TEACHER'S CERTIFICATE DATES BACK TO DAYS OF 1865

Mrs. Rose Gregg Possesses Public School Document Which Dates Back Farther Than Detroit's Certificate.

Appearing in the Detroit News, issue of Sunday, October 10, was a facsimile of a teacher's certificate presented Miss Sarah McGoldrick in Detroit, on the 8th day of July, 1866, by the Detroit board of education. The News believes it to be the oldest oldest public school document in Detroit. And it may be. But Chelsea can go Detroit one better when it comes to public school documents. Mrs. Rose Gregg, West Middle street, has produced a teacher's certificate presented her on the 8th day of April, 1865, by the school inspectors of Sylvan township, and signatures include the names of Lumare Shepard, H. B. Flagler and J. Krum. In the lower left hand corner is an internal revenue stamp of 5 cent denomination and cancelled with initials of the school inspectors.

The certificate, which is written long hand reads as follows:—It is hereby certified that Rosalia Shaver has passed satisfactory examination before us in the following branches, viz: Orthography, reading, writing, grammar, geography, arithmetic, and is able to give instruction in the same. She has moreover been found of good moral character and of competent ability to teach a school, and we have therefore licensed her to teach in the schools of this township of Sylvan, county of Washtenaw, for the term of six months from the date hereof. Given under our hands this 8th day of April, A. D. 1865.

Signed, Lumare Shepard, H. B. Flagler, J. Krum, school inspectors of the township of Sylvan, county of Washtenaw, Mich.

ONE COW'S TAIL, $500 O. K.

SAY COUNTY AUDITORS

How much is the end of a cow's tail worth? The county board of auditors has set a value of $500 on this bovine appendage and thereby hang this tale: A resident of Salem township who also is a justice of the peace, presented the county with a bill of $500 because a dog had chewed off the end of one of his cow's tails. L. O. Cushing, temporary county manager, told the supervisors Monday that he had recommended to the auditors that this bill be held up. But the representative from Salem declared he had investigated and was informed that the check for $500 had been sent to the person who presented the bill. —Ann Arbor Times News.

SCHOOL NOTES

Chapel was held at the regular hour Tuesday morning. There was no outside speaker, but the student body enjoyed the musical program that was rendered.

Miss Foote sang a pleasing solo entitled "The Cradle Song." Dorothy Weinmann and Dorothy Cavanaugh played two piano duets.

The Freshman quartet, composed of Robert Winans, Carl Risley, Claude Rogers and Raymond Dancer, then sang two selections.

Chapel was closed by a song by the entire assembly.

Tickets are now on sale for "The Pictures of American Wonderslands." Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Buck have traveled 30,000 miles in their "House on Wheels" and have taken pictures of all the scenic places in the U. S. These pictures have been put into slides and will be shown here November 5. An interesting lecture will be given along with the slides.

Our football boys are going to Stockbridge Friday to defeat the football team of that place.

EXTENSION WORK BRIEFS

Federal Land Bank has sent out notice that all loans after October 1 will be made at 5 per cent. This is a reduction of 1/4 per cent below the amount previously charged. Loans are made through the local association on first mortgages, the amount any one can receive is not more than 50 per cent of the value of the land as appraised by the appraisal committee of the local Farm Loan Association. During the last week several applications have been made, and appraisal will be made at an early date.

The Freedom Pip-club met at the home of Willis Unhaus Friday evening. Record books were checked over and in each case found to be up to date. This club will be able to send in their record books within a very short time.

Saturday evening the County Wide Shorthorn Calf Club met at the home of Waldemare Buss, Freedom township. Record books were checked over and plans were made for the coming year in Shorthorn calf club work.

ENTERTAINERS WILL BE HEARD FRIDAY, OCT. 23

The American Entertainers, who will be heard here on the local Lyceum course Friday evening, October 23rd, at the town hall, are noted for the variety of their program material and the genuine artistry with which it is rendered.

The company is composed of Corine Jessop, mezzo-soprano, pianist, reader, and Helene Portune, coloratura soprano and violinist. Both are artists of splendid attainments, who have had many seasons of Lyceum experience and are known to admire the country over.

The program includes vocal solos and duets, violin solos, readings and musical monologs. The selections range from strictly classical numbers to the latest popular airs.

One of the most popular numbers is the duet, "Indian Love Call," from "Rose Marie." Other numbers from current light operas are given, including songs from "The Student Prince" and "Topsy and Eva."

FEDERAL HOG CHOLERA

SPECIALIST INVESTIGATING

Dr. Madell, Federal Hog Cholera Specialist, located at Jackson, Mich., has been in the county several times recently looking up suspected cases of hog cholera. Upon examination of herds he found a few that did not prove to be cholera, but there were several cases of the disease located. Cases of cholera have been found in Lima, Bridgewater, and Saline township. Farmers are cautioned to be on the look-out for any sickness in their hogs, and if there seems to be any trouble they should take immediate action to have the trouble diagnosed. Unless special precaution is taken the hog cholera may be far reaching at this season of the year when so much change of work, filling of silos, corn husking, and so forth the disease may be easily carried from one farm to the other. The only sure precaution is vaccination, which can be done by any good veterinarian. In order to be sure it is usually necessary to vaccinate before they have the disease. There is also an outbreak of the disease in Grass Lake township, on a farm located near the village of Grass Lake and several of the hogs on the farm have died from the disease.

KILLING THE FARMER'S FRIEND

When an Iowa farmer complained that the pheasants were eating his corn, the game department killed two of the birds, examined their crops, and found 200 cutworms—and no corn. Almost without exception, when the scientists investigate such cases they find the same result. The farmer owns his crop to the feathered police that keep down the bugs, insects and worms. With continuing slaughter of every form of bird life, the insect loss will be heavier, and farm work harder. The nation could train an army of riflemen in a comparatively short time, but it couldn't in a century restore the bird armies that are the farmers' allies in raising food to feed the country.

STATE OLDER BOYS MEET

The State Older Boys' Conference will be held at Lansing on the week-end of Thanksgiving week. BOY SCOUTS RECIPIENTS OF BEAUTIFUL ISLAND

Mrs. H. Wirt Newkirk, of Ann Arbor, Gives Huron River Tract for Use of County Scout Organization.

The Boy Scouts of the Washtenaw County Council have at their disposal one of the beauty spots in the county to further their work in the organization. Mrs. Eleanor J. Newkirk, wife of Judge H. Wirt Newkirk of Ann Arbor, has donated to Boy Scouts of this county, a fifteen acre island in the Huron river near Dexter. In presenting the island to the Scouts, Judge Newkirk said: "Mrs. Newkirk and I have always felt that the Boy Scouts of America is the greatest organization for citizenship training and character-building that the world has ever seen." Following is Mrs. Newkirk's letter to the council:

"To the executive council of the Boy Scouts of Washtenaw County. Gentlemen:

"Desiring to further the work that is being done by the citizens of this county in the building of character of our young people, through such organizations as the one you represent, I hereby tender to you as such representatives for the use and benefit of the Boy Scouts of this county, as a gift to them, the island lying in the Huron river at Dexter, comprising approximately 15 acres of land, which is heavily wooded, and with a slight expenditure of labor and money, can be made a beautiful place for the purpose mentioned.

"Although often apprised of the value of this property for resort purposes, yet I believe that I shall feel as fully recompensed in making this gift to you for the purpose mentioned, as though I had received the value in money.

"If accepted, there will be some minor conditions in the transfer, seeking only to preserve the purpose and proper administration of the property transferred."

(Signed)

Eleanor J. Newkirk

Upon receipt of this gift from Mrs. Newkirk, the council is planning immediately to develop the island into a splendid camp site with permanent equipment. The Ann Arbor Exchange club has offered the Ann Arbor district Scout Council, which is a part of the Washtenaw Council, a beautiful club house to be built on the island by the Exchange club for the use of the Scouts of the county.

Several troops have already voted to each build a cabin of their own on this island. It is hoped that in the near future this island will be a center for camping and outdoor activities for all Scouts in the county.

TWENTY-TWO CLAIMS

PAID FOR SHEEP KILLED

Sheep killed by dogs during September cost the county $785.14, according to figures compiled in the county treasurer's office.

There were 22 claims presented during the past month, and of the entire list only two have been given to the prosecutor to collect from owners of the dogs.

According to state law when the owner of a dog which kills sheep is known, the man who sustains the loss should report the case to the justice of the peace in his township and after an investigation by the justice, the claim can be turned over to the prosecutor for collection.

Dogs, which kill sheep may be killed by order of the sheriff's department.

LAND-LARGE ORDER FOR

CAST IRON ELEVATOR WTS.

Business at the Chelsea Foundry, Co. plant north of the railroad has been on the upgrade continually since their establishment here the fore part of this year, a varied output of grey iron castings daily being shipped to customers throughout southern Michigan. Within the past week the company landed an order for 500 tons of elevator weights and has under consideration inquiries for considerably larger quantities of their product. Patterns for the elevator weights are already in the company's plant and it is expected production will start immediately. All of which is an indication of the success being attained by one of Chelsea's newest concerns, which is being managed by M. B. Giberson, Sr., and sons, M. B. Giberson, Jr., and Philip Giberson.

GREAT FINDS REPORTED

Excavators working in biblical lands are reporting some very important finds, which bear out scriptural stories of happenings in the early dawn of written civilization.

The Temple of Ashtoroth, renowned in the sanctuary of the Philistines and the edifice in which King Saul's battle armor was hung as a trophy of the Israelites' defeat at the battle of Gibeon, has been found.

A cablegram, notifying the museum of the University of Pennsylvania here that the university expedition to Belshazzar, in Palestine has unearthed the ancient structure, was received today from Alan Rowe, field director.

The announcement of the find followed a cable of September 30 that the expedition had discovered an image of the Goddess Ashtoroth, deity of the Philistines, with a shrine, bronze serpents, doves and similar objects used in the cult worship.

BANDITRY IN SPREADING

New York City is every day reaping the whirlwind of banditry, burglary and murder, for its winking at law violations, and tearing down of the American constitution, in order that it may get its regular supply of booze from the rum runners and bootleggers that infest its borders.

Sixty restaurant waiters were the victims Sunday night, in Max Peffer's place, 25 St. Mark Place. They had gone there after their day's work, and the six bandits put in their appearance, holding up the sixty, securing $12,000 in the haul.

When banditry spreads to such an extent that one class of bandits goes in for robbing another class, we are rapidly approaching the time when we shall see a grand scramble for the wealth of America, and a policy of "the devil take the hindmost."

Do the American people see any warnings, or get any lessons out of these happenings?

THE LEOPARD'S SPOTS

There is an old saying that what is bred in the marrow cannot be taken out of the bone. The newspapers carry the announcement that John Joseph McNamara, business agent of the Bridge Ornamental and Structural Iron Workers' union, Local 22, has been found guilty of blackmail by a jury in the Marion county, Ind., criminal court.

This verdict carries a penalty of from one to five years in prison and a fine of not more than $1,000. McNamara was one of the participants in the dynamiting of the Los Angeles Times building, several years ago, when a number of the employees were killed, for which he served a term in prison. The lesson to be drawn from the conviction of McNamara is that the reputation of unionism never changes its spots.

Union criminality goes steadily on and the changes that have been made in the last ten or twenty years have not been of a character to eliminate the real danger point in unionism—the use of force, the resort to crime and intimidation, blackmail and even murder. These things have not been changed and show up whenever occasion demands or permits. The blackmailer of today and the dynamiter of twelve or fourteen years ago are one and the same and are products of unionism.

THE GROWTH OF FOOTBALL

The remarkable manner in which football has grown in favor in recent years is really surprising when viewed from a nationwide standpoint. In every institution of learning, whether college or school, public or private, the game has assumed a leading place. Thousands of young men are being yearly attracted to educational points because of the opportunity that football gives them to demonstrate their ability as leaders in school and college life.

We do not contend that education should consist of being a good football player, but we say that the game tends to bring out all that is best in a young man and should be encouraged.

Football teaches true sportsmanship, clean living, cooperation, individual initiative, and is a direct incentive to closer application to school and college work because of the fact that under the existing rules of the game no student is eligible to a place on the team who does not have a good standing in his work. Football brings loyalty to every institution of learning in which it is made a part of the curriculum, and loyalty is bound to bring about a wider and finer viewpoint of the things necessary for proper manhood. And not only is football self-supporting, but it is a means of encouraging all other branches of sport in helping to build up clean and virile young men and women.

"THE VILEST MURDER"
In Illinois a woman slew her husband, aided by her second husband. The judge in passing sentence on the two after they were convicted, denounced the crime as "the state's vilest murder"—gave the man thirty years and the woman twenty. If that is all the courts in Illinois can do as punishment for "the state's vilest murder," no wonder there are Herms in that state.

Believe It or Not!
If the sea were emptied and the 134 rivers had to fill it, it would take them 40,000 years to do so.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON PASSES

No citizen of New York was more highly esteemed than Christy Mathewson, formerly star pitcher for the New York Giants, who died at Saranac Lake, Thursday.

A true sportsman; a ball player who played because he loved the game; who became the world's greatest pitcher of his time, because he worked hard to learn all he could about pitching; a man of character as well as achievement; the hero of millions of men and boys, whose clean life and exemplary habits left an impress upon the manhood and boyhood of New York and the country at large, Christy Mathewson was one of the most characteristic and colorful men of his time, and his death will be genuinely mourned by a great host of friends—he made his living the life of a clean, honorable sportsman, and one who achieved the greatest fame in his line of any of his fellows, because he lived right, worked hard and did his best at whatever task came to his hands.

MORE JUDGES NEEDED
With the present condition of our federal court dockets, the next Congress ought to set up many more United States courts in this country. It would be well if they would establish sufficient courts to try all charges of violation of the Volstead act. It would be well to make these courts separate tribunals with a jurisdiction only in cases in which the Volstead act is involved.

By establishing such courts cases could be quickly brought to trial, and men especially fitted for handling such cases would be the judge of them, to do with them as they should—get them tried and out of the way. There is only one way to enforce the Volstead act, and that is to give those arrested a quick trial, and secure prison sentence that cannot be laughed off, as well as heavy fines.

The law can be enforced if the government at Washington has a will to enforce it.

A HUGE AIR TUNNEL
Orville Wright, one of the inventors of the airplane, has accepted the chairmanship of the advisory committee of the school of aeronautics, recently established by virtue of the gift of Daniel Guggenheim for that purpose, by Columbia University, to undertake some new and very important developments of the airplane.

A huge air tunnel nine feet in diameter, and susceptible of attaining an air velocity of 100 miles an hour, is to be established for testing planes and to test the lifting power of various types of planes.

Something quite worth while should come out of these experiments.

BETTER BUSINESS CONDITIONS
From every section of America comes the cheering news of better business and better business conditions for this Autumn.

The United States Chamber of Commerce published a survey last week from all sections of the country which showed conditions very materially better than they were, and a growing increase in business.

Mrs. Florence E. Knapp, secretary of State at Albany sent out a statement this week to the effect that there is every indication of better business. This is reflected in the great increase in the number of incorporated companies. In 1924, the first nine months, there were incorporated in the state of New York 1,559 companies. The first nine months of this year showed a record of 1,937 incorporated companies.

In September alone, there were incorporated in New York state, 1,892 new companies of all sorts and descriptions. This is 603 more than were incorporated during the month of September 1924.

It may be mentioned in passing, that one out of the 1,892 companies incorporated in September, is a company to "turn out antiques." In this fast new age, we have run out of antique and ancestral things to supply the new rich with a background, therefore there must be factories to make them.

We just must have our antiques, although we must take them in this year of Our Lord 1925, and bore holes in them like worms, or employ vast armies of worms to do the boring.

Probably more worms will be employed this year than ever before in boring furniture of the vintage of 1925-26, or even further back than that. It is singular how much value a little boring worm can add to the value of an otherwise valueless piece of furniture.

HOUSEWIFE AND THE PEDDLER
The housewife usually regards the peddler who comes to her door as a nuisance. But half the time she encourages him by the upside-down process of "buying something to get rid of him." She finds it easier, in the individual instance, to buy a package of bad needles, or a rug, or a rubber apron which turns out to be a second, than it is to listen to a stream of talk and force herself to argument as to why she should not buy.

Yet if the housewives of a given town were to unite in refusal to buy of itinerant salesmen for a year, they would find themselves left, long before the year was out, in peace and quiet to attend to their home duties without interruption and to do their marketing according to their own good judgment.

Hard to Account For
The approximate age of the earth, according to a German scientist, is between 1,000,000 and 1,200,000 years. And we still have growing pains!

Chlorine Not Milk Purifier
It is generally known that chlorine as a purifier of water is an ideal agent for killing germs in the water. It is not the case with milk, however. It is likely that chlorine cannot penetrate the fat in milk, and is therefore, frustrated in its action on the germs.

Put Naturalist Down as "Poor Innocent"

The patient devotion of the naturalist to observations that seem to the ignorant onlooker trifling and meaningless often creates in the minds of those onlookers a reasonable doubt of the scientific man's sanity. In the "Human Side of Fauna," by Mr. P. F. Bicknell, there is an amusing incident in point that the great French naturalist was himself fond of relating.

Ever since daybreak, he says, I had been sitting in watchful waiting on a stone at the bottom of a ravine. The digger wasp of Languedoc was the subject of my morning's study. Three women, grape-pickers, passed me on their way to the vineyards. Glancing at the man sitting there apparently lost in thought, they gave him a polite good morning, which he as politely returned. At sunset the same three grape-pickers passed again on their homeward way with their heaped-up baskets on their heads. The man was still there, sitting on the same stone; his eyes were turned upon the same spot.

My immobile attitude and my long continued station on the one spot all alone must have struck them as something extraordinary. As they passed me I saw one of them touch her forehead with her finger, and I heard her whisper to the others in their patois: "A poor innocent. Oh, poor man!" Then they all three crossed themselves.

An innocent he had called me, an innocent—that is, an idiot, a poor devil, harmless but bereft of his reason—and they had all three made the sign of the cross, for in their eyes an idiot was marked with the seal of God—YOUTH'S COMPANION.

Persian Rug Classified as Work of Real Art

A truly unique piece of oriental work is Persia's wonderful "Coronation" rug. It embraces a pictorial record of Persia's rulers from the time of the Christian era to the time of the World War. Work upon the rug was started in 1906 and went on until it was completed. It was to have glorified the crowning of the sultan Ahmed Mirza, on the occasion of his expected accession to the throne of Persia, but was diverted mysteriously to New York. Moving like the enchanted carpet, it was split into 6,000 miles to that modern Baghdad. The rug is a multicolored one, is 16 feet long by 11 feet wide, and was specially woven during the period of 17 years, being the handiwork of the 27 most famous rug makers then living in Persia. With remarkable fidelity to features and absolute verity to costume of the time of each individual depicted, this rug represents the portrait of 130 of Persia's great kings, or shahs, and is otherwise highly decorated. There are 1,000 knots to each square inch, or about 25,000,000 knots tied to the linen warp threads to produce the wool nap that forms the velvety body and creates the portrait and decorative features.

Many People Pass Your Store Do They Enter And Buy?

Great throngs of people passing your store do not matter. Crowds of potential buyers pass every store daily. Your profits depend on the number who stop, enter and buy.

No factor does more to attract attention to your store than good lighting. Nothing else makes merchandise so attractive and thus accentuates quality in goods. No other element adds so much to the hospitality and welcome of a store, or extends such a warm invitation for customers to return and, most important of all perhaps, good store lighting practically guarantees customers later satisfaction with the things they buy.

Is your store profitably lighted? It will pay you well to get the kind of lighting that makes the cash register ring. We can supply you with such lighting.

Quality Counts

Red Crown—A Premium Gasoline at a standard price—glides up the grade of popular favor with great ease.

Thousands of motorists have recognized the force of the "price per mile" argument and switched over to Red crown.

The price per gallon contention is weak-kneed—has no bearing.

The story is told better by what is built in the gasoline.

Of what significance is the question of a saving of a few cents on an investment of hundreds of dollars?

If you pay less for your gasoline than the price of Red Crown, you are getting less—and that is false economy raised to the nth power, no matter how it is disguised.

Apple in High Place as Family Physician

This is what an apple does to one. It starts all the secretions into vigorous action and floods the system with a new tide of life. It is a friend to health and a foe to disease. It is a food, tonic, condiment and cosmetic all in one. It kindles the brilliancy of the eye, and it plants roses in the cheeks. You cannot eat too many—after the heartiest meal there is always room for an apple. An apple is a social fruit; it draws human beings together in fellowship. Plenty of good apples will keep the children at home and in at night—husbands as well—and keep the doctor away. It promotes temperance. It appears on our table in many appetizing forms. Raw, fruit, as it comes fresh and crisp from the trees and the refrigerator, needs no culinary art to improve it. A knife spoils it, let it be crushed and crunched in the mouth, and then it gives out its richest flavor and yields the greatest satisfaction. The apple family contains in its varieties exquisite flavors adapted to all tastes. It is the oldest of our known food necessities. American Pomological Society Bulletin.

Shis and Snowshoes
Owing to the thick forests of America the snowshoe has been found to be more suitable for use than the ski, which is preferred in less wooded regions. The large, flat surface of the snowshoe furnishes a larger plane of resistance to the soft snow and by distributing the weight of the wearer over a larger surface does not break the brittle crust on top of the snow, which makes progress without snowshoes impossible.

GRASS LAKE—The roof has been finished, the bell put in place and they are plastering the Federated church this week.—News.

DEXTER—Mrs. Josephine Sharpey, who has been assistant in the post-office for nearly eight years, has been appointed acting Postmistress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Postmaster, William Stoffer.—Leader.

CLINTON—In this issue of the Local in the report of the village council proceedings, appears the notice of the special election to be held November 16, to decide whether or not we shall bond the village for $52,000 for the purpose of constructing waterworks in the village.—Local.

FREEDOM—Margaret Roller, teacher in district No. 8, Pleasant Lake, reports the following neither absent nor tardy for the month of September: Elizabeth and Lenora Haab, Erwin, Armin and Ruth Widmayer, Deslyn Schneider, Erwin Schumaker.

STOCKBRIDGE—A petition to Frank F. Rogers, State Highway Commissioner, signed by practically every tax payer on the street, has been presented asking that the street from Thompson's Corners on the west to Collins' Corners on the east be made a concrete pavement. The proposed strip will be about 1.14 mile long.—Brief-Sun.

SALINE—A large amount of road making equipment, which has been used on M-23 in the neighborhood of the Irish Hills, is passing through town eastward bound, and will be put at work in completing the work of paving the balance of the road between Saline and Ypsilanti. If favorable weather continues it is expected the work will be finished this fall.—Observer.

YPSILANTI—Owen Lidke, William and Herman Crossie were bound over to the October term of Circuit Court at the close Thursday evening of the examination of charges against them in connection with the slaying of Harry Cyb on the night of September 18. "This case has been given an exhaustive inquiry. The defendants have elected, as is their right, not to take the stand. The sheriff has made a thorough investigation and the crime is still unsolved," stated Justice D. Z. Curtiss in his decision to hold the defendants to Circuit Court.—Press.

MANCHESTER—The Maccabees will hold a big "Jollification Meeting" at their hall Friday evening, October 16, to celebrate the accomplishments of the lodge in securing new members the past year. Tents from Jackson, Ann Arbor, Jackson, Adrian, Tecumseh and Milan have been invited, and besides Grand Lodge officers will be present. An event of the evening will be presentation to the tent of $100 by Commander Carl Wuerthner, it being a prize won by him for securing the largest growth of a tent membership. Refreshments will be served and a fine time is planned.—Enterprise.

BRIGHTON—It isn't often that we go to press without at least one attempted burglary to report, and this week is no exception. Last Friday night burglars made the second attempt inside of three months to gain entrance to the Cline-Boylan clothing store through one of the side windows. In both instances the presence of F. M. Cline who was inside on guard defeated the purpose of the burglars and prevented what might have been a serious robbery. The affair was immediately reported to the officers with a description of the burglars but owing to an unfortunate combination of circumstances action was not taken in time and the thieves escaped.—Argus.

HOWELL—John Clark was brought to Howell from the Sparrow hospital at Lansing last Wednesday by the sheriff's department, and arraigned before Justice Wilber on a larceny charge. It will be remembered that Clark was one of the youthful bandits who slipped their handcuffs in Justice Collette's office at Brighton about four weeks ago and escaped by taking to the woods, eluding the officers of three counties. They were shot at by Deputy Morgan, John being wounded and was later captured at Lansing when they were obliged to go to a physician to dress the younger brother's wounds. William, aged 22, the older brother, made his escape and is still at large, although both boys are said to be wanted by the officers at several places in the state and adjoining states.—Democrat.

When Greek Meets Greek

The phrase "When Greek Meets Greek," when equal and great forces compete (a hard contest is to be expected), is derived from lines in Nathaniel Lee's "Alexander the Great." "When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war; and allusion to the contest between the Greek states and Philip and Alexander of Macedon. 507-555 B. C.—Literary Digest.

Peevish the Kangaroo

"What's the matter with the kangaroo?" asked the manager of the circus. "Gotta bad case of blue devils," replied the keeper. "We got blocked during the parade this morning and he had a chance to watch the pedestrians do their stuff and it made him feel like a back number when it comes to hopping and jumping."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Five years ago, Mr. Lienhart was possessed of about four hundred acres of swamp land and sand knolls upon which there rested a mortgage of nearly six thousand dollars and against which nearly five thousand dollars in special taxes were assessed. It was not a comforting outlook for Mr. Lienhart and to make it the more serious the mother of his ten children was taken in death. The eldest was a girl of fourteen. It took courage to face the situation then and it is a source of more than ordinary satisfaction to his friends that the present season has seen his debts wiped out and a snug bank balance steadily growing to his credit.—Republican.

Order of Creation

Ants are older than Adam. Man (for very wise reasons) was blit until all other things were finished and pronounced good. It was him made last he would have waited upon himing the rest of the job. He probably would have objected to having any little black ants at all, and various other objections would have bin offered equally green. I am glad that man was the last thing made.—Josh Billings.

It cost 20 times as much to recruit the 2,400,000 men who fought on the Union side during the Civil war as it did to recruit the 4,800,000 raised by the United States in the World war.

Two "Shaker" Groups

There are two groups of "Shakers" in the United States. One is a Christian group, distributed through the eastern states, whose self-chosen name is "Believers in Christ's Second Coming." The second group is made up of the native Indians living in the region of Puget sound, who made up an invented what is known as the Shaker religion in 1831.

CONGREGATIONAL
E. L. Sutherland, Minister.
The hours of worship: Prancing 10 o'clock a. m. Church school at 11:15 a. m. Evening preaching at 7 o'clock. The theme for the morning worship will be upon something we ought not to be ashamed of, something we ought to know about, and meet with great patience. Theme: Lewis Helm, Friday evening, October for evening is upon the great race we have entered. There are great gatherings at the race and we need to do our best. There is a great daily need among the American people. That is to "Search the Scriptures daily." Why? Because of the great wonder and beauty of our Bible is that to every difficulty and every age it adapts its message; so that to rich and poor, in joy or sorrow, it always brings just what one needs when there is no other source of comfort for bereaved humanity. For neither dollars nor foods—nor even doses—can filter through our physical casement; and satisfy our souls. Was there ever a time like now, when its brave, strong words of eternal and abiding helpfulness were so needed? It says I know, a thousand times. We welcome you to the Congregational church if you have no other church home, and to all its services.

The One Dog Team

By VARA M. JONES

(© 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

A BLOODHOUND'S bay cut the silence that lay over the western hills one early morning. The armed posse, six men on horseback, picking their way down the narrow path, came to an abrupt pause.

Hundley, the sheriff, planned quickly. "That bay was from the valley. Dougherty is down there, making for the border. Suppose we scatter, in couples, and try to close in on him before he gets up into the hills. Smith and Morton circle to the left; Young and Moran to the right; Hysonson, will you go straight down. If any of you come across a considerable lay-out crowd, tell them the signal is two shots at the first sign of a dog."

The men were off. The sheriff struck spurs into his horse as he reached a level stretch. "I knew Ajax would get him," he called over his shoulder.

Jim Dougherty, in the county jail waiting to be taken to the penitentiary to commence his ten-year sentence, had made his getaway in the early hours of the morning.

It was the first time that a prisoner had escaped since the sheriff had decided that a ferocious dog would be a valuable addition to a jail. Hundley undertook Ajax's training, not only resorting to systematic torment while he was breaking the dog as a trailer, but harshness, meager rations, neglect, when the dog was keeping watch day and night in the prison yard. And Ajax became not only a fierce watchdog, but, unlike the average bloodhound which is notoriously gentle even after it has bayed down its quarry, so that it was necessary to follow up with a "catch" dog to grapple with the pursued was sufficiently vicious to subdue his prey after it was run down. For which unusual prowess the sheriff had bestowed upon him the title of his "one-dog team."

And yet, in the face of this record, Jim Dougherty had managed to cross the courtyard and scale the wall.

But Ajax was running true to form again. Of that the sheriff felt convinced as he rode in the direction from which came the resounding bay.

A swift gallop, during which Hundley and his companion's path was crossed by Moran and Young, and shortly afterward by Constable Layton's posse, brought them to the scene from which a "sneak" had been sent.

They found Moran and Smith in excited conversation beside a deserted adobe, from it they had just released Ajax.

The men gave an explanation. They had also heard Ajax's bay, had followed the sounds as long as they lasted, and then came upon the mud hut, which revealed the imprisoned dog.

"Dougherty's put one over on us again," the sheriff said grimly. "He's managing to use dogs on this dog. Well, we'll take no more chances. He secured a heavy leash from his saddy-bag and grided it on Ajax. Dougherty can't be far away. We'll comb the woods."

Ajax set off. Across the valley he led the posse, starting up into the hills. Racing past a tree, he whirled back, circled it, then raised his head in a loud bay as he pounced at the trunk.

The sheriff fired two shots. Almost immediately his men were at his side. And there, far up in a forked branch, crouched the convict.

Hundley acted as spokesman. "Got you, eh? Well, come down." He pulled handcuffs from his pocket.

The prisoner, with a hopeless gesture, started to lower himself, but suspended action as one of the men, after an exchange of knowing glances with his companion, asked in a challenging tone: "Aren't you going to let him fight it out?"

The sheriff stiffened—frowned—then, with his gaze on the yelping, leaping dog, nodded curtly. He addressed Dougherty: "Want to fight it out?"

The boy's eyes turned on Ajax, then to the ring of faces. "I'll take my chance with the dog," he replied.

As Dougherty's feet came to earth the dog leaped forward. Then an astonishing thing happened. As the great body reared against the prisoner, the latter thrust Ajax aside heavily, raising an admonishing hand. "Lie down!" he ordered firmly. Ajax's ears flattened and he crouched at the speaker's feet. Quick as a flash the latter turned and leaped into the woods. And Ajax, with a howl of protest, jumped to his feet and followed.

"Why—the other prisoners say Dougherty spent most of his time making friends with the dog from his cell window. I got wind of all this after you left this morning. They say he shared his meals with it, talked to it, taught it to lie down when ordered; all that," said the sheriff's deputy, Morton, in the jail office on the afternoon the posse returned from its search for Jim Dougherty, minus both convict and dog.

"Pool I was not to suspect it," Hundley said grimly. "Fool, too, to agree to let him have his chance to fight it out. But I thought Ajax was ready to tear him limb from limb—instead of only wanting to make a fuss over him. You see, I figured out all along that Dougherty only got the best of the beast by doting him."

"But you didn't figure out that that dope was kindness, eh, chief?" Morton said quizzically, as he bent over a report sheet.

Inventor Had Taken No Chance of Losing

Surely, the Scotch are the most tolerant people in the world, as they bear the brunt of most of its so-called humor. But there is considerable basis for the well-circulated theory that the Scot is canny. Here is an authentic yarn, vouched for by Harry Furness in his "Some Victorian Men" that illustrates the point.

When Bessemer, the genius who gave to steel his name, came to make his discovery public, he put a lump of the famous steel in his pocket and made his way to Naasmith, of steel-hammer fame.

Placing the metal on Naasmith's desk, he told him that he had made an extraordinary discovery which would revolutionize the whole metal world. Then came a little incident which shows what wonderful heads these Scotch financiers possess. What do you think Naasmith said to this excited inventor?

"Eh, mon, it's very risky to show your wonderful invention. The world is very dishonest."

To which the inspiring inventor replied: "Right, Mr. Naasmith, I just calculated whom I was coming to see, so with my last half-crown I registered the invention on my way."

Lenny Really Didn't Know Weight of Hog

If old Lenny Foskett was anything more than deliberate, he was exasperating. He moved, spoke and lived at his own sweet will, and no one had ever been known to budge him. He came into the village store one morning, threw himself down on the bench in front of the counter and announced that he had just killed his prize hog.

"Guess how much he weighed, boys," he drawled.

"Two hundred and seventy-five," ventured one of the loungers.

Lenny shook his head.

Others offered suggestions; the guesses grew so brisk that it began to sound like an auction. All sorts of weights were given, but to all of them Lenny merely shook his head.

Others began to lose patience. From mere curiosity they began to long passionately to learn the weight of the hog and pass on to another subject.

"Well, for heaven's sake, how much did your old hog weigh?" somebody demanded. "We've guessed every figure possible. How much did he weigh?"

Lenny yawned. "Hi—hum, I dunno," he drawled. "I ain't weighed him yet." Youth's Companion.

Man-Made Earthquake

It is believed that the numerous small earthquakes recently reported from the Midlands of England are due to the handwork of man. In excavating for coal and iron the miner cuts away millions of tons of rock and coal and piles it on the surface, thus setting up all sorts of stresses. In July, 1918, dwellers near the coast of Cornwallshire were startled out of their sleep by loud subterranean rumblings, while the earth quivered over an area of many square miles. It was found that a considerable area of land lying between the Rivals granite quarries and the shore had started to slide seaward. The fact was that the waste of the quarries which for years has been dumped on this lower ground, had proved too much for it, and had set the whole ledge sliding, producing a very good imitation of a real earthquake.

Tree-Climbing Fish

In India there is a fish known as the tree-climbing perch. Technically the scientists call it "Anabas testudineus scandens." By means of its fins and gills this fish can travel overland from one body of water to another. Its breathing apparatus is adapted for life out of the water. Stories about this fish's ability to climb trees should be taken with liberal portions of salt. The United States bureau of fisheries informs us that these tales of its tree-climbing propensity "are heritages from early travelers and are largely mythical." However, the "climbing perch" has been known to work its way upon stones and inclined tree trunks. This is as close as it ever comes to climbing trees.—Exchange.

She Wanted a Change

Betty had only lately been instructed in the matter of evening prayers, and her performance was exemplary until the occasion when she startled her mother with the petition: "Bless this little pig tonight."

She was reminded that the correct word was "lamb," but refused to return to orthodoxy.

At last, when pressed for the cause of this stubborn naughtiness, she replied that she was tired of being a lamb. "Every night," she protested, "it has been lamb, lamb, lamb. So tonight I'm going to be a pig, and tomorrow night I am going to be an elephant."

Gelatin as Food

The potential energy of gelatin is calculated to be even more than that of some fats and albuminate, and yet in the body it is very inferior in the production of energy. It cannot, therefore, take the place of proteins for growth and repair and must be regarded solely as an albumin sparer. Neither can it replace albumin, the loss of which still goes on to some extent even when gelatin is eaten in large quantities. It is used in the body very much like the carbohydrates and fats, i. e., not as a tissue builder, but as a fuel food.

Causes of Monsoons

A monsoon is a wind that blows along the Asiatic coast of the Pacific over the extent of about 40 degrees latitude, in winter from the northeast (dry monsoon) and in summer more violently from the southwest (wet monsoon). The wind is due to the differences of pressure between areas of land and sea which are primarily caused by seasonal difference of temperature.

Rifle Silencers

The National Rifle association says that a silencer works on the same principle as an auto muffler. The tube is screwed on the muzzle of the gun. This tube consists of series of baffles that cause the gases to issue slowly instead of with a sudden rush. It is this rush of powder gas from the muzzle of the gun which creates a vacuum causing the report when discharged.

Jap Musical Instrument
The koto is a Japanese stringed instrument. It has a large number of strings, but the most general number is 13. These are stretched over an arched sound board, each string having a movable bridge, and the strings are turned by moving this bridge back and forward. The instrument has a compass of about two octaves, but in this it varies slightly, some being greater, others less.

Mirrored Animals
Animals can see themselves in a looking glass, but they do not necessarily recognize themselves. They have not our intelligence to understand the image, and the reflection lacks their particular mark of identity—the smell of the original. On the other hand, the reflection sometimes "gets across" to an animal, in which case the animal is usually angry, afraid, or puzzled.

One Place Where Rat Is Not Thought Past
A deity whose name is Ganesha is worshipped by the Hindus.
Because Ganesha is always pictured riding on a rat or attended by one, the rat receives part of the homage directed to the god. For this reason many rats live in state in the temple at Deolmoke, India, where there is an old and interesting shrine erected to this mythological god.
Pilgrims prostrate themselves before a group of rats, which have no idea in life beyond that of eating everything available and keeping a safe distance from cats and hawks. But they represent the rat god, Ganesha, and the temple in which they live is sacred on account of their presence. It is even called "the Rat Temple."
According to Hindu mythology, Ganesha was the lord of the Ganas, who were a group of inferior deities. Ganesha removes obstacles. He is propitiated at the beginning of any undertaking. He is particularly endowed with wisdom and judgment.

Scholars on Strike
Strikes are not a modern trouble. One of the earliest and oddest strikes on record is that which took place in Oxford, England, in 1209, when, in consequence of a peculiarly outrageous aggression of town upon gown, masters and scholars to the number of 3,000 "downed tools" and retired in high dudgeon to adjacent centers of learning. The schools were closed, the city was laid under an interdict, and the trouble only ended five years later—in the complete humiliation of the erring bourgeoisie, who were compelled to do public penance and to accord large privileges to the university. When the offended clerks finally condescended to return, these "blacklegs," who had continued to lecture in defiance of the will of the majority, were punished by three years' suspension.

How Cannon Are Spiked
In former times when the old-fashioned type of cannon was used the guns were disabled by driving an iron spike into the opening at the breech through which fire was communicated to the powder. This was called "spiking" the cannon. It was done when it was necessary to leave the guns behind, to prevent their immediate use by the enemy. Such disablement was usually only temporary. The phrase, however, is retained in modern military usage. Spiking a cannon nowadays means breaking or carrying away part of the breech mechanism, making it impossible to use the gun without considerable repair—Exchange.

Beggars' Trade Union
In China one of the most formidable trade unions is that of the beggars. Beggings in that country is a recognized profession, and there is a properly organized guild of beggars in most districts.
Each guild has its own president and officers, and the members pay an annual subscription—amounting about $4.00 in our money. The officials of the guilds wield such power that they enjoy the protection of the magistracy.
So far there has been no strike on the part of the members of this union, which is undoubtedly the quaintest organization of its kind in the world.

Do Not Force Plants
If a plant has been growing thriftily for some time and then begins to go back it probably needs a rest, and an amount of forcing will do any permanent good. During the resting period a plant is better if left entirely alone in a dry, cool cellar. It will of its own accord and without any attention of any kind begin to put out new green shoots. When these new shoots show themselves the plant should be given a thorough watering, a topdressing if necessary, and brought up into its place in the sun. After it is growing well it may be given fertilizer.

"The Mills of the Gods"
This is an old Greek aphorism taken from the "Oreus Symbion." The original, literally translated, reads as follows: "The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind small." Long fellow, in translating it, inserted the word "exceeding" and made it read: "The mills of the gods grind slowly but they grind exceedingly small." The same thought is found in the other ancient writers.

Sex in Pigeon's Eggs
It is a fact well known to pigeon fanciers that the two eggs laid by pigeons almost invariably produce male and female. Some curious experiments as to which of the eggs produce the male and which the female have resulted in showing that the first egg laid is the female and the second the male.

Benefit in Criticism
Censure and criticism never hurt anybody. It is true, they cannot hurt you unless you are wanting in character; and if true, they show a man his weak points, and forward him against failure and trouble. Gladstone.

Psychical Drawings
The tomb of the unknown soldier at the battle of the Marston, now a ruin, once looked and purported to have been drawn under psychic domination, are the work of a Londoner, who never before made an architectural drawing.

Was Originally Armoric
Battersea is supposed to have received its name from those Britons who were expelled from England and took refuge there between the fifth and sixth centuries. Before that time the country was named Armoric.

THE VERDICT

W. H. U. SERVICE

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman)

TO BERTRAM DARAND, M. D., nothing was surprising today. So very much had happened to him since that epochal night six months ago, when Kitty Hewitt had appeared at his door and rang his night-bell, that he had come to a condition in which he could accept calmly almost any development. Thus he found himself facing, without astonishment, the prodigious phenomenon that he was in demand, professionally, that almost overnight he had gained a practice.

Now that his name and his picture were appearing in nearly every edition of the newspapers, people everywhere discussed him and whereat, at first their talk of him had been unfavorable, now, by one of those whims of fate, his notoriety was turning him into a hero of sorts.

The call of James Bradner was a marked exception and Doctor Darand was forewarned of this by the tone of the attendant when she announced the name over the office phone. He very promptly got rid of the gossip sufferer from lumbago, who just then was exclaiming, "Oh, doctor, it must be so exciting to actually see a shooting."

When the door opened again, a man entered—a middle-aged man, with deliberate, confident bearing and quick, keen, incisive eyes.

"We will not waste time," the caller said at once. "I gave the name Bradner only for the purposes of the waiting-room. I am Rhodane, of course."

"Of course," said Bertram, his pulse quickening. Rhodane was a criminal lawyer—the best criminal lawyer in Chicago, people said. Some said he was the best in the courts of the country.

"I have been retained," Rhodane continued, "to defend Pellen."

"Yes," said Bertram. To think of Rhodane, was also to think of a huge fee. This was in Bertram's mind when he asked, "Pellen has retained you?"

"What difference does it make who pays my fee? I will defend Pellen; that is enough, if you are interested in seeing him acquitted of the charge of murder against him."

"I am interested in that," replied Bertram. "You are also concerned, I take it, in clearing the girl known as Kitty Hewitt from the charge of complicity with him."

"I am very much," said Bertram quickly. "First, I must have a frank and honest statement of your personal situation in regard to the two principals," said Rhodane, sharply, after moving over very close to Bertram. "Kitty Hewitt and you—what are you to each other?"

"I have great regard for her," Bertram replied. "We are very good friends."

"Come, come!" Rhodane tapped the table. "That's better. You've told her?"

"Yes," said Bertram. "I love her."

"That's better. You've told her?"

"Yes," said Bertram. "I love her."

"That's better. You've told her?"

"Yes," said Bertram. "I love her."

"That's better. You've told her?"

"Yes," said Bertram. "I love her."

"That's better. You've told her?"

"Yes," said Bertram. "I love her."

"That's better. You've told her?"

"Yes," said Bertram. "I love her."

"That's better. You've told her?"

"Yes," said Bertram. "I love her."

"That's better. You've told her?"

"Yes," said Bertram. "I love her."

Pellen and Kitty Hewitt sat at a table in the corner of the cafe. "What did you do?" "I sat down with the other three at a table about twenty feet from Pellen's and Miss Hewitt's. We ordered drinks and danced a little and watched them."

"You mean Pellen and Hewitt; what did they do?" "They sat quietly at their table and talked."

"Then why did you keep on watching them?" "Furgitler and the girls expected trouble; that was why they were there. Pellen, you know, was a gunman or had run with gunmen. Kitty Hewitt was trying to get him to give up the life and he'd done things to please her which his old mob considered was double-crossing them. They'd marked him."

"How do you know that?" "Kitty had told me before."

"Did Furgitler or the Fisher and Keller girls tell you the same?" "Not in so many words; but it was clear they expected some one who was going to give Pellen trouble."

"Then did you warn Pellen of this?" "No."

"Why not?" "It was perfectly clear that he was on the lookout for trouble. He was keeping watch all around."

"You mean he expected trouble from the police—from Furgitler, for instance?" "No. The trouble came from another quarter, when Gervie Lavvy and another man and two girls with them, came in."

"What did you know about Lavvy?" "I knew he was a bad character, a gunman and a dope fiend; and it was clear that every one else at my table thought he was going to make trouble for Pellen."

"What did you actually see Lavvy do?" "I saw him sniff powder from his hand, which I believe was 'snuff'—cocaine—several times. He watched Pellen steadily; and at last, after midnight, Pellen called for his check and prepared to leave. Then Lavvy got up and walked to Pellen's table."

"What did you do?" "I watched him."

"Then what did you see Lavvy do?" "I saw him stop at Pellen's and Miss Hewitt's table and speak to them."

"I saw Lavvy reach for Miss Hewitt and try to grab her."

"Go on."

"Pellen got up."

"But did not draw his pistol," Rhodane put it emphatically.

"He did not then," answered Bertram.

"But Lavvy did."

"No," denied Bertram. "I did not see that."

"What did you see?" "I saw Pellen lunge forward, and Kitty—Miss Hewitt—caught his arm."

"Yes. So he could not have drawn his pistol if he wanted to."

"Not at that moment, no. But at the next second he lunged her off. Then Pellen and Lavvy were shooting at each other."

"Surely you saw that?" "The shooting? I didn't—not till Lavvy was down."

"But you must have seen it, doctor."

"I tell you I didn't. I was watching Kitty Hewitt. She'd been flung to the floor and the shooting was over in a second. There was Lavvy down, dead; there was—"

"Doctor," the lawyer stopped him, impressively, "we have now come to a vital point in the evidence upon which depends a man's life or death and a girl's honor or disgrace. You are in love with the girl. Surely you feel the importance of accuracy in this matter."

"Bertram caught his breath deeply. I do, Mr. Rhodane."

"You were at a table with Plain-Clothes Officer Furgitler and two girls who were interested with him in getting 'goods' on Pellen. They have testified before the jury which indicted Pellen for murder, that Pellen drew his revolver first and fired first and shot Lavvy."

"Pellen's only chance to escape a death sentence and Kitty Hewitt's only chance to escape conviction of complicity with him—is to prove that Pellen did not actually draw his pistol first but that he shot in self-defense."

"The testimony of all other witnesses is united against him. They swear he drew before Lavvy made a motion toward his gun. Think again, Dr. Darand, and consider your position and tell me what you have to say."

Young Doctor Darand gasped as he stared at the lawyer and considered his answer. Finally, he said: "My testimony, Mr. Rhodane, is that it is impossible that Pellen fired first. I am a medical man; I was present. Immediately after the shots were fired, I examined Lavvy; Pellen fired but one shot; it killed Lavvy instantly. Lavvy fired two shots; all testimony agrees to that. It is possible that Lavvy pulled the trigger once, convulsively, after he was shot; but it is hardly possible that he pulled it twice. He must have fired the first shot before Pellen shot him."

"That is all you have to say, doctor?" "Yes," said Bertram and was breathless now.

"It will not do. It is a statement of opinion, only, which will have to oppose statements of fact. You say that Lavvy must have fired first, because he could hardly have pulled the trigger twice after he was shot. Three other witnesses will say that Pellen did in actual fact and before their eyes, draw and fire first."

"I have told you that I witnessed everything up to the actual shooting and I examined Lavvy immediately afterward. That is all."

"I will lay before you the truth of this case very plainly, doctor. You have referred several times to the girl Kate Fisher, who sat at the table with you that night and who is one of the chief witnesses upon whom the state counts to swear Pellen's life away."

"Yes."

"Have you ever wondered how she happened to know Pellen's whereabouts so well?"

"I supposed she was on the lookout for him, in Furgitler's behalf."

"She was very keenly on the lookout; for Pellen, as you undoubtedly have noticed, is an extremely attractive young man."

"Yes," said Bertram.

"He is a type over which girls go wild, as they do over other men, doctor. There is a degree of fury which is in a class by itself. It is the venom of a girl who, madly in love with a man, has given herself to him and then finds him scorning her for another girl who has given the man to us say—nothing at all. This venom works up quite a little violence of its own, when allowed to brew awhile. That was the venom which lured Kate Fisher to phone the tip to Officer Furgitler that night when she found Pellen and Kitty Hewitt together; that is the venom which will poison her while she swears Pellen's life away."

He shook his head again, as he gazed at her offering. "There's not enough for you, yourself," he protested. "Besides, I'm not hungry."

"Nor am I."

"You're thinking about Pellen?"

"There, there," said Bertram, without effect. But he was himself shaken with fear. Didn't she love Pellen? If she denied it, did she know herself?

life away. It is understandable in her case.

"The jealousy of a man, Doctor Darand, seldom indeed attains to such violence that, for fear the girl he loves will go to the other man, he will help swear a life away. And pardon me! I should not say that. You will not help swear Pellen's life away. Nothing so ugly is required of you. You have merely to keep silent and see him hang. Indeed, you can even adopt the pleasant posture of appearing eager to save Pellen by proclaiming your opinion—your opinion of his innocence—against the facts to which the others will swear."

"Get out!" breathed Bertram while the iron band about his breast seemed to bind him to auto-canon. "Get out!" His hands clenched tight and tense and every sinew in his slight body was cramped.

Rhodane arose slowly and, still sneering, he departed.

It was noon—a mild, indolent noon, day claimed for winter, by the calendar but by feeling it seemed to be a day in spring. Men carried their overcoats today or went without them; women and girls were out in suit and blouse and they idled pleasantly along, in no haste to reach their destinations.

Bertram was making haste to his and, as he hurried, his thought was all upon it—upon her, that was; for Kitty Hewitt was his goal.

She was working in a business office on one of the upper floors of a building a few blocks away; she was Thirty thousand dollars was the sum required to free her while she awaited trial; and suddenly, spectacularly, a lawyer appeared with thirty thousand dollars in cash in his hand and bought her release. But he did not disclose the name of his client.

Doctor Darand, hurrying from his office to the business block six squares away, knew that the man who furnished the bail was a power in the city. There followed his building—the Carfax building. Twenty years ago Hugh Carfax had deserted his wife and baby, and Kitty Hewitt was that baby. He put up bail, anonymously, because he had now another wife and another daughter-in-law of those apartments up on the "gold coast," where no one knew that he was ever Walter Hewitt.

Doctor Darand entered the building where Kitty Hewitt worked and ascended to the eighteenth floor. At the end of the hall farthest from the elevators, a door opened into an ordinary commercial suite where the agency business of a cement company was carried on.

Four or five stenographers and billers worked in the outer rooms beside the private office of the manager; but it was half-past twelve, and the offices were deserted now, except for a girl with glorious hair of corn-color who sat at a desk near a window. She had been gazing out the window when Bertram surprised her. She turned quickly and smiled with relief when she recognized him.

"You," she said.

"Don't get up," he said; and as she relaxed into her chair, he drew another near her and sat down.

"You haven't had lunch, have you?" she asked.

"Then please have it here." She divided her slim repast and pushed half of it toward him on a piece of paper.

He shook his head again, as he gazed at her offering. "There's not enough for you, yourself," he protested. "Besides, I'm not hungry."

"Nor am I."

"You're thinking about Pellen?"

The witness was well drilled, in word and in dress, to be the center of this tremendous scene. Her dress was dark. Her yellow hair was dressed closely and modestly. Her habitual boldness was lacking as she made her deliberate, damning replies.

"And now," said the state's attorney confidently, "please tell where you were at six o'clock that evening."

"I was on the street corner a block south of Cleary's cafe," Kate Fisher related.

"There is good illumination there?"

"Very good. There are street lamps and also there was light from the windows of the drug store on the corner."

"Did you recognize any one who passed you?"

"Yes, sir; I recognized two people."

"Who were they?"

"One was the prisoner, Pellen," she answered deliberately, "the other was Kitty Hewitt."

"What did you see them do?"

"I saw her kiss him," she replied. "She kissed him passionately, several times."

"What did he do?"

"He stood as straight as he could with her clinging to him and kissing him, sir."

"You mean he did not return her caresses?"

"Not at first, sir."

"But later?"

"She got him excited; she was talking."

"Did you hear what she said?"

"Yes, sir; very plainly."

"Tell what you heard her say."

"I heard her say, 'Lavvy's crazy about me but I'm crazy about you.'"

"The state's attorney, paused for a moment and glanced at the counsel for the defense as though expecting something from him."

But Rhodane did not move.

The prosecutor returned to his witness. "Go on," he commanded.

"She said something I couldn't quite hear but which made Pellen grab her and kiss her."

"You saw him seize her and kiss her?"

"Yes."

"Did you hear any words after that?"

"I heard her say, 'If you're a man, you'll get Gervie Lavvy, then.'"

"Did Pellen reply to that?"

"He did; he said, 'I'll get him for you.'"

"What next did you hear?"

"I heard her say, 'Then get him to me. He hangs out at Cleary's. You take me there and you'll have your chance to get him if you're a man.'"

The witness had gone pale under the rouge upon her face. She was clasping tightly the arms of her chair and, when she ceased to speak, she sucked her thin lips between her teeth and bit them. Her hands clasped and unclasped from her chair; she shifted her feet. The silence worried her, for the prosecutor was waiting again.

So, leading on his witness, the prosecutor plunged deeper and deeper into the details of the evidence sworn to by Kate Fisher that in the passage beside the drug store Kitty

ing into space. "That means my father, Bertram."

"That's what I figured," Bertram agreed.

"Well, for Ed, I've got to take it. Rhodane's the best; and we need the best."

"We," Bertram repeated her word, with jealousy a fire in him again. "Whom do you mean by 'we'?"

"Why, Ed and I, Bertram."

"I'm in any 'we' with you, Kitty."

"You're not of trial with me, Bertram."

"That's not my fault."
