AMERICAN LEGION TO CELEBRATE ARMISTICE DAY ON NOVEMBER 11

On November 11, 1931, the local Post of the American Legion instituted a new method of celebrating the anniversary of the signing of the Armistice. Residents of this community will remember the elaborate parade of floats. In the evening a dinner was held at the public school gymnasium and more than 400 persons were fed. Later in the evening a dance was attended by several hundred persons.

The success of the Legion Post in arousing enthusiasm among business men and others of the community has led the World War veterans and surrounding country to lay plans for a repetition of last year's program. At this early date it is impossible to say exactly what events will be included in the day's festivities, but it is expected that there will be a parade even bigger and better than last year. It is planned to hold another dinner and dance in the public school gymnasium and, as an added feature for the afternoon, the people who spend Armistice day in Chelsea will be able to see the high school football teams of Chelsea and Manchester in action.

The Legion has made one special request of business institutions and private individuals who might prepare floats for the parade. This request is that you communicate with Dr. A. L. Brock as early as possible and let him know what your plans are for participation in the events of the day.

As the weeks pass between now and November 11, this newspaper will carry additional information concerning the specific plans for the day. Post Commander Wilbur Hinderer has appointed the following committees to assume responsibility for various phases of the Armistice day program: Parade: Dr. A. L. Brock, Paul Maroney, Clarence Baumiller, George Walworth.

Publicity: E. Y. Poore.
Decorating: Henry Swicklerath, Wilbur Riemen-schneider, Chester Miller, Edward Hill.

Kitchen: W. G. Kolb, Robert Wheeler, Joseph Wright, Claude Spiegelberg, Elmer Schiller, Rauben Schneider, Leo Welch, John O'Hara, Charles Schooley, Julius Elsele, Sidney Schenk, Albert Doll.

Entertainment: Faye Palmer, Ed. Miller, Floyd Rowe.

Ticket Committee (Dance): Carl Mayer.

Michigan Department of StateWEEKLY NEWS BULLETINFrank D. Fitzgerald
Secretary of State

Lansing, Mich., Oct. 12.—Many inquiries have been received by the Department of State in recent weeks about the method by which Michigan will vote for president and vice-president at the November election.

For the first time in Michigan's history, the names of the various candidates for president and vice-president will appear on the ballot. Formerly the ballots have listed the names of the properly designated presidential electors and it was necessary for voters to cast their ballots for the presidential electors, who in reality elect the nation's executives.

This led to considerable confusion among the voters because of the fact that voters could not find the name of their choice for president on the ballot. To eliminate this confusion, the election laws were amended by the 1931 legislature.

This change provided that instead of the names of the 19 presidential electors appearing on the ballot at the head of each party ticket, there should appear the name of the various presidential candidates.

Under the present law, a vote on the November ballot for the presidential candidate of any of the parties, constitutes a vote for each of the 19 presidential electors of that party. Thus the ballot has been shortened considerably, confusion has been at the voting booths and there has been no change in the national plan of electing a president.

Give Thyself

The only conclusive evidence of a man's sincerity is that he gives himself for a principle. Words, money, all things else are comparatively easy to give away; but, when a man makes a gift of his daily life and practice, it is plain that the truth, whatever it may be, has taken possession of him.

—Lowell

Fate's Work in Us

These mystic souls of ours are sealed to ourselves. There is no key to unlock the reserved powers fed from divine founts, whence we can never be cut off, but the demands of fate. They can make the tenderest heart manly, the meekest saint do sternest work. —Samuel Johnson.

Matter of Psychology

Woman is primarily an unconscious and not a conscious being. That is why her nature is so difficult toathom, why every woman appears exceptional to herself. —Woman's Home Companion.

"GRAND HOTEL" HAS BREATH-TAKING AGGREGATION OF CELEBRITIES.

Five stars instead of one shine in "Grand Hotel," spectacular picturization of the celebrated Vicki Baum novel and play, which will head the program at the Majestic Theater, Ann Arbor, for one week, starting Saturday.

Probably no film in recent years has attracted as much advance attention as this unusual screen drama, which is described as a symbolical study of human nature in startling realism. The play ran in New York for more than a year with similar success accorded its presentation in other American cities as well as the capitals of Europe. In bringing it to the screen Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer placed five of its major stars in the central characterizations and engaged Edmund Coughling, director of "Devil's Holiday" and "The Trespasser," to handle the ambitious assignment. The remarkable cast is headed by Greta Garbo with John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Wallace Beery and Lionel Barrymore playing outstanding roles. Lewis Stone and Jean Harsholt are featured in the large supporting cast.

The story, which takes place entirely within the confines of a fashionable Berlin hotel, entwines the lives of a varied group of persons, including an exotic Russian dancer whose romantic interlude with a reckless baron saves her from suicide but results in her lover's murder. Involved in the drama are a scheming business man, a seductive stenographer, a consumptive clerk spending his savings on one last fling in life, a shell-shocked doctor and the hotel's head porter. How these people are all brought together and how their various intrigues and adventures change the course of their entire lives forms the theme of the plot.

Last Friday during our general assembly period, Rev. Potts, talked to us on the "Life and Character of Teddy" Roosevelt, whose birthday is celebrated on the 27th of this month.

Rev. Potts told us how Roosevelt developed a very strong body out of a very anemic one, how he went into the Spanish American war as a rough rider and how he worked with the cowboys in the west. Roosevelt was a great orator attracting large crowds wherever he went. His last presidential campaign was an epic in the history of minority campaigns as far as attracting crowds and getting votes by the sheer force of personality is concerned.

As Roosevelt was human, he had many faults as well as virtues. He was egotistical but his sincerity made up for this fault.

We are grateful to Rev. Potts for giving us this interesting biography of one of our greatest Americans.

The various organizations of the school serve to make students better acquainted, to teach the value of co-operation, and develop school spirit.

Acquaintances made through social activities enable the members to understand each other better and that is a valuable thing to learn. Each organization has aims towards which it strives, and every member must endeavor to do the utmost of his ability to work with the officers and advisors in an effort to realize these aims. He is expected to serve willingly on committees and take part in programs. The largest service rendered, however, is developing that very essential thing in school life—school spirit. It can be developed and can flourish through other things, but organizations make the process more natural and easy. Let's each of us try to belong to at least one organization and make it a success.

FOOTBALL SPIRIT.

Can a skyscraper stand without a foundation? Can a tree stand without a trunk? Of course not! And neither can a football team win without the support of the student body behind it.

In the history yet to be written, let it be said that we have record breaking attendance at the games—even though we have no stadium. There are a good many football fans in Chelsea.

Why can't we get them? We can, but why, first of all, can't we get our own students? That team cannot win without your support. If the team comes out on the field and sees no one standing where the students should be, are they going to fight? What have they to fight for? Get behind your team, stand by them, and they'll fight for you!

ELEMENTARY NEWS.

Kindergarten.—Our young students are talking about preparations for winter. They have built cellars in which vegetables are being stored for winter. The idea is being carried out with paper and in the near future modeling clay will be used. Songs pertaining to squirrels, storing their nuts away are being learned by the pupils as a conjunction pertaining to their study of winter. Appropriate pictures have been put up.

First Grade.—The first graders are learning to write. Monday they played train which aided them in their reading lesson. They have also made paper boats. Tuesday they put on a musical for their own benefit. Seven of the girls and likewise seven of the boys have their names on the board for doing exceptionally well with their letter cards.

Third Grade.—The third grade have started a Pueblo Indian village. Their mesa is a box covered with sand. The pueblos are built of cardboard and clay. They also have pasteboard ladders to get to the other stories of the building. Miss Wilson, who has lived in Mexico, is going to tell them more about the Pueblo Indians.

Fourth Grade.—The fourth graders who have been studying King Alfred and the Danes are also learning a Danish folk song.

Fifth Grade.—The fifth grade boys and girls are studying the poem "October" by Helen Hunt Jackson.

The names that appear on the spelling-honor roll this week are: Joan, Walworth, Eunice Hart, Delys John, George Winans, Maynard Oesterle and Robert Walz.

Pictures

We paint our pictures in a row,
 The pictures of the life we daily show.

If we could see the strokes we often make,
 How many pictures could we find with no mistake?

The color would it brighten all the scene,
 Or would it be all black and dingy green?

Would the figures be made with finest care,
 Or would grotesque gargoyles be painted there?

Would the pictures fade or would they hold,
 Their color 'till the world grew old?

And we were gone?
 The landscape, would it blossom with bright flowers

Portraying all the joys of laboring hours?
 Sometimes I wonder what those pictures would be Perhaps 'tis just as well we cannot see.

Treasure Hunt

The first Junior party occurred on Friday, October 7, 1932 under the capable sponsorship of Miss Cash. The big feature at this social gathering was a "Treasure Hunt." The game—and it is a real game—started north of Gulde's cottage. After finding a couple of guiding notes in a near-by woods, the party headed southwest. They tramped through underbrush and over fallen trees for about an hour, until they discovered a hay stack, on top of which they observed another note fluttering in the cool breeze. This was indeed a welcome sight. Guided by this note, this inspired group of fortune hunters turned due east following a ridge around Little Cedar Lake. Keeping to the ridge was no easy task and required a great deal of climbing and re-climbing. From this point, the party turned north until they came upon an old fishing shack, and discovered placed thereon a large arrow which pointed across Doyle Lake. Realizing that they were nearing the end of their search, a few of the stronger adventurers ventured forth alone, and returned with a treasure of candy suckers and bars for the hungry and tired, but enthusiastic group of Juniors.

Library News

The elementary library will be open, hereafter, for the first grades from 9:00 to 9:30 every Tuesday afternoon. The children are not allowed to take books from the library but are permitted to look at them in the library at the reading table. The girls in charge are there to aid them in any way and explain any misunderstanding to them. The girls in charge have the seventh period free and have volunteered their services. A regular schedule has been worked out for the library club to take care of this innovation. Last week fifty-six books were circulated among the elementary grades.

At the last meeting of the library club, Thursday, Marjorie Sott gave a very interesting report on the book, "White Flag," by Gene Stratton Porter. Alice Osborne very graciously brought a copy of this book for the rest of the club members to read. Ralph Holbrooks and Margaret Goetz have volunteered to give book reports next week.

"THE MASTERPIECE"

(On hearing a remark of Mr. Potts's about a beautiful tree creaked in autumn colors outside the window of a classroom.)

When the Great Painter takes His brush in hand,
 To paint a picture man can't understand.

He lines the trees with yellow, green and red,
 And paints the blue skies overhead.

'Tis truly a masterpiece of art,
 Of which man knows, but such a part

As will enable him to know,
 What makes the colors come and go.

In every spring, in every fall,
 But how—he knows that not at all.

THE BLACK BOX OF SILENCE

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Having demonstrated the power of an extraordinary silence, the "Black Box" which has perfected Owen Landis, young inventor in the little town of Carthage, comes to the town of Chelsea, Michigan, to prove his device. That night the black box is stolen from a safe in Landis' laboratory.

CHAPTER II.—Landis tells Markham the only person besides himself, knowing the combination of the safe, is Betty Lawson, with whom the inventor is in love. Markham is in the driver's seat of a woman's footprint, found beneath the window of the laboratory.

CHAPTER III.—Betty, daughter of a college professor, is well known to Markham. Both he and Landis believe her to be above suspicion. To assure himself he takes an opportunity to go to the safe in Betty's home. They are identical. Betty's mother, Mrs. Canby, a stranger in town, who is posing as a "promoter," had driven her home from the beach the previous night, and that she had had the car. Markham does not tell Landis of his discovery, that the girl should be a deliberate thief. The invention from Landis' safe is unthinkable, but the evidence of the plaster cast seems to prove she was present at the time of the robbery.

CHAPTER IV.—Markham, vaguely suspicious of Canby's honesty, searches his hotel room in his absence. He finds hidden there two loaded automatic revolvers. Canby, returning brings the revolvers and burglar's kit to the hotel. Claiming to have just found them in his room, that night the safe in the bank of the small town of Portland, Maine, is blown up. The explosion is the work of the explosion being unheeded. Satisfied that his "black box" is in the hands of the thief, Landis is in the car, he drives at once to Portland.

CHAPTER V.—At Portland they find confirmation of their fears. Three strangers, riding in a motorboat, and claiming to be business men of Louisville, are the only possible suspects. Markham and Landis decide to follow them. They find the motorboat in the harbor of the city of Portland. The three men seem to guarantee the standing of the three. At St. Joseph, Markham meets a man who is a friend of his. He learns Canby is driving west with Betty Lawson and her father at his estate in the east. The following morning he and Landis start on a procession on the Pike Peak highway.

CHAPTER VI.—While he and Landis are sleeping, Markham's car is stolen and wrecked. He is killed and they go on. On the road to the mining town of Copah they get news of the disappearance of the car. A hotel in Copah they meet Betty. She is surprised at their presence in the West, and explains her absence for her and her father's journey. Markham overhears a conversation between Canby and the three Louisville men which convinces him it is on the right track.

CHAPTER VII.—Markham and Landis find the three men in the ghost town of the three men in the ghost town. They find the community of the Cincinnati mine has been held up and robbed. Two men killed, and there was no sound of a shot. When Al Brewster they learn of the arrival of Canby and his party. Markham meets a distant friend, William Starbuck, mine owner. He gives them information which gives up the evidence as to Canby's crookedness.

CHAPTER VIII.—At Brewster they meet Canby. He tells them he is in the West on business, connected with his mine, the "Old Quavapah." Markham and her father are with him as guests, the professor being interested in patents on the mine. Landis and Markham are seated on the street by the mine. Landis is surprised at their presence in the West, and explains her absence for her and her father's journey. Markham overhears a conversation between Canby and the three Louisville men which convinces him it is on the right track.

CHAPTER X.—The Louisville Three

In the evening Landis briefly announced his intention of going to call upon Betty.

"The Stillings live away over in the western suburb," said Markham. "You'd better take a taxi, or the roadster."

"For safety's sake, you mean? Not so doing anybody or anything to-night."

"For your war paint on, have you? Don't want me along?"

"No thanks; I'll go alone."

Left to himself, Markham lighted a cigar and picked a quiet corner of the lobby in which to read. Soon Landis returned, the frown of his departure deepened to an unwelcome scowl.

"No luck?" said Wally, noting the scowl.

"No. She's gone out somewhere—with Canby."

"You didn't see the professor?"

"No; he has gone to the fossil fields, wherever they are. I visited with the Stillings—mostly Mr. Stillings, in his den."

"That's friendly gossip."

"Not altogether. Betty's been talking about us and that broke the ice. The Stillings don't quite like the way she's letting Canby out in."

"That's the aftermath of his scamp. Inness out here last summer, I suppose."

"Not so much that as other things. Stillings thinks Canby is fixing to pull off something else, and that he is using Betty in some way."

"But how could Betty figure in any of his schemes?"

"God knows. But it's plain Stillings believes she does—innocently, of course. He was cautious until he found out where we stand, then he intimidated that it was up to us to put a spoke in Canby's wheel."

"Good. You'll do it?"

"We'll both do it. As you remarked, I have my warpaint on now."

"Anything happened to stir you up, Wally?"

"Yes. That shooting this afternoon was a planned attempt to kill us. As I was coming back across town, board of camp dumpage going through by the back streets. There were two men in it, and I saw them as the car came under the crossing electric. They were the men who were shooting at us. They were no tin can tourists; they were gunmen, hired to follow us. They made a sound about sight from the marksman's position, Markham looked apprehensively at the bare slope they would have to climb to reach their car.

"We'll have to go farther," he panted. "We can't scramble up there in plain sight."

"I don't mean to," said Landis. Then, in a sudden upblaze of passion, "I've had about enough of this d-d ambush business, haven't you? There is good cover on this other side of the gulch. We'll climb out that way and see if we can't do a little of the ambushing ourselves!"

As he had pointed out, there was foresting enough on the western slope of the gulch to afford fairly well-concealed stalking cover, and as they rolled up, through the undergrowth, Markham was striving to fog his estimate of his boyhood-chum and colleague into the new point of view. He had always thought of Landis as a dreamer, a thinker, a student—as anything but a fighting man.

But here was an entirely new development. The dreamer, pale of face, to be sure, but with his jaw thrust and the light of battle in his wildest gray eyes, was storming up the steep ascent at a pace that made his heavier follower pant and blow.

Thus it came about that Landis was the first to step out of a thick growth of little spruces at the level of the road. Markham burst out of the cover a moment later, and what he saw was a further proof that a lifelong friendship may not reveal the whole man, even to his closest intimate.

The small, dusty, rattler car was standing as they had seen it from the opposite side of the gulch. Beside it were two men with their hands above their heads in deference to Landis' covering pistol, and at their feet lay the rifle with which one of them had been firing into the gulch. Before Markham could get his breath, Landis was grilling the pair snappily.

"What did you fellows mean by firing at us when we were down there?"

"I don't think I know," was the grilling reply. "That was one of Canby's tricks. I saw the name 'Quavapah' on it as we came up. It's running in my mind that we'll have to kill a few people out here yet, before we're through, Wally. And by heavens, I'm telling you, right now it's they keep on asking for it, they'll get it!"

While the men were working at the wire, he motioned to Wally.

"Look in the car and see if they've got any more artillery," he said; and he and Markham followed it up to where the "Tennesseeans" had parked the roadster.

They waited beside the road until after the car had limped on around the next gulch looping. Then they got into their own car and headed for Brewster.

"Well," Markham said, after they had left the scene of their late adventure a mile or more to the rear, "what's the answer? Is that wreck in the gulch what is left of the 'Tennesseeans'?"

"I couldn't be sure. But it was an 'ought.' You saw that much, didn't you?"

Markham nodded. "Next, what's the answer to the two men in the flyer? Have you figured that out?"

"No; though I more than half believe they were lying. It's lucky for them that I wasn't sure."

"Gosh!" said Markham with a laugh. "A little while ago I said something to the effect that you might be lacking a few of the red corpuscles. I take it all back—every last word of it. Why have you never shown me the fighting side of you before, Owen? You haven't, you know."

Landis smiled as a mere tightening of the lips.

"You've heard the old saying 'Be ware the wrath of a patient man,' haven't you? I'm patient, Wally. I'm fed up. From this time on, by the Lord Harry, I fight for my own hand—I've been robbed and snubbed and shot at, and the next man that tries to go to get the best I've got in the box!"

"Gosh!" said Wally again, and this time he did not laugh.

On the flight down the mountain nothing happened until they were on the stretch approaching the side road leading to Canby's mine. Here, however, there was a near accident. As they ran down they saw a heavy truck backing out of the road leading to the mine. Markham sounded his horn, but the driver of the truck held on in a way to place the heavy vehicle fairly across the highway.

It was too late to stop, and Markham did the only thing there was to do if a collision was to be averted—stepped on the gas, and with a quick twist of the wheel whipped the roadster around the rear of the backing truck with no more than inches to spare between a deep roadside ditch and the trundling menace.

No word was spoken until they were speeding over the main road toward the city. Then Markham said, "We ought to have shot that truck driver, Owen. It would have been justifiable homicide, don't you think?"

"I don't think I know," was the grilling reply. "That was one of Canby's tricks. I saw the name 'Quavapah' on it as we came up. It's running in my mind that we'll have to kill a few people out here yet, before we're through, Wally. And by heavens, I'm telling you, right now it's they keep on asking for it, they'll get it!"

Why We Behave Like Human Beings

By GEORGE DORSEY, Ph.D., LL.D.

A Kill-'Em-Love-'Em Complex

THE emotional side-bulges in psychoses: we "adore," we "love," we are "passionately fond of," birds, cats, dogs, butterflies, pink tights, Niagara falls. Some "love" half the world of things and all the world of beings. Others are as devoted to their hutes: they have dozens of ways for hating things and people. Extreme and lurid fears are the third of the three emotional graces. A grace in disgrace is a psychosis.

Whole nations get that way. We recently hated all Germany, even "German silver" and "dachshunds," and loved the French, down to snails and frogs' legs. We cheered at the movies when we saw a German killed, applauded when we saw a Frenchman kiss an American officer. The whole "civilized" world suffered a huge psychosis: a kill-'em-love-'em complex.

Freudian psychoses are planted in infancy and are sexual. Freud even went so far as to say that every dream is a "wish-fulfiller" and has its foot on the forbidden pleasure of childhood.

The business of the sex-impulse is mating: if the two sexes do not pair, the sex-impulse has not attended to its business and is a biologic nature. Many do not pair, a few live happily after; the sex-impulse has attended to everything except its own business. Being denied proper outlet, it disarranges society and long ago became the dominant force in human behavior. By the time Freud is through, life is sex. The drive in life is love, libido. "Thwarted libido" is responsible for all the trouble.

"That sounded interesting and Freud-ism became a fad; then, cult; and is now a disease and should be put out of its misery.

Here is the argument. The new-born comes into the world naked and untrained. The world says: "That's not nice; you must not do that." That begins the conflict: animal instinct versus social don'ts. But instinctive "I want" are not to be laid by "don'ts." What then? "Substitutes."

The young "mind" indulges its instinctive libido by symbols, society's substitutes for nature's action.

For Freud, "mind" is stuff, a product of the processes of development. Certain forces determine the trend of this development. By "psycho-analysis" that "mind" can be examined—as one examines the contents of a jug. Such examination will reveal the manner in which these determining forces have acted and reacted.

But the mind is like a jug with much sediment below the thin skin milk on top. The sediment is the Unconscious Mind, thick with repressed instinctive impulses and "I want" memories. This stuff is a source of energy, loaded, always smoldering; it exerts influence. It is a hidden drive to action no less than the libido impulse itself.

Do the "repressions" ever rise to consciousness? Only when disguised or distorted—as they always are in dreams. In dreams they "rise."

Science must formulate hypotheses—and proceed to test them. But progress is not made by assuming that spanking a child drives a libido to parts unknown which later will jump up like a jack-in-the-box to scare the man or woman to death.

No child is a "born liar." But a lively youngster may become a precocious one in ten or less years, driven to learn the art because parents will be parents and boys will be boys.

The instinct of self-preservation may find a perverted outlet in the impulse to be cruel to others. If continued, it makes for sadism: frightful, cruel, atrocious, prize fights, cruelty for the sheer love of being cruel, including cruelty to one's own children.

The sex-complex is complex in man and in all species of animals with sexual reproduction. In human society it has become increasingly complex. It is so individualized that there are as many kinds of sex behavior as there are individuals.

So many things in life are "loved" that sentimentality is more common than sensuality. The inherent emotional drive to seek and love a mate goes out to dogs and sunsets, and bathes with tears the belongings of the late beloved.

There are habits, types and behavior; they vary with age and climate. These habits function in individuals. The sex behavior of any individual is only to be understood in the light of the manner in which the individual learned to respond to the two-sex world in which he or she grew up.

To say that man is driven by sex is to say that a man is a mammal or that human reproduction is sexual. To say that a repressed libido is also a drive but hides in the Unconscious—to pop out in a bad dream of a psychosis—is the mystic way of saying that life learns, and that reflex arcs and salivary and other glands can be and are conditioned. To say—with Freud and Jung—that the mythology and symbolism of human culture have their roots in the Unconscious, is to make a magician's cave where by psycho-analysis one can discover anything one puts into it.

"Libido" sounds more potent than love; "Unconscious" more mysterious than behavior. That is why libido was so popular; why so many started to juggle with Unconscious.
