Look After That Cold!

Do you know that a cold or cough neglected at this time of the year very often runs into serious complications later?

Don't wait a single day after the first symptoms appear. Get yourself a package of COLD TABLETS, COUGH DROPS, COUGH SYRUP, THROAT GARGLE, MOUTH WASH, WHOOPING COUGH PLASTER, VAPORIZING OINTMENT.

Or any of the many valuable remedies we have to check the ailment before it becomes serious.

You can't afford to run the chances of suffering these attacks all winter.

DR. DWIGHT P. BREED

Dr. Dwight P. Breed died suddenly at his home in Chicago, October 19. He was the oldest son of Rev. and Mrs. Samuel Dwight Breed, who were among the first settlers of Chelsea. They built the third house in the village, on the southeast corner of Main and Middle streets, where they lived until 1862, and here Dr. Breed passed his boyhood days. He is survived by his widow and two sons, Dwight E. of Austin,

Texas, and Rev. Noel J. Breed of Berkeley, Calif., and two sisters, Amelia M. and Gertrude T. Breed, of Ann Arbor, and a brother, Rev. Merle A. Breed, now in Arizona. Dr. Breed was a Congregational minister, his last pastorate being at the Sumner church, Chicago, where the funeral services were held October 11. The burial was in Eaton Rapids, Mich. "An honored life, a peaceful end, and heaven to crown it all."

RUBBER CORPORATION WILL BEGIN OPERATIONS NEXT WEEK

Approximately Fifty People Will Be Employed in Production of Balloons and Novelties.

With the completion of remodeling which has been in progress for several weeks the Wyandotte Rubber Products Corporation will, within the next week or ten days, begin operations in their newly acquired plant known here as the welfare building. The company, a Michigan corporation formerly operating at Wyandotte, is moving machinery and equipment to Chelsea and rapidly getting ready for quantity production.

Purchase of the welfare building several weeks ago, was immediately followed by an extensive remodeling process in which the interior of the building and portions of the exterior have been altered to meet the company's requirements, a new heating plant installed and already considerable of the company's machinery has been moved from the Wyandotte plant while special new machinery is being manufactured for installation here by the Palmer-Bee company of Detroit. General remodeling is being done by the John Hopkin Construction Co., Detroit, while ventilating and sheet metal work is being done by Newcomb-David Co., Detroit.

Capacity of the Rubber Company will be greatly increased, according to officials of the company, the local plant being capable of five times the production heretofore. More than 300,000 advertising balloons, the principal product of this company, will be manufactured each working day over more than 220,000 molds and 14 different sizes. And while the balloons constitute the bulk of production, rubber novelties will be manufactured in quantities. Approximately fifty people will be required to operate machines, most of whom will be women and girls. Experienced persons in charge of the several departments will come with the company from Wyandotte, but it is hoped to recruit other help from local ranks.

Crude rubber used in the manufacture of the Wyandotte company's product, is purchased in large quantities on the New York market and shipped to the local plant where it is washed, dried and milled together with colors. It is then dissolved with naphtha, another ingredient which is used in large quantities. This cement is placed in vats into which wooden molds of the desired shape are dipped and to which a thin film of the rubber cement adheres. Twelve additional operations are necessary before the balloons are air tested by being blown to full size and passed for shipment. Some of these are equipped with noise makers, some with an automatic closing valve and still others are fitted with reed sticks, all of which are familiar to any person who has attended a county fair.

A ready market for the advertising balloon is found in the automobile industry where a large number of companies use them in selling campaigns. Still other outlets are found in the shoe and similar retail business. Shipments are made all over the world where concern is making efforts to advance the sale of their product. The fact that there are few companies in the world manufacturing novelties of this kind, factoring a desirable field in which to make it a profitable almost limit work and presents an almost limitless market.

Officials of the Wyandotte Rubber Products Corporation are capable of long experience in the manufacturing business. John W. Saunders, president, is a manufacturer of prominence in Detroit, giving a large portion of his time to the Wyandotte company. Directors of the company include W. H. Kilpatrick, superintendent and general manager of the Chrysler Motor Corporation, Paul Plessner, of the Paul Plessner Laboratories, of Detroit, G. Lehman of Chelsea, John W. Saunders and H. W. McConnell, H. W. McConnell, secretary-treasurer, is also general manager of the company in charge of the plant. He is a man of practical experience, having spent the greater portion of his life in the rubber business and is thoroughly conversant with manufacturing problems.

C. J. Hively, superintendent, in charge of production, has moved to Chelsea and Mr. Morrison, office manager, will move here as soon as suitable living quarters are found.

DEAD MAN TELLS TALES

The old saying that "dead men tell no tales" has been disproved. William H. Turner, for ten months a legally dead, returned to this country Thursday from Hamburg, Germany. He was buried in Pike County, Kentucky, as one of the victims of a mine disaster. His wife collected $85,000 in insurance, and has been living in luxury. Turner now finds himself charged with murder, but he makes a graver charge against his father-in-law.

For nine months, Turner explained, he had been in Hamburg, Germany, and not in the hillside grave. But now he is back to tell details of a murder plot that stands out in all crime records for brutality. A quick trip to police headquarters and a narrative of the forces revealed. Turner charged that his father-in-law, Joe Jacks, deliberately set off an explosion in the Auburn mine at McCarr, Ky., supposed then to have been an accident, which killed two men, one of whom was buried as Turner. Then, he continued, the father-in-law, with a gun, forced him to leave the country, so that the insurance might be collected.

Nine months of near starvation in Hamburg, Germany, buckled him up sufficiently to write home about the explosion, to come back to face an indictment for murder, which resulted from his own letters, and to find that his insurance had been collected by his wife and sister.

He exonerated his wife, insisted neither he nor she had anything to do with the crime, but named various relatives, some of whom still are sought. Mrs. Turner for several months has been living in New Jersey. Turner will be arraigned in Tombs Court charged with being a fugitive from justice. He plans to waive extradition and go back to Kentucky, where a grave bears the body supposedly his.

HYLAN'S NEW JOB

Mayor Hyman estimated yesterday that when he quits City Hall January 1 he may take a position with a firm in Virginia at a salary of $25,000 a year. The Mayor did not explain where the firm was or its business. His friends concluded that it was a law firm.

economic clauses of the Treaty of Versailles, Germany shall have special consideration by the League Council. This was a concession of German dignity.

On the other hand, Germany concedes France's right under Article XV and XVI of the covenant to intervene in favor of Poland and Czechoslovakia, her eastern allies, in case they are the victims of an attack from Germany.

The consensus at Locarno is that the progress so far made is the beginning of what may be termed a "European policy."

Germany now re-enters the European arena with much of her pre-war equality re-established. With the ratification of the Locarno settlement by the Reichstag and Cologne evacuated, the Rhineland regime down to a very few foreign troops, the Saar Valley again virtually under German administration, and possibly the granting of a mandate over some of her possessions in Africa, Germany undoubtedly will contribute to this "European policy" with considerable effect.

REMOVING ILLITERATES

Education of this country are ambitious to make this country entirely free from illiterates. A dispatch from Washington says that a census of illiterates in the United States as part of a campaign to reduce illiteracy will be undertaken next year by the Bureau of Education of the Interior Department.

The active cooperation of a number of national organizations has been pledged, including that of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the American Federation of Labor, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the Red Cross and the American Legion.

In addition to the census, the campaign will be directed toward encouraging attendance at night schools, and obtaining better enforcement of school attendance laws.

INSANITY PLEA DISCUSSED

Much discussion has been held over the insanity plea in murder trials, this week, both in America and abroad. Differences of opinion as to what should be done with the criminal pleading insanity are universal. Inquiry as to what is done in Europe brings the information that the plea of insanity is rare in Europe. In England such criminals are sent to the criminal lunatic asylum at Broadmoor, usually for life, the jury finding them "guilty but insane." From 1901 to 1922 inclusive there were 1,446 persons tried for murder in Great Britain, but 134 or less than nine per cent of whom were found insane.

In France an official commission of alienists examine all criminals and if insanity is found the person under arrest is placed under restraint without trial. Statistics show that few criminals enter a plea of insanity.

ADOPT RHINE PACT

The Rhine pact between Germany and the Allies, which renders war across this historic stream beyond the pale of the law, was adopted by Germany, France, Belgium, Italy, and Great Britain this week in final form except for a few unimportant details.

The two vital questions on which the fate of the document has rested during the last few days have been settled. Germany's entry into the League of Nations becomes possible now by virtue of the Allies' agreement to recommend in the name of the powers that because of her spe-

Reports from Paris to Washington stating that Mr. Caillaux, the French Minister of Finance and head of the French Debt Commission, would make another proposal for funding the war debt if the American five-year plan is rejected by his government, caused no surprise in official quarters.

Treasury officials and members of the American Debt Commission, it was made clear, are convinced France will have to make a move toward funding the debt if it turns down the American plan for the payment of $400,000,000 annually for five years on the $4,000,000,000 obligation. The attitude of the government against further commercial loans from United States bankers to France until the debt is funded was made clear at the White House previously. This is expected to have great effect ultimately on the course France will pursue.

MEDICAL DISCOVERY

What may prove to be one of the most important discoveries of recent years in the battle which is being waged against cancer has been made in the case of Henri Vaden, a young Parisian hospital interne, but at the cost of an arm. Two years ago Vaden, assisting in an operation to remove a cancerous tumor, accidentally pricked his finger with the point of a hypodermic needle that had been used on the cancer patient. Slowly a similar tumor grew upon Vaden's hand, and his arm had to be amputated to save his life.

Surgeons declare there is no proof of the communicability of cancer from one person to another. They assert that if it is definitely shown that the tumor on Vaden's arm was a true cancer, similar to that of the patient who was operated on, the discovery may prove revolutionary.

How Do You Do It?

We are often asked—amazed at our values, "How do you do it?" They wonder how we can sell our footwear at the prices we do and still make a profit. It's no secret—we make plenty of money—but a small profit on each sale. We price our footwear close and they sell fast. There's more profit for us and more for our customers in doing business that way than if we tried to get more on each sale and slowed up our turnover.

Ford did well on the same plan—small profits, many sales.

Fine Distinction Made
Between Common Words

"Loan" as a verb is extensively used in the United States. There is some authority for such usage since it has appeared over the last four or five hundred years. Such usage, however, is frowned upon by grammarians who insist that "loan" is a noun only, says the Literary Digest.

Dictionary makers must be simply recorders of the language as it is used, recognize "loan" as a verb, meaning "to lend money, especially on interest," and Doctor Visately in his "Book of Errors in English" says: "Loan, lend; one may raise (put an end to) a loan by paying both principal and interest, and another may lend money to do so. The use of 'loan' as a verb, meaning 'to grant the loan of or lend, as ships, money, linen, provisions, etc., dates from the year 1200 and is accepted as good English. Some purists, however, characterize it colloquial.' To some ears 'lend' may be preferable, but 'loan' is not incorrect, and has the support of Acts 24 and 25 of Henry VIII (1542), Langley (1644), Fossenden (1729), Calhoun (1834), Brownson (1847), Bonamy Price (1850) the North American Review, February, 1901, etc.

Spiders in Amazon
Big as Small Rat

A traveler who has recently returned from an expedition into the forests of the Amazon tells that he was much more frightened by the huge spiders he encountered than by the jaguars, according to London Answers.

There is certainly something awe-inspiring in his description of a species of Amazon spiders as creatures with long legs, fat black bodies, about the size of a young rat, and the wickedest, most fendish eyes imaginable.

These spiders make "trap doors" on the ground, beautifully camouflaged, and so perfectly balanced that they rest by their own weight. Beneath them are tunnels or pits in which the huge spiders watch for their prey.

Another spider is spotted like a leopard and spins a web quite a yard across. The strands of this huge web, suspended between two trees, are so strong and tough that if a small bird flies into them it is unable to escape before the arrival of the spider, which makes short work of its struggles.

Children

Some people without little children seem to have complete lives, but they are only a few. In these days, when we are so keenly interested in the future, in new forms of education, and in the actual instincts of the species, it seems as if children have more to add to our lives even than formerly.

Parent who gets away with the job can be an egotist, a neurotic, narrow, vain or weak. No parent with any mind at all can help feeling close to the springs of life, and in touch with the cradle of the race. The same extended reality may be obtained by teachers, or by others in helpful and steady contact with the young, but the person on whom the children make none of their confident demands, whom they never consult about the rules of life, and the opening wonders of nature, is all too likely as he grows old, to lose the youthfulness that stays with the fortunate and the old Norman Haggood in Heart's International.

Poetic Language

How then do we distinguish poetic language? The fact is, I think, that there is no hard-and-fast distinction. It has often been asserted that by poetic language we mean the presence of metre. Now, as we shall see, metre is, beyond doubt, the kind of rhythm most suitable as a rule for the purposes of poetry. But metre is simply one of the devices available to poetic expression, and it happens that some other kind of rhythm will do just as well or better, and if everything else we require is there, it seems merely arbitrary to withhold the title of poetry. A definition of poetry would surely look very foolish, if it would exclude the "English Versions of Job" or the "Song of Songs," as the late Abercrombie, in "The Theory of Poetry."

To Withstand Cold

The tiny needles of evergreens have a different appearance in winter, and are darker and more shriveled. The chlorophyll granules have withdrawn from the surface as far as possible, and the water content is greatly reduced, says Nature Magazine of Washington. In this condition the winter date freezing and thawing of winter days seem to do no harm, and the leaves are ready in the spring to resume their work of starch making. But even evergreen needles do not live long. They die and drop as new ones come, and the average tree has its needles replaced in from three to five years. So gradual is this process, however, that the tree always appears to be well clothed.

His Own Fault

Little Johnny went to church and seated himself just in front of the pulpit.

The clergyman took as his text: "I shall come down and dwell amongst you." He had repeated the words several times, when, without any warning, the pulpit collapsed.

The clergyman extricated Johnny from under the wreckage and remarked: "I am so sorry. I hope you are not hurt."

Johnny replied, "I should have been prepared. You warned me off enough!"

Big Prices for Cattle

At a sale of certain breeds of short-horn cattle held in Onondaga County, N. Y., September 10, 1873, 106 cattle brought a total of $382,000. One cow was sold for $10,000, another for $20,000, and $27,000 was paid for a five-month-old calf.

Corn Insect Pests

More than 800 species of insects attack corn. Many of these are attracted by the odor of the corn silk.

The Evil That Men Do

By BERNARD G. GUERNEY
(© 1924 Western Newspaper Union.)

"PINKY," Cronin had said, "I set out to get you—and I did. But it's five years you would have gotten, instead of three, if I hadn't put in a good word for you. Yes, sir, you just take it from me, and I'm the boy that ought to know, the sooner you quit this game the better it'll be all around." (There were rumors to the effect that Cronin's rather interesting past, which included prize-fighting, sailing, and mining, was also not entirely devoid of an inside knowledge, as it were, of penal institutions, gained through no mean achievements in the yeggdom.) "And just you bear this in mind, old sport: I'm a-going to keep an eye on you, from now on—in prison and out."

Big Jim Cronin—flood, plethoric, with his odoriferous cigars, and noiseless tread, and big hairy hands, that could smash through an oak plank—or a criminal's skull.

Under such auspices had Pinky gone away to serve his sentence; felt the surveillance under which he felt himself to be (though never a word of Cronin filtered through the prison walls to him), all the weary while he served it; and such the influence he foresees, even as he blinked at the sky—free, now, like himself, without the cross-criss of an iron bar lattice upon his face.

Behold then, Pinky: indeterminate of age, indefinite of feature, colorless of complexion and hair, inconspicuous of stature, noiseless of step, unassuming of speech, unobtrusive of manner, drab of apparel.

Not in vain did the Bertillon clerks always look him up and down, and as it were, through him, and then fill in the blank on Special Distinguishing Marks with "none." Yet stay—one physical peculiarity he did have: the right joint of the little finger of his right hand was bent inward at almost a right angle, whence his all-sufficient alias of Pinky. It was this deformity which gave him a greater dexterity than that of the less gifted "dips," who had to manipulate with the first two fingers as a sort of clippers.

Although he had no word of Cronin, the mere terror of him made Pinky try to reform. But at the end of a fortnight, Pinky began limbering up his fingers—no new could tell.

One morning he found himself near Wall street; he looked about him furiously—a countless repeated performance. Cronin was nowhere to be seen—could he have shaken him off? He hopped on a Broadway car bound uptown. But, why did the passenger across the aisle keep himself so close? screened behind his newspaper?

These thick yellow shoes could be no one else's save Big Jim's.

Despite all of Pinky's watchfulness his trailer was instantly swallowed up in the crowd.

Extending to telephone in a drug store booth, Pinky looked cautiously at a fatigued mirror—and there, reflected, was Cronin's huge back, as he bent over the cigar counter. Yet there was no Cronin there, when Pinky, with the courage of despair, strode past openly. He broke out in a cold sweat. What was Cronin's idea in this cat-and-mouse game? Evidence? Cronin's mere word was all-sufficient. To catch him red-handed? Cronin was a clever enough shadow—not to have let Pinky see him.

At two or three in the morning he entered the dirty white building with its ugly green lanterns with something akin to assurance. Nor was he mistaken in his reception.

"Well, what can we do for you to-day, Pinky?" asked the sergeant, after a greeting of almost effusive cordiality. "Been up to any of your old tricks recently? Or did some one pick your pockets? Or maybe it's wanting to be looked up you are?"

"That's it, sergeant," said Pinky, slowly.

"Pinky," said the sergeant, with a tolerance somewhat akin to a lawyer's for his client, or a doctor's for his patient, "you must have lifted a flask of the real stuff, instead of a feather, or else you've lost your nerve. There hasn't been the ghost of a murmur against your good name so far—better go home and sleep it off."

"Sarg," said Pinky with a gulp, "I guess that's what it is—I must have lost my nerve. But that don't change matters—here's what's left of the money and here's the gold monogram."

I burned the wallet.

Sarg. . . I want to be locked up of my own will, before Cronin runs me in.

At the mention of Cronin's name the sergeant sat up and looked at Pinky. "You forget about Cronin. Cronin's got other things to worry him."

"But Sarg, I'm telling you I saw him trillin' me, all week past, and I ain't lost him for a second today. I can't stand it no more. Maybe he'll let me off easy when he hears I gave myself up. . . Please, Sarg."

The sergeant made the nearest approach to a shrug permissible in an Anglo-Saxon.

"All right, Kelly, guess we'll have to accommodate our friend for tonight. I'll put in a good word for you, Pinky, but don't let Cronin worry you. Good night!"

"If that don't beat everything!" remarked the astute Kelly, exchanging glances with his superior upon his return. "And to think that Jim Cronin can still bring them in, after he's been dead these two years or more. . ."

Some one has written that love makes people believe in immortality, because there seems not to be room enough in life for so great a tenderness, and it is inconceivable that the most masterful of our emotions should have no more than the spume moments of a few years.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Pointer for Those Who Seek Knowledge

Once upon a time, according to an old story, a young man went to Socrates, the Greek philosopher, and said: "Sire, I come to you in search of knowledge. I have heard much about you, and have come a long way to find you. Will you not tell me how I can gain knowledge?"

Socrates said, "Follow me." The youth followed Socrates to a body of water, and was surprised to see him wading into it. He followed him, and Socrates grasped him by the arm and head and thrust him under until it seemed the youth would surely perish. He dragged him to the shore—and waited for the youth to catch his breath; then said: "Boy, what did you most desire when I held your head under the water?"

The youth replied: "Air."

Socrates said: "Go your way and remember that when you want knowledge as much as you wanted air when you were under water, you will get it."—Forbes Magazine.

Famous Group of Stars

The Pleiades is a group of small stars in the constellation Taurus, very conspicuous on winter evenings about 24 degrees north of the equator. For some unknown reason there were anciently said to be seven Pleiades, although only six were conspicuous then. As now hence the suggestion of a low star in mythology the Pleiades were said to be the daughters of Atlas and Pleione, and were named Alcyone, Merope, Celaeno, Electra, Stereone, and Taygeta and Maia.

Roosevelt's Idea of Man

It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbles, or where the doer of deeds could have done better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dust and sweat; who gives his all; who errs and who may fall again; but who does not stop and wonder at the odds against him; who knows that the best of all is to have done one's duty; who knows that the great devotion; who spends himself in a worthy cause, who, at the best, knows in the end the triumph of high achievement, and who at the worst, if he falls, at least falls while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat.—Theodore Roosevelt.

Model Lover a Bricklayer

Common brick has always played an important part in the building industries throughout the world. Volumes have been written on the history and uses to which bricks have been put, but not on their romance. Says the New York Herald-Tribune.

In the Italian city of Bologna there remain two towers of brick, some six miles apart, which have been erected by ones said to have been erected between the Tenth and Thirteenth centuries. Legends say it was the custom to knights to win their ladies fair by erecting brick towers, taller than the one constructed by rivals.

The subject for Sunday morning will be "Two Religious Poverty." What are they? Why are we so impoverished? What is the remedy? We will not announce the text at the beginning, but will quote it during the sermon—Who will tell us what it is? It will be read in the lesson of the morning. Who can pick it out? Our evening services are growing some in numbers. But room for more. Evening subject "The Ministry of Sacred Song." This will be a little different. A number of familiar songs will be used, and a short sketch of how each came to be written. Solos and congregational singing. The pastor will sing a colored melody entitled "In My Heart." We are expecting a splendid day Sunday—let us be at both services.

You are welcome to all our services and will be pleased to see you. As I spoke last week about our searching the Scriptures, let me say this week—Do not make the reading of the Bible a fetish. You know one comes to the old familiar passages as if one had never seen them before; the daily portion comes like a new letter from the last mail. Dear friends from the pages of this old Bible then let those facts and those calls of God which by their inherent vitality command man. This old Bible is an open door and when we folk really get in earnest and we look through the door, there is that within which causes him to cast away doubt and fear and enter. This same old Bible if intelligently and sympathetically read leads one to Christ, and in turn Christ leads that one to the very heart of the Book. His own promise is that any one who follows Him shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life. We need life so let us try further searching this week of God's word.
