LYCEUM COURSE OPENS WITH GROVE HERBERT, LECTURER

Series of Entertainments Will Be Sponsored by High School and Proceeds Used in Auditorium.

With Grove Herbert, popular author and lecturer, as the opening number on "Chelsea's 1926-27 Lyceum course, local patrons are assured an interesting and entertaining introduction to the winter's program of five numbers. Mr. Herbert speaks at the new high school auditorium on Thursday evening, November 4, at 8 o'clock.

Listed on the lyceum program are some of the most outstanding dramatic and musical talent to be found, and it is believed the entire course ranks far ahead of anything ever offered in Chelsea of a similar nature. The second number, which comes on December 14 is "The Climbers," a dramatic masterpiece of mythic and comedy which promises many thrills. The play spent two years in New York, one year in Chicago, and will be the dramatic highlight of the season here. On January 31 the Boyds and Katherine Gutchell appear in a new program of songs, music and humorous sketches. March 16, the Riviera Artists and Entertainers will be here. Mary and Vivian Gorham, talented sisters, will give a costumed musical program, with the harp and violin featured. April 19, the Randall Ensemble Players will present "Madame Butterfly" in drama form with music. A popular concert and other entertainment will also be on the program of this company.

While quality of the coming lyceum course is, of course, kept uppermost in the minds of guarantors and school, the price of season tickets is sure to be a big inducement to those contemplating their purchase. Prices of adult tickets remains the same as other years, $1.50, and children's tickets are priced at 75 cents, but there are five numbers on this course instead of four as heretofore. This brings the price of each entertainment to 30 cents for adults and 15 cents for children—something unusual for the quality of entertainment provided. And then, the fact that the course will be presented in the new auditorium amid surroundings in keeping with the programs. Proceeds realized from sale of tickets will be used to help pay for stage furnishings, etc., which have been purchased by the school and will be placed within two or three weeks.

Tickets may be purchased of any high school student during the next week, and it is hoped there will be a ready response on the part of Chelsea folks.

NEWLYWEDS ENTERTAINED AT MISCELLANEOUS SHOWER

The Misses Ida and Una Wenk of Lima entertained a large company of friends and relatives at a miscellaneous shower, at the home of the former, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Pierce, also of Lima, on Wednesday evening, October 20, it being a complete surprise to the newlyweds.

Many useful and beautiful presents were presented the couple. After a dainty luncheon served by the hostess the guests departed for their various homes, all voting having spent a most enjoyable evening and wishing Mr. and Mrs. Pierce many years of joy and happiness together.

Guests were present from Toledo, Ann Arbor, Dexter.

ENGLISH SINGERS WILL APPEAR IN ANN ARBOR

The English Singers of London, consisting of six renowned artists: Flora Mann, Nellie Carson, Lillian Berger, Cuthbert Kelly, Norman Stone and Norman Notley, will give the second concert in the Choral Union series in Hill Auditorium, Ann Arbor, Friday evening, November 5, at 8:00 o'clock, Eastern time. These singers are regarded by critics, managers and music lovers who have heard them as the outstanding worth while musical novelty of the year. They bring a new repertoire to the concert hall, for they have rediscovered the wonders of Elizabethan music, and their concert of Madrigals, folk songs, ballets and canzonets are revelations of art and beauty.

The English Singers

Their whole program is sung in English with the perfect diction of the British born, making the words of their songs poems of exquisite grace and loveliness, which brings pride to every English speaking person. They have proven that English is singable. Seated grouped about a table they sing with ease and joy, a spirit which is quickly communicated to their audience.

They will appear in seventy American music centers including New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, St. Louis, Kansas City, Toronto, Montreal, Buffalo and Minneapolis, and other great cities.

SCHOOL NEWS

We have been exceedingly fortunate this school year in having such interesting chapel programs prepared for us.

This week we were entertained by a vocal solo given by Mrs. Palmer, accompanied by Mrs. Walworth. The speaker was a new one, and one with whom we hope to become better acquainted in the future. Rev. Firth, pastor of the local Methodist church, gave us a vivid and interesting description of life and educational systems as they were and as they now exist in England. Along with this he contrasted the opportunities and privileges afforded him in that country with our opportunities in America today. They were much more limited in every way in England and we should show a just appreciation of our advantages.

He also showed the importance of forming habits at the right time and in the right direction. A play on the word "habit" shows that if it is heeded "a bit" is still left, and again taking off the first letter "bit" remains and when the "b" is removed, "it" is still there and at last when taking off the "it" and only "t" is left, it is the inevitable habit characterizing all Englishmen, that of drinking tea.

Chelsea High defeated Saline last Friday for a fourth consecutive victory this football season. The score was 5-0 as the result of a touchdown by Faist late in the last period of play. The Saline gridiron proved most unfavorable as a place to fairly test the two teams' abilities. In the first place it was not level and secondly, very muddy due to recent rains.

The first half of the game turned out to be a punting duel as neither team was able to get started under the prevailing conditions. In this half the wind was at Saline's back but with this disadvantage Faist of Chelsea evened points.

Chelsea held a decided edge on the opponents throughout the entire game. Chelsea made six first downs to Saline's 2. Chelsea twice threatened Saline's goal but Saline only once had the ball on Chelsea's thirty yard line. Saline was out-punted in the last two periods. Chelsea completed two forward passes, Saline one and each team intercepted two.

The lineup: fa, Faist; hb, Fahrner; lb, Eisenbeiser; qb, Barois; c, Webster; rg, West; lg, Barbours; t, Adair; lt, Loveland; re, Beach; le, Steiner. Subs, McLaughlin and Dancer.

Roger Babson says--

Whatever Babson has to say falls on attentive ears among business men. They pay thousands of dollars yearly to subscribe to his bulletin on industrial and financial conditions. Here's part of his latest report on the gas industry--

"The reason for the tremendous growth in the use of gas is not hard to understand. Gas heat, like electrical heat, is a clean, controllable and convenient heat. As compared with coal its expense eliminates the expense and nuisance of coal storage and handling and ash removal. I understand that an efficient gas manufacturing system extracts up to 85 per cent of the possible heat in coal.

"The advantages of gas for industrial heating purposes are very marked. It has been adapted to literally thousands of industrial processes and this number is growing constantly. Manufacturers find that in processes where gas has been substituted for coal, products of better quality are made, because the gas heat can be perfectly controlled, and, furthermore it has been found that the use of gas is generally possible a marked increase in the production of goods."

Editorial

FIVE-DAY WEEK UNECONOMIC

Of course, we are not familiar with the inspiring purpose of Mr. Ford's action, but that it is uneconomic is as clear as day. What Mr. Ford might do, because of his peculiar position in the industrial world, cannot be a measure for all industry. Of course, Mr. Green tells us that the American Federation of Labor workers will produce just as much in the five-day week as in the six-day or five and a half day week. That is, an undiluted bunk. There is not a union man who will exert himself one iota more per hour to produce more goods simply because he finished on Friday night and not on Saturday. If it is true that there may be more production—sufficiently more to offset the lost time—it is a plain indictment of present methods of industrial work. In other words, it is an admission of slacking and it is an avowal that the unionist workers today are not giving their full effort for the wages they receive. The unions have always been opposed in every way, by speech, by legislative effort, by propaganda, to speeding up. Now they propose to "speed up" so as to get a six-day wage for five days' work. Can Mr. Green agree to deliver the orders and have them carried out which will increase the production sufficiently to offset the time lost? He cannot and he knows it. It is unfortunate that Mr. Ford should feel called upon to try now and then, because of his tremendous resources, to instigate so-called reform methods which merely make for economic disturbance. He should be quite content to do the best he can for his workers as other leaders in industry are doing. Undoubtedly he does not consider himself a part of the great industrial machine, or realize that his industry is interdependent. If he did this he would hesitate to put into effect, with a blare of trumpets, something which he knows is unwelcome.

LIFE AND RESPONSIBILITY

Most of us hope to get rid of our worries some day. We live in that hope. We build on it. We picture to ourselves the happy hour when, free at last, we shall possess not a care on earth. Fortunately, very few of us realize that expectation. Worry remains, and work and usefulness continue. But there are exceptions to this rule. Every now and then a man really does lose his worries. The first thing which happens to a man when he loses his worries is a sense of bewilderment. He realizes that he is in a different world. It is new and unfamiliar—moreover, it is vague.

The old, every-day, clearly defined landmarks are there no longer. The urgency is there no longer. No longer is it possible to say to oneself: "I must fact that difficulty before the end of the week." By this time next year I may just have got my feet clear again."

The unworried man has clear feet. But, usually, he knows nowhere to go. What does it matter where he goes? He can pay his way.

And because he can do things without effort, he does none of them. A worried man, on the contrary, because he cannot do any of these things except at great cost, does them all. Mental worry bears some quite definite relationship to the seton of 50 years ago. It seems to act as a tonic for human nerves.

It gives the worried man a sense of importance. "What would happen if I should lose my life or my health?" That question is usually asked in moments of despair, but it always proceeds from a heart that is full of eagerness, from a spirit assured of its value to its neighbors.

In this sense even ill-health itself is a link with humanity. "See how splendidly I struggle on in spite of my trouble."

We may doubt all this in the working months when worries are steadily perched on our doors or desks. But the holiday season reveals the truth to those who care to see it.

Holidays are really periods of temporary escape from worry. They always look tremendously inviting beforehand. Most of us return from them with secret joy.

We have had enough of the leisureed ease which seemed so alluring. We want our worries again, and our humanity and our hopes and fears. The happiest month of the year is not August but October.

It is a good thing and an interesting thing, to watch oneself on holiday and, if possible, to see how one responds to freedom from care. Alas, as a rule the conclusion is soon reached that when care flies out of the window boredom comes in at the door.

The best holidays of all are those one takes in working hours. They are the only holidays which carry with them their own anxiety. That may be hard morality; it is good medicine.

The five-day stop law for marriages in this state seems to be working out all right, except for those who don't believe in long engagements.

The greatest drawback young married couples seem to find in this day and age is a garage in which to park the family automobile.

Money and time are the heaviest burdens of life, and the unhappiest of all mortals are those who have more of either than they know how to use.

NATURE'S BOUNTY TO BE SHOWN AT CHICAGO

Agriculture in all her glory will hold court at the world's fair capital to the week following Thanksgiving when the International Live Stock Exposition will celebrate its 27th anniversary at the Chicago Union Stock yards, November 27 to December 4. According to Secretary-Manager B. H. Helde, who has successfully conducted this greatest of all agricultural shows for over a quarter of a century, the approaching session will be the most completely balanced exhibition ever staged in its illustrious history.

For months the foremost breeders have been grooming their finest beef cattle, horses, sheep and hogs for the supreme test of the year at this acknowledged "Court of Last Resort." Champions from every large stock show on the continent will meet to decide the final honors of the season, many of them clashing here for the first time. The concentrated blood of generations of breeding will be gathered together in one great-dazzling display of animal perfection.

The master feeders also have been devoting all their skill to the fitting of outstanding specimens of market live stock for the classic contests of the International. One of the tensest moments of the exposition will precede the awarding of the fat-bullock grand championship by the celebrated Judge George Gordon Davis, of Buenos Aires, Argentine. In the pens of the adjoining stock yards will be assembled in slaughter over 200 carloads of prime slaughter animals, affording a stupendous spectacle to be witnessed no other place on the globe. More than 11,000 head of live stock will be entered in the 900 classes of the exposition for $100,000 in prizes and numerous trophies.

The International Grain and Hay show will include around 5,000 samples of grains, small seeds and hay selected from the choicest crops of the United States and Canada. Practically every state and province will be represented in this department.

An army of 1200 farm youths, picked from 650,000 Boys and Girls club members, will attend the Fifth

Nature's Perfection

With all our knowledge we cannot keep clean, a piece of glass, if ever so precious, such as the lens of a microscope, without scratching it in the cleaning. The window and lens of the human body, the eye, is kept automatically clean for the time of one's life by means of a wonderful slightly disinfected fluid, the tears, and the winking of our eyelids, and the water sent down the nose.

BREVITIES.

BROOKLYN—Brooklyn Masonic Past Masters were honored at a fine dinner and program Monday evening. The event was greatly enjoyed by the 70 Masons present, nearly half the number coming from neighboring lodges of Napoleon, Onsted, Cement City and Manchester. Exponent.

BRIGHTON—It is with a considerable amount of satisfaction that we announce that the business interests of Brighton have launched a campaign to build this town into a modern trading center; it is really a "Boosting Brighton" affair which is sure to reap benefits. Argus.

SOUTH LYON—South Lyon business section has taken a greater metropolitan appearance by the addition of a stop light erected by the Edison company on the main four corners last week-end. It is the standard type with the customary three lights, red, green and amber, and was furnished by the county and will be maintained by the village. Herald.

JACKSON—Two youthful bandits, both armed with high caliber revolvers, walked calmly into the Standard Oil Company's filling station at the corner of Lansing avenue and North street, shortly before 10 o'clock Thursday night and after ordering the attendant, Wendell W. Whitney, to "stick 'em up fast" removed $150 and escaped in a light roadster equipped with red wire wheels.

DEXTER—A smoldering fire, caused by an electric iron from which the current had not been turned off, called the fire department to the residence of H. L. Shankland last Friday noon, the family being absent at the time. The fire was extinguished without the services of the department being needed. The damage was approximately $40, which is covered by insurance. Leader.

ing needed. The damage was approximately $40, which is covered by insurance. Leader.

MANCHESTER—Miss Edith Kapp, accompanied by Miss Myra Spafard and Miss Frances Kief, was driving from Detroit last Friday evening when her car skidded on an account of loose gravel was overturned, breaking the top somewhat. None of the ladies was severely injured and help was summoned to place the car upright, and they drove home. It was indeed a narrow escape from something more serious. Enterprise.

JACKSON—Following a motion of Supervisor Williams and two amendments to the motion, the board of supervisors decided Thursday that a lagoon should be made at Ella W. Sharp park at a cost of $10,000, and that the county purchase 25 acres of land at Swain lake for a park. It was also decided that the Town Line road should be built of class B gravel, at a cost of $8,000 to the county. Tribune.

SALINE—George Finkbeiner was displaying recently some English walnuts that were raised on his farm in Saline township. They were of fine quality, equal to those bought in the store. He had several of them with him showing the different stages of the progress of their ripening. He claims that they have to be picked at a certain stage or the shell will not come off properly. The tree these nuts were from is 17 years old. It now bears about 2 1/2 bushels each year. According to the price of English walnuts it seems that if industrious people would start raising them a handsome profit could be made from their sale. Observer.

PINCKNEY—The fish preserve situated on the Elmer Glenn farm, about midway between Half Moon and Highland Lake will be completed in about 10 days with favorable weather conditions. Henry Johnson is doing the excavating and grading. The pond made is several hundred feet in diameter and has a depth of from 2 feet at the edges to 6 feet in the middle. The depth is controlled by a dam and sluice box built across the creek from which the pond is formed. The dam is 10 inches thick at the top and 2 feet at the bottom. This preserve when completed will hold 5000 bass spawn or 8000 blue gills. Trees will be set out and an auto drive built on each side of it. Dispatch.

MASON—Four days were required to complete the full business of the Ingham county board of supervisors, to analyze the reports of the various county officers and boards, to determine upon the amount required to be raised by taxation, to thresh out the vexatious salary question, to elect the appointive officers, to compute the required apportionment of state and county taxes and to pass the millage and per diem measure. Yet within this short period of time the members found time to visit the county farm, and devour a flock of Barred Rocks which the good keeper and his wife have carefully nurtured during the summer biding the day when their honored guests would surely arrive. IN MEMORIAM

In Memoriam of Mrs. Thomas Wilkinson, Jr., who departed from her loved ones, one year ago Nov. 1st. We can not say, and we will not say that she is dead. She is just away! With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand, she wandered into an unknown land, and left us dreaming how very fair it needs must be, since she lingers there.

And we O-We, who silently weep for the dear sweet face and the glad return.

Try to think of her faring on as dear in the love of there as the love of here.

Think of her still as the same, we say. She is not dead—She is just away!

HERE'S GOOD ACTING AND GOOD DIRECTION

Roth on View in "Lovey Mary." Directed by King Baggot, with Bessie Love and William Haines. Heading Expert Cast.

A good director and good actors, at their best.

That, in brief, is the verdict on "Lovey Mary," picture directed by King Baggot, which will be shown at the Princess Theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, November 3 and 4. Bessie Love, William Haines, Mary Alden and Vivian Ogden have the leading roles and more capable artists would have been difficult to find.

"Lovey Mary" is essentially a comedy, but there is an undercurrent of pathos whose interpretation affords Bessie Love a remarkable opportunity for a convincing display of her exceptional histrionic ability.

The story of "Lovey Mary" has been taken from the book of that name by Alice Hegan Rice, author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and the characters and locale are the same in both stories.

It cannot be said that the book has been transferred to the screen with absolute fidelity, but it can be said that the screen version is a tremendous improvement over the book, both in drama and interest.

Bessie Love as an ugly duckling, with pigtails, freckles and shabby clothes, will be a shock to many of her admirers, but her artistic and sincere portrayal of the little orphan slavey who lavishes all her pent-up affection on the baby wraith, will more than compensate for her histrionic loss of beauty.

William Haines has the leading male role opposite Bessie Love, and as Mrs. Wiggs' boy Billy, driver of the cabbage patch milk wagon, he is thoroughly acceptable as a romantic hero.

The recreation of Mrs. Wiggs' cabbage patch, ramshackle buildings, weedy inhabitants and all, is an interesting bit of work and the types in the film are worth many a laugh.

To sum it up, "Lovey Mary" is a good picture that is bound to make you laugh a lot, it may make you cry, and you can be certain that it will entertain.

The satisfactory cast includes Russell Simpson, Martha Mattox, Rosa Gore, Sunshine Hart and the child, Jackie Combs.

CHEVROLET MOTOR CO.
OWNS HARDEST DIAMOND

The hardest diamond in the world is the property of the Chevrolet Motor company which has used the big diamond continuously during the last 10 years in the dressing of abrasive wheels for precision grinding necessary to meet the Chevrolet standards of accuracy.

Due to its extreme hardness, "C-66" as the gem is prosaically designated in the Chevrolet records, has outlived probably $200,000 worth of diamonds used by the company.

F. W. Smith, grinding engineer of the General Motors corporation, and inventor of a patented method for setting grinding diamonds, contends that "Old C-66" is a freak.

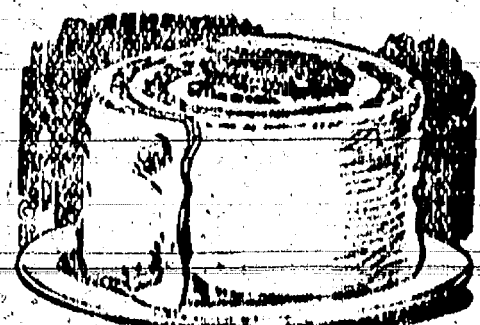

"It is a South African black ballas diamond originally weighing about 30 carats," he said. "Today, after 10 years of continuous service in truing the grinding wheels used on piston jobs, it still weighs 25 carats. An ordinary grinding diamond would have worn out years ago. 'Old C-66' is so hard that it requires resetting only about three times a year. Only diamond truing will give the absolute accuracy essential on a wheel used in sizing such important parts as engine bearings and pistons."

In his patented method of setting diamonds he first electro-plates the exterior with copper which forms a union so close as to be invisible even under 1,000 magnifications. A circular recess in a steel slug used to hold the diamond in the wheel-truing machine is then filled with molten fuse metal. The copper plated diamond is immersed in the metal which hardens, leaving exposed about one-third of the gem's surface.

This core of fuse metal gives the diamond complete protection against damaging high temperatures which might result should the grinding machine fail to play water upon the diamond while it is truing a wheel. The fuse metal will melt and release the diamond at 670 F or 250 degrees below a temperature that might injure the surface.

After being placed in the grinding machine under a stream of water, the diamond is moved slowly back and forth against the surface of the wheel which revolves at a speed of 6,500 feet or more than a mile per minute. The even friction of the diamond dresses the face of the wheel smooth and true. The wheel then is used in grinding operations upon bearings, pistons and other important engine parts to which it confers the unvarying microscopic accuracy demanded by the standards department as Chevrolet's assurance of reliable service and long life.

SEE GREAT DAMAGE BY BORER IN CORN

The destruction caused by the European corn borer was seen by 500 people at a demonstration held in the vicinity of Monroe October 24. A five-acre field owned by Joe Benore showed a total crop loss. Every stalk in this field contained from one to forty specimens of the borer.

Prof. J. E. Cox was in charge of the day's program and introduced Dean R. S. Shaw, Prof. E. H. Pettit, Prof. H. H. Muselman, George Gattman, specialist in agricultural engineering, all from Michigan State College; J. A. Harmon, entomologist from the U. S. Department of Agriculture; and A. C. Carlton from the state department of Agriculture. These men all gave their views of the seriousness of the situation that faces Michigan and the United States. They agreed that only the maximum use of all available means of control could prevent the rapid spread of the European corn borer.

An exhibition was given of the machines which are of greatest use in control work. A low cutting attachment for corn blenders and a stubble pulverizer were the only specially designed machines shown. The existing cutter and the corn husker and shredder destroy nearly all the borers in material run through these machines. The fermentation in silage destroys all borers in silage. Plowing down does not kill borers in corn stubble.

State laws give the state department of agriculture the power to enforce quarantine laws and to compel the cleaning up of fields which are infested with corn borer. This clean up work must be done before May 25. The state of Michigan needs the active aid of every available agency to prevent very serious damage to a crop which was worth 50,000,000 dollars last year.

Oh, Shucks

Rosamund, who had been observing her mother remove the husks from the corn, went out on the back porch where a neighbor was preparing to dress two chickens. In a few minutes she returned excitedly, calling to her mother: "Come quick, mother, Oliver is going to shuck the chickens."

FALL RADIO SCHOOL
OPENS AT M. S. C.

Twenty departments at M. S. C. have joined this year in presenting programs for the fall term radio school from Station WJAR, which opened Monday, Oct. 25. The educational programs are given each evening except Saturday and Sunday from 7:15 to 8 o'clock and the school is scheduled to continue for eight weeks ending December 17.

A wide variety of subject matter is offered in the educational programs containing material of interest for everyone, and plans have been made to make the winter term school still more complete. This is the third year of educational work conducted by the college station.

In addition to the radio school, there will be special educational programs furnished by the various departments of State on Friday evenings from 8 to 9 o'clock, student musical programs on Wednesday evenings from 8 to 9 o'clock, and special features from time to time as the occasion arises.

The fall term schedule for the radio school is as follows: Mondays—Home Economics, English, Agricultural engineering, and horticulture; Tuesdays—Engineering, zoology, forestry and farm crops; Wednesdays—Economics, botany, soils and dairy; Thursdays—Education, sociology, animal husbandry, and farm crops; Fridays—History and political science, poultry and dairy.

FARM BRIEFS

Professor Card of the Poultry department, Michigan State College, was in the county Tuesday co-operating in some poultry extension work, addressing the Saline Poultry association meeting Tuesday evening. Mr. J. M. Moore will be in the county this first, second and third of November and will complete inspection of poultry demonstration farms in the county.

The Corn Borer Field day at Monroe was attended by a number of Washtenaw County farmers last week. Plans are being worked out for control measures and the county agent is arranging to hold a series of meetings in the county this winter so that all farmers will be familiar with the regulations.

Rural women held their first Home management project meeting with Miss Smith on Thursday and Friday of last week. Leaders were present from thirteen different communities.

The farmers' judging team from Washtenaw county composed of H. G. Latson, Roland Stein, and E. W. Martin placed third in the contest with other counties of Michigan at the National Dairy Show recently held in Detroit.

Equipment in extension office has been re-arranged and callers will find the entrance on the west side. Office is located in the same room as formerly.

RALLY DAY INVITES

MOTHER TO COLLEGE

The second annual Rally Day for women who are interested in home economics extension work will be held at Michigan State College Saturday, October 30. Many of the 1,000 local leaders who were trained last year by specialists of the college home economics department will attend the meeting.

The group will assemble at the home economics building at ten o'clock where they will be received by Dean Krueger who will explain the work of the department. The building and its facilities for the teaching of home economics will be shown to them in the People's Church of East Lansing. The Rev. N. A. McCune will give a brief talk concerning the work of this church.

The afternoon program will include addresses by Kenyon L. Butterfield, president of Michigan State College, and by John D. Willard, director of continuing education, M. S. C. Miss Fanny Buchanan of the Victor Talking Machine Company will give a talk on music appreciation. Leaders and specialists in charge of extension work at the college will outline the plan of work which will be carried on in the state this year.

Four projects in home economics extension work will be given in the state this season. One of these, the home furnishing project, is being given for the first time. The work in nutrition, clothing, and home management has been very popular in the state during past years. Plans are complete for carrying on one or more of these projects in 35 counties this year.

"The Rich New Yorker"

By ROSE MEREDITH

(Copyright.)

LUELLA FRAYNE was coming home after her long-talked-about winter in New York city. She had been staying with her mother's cousin, Mrs. Peterby, a rich and fashionable woman, who had offered to add the finishing touch to Luella's musical education by sending her to a famous pianist, for instance. And although Luella did not expect to do more than teach piano to the young people of her home town, the fact that she was a pupil of the great Himakoff brought her many requests from anxious mothers to register Jane or Jimmy among her prospective pupils.

"Goodness, I will be a rich woman!" sighed Luella as she relaxed in delicious idleness in the chair of the pullman car. She glanced down at her smart blue serge frock that Cousin Almira had supplied, as well as the short marten jacket and the small hat which had a crown of gold cloth. Mrs. Peterby had given her many other pretty things and promised to send her a check to help with her trousseau, for Luella was going to be married—some day. She was engaged to David Lister, an energetic home-town boy who had built a drug store on the site of the old courthouse and equipped it in the most modern manner. Dave was the son of a pharmacist, and one of the girls, Clara Wing, had written enthusiastically, "Dave has the most up-to-the-minute drug store in the county—he is earning heaps of money—you will never spend all the money you can make by teaching piano—everybody in Roseboro will join your class! Poor Maria Barber is heartbroken. Lu! Says her music class has dwindled to two, so far, neither pupil pays cash—poor old soul, she is a good teacher, too—remember she trained you, so that your Bum-skeeter, or whatever his name is, said you had been well drilled. Well, we shall all be glad to see you again, and I suppose you are very fashionable now—and have you seen that rich New Yorker again? I told Dave—he looked terribly jealous. Don't mind, if we copy all your clothes, do you?"

Luella read the letter, smiling mischievously at the reference to David's jealousy. She had a plan that would open the eyes of Roseboro, and Dave could take it or not as a declaration of independence. She had learned a lot of things in New York, among them the delightful fact that she was a very pretty girl. She had met some amusing girls who taught her to smoke, and she had learned golf and to wear knickers on occasions without feeling self-conscious. As for David Lister, when she tried of teaching, perhaps they would get married, but there was that nice Mathieson boy in New York who was a millionaire.

Just then the train reached the junction, and she saw her father's rusty little car, for Doctor Frayne was quite poor, though he had a large practice among the poor. But he was a contented man, and his little family was a happy one.

It was an hour after supper in Roseboro, and as the news had gone around that Luella was home, all the young people gathered about Dave Lister's store. Dave had been busy and could only talk to Luella over the telephone, but he was very smiling and happy for she was coming down to the store. He was alone when she arrived. For some reason she had taken a cross-out and come in the side door, and David was thankful—as poor as he was, he was a very poor white and wealthy.

Luella Frayne, Luella, clad in white silk blouse and trim gray tweed knickerbockers, her lovely hair bobbed and on her feet sport hose and impudent little tan oxfords.

She was smoking a cigarette! Hands in her pockets! She looked expectantly at David.

"Well, young fellow, what can I do for you?" snapped out Dave.

Luella picked up a soda mug and thumped the counter angrily. "Don't speak to me that way, Dave Lister! You know who I am—perfectly well!"

"You are the girl who is going to marry the rich New Yorker, Phyllis," said Dave coldly. "I was engaged to Doctor Frayne's daughter, but she has thrown aside all pretensions to femininity, and smokes like—like a chimney!"

"You are not engaged to her now then?" Luella's voice was small and weak. "Didn't you hear that the rich New Yorker was engaged to another girl—and that I only put these on to have a little fun—and I shall give them to Bobby—and I just hate cigarettes, they make me sick!"

"But, those?"

Luella looked down at the gray tweeds regretfully. "I suppose you wouldn't want your wife to wear these, Dave?"

"The girl I asked to marry me didn't look like that, Luella, but you do look as cute as the dickens—but, somehow, I just can't like them—that pink dress you used to wear—Lu, now that?"

"I'm going home, David, by the short cut, and I'll stop and tell Maria Barber that I've decided not to teach music because I'm getting married, and I'll tell father that Cousin Almira is sending him a new closed car, and I'll put on the pink dress, and then—"

"And then?" he smiled.

"You may kiss me!" And then she vanished, and with her went that foolish rumor, the rich New Yorker.

When George Caught Dorinda

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

WHEN (twins came to Darling and Darling, that world renowned acrobatic pair, there was great rejoicing in Circus Town.

"They'll be some kids on the tight rope!" prophesied one, and "Gosh, what a future in stilt dancing!" foretold another.

As the years passed, Geoffrey Darling seemed the only one likely to carry on the family reputation. True, his brother George could get away with a mediocre performance now and again.

By the time the boys had reached the age of discretion it was not of great wisdom, the older Darlings had passed in one brief and tragic accident to that land where their peculiar endowments were presumably of no more use to them. Geoffrey was left to carry on their reputation—and George to look after Geoffrey.

That he did so was particularly evident in the matter of Dorinda.

Who was Dorinda? She was the sweetest, prettiest, sunniest, daintiest little equestrienne of them all. The hills that so proclaimed her spoke truly, and George would have knocked you down had you questioned it.

Yes—even after he relinquished all hope of ever having her for his own.

For one night George had stumbled out of his tent at the sound of voices close at hand. Unobserved, he had stepped back quickly when he saw Dorinda in the arms of his brother and heard her murmur, "Darling, I thought you would never propose!"

Next day when he had happened near her she had acted strangely disturbed, but George, mastering his emotions, had gone straight over to her and gripped both her little hands. "It's splendid," he said, "just splendid. Dorrie, about you and Geoff. Now I can really be to you the brother I have always wanted to be."

Then he had left her abruptly, his heart torn with anguish.

Geoffrey's engagement to Dorinda kept him straight for just about one month. Then his former habits gripped him.

George gradually found himself bothered about his brother's act on the hill—in which, as a breath-taking finale, he caught Dorinda as she leaped from her horse straight into his arms as he balanced precariously on a bit of apparatus—all but suspended in mid-air.

Geoffrey was neglecting his practice, and as all circus men know, a man who wants to maintain steady nerves and perfect co-ordination of eye and muscle cannot drink.

There came an afternoon when Geoffrey swayed into George's tent in a sad state.

"Can't go on—can't do it, ol' man. You got to take my place."

George repressed a desire to fling him out of the tent, brother though he was. Then, "That's foolish and you know it," he said.

"Got to," insisted Geoffrey. "Nobody knows the difference—look alike."

But suddenly he braced himself. "Feel queer?" he muttered. "Guess I can do it. Let me sleep an hour. Then wake me."

The hot August afternoon was drawing to its sultry close and the packed mob in the huge tent were craning their necks to get every bit of entertainment generously provided by the little ring.

The clowns at the clowns up-roughly, they shivered at the snarling leopards, and they loved the dainty Dorinda. Her partner had not so much use for. He had muffed one of two of his stunts and had staggered in a foolish manner, usurping the role of the clown, but at last he went out and left the little equestrienne to get through some of her own special performance.

The crowd could not know that just outside Geoffrey fell and that it was George who came on again.

As a matter of fact, Geoffrey, overcome by something more deadly than mere intoxication, had collapsed and his brother, hastily summoning the circus doctor, had stripped off the tawdry garments, donned them and dashed in so that Dorinda's act should not be ruined.

Could he put it across? There was no way in which he could first communicate with Dorinda and prepare her. Moreover, it was perhaps better that she should not know of the substitution for her own sake.

George was familiar enough with his brother's part and went through the patter and accompanying hand-springs creditably. What worried him was the final catching of Dorinda. Was he risking the life of the woman he loved?

Then, before he could hesitate further, the moment itself was upon him. He climbed mechanically, he balanced, he poised with outstretched arms—could he hold it—ah—Dorinda was in his arms! He held her there and then tumbled lightly to the ground. It had been in him, after all.

But what was she saying, as she still clung to him while the applause thundered?

"Thought you wouldn't make it, Geoff. Oh, how can you keep on with wicked ways—and after all your promises to me—and knowing that you won me on a hike—that I agreed to marry you thinking you were George! Oh, what have I done—what have I done!"

"But, really, I think she knew all the time!"

that startled the motor car industry

THE motor car industry was startled when Buick presented the new Buick with an engine vibrationless beyond belief.

If you have driven this great new car, with this remarkable engine, you know why.

Its fluid smoothness makes other motor cars seem rough, harsh, noisy.

People who have driven Buicks for years and people who have owned much more expensive cars, are captivated by the luxury of this one.

FLORIDA STORM DESCRIBED IN LETTER TO MISS CHASE

During the recent Florida storm I saw much worse than pictured by papers of that state. W. I. Crist, Miami Shores, Fla., close friend of Abbie Chase of Chelsea, describes in detail some of the terrible experiences during the eighteen-hour hurricane. Chelsea folks will be interested in knowing the contents of this letter and it is printed herewith: If I can collect my thoughts, I shall try and tell you about that most awful tropical hurricane that we passed through. The weather bureau sent out signals that day, saying there was a hurricane passing over the Bahama Islands, headed this way, and in all that night about eleven o'clock and kept on until it reached 170 miles an hour, and kept it up until 5 o'clock the next night. It was accompanied by the most terrible rain storm I ever saw. Being here all alone, and it was pitch dark, for I was afraid to have a light for fear of fire, and listening to trees breaking, buildings being shattered, you can imagine to some little extent how I felt. Here where I live was considered one of the beauty spots, on account of thirty or more 100 foot high. Not one of those trees are left standing. One of them uprooted and fell across the back part of my house, completely destroying the kitchen, back porch and a closet in my bedroom, in which most of my books were stored. As a result, my library which I prized so highly, is gone, my clothing mildewed, etc. Had that tree fallen across the front of the house I would not now be writing you this letter. God forbid that I should ever pass through another like it. About 9 o'clock in the forenoon the two-story house across the street fell, and the eleven people living there rushed over in all that storm to my place. For over a week they slept on my floors each night. Two large stores, our postoffice and scores of dwelling houses went. Hundreds of people were killed, and thousands wounded.

Out-papers here have misrepresented things and covered them up for fear they would hurt the winter crop of tourists. They claim there were only 110 killed, while in Hollywood, 10 miles north of here, there were over 1100 dead. One undertaker, and he was not one of the most prominent, told me he had alone buried 84, so while he was doing that what were the dozen or more other undertakers doing? A tidal wave also accompanied the storm, and the Bay of Biscayne, which is nearly a mile from here, came within a block of me.

One of the saddest cases in our immediate vicinity was that of a family of four. The mother was in the hospital for an operation, and the father was looking after the children. When the water from the bay commenced to come into the house, he started to the neighbor's with the children. Just outside the house, a piece of flying timber hit the little girl, scalding her. Another piece also hit the father, knocking him unconscious. When he regained consciousness he found the little boy had drowned. The father and mother are in the hospital, and the children are buried.

One of my friends' houses was destroyed, and he and his wife, each with a child in their arms, held fast to a gate post for over five hours. At Miami Beach a house blew away and the family got scattered. When they found the woman she was pinned down with a tree, both legs broken, and she had given birth to a baby, the child still living. I could write for hours, telling you of things that happened.

Our church was hurt but little, parts of the belfry blew down and several of the windows broken. The excitement kept me up for several days, then reaction set in and for a few days I was very sick, not caring whether I lived or died. Two doctors and two nurses finally brought me out.

Jack and the Bean Pot

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

JACK WEBSTER had been in the American embassy in London for two and a half years and there was no denying the fact that while he was rising financially in the world, and most happy in his post, yet well home was home and he was more than a bit homesick for his own land and his own country folk.

Jack had succeeded in surrounding himself with a half dozen or so good scouts from the homeland and had his own chafing-dish and coffee percolator so that when too overcome with the monotony of roast beef and cabbage and fruit tarts he could prepare something that suited his palate and that of his pals.

It was, perhaps, in one of his homesick moments that his eye caught sight of the column in his morning paper headed, "Choice American Concoctions" and signed—not at all.

Jack read through the whole mouth-watering list of recipes which included clam chowder, corn pone, chicken Maryland, baked beans and, last but by no means least, mince pie.

By the time Jack had finished the column he was so hungry and so frightfully homesick that he felt like booking on the next steamer sailing homeward.

Instead, in a rash moment, he decided to try to get in touch with the person who knew so much about American cooking and see if he could make arrangements to have a dinner served in his rooms.

"The fellows will eat themselves into lank constriction, if I surprise them with some of these things," he mused while seeking the editorial office.

"The young lady who writes that column is a friend of our woman's page editor," he was told. "If you write a letter we will address it to her. That is the best we can do for you."

So Jack wrote a letter then and there. He intended to let no grass grow under his feet.

In a surprisingly short time he got a reply signed merely "Anne" which was the name under which the editor of the Woman's page wrote. There were questions in Jack's mind as to whether he had a kitchen and housekeeper.

Jack wrote back that she could give them anything she liked so long as Boston baked beans were on the menu. Also there was a kitchen and housekeeper, both at the disposal of Anne.

And upon receipt of Jack's letter two very charming heads drew closer together to discuss things. Anne, the woman's editor, was highly amused at the whole affair while Nancy Patterson, her friend in secrecy, was happier than she had been for three years.

"The last time," she confided with a soft blush, "that Jack proposed to me was out in Iowa. It was three years ago, and I told him I could not possibly marry a man who had no fixed ambition and who was simply living on his inheritance. I didn't know he had come to London and was making good at the embassy. You see, Anne, I loved him very much, and when I finally refused to marry him I was so unhappy that I've just been roaming about the world writing stories. He doesn't even know where I am."

It was not an easy thing to arrange a dinner in a strange bachelor's flat without coming in personal contact with said bachelor until the very night of the dinner, but that is what Nancy and her ally Anne were trying to do. They wanted a most complete surprise for Jack as well as his friends.

However, the housekeeper who took such excellent care of Jack was a ready third to the scheme and helped scout about London for corn meal and other necessities difficult to obtain.

There was no slightest doubt that Anne and Nancy had prepared a dinner fit for the gods and what's more they were about the daintiest two maids that ever carried a tray.

Six hungry men were sitting about Jack's hospitable table when Anne entered with steaming dishes of clam chowder.

Jack opened wide his eyes at sight of the lovely serving-maid. His dinner was being served in royal style. The fellows all opened admiring eyes and when a second maid arrived to help, Jack jumped up with a spring that almost upset the entire table.

"Jack," cried Nancy, "you almost upset me and the tray—don't be silly," she added a second later when each and every soul in the room had turned surprised eyes on the remarkable picture that Jack and the maid were making.

There was no doubt that an essential and missing part of Jack's life had suddenly returned. Also there was little fear that she would ever be missing again. Jack was seeing to that.

"Jack! Please," cried Nancy looking shyly at all her audience, "there's chicken Maryland, corn pone, baked beans and mince pie and—"

"But nothing in the world counts but you, Nancy," Jack told her.

"Oh, yes it does," said Nancy. "Anne and I have spent lots of time on this dinner, so you all sit right down and eat it."

And after a moment Jack came to his senses and obeyed.

Planted by Machinery

A machine that plants cabbage seedlings with considerable speed has been invented by Abbe Bacle, the parish priest of the village of Trélas Vents, near Nantes, France. It consists of a moving arm that places each seedling in a hole and another attachment that covers it with earth. It saves nine-tenths of the time usually employed in planting cabbages.
