should be without coal.

If that is true, then the Federal Trade Commission should have the leaders of the conspiracy among the mine owners indicted and sent to jail for the combination in restraint of trade, which has put up the price of coal to the consumer.

WORMS ARE UP

Fishing got to be unusually good in New York Bay the last week in August as the price of worms went up accordingly.

That poor little red wigglings worm known as an angle worm was worth a good American half dollar, for bait.

Worms were in demand at $5.00 a dozen. Never again at the lowly price of a night, come into opposition.

W. O. STODDARD PASSES
Serving the Great Lincoln as one of his last secretaries, during the civil war period, W. O. Stoddard, journalist, editor and author, died at his home in Madison, N. J., last Saturday night, in his ninetieth year. A newspaper editor prior to the civil war, W. O. Stoddard became an ardent advocate of Mr. Lincoln's nomination in 1860. He entered the Union Army as a private in 1861, and was released from service to become one of the President's secretaries, in which capacity he served until Mr. Lincoln's death. He is the last of the known survivors of the Lincoln administration, who participated in the work that was done by the great war president.

W. O. Stoddard was a man of great principles and power as a writer. He leaves over 100 books as a record of his life work, many of them among the classics of latter American literature.

THE FORDS ARE HIGH

Publication of income taxes paid has been resumed, and we shall quit our crossword conversation with wife, and talk about how they got it, when and where and why.

The Ford Motor Company pays $16,493,160.00. Henry Ford pays $2,608,806.00. Edsel pays $2,158,155.00, making a grand total for the Fords, father, son and driver, of $21,260,021.00. A tidy sum to pay in income taxes to the federal government, and an indication that the Fords still build a few flyovers, and that they are not exactly losing money on them.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., pays the largest individual income tax. His tax is $6,277,669.00. Young Mr. Rockefeller, we may stop to announce, makes the juice that makes the flyover go. So, we see, the greatest prosperity comes to him who makes flyovers and the next greatest prosperity to him who supplies the stuff to make 'em fly.

PRICE OF RUBBER UP

The price of rubber remains high. Last week it was quoted at 90 cents a pound—three times as high as it was a year ago. December quotations were 74 cents a pound.

The price of rubber will inevitably affect your automobile tires, still more than it has already. You, Mr. automobile owner, are being assessed on your tires, to pay the British debt to the U. S. It was less than this that provoked the Boston Tea Party and brought on the American Revolution.

Costly Doll's House

The late ex-Empress Eugenie of France once gave her dollhouse, the present queen of Spain an exact model of the famous Tulleries, in Paris, for a doll's house. It cost $7,500 to build it.

Dog's Character

One often hears it said that a dog acquires the character of its owner. It is true that bad treatment will sour the disposition of a dog that was originally good-tempered, and it is equally certain that good and wise treatment will bring out all the best in a dog's nature, but neither bad nor good treatment can change the original character of the dog.

CHANGING SENTIMENT

With the steady increase of public ownership in large corporations has come a changed viewpoint regarding so-called "big business." At the same time there has been a revised conduct in the affairs of corporations regarding their obligations to the public, so that instead of being feared, as they once were, are now looked upon as benefactors to our industrial and financial welfare.

Public ownership of big utilities is presenting an opportunity for the small investor to share in the satisfaction and profits to be gained in developing and utilizing our natural resources. The stability of these investments must depend upon the treatment accorded corporations from a legislative standpoint, which cannot be preyed upon by bureaucracy and at the same time conduct a safe and profitable business enterprise. Prosperity and big business are too closely allied to longer be considered a fertile field for the attacks of agitators who are intent upon pulling down the superstructure of business to meet their radical whims.

BEWARE OF FAKES

With a gradual return of nationwide prosperity comes the danger of that great horde of unprincipled fakers who annually unload billions of worthless stocks and bonds on the trusting and the uninformed. With such splendid opportunities for safe investment it is surprising how many people are being caught with the lure of "big returns" and invest their hard-earned savings in absolutely worthless ventures.

Quit feeding these blue-sky hawkers who are continually preying upon industry and frugality. Make it a hard and fast rule to consult with your banker before indulging in a single investment. He will advise you freely and frankly and the chances of your picking a lemon will be almost wholly obliterated. One wealthy man has said: "Have all your earnings in one place, where you can see it all in a single afternoon." If that precept were followed every county in Michigan would have saved millions of dollars in the past fifty years in losses in oil stocks, silver and gold mines, and blue-sky industrial stocks. Kick the fake stock promoter off the front porch and keep your spare dollars for legitimate enterprises.

GERMANY MAKES PAYMENT

The Germany railway company paid France 60,000,000 gold marks this week, completing the reparation payments of the German government for 1925. This completes the first year's record of reparation payments, and has created a good impression all over Europe. It is the best testimonial to the efficiency of the Dawes Plan in solving Europe's financial difficulties.

The Institute of American Meat Packers has issued statistics showing that the American people consume daily 55,000,000 pounds of meat. That is half a pound of meat per person for every day of the year. This indicates that we are not going rapidly to a vegetable diet.

Chemistry Test for Beans

A little English boy, three years old, when told that the new baby had six teeth said: "She will have six toothaches." A pessimist at the age of three.

Many Are Called

One of the most startling points of interest in a study of American history would be a list of the people who were seriously regarded as having a chance to become President of the United States.—Washington Star.

Telling the World

"Oh, I've had my shot at this public speaking stuff," remarked Andy, who has done just about everything in this world. "When I was a kid I used to call up my girl over a rural telephone."—Hamilton Bros. Gaboon.

ing of the opening day—Tuesday, Sept. 22. The fair will be held from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. every day except Sunday. On Tuesday and Wednesday there will be a horse show which gives promise of being an event seldom witnessed in Michigan outside of the exclusive circles of Detroit. There will be a base ball tournament continuing over five days and the race program will provide pleasant amusement for all who enjoy racing. There will be three big free attractions each afternoon—
night, each day's program to be concluded with a brilliant display of fireworks.

Railroad Permanence

Michigan's 23 railroads make steam from coal.
Their fuel supply is assured for generations to come.

So, in the future, as in the past, Michigan crops and products will flow out and supplies will flow in—by Rail.

A solid, adequate and permanent Railroad plant has been built up in Michigan. On this plant, as a cornerstone, rests Michigan's present prosperity, and its hopes for the future.

Michigan people are justified in their faith in Michigan Railroads. That faith is built on solid achievement.

BREVITIES.

BRIGHTON Work on the new factory has already started and they expect to be operating with 25 men
October 1st.—Argus.

PINCKNEY—The public schools opened here Tuesday. During the vacation the building has had an automatic water plant and sewerage system installed.

YPSILANTI—Hugh Van de Walker, of this city, was elected secretary-treasurer of the past grand chancellors' association of Knights of Pythias at the closing session of the state convention in Jackson Thursday night. Detroit was chosen for next year's convention of both the Knights and Pythian Sisters.

PARMA—There are a number of farmers in the county who are following the practice of seeding eight to ten pounds of alfalfa seed to the acre with a good success. Their secret is that they have the soil in top notch condition when they seed and that they use only good seed. Under those conditions eight pounds would be sufficient.—News.

HOWELL—Numerous cars decorated with flags, carried old soldiers through Howell toward the National G. A. R. Encampment at Grand Rapids, Monday. One car bore a banner—"Three generations, veterans of three wars." It carried an old man wearing a G. A. R. uniform, a younger man wearing a Spanish-American badge and two young men in World war uniforms.—Republican.

FOWLerville—The fire whistle sounded about 8:30 Thursday night for a blaze in the residence of Willard Peak, caused by a gasoline stove going wrong. Fortunately they had the presence of mind to use flour instead of water and the fire was extinguished without the use of water, although the fire company were at the door promptly ready for business.
The smoke did considerable damage to paper and paint.—Review.

MANCHESTER—Three auto loads of workers from the Clinton and Cambridge camps on the Detroit-Chicago pike passed west through town Tuesday. As it was known they were paroled prisoners it was remarked by onlookers while they stopped here that all were in good spirits. A guard volunteered the information that their time was up and they were bound for Jackson to be released. There were about 30 in the party, all young men.—Enterprise.

BROOKLYN—There are nearly 19,
000 children between the ages of 5 and 18 years drawing school money from the primary fund of Jackson county. The amount this year is $13.70 for each child. Jackson has 12,356 children. Townships near the city come next highest. Blackman with 774 and Leoni with 588. Columbia comes next with 539 children.
Grass Lake has 433, Concord 292, Na-poles 273, Norwell 147 which is the smallest number of any township.—
Exponent.

YPSILANTI—Found guilty of assault and battery, Joseph Biltz, formerly foreman at the Palma farm, was Thursday morning fined $25 and sentenced to 30 days in county jail
by Justice D. Z. Curtis. The jail sentence was suspended on condition that Biltz leave the county in seven days and stay away. According to the story told the Judge, Biltz attacked H. Rhodes who had been hired to fill his position at the farm.
Rhodes is a much smaller man, and after being injured, signed a complaint against Biltz.—Press.

WILLIAMSTON—Duffy Brothers,
of Lansing, manufacturers of church furniture have purchased the property here formerly known as the Willamston Knitting Factory and expect to move their plant here within a very short time. Requiring more space than can be obtained in their present quarters, the firm began looking for another location. Through members of the local Kiwanis Club
they became interested in the Willamston property and the deal was consummated about a week ago.—
Enterprise.

CLINTON—The inevitable was again postponed Wednesday when the taxpayers of District No. 2 voted down the bond issue for building a new school by a vote of 87 for and 180 against bonding. There were three votes thrown out, making a total of 270 votes, or 30 more votes than were cast in 1922. A large crowd was present at the informal meeting, held at the school house Monday evening, when the school board and architect, Mr. Allen, of Jackson, were present to answer any questions the voters cared to ask.
However the meeting was of no avail.—Local.

MASON—Several local people have remarked at the rather gruesome spectacle of an assortment of large coffin shaped cement burial vaults that stand on the gravel banks east of South Jefferson avenue but it took the keen wit of an Irish visitor to the city to really catch the humor of the situation. Professor Walpole, in speaking before a group of Masonites early in the week, referred to the vaults and their close proximity to the double railroad crossing at the foot of a steep hill as the most unique and impressive danger warning sign he had ever witnessed in his travels over the country and complimented the enterprise of the men who conceived the idea. All of which recalled the local men to the gruesome spectacle about which they have heretofore raised some objections.—News.

Initiative—Bill Had It

By OLIVILLE LEONARD

(© 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

BILL WHITEHORN climbed the steep trail that led from the flat desert to a jumble of bars, desolate hills, and Bill talked to himself as he rode: "No job, no grub—not even the makin'! Well, I gotter eat, somehow. An' goin'—I'd like a drink!"

Suddenly his horse hung up a shaggy head and nickered shrilly, and there came to Bill's eyes signs of human activity.

"By all the horned toads! A boom camp on Muddy Mesa! No, let's see; that sky pilot, talkin' at Devil's Hole the other day, allowed that we got to go straight an' have initiative, to get there. Reckon I got to work some initiative on this here new town, fer
I sure gotter eat, and Bill rode up the single street of Mesa City and roped his bronco to the rack in front of the "Golden Hope" saloon.

"How's tricks, friend?" he asked the bartender.

"Tricks is all took—stranger—by the other feller," responded the bartender, gloomily.

"Yeh? What's trouble, Ganny?" Bill called all bartenders that—in friendly moments.

"Trouble! Look at that there mirror—or what's left of it—an' my name ain't 'Ganny'—it's Jerry Bloom."

"Didn't you collect any damages, Ganny?"

"Damages, h—l!" exploded Jerry.

"How much is she worth?" queried
Bill.

"That there mirror stood me up fer
two hundred an' fifty cartwheels."

"Want to git it back, Jerry?"

"Do I like to eat when I'm hungry?"
demanded Jerry.

"Keno—then gimme a feed, six 38
caltridges an' jest one shot o' hootch—an' play up to anything I do when the boys come in tonight. Does it go?"

Jerry, looking into Bill's open, dare-devil face, said: "It does."

Bill Whitehorn stood at the bar, waiting for the night to fall. Then came trooping in the loud, husky citizens of the camp. Bill eyed them all in a friendly way.

"Is all the city here?" he drawled.

"Reckon so, stranger, includin' yourself," sang out one of the crowd.

"I'm glad o' that," Bill spoke evenly, "cause the collection order be unanimous. My friend Jerry, here, tells me you boys wrecked his mirror.

You sure done a good job. See that fly up over the back door?" And with eye-blinking swiftness Bill drew his 38 and fired.

"Got him," he said complacently.

One of the miners stepped on a chair, lighted a match and scrutinized the bullet hole. He turned to the crowd, his eyes large with wonder.

"Boys," he almost whispered, "there's a fly's wing plastered on the edge o'
that bullet hole."

"Thanks, inspector," drawled Bill.

"That's just my card, gent. What I'm proposin' now is that every citizen o' this town antes up to Jerry twenty-five dollars per each for a valuable mirror, an' the hombre that don't meet me here an' now with a six-gun."

The contributions poured into an old plug hat Jerry set on the bar. When every man present had anted up, Bill reached over carelessly and counted the money, keeping one eye on the crowd. Settling aside two hundred and fifty dollars, he pushed it across the bar. "There's your mirror, Ganny."
Then he thrust the remainder into his pocket.

"Say," exploded one big miner, "who the h—l are you, an' what's it mean?"

Bill Whitehorn tapped his breast.

"I am the new marshal o' Mesa City, an' this is my first year's salary. You've donated it to Jerry an' Jerry gives it to me free. Do I git the unanimous vote as marshal?" he asked,
grinning.

A drawling, ironical voice came from the crowd: "You sure does,
marshal."

The evening broke up early, most of the men grinning appreciatively at Bill as they left.

Bill kept his pose at the bar. Then he swung about with a sigh: "That was sort o' wearin'—gimme a drink,
Ganny."

Jerry handed him a full bottle and a glass. "It's yours, marshal. You're a wonder. That's shootin'."

Bill eyed him for a moment, considering, then said abruptly: "Gimme an old playin' card, Ganny." He stuck it in a crack, then he walked back to the bar, turned, whipped out his gun so swiftly that Jerry didn't see it until it flamed. "Go an' see, Jerry."

The bartender examined the card.
"Jumpin' rattlesnakes! You cut her clean in two, Bill—that's better shootin' than hittin' a fly!"

"I ain't spreadagin' none to you, Ganny. I jest aimed to prove I ain't a bluff, cause I got something to tell yer. When you was in the room while I was waitin' for the boys ter show up, I seen a bullet hole over the door, an' got on a chair an' looked her over. They was a fly's wing hangin' on the ledge o' the hole. A feller that's got initiative can't risk any misplays, so I shot high out the back door, which was open."

Not at All Natural
Mr. Garbatot—And so you are the lady who is giving my wife painting lessons? What sort of a pupil is she?
Miss Dauber—Well, I find her very apt, to say the least.

Mr. Garbatot—That's funny. I always find her very apt to say the most.—Stray Stories.

threadbare' to the man in whose com-

England in the sixteenth century, was

JABOT IN VARIED VERSIONS ON FROCKS OF PRINTED SILK

NOTHING ever flourished more exuberantly than midsummer frocks of printed silk—colorful, cool, simple and pretty as they are—they are scattered all over our midseason scenery.
And there is little likelihood that printed silks will make their exit from fashion's stage this fall, because they have made it possible for every one to be well dressed at small outlay of money or time. The endlessly varied designs and colorings brought out for the present season are likely to be followed by equally varied patterns for fall.

Where so much interest lies in the fabric, simplicity in construction is imperative, and designers have lived up to this rule when using printed silks.
Certain of the season's style features have been very useful to them and nothing more so than the jabot idea which is being exploited in two many ways. Already it is sponsored for fall, along with plaits, flares and circular movements in skirts, that made headway this summer. The jabot and the godet have played their parts nobly in the summer fashion drama. Here in the picture is a late version of the jabot on a frock of printed silk. It is bordered with plain crepe de chine like that used for the collar and is capcaded on each side of the front of the bodice, narrowing to points at the bottom. A long row of small flat buttons from neck to hem is another hall-mark of this season, while the long sleeves announce this as one of the later arrivals among printed frocks.

Borders of plain materials on printed fabrics make the most effective finish for them and are chosen in one or two colors that make a good harmony with the printed design. Black and a color in folds on printed chiffon or silk frocks give them much character.
White is effectively used also. For all-round usefulness and for summer comfort these printed silk frocks have very few rivals.

Now-a One-Profit Car

in the Quality Field

STUDEBAKER has achieved one-profit manufacture in the quality field. This marks a new era in the automobile industry. Studebaker's achievement eliminates unnecessary profits running up to $500 on a single car. It banishes double overhead. It results in quantity production of quality cars. It vitally affects pricing by establishing a new criterion of value in the fine-car field.

Why Studebaker is the "one-profit" car.

There are more than 60 makes of passenger cars built in the United States, but few are manufactured complete in the plants of the producers who sell them.

Only 12 build all their own motors—and one of the 12 is Studebaker.

Of the 12 which claim to make their own motors only 14 make the iron castings, stampings and forgings which go into their motors—and one of the 14 is Studebaker.

Only 5 make all their own bodies and one of the 5 is Studebaker.

Only 2 make all their own motors, bodies, clutches, springs, axles, gear sets, differentials, steering gear, gray iron castings and drop forgings. One of these 2 is Studebaker and the other is Ford.

Flattery's Power

An Englishwoman declares that she has never yet met a man she couldn't get round by judicious flattery. "It doesn't matter," she says, "how low and unbecoming it is, it will resist the voice of flattery. Sooner or later, he begins to purr and is ready to feed out of your hand! Instead of 'feeding the brute' I would advise women to flatter him."

THE LITTLE GLORY NOOK

By MARGUERITE CAMERON

(Copyright, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

TO LOOK at Betty Joe one would say that there was nothing unusual about her.

Harry had said many times, "Betty Joe, I'll never know you."

And she as many times, "And you never will, pet, as long as the house keys hang at my belt." There were keys, with which Betty Joe had a bad habit of locking things up—for instance, there was that room one flight up in the new bungalow.

Ten years had passed since Betty Joe and Harry Leland had graduated from college. Harry was now an assistant professor. But it had seemed so different until Ray and Alberta Hal-mouth, classmates of the same year, had come back to spend the college commencement in their home.

But the matter which caused Alberta the gravest concern was the great change in Betty Joe.

"Don't look when I open the closet door," Alberta. Betty Joe had frequently joked.

"What will you do when you keep house?" the girls had taunted her.

"Here's hoping the dear man won't be dreadfully particular. But if he is, there'll be a glory nook, girls, a glory nook."

Now ten years had passed. Something truly momentous must have caused this change in Betty Joe. Such miracles are not wrought by chance.

One afternoon Alberta and Betty Joe sat among the field daisies.

"You see, I had fallen in love with the most particular man in the world," Betty Joe explained.

"But such a change," Alberta protested.

"It's only on the outside, dear. You see, I had to marry Harry, and after I had married him, I had to keep it from him that I was slowly by nature."

Harry looked annoyed, as he tried to find the "glory nook" on the second floor.

"What would you do, Ray?" he asked. "If your wife kept one room in your house always locked?"

They laughed and passed by the locked door.

"A year later Ray and Alberta were suddenly appalled to hear that Betty Joe Leland had been drowned while away on an early summer outing.

Another year, and Harry sent an urgent request that the Hal-mouths spend the last week in June with him.

"I must get away," Harry was telling them. "The university has given me a year's leave of absence and I've sold the house. I want to dispose of lots of personal things. I knew you would help me, Alberta."

"Perhaps you know to which door this belongs," Alberta placed a small key in Harry's hand. "I found it in one of the drawers."

"Yes," he turned the key over. "Do you know, that little key puzzles me. It belongs to the door Betty Joe always kept locked."

"I remember."

"That door is still locked. No one has been in. Do you remember she always had a way of saying that I should never go in as long as the house keys hung at her belt?"

"Yes, she did."

"It seems now that she is gone, that I have no more right to go in than I had before. I have an awful feeling that I'd be taking a mean advantage. Betty Joe always kept me guessing. What was it? I was never sure I knew her. I liked it that way. Now I don't want to look in that door. If I do, I can't guess any longer. I'll know I think it was all some foolish little whim of hers, but she was all whims to me, and bless her heart, I wouldn't rob her of one. At first, when we couldn't find things, the maid pestered me to look in it as a storeroom. Harry smiled indulgently. 'Betty Joe kept things—well, I don't know, but they always seemed to be right at the end of her fingers. But, Alberta, the house is sold. The owner moves in next week. I can't sell him a locked room, nor do I want to.' 'Of course not.' 'Alberta, I think it would be best for you to open that door.' 'If I did, Harry, I would want Ray and no one else to go through my things, know my secrets, if any.' 'Yes.' 'That door is Betty Joe's secret.' 'I know. I've thought that, too. If you really think I ought—' He took the key and climbed the stairs.

Alberta sat down, tried to read, but she was thinking of Betty Joe, her sweet voice—in the garden. Harry must never know—never, never. Know what? Somewhere a key was rattling in a lock. It flashed upon her. That was Betty Joe's glory nook and the wildest imaginings of Harry's immaculate soul could never understand any glory nook. Poor, helpless, little Betty Joe. The keys no longer hung at her belt.

"Harry, Harry," Alberta flew to the stairway.

There he stood, ahen, weary. He was holding the little key gingerly between two fingers. "Alberta," his voice was low and strained.

Was she, too late? Had he been in? He read the question in her violet eyes. "I couldn't," he said humbly. "Alberta, do the best you can. But whatever you find, don't tell me about it."

THE LITTLE GLORY NOOK

(Copyright, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

TO LOOK at Betty Joe one would say that there was nothing unusual about her.

Harry had said many times, "Betty Joe, I'll never know you."

And she as many times, "And you never will, pet, as long as the house keys hang at my belt." There were keys, with which Betty Joe had a bad habit of locking things up—for instance, there was that room one flight up in the new bungalow.

Ten years had passed since Betty Joe and Harry Leland had graduated from college. Harry was now an assistant professor. But it had seemed so different until Ray and Alberta Hal-mouth, classmates of the same year, had come back to spend the college commencement in their home.

But the matter which caused Alberta the gravest concern was the great change in Betty Joe.

"Don't look when I open the closet door," Alberta. Betty Joe had frequently joked.

"What will you do when you keep house?" the girls had taunted her.

"Here's hoping the dear man won't be dreadfully particular. But if he is, there'll be a glory nook, girls, a glory nook."

Now ten years had passed. Something truly momentous must have caused this change in Betty Joe. Such miracles are not wrought by chance.

One afternoon Alberta and Betty Joe sat among the field daisies.

"You see, I had fallen in love with the most particular man in the world," Betty Joe explained.

"But such a change," Alberta protested.

"It's only on the outside, dear. You see, I had to marry Harry, and after I had married him, I had to keep it from him that I was slowly by nature."

Harry looked annoyed, as he tried to find the "glory nook" on the second floor.

"What would you do, Ray?" he asked. "If your wife kept one room in your house always locked?"

They laughed and passed by the locked door.

"A year later Ray and Alberta were suddenly appalled to hear that Betty Joe Leland had been drowned while away on an early summer outing.

Another year, and Harry sent an urgent request that the Hal-mouths spend the last week in June with him.

"I must get away," Harry was telling them. "The university has given me a year's leave of absence and I've sold the house. I want to dispose of lots of personal things. I knew you would help me, Alberta."

"Perhaps you know to which door this belongs," Alberta placed a small key in Harry's hand. "I found it in one of the drawers."

"Yes," he turned the key over. "Do you know, that little key puzzles me. It belongs to the door Betty Joe always kept locked."

"I remember."

"That door is still locked. No one has been in. Do you remember she always had a way of saying that I should never go in as long as the house keys hung at her belt?"

"Yes, she did."

"It seems now that she is gone, that I have no more right to go in than I had before. I have an awful feeling that I'd be taking a mean advantage. Betty Joe always kept me guessing. What was it? I was never sure I knew her. I liked it that way. Now I don't want to look in that door. If I do, I can't guess any longer. I'll know I think it was all some foolish little whim of hers, but she was all whims to me, and bless her heart, I wouldn't rob her of one. At first, when we couldn't find things, the maid pestered me to look in it as a storeroom. Harry smiled indulgently. 'Betty Joe kept things—well, I don't know, but they always seemed to be right at the end of her fingers. But, Alberta, the house is sold. The owner moves in next week. I can't sell him a locked room, nor do I want to.' 'Of course not.' 'Alberta, I think it would be best for you to open that door.' 'If I did, Harry, I would want Ray and no one else to go through my things, know my secrets, if any.' 'Yes.' 'That door is Betty Joe's secret.' 'I know. I've thought that, too. If you really think I ought—' He took the key and climbed the stairs.

Alberta sat down, tried to read, but she was thinking of Betty Joe, her sweet voice—in the garden. Harry must never know—never, never. Know what? Somewhere a key was rattling in a lock. It flashed upon her. That was Betty Joe's glory nook and the wildest imaginings of Harry's immaculate soul could never understand any glory nook. Poor, helpless, little Betty Joe. Michigan State Detective Risks Life To Capture and Bring Back Giant Negro.

This true story is just as good as fiction. It hinges around a police man, jumping off a fast-moving train right on the heels of a prisoner who had gotten away, how he chased him down the track, caught him and safely put him in irons for the remainder of the journey.

Arthur Trease, a detective of the Michigan State Police, whose duty is to transfer prisoners in the here and Clarence Hicks, a parole violator from Jackson prison is the villain, as it were.

Hicks was arrested by the police at Reno, Nev., being identified as the Michigan parole violator from photographs and fingerprints mailed to all police departments by the bureau of identification of the Michigan State Police. Trease was sent after him.

Hicks is a big negro, much larger than Trease. Trease took the Southern Pacific route from Reno to Chicago. He had handcuffs on Hicks at all times except when they were in the dining car, when he took them off so that his prisoner could eat. After a meal just before the train reached Chicago, Trease was just in the business of replacing the cuffs on his prisoner's wrists when in one jump Hicks left the train through a door that had been left open.

Train Was Held
The train was going 40 miles an hour, but that did not stop Trease, who jumped right after his man. He took a spill upon hitting the ground, but suffered no more injury than to tear a heel from his shoe. He chased Hicks down the track for a mile before he was close enough to grab him.

A fight followed, but the negro received much the worst of it. The conductor stopped the train for 30 minutes until Trease returned with his man, who is now safely behind the bars in Jackson prison. Most of the passengers on the train knew what was going on and were witnesses to the escape, the chase and capture.

Hicks was the first man to ever even nearly get away from Trease, who has had a lot of police experience, serving with the Pennsylvania State Police before coming to Michigan.

Nothing Good Dies

There is nothing—no, nothing—innocent or good, that dies and is forgotten; let us hold to that faith or none. An infant, a prattling child, dying in the cradle, will live again in the better thoughts of those that loved it and play its part through them in the redeeming history of the world, though its body be burned to ashes or drowned in the deep sea.—Charles Dickens.

Dual Personality

When we choose between two lines of conduct, between a mean action and a noble one, we choose also between two persons, both bearing your name, the one representing what is best in us, the other embodying what is worst. When we vacillate and alternate between them, we veer, as the man in Robert Louis Stevenson's story veered, between Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.—Henry Van Dyke.

W. N. U. SERVICE

OR three consecutive mornings, this appeal had stood in the classified columns of Chicago newspapers:

PELSONAL—If anyone knows the whereabouts of James MacLaren, twenty-two years, who left his home in Linton, Illinois, on November 18 on a business trip to Chicago, please communicate by telegram, charges collect, with Robert MacLaren, Linton, Illinois.

He was the son of the Hon. Robert MacLaren, who was well known in central Illinois as a banker and as a member of state boards for local improvements. James, who had been living at home after finishing his course at the state university, had gone into the real estate business in Linton and was doing exceedingly well at it.

Through the Chicago firm of Howell and Company he had procured options upon a suburban tract of land which was rapidly increasing in value, and having formed a syndicate among his friends in Linton, he had collected thirty thousand dollars and gone to Chicago to take up his options.

He had wired Howell and Company for an appointment for the afternoon of the same day upon which he left Linton, but he had never come to Chicago, although he reached Chicago on that day, for he cashed a check for five thousand dollars at a Chicago bank.

The next morning he identified himself and cashed a check for three thousand at another bank, and in the afternoon he cashed a four-thousand-dollar check.

All these drafts endorsed in his handwriting had returned in the ordinary course of business to the Linton bank, and there was little doubt that James MacLaren himself was the person who received the twelve thousand dollars in cash. Yet he never appeared at Howell and Company's office; he never wired or wrote to his family or to any of his associates in the syndicate; he was not to be found at any hotel; he gave no account of himself whatsoever, and by his disappearance he let his very valuable options go by default.

Because he had had with him eighteen thousand dollars, his friends declared that he had been robbed and made away with; but against this was the proof that he had been free to cash checks at Chicago banks both on the day of his arrival in Chicago and on the next day.

Dwelling along, Bertram Darand, M. D., pondered over the telephone summons that was taking him to the South side.

Occasionally some one at a distance, called him, not at all for his professional skill, but because that some one sought attendance of a doctor born a Darand. Only one call fell out of these categories—the night of the storm, some weeks ago, when Kitty Hewitt, that charming and bewitching girl, ministered to his doctor-for-another doctor's and so summoned Bertram to the bedside of Eddie Pellen, "Riddle the Immune," notorious gunman.

That mistake brought consequences from which Doctor Darand was by no means free indeed, he knew it was now considered by Pellen and his friends as "on their staff." So that when again they should need the secret services of a surgeon, Doctor Darand would be very likely to hear from them.

His call this morning, however, felt quite plainly into the category of a such a matter. The man who had sent for him was Harner C. Colton, whom Bertram knew by reputation. Colton was middle-aged and rich—owner of two hotels in the city and much real estate.

Yet whatever had been Colton's idea, Bertram had no choice but to proceed in response to the call. Colton was a rich man, and Bertram needed patients.

On the steps a bent old man, his face obscured by a battered hat pulled low and blue-woolen muffler wound around his chin, was sweeping snow. The walk steps had been swept before, apparently, and recently, for scarce a down of powdery snow awaited the broom.

"Is this Mr. Colton's house?" The bent old man did not reply, but took one hand from his broom and, turning, pressed the door-handle beside the door. He seemed to press it three times. Doctor Darand noticed; perhaps it was merely that age caused his hand to fumble. Yet, a sudden glimpse of the obscured eyes beneath that hat brim gave the doctor rather a start. It seemed to him, oddly enough, that he had seen those eyes before and in no such figure as this.

The curious thought was interrupted by the opening of the door. A young negro, in the white coat of a houseman, stood there.

"I am Doctor Darand."

"Yes, sir. Mr. Colton's expectin' you."

Inside the spacious, walnut-paneled hallway the negro took Bertram's hat and ulster. Some one upstairs was whistling "Barney Google." Then a man's voice called: "Billy!"

The whistling ceased.

"Is that the doctor?"

A younger man's voice answered: "I'll see."

Bertram moved toward the stairway.

Above, over the banister, peered a youthful face, topped by sleek blond hair, parted in the middle.

"You're Doctor Darand?"

"Yes."

"Come right up!"

The stairway was rather dark, Bertram thought, as he ascended. The only light came from dim windows below.

Bertram crossed to a door which stood half ajar, knocked and walked into a wide front room, well lighted by three windows. He found his patient alone, pacing back and forth.

Harper Colton was a large man, with something of a tendency to waistline.

As he came forward, there was a distinct nervousness in his manner.

"Morning, doctor," he said huskily, and cleared his throat.

Colton did not offer to shake hands. Once more he cleared his throat; and as the doctor met his gaze the pale blue eyes shifted uneasily.

"I—uh—you may think it's funny I'm up and around, but they—they tell me I'm bad off—even if I don't look it."

get a better name. Now, I'll use the telephone, please."

"What does this mean?"

"You—you can't take him out." A light of fear showed in Colton's eyes. With a trembling hand he passed a handkerchief across his brow. "I won't have him taken away from this house!"

Bertram advanced to the couch and gazed at the boy's quiet, pale face. Its aspect puzzled him and, ignoring Colton, he wandered into the next room. Bewilderment had taken the place of anger within him.

The old man who had been sweeping the front steps when Bertram entered the house was sweeping the rear walk now. Very recently he must have cleared the cement, for only the lightest of white down lay in front of his broom. Yet on this frost of snow-day footprints—a single set of footprints, leading away from the house; and Bertram, noticing these almost absent-mindedly, roused suddenly to realization that the old man was busy at obliterating these marks.

Started, Bertram swung about to Colton, who had followed him: "Who is in the house besides your man and us—and him?"

"Nobody," said Colton hoarsely. "Who's just been here?"

"Nobody."

Bertram's pulses pounded in his excitement; he whispered to himself, "I've got to keep cool." And in his bewilderment he cast over and over to himself: "What's on here? What in the world was I called here for?"

The subject of discussion between Colton and himself upstairs had been a blind; he now felt sure. But what was back of the blind? Was it that which had happened or something else which had been intended and which Billy Severson's fall downstairs had cut short?

The negro answered the phone. "For you, sir," he said, turning to Colton.

"Tell me," jerked out Colton, "not now."

"There's got to talk to you," the negro repeated sharply; and Colton started, then went to the phone. Bertram denied.

Quite mechanically Bertram brought out a stethoscope and went through the routine of listening to Colton's heart and lungs.

He was lifting his head from Colton's chest when he became aware that the man's attention was not upon this examination of himself; he appeared to be listening. Curious, Bertram himself listened. A telephone bell rang somewhere below; it ceased and a voice, which Bertram thought was that of the negro houseman, called: "Mr. Severson! Telephone, Mr. Severson!"

"Coming, Fred," thanked he, acknowledged the gay voice of Billy Severson, and a door down the hall banged.

Billy Severson came in a hurry, whistling; Bertram heard him run to the top of the stairs; then heard: "That damn rug! Oh—Ah—God!" A thump, a tumble, a crash, a fall; and the gay voice was still.

Bertram felt himself seized and held. "The boy's fallen," said Colton hoarsely.

Bertram said: "He may have hurt himself."

Colton strode out of the room, Bertram following, and across the dark hall to the head of the stairs. He leaned over the balustrade. "Billy!" he called. "Oh, Billy!"

Doctor Darand found himself gazing down the polished steps to a pattern of light at the bottom where a young man in gray clothes lay sprawled on the floor. He hurried down and ordered the lad placed on a couch.

Hastily Bertram knelt and began his examination. He heard Colton's suppressed "It was Colton, but did not look up—coming down the stairs."

"Billy!" gasped Colton when he was down. "Billy!" And to Bertram he appealed hoarsely: "Doctor, he ain't dead! Tell me he ain't dead!"

"He's not dead," said Bertram and himself breathed freer for it.

"Will he die?"

"I don't know."

"Why don't you know?"

"I don't," replied Bertram patiently. "He's fractured his skull. Of course he's unconscious, you see; but he's living. Where's the telephone?"

"Telephone?" repeated Colton.

"I want an ambulance at once," Bertram explained. "We must take him to hospital as soon as possible."

Colton seemed to arouse at the word "Hospital?" he repeated hoarsely. "I guess not. Hospital's a place where people die. I want that boy to get well. He stays here, doctor!"

"His only chance," said Bertram. "Is a hospital and the best brain man—I mean a surgeon who specializes on the brain—we can get."

"You mean, you don't dare do it here, doctor?" Colton challenged.

Something rang false in this; what it was Bertram did not know. "Certainly not here, Mr. Colton," he answered, "Nor at a hospital, if I could."
