Waterloo Church To Observe Anniversary

On July 9th the St. Jacob's Evangelical Lutheran congregation of Waterloo township, located about 2 1/2 miles northwest of Waterloo, will celebrate its 80th church dedication anniversary.

The congregation wishes to make this a special day in view of the centennial of the Lutheran church in the state of Michigan. St. Jacob's is one of the first congregations organized by Rev. Friedrich Schmidt, pioneer missionary in this state. Its beginning dates back to 1841. The present church building was erected in 1859 and is the oldest church in the Joint Synod of Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio and other states, as far as the pastor is able to ascertain; perhaps even of the entire Lutheran body. It would be an interesting thing to hear of older churches.

In 1880 the fathers added a tower with steeple, which, however, was recently substituted with a cross, signifying that "we preach Christ and Him crucified." The art windows were extensively repainted, the steel ceiling patched, as also other minor things renewed. The church property, including church, parsonage and school building is well kept up, and should make its members feel proud of it, and inspire them for the future, that they might worship the gracious Lord in this their church, for many years to come.

The pastor, Rev. R. Koch, has arranged for both morning and afternoon services on the day of the anniversary.

The German services will be held in the morning at 10:00 sharp. Rev. J. Gauss, president of the Michigan District of the Joint Synod, will deliver the festival sermon. In the afternoon at 3:00 o'clock Rev. O. Peters of Wayne will preach. Immediately after this service Rev. Wm. H. Hager, formerly pastor of the Lutheran church at Selo, near Ann Arbor, which is the cradle of the Lutheran church in Michigan, now general superintendent of the Polish mission in Poland, and which is being supported exclusively by Joint Synod, will give an address in the interest of that mission.

There will be no dinner served. The members, however, have arranged to take visitors with them in their homes. Pastor R. Koch, who has been with the congregation since 1920, cordially invites all friends of the church to worship with them. Self-evidently all the members will be there to worship the Lord who has been so gracious toward them these 80 years in their house of God.

"How amiable are Thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts! Blessed they that dwell in Thy house; they will be still praising Thee. Selah."

Michigan Legislator Writes for Standard

Beginning this week The Standard will publish a series of articles written by State Representative Vernon J. Brown of Mason, in which Mr. Brown sets forth in an impartial manner to give informative facts in regard to the accomplishments and failures of the last session of the state legislature, recently adjourned.

Mr. Brown, who is a Republican, wrote a series of articles last year in which he criticized the Republican administration for their extravagance and recommended many economies which, to some extent, were put into effect. These articles gained wide circulation through the weekly and daily press of Michigan and it is claimed they contributed in no small extent to the defeat of the Republican administration in last fall's election.

However, Mr. Brown stands for good government and does not hesitate to tell the facts of the case regardless of his party affiliations. The series of articles which start in this issue are written to inform the public of Michigan's so-called "New Deal" as he sees it, and he will not hesitate in telling many facts which every voter in the state should know.

Grahams Celebrate Golden Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. Jasper W. Graham were honored Thursday afternoon when about 20 members of the Women's Relief Corps, also several neighbors and friends, gathered at their home on Wilkinson St. to assist in the celebration of their 50th wedding anniversary.

A pleasant social time was enjoyed and the guests presented Mr. and Mrs. Graham with a beautiful basket of flowers. Each also received a corsage from Mrs. Coral Combs. Tea and cake were served.

Salem Anniversary Attracts Hundreds of Members-Friends

By Rev. Henry W. Lenz

All roads led to Salem Methodist Episcopal church last Sunday, July 2. Hundreds of people, former members and ministers came from far and near to take part in one way or another in the celebration of Salem's 80th Anniversary. More than 120 cars were needed to bring them, and they came over roads that were dusty, since the Lord had washed this part of the world in the early morning hours. Showers of blessings for the parched land God freely gave, and showers of blessings descended upon all that attended the services of the day. By the time the church bell was sounding forth its invitation for the 10:15 a. m. service the weather cleared up some. "Old Glory," the most beautiful flag in the world, waved in the balmy breeze, two flags at the two main entrances of the church.

Within the pulpit platform had been transformed into a bit of lovely garden, grass sprinkled with daisies, white and yellow, for which a number of ferns formed a background. To the left stood our country's flag, to the right the Church flag. One beautiful large basket of lilies, roses, delphiniums, and baby's breath, most artistically arranged, flanked the left of the platform. This was a generous gift by Mr. Ravitor, the Wayside Gardens florist. This token of esteem was appreciated by everybody, and much admired.

It fell to the lot of the pastor to preach the "Anniversary" sermon. Rev. P. Wuerfel, a former pastor, participated in the service. The musical selections were given by Miss Irene Wahl, a piano solo, and a vocal solo by Walter Kalmbach and Mrs. Oscar Kalmbach.

Even before the appointed time the call for dinner came and from about 11:45 a. m. to 2:15 p. m. more than 300 guests were served. At about 2:30 the afternoon service was opened by a march played by Mrs. Philip Brosamle's Chelsea Orchestra which rendered two other selections during the meeting.

Dr. M. K. Thomson, pastor of the Congregational church of Chelsea, led in prayer after the singing of "America" by the audience, who also gave a splendid address of good will, as all the visiting ministers did. Words of felicitation were spoken by Rev. Highley of the Waterloo U. B. church; Rev. Bau, a former pastor, residing at Ann Arbor; Rev. Marsh of the Grass Lake M. E. church; Rev. Matthews, pastor of the Methodist church here; Rev. Wuerfel, also a former pastor, of Ann Arbor, and Rev. Scott of the Ninth Methodist church. The musical program comprised selections by the orchestra, two xylophone solos and three vocal solos by Miss Katherine Fletcher, accompanied by Mrs. R. Plankoff, and a piano duet by Irene and Betty Winter. The services of the day, closed with a prayer by the pastor, the benediction, and the beautiful song splendidly rendered by Miss Fletcher.

Homeward bound to the surrounding towns—to Toledo, Ohio, Monroe, Jackson, Ann Arbor, our friends sped away with the assurance that Christian fellowship and association have their own peculiar reward. The Lord willing, there will be a homecoming in 1934 to which we invite all those (and others) who were present at this year's celebration.

We also wish to thank all who helped to make the day such a success, the visiting ministers, the musicians, the business men who by furnishing materials for decorations, the editor of The Standard for the publicity given previous to the celebration, and last but not least—the ladies of the Salem Aid Society.

Chelsea's Flag Pole Must Be Removed

Chelsea's flag pole, which has towered majestically above the Main and Middle St. corner for more than fifteen years, must come down!

This is the edict of the State Highway Department, the order coming as a result of their opinion that the flag pole is a traffic hazard and should be removed from the thoroughfare. Main street is a state highway, which gives the highway department authority for issuing this order.

Although the order was not issued from the department as an absolute command, it stated that the village would be responsible in case of any accidents caused as a result of the flag pole obstruction.

The flag pole was erected in 1917, according to Geo. W. Bockwith, who had charge of the erection. It is 80 feet in height.

Village authorities have not decided where to place the flag pole when it is moved, but it will be placed in some other prominent place where it will continue to serve the purpose for which it is intended.

Federal Aid May Be Received for Chelsea

Prof. N. F. Menafes, of the Engineering Department of the University of Michigan, was present at the regular meeting of the Chelsea common council Monday evening and explained the national recovery program, expressing the belief that Chelsea can receive federal aid in the street surfacing work which they plan to undertake in the near future.

According to Prof. Menafes, the federal government plans to pay 30 per cent of the cost of such construction, the village to pay the remaining 70 per cent. This would enable the village to hard surface almost one-third more streets than had been originally planned.

Additional bids on the surfacing work were presented to the council Monday evening, one of which was considerably lower than the prices which had previously been received. No decision has been made in the matter of local street work pending the outcome of their effort in securing federal aid, and members of the council desire to await improvement in the health of President J. E. McKune, who is ill. It has been definitely decided, however, that surfacing will not be undertaken on streets that are not curbed.

Waterloo Band Will Present Concert Here

The first band concert of the season for the pleasure of residents of this vicinity will be presented on the streets of Chelsea next Wednesday evening, July 12.

This concert will be presented by Waterloo's 25-piece band under the direction of E. J. Natten of Chelsea. Several of the players are Chelsea musicians.

Announcement has not been made of the program to be played, but it will consist of a number of latest popular band music hits. The concert will start promptly at 8 o'clock.

This band has presented concerts in Chelsea at various times and people of the community welcome their appearance here again. The concert is being sponsored by Chelsea business men.

Legislator Looks At Michigan's New Deal

Publisher To Review Accomplishments of Legislature; Will Compare Actual State Costs With Campaign Promises.

By Vernon J. Brown

Six months of the new deal administration has passed into history and Michigan citizens in considerable number are making inquiry concerning what has actually been accomplished and what may be expected of the future. It is now about 15 months since this writer began a series of articles which guided rather wide-circulation among the taxpayers of Michigan in which an attempt was made to evaluate the state government of that day and to point out to the taxpayers of Michigan where their tax dollars were being spent and for what purpose. Incidentally an attempt was made at that time to discover in behalf of the people, from whom the taxes were being collected, just who was benefitting, whether in fact the tax money was being used for the people of the state or just those whose names appeared on the payrolls. Some rather disconcerting discoveries were then made.

During recent weeks many appeals have come to this writer asking him to review the session of the legislature just closed and to point out some of the influences which have worked against the adoption of the reforms promised last fall when the campaign was on and again this spring when the people expressed their choice at the polls.

Because of this demand and because of the widespread interest of the reading public of Michigan in the truth regarding the affairs of their state government I have decided to submit a second series of articles dealing with current doings at Lansing and in state political circles. In doing so a sincere desire is held that this series, like the foregoing, shall be free from partisan bias and that the truth only shall be related. Again I shall present no opinions other than is necessary for reader interest. Quite in keeping with the preceding series, what is written here will be based upon the record and statements of fact based upon records open to all at Lansing. Some interesting comparisons will be possible as between the payrolls of 1932, notoriously extravagant, and those of 1933 under the economy rules laid down by the campaigners at Michigan's two most recent elections.

Outlines Problems
On January 5 when Governor William A. Comstock appeared before the joint convention of the house and senate to deliver his inaugural address, he stressed few points, promising that later as he became more familiar with state problems and better acquainted with his legislature he would further reveal his administration program. On January 5 he stated it as his judgment that the most important measures for early consideration included direct welfare relief and a provision for public works to give employment to heads of families out of work, old age pensions, state aid for primary schools, primary election reforms, revision of workmen's compensation laws to include occupational diseases, complete revision of the tax system, and, last but by no means least, he emphasized economy in every branch of state government.

A little less than a month later he transmitted to the house and senate a message in which he endorsed the cancellation of taxes of 1927 and prior years and an extension of time to delinquent taxpayers of 1928 and subsequent years which amounted to a virtual cancellation of delinquent taxes for current support of municipalities and schools as well as a repudiation of the debt represented by the so-called calamity bonds sold by municipalities on security represented by the delinquent tax data then suggested to be cancelled. The governor further in his message of Feb. 2, again pointed out the necessity of revision of the tax laws.

Gives Third Message
On March 8, Governor Comstock requested the joint convention of the two branches of the legislature in order that he might again appear in person and deliver a third message. On this occasion he asked that the malt tax law be amended to permit the release of about $250,000 to the counties to be applied against a total debt then amounting to nearly $2,000,000. He again urged the revision of the tax laws and the submission of an amendment to the state constitution to permit a lower than the average rate of taxation for personal property and intangibles and the adoption of a graduated income tax measure. He also at that time urged as his opinion that a constitutional convention should be called for a complete revision of the state constitution.

In keeping with the foregoing administration program, from time to time numerous bills were introduced and promoted by administration leaders designed to bring about the accomplishment of the reforms sought and advocated.

So far as the records of the house and senate are concerned the foregoing constitutes the administration program to date.

Need Big Stick

Frequently governors have improved their respective political positions by jockeying the legislature into unfavorable light in the public mind. The public appears to like that sort of thing. Mr. Average Citizen harkens back to the days of "Teddy" Roosevelt and his "big stick" and cheers lustily whenever the chief executive, by force of character, a strong personality, or by sheer ability, forces his house and senate into a position where the members respond to the crack of the whip.

Students of politics and political maneuvers are a unit in declaring that in every such situation an able governor is required—a governor able to think ahead of the legislators as well as one who has a carefully worked out program of genuine merit.

Never since the days of Stevens T. Mason has the administration been confronted with more perplexing problems than those faced by Governor William A. Comstock and the members of the 1933 legislature.

When the legislature convened in January there were many problems to be solved. Those problems for the most part falling naturally under four general headings: Indigency and welfare matters growing out of an extended period of unemployment were paramount. Intricately interwoven with these problems were the questions of finance and taxation, including the perplexing matter of tax delinquency and what to do with lands held under tax liens and about to be confiscated for taxes past due and unpaid. Banking and related fiscal problems involving the entire credit structure of the state, governmental and private, constituted the third great field of legislative concern. Support of the public school system of the state following the adoption of the 15-mill tax limitation amendment to the state constitution last November, was the fourth.

Beer, horse and dog racing, the small loan law, garnishment exemptions, clash of interests between the railroads and the highway trucking interests, notary public commission rates and a hundred and one smaller measures were incidental to the real problems of 1933, but for some reason successfully held the center of interest throughout. The people are out with a big question mark to learn the reason why the big issues were ignored and flimsy, silly and inconsequential questions held sway.

Five Main Points

Every successful legislative session is predicated upon a five-point suspension, to borrow a motor car term. Floating power may be all right in some cars but in the legislative chariot there must be a rigidity of purpose and a predetermined and agreed-upon course of procedure.

No matter how good a bill may be, unless it passes both the senate and the house of representatives by a majority vote and is then approved by the governor, all time given its consideration has been lost.

The five points referred to are:

1. The personnel of the two houses and the executive office itself.
2. Organization—members must be assigned to committees where each can work to best advantage.
3. An efficient technical staff accurately keep the records and the journals so that what is done will stand the test of the courts.
4. Rules of procedure must be carefully followed in order that the mass of legislation may move steadily forward.
5. A carefully worked-out program must be agreed to by leaders of both houses in joint conference with the governor.

Did the 1933 legislature meet these requirements?
A large majority of the members of both houses were untried and untrained legislators. Many had no proper conception of the problems before them and those who were experienced found themselves members of a minority party and at the tail end of committees. Chairmanships of practically every important committee on both sides of the capitol were assigned to novitiates who did their best but whose best was not good enough. The speaker of the house and the president of the senate made up their committees as best they could but that best was little less than drawing names out of a bag.

In marked contrast with the success of President Franklin D. Roosevelt with his congress is seen the failure of Governor Comstock. Roosevelt had a program which he promoted from the drop of the hat. He gave the congress so much important matter that it had no time to think up deviltry and befog the session with pet measures and political gestures. Comstock never produced a program. The only discipline he maintained over his party members was the threat of loss of patronage for those who kicked over the traces. The inevitable result was a stream jammed with knurly logs and driftwood while the straight timber was lost in the eddies. When the drive was over there was little worthwhile lumber to be saved. Comstock was a woodman in his early days but evidently he never learned the first rule of the drive—"keep the stream open and the logs rolling and there will be no jams at the cross currents."

The senate made the mistake of discharging men and women with years of experience in handling the technical side of the work. Their places were taken by campaign workers who know little and cared less for the work of the session. With the aid of a handful of sound thinking democrats the republican members of the house succeeded in saving the clerk and his staff, hence the amount and character of the work done on that side shines forth in contrast to that of the senate. Likewise the house proceeded with a degree of regard for the rules while the senate blundered along as best it could.

Patronage Heads List

But what of the program? In contrast with the seriousness of the situation, there was none. Such as there was had not been submitted by the governor even to the members of his own party. From the very outset patronage took precedence over the public good. Petty party quarrels marred the discussion of every important measure to the point that even a majority of the democrats of the house are found on the record in the closing hours of the session as forced to vote for a sales tax measure which the governor had previously declared he would veto if passed.

One week of honest effort in laying out a program and in laying it carefully before his leaders would have saved Governor Comstock a great deal of worry and would have assured Michigan of a much better set of enactments.

It will be the purpose of the next article to take up the course of each of the more important measures suggested to trace their course through legislative channels, to point out the interests which caused their defeat where defeat was accomplished, and to set forth as near as may be the present status of each of the several proposals. Later along in the series, current payrolls will be employed to show the extent to which the "new deal" economy has been carried.

Michigan Department of State

WEEKLY NEWS BULLETIN

Frank D. Fitzgerald
Secretary of State

Lansing, Mich.—The half-price sale of 1933 license plates will start August 1, it was announced by Secretary of State Frank D. Fitzgerald following the governor's decision to veto the Raymond bill which provided for four different license plate prices, according to time of purchase.

Defects in the bill in not properly specifying the times when plates should be sold at half and at quarter prices were one of the reasons given for the veto. The half-price sale will start August 1 under the provisions of the Orr bill which allowed 1932 plates to be used until that date when accompanied by a windshield permit showing that one-half of the 1933 weight tax had been paid.

One radical change in the collection of the malt tax was made by the 1933 legislature. The 1931 law provided that each retail dealer in malt products should pay a $25 license fee. The new law orders payment of a $5 license fee for each place of business which sells malt products at retail.

Possibility that voters in 1934 may pass upon a bill seeking repeal of the private shooting preserve act, is seen in the request to the Department of State for information regarding initiatory legislation. The request was received immediately after the governor announced his intention of vetoing the measure which would repeal the private shooting preserve act. In order to place such a question on the ballot, petitions embodying the proposal and bearing 129,000 signatures, must be filed with the department at least 10 days before either a regular or special session of the legislature.

Employees of the senate and house of representatives were informed last week that attempts are being made to bring all legislators back to Lansing for the final session July 17. The attempt is being made by backers of the bill reducing small loan interest rates from three and three-quarters to one and one-half per cent, and the bill setting up a separate board of osteopathy examiners. Both measures were vetoed and a movement is under way to override the governor's veto. The governor approved the bill allowing betting on horse races and vetoed the bill providing for a chain store tax.

Meat That Is "Kosher"

Kosher meat is the meat of animals that have been killed according to the methods prescribed by Jewish laws, and orthodox Jews will eat no other. In some places the animals are killed by the rabbi, in others by a church officer known as the schechter. Schechita is a method of killing according to the so-called Mosaic law. The animal is hung up by the hind feet, and the throat is stuck with a knife. If the knife strikes a bone the veins are removed when the meat is quartered. The meat is ceremonially clean and is marked by a stamp and seal.

Banking Institute Speaker Says That Bank Failures Followed Business Failures

CHICAGO, Ill.—Many appear to think that failures occur only to banks, but the complete story of business shows that failures of American banks have followed the failure of business enterprises, and have not been a cause of those failures. Dr. Harold Stonier, National Educational Director of the American Bankers Association, declared in a recent address here before the American Institute of Banking.

"It is true that we have had more failures in our banks than in the banks of a number of other countries," he said. "It is also true that we have had more failures in drug stores, grocery stores, railroads, and in every other type of business enterprise. At the same time, it must be said that we still have left after all our failures, more drug stores, more grocery stores, more railroads, and more banks than any other country."

People do not realize, he said, that we have in excess of 103 banks which have been in existence over a century and we have more than 2,000 banks which have been in existence over 50 years.

"In other words, we have more banks over 100 years of age than any other country—we have more banks over 50 years of age than any country in the world," he declared. "The American banking system has not fallen down—it is not in danger of decay. Such failures as it has experienced are due to the price we pay for too rapid development of business enterprises, but that is the American spirit."

U. S. GOVERNMENT GREATEST BANKER

Runs Fifty-two Financing Institutions With Investment of Two Billion Dollars—Thirty-nine Agricultural

AMERICA'S biggest banker today is the Federal Government, which is now operating fifty-two financing institutions, says Professor John Hanna of Columbia University in the American Bankers Association Journal.

"Forty of these are owned entirely by the Government," he says. "In twelve more the Government has already a two-thirds interest. Thirty-seven are intended to be permanent. Twenty-five of the permanent ones and fourteen of the temporary ones are agricultural."

"The capital stock held by the United States in these banks has a par value of $1,380,000,000. The Government's total investment is nearly $2,000,000,000. Resources of these institutions exceed $3,000,000,000. In addition the Government has detailed supervision over fifty-one mortgage banks, operating under Federal charter."

"The Government also supervises 4,600 local agricultural loan associations with Federal charters. All this takes no account of the relations of the Government to the twelve Federal Reserve banks, nor of the authority recently given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to buy preferred stock in national and state commercial banks."

The President has ordered the consolidation of the agricultural credit agencies into the new Farm Credit Administration, says Professor Hanna. He expresses the opinion that before the consolidation of the agricultural financing agencies too much machinery had been created to administer the financing institutions, which the Government either owns or supervises.

"Existing institutions represent a considerable differentiation of function and any consolidations should be preceded by a careful survey of the actual activities of the various institutions," he continues. "The only consolidation the Administration has announced is that of the agricultural credit agencies in the Farm Credit Administration. As a permanent solution this arrangement is too closely bound up with politics."

"A better scheme would be to create a finance corporation under Federal charter to take over either the agricultural finance activities of the Government or all its lending agencies. "The Government's financing and banking activities should be kept severely apart from subsidy and other schemes for raising the prices of farm products. One is business, the other is major political policy. The advantages of the corporation over bureau control for the business functions are real and significant."

Judgment in Debate

It is customary for the judges to base their decision on the merits of a debate rather than on the merits of the question. Each judge should sit at some distance from the others and at the conclusion of the debate, without consultation, write on a card the word "Affirmative" or "Negative," seal it in an envelope and give it to the presiding officer, who opens it and announces the result. Judges are not required to decide which side is right, but rather which team has presented the truth on its side most effectively and persuasively.

Concerning Columbus

Concerning Columbus, says the Brooklyn Eagle, there are books without number, but they reveal little of the man or of his early life, though to all one characteristic stands clearly defined—the amazing fixity of purpose which bore up against the delays and disappointments of those long years of waiting, while he haunted the courts of Portugal and authority for what must have seemed a very dubious enterprise.

MUSINGS

beside my writing desk,
think, to muse and ponder;
either the thoughts I'm jotting down be worth while—I wonder?

we a motto on the wall,
blessed with words divine;
justified by Faith, it reads
He and He is mine.

pure of a country road,
limbhouse, lofty trees;
a pasture land and cattle herd, chain my heart to these.

pencilled photograph in frame
Jesus as a boy;
coursing prophecy and law words without alloy.

other, wife and cherished friends,
we loved down thru the years;
red with them many happy days,
with them also, tears.

in old time pictures, relics, books,
other days and times;
we sensed a strong emotion which res home almost a Shrine.

et times our home beyond the skies,
in Beulah Heights we see;
a heart strings tugging us so strong,
are longing there to be.

in this old house our Pioneer home,
lived with constant care;
a mansion is completed,
some land over there.

Putting Deserts to Work

Utilization is said to have originated in the semi-arid lands of the West, but only after the lapse of old agriculture leave such places reach its highest development in temperate regions, so it follows that modern irrigation and dry farming constitute, in a measure, a return to agricultural ways practiced centuries ago. Attention is again paid to the use of little water supply, where the improved methods derived from a modern science, much of the food of future generations is likely to be produced.

Improving Church Buildings

Modern churches are so built that a man will have some place to check out and but they'll be a lot more

Any Cut In Wheat Will Be Voluntary

Michigan farmers who do not have complete faith in the benefits to be derived from the wheat acreage reduction plan announced by Henry A. Wallace, secretary of agriculture, are asked to remember that the plan is entirely voluntary and that each man is free to decide how much wheat he shall plant, according to R. J. Baldwin, director of extension work, Michigan State College.

Any farmer who believes that his individual efforts have a more beneficial effect upon the price of wheat in the world market than the cooperative crop reduction plan proposed by Secretary Wallace is entirely at liberty to plant the number of acres of wheat which he believes will be most profitable to him.

Surveys of the wheat acreage in Michigan will be made by residents of the community in which the survey is made. Each farmer will be asked if he wants to reduce his wheat acreage in accordance with the regulations laid down by Secretary Wallace. Each farmer will have the opportunity then to state that he does or does not want to cooperate in crop reduction. His answer is written down and that answer will be accepted as final.

Mr. Baldwin says that the thing for Michigan wheat growers to remember is that the money derived from the processing tax on wheat is going to be paid to farmers who cooperate.

The reduction in acreage suggested is not more than 20 per cent. The average amount of wheat planted on Michigan farms is 12.95 acres. If the greatest amount of reduction were requested, the average Michigan farmer would plant 2 1/2 acres less wheat. The average yield of Michigan wheat is 17.6 bushels per acre. The cooperating farmer would produce 44 less bushels of wheat than a neighbor who did not accept the plan. This farmer would sell his extra 44 bushels on the open market and his profit would be the difference between the cost of growing 2 1/2 acres of wheat and the total price received for the 44 bushels. Flowing, fitting the seed bed, price of seed, cost of fertilizer, binder twine, harvesting, threshing, and delivery would have to be paid out of the 44 bushels. The amount of money left is the sum which must be compared with the bonus per acre paid to the neighbor who grows less than his normal planting.

Director Baldwin points out that the experiences of Michigan wheat growers during the past few years have been that wheat has been produced at a loss. The loss increased as the acreage increased.

Secretary Wallace says that any increase in price caused by weather conditions can be wiped out by a change in the weather. The surplus of wheat in storage now insures that there will be no wheat shortage in the immediate future.

Michigan farmers will be asked to decide whether they will gamble their wheat production costs against weather conditions or take out insurance by cooperating with the government, and Mr. Baldwin says that the members of the extension staff in this State are instructed to extend the fullest measure of their help to any Michigan farmer regardless of the way that man views the wheat acreage reduction plan.

Insulation for Houses

"I know of no argument against house insulation," said a prominent heating engineer. "Today the matter is reduced almost to two questions: What kind, and how much?" Old houses are naturally more difficult to insulate than buildings under construction, but owners can go a long way toward making them cooler in summer and easier to heat in winter. Finished or not, if it is uninsulated the attic becomes unbearably hot in summer when the sun beats upon the roof. If the attic is to be used for living purposes, the roof must be insulated. If waste space or used merely for storage, it is cheaper and easier to insulate between or on the floor joists of the attic.

Bills and Resolutions

A bill is a written document presented in a legislative body as a prospective law. A bill differs from a joint resolution partly in language. A senate resolution deals only with matters pertaining to the senate. A house resolution deals only with matters pertaining to the house. Neither of these is presented to the other body for action. A concurrent resolution deals with matters pertaining to both houses, but does not require the signature of the President. A joint resolution begins with a resolving clause. A bill begins with an enacting clause.

Question And Answer Dept.

Ques.—I am writing you to ask if you will kindly answer in your good question department the name of the flower that represents each month in the year?

Ans.—The representative flowers for each month of the year respectively are as follows: January: Snowdrop; February: Primrose; March: Violet; April: Daisy; May: Hawthorne; June: Honeysuckle; July: Water Lily; August: Poppy; September: Morning Glory; October: Hops; November: Chrysanthemum; December: Holly.

Ques.—What nationality constitutes the largest number of immigrants to the United States?

Ans.—If your question means immigrants from any part of the world, then Mexicans are the largest number of immigrants to the United States annually so far, with approximately 60,000. Germany leads European immigrants with about 55,000 and Ireland follows with close to 40,000.

Ques.—Can you tell me if our three leading states—New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois—have more than one state penitentiary?

Ans.—Yes. New York has 4; Pennsylvania, 2; Illinois, 2. They are located as follows: New York: Auburn, Dannemora, Great Meadows and Sing Sing. (Dannemora is at Clinton, Great Meadows at Comstock and Sing Sing at Ossing). Pennsylvania: Philadelphia and Allegheny (Pittsburg). Illinois: Joliet and Chester.

Ques.—I want to ask you if the Cherry, Ill. mine disaster was the greatest in the world? When did it occur?

Ans.—The Cherry, Ill. mine disaster occurred Nov. 18, 1909, when 289 lives were lost. There are about half a dozen mine disasters that exceeded Cherry in the last twenty-five years. The greatest disaster was in Courriere, France, on March 10, 1906, when 1,060 persons were killed.

Ques.—As a result of the late World War are there any American soldiers buried in Europe, or were they all brought back to America?

Ans.—Some of them were brought back here for burial. There are 30,812 bodies in American cemeteries in Europe. Six of these cemeteries are in France, one in Belgium and one in England.

Ques.—Which country in the world uses the most automobiles?

Ans.—The United States leads the world. More automobiles are used in this country than the combined number of all the countries of Europe and Canada.

Ques.—To settle an argument, will you please state in your good paper who was vice president with Grover Cleveland when he was elected president?

Ans.—In 1894 T. A. Hendricks was the vice presidential candidate with Grover Cleveland, and in 1892 Cleveland's running mate was Adlai E. Stevenson.

Ques.—If you are so smart can you tell us if the "good old days" are coming back?

Ans.—We haven't established any reputation for prophesying, but if the trend of current events is any indication, we will say "yes" and dog-gone soon, at that. Note the Morgan investigation by the U. S. Senate, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in New York, the great Chicago Fair, and the way the States are tumbling over themselves to vote for Repeal.

Ques.—I wish to ask in your question and answers what was the day and date that Robert G. Ingersoll died?

Ans.—Robert G. Ingersoll died on Friday, July 21, 1899.

Ques.—Is Babe Ruth classed as the champion baseball batter of the world all the time he has been in the game?

Ans.—No. Babe Ruth holds the record for home runs since the beginning of organized baseball. Ty Cobb, formerly of Detroit, now retired, is considered the greatest batter in the world, because he was a "consistent" hitter. He led the American league for seven consecutive years (1909-1915), was second one year (1916), and was champion again the following three years.

Modern Homes for Red Men

The erection of comfortable and more commodious dwellings during the last few years has been a feature in the growth of civilizing influences among the Indians of the Prairie provinces of Canada according to the Department of Indian Affairs. These new homes provide many conveniences and the light and ventilation that was lacking in the old. The new condition has encouraged the owners to appreciate the value of additional pursuits to augment their sources of livelihood such as the cultivation of gardens, the raising of chickens and in some instances pigs, and turning their attention to milking and butter making.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—With his yacht, the Intrepid, practically abandoned by its crew, Felix Horton, millionaire, sailing with his mother, his daughter Nan, and Roy Stuart, puts into Squaw Harbor, Alaska, to recruit. He unsuccessfully tries to persuade Eric Grissom, holding master's papers but at the time unemployed, sailing to secure sailors. Horton engages a bunch of nondescript stranded there. A gigantic Eric called Sandomar, dead but dumb, is their leader. At the request of Captain Waymire, the Intrepid's skipper, an old friend, Eric engages to sail as chief officer.

It was hardly more than a deep gasp, but it betrayed two secrets she would have given much to conceal. One of them was that the kiss was not the empty gesture she had expected. His lips had been gentle, but there was a dam on them, high voltage from the most dynamic being she had ever met. She did not want him to know that she had felt the charge in every cell of her body, but she feared that the deep catch of her breath spoke all too plainly. Her other secret, hanging on the first, was that for one of the few times in her life she was afraid.

She was afraid of him, of herself, of life. And this fear deepened when, instead of feeling her arms' draw her gently closer, crushing her breast against his.

"Again?" he whispered. "No. Once is enough."

"For you, perhaps, not for me. Half-smiling, his lips sought hers and mastered them a long time.

He felt her slight body grow rigid. When he freed her, red mouth, low ominous tones crackled forth. "Don't you dare do that again!"

But his grasp only tightened. "If you dance you must pay the piper," he told her gravely. Then, oblivious to her struggles he took the dare.

She was fighting him now, but he did not even seem to know it. Her round little arms were strong, but it was like tugging at iron bars. "If you don't let me go, I'm going to scream for help."

"No one would hear you, in the first place. In the second, it would be hardly playing the game. I'm only raising your bet."

For a few seconds more her every muscle was flexed, then she relaxed in his arms. "You win—this time," she told him simply. "Now let me go."

Instantly she was free. He watched her quietly as she moved a few feet down the deck and stood in the sea breeze. She seemed cool and well in hand; he did not know that her heart was hammering her side. At last she turned slowly, and he saw the moonlight in the deep-fringed pools of her eyes.

"You were in your rights, of course," she said quietly.

"Yes, but I'm sorry about it now." "I'm not. Perhaps it taught me a lesson. Believe me I can take care of myself from now on."

Eric's heart leaped up. "That's the girl! I'm glad now."

"Of course I won't get a chance to prove it, we'll probably never meet again in this way," she went on gravely. "It's too bad our lives are ordered so far apart, it would be fun to fight with you. And I care enough for your respect to want you to know why I did—what I did—tonight."

"I think I do know. You were bored, and it was a magic night, and your life seemed insignificant. I've told that way a few times. And it usually ended with a fight, down in some waterfront dive."

Eric spoke slowly and gravely. "Every person is given just so much time to live. That's all he owns, really the rest is just circumstance. Yet your whole aim is to make time pass as quickly as possible. And mine is to make it last, to be jealous of every minute, so to do, and see, and feel that much more."

"And that's why I envy you. Why I even envy Marie. Most girls wouldn't, but I do." Nan drew her cloak about her shoulders, and turned toward the stairs. "You'll forget all this, won't you? I've been a fool but the moon's to blame. Tomorrow I'll be very aloof and call you Mr. Grissom."

She held out her hand and he shook it vigorously. "I think you're just wonderful," he told her gravely.

A small but radiant smile lighted her face. "That's generous, coming from the victor. Because you won, tonight."

"You were overconfident. You wouldn't be, next time."

"There won't be any next time, I'm afraid. Ships that pass in the night!"

"But they meet again, you know. I once saw a ship in Hongkong—and never expected to lay eyes on her again—and then just missed colliding with her in Boston harbor! The journey's just begun, and these are magic waters."

CHAPTER II

North of Ignak Island they came to the great, gray Day Jones shoal. At quarter speed Captain Waymire cruised round the reefs, his eye on the automatic sounder in the pilot house and one of his seamen heaving the lead.

Even so, it was perilous sailing. The waters seemed mysteriously troubled. There were powerful currents, varying in direction from hour to hour, that would sweep a pulling dory out to sea; big eddies; formidable ground swells.

"I don't like it," Eric said. "If we hang up and have to take to the boats, we'll be in a sweet fix."

"We wouldn't last long," Captain Waymire shook his gray head. "Our only hope would be for these cursed currents to sweep us to sea before one of those big swells hits us. There'd make kindling wood of those skulls of ours."

"Why don't you tell Horton, so? The crazy fool will lose his ship and drown the whole company. There's no way through these reefs."

"Tell him yourself, if you want to. It's like talking to the wind. He thinks his checkbook will buy off a typhoon."

As the Intrepid cruised on, the deep-toned bay of the breakers became a guiding rear, and the waves beating on the crags hurled up eerie clouds of spray. The first day's search was fruitless. When the shadows fell, Waymire mustered into open sea and dropped anchor. Early the next morning prospects brightened. Eric had taken accurate bearings. If Roy Stuart's old diary was correct, the pass through the reefs was less than a league away.

But Roy Stuart was not so complacent. He had never been able to harbor an illusion, good or bad, and he knew that this luxurious paneled room was not the citadel it seemed.

Yes, they had been too bold. Although his heart never missed a beat, he saw plainly that even a minor mishap, a mere whim of fortune, might hurl them all to irremediable disaster.

Shortly after two Eric rapped on the door and entered. He was in sou'wester, and his eyes had a steady shine. "Conditions seem to be growing worse, not better. If the wind shifts two points more, we'll have to move. Captain sends word for you to get all your party together and stand by for orders. If the wind shifts, we can't run out to sea. Your ship's too top heavy for a blow like this. We've got to work around the island, and we don't know what's there. But we'll hang here if we can, and make the move in daylight."

Fortunately, dawn was not far off. When Eric returned to the pilot house he could see the jagged line of the waves against the eastern sky. For a moment he stood listening to the blast. "I see what's shifted another point," he shouted to the grim-faced veteran on the bridge.

"I'm giving her twenty minutes more," the veteran answered. "Is everything ready?"

"Best I could do, sir. Number one lifeboat in fair shape, number two rotten and barely serviceable, and the dory clean 'n' tight. That means we couldn't get off. Blankets, water and bread in one and two."

"How about Sandomar and his crowd? Can we trust them in a pinch?"

"We're obliged to trust them. I think most of 'em will keep their heads—they're a hard lot. But one of the Russians, Stronsky, they call him, is acting pretty queer. I saw him as he was going below—his eyes wild, and muttering to himself. I think it's just fright."

"He'll be all right. Ferguson is using him as his assistant—says he knows a Diesel engine inside out."

The twenty minute wait lengthened to an hour. And now there seemed to be a slight lull. Listening hard, Eric could distinguish between one gust and another. Captain Waymire straightened his stooped shoulders.

But it was a false hope. There came a trumpet blast in the sky, swelling and heaving, and a solid wall of wind smote the ship from the north-west. It had jumped two points and the Intrepid's position was no longer tenable.

Waymire shouted an order; it was dispatched to Ferguson by the engine room telegraph. Wind-buffed figures appeared and vanished on the gray deck; the great anchor was weighed. Quarter-half-full speed astern—and the Intrepid was backing out to sea.

Tense and still, Eric stood on the bridge, straining into the murk. His blue northland eyes were the first to catch a pallid gleam on the dark waviness five ship-lengths ahead.

"His cry rose above the blast. 'Breakers ahead!'"

Waymire was a tried old seaman, and there was hardly a split second between Eric's warning cry and the clanging of the engine room telegraph to full speed astern. Even now, good seamanship might save the vessel.

But Waymire's hands had been tied by an arrogant land-lubber. He had braved the reefs not only with rotting lifeboats, but a treacherous mongrel crew. He did not feel the screw bludge and change. Instead, he was thrusting to hear the gong clanging again.

And now the dead riel not full speed astern, but full speed forward.

In some strange human drama he race was ten times as great as now and all the little islets were inhabited. Strange how they ever made it here in the first place!"

"There are probably other passages," Horton said. "They wouldn't live here alone, with no contact with their tribespeople. Roy, I'm afraid I'm a little disappointed. We can't claim now that we've discovered a new island unknown though it is. Siberian traders would never let these people alone; there's probably a ship in here every year."

"They've kept mighty still about it, anyway; probably the island yields some good fur." Roy watched in silence a long time. "Well, there's one of the hunters. He's got on a long parka that looks Aleut to me. By the way, I believe he's got a spear, not a gun."

But this had no special significance, as Roy well knew. Rifles and ammunition are expensive; natives on many remote Alaskan islands often return to their primitive weapons.

Waymire rounded the cape and dropped anchor a mile outside the narrow-mouthed bay on which stood the Indian village. This was early June; night should not fall until eleven. By nine the sea, world, and sky were one dreary pall of sleet, spindrift, and foam. By midnight the sleet seemed to be blown out of the sky, but to Waymire's dismay, the wind seemed to be working around to the northwest. At one o'clock it was an awful chord of many notes.

Horton could thank his lucky stars for Waymire's foresight. If the Intrepid had been exposed to the full power of the gale, no anchor could have held her, and she would have had to fight for her life. But not once did her purse-proud owner question his arrogant creed. He was reasonably comfortable in the warm saloon—the island crags broke the waves, and though the ship was battered by the wind, she rolled but little—and his mild made light of the skipper's ill-considered alarm.

But Roy Stuart was not so complacent. He had never been able to harbor an illusion, good or bad, and he knew that this luxurious paneled room was not the citadel it seemed.

Yes, they had been too bold. Although his heart never missed a beat, he saw plainly that even a minor mishap, a mere whim of fortune, might hurl them all to irremediable disaster.

But Waymire's hands had been tied by an arrogant land-lubber. He had braved the reefs not only with rotting lifeboats, but a treacherous mongrel crew. He did not feel the screw bludge and change. Instead, he was thrusting to hear the gong clanging again.

And now the dead riel not full speed astern, but full speed forward.

In some strange human drama he was never to understand in full, his command had been betrayed. He leaped to the lever, only to find it locked—and as the ship hurried on to meet her death, the old captain of the sea stood helpless as a little child.

At his order, the chain of the cathead anchor ran out with a roar, but too late. Eric shouted a cry lost in the blast—and the helmsmen tugged impotently at the wheel. Then there was nothing to do but wait for the ship to strike.

There were three distinct shocks, the first two light, the third severe enough to hurl Eric against the rail. As he got to his feet, he felt the whole ship vibrate—a curious tremor, running through every beam and stake—as a man's body might quiver when it gives up the ghost. Slowly it died away.

As Eric turned to the pilot house, he heard the whistle shriek five times. So the captain perceived the inevitable; this was the signal to abandon ship. Neither man showed the slightest trace of excitement as they met on the bridge.

"The whole bottom must be torn out of her," Waymire shouted. "Can't you feel her stern settling? Let's get 'em off before the big sea gets. Then if there's time I'll look around and see what can be done."

"There won't be time. The weight will tip her backwards and sink her in half an hour. You'd better come on with the rest."

The seamen were already surging up the stairs; and they were not the cool-headed trustees Eric had known of old. He saw their drawn faces in the dawnlight—he heard their oaths crackling in the wind—so he made ready his big, lithe muscles.

Whom could he trust? Ferguson, of course, but where was Ferguson? Eric recalled the fatal mistake that had wrecked the Intrepid, and began to guess part of the grim truth. The faithful old Scot had not been in command of the engine room when Waymire's order was betrayed. Stronsky, his new assistant, had been acting strangely—and he was known as a saboteur.

Skluner, the steward, was a cool hand and had taken his post at Number One Boat, waiting orders, but the three Filipino servants under his command were already squealing in panic.

The only other man back worth trying was DeValera, the black Irishman of Sandomar's gang. Eric detested him for his fawning ways, but he had proved a sound workman, and seemed to be breaking away from the wolves of his pack.

DeValera had not joined the little tense group around Sandomar, eight men in all. Who else was missing from the original ten? Eric's brain was moving swift and clear, and without pausing in its work it recorded the fact that Stronsky was still below decks. Sandomar seemed to be plotting with his men. When Waymire hurried him, shouting orders, they looked up from under lowered brows, like gull-crested, and made no move to obey.

Eric's arm might be needed here, in a moment, but now he turned toward the companionway. There was no one to send, so he would go alone to learn why Horton and his party had not yet appeared on deck.

To his tremendous relief, he met them on the stairs. In the deck lights Horton's face showed livid, and he was protesting what he apparently deemed a false alarm, but Nan hurried him on. Eric offered no explanations, but darted back to the boat deck.

And he was sorely needed! The stunned figures of Sandomar's men were coming to life. When Eric saw their faces, he dismissed the idea that they had a hand in the wreck. They were simply reverting to type. Every bond of discipline had snapped free.

"Eric saw them moving in a compact mass toward Number One Boat. Sandomar was in the lead, hobbling on his gorilla feet, one of his massive hands clutching a short iron bar.

Waymire stood between them and their prize, his eyes blazing. His voice cut through the blast. "What do you fellows want?"

The pale-haired man called Swale answered in hoarse tones. "We're going to take that boat."

"Stand back. The passengers get off first. I'll kill the first man that raises his hand." As he spoke, Waymire drew a heavy revolver and leveled it at Swale's breast.

Waymire meant what he said. Not only Swale, but at least one more would fall before they could silence the gun, and every man knew that he might be that one. They drew back, snarling.

There was only a brief pause. The tempo of events seemed to be immeasurably quickened. Suddenly this drama in the dawn took a new turn. A small, bearded figure appeared at the companionway. It was Stronsky—and he was waving his arms.

Eric saw his lips moving, but at first his words were whirled away in the blast. Then their mad passion rather than their sound sent them crackling into Eric's ears. "I did it—I did it!" Stronsky was yelling. "The ship's sinking, and I did it. I tell you it's so. They won't look down on me any more. The water's rushing in, and I did it, me myself."

He stopped by the rail. Eric would never forget his bugging eyes. "Hurrah for the Union of the Soviet Republics!" he shrieked. It seemed like a crazy nightmare, but there he was, in the clear dawn, a very real and terribly comic figure. "Hurrah for the Working Men's Committee! Hurrah for Stalin! Down with the master class! Down with the million dollar playthings! I myself did it!"

Then, to cap the climax of this fantastic interlude, the little man climbed

A BANK REFLECTS THE LIFE ABOUT IT

Loans and Investments on Which Condition of a Bank Depends Determined by the Kind of Business Surrounding It

POLITICAL and popular misapprehensions toward banking are due to little else than failure to realize that it is what the people themselves do that the condition of banking reflects, and that banking cannot of itself reflect events and conditions other than those that actually originate from surrounding circumstances. Francis H. Benson, President of the American Bankers Association, says in an article in Forum Magazine.

The character of an institution's notes and investments indicates whether it is in the farm regions, a manufacturing center, a mercantile neighborhood or a great financial district, he says, and furthermore, besides identifying the institution as to its locality, a study of its notes will equally clearly indicate the economic conditions surrounding it.

If a farm district bank's note history shows that its loans rise and fall with the normal cycle of production and marketing of the products of the region, it may be taken as an index of economic good health for the locality," he says. "But if, over a period, the loan volume shows a dwindling trend it may mean a region that is losing ground, becoming exhausted or being robbed of business by another community. Or if a large proportion of the loans are not paid at maturity but are continuously renewed, or if stocks or bonds or real estate have to be taken as additional security, these too have economic significance, reflecting perhaps crop failures, over-production or inefficient, high cost farming methods in a highly competitive national or world market, such as wheat. Inevitably all these facts are reflected in the condition of the local banks."

City Banks Too

"If the loans of a bank in a manufacturing or merchandising field show a smoothly running coordination with production and distribution they, too, mirror a healthy economic situation. Or there may be here also signs that reflect growing unfavorable conditions, such as excessive loan renewals, over-enthusiasm and therefore over-expansion of credit extended to makers or dealers in particular products, and similar circumstances. Similar conditions apply to banks engaged in financing the activities of the securities markets."

"The foregoing is merely suggestive of the infinite aspects of the life out-wardly surrounding the banks which form and control their internal conditions. Although these facts seem obvious enough, the discussions and criticisms that have raged about the banks often appear to set them apart as some-thing separate from the lives of our people, casting forth a malignant influence upon agriculture, industry and trade from forces generated wholly within themselves."

"The truth of the matter is that the fate of the banks is inseparably interwoven with the fate of the rest of the people and of the nation. What happened to the country happened to the banks and what happened to the banks is in no way different or detached from what happened to the people. They are all part of the same pattern, of the same continuous stream of events. No one element in that stream can be called the cause of business depression."

"If the banks caused trouble to some of our people it was because they were irresistibly forced to pass on troubles that came to them from other people. These troubles impaired the values of their securities and customers' notes—and rendered some unable, in turn, to pay back to other customers their deposits that had been properly used to create these loans and investments. Unless these truths are kept continually in mind there is no such thing as approaching an understanding of the banking problem or of properly safeguarding the very heavy stake of the public in that problem."

The Bank as a Rebuilder

IN place of a 3 per cent loss on an investment of $10,000 a large New York savings bank is now getting a 6 per cent profit on an investment of $50,000, because it had the good business judgment to spend $40,000 in modernizing a group of 40-year-old tenement houses on the lower East Side which it was forced to take over on mortgage foreclosure, says an article in the American Bankers Association Journal, 7 year or two ago the owner, who had always kept up his mortgage payments, began to neglect the property, it became run down and the tenants began to leave.

The bank foreclosed the buildings completely, putting in an oil-burning heating plant, incinerators and other modern changes, with the result the buildings are now entirely rented, and there is $14,000 a year coming in instead of several thousand going out. At that rate the improvements will pay for themselves in three years.

This same bank has done 18 other renovation jobs similar to this, and all have proved profitable. The bank has its own architects and is employing seven painters who are kept busy continuously.

BROOKLYN—An American Express Co. traveler's check stolen when the Brooklyn State Bank was robbed just four weeks ago today was cashed at Vancouver, British Columbia, on the west coast last week. The check reported was for only $10 and was signed by "T. Wright." This is the last trail of the robbers since they scattered big headed tanks to discourage their pursuers out on the Vineyard lake road. —Exponent.

BROOKLYN—A lively rain storm greeted the "forest army contingent" which moved in motor trucks from Ft. Wayne on Sunday afternoon and established camp at the Walter J. Hayes State Park. The 215 men are located at the Hoffman place on the township road at the eastern limit of the park. Their work which will start at once will consist of improving the park roads, clearing the brush from some of the park areas and an amount of grading on the grounds. A playground extension will be made to the west of the service building by filling low land in the same way that was done for the building. This will be close to the water front and bathing beach. —Exponent.

PLYMOUTH—Plymouth merchants are warned by local police officers to watch out for a bad check artist who has been floating bad checks in both Plymouth and Northville. His method of operation is one that will easily fool the average person. He will walk into a store and make a small purchase on one day, paying cash for his merchandise. The next day he will return and make another purchase and offer a check on the Northville bank in payment. The check is always larger than the amount of the purchase. Naturally the merchant having seen the purchaser in the store before and recalling that his transaction was satisfactory, there is no hesitation in taking the check. —Mail.

NORTHVILLE—A total of 170 men working in three shifts are now working at the Northville branch of the Ford plant which is located at Main and Griswold streets. MILAN—A veritable cloud burst, accompanied by high winds and hail, drenched Milan and the surrounding country Wednesday afternoon. This was the second rain of the week. A heavy downpour of rain broke the drought of several weeks Sunday afternoon. The rain Wednesday did considerable damage to the standing field crops and gardens and in several localities, uprooted trees and twisted barns and outbuildings on the farms. The storm was central around Milan with Ann Arbor and the country north still in a very dry condition. —Leader.

Tyre's Days of Glory
Tyre flourished in the Tenth century B. C. It was the most famous city in Phoenicia. Poets wrote of the beauty of its scenery. The basis of its commerce which reached all countries, was its dyed wools. The trade continued, in a diminished volume, until the sixteenth century A. D., when the discovery of the sea route to the East diverted the trade courses. The city was the scene of many bitter battles, from the Egyptian hordes to the Crusaders. The small town of Sur now occupies the ruins of the city.

Postal History of Italy
The postal history of Italy began at Pignone. Until 1501 the transmission of letters was entrusted to the communas, or private individuals, who were authorized by the state to charge for the service. In the year indicated the posts were farmed out to a postmaster general by Emmanuel Philibert, duke of Savoy. This arrangement was continued until 1607, when Victor Amadeus II added the proceeds of the post office to the revenue of the crown. After 1710, the post office was administered directly by the state.

Superior Mechanism
Mechanical devices measure the maturity of canned corn. A fruit pressure tester determines the maturity of plums, apples, and pears. The colorimeter denotes the color in honey and in other similar products where color is an important quality factor. Flavor and color have been naturally difficult to measure in mechanical tests, according to the Department of Agriculture, but predictions are that even these factors soon may be determined by mechanical means instead of the slower and less uniform method that depends on judgment and skill.

Solid Ivory
America, avers a Wisconsin scientist, is fast becoming a nation of "round-heads." It is reviewing some of our mental performances of the last few years we feel inclined not only to agree with him that the national head has the shape of a billiard ball, but to go a step further and assume that it is made of the same material. —Exchange.

When Plates and Forks

Were Not Used on Table

An age which takes its finger bowls and even its little silver grape scissors for granted, may find it pretty hard to conceive of an era way back even before the advent of plates, when slices of bread were used as receptacles for meat.

These were followed in old England by plates of sycamore wood, slightly hollowed in the middle.

Forks were first brought into England from Italy in 1601, although it was a long time before they were universally adopted. Wealthy people owned their individual forks, which they took with them when invited out to dine, and the lady of fashion often had a receptacle for a fork attached to her reticule.

Until they came into general use the carver sliced a chunk of meat into four parts, leaving at the end a solid piece which was used as a handle.

The earliest knives had pointed ends, and Richelieu is said to have been the man whose bright idea it was to round them. The story goes that when Chancellor Segnier was dining at Richelieu's house he used the point of his knife as a toothpick. The cardinal's finer sensibilities were so offended he gave orders that in the future all knives were to have rounded ends. —New York World-Telegram.

Oranges Rank Second in

List of Favored Fruits

Oranges—the second favorite of all the fruits! They are interesting things, with a diversity of qualities which makes them very, very good for one. Quite the best all-round fruit for general health purposes, in fact, asserts a writer in the Montreal Herald.

Energy, for instance. One average orange is worth 75 to 100 calories. This makes it equal in this respect to half a slice of bread. A pint of orange juice is as nourishing even as a similar quantity of the highly respected oyster.

A unique feature of orange juice is that the food elements in it are by the ripening process of the fruit what one might call predigested. They are therefore absorbed immediately into the hungry system. Comparing again with a half slice of bread—the ultimate value is the same; but the orange juice jumps to work in a few minutes, while the bread takes several hours to digest.

The lime and alkaline salts in orange juice are very valuable in clearing the blood, building bone, and combating the effects of a sedentary life.

Argument for a Post-Office

The birth centenary of Eiffel, builder of the famous Paris tower, recalled to a Liverpool Post writer this story concerning William Morris.

During the English poet-artist's last visit to Paris he spent much of his time in the Eiffel Tower restaurant, having all his meals and doing all his writing there.

"You must be very much impressed by the tower," a friend remarked to him.

"Impressed!" cried Morris. "I stay here because it is the only place in Paris where I can avoid seeing the d—n thing." —Boston Transcript.
