

A Nation's Tribute

Washington and Lincoln lived for the ages. The world joins the Nation in paying tribute to the memory of these men who gave unreservedly of themselves that certain ideals of right might prevail and that this country might live and find a place of high esteem among other Nations of the world.

Great as were these men, the homely virtue of good common sense was at the bottom of the power that enabled them to carry the country successfully through one crisis after another. The practice of thrift in the broadest sense of the term was widely advocated by both Washington and Lincoln, and surely if these two men found thrift a practice to be commended, you and I will find it equally good to follow.

Some Safety
Suggestions

Gas is one of the safest fuels when used properly. Careless use of gas is dangerous. The rules for safe use of gas are simple and so simple that a child can learn them.

Avoid the possibility of asphyxiation by reporting all leaks at once to our office. Telephone 135. At the same time open all doors and windows and ventilate thoroughly. Never look for a leak of gas with an open flame, a match, for instance.

Leaks and consequent dangers may be prevented if we make sure that appliances are connected properly with gas-tight joints. Temporary connections should be avoided, or when necessary only flexible metallic hose with threaded metal connections should be used. Inspect the valves on your range, and water heater, to make sure they cannot be turned on accidentally.

See that the gas burns with a clear blue flame. Remember that a pot or kettle may boil over and extinguish the flame, allowing gas to escape.

AND ALWAYS REMEMBER In case of doubt, call us up. You are under no obligation; we are glad to be of service to you.

HOUSES AT STATE EXPENSE

In certain sections of the United States the building of homes by the State for the indigent is being seriously considered. In the crowded centers of population some such a system might be evoked with the idea of wiping out the breeding places of crime and disease, incident to the tenement districts. Outside of that the movement seeks to much of paternalism to find much sentiment among the more industrious class of our citizens.

Home life is the bulwark of the nation and the building of new homes should be encouraged, not at the expense of society, but by individuals earnest in the desire to own their own homes. The duty of the state should be in encouraging industry, which in turn enables the laboring man to finance his own building program. Let the State set an example of thrift for its citizens and the building of homes at public expense will not be necessary. No self-respecting citizen expects or wants anybody to build a home for him, but he does and has a right to expect an opportunity to earn one for himself. The government that recognizes this economical truth is more likely to attract a permanent existence than if it makes alms seekers of its citizens.

SPENDING STATE MONEY

One thing seems certain during the special session of the legislature which will occupy the center of the stage during the latter part of the month for State use securing extra revenues for plans to form an evidence and important part. It is in no sense controversial to point out that so tremendous has become the expense of state government that without extra revenues the state treasury will in a short time be unable to keep up the burden imposed by the highway and institutional building program of the present administration.

How to raise new taxes, and from what source, will be a part of the work entrusted to the legislature, but in this they will have the expert advice of those most anxious to continue this orgy of spending, that seems to have gripped public officials in recent years. There is one lesson that must be learned sooner or later. We cannot continue to tax industry indiscriminately, as Wisconsin did with her mines, but we must make it possible for industry to thrive in Michigan if we expect business men to continue investing their capital in needed enterprises. We must learn to cut down the burden of state expense to a point where it can be borne with much more ease by the taxpayers of the Commonwealth. No hard lesson to learn, but a seemingly difficult course to follow.

THE COUNTRY CORRESPONDENT
Among the "personages" of her community the country correspondent has a field all her own. Chronically of the happenings concerning her neighbors and of the things which interest them, and their friends, she fills a responsible position in linking her community with those around her. We say "she" advisedly, for in most instances the country correspondent is a woman, the wife of a small town business man, a farmer's wife or the local school teacher. She takes time enough from her other duties to report for that which is interesting to and about her neighbors.

There is an erroneous impression in the minds of many that the Church, Big Business, and the Government exercise a sinister influence on the press. After many years of journalistic posts of some responsibility, I am never better able to say that I have never been approached on the ground of religious prejudice, that I never have been made aware of an opportunity through my profession to make a dollar dishonestly, and that I never have felt the menace of the official fist. So much for a popular misconception. Edward McKee, editor of the Associated Press, writing in Harper's Magazine.

DON'T CASH CHECKS

Don't cash the check of any stranger, is the warning that is being sent out by the mercantile associations of this state. Every day they appear in some new guise, with some new story that is expected to disarm suspicion. The other day a motherly old lady appeared in a store in a northern Michigan city and after ordering a small amount of merchandise sent to a certain address, tendered a check in payment that was much larger than her bill. She was apparently so gentle, so motherly, that never a suspicion entered the merchant's head. Later he found the check a bad one and his faith in humanity has taken a considerable drop. Regardless of the circumstances, the best plan is to pass them on to the town banker and if they get by that individual their paper is pretty apt to be genuine.

A GIGANTIC ENTERPRISE

A million and a half farms in the United States are suitably located for farm electrification, is the information gleaned from a recent survey made by the Federal government. To bring this about would entail an initial expenditure of approximately a billion and a half dollars, according to electrical experts. Seventeen states have already appointed commissions to study methods of bringing light and power to the farming districts, while many power companies have appointed men whose sole duty is to study the problem of rural electrification.

In Michigan a report out of the little village of Parma where scientists and students of Michigan State college are making a study of the scientific and commercial problems involved. According to surveys already made it is believed that within a few years at least the electrical power on the farms will be in general use, especially the thickly settled agricultural districts adjacent to our larger centers of industrial population.

POTENTIAL PROSPERITY

It is axiomatic in our country, that the plentifulness of money is the index to prosperity. If that is the case just now, we ought to have in 1926 an era of prosperity unequalled in history. There is on deposit in the national banks and savings banks more than $45,000,000,000. No such sum has ever been known to exist. The sum is greater than all the bank deposits of the world twenty years ago.

The Michigan man who vowed to take a walk every time his wife got angry, bids fair to live to a ripe old age. Continued outdoor exercise is making him as healthy as a bear.

Surprising what a lot of mechanical knowledge the wife can exhibit when looking over a new model at the automobile show.

SAFETY LAST

Lies slumbering here one William Lake; he heard the bell, but had no time to get up. At 50 miles drove Allice Pidd; he thought he wouldn't, but did. At 90 miles drove Eddie Shaw; the motor stopped, but "Ed" kept on. Here he sleeps, one Johnny Konkner; he rounded a turn without a honker.

Down in the creek sleeps Jerry Bass; the bridge was narrow; he tried to pass. Beneath this stone sleeps William Raines; ice on the hill; he had no chains. Here lies the body of William Jay; he died maintaining his right of way. Small; he paid no attention to "slow" signs at all.

WORKED ON RAILROAD

Born in a Michigan village many years ago, a boy went to work at the age of fifteen, getting a job as a watchman on a railroad. On his death in Cleveland he was mourned as William H. Caniff, aged seventy-seven, former president of the Nickel Plate railroad, former general manager of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, successful railway operator, prominent citizen and man of means. His success was all won by hard work and good work as a watchman, station agent, track master and so on up the line.

"Yes, thereused to be big opportunities years ago." Those words, often heard, may serve the speakers as a satisfactory excuse for failing even for not trying. But they are untrue in their application that good opportunities are no longer available. They are more plentiful than ever before. For every big company or business that existed when Mr. Caniff made his start, America has a hundred today.

HORSE DROPPED DEAD

The Horse of Wales was never intended to be a horseman, nor to have anything to do with horses. In all his riding that has been reported, he has fallen from his horse. He was riding to hounds the other day. He must have been strapped to his horse, so he couldn't fall off—so the horse dropped dead under him.

Our idea of a prominent citizen is the man who can convince his wife it's poor policy to buy from a peddler.

NEWSPAPER STORY CLUE TO GRIMINAL

Patience and observation are two valuable traits in a police officer and this was proved in the arrest and confession of men engaged in burglary at Little Lake, Mich., recently. Trooper A. B. Scribner of the State Police, who worked on the burglary case with local officers and secured good fingerprints left by the men who did the breaking and entering.

There was no one under suspicion at the time but Scribner kept the prints and watched and waited.

When Leo Marlowe and Raymond Dingman were arrested at Marquette on another charge, Trooper Scribner secured their fingerprints. Upon comparison with those taken at Little Lake, he was sure that he had the men.

Marlowe, confronted with this evidence, confessed to participation in some of the robberies. The men will be prosecuted in Marquette first and the other charge kept in reserve for the time being.

TROOPER GETS HIS MAN

Trooper Stanley Smith, Troop B, Pennsylvania State Police, was recently cited for bravery. He was sent out with a warrant and was shot in the body, the bullet coming through a door. First arresting the man who had shot him, he then went on and arrested the person for whom he held the warrant.

MURDER CASE SOLVED

Confession of Bert Brady that he killed his friend, Richard Williams, in a lonely shack in the forest near Newberry, Mich., has closed a case which seemed mysterious at first. Hunters found Williams' body. State Police arrested Brady and he confessed.

SCOUTS GIVEN NEW LAND

As a result of an additional gift of land to Washtenaw council, Boy Scouts of America, the camp site near Dexter has been increased to approximately 30 acres.

The increase in acreage was provided through the generosity of Daniel Hoey, of Dexter, who entered into an agreement with the Scout council Wednesday night of last week to turn over to the Scouts a tract of land adjoining the Camp Newkirk island on the northwest. The new tract comprises 12 acres of high land.

It is provided in the agreement that the property will be deeded to the Scouts if at the end of three years suitable buildings and other improvements have been completed by the council. About $20,000 is to be expended in this work. Should the improvements not be made within the specified time the Scouts will have an opportunity to purchase the land.

The land acquired by this new gift is to be known as Hoey Athletic field. Upon it will be constructed tennis courts, a baseball diamond and other facilities for outdoor sports. The major buildings which it is planned to erect on the Newkirk island to an Olmstead plan which has been prepared for the Scout council.

"It's just right—every foot of it," said Coach Fielding H. Yost in commenting on the combined tracts provided by Mrs. Eleanor Newkirk and Daniel Hoey. "The Scouts can indulge in any kind of athletics they desire. There will be baseball, swimming, boating everything. It is an ideal site for a Scout camp in every sense of the word."

EXTENSION WORK BRIEFS

At this time of the year a check up is usually made of the progress of the winter club work in the county. Up to date there are organized and in operation thirty-seven clothing clubs with a total enrollment of 232 members; twenty-six Hot Lunch clubs with a total enrollment of 426 members; thirteen handicraft clubs with a total enrollment of 88 members, which makes a total enrollment of 746, an increase of 30 per cent. over the winter of 1924-25. Club work this winter is carried on in seventeen of the twenty townships.

Miss Harriet Wilder, assistant state club leader in clothing work and Nevels K. Pearson, assistant state club leader in handicraft work, for the winter months are visiting clothing and handicraft clubs in the county during the present week, with county club agent, checking over the work which has been accomplished up to the present time.

Due to the drifted roads Thursday evening, January 28th, the Lima Sheep club was not organized. This organization will be taken care of within the next ten days. A great amount of interest is manifested in the Lima Township sheep club work, which speaks well for that community due to the fact that the Black Top Sheep are quite generally raised and will be the major for the boys who take up the sheep club work. Some time in February another sheep club will be organized in Saline and Freedom townships which carried on such a successful program of sheep club work last year.

Washington

EQUAL when fields were lost with breach of popular uprising or blame.

Not fanned or damped, unquenchably the same.

Too inward to be reached by flaws of idle name.

Soldier and statesman, forest unsown; High-poised example of great duties done.

Simply as breathing a world's honors As life's children gifts to all men born; Dumb for himself, unless twice to God, But for his barometer soldiers' clasp, Tramping the snow or coral where they stood.

Held by his own hollow-eyed content; Modest, yet firm as nature's self, unblamed.

Save by the men his nobler temper shamed; Never seduced through show of present good.

By other than unsetting lights to steer New-trimmed in heaven, nor than his steadfast mood.

More steadfast, far from rashness as from fear; Rigid, but with himself first, grasping In aweless poise the wave-bear helm of will.

Not honored they or now because he wooed The popular voice, but that he still withheld.

Broad-minded, higher-souled, there is but one Who was all this and ours to the end.

—Washington.

WELL QUALIFIED FOR HIGH OFFICE

Lincoln's Travel and Study Made Him Conversant With Problems.

By P. K. DODGE, University of Illinois
The claim has been made recently by a distinguished northern historian that at the time of his election Lincoln's knowledge of public affairs was limited and that he knew very little of the country through personal contact. According to this authority, Lincoln's single term in congress was "negligent" and with the exception of a trip to New Orleans in his youth, he had spent most of his time in his own state.
Unfortunately generalizations of this sort, especially when they are made by men who are supposed to know what they are talking about, are convincing to the average reader, who is unable to check up on the writer. Let us consider how far this particular generalization is justified by the facts, or rather, whether there are any facts to justify it. It is true that most of the important political speeches of Lincoln were made in his own state, but that is probably true of most men in public life.

Spoke in Many Cities.
An examination of the biographies, supplemented by newspaper reports, leads the student to quite a different conclusion from that reached by Professor Stephenson's book. To be sure, Lincoln had not appeared in New York before he made his famous Cooper Institute address in February, 1860, but in 1848, twelve years earlier, he spoke in Trenton, Boston, his later opponent, William H. Neward, sharing the platform with him; and during the same Taylor campaign of 1848 he spoke in Worcester, New Bedford and other Massachusetts towns. In 1850 he delivered a long speech in Cincinnati, and in the same year he gave his remarkable agricultural address in Milwaukee, which was followed by a political speech, and later in the year he made a number of speeches in Kansas, only fragments of which have been preserved. After the Cooper Institute address he spoke in New Haven, Hartford and other Connecticut towns.

Four States Knew Him.
In 1849 he delivered the recently discovered eulogy on General Taylor in Chicago, and nine years later he made a very important speech in the same city. In 1848 he spoke several times in Maryland and Indiana. He is also known to have spoken a number of times in Missouri, possibly, among other places, in St. Louis. In 1842, Lincoln visited his friend Joshua Speed in Kentucky, but the nearest approach to a speech in that state that I have been able to discover is a reference in the Cincinnati speech to the Kentuckians across the river. On at least one occasion Lincoln spoke in Michigan, and this completes the list of states in which Lincoln is known to have spoken. It is quite within the limits of probability that Lincoln visited and spoke in Iowa and Minnesota, but the known facts are sufficient for our purpose.

His Ability Recognized.
The facts assembled show that, before his nomination in 1860, Lincoln had spoken in at least nine states and one territory, and that he had appeared in at least as many cities of considerable size and importance. A local paper characterized the Worcester speech as "a truly masterly and convincing speech" and the Tribune said of the Cooper Institute address: "No man ever before made such an impression on his first appearance before a New York audience." The Cincinnati speech was included in the volume containing the Lincoln-Douglas debates, published in 1860, and the Cooper Institute address, besides being reported in full in the newspapers

LINCOLNIAN GEM

This picture, little known, is really a gem in historic value. It shows President Lincoln on his visit to the field headquarters of General McClellan during the last year of the Civil war.

The day after its delivery, forged one of the Tribune tracts and was issued a few months later in an annotated edition. It is doubtful whether even Seward, whose knowledge of the country has never been questioned, had covered so great and varied a territory as speaker as Lincoln. It may be added that Lincoln supplemented his first-hand observation of different sections by a careful reading of a number of newspapers, including the Weekly Tribune and the Charleston Mercury, and that he knew personally many political leaders of both parties in different parts of the country. During his "negligent" single term in congress he formed an intimate acquaintance with Alexander H. Stephens, the vice president of the Confederate States.

on his way back from New England in 1848 he stopped at Albany in order to meet Thurston Wood, later Seward's campaign manager. It is an interesting fact, indicative of Lincoln's breadth of view and freedom from prejudice, that his most intimate early friend was a Kentucky Democrat and slave-owner, Joshua Speed, whose brother became a member of Lincoln's cabinet. In his knowledge of the real sentiment and character of the South, a very important matter at that time, Lincoln was undoubtedly far better equipped than any other of the Republican candidates in 1860. Before as well as during the Presidency Lincoln was able, through his knowledge of the country as a whole and not merely of a section of it, to take a truly national view of the difficult situation, in marked contrast to the narrow sectional view of many of the political leaders, both North and South.

Might Have Prevented War.
If the questions at issue in 1861 had been referred to him and to that no less broadminded southerner, Alexander H. Stephens, for final settlement, there is every reason to believe that the Civil war would have been avoided, slavery would have been gradually abolished with justice to all, and the Union would have been preserved in a spirit of charity rather than of bitterness. We are therefore, in my opinion, justified in assigning to Lincoln a place in the upper class of unusually well prepared and seasoned Presidents. The difficult and probably unanswerable question of his relative rank in this upper class need not be discussed here.

Women of America
I have never studied the art of paying compliments to women, but I must say that if all that has been said by orators and poets, since the creation of the world, in praise of women were applied to the women of America, it would not do them justice. - Abraham Lincoln

Irving's Pen Name
Jonathan Oldstyle was the pen name Washington Irving, the great American writer, signed to a series of articles which he contributed in 1802 to the Morning Chronicle, a Democratic Journal of New York City.

SPECIAL FIRE TRAIN TO MAKE STATE TOUR

A special fire prevention train, to be known as the "Forest Fire Fighting Flyer," started this week on a three months tour of northern Michigan counties.
As the name of the train implies, it will aim at spreading information on effective fire control methods and at stimulating greater interest among all people of the state in the menace of the forest fire. Many agencies are cooperating in the management of the train. Railroads of the state are furnishing cars and transportation, while the state Department of Conservation, the Michigan State College, the U. S. Forest Service and various development bureaus all contribute to the exhibit material.

The exhibit car of the train was first opened to the public at East Lansing from Feb. 3 to 5, during Farmers Week at the college. Hundreds of people from all over the state studied the displays in the car, which showed everything from the damage wrought by forest fire to general prevention and control methods.

Starting north from East Lansing this week, the "special," which includes three cars, will make 28 scheduled stops in the northeast section of the lower peninsula, between Feb. 8 and 10. Between March 16 and May 1, 52 stops will be made on five different railroads in the Upper Peninsula.

At each stop, the exhibit car will be thrown open to the public. Meetings will be held in the regular lecture car, and speakers will be sent to the schools and clubs in the community. Among the speakers who will be with the train throughout its course are: Edgar Cochran, State Conservation Department; L. F. Livingston and N. A. Kessler, M. S. C. Agricultural Engineering department; and representatives of development bureaus, the U. S. Forest Service, and the railroads.
