Following the luncheon, Chairman Schaible called the meeting to order and the business session was opened with a welcome to visiting members by Ralph Holmes, director of the Kempf Commercial & Savings Bank, and response by a "Monroe" banker. Then came the roll call, appointment of nominating and resolutions committee and the annual report of the secretary-treasurer. After a few remarks by Mr. Schaible, the first address of the business session was delivered by S. R. HAS THE SALOON PASSED?

Rev. Charles Stelzle, preaching at the West End Presbyterian church, New York City Sunday, said: "The saloon is gone—forever. Nobody wants it back. All the opponents of prohibition are asking for now is light wine and beer."

Rev. Mr. Stelzle is a trustful person.

Of course the outward cry is for "light wines and beer," but the battle cry in the hearts of the really wets, is for the return of the old saloon with all that it means. There are a few faint-hearted brethren among the wets, perhaps, who would be willing to stop when they secured light wines and beer—but the great majority of them want the old-fashioned saloon and all that it meant to this country.

The saloon hasn't actually gone at that. There is in every city in this state places which have taken the places of the old open saloon. They are places where you can go and get bad booze at a very high price, instead of better booze at a reasonable price.

To say that the saloon is gone, is stating far less than a fact. To say that "nobody wants the old saloon back—all they want now is light wine and beer," that person is so free of guile that a child could beguile him!

The conflict is irrepressible. The forces are battling harder than ever they have to bring back the ancient regime of the saloon, the old free and easy days when you drank if you wanted to—and often if you didn't want to—just to show you were a "good fellow."

"All they want now is light wines and beer!" It is to laugh!

CONCESSIONS TO STOCKMEN

Chief Forester Greeley, of the Department of Agriculture, while refusing to yield to demands of western stockmen in the fight for more favorable grazing conditions, has decided to make big concessions. The fight between stockmen in the 11 great public land states will be fought in Congress this winter. The fundamental demands of the stockmen are the reduction of grazing fees, regulation made easier, and permanent grazing permits leasing the land on an area basis. About 30 per cent of live stock men are now using the ranges. Chief Forester Greeley opposes granting perpetual permits, as this would be the equivalent to a gift of the forests to those men who happen to be using them now. He is willing, he says, to establish courts of appeal to settle disputes and to grant permits for periods of ten years, where possible.

THE PAN-PACIFIC CONFERENCE
The United States has received, through the Japanese Foreign Office, a formal invitation to be present at the Pan-Pacific Conference which is to be held at the Tokio Imperial University in October, 1928. Great Britain and other nations having interests in the Pacific ocean have all so been invited to attend. Among subjects to be discussed at the conference will be: present knowledge of physical and biological oceanography in the Pacific; the tidal movements, temperature of waters and allied topics; radio broadcasting and aerial currents on the Pacific; the obstacles to wireless transmission and means to overcome them; structure of the earth and its movements in the districts bordering on the Pacific; earthquakes, elevation and depression of land along the shore, etc.

Chinatown Raided
Federal authorities have taken a firm stand with New York's Chinatown. Raids have followed one another rapidly this week and some 700 Chinamen have been seized, 191 of whom face almost certain deportation. The section is described as a deserted village, business practically at a standstill and the deadly tong war forgotten in the fear that the continued raids mark the beginning of the end of Chinatown's career. United States Attorney Emory R. Buckner says: "I have put the United States Government in Chinatown and I am going to keep it there whether a tong war is in progress or not." Chinese believe that this means that every citizen of Chinatown will eventually have to show his right to remain there or be deported.

ALCOHOL DEATH-RATE RISES
The death rate from alcohol has been steadily increasing since 1919 and conditions are rapidly drifting back to those of before prohibition, according to a 30,000 word report made by the Department of Research and Education of the Federal Council of Churches, sent to Washington, Tuesday. The death rate from alcoholism in its various forms had all but disappeared in 1919, but has risen proportionately since, it is declared.

Women took an active interest this year in the New York Primaries. In some cases women politicians called at the homes of women voters and cared for small children while the mothers went to the polls. Business women were given time off to cast their ballots, the same as the men.

BORAH BACK IN WASHINGTON
Senator William E. Borah, back in Washington after his summer vacation, will take up his work again as Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. Among views stated by Senator Borah on live issues before the committee is his belief that the United States has been too lenient with Belgium; that France and Italy should get the debt terms accorded Great Britain.

Mr. Borah, speaking of conditions in the west said there is evidence there of increasing dissatisfaction with the workings of the tariff among the farmers of the west. He says he found President Coolidge popular, though there is dissatisfaction with some government policies.

FREED LUNATIC

Dr. Menas S. Gregory, alienist and director of the Psychopathic Service at Bellevue Hospital narrowly escaped death when chased for blocks on New York's streets Tuesday by John Mangold, discharged lunatic, armed with a loaded revolver. Mangold, who was discharged last week, had been stirring up hatred for the man who committed him for the past nine years, and during the week since his release had been preparing to find and kill him. Dr. Gregory received no help in his long run for life until the maniac, grappling with him, was knocked unconscious by a policeman.

LESS TEA IN U. S.

America is importing less tea than formerly. Tea imports into the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, amounted to 664,298 pounds, valued at $1,456,193, according to the Foodstuffs Division, Department of Commerce.

RUM RUNNER DETAINED

Liquor valued at $350,000, intended for America, was taken by British authorities from the schooner General Serret, owned and navigated by Mme. Gloria de Casares, a young Argentinian.

PACKER MEEGER DECLARED ILLEGAL
The Armour-Morris packer merger which has been under investigation by Federal authorities since 1923, has been declared legal, by Secretary Jardine, according to announcement made Tuesday at the Department of Agriculture. Neither the business nor the effect of the merger, Secretary Jardine ruled, was price fixing, monopoly or unreasonable restraint of trade. On the contrary, the evidence, he stated, showed that the transaction was consummated in order to reduce overhead expenses and to increase sales of the finished products.

CAILLAUD FULLY EMPOWERED

Minister Caillaud, of France, outlined to the French Cabinet Tuesday his intentions concerning his debt funding mission to Washington. He admitted that the proposed matter is a difficult one but stated that he will be dealing with gentlemen and will submit to them a gentleman's proposition. The finance minister declared himself a great friend to the Anglo-Saxon race and said: "An entente cordial of the western nations is required in the interest of civilization." He has been given full power to negotiate, by the French cabinet.

BIG POWER PROJECT ENDORSED

The voters of the State of Maine Tuesday endorsed the project for harnessing the tides of the Bay of Fundy for the purpose of furnishing electric power to the eastern section of the United States and Canada. The tides are so powerful that they will generate from 500,000 to 700,000 horse-power and supply 3,268,000,000 kilowatt hours a year, it is estimated, four times the capacity of Muscle Shoals.

A Wild Day Out on Location

By MAVERICK TERRELL
 (© 1936, Western Newspaper Union)

A GREAT many queer things have happened in the films; among others Kenneth Keith. Like the film, he was a bit of everything; good, bad and worse, and like Hollywood, himself was the best thing he did.

Keith ought to have been an ideal cowboy—he had been born and brought up in Chicago. It had been an off day out on location. Miss Brooks, who was directing Keith in "Where God's Country Begins," hadn't been in the customary paint frame of mind.

Even Pawnee, Keith's faithful steed, had caught the drift of affairs and added his note; he stood on his ears when the camera counted on his standing on his white-stocked feet, he bolted when he should have remained loyal by his master's rubbed body, there at the bottom of the inevitable cliff, and he continually, despite Keith's spurs, faced the camera when he should have profiled neatly, as he had been painstakingly taught.

Even "Burnt-blanket" Tompkins, Keith's long-enduring double, was off his feed and rolled his cigarettes with two fingers!

This day had been worse than any other out on this particular location, which was up at Copper Lake, and at three o'clock Brooks threw his hands up to the skies, called upon all the angels and any stray devil to witness the last scene of his patience, and rushed away into the southern California forest to keep from during midday or worse. Five minutes later Kenneth Keith, rushed back, bent up the lone railroad track. It was the only direction left out of camp!

Registering hysteria plus, Keith disappeared around the cut. The company, more impressed than usual, decided there was a fair chance that the double trail would precede any more work that day. Some of them went to sleep up against the bluff.

Young Keith tramped up the track in high indignation; everything and everybody got on his high-saltered nerves. He choked with anger and kept on walking. The day was unusually warm. Keith began to get a bit drowsy. He was very, very tired and he needed rest.

The film star came finally to a lonely switch upon the sidetrack of which he had been standing. The door was open and the floor was covered with lightning clean straw. Keith was worn out. Brooks had seen to that! Kenneth climbed in, parked himself comfortably in the heaped straw and fell sound asleep.

He awoke to the motion of the box-car. It was running away! Something had happened to the brakes; there was a grade and the car was running wild; Keith, fully awakened, tried to get to his feet. Impossible. He was bound and gagged. For the moment he thought he had lost his senses. Then he heard the hushed voices from out of the dark of the car. The door had been closed!

As long as he lives Kenneth Keith will never forget the nightmare of that night; the first, real sight he had of his fellow occupants of the car, in the light of the engine fire-box when they finally shot their way into the express car and blew open the express compartment. The robbers were all Mexican—the worst looking pack of greasers Keith had ever seen, even in the films.

The holdup was over quickly, and the swag was carried to the coached horses, while one Mexican with a Winchester kept the crew under cover.

Kenneth Keith, still bound and gagged, all the bravado out of him was compelled to none too gently to mount a horse and dash away with the train robbers. The Mexicans kept up a maddening speed but soon Keith, sore at heart and everywhere, heard not far behind them the inevitable pursuers.

It was a night of torture. It was as dark as indigo and they rode, pursued and pursued like madmen. Once a lurch knocked Keith off his horse but a Mexican, riding behind, picked him up as he sat as a sombrero on the ground. God's nobleman was about all in. He remembered no more.

When he came to himself, he was in the same box-car, on the same switch, and it was the break of day. Cursing himself for the pooriness of his dreaming imagination, strangely sore in body and utterly fagged out, he returned to the company camp.

Hoke Brooks finished the picture under smoother conditions; everyone, everything seemed to go better, especially the star, who shelled his temperament for another day. Keith acted so humbly that he frightened two or three of his company into the best acting they had ever done.

Two weeks later, in the Old Man's inner office, at the Paragon studio, Hoke Brooks got the surprise of his directing life; the Old Man was complimenting him on the new picture "Some Caviar, Hoke," he wheezed "Knock 'em, crotch. Best picture Keith ever pulled. Just signed him up for another year this morning. Got that bird where I want him; hog-tied! Thank God! Keith's about the last of the sugar-cured hams left in Hollywood! Hoke, it was worth every cent taking the guff out of him. Lemme see; three thousand, thirty-six ditty; hum! One week's salary! Cheap at the price; greasers, train and all. Say Brooks, honest, I think he still believes it was a dream, huh?"

Firestone
 will ALWAYS give
 Most Miles per Dollar

No matter where crude rubber prices may go—Firestone advantages in securing raw material, in manufacturing and distribution are always active to make good the pledge of Most Miles per Dollar.

Racing drivers—hill-climbing and endurance record holders—taxicab, motor truck and bus operators—and hundreds of thousands of car owners—are daily emphasizing the unheard-of mileage and service delivered by Firestone Gum-Dipped Cords.

Gum-Dipping is one of the biggest factors in tire performance and long mileage, making Firestone Gum-Dipped Cords the most economical tires ever offered motorists.

The cord from the fabric mills is first delivered to a separate plant where it is treated in a solution of gum, which insulates every fiber of every cord. This protects against internal friction and heat, giving the sidewalls greater flexibility and additional strength.

Prove Firestone's many superiorities for yourself. If you have never had the safety, comfort and economy of these serviceable, long-mileage tires—go to the nearest Firestone Dealer—for Firestone only builds Gum-Dipped Cords.

What's in a Name?
A question often asked but seldom answered. We contend that there is a whole lot in Name, Brand or Trade Mark, such as "Portis" on Hats, "Bradley" on Sweaters, "Munsing" on Underwear, "Racine" on Flannel Shirts, "Eagle" on Dress Shirts, "Packard" or "Beacon" on Fine Shoes, "Lion Brand" on Work Shoes or "INTERNATIONAL" on Fine Custom Tailored Clothes.

WE KNOW their reputation and resources are behind their merchandise and they will use both to keep quality for the price.

Before buying look around and compare our prices with other lines.

ARE YOU RHEUMATIC?

Many Pains That Pass for Rheumatism
Are Really Due to Weak Kidneys.

Do you suffer the agonizing pangs of rheumatism? Are you tortured with rheumatic joints and stabbing twinges? Then you should know that many so-called rheumatic troubles are due to an excess of uric acid and must be treated through the kidneys.
When the kidneys weaken, the whole system is upset by these body poisons.
Help your kidneys with a stimulant diuretic. Use Doan's Pills, the remedy your neighbors recommend! Here is a Chelsea man's case:
"I was in bad shape some years ago with backache, and rheumatic pains.
For awhile I was compelled to lay off work as the pains across my back were severe. My kidneys didn't act regularly so I knew something had to be done. I saw Doan's Pills advertised and went to Penn's Drug Store and got two boxes. I used them until the trouble left entirely."

LOCAL OFFICERS USE FINGERPRINT EXPERTS

Sheriffs and other local officials are using the services of the state's fingerprint experts from the Department of Public Safety at Lansing more and more. In June there were 25 requests for men to be sent out to assist criminal investigations.

An unusual case was one where burglars had entered a clergyman's residence, stolen the communion wine and drank it in the yard. Their finger prints were found on the bottles.

An average of more than 300 identifications a month is made by the identification bureau at Lansing. Under a new law all local officials making requests are required to send fingerprints to the state bureau. It often develops that persons arrested in one county are wanted for crime in another.

PRESIDENT GIVES PRAISE

President Coolidge has expressed his commendation for the work of the Maryland State Police. He has formed his opinion of the men who have been in the line of duty for many years. He has also an active friend of the State Police.

Most Unethically Effective

By JACK WOODFORD.

(A 1926 Western Newspaper Union.)

TO THE casual observer, everything at the Second National seemed about as usual; but to one on the inside, it was at once apparent that there was something extraordinary going on. There were silent, heavyjowled, large-footed individuals—at least a half-dozen of them—walking slowly back and forth.

Suddenly a rough-looking individual entered. "Kin I get a check cashed?"
he questioned dimly.

"Have you an account here?" asked the teller guardedly, his hand out of sight beneath the counter.

"No," admitted the man.

"Then I can't cash your check," replied the payer.

The man turned, grumbled a little,
and walked out.

"By George!" said President Benson, dropping into a chair at the side of Vice President Atkins' desk.

"Same here," agreed Atkins. "Seems to me it would take a whole gang to overcome the protection they would naturally expect us to have on hand in view of that note."

"That's what I thought, at first,"
said Benson seriously; "but somehow I have a premonition." He reached into his pocket, carelessly extracted a worn piece of note-paper and read it aloud reflectively.

"I will drop in at your funny bank sometime Thursday and steal a sum of money—catch me if I can!"

Three o'clock came, and nothing happened; at this time of day the bank closed, theoretically, although actually the waiters upon the chronically late customers until nearly four.

At four o'clock the large outer doors were locked, and still nothing unusual occurred. The force, especially the younger element, were somewhat disappointed; that is, until Hawkins, the "head payer," announced a seven-thousand-dollar shortage in his cash.

"You're sure you are really out that much?" questioned President Benson incredulously.

"Sorry, sir, I've been over my figures three times; there seems no doubt."

"Anyone been in the cage, aside from yourself?" queried Atkins.

"Not a soul, sir."

"Did you put the money into the drawers when you went to lunch?"
probed the auditor, who had joined the group.

"Yes, sir," affirmed Hawkins lightly, a cigarette with fingers that trembled visibly.

At last, one of the detectives, unable to stand the silent, reproachful looks cast toward his fellows and him, spoke up, defiantly.

"This cage is at the end of one of the sections, people coming in and out from the safe deposit department must pass behind it."

"But, surely," interrupted Benson impatiently, "you men watched the back of the cages as well as the front?"

"Sure did," spoke up another of the officers. "I was around near here while Hawkins was out to lunch. A man stood behind this cage for quite a long time, waiting, while a lady companion inquired concerning box rents, but I didn't take my eyes away long enough for him to have opened the cage door."

The auditors completed a re-check of the pilfered cage and confirmed the teller's statement.

At nine o'clock next morning representatives from the bonding company called and went all over the situation again. No new light was thrown on the matter by their investigators.

They questioned Hawkins' integrity; President Benson snorted and left the group disgustedly. Upon reaching his office he found a well-dressed, gentlemanly caller awaiting him. As President Benson closed the door the visitor rose courteously.

"How do you do, Mr. Benson. I came to return the seven thousand which I extracted from your faultily constructed cage yesterday." Benson sank into a chair, pulled out a handkerchief and, for an instant, was astonished and amazed. Recovering his equanimity he reached for a button.

"Please, won't you listen to me for just a moment before you do that?"
pleaded the man. Benson hesitated;
the caller went on speaking rapidly.

"My name is Tilson. I represent the Fidelity Bank Cash company. We manufacture and erect a cage which would preclude all possibility of anyone doing what I did yesterday; a thing, by the way, which could happen any time. Your cages have a three-inch space at the bottom which enables the sweepers to push refuse paper out from under them each evening. Now, our cages are so constructed that—"

"But how on earth—" interrupted Benson. The caller rose and muttered something under his breath. In a moment a diminutive monkey climbed upon the president's desk and laid down a package of fifty and hundred-dollar notes; in the space of about two minutes it made six more trips and deposited six more similar bundles upon the desk, and then Tilson went on speaking.

"I had a hard time, at first," convinced my present employer that a comprehensive experience as a monkey trainer would be of value in selling cages for banks—but they finally came around to my way of thinking."

PROTECTION

ton persisted. "Tell me what it was!" Grame knocked Colton's hand from his sleeve and crossed to a window. It was plain that Kitty Hewitt had said something exceedingly disconcerting. It was plain that she was checking and balking Grame's plan.

Standing off by himself, Colton offered no defense whatever. He had become almost helpless in his terror now. "What're we going to do?" he begged abjectly of Grame.

"Do?" mocked Grame. "Blow—that's what we're going to do. But first, and he leered across at Bertram, 'we'll fix you!'"

"No!" cried Colton. "No more here or—"

"Scared, eh?" Grame jeered at him. "Well, I'll handle this." He turned to the negro. "Get him strings—quick!"

"Strings?" cried Colton.

"Ah, shut up!" growled Grame. A few seconds later the negro hurried in from the kitchen with a coil of clothingline. "Now," ordered Grame curtly, "get hold of him." Doctor Darand leaped to his feet. "Start something!" snarled Grame, thrusting a hand quickly in his side pocket, and you'll never leave this house. Get me!"

sure that her son would recover, seized Doctor Darand's hand and wept with thankfulness.

As Doctor Darand stood in the doorway of the hospital, talking with the reporters, two newspaper cameras were trained on him with a click. Uneasily, for he detected potterily, young Doctor Darand moved aside and he turned up the collar of his overcoat. His troubled glance swept up the corridor of the hospital. Kitty Hewitt was nowhere in sight—and she had promised to meet him here. Then suddenly he caught sight of her, waiting in a taxi, below at the curb, and he hurried down the steps.

"I'm tired," she murmured. "This business rather got me."

"I don't wonder. I'm still a bit dazed myself."

"Do you," she asked wearily, "know the real story?"

"Not all of it," he answered. "They told me back there about young MacLaren coming to Chicago from the little town, with twelve thousand dollars in certified checks, and eighteen thousand in Liberty bonds. He was going into some sort of a real estate syndicate, and the money belonged to the people in his home town. He must have been pretty young, I guess, and somebody swindled him out of half of his bonds. He tried to get it back by gambling."

"And there," said Kitty Hewitt, "he lost the rest of his bonds, and his checks, one by one. He cashed them himself—they couldn't, without giving evidence against themselves."

"They?" asked Bertram.

"They?" asked Bertram.

"The police," Grame answered roundly at him. "Grame, of course, he operates the biggest gambling joint on the South side. It's owned by Harper Colton. That's where he gets his money for his cars and clubs—and for his new wife and her plunge into society."

Bertram exclaimed, but she went on. "This boy got up against Grame, himself, and the game was crooked, of course. They teased him on for a time to make him think he could get back what he'd been swindled out of; then they just took everything away from him. He found out that the place was crooked, but protected; he found out that Colton owned it. Well, last night he went to Colton's house—Mrs. Colton, who doesn't know much about her husband's business, was out of town—and there was a row all right. The kid knew too much; he had too much evidence to let him loose and he threatened to spill it all—and ruin Colton. So they kept him in the house all night and sent for Grame—that's where I got in."

"You? What do you mean?"

"I heard Colton had sent for Grame quick. I didn't know then what Grame did, but I could guess. Grame went at it his own way; he slugged the boy. He wanted to go all the way through with it—kill him and carry him out by night. But Colton lost all his nerve. He's protected gambling and robbery—and yes, murder—before this. But he's never had a killing in his house. He got nearly crazy with that boy dying in the house. He sent for one of their regular doctors, and he said the boy would live a while and then go. Then they cooked up the idea to send for you; you'd the right sort of name and family reputation. They'd have an accident—an ordinary, perfectly natural accident—happen in the house when you were there. You'd see Severson; you'd hear him fall downstairs; then you'd find MacLaren down at the bottom. You'd think he was Severson and certify to the whole business. Nobody outside who couldn't be handled would ever have to see the boy; they'd have a perfectly safe and proper service for Billy Severson, with the coffin closed, and get him safe below ground."

"Severson was ready to go through with his part to give up a suit of clothes and disappear. Well, you know the rest."

"She said 'I got the tip this morning that Grame sent for you to come to Colton's.'"

"You took a big risk for me!" exclaimed Bertram, and seized her hand; she did not draw it away, but she said: "Not for you—not entirely, that is. I came for that boy too, I didn't know who he was; but I figured there was somebody else in trouble. Then there was Eddie to think about, too."

Bertram's clasped hands became tense.

"Eddie?" he cried.

"Ed Pellen!—oh, what's the use? You wouldn't understand. There's so much to this thing—" She stopped and gave it up and gazed from him out of the cab window.

"By 'this thing' you mean," he asked, "your association with Grame and Colton?"

"Not with them now. I've called cops on them. I'm done with them forever."

"I'm glad of that."

"But they won't be done with me."

"I can understand that. They'll try to injure you. But surely there's a power to protect now. I know there is, while Ed Pellen's around."

"Pellen?" said Bertram. "Pellen, you'll look to him to protect you?"

"For a moment his jealousy of the tall, lithe, handsome youth maddened him. 'I believe,' he said, 'you didn't come to that house for me at all. You came to protect him, to see that I didn't speak of him.'"

Her hand was gone from Bertram's grasp; she was peering out the window for the cab to stop.

"That's a good thing to think. Good-by!" she cast at Bertram as she opened the door. She stepped out and hurried into the crowd upon the walk; and, too late, remorse caught Doctor Darand. He leaped from the cab and tried to follow her; but she was gone.

Cuts, Rakes and Hauls 40 Tons of Hay with Star Car

Mason Bowker, a thrifty farmer on Rural Route No. 2, Richland, Michigan, farms a tract of land bordering on one of the many small inland lakes of Michigan.

This land, fertilized by the dead growth of ages of vegetation and rich in humus, grows a luxuriant and valuable crop of marsh hay, but to cut and harvest the crop was always a serious problem with Mr. Bowker.

Horses could not work on the land, because they got mired in the boggy soil, and a heavy tractor was out of the question. A year ago Mr. Bowker viewed with much concern a valuable hay crop ready to harvest with no means of harvesting it, when a friend familiar with the adaptability of the Star car for performance in mud, sand and soft soil suggested the possibility of Mr. Bowker's using his Star car as a tractor for harvesting the hay.

Hesitatingly, and with many misgivings, Mr. Bowker had made a set of special wide iron-treaded rims, and fitting them on his Star touring car, arranged a hitch for his mowing machine, and lo! the Star car cut, raked and hauled 40 tons of hay.

The picture shows here illustrates how the job was done. Mr. Bowker, naturally, is much elated with the manner in which the Star car solved a difficult problem. "Where there's a Star," says he, "there's a way."

There is some dispute as to who first made ice by chemical and mechanical means. Prof. A. C. Twining, of New Haven, Conn., was one of the first prominent inventors in this line, but there has been much artificial ice before. Artificial ice did not become a commercial success until about 1850.

LEWIS WINS EXCITING MATCH AFTER HE'S THROWN FROM RING

Thrills Galore in Fast Film of Wrestling Bout

Because of the unsatisfactory ending of the first meeting of the men, the second wrestling bout between Ed "Strangler" Lewis and Wayne Munn for the Championship of the World aroused interest in this event to an extent rarely witnessed in a wrestling match.

When the pair first met, Munn, a young giant from Nebraska, after a few minutes of wrestling, lifted the champion, Lewis, from the floor and championed him bodily from the ring. So great was the force of the fall that Lewis was unable to continue and Munn claimed the championship on the ground that Lewis had forfeited the match by failing to appear for the second fall.

It was to decide which was the better man and to strengthen the claim on the championship that the two men recently met at Floyd Fitzsimmons' big wooden arena at Michigan City, Indiana, and which resulted in victory for Lewis.

Realizing the tremendous interest in the match on account of the outcome of the first meeting, the firm of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, of Chicago, made arrangements to secure the official and exclusive motion pictures of the event. These pictures, ing to picture goes of both sets which are distributed by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., will be shown as a special attraction at the Theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, September 30 and October 1, in addition to the evening's program.

Generally, pictures of a wrestling match are not good motion pictures, but the pictures of this match were fortunate in that their production that the match would be filled with "fireworks" was fulfilled.

Wayne Munn is a young giant. He weighs 252 pounds, stands 6 feet 6 inches, towering above Lewis who is 6 feet, 1 inch, and weighs 219 pounds. Munn is a young Hercules, possessed of prodigious strength, but lacking the experience of his adversary.

On one occasion Munn lifted Lewis and tossed him clear of the ring but Lewis, though badly shaken, was able to continue. Again, with one mighty effort, Munn flattened Lewis to the mat, securing his only fall in the match.
