Question And Answer Dept.

Ques.—I wish to ask you if the sun is a planet?
Ans.—No. The sun is a star. There is no animal or vegetable life on the sun.

Ques.—You appear to be good in answering questions, so I am going to ask you what I can do to make this coming winter seem short?
Ans.—The only way we know of to make the winter seem short would be to sign a few notes to mature the first of next April.

Ques.—May I ask you if it is good taste to use gold edged paper in private correspondence? Also should one's telephone number be on the letterhead?
Ans.—It is not good form to use gold edged paper. The telephone number on the letterhead is appropriate.

Ques.—I am asking a question I asked you quite awhile ago, but I have forgotten the answer. Will you answer again? How did grapefruit get its name?
Ans.—Grapefruit got its name from the fact that the fruit often grows in clusters, very much like grapes grow.

Ques.—Can you tell me in your good question department where the gold fish came from?
Ans.—Gold fish are a specie of the carp family and their natural color is a dark gray. The Chinese discovered the art of bringing out their brilliant hues. However, if the gold fish were turned back to their original state they would gradually take on their former color of dark gray.

Ques.—I am curious to know what the steam engine was first used for. Can you tell me?
Ans.—The first steam engine to be put into practical use was installed in a coal mine in England and used to pump water.

Ques.—I would like to ask if Franklin D. Roosevelt's parents are living and if he has any brothers or sister?
Ans.—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt's father is dead. As his father was married twice he had a son by each marriage and the present governor was the son of the second marriage. Therefore he had one half-brother who is now dead.

Ques.—Would you care to answer in your question column if beer could be legalized without repealing the 18th amendment?
Ans.—As the 18th amendment forbids the manufacture, sale or transportation of "intoxicating liquors" beer could not be legalized without repeal of the amendment, unless it was declared that beer was not intoxicating.

Ques.—May I ask in your interesting question column the origin of the words "czar" and "kaiser"?
Ans.—"Czar" and "kaiser" are corruptions of the word "Caesar," which was a title assumed by the Roman emperors.

Ques.—Will you please answer if there is any difference between Socialism and Communism?
Ans.—The difference between Socialism and Communism is real and bitter. The difference primarily is in the matter of tactics. Communists make immediate demands to bring about a revolutionary moment in which a dictatorship in the Communist party can be set up ruthlessly to guide the country in the working out of Socialism. The doctrine of Socialism is to use the ballot to put business on a basis by which every person will receive in proportion to what he produces.

Ques.—What is a mean husband?
Ans.—There are many things that could produce a mean husband. However, we are told that the meanest husband is the man who switches from cigarettes to a pipe in order to stop his wife from smoking his cigarettes.

Ques.—Is a fifty cent piece, made in the year of 1875, worth more than its face value?
Ans.—We do not believe a coin of that date would sell at a premium as many are seen in circulation.

MILAN—The postoffice department has leased the building formerly occupied by the F. and M. Bank for five years. Larger quarters were needed, due to the establishment of the Federal Prison and also the increase in business since the opening of the new state hospital.—Leader.

Pit Pony Has Premonition

After 20 hours strenuous work rescuers found the body of Edward Hall, who, with two others, was entombed by a fall of stone in a coal mine at West Pelton, England. Animal lovers declare that a pit pony, Oscar, had a premonition of the disaster. Just before the crash, Oscar, standing waiting to pull away the loaded tubs, bolted and galloped the entire length of the drift, thereby saving his own life, although the warning was too late to help the men.

An Evening With Kipling

By Pye

Not long ago I spent a delightful evening with a book of "Kipling's poems for company. This rhymester has always fascinated me, but on the occasion in question I found some passages that left an impression deeper than is customary, so I'm setting down a few of these.

We're all more or less prone to pass judgment upon our fellowmen blindly. How little we really know of the forces that are at play in their lives!

"The load beneath the harrow knows exactly where each tooth-point goes. The butterfly upon the road preaches contentment to that load."

Kipling has a description in "The Masque of Plenty," which might well be applied to many an American farmer of today, cursed by an economic system that denies him the just fruits of his labor.

"His speech is of mortgaged bedding. On his knee he borrows yet, at his heart he has his daughter's wedding. In his eye there knowledge of debt. He eats and hath indignation, He tells and he may not stop; His life is a long-drawn question—Between a crop and a crop."

Much as we might like to think the contrary, I wonder if there isn't still some truth in the following grim observation:

"We are very slightly changed From the semi-apes who ranged India's prehistoric clay; Who so drew the longest bow Ran his brother down, you know, As we run men down today."

I think that I—and perhaps others, too—may get a practical lesson in diplomacy from this:

"There are fools who kiss and tell— Wisely hold all sorts of posts. Man may hold all sorts of posts. If he'll only hold his tongue."

Fourteen years ago this summer I saw men of every color and every race—white, black, brown—light and dark, together—so, for me, there is beauty and truth in that oft-repeated and much ridiculed verse that serves as both prelude and postlude to Kipling's "Ballad of East and West."

"Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet, Till Earth and Sky stand presently at God's great judgment-seat; But there is neither East nor West, Border nor Breed, nor Birth, When two strong men stand face to face, Tho' they come from the ends of the earth!"

To top off my evening with Kipling I read again, for the thousandth time, perhaps, the immortal "Mandalay." I've never seen an elephant except in a circus menagerie, and I've never been to India, but Kipling with his marvelous power of graphic description, had me right there with him as I read these words:

"Elephants a pilli' teak In the sludgy, squidy creek, Where the silence 'ung that 'eavy you was 'arf afraid to speak!"

How Much Time Have YOU?

"I haven't time." How many times has this phrase been used as an excuse? Everyone has time. If you really want to do a thing and are physically able to perform the duty, you can always find time. That is, you can find all the time that has not been pilfered by its deadly and ever-jerking enemy, procrastination. Edward Young has said:

"Procrastination is the thief of time. Year after year it steals till all are fled."

How many of your waking hours does this most contemptuous of all thieves steal from you? Do you beckon to him when he sneaks into the library or do you rather him with an icy stare and go about your business? If you haven't the "spunk" to ignore the "old fellow," June will find you in the dilemma in which "all are fled." You will then be obliged to admit that you did have time, but that you were an "easy mark" for the "thief of time," procrastination.

Avoid this embarrassment. Take inventory of your time, and use it wisely.

George (crying): "I've lost my dog. He was black and white."

Father: "Why don't you advertise it in The Chelsea Standard, that sometimes helps."

George: "No—it'll won't help, Father."

Father: "Why won't it help, sonny? George: Why, cause it won't. My dog can't read."

Elementary News

Kindergarten—

Had you heard? The elementary school won the first prize in the grand parade Friday. Everyone is tickled pink. The use of the money is not as yet determined. Did you know that there are to be two bands in the school? Oh, yes. The kindergartners are organizing a band called "The Ribbon Band." Wait till you hear it! Several new instruments have been purchased for it. A group of mothers are making the band suits. You'll hear more about it later.

First Grade—

These people have welcomed a new student into their group, namely, Betty Winchester. Last week they had several visitors and announce that they are always glad to see mothers.

Yes, these students are actually turning into pilgrims. Right now they are making pilgrim houses. We wonder, will they enjoy all the inconveniences?

Second Grade—

On Nov. 8th the second grade people held their election. Robert Strietor was elected chairman of the house-keeping committee, consisting of five for this month. They remain after school closes in the afternoon to "clean house."

At the close of the afternoon period a "weather report" is given. A chart is drawn on the board, the thermometer is read, the direction of wind is observed, and a picture of the sky is drawn.

Third Grade—

The children of this grade have made an attractive blackboard border of Pilgrims, turkeys, fruits and vegetables. Stories of the Pilgrims and the "First Thanksgiving" are being studied.

Mrs. M. Knickerbocker and Mrs. Whipple were visitors last week. Helen Grabowski is ill with a severe cold.

Fourth Grade—

Miss Yager is reading them a story of a wooden puppet. His name is Pinocchio, of whom they have several pictures. Later in the year they expect to write stories about these pictures.

Many of the third graders have been ill. It is hoped that they will all be in school soon.

Fifth Grade—

The fifth graders are decorating their room for Thanksgiving. In art this week they made a border of Pilgrims and expect to devote the next few days in studying the Pilgrims, their habits and struggle in America.

The following pupils have their names on the spelling Honor Roll this week: John Williamson, Gene Kwiat, Eunice Hurt, Mary Jane Bahmiller, Maynard Osterle, Russel Abdou and Robert Watt.

Sixth Grade—

If you see anyone searching for plants you will know they are sixth graders for they are collecting plants to decorate the room for the winter. They are considering shells in nature class and have learned the names of several of the more common sea shells.

The spelling Honor Roll for the past two weeks is as follows: Barbara Schroeder, John Fletcher, Jr., Winnie Palmer, Mary Jane Riker, Bernice Leach, Lucille Martin, Eva Abdou, Marian Downer and Maynard Leach.

Plans are now underway for the Christmas elementary operetta. Watch for further news concerning it.

The Charm and Value of Mother Goose

Ruth Sheehan

At some time you may be asked just what there is in the simple melodies of Mother Goose, which give them the place they hold in the home and the school. Is it the action, the rhythm, the mystery of the theme or the humor which appeals so strongly to the child mind of each generation? One must believe that it is all of these elements rather than a single one which confers the charm to children.

To try to explain just wherein lies the charm would be a difficult task, indeed. Even a child, if questioned, would be unable to explain why he loved them. No mother could determine the soothing quality of a Mother Goose lullaby as she sings to her baby. Neither could any primary teacher explain just why the repetition of a Mother Goose jingle will quiet a restless, inattentive group.

However, mother and teacher, both agree that the best of these verses have an even more striking value than that of diverting the child. The moral element so skillfully suggested in many of the melodies is absorbed by the child's receptive mind and tend to aid him in forming relative values as to right and wrong, bravery and cowardice, selfishness and generosity.

And from still another standpoint these verses are of value, the importance of which can never be over-estimated—that being the literary. These jingles have proven of great value in creating a taste in the child for the truly musical in poetry.

Then, too, they develop the imagination. Many of our greatest poets and authors attribute their early inspiration and love for literature to the childhood readings of nursery tales. We are all agreed that if presented to children at the time of their strongest appeal they will help them to step naturally into the wider acquaintance with good literature that is offered in our great libraries today. They will understand Shakespeare the better for having had early contact with Mother Goose. In fact, all of the fine poets will be more greatly appreciated with the early love of rhythm and charm having been established by a background of these nursery tales.

Admitting that Mother Goose holds a charm second to no other stories for early childhood, recognizing the large place which the rhymes hold in the development of the healthy moral granting the fact that they do, indeed, inspire in the child a love for good literature, we cannot hesitate to name it as important a classic as Shakespeare.

THE BLACK BOX OF SILENCE

By Francis Lynde

Illustrations By O. Irwin Myers

W.N.U. SERVICE Copyright by William Conrad Chandler

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Having demonstrated the power of an extraordinary silence, the "Black Box" which he has perfected for his own young invention, in the little town of Carthage, Ohio, to his chum, Wally Markham, that he fears the device, if exploited, might be hazardous to the public. The black box is stolen from a safe in Landis' laboratory.

CHAPTER II.—Landis tells Markham the only person, besides himself, knowing the combination of the safe, is Betty Lynde, with whom the inventor has dated. Betty stole the invention out of a woman's footprint, found beneath the window of the laboratory.

CHAPTER III.—Betty, daughter of a college professor, is well known to Markham. Both he and Landis believe her to be above suspicion, but to assure the cast to one of Betty's shoes. They are identical. Betty tells him Herbert Canby, a stranger-in-town, who is posing as a "promoter," had driven her home from the theater the previous night, and that he had stolen the black box. Markham does not tell Landis of his discovery. That the girl should have been seen at the safe is unthinkable, and the evidence of the plaster cast seems to prove the girl was present at the time of the robbery.

CHAPTER IV.—Markham, vaguely suspicious of Canby's honesty, searches his hotel room in his absence. He finds hidden in two loaded automatic revolvers and a complete set of burglar's tools. Canby returning brings the revolvers and burglar's kit to the hotel. Markham tells Landis of his discovery in his room. That night the safe in the bank of the small town of Portville was blown open. The explosion being unheard, satisfied that his "black box" is in the hands of a thief, the user he feared, Landis with Markham, drives at once to Portville.

CHAPTER V.—At Portville they find confirmation of their fears. Three men are seen to enter the safe house, claiming to be business men of Louisville, are the only possible suspects. Landis and Canby decide to follow them, although they get no new news. The three—St. Joseph, Markham and Canby—drive west, with Betty Lynde and her father as his passengers. Markham and Landis form a procession on the Pike's Peak highway.

CHAPTER VI.—While he and Landis are leaving, Markham's car is stolen and wrecked. He buys another, and they go on. On the road to the mine, a band of robbers get out of the woods, ahead of them. At a hotel in Copah they meet Betty. She explains at their presence in the West, and explains the reason for her father's journey. Markham overhears a conversation between Canby and this Louisville man which convinces him he is on the right track.

CHAPTER VII.—Markham and Landis follow the man who stole the black box. They find the commissary of the signaller mine has been held up by two men and two women. A man there was no sound of the explosion. At Brewster they learn of the arrival of the black box. Landis and Markham meet a distant relative, William Starbuck, mine owner. He gives them some evidence as to Canby's crookedness.

CHAPTER VIII.—At Brewster they meet Canby. Canby tells them he is in the West on business connected with his mine, the "old Quavapai." Betty Lynde goes with him as guests, the professor being invited to give an ontology. Landis and Markham are assigned to the street by Kate Wilder, but both of them decide to follow the man who stole the black box. They find the man who stole the black box, and they find the man who stole the black box.

There were only seven, and with miserly care he struck one and held the flame to the candle wick. With the candle held high he surveyed his surroundings. Two other passages came into the one in which he was standing. On every side there was ample evidence that the workings were very ancient, and that they had been long abandoned.

No longer obliged to grope in darkness, he plunged impetuously into one of the four passages and was again involved in a maze that seemed to have no end—and offered no outlet. Leg-weary finally, he was about to stop and rest when he heard sounds that he could compare to nothing but the sob of a human being in distress.

Unable to determine from which of the confusing passages the sounds were coming, he found it at last by the trail-and-error method. At the foot of the steep incline down which he slid, digging his heels in and clutching for hand-holds, the flickering light of the candle revealed the figure of a woman. She was sitting on the floor of the passage with her back to the wall, and she was crying. Quickly he recognized her and ran to kneel beside her. "Betty!" he gasped. "What under heaven are you doing here? Tell me, what's happened? How did you get into this chaotic place?"

She panted, and following her gesture, he saw a mine bucket standing at the end of the passage, with a rope attached which disappeared upward in a chimney-like shaft.

"That is the way I came," she said. "I was lowered in that bucket from somewhere up above. I'm glad I couldn't see what they were doing with me."

"You couldn't see? Were you blind, folded, too?"

"Yes, were you?"

"I was, indeed. Then, you're not afraid of the dark, are you?"

"No—not when I can reach out and touch somebody that I know."

"All right; I'll blow the candle out and save it. It's the only one there is." And with the return of the pitchy darkness, "Now, tell me all about it."

"You'll hardly believe me when I do, Owen. You knew that Wally and I had dinner with the Smiths at Hillcrest, didn't you?"

"Yes; Wally got me on the phone at the hotel and told me."

"Well, we left about nine o'clock or a little before, and were stopped on the way by two men who pulled Wally out of the car and tried to kidnap or murder him. I don't know which. Mr. Smith came up just in time. Then we drove on and when we reached the Stillings' the house was all dark and I remembered that Mrs. Stillings had told me that she planned to get from the Smiths that she and Mr. Stillings might not be at home when I came back, and that if they weren't, the servants had gone to bed. I'd find a latch key under the mat."

"You didn't find the key?"

"I didn't look for it. The night was so still and pleasant that I sat in one of the porch chairs to enjoy it. Wally's car hadn't been out of sight more than five minutes when another car drove up. The man who got out of it had on a white uniform and said he was one of the nurses at the railroad hospital, and that daddy had just been brought in from the fossil bed badly injured. I didn't stop to think, just flew down the walk and jumped into the car. The man got in with me."

"In just a few minutes the man clapped a bandage over my eyes and told me to keep still. Of course I knew then the story about daddy was just a made-up lie to get me away from the house and into the car. I tried to get the door open so I could jump out. It didn't do any good, and when it was over he had me tied and blindfolded and was threatening me with a pistol."

"And after that?"

"I don't think we'd been going more than fifteen minutes before the car stopped, and I was made to get out and walk. In a little while I could tell we were somewhere underground. When they finally let me stop, they put me into that wooden bucket thing, untied my hands so I could hold it on, and lowered me down here. What does it all mean, Owen?"

"It seems to mean that somebody, or maybe a bunch of somebodies, wanted to get you and Wally and me out of the way for some reason."

"Of course. But why?"

"You know how we, Wally and I, drove through from Carthage. There were some startling things happened on the way. We seemed to be chased behind a gang of safe blowers. Since we were right behind them all the time, Wally and I began to make inquiries along the road. We soon learned that there were three men driving a few hours ahead of us, business men from Louisville, they called themselves; and from some suspicious circumstances we began to wonder if they might not be the bank wreckers."

"At a little town in Kansas Wally's car was stolen and run out in the country and smashed. We tried went by train as far as Colby, where Wally bought another car. Nothing more happened until we were this side of Denver, when he found that they were just behind the three men. They were driving a Fleetwing car. Just before we reached Copah we passed a stopped car on the mountain road; and as we were running down the next loop below, a big rock came tumbling down and barely missed us."

"Mercy—how horrible!" she shuddered. "Did anything else happen?"

"Yes, we went on from Copah that night, and again the Fleetwing was ahead of us all the way across the Red desert. At a little village called Atropia, we had a flat tire; and after we had changed to the spare, we found we were out of gas. We were delayed for some time, and when we finally went on up the mountain we ran into another of the mysterious robberies. The commissary at a mine had been looted and set on fire, and two men who were guarding the safe and the payroll money were murdered. Of course, there was no evidence that the three men in the Fleetwing had done it; but we knew that their car had passed through Atropia just before we got there."

He felt her shudder as she said, "It makes cold chills run up and down my back! Is there any more of it?"

"A little more. We came on, and as we were driving down the mountain road above Lake Popax, we saw something on fire in a deep gulch, and wondered what it could be. The next day we made inquiries in Brewster to find out if the Fleetwing had come in the night before. So far as we could learn, it hadn't."

"We spent that evening with Mr. Starbuck, and on our way back to the hotel we were set upon by three men. I was sandbagged and knocked out, but Wally held them off and helped me to the hotel. The next day we thought we'd see if we couldn't find out what had become of the missing Fleetwing.

and drove up to the place where we had seen the fire in the gulch. We left our car and climbed down to see what had burned. It was a big car, so badly wrecked that we could hardly tell what it was; but I guess it was the Fleetwing."

"Another mystery! Is that all?"

"Not quite. While we were looking at the wreck somebody began shooting at us from the road on the other side of the gulch. We ducked and climbed up through the woods to where the shots had come from. There were two men, and the shooter said they had been told there were bears in the mountains, and he'd taken us for one. There was nothing to be done about it, so we let them go."

"Can you put it all together and make the pieces fit?" she asked.

"After a fashion. Those three men we followed all the way from Indiana are the bank robbers, and they think we've got something on them. That accounts for what's been happening to Wally and me; but it leaves you out."

"Maybe," she said; but she added nothing to that single word.

"But see here, Owen went on, "we're wasting time sitting here talking about 'has-been.' This kidnaping can mean only one thing—that the scoundrels are going to pull off another of their robbing stunts and want to make sure of having a clear field. We must get out of this and block their game, whatever it may be."

"Do you know where this dungeon place is, or what it is?" she asked.

"It's an abandoned mine, abandoned a long time ago. At that, as to where it belongs on the map, I don't know. You won't be afraid to stay alone for a few minutes, will you? I'm going to climb up and see where this bucket leads to. Just stay where you are until you hear me hit the bucket and drop it. Then climb in and shake the rope when you are ready for me to haul you up. Will you do that?"

"Yes," she agreed; and with that he laid hold of the rope and began to climb up.

When he had wriggled out at the top of the shaft and found, by groping around, that it was capped with a wooden windlass, he was willing to

Billings will think I was invited to stay overnight with the Smiths; and the people at the hotel won't miss you, will they?"

"No, I suppose not."

As he spoke, the remaining bit of candle wick fell over, to burn flickeringly for a few seconds before it went out.

After a moment in the Stygian darkness that followed the extinguishing of the candle, Betty said wearily, "I'm awfully tired; aren't you, Owen?"

rest for a few seconds and catch his breath before giving Betty the agreed-upon signal.

At once it was answered and he began to wind. In a few minutes he had drawn the bucket and its precious freight out upon the windlass platform.

When the candle was relighted it became apparent that they had ascended to what seemed to be nothing more than an upper layer of the rabbit warren of bewildering passages and drifts.

"Haven't you any idea where we are?" Betty asked.

"Wait a bit," said Landis; and then, "I've got it! Haven't Bert Canby told you about his mine—the Quavapai?"

"Yes."

"Well, there are two Quavapis; the new one that is being worked now, and a much older one," and he repeated for her Starbuck's account of the ancient workings. "That is about where we are," he concluded; "buried somewhere in those old workings. We'll keep on going while the candle lasts. There must be some connection between these old workings and the new. You're not too tired to tramp, are you?"

"I'm not tired at all, now. And we must get out if we can. We haven't been kidnaped and shut up in here for nothing."

"That was the beginning of a long period of fruitless wanderings in a maze that seemed endless.

It was not until their candle had dwindled to a half-inch that the really desperate character of their situation glimpsed Landis. With the light gone they would be utterly helpless.

"We are nearly at the end of things," Betty, he said soberly. "You see how much there is left of the candle. After it is gone we'll be just buried alive."

"I know; but I'm not afraid. Owen, it will be starvation, won't it? I don't want to die, but I'm not afraid. Let's sit here on this pile of rock and face it the best we can."

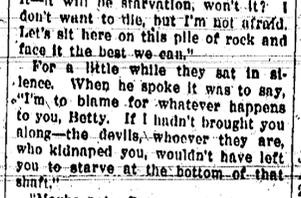

For a little while they sat in silence. When he spoke it was to say, "I'm to blame for whatever happens to you, Betty. If I hadn't brought you along—the devils, whoever they are, who kidnaped you, wouldn't they have let you starve at the bottom of that shaft?"

"Maybe not. But you mustn't think of that now. You did what you thought was best; we both did. Do you think they've got Wally, too?"

"I'm afraid they have."

Mr. Burg started to work at the cigar trade during his early life. While a resident of Dover, their first daughter, Mrs. John Lyons, was born to them. Shortly after this they moved to Valley City, Ohio, where they resided for 11 years. While there four children were born to them, Mrs. Harry Lyons and J. Vincent of this place, Mrs. Frank Etienne of Jackson and Mary, who died in infancy.
In 1894 they moved to Chelsea, where Mr. Burg continued his trade as cigar maker. In this city three more children were born, Mrs. Stanley Nitoski and Louis A. of Detroit and Wilamina, who resides at home.
In 1915 he retired from business and at present is in the employ of his son who is a pharmacist in Chelsea. They are the parents of seven children, 25 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

When Snuff Was Taken to "Refresh the Brain"

It is difficult at times to distinguish a snuffbox from the watch, hanger and tobacco boxes in use at the same period. Mildred's box of snuff was small, while a gentleman's often seemed excessively large.
In the eighteenth century a lady carried her snuffbox in her reticule and used it on all occasions, as is evident from Addison's protest in the London Spectator that a lady of fashion too often pulls out her box "full of good-braille, in the middle of the sermon; and to show she has the audacity of a well-bred woman, she offers it to the men as well as the women who sit near her," says the Newark Museum Bulletin.
Snuff taking, or snuffing, became the fashion in England during the reign of Queen Anne (1702-1714). Prior to that tobacco had been used for smoking and medicinal purposes. But whereas the English enjoyed smoking, the Scotch and Irish despised snuff.
Not until the English court began using the French did snuff reach the height of its popularity. "The sparkling wit that enlivened the conversation of the period was attributed to snuff, for it mightily refreshes the brain," Heating quillities were believed to be another point in its favor. During the great plague of 1665 in London the chewing and inhaling of tobacco was considered an antidote, men like Samuel Pepys taking the "mouthsome habit" to guard against the plague.

Armistice Activities Were Great Success

with Alva Faber and his horse brought up the rear of the parade.
Despite the freak of Mr. Weatherman in giving such a cold, wintry day for this fine parade, a great many people turned out to watch the parade, all of which shows.
We don't mind the wind and weather when the Legion gets together.
At three o'clock, the Chelsea High School played football with Manchester High. This proved to be a very interesting game as both teams were equally matched. The score at the end of the game was 0 to 0.
After a lapse of about two hours, just time enough for people to get ready, the usual Armistice dinner was given at the High School Gymnasium with the attendance of 250. On entering the gymnasium one's imagination did not have to soar a great way to visualize themselves on a ship. Nothing was left out in the line of decorations which included the bays and portholes. The tables were also attractively decorated. The wives of many of the legionnaires acted as waitresses, serving the following menu:
Roast Rib of Beef
Baked Salmon Loaf
Cabbage Slaw
Fresh Peas
Parker House Rolls
Coffee
Home Made Apple Pie with Cheese
During the dinner the diners were favored with several piano solos by Mrs. George Walworth. The banquet was completed about 8:30, at which time the dance immediately started. Soon the hall was well filled and all were dancing to the strains of "Cates" American Legion orchestra. The entire day was considered a success.

Southerners Who Made Homes in South America

Most of the southern sympathizers who moved to South America after the Civil War settled in a few colonies, chief of which were Para, Espirito Santo and Sao Paulo. One of these in the province of Para was situated at the mouth of the Tapajoz river. Many of these settlers eventually returned to the United States. There were a few, however, who remained and who were apparently successful. A larger and more prosperous colony of southern exiles was situated 300 miles north of Rio de Janeiro in the province of Espirito Santo. However, the largest number of Confederate settlements were made in Sao Paulo and it is believed that ultimately these settlements were the most prosperous. The colony at Santa Barbara in Sao Paulo was so successful that even in 1927 and probably today there were several traces of its existence. It was known as the Villa Americana, but nearly all persons of North American birth or lineage have moved to cities or purchased plantations in the rural districts.

Nature Responsible for Bestowal of Talents

Every anatomy is defective somewhere. Reasoning by analogy, can we expect perfect intelligence in ourselves or in others? Scorn for the moron seems to imply that we think that the moron, by taking thought, might cease to be one. Let our own deficiencies make us charitable. Do we comprehend the Einstein theory? Do we know what the financial columns on the market and business pages mean to a degree that we can make money by them as some do; could we invent anything mechanical? What is the capacity of our mind?
Providence bestows upon us our talents as it bestows upon us our arms, legs and internal organs to be used as we best know how. If we have "that kind of a brain" among our other "internal organs" that is the kind of brain we have. What else do we have to be harsh about the wits of others?—H. H. Collier in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The First Parasol

The Biblical expression, "The shelter which defends from the sun," would almost suffice to demonstrate the oriental origin of the sunshade. But in China, where it is said the parasol was used 2,000 years B. C., there is a legend that fixes the invention with the wife of the carpenter, Loupan.
"Sir," said this incomparable spouse to her husband, "you make with extreme cleverness houses for men, but it is impossible to make them move, whilst the object which I am framing for their private use can be carried to any distance, beyond even 1,000 leagues."
And Loupan, stupefied by his wife's genius, then saw the unfolding of the first parasol.
