President Asks Good Friday Observance

To the People of Chelsea:

According to an ancient practice in Christian civilization, Christian people have reverently observed the anniversary of the death of our Lord, from time immemorial on the day called "Good Friday" they have reflected upon the truths connected with His death.

To make it convenient for all Christian people of Chelsea to attend their respective places of worship, and to lend encouragement to such a wholesome practice, I, J. Edward McKune, President of the Village of Chelsea, request that on Friday, March 30, in the year of Our Lord 1934, all commercial enterprises discontinue business from twelve o'clock noon until three o'clock.

By Order of Village President,
J. Edward McKune.

Speaker Discusses Real Estate Bond Issues

Prof. E. S. Wolaver, of the Department of Business Administration, University of Michigan, addressed the Chelsea Kiwanians at their Monday evening meeting. Prof. Wolaver has made an extensive study of the real estate bond situation in Michigan during the past few years. He stated that in his opinion many of the defaulted bonds would appreciate in value so they would eventually be worth a large portion of their face value. He advised against selling bonds to so-called chiselers who are making an effort to purchase many issues of bonds at a low figure.

The best procedure, in the opinion of the speaker, is to turn the bonds over to bondholders' committees. These committees are under state supervision and can be trusted in most instances, according to Prof. Wolaver. He stated that no bond should be sold or discarded as worthless until the owner has made a thorough investigation of conditions surrounding the issue.

John L. Fletcher was in charge of the program.

Next Monday evening the Kiwanians and their wives will be guests of the Lima Community 4-H club at the public school auditorium.

Veterans May Enroll for CCC Camp Work

Harold D. Golds, Ann Arbor attorney, announces that he has received a communication from the Veterans' Administration in Detroit tolling of their plans for additional enrollment of veterans for replacements in the Civilian Conservation Corps to fill vacancies in companies below the authorized strength.

Mr. Golds asks ex-service men who served in the United States forces during the Spanish-American or World Wars to communicate with him if they desire to take advantage of this opportunity.

The Latest Craze

You may have been puzzled at the excitement among Chelsea Hi girls of late. Or perhaps you wonder at the enthusiastic girls whom you have seen in the postoffice. Well, here is the solution of your puzzle.

It all lies in the fact that the latest craze in Chelsea Hi is foreign correspondence. The Sophomore girls seem to be very excited over it. And we don't blame them, for it really is interesting.

Letters have recently been exchanged between Chelsea girls and those of Scotland, Germany, Australia, New Zealand, France, and Sweden. Pictures, novelties, newspaper clippings, and all things imaginable have been sent to these places, and in return pictures and foreign novelties are beginning to flood our town.

All in all, this latest fad seems to be very interesting as well as educational and we hope you will excuse any excited acting girls that you happen to see hereafter.

The following is an example of these letters. It was received by a Sophomore girl from one in Sweden: Göteborg, 4 Mars, 1934.

My dear friend:
Many thanks for your letter. I am very glad to have a letter from an American girl and I hope we will be very good friends.

I am older than you, eighteen years old. I have brown hair and blue eyes. I am at school here in Göteborg. In spring I shall have left school.

There are three members in our family. They are my grandmother, my father and myself. My dear mother is dead two years ago. We have a little home before town, where we live. I go with train to school every day.

I have many hobbies. I like sport. I am fond of skiing, skating, playing tennis, and take gymnastics. I also like to read books, play piano, sew, and knit. I also am fond of amusing. Now you know a little about me.

Göteborg is the second town in Sweden. It has a population of 251,110. It is a very pretty town. I think I sent you some pictures of Göteborg. The first represents a large park, where I am going in spring, summer, and autumn—every evening. In winter there is sport there. There is music, restaurants, beautiful flowers, long walks on the canal and many people.

The second picture represents "Children." This is a school, who furnishes engineers. This school is famous in Sweden.

I read German and English in school. France I have also read, but only a year. English is a very nice language. I want to come to America, or England.

Many thanks for the pictures of the World's Fair in Chicago. I have heard of it. Also thanks for the sketch of the American girl. But don't think that we here in Sweden don't have such dresses when we Swedish girls are going to dance.

I am very thankful for a couple of lines by Easter.

Kindest regards,
Eva.

Always With Us

"Politics" is derived from the Greek "politeia" meaning citizen. "Politics" really means those affairs which pertain to citizens of the state.

This and That Tit for Tat Who are They?

We saw a Ford car parked down by Todde's Sunday afternoon with a Detroit license on it. "We wonder who it can be."

We see Nicky has his two (2) fingers burned. Now I wonder how could that have happened? We have heard of people in love burning toast, but—

Why is it that Marie always walks clear down in front every morning. Is it possibly because of a certain little boy who sits down in front?

We all are curious to know who Dots was out riding with Sunday night.

Some of us bet Helen Baxter had a good time Saturday night. We hear a certain boy from Jackson arrived.

Who is the tall goodlooking blonde who has been escorting Janet around in a Packard quite a bit lately.

By looking through one of Marjorie's books the other day I came across a letter from Notre Dame. Watch out Marjie.

Who is the little woman with whom Lynn Dancer has been going around with lately? All that he tells is her address, which is Stockbridge?

Who is Walt Balmer's main attraction over at Stockbridge? For information regarding this question see "Wirt" Balmer himself.

Who is the flashy brunette Mr. Herbert Mauch is seen with lately?

To whom was the Honorable Ronald H. showing his attentions while dancing in the gymnasium of our beautiful school during the noon hour of the 13th day of March, 1934.

We hear that John Leeman has been making eyes at a certain Sophomore girl. Can it really be true?

Who is the Senior girl who has acquired the name of "Mae West?"

We wonder from whom Anna F. has been receiving her notes. Could it be a blonde?

And do you suppose that the Personal Service Bureau could be of any assistance in these matters? We doubt it!

Hi-Lights of the News

Thru the Eyes of a Senior

The newest acquisition for the silk wink departments the world over is the Insull case. Greece told Insull that they would like to avoid his company. Insull took the hint and left.

When Insull neared Egypt and safety, they had bought him a ticket on the train and that it would be rank waste if Insull did not use it. The only thing to be done was to capture Insull again and bring him back to Greece.

This they proceeded to do. It is rumored that after a long and careful examination of the case, the cabinet discovered that someone beside Insull could use the ticket, thus avoiding waste of government money. So, Insull goes his way. After the training which this case gives them, the Greek Ministers should be good at all juggling games like carrying hot coals in your bare hands.

The present well-sung argument race is really going on but largely on paper. Nobody cares a great deal about spending a great deal of money on a navy and is trying to bluff the other fellow without losing face.

Politics is in its normal cycle if periodic recurrence of the Veterans' bonus question is any indication. It was good publicity for these astute politicians who are seeking re-election to be registered on the record as in favor of payment. There was no defiance of President Roosevelt either.

The Congressmen knew that it could not be passed; the President had promised to veto it and the Senate did not care about passing it. Just a piece of political hypnosis often indulged in by the best regulated Congressmen. This is not the first time that such horseplay was tried on this issue. Both Republicans and Democrats have bickered over it before. It will happen again.

"Got the stuff on this accident," said the city editor to the new reporter, "and when you write the story, keep it short. Never use two words when one will do. Now go to it."

A few minutes later the new reporter handed in his copy. "John Jones struck a match to see if there was any gasoline in his tank," the story read. "Age 65."

Thickly Populated Island
One of the world's most thickly populated small islands, Malta, houses more than 230,000 people. Strangely, it is an island without lake or stream. The soft and porous sandstone absorbs the rainfall like blotting paper.

Value of Learning
True learning, really acquired and rightly used, tends to make life possess for original by enabling and inducing him to reach farther and to rise higher.

Personal Service Bureau

Dear Hi-Lighters:

Due to the fact that the Personal Service Bureau hasn't been in the paper the last two weeks there should be some news. So—

First, to the Senior who wanted to know what happens to these Thursday night skating parties, we can only suggest that perhaps you look in John's, a certain Senior's Ford, or even a Willys Knight.

To the Sophomore who wants to know who the cute blonde escorting Anna thither and yon, we suggest that you needn't necessarily look over a very extensive area—look around home.

To the Freshmen—From all appearances the orchestra practices at Hart's are going along just fine.

Yes, there was a party Saturday night last, at the home of one of Juniors we believe, and several of our more prominent students attended.

And speaking of parties—the one last Wednesday night at Wolf's—certainly was a success in the opinion of feminine attendance; however, much doubt was expressed by the boys.

Looks like they'll have to don sailor suits, gobs hats and acquire a rollicking baritone.

Well, there's a time and place for everything and we possess neither, so—

An revoir, pleasant dreams (good old Blue Ribbon Malt) and as usual—For no good reason at all, Personal Service Bureau.

Granite, sandstone and limestone seem to be the most common.

This week we are to begin the study of France. There are many things we want to know about this country.

We are glad to have most of the people back in our room. Our percentage of attendance was low last month but we are proud to report no tardy marks for the month.

THANK YOU!

Helen Hindelang thanks the Junior class for the lovely basket of fruit they sent her on Monday.

A friend: "Ha ha ha! And how many has the bally thing anyway?"

"I don't believe in the survival of anybody. I am an undertaker."

OUR NEIGHBORS

BROOKLYN—To improve a portion of the bathing beach at Vineyard Point Park sand has been hauled out on the ice and will be allowed to settle. The only question has been whether the 14 to 18 inch ice might break loose around the shore when the thaw comes and give the sand a ride out into the lake. The heavy village trucks were working out on the ice Monday, March 12. Signs of a break-up are now here, but 18 inch ice at this time of year is something you can one day tell to your grandchildren. Last year at this time there was scarcely a trace of ice in the lakes.—Exponent.

DEXTER—In one of the closest village elections in many years Rev. W. F. Jerome, pastor of St. James Episcopal church, was elected village president, defeating Dr. A. G. Wall, who has held the office for the past two terms, by a vote of 245 to 226. A total of 470 ballots were cast, indicating the more than usual interest in the election. Only one ballot was thrown out.—Leader.

MASON—George Covert of Aurelius didn't get on the CWA payroll but he made $10 just the same. Eight years ago he took the job of cleaning the chimney of the Aurelius Center school. After he finished the job he discovered that he was shy two five-dollar bills. He always believed that they slipped from his pocket and fell down the chimney. A week or two ago CWA workmen pulled down the chimney. Mr. Covert visited the scene and workmen saw him poking around in the soot and debris. All at once Mr. Covert stooped over and picked up his two bills—lost eight years ago. That's why he is satisfied with the CWA program.—County News.

HOWELL—Through the splendid cooperation of the old stockholders and the depositors of the First National Bank, the entire amount of local capital has been subscribed. The next step in the reopening of the bank is now being awaited. It is expected that more definite information may be forthcoming shortly as to the further developments in the proposed reopening. The local capital subscribed amounted to $35,000 worth of stock, $25,000.00 common stock and $10,000.00 surplus. The cash subscription has exceeded the amount required or the original amount by 50 per cent, which is indeed a splendid indication.—Republican-Press.

JACKSON—One thing may be said for the reports given at this week's Board of Commerce forum meeting. The figures were honestly prepared and they reveal—very accurately—the business condition in Jackson today. They are so genuinely encouraging that we take the liberty of presenting them below: Factory employment—about 60 per cent of the peak, and highest level since September of 1930. Banking—Increase of 25 per cent in savings deposits in past year and appreciable gain in commercial accounts. Shipping—American Railway Express forced to increase number of deliveries in Jackson. Michigan Central reports very great increase in through shipments.

of freight over this division, with consequent increased volume of employment for railroad workers. Southern Michigan Transportation Co. reports 27 per cent gain in shipments, a sufficient added volume to permit the company to operate at a good profit. Street car passenger business shows some increase. Power—Consumers Power Co. has 30 per cent increase over similar period in 1933, production now about equal to 1930. Telephones—Michigan Bell Telephone Co. reports 11 per cent increase over last year in number of telephones in use in Jackson; also, employment at the local office is up 25 per cent from a year ago. There are other indications of genuine improvement. Particularly important is the opinion of a leading realtor, given at the forum meeting, that the number of vacant homes is diminishing rapidly, rents are fairer than they had been and that rent payments are more reliable.—Evening Star.

PLYMOUTH—Not since the days when Plymouth was first made an important railway center by the Pere Marquette Railroad company have so many thousands of carloads of freight moved in and out of the local yards as during recent weeks. "The high-est record we have ever had of train traffic through this important railway center was reached a few days ago when in 24 hours ninety trains checked through the Plymouth yards," one of the yard officials informed The Plymouth Mail this week. These long trains, some of them containing so many cars that pusher engines must be used to get them on their way to the west and north out of Plymouth, have for a number of weeks past heralded to this community better times everywhere.—Mail.

PLYMOUTH—From out of the ruins of the big foundry building of the Lee Foundry & Machine Company destroyed by fire early Wednesday evening, there will be constructed a newer and more modern building for the business that has over a long period of years provided steady employment for a large number of Plymouth residents. Smoke was still rising from the crumbled walls on Thursday morning when Paul J. Nutting, president and general manager of the company ordered the men thrown out of their regular employment by the fire to start clearing away the smoldering debris for the new structure that will probably be under construction early next week.—Mail.

Question And Answer Dept.

Ques.—What does the "D." stand for in the name Franklin D. Roosevelt?

Ans.—That initial stands for Delano (pronounced "Del-ah-no"). Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Ques.—Where is the Po River, or is there such a stream in existence?

Ans.—The River Po is a very wide stream in Italy.

Ques.—In playing the game of Contract Bridge, and my partner, who is a dealer, bids one Spade, which is passed by our opponents, what should I bid or do if my hand is below normal strength in Spades and I hold no biddable suit?

Ans.—The various systems prescribe what you should do in that case. You and your partner should have a thorough understanding of what system you are employing to impart information by your bidding. A favorite system is for you to bid one No Trump in this case, which is telling your partner that you have poor support for his Spades, and that you have no biddable suit. If he re-bids the suit in the face of your information then raise the last bid in any suit in which you have an Ace, if you have one. Otherwise pass. If he bids the suit again, which would be the third time, then raise the bid in still another suit, if it also contains an Ace—no matter if it's a singleton. Your partner will be governed accordingly.

Ques.—We often hear people say "Money talks." Now isn't that a foolish remark? Who ever heard of money talking?

Ans.—Not so foolish. If you are like us, you have heard it say "good-bye" lots of times.

Ques.—What is the length of a meter, and how did it get the name of "meter"?

Ans.—A meter is very close to three feet, three inches. The meter was devised by the French government in 1795 as one result of the French Revolution. The fundamental unit of the measure was originally intended to be one-fourth millionth of the circumference of the earth. It happened, however, that the figures used for the size of the earth were wrong and the meter was corrected to be exactly 2,308 feet. The term "meter" is from the French, and we do not know its origin further than that.

Ques.—What would happen if an immovable body met an irresistible force?

Ans.—This is a mooted question which is frequently asked. An immovable body meeting an irresistible force is a contradiction of terms, as you could not have both at the same time any more than you could move forward and backward at the same instant.

Ques.—I would like to ask in your questions where the American Indians came from?

Ans.—Just where the American Indians came from is not definitely known. But it is highly probable that they migrated from Asia by way of the Behring Straits millions of years ago. The easternmost point of Asia is believed to have been connected with Alaska by land which sunk beneath the sea about 500,000 years ago.

Ques.—May I ask in your valuable paper why an electric current can cause death?

Ans.—An electric current passes along the nerves, and if it is strong enough, it paralyzes the nerve that controls breathing, and thus breathing stops. If the shock is not too severe, artificial respiration may be employed until the nerves recover and take up their work again.

Ques.—I am curious to know why flowers will wilt in a warm room—even if watered often?

Ans.—The warm air of the room dries the water out of the petals faster than it can be drawn up through the stem of the flowers, and thus it causes them to wilt.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I. Stricken during initiation into the Mu Beta Sigma fraternity, Stuart Jordan, university student, dies almost immediately. A physician declares he was poisoned. Tom Rankin, Philadelphia detective, takes charge of the investigation.

CHAPTER II. An injection of cocaine is shown to have been the cause of Jordan's death. Rankin finds all the student's shoes are marked with thumbtacks. His only known relative is his uncle, Howard Merrick, St. Louis banker, also his guardian, and his heir.

CHAPTER III. Two students from the vicinity of Vandalla, Ill., Jordan's home town, Ralph Buckley and Walter Randall, figure in the investigation. Also the fact that a St. Louis physician, Arnold Prince, was chiefly responsible for Jordan's admission into the fraternity. A prominent lawyer, Edward Fletcher, present at the initiation, also angers Rankin's attention.

Rankin shook his head in contradiction. "No, I think not," he stated reflectively. "I'm fairly certain that Buckley took them from you. He could never have got into the fraternity house without them, later."

Bit by bit, Palmer's story inevitably indicated that his friend was involved in Stuart Jordan's murder. It revealed Buckley as a suspicious, hesitating at nothing to gain his ends. And to his already potent motive for hating Jordan that Walter Randall had disclosed, it showed how the boy had crossed him three times more, fanning the fuel of his long cherished grudge.

The murder, then, during the initiation, was actuated by a desire for revenge. And to take advantage of the genuine protection supplied by the setting. After Palmer's account, Rankin no longer considered the scene of the crime an insurmountable obstacle to the presence of a stranger. Instead, it partly removed the barrier against such an intrusion. Students do not go about indiscriminately drugging one another; it followed that Buckley's deliberate act on the evening of Jordan's death had two direct connections with the crime. First, to insure that at least one fraternity brother would be absent from the ceremony, into whose place he could slip unnoticed. Otherwise, if there should be a quorum of 100 per cent, the interloper would be speedily discovered. And he had to secure Palmer's keys, to enter the house after the ritual began.

Of course, there were still gaps in the evidence that stamped Buckley a murderer. Palmer's story failed to suggest where he might have obtained the poison for the crime; nor was it likely to explain this point. Of more direct importance, Rankin could not figure out when Buckley might have had the opportunity to tamper with his intended victim's shoes, to identify him at the ceremonies. And how had he learned enough about the fraternity's secret ritual to know what kind of robes the majority of the brothers wore, or the fact that he would have access to Jordan's wrist, at a certain moment during it? Also, where had he a stranger, found out the secret code of knocks and passwords, necessary to getting past the sergeant-at-arms, at the chapter meeting?

The source of this information was a mystery, unless Palmer had been more indiscreet than he already admitted and talked freely to Buckley about fraternal rites.

"You mentioned several occasions, Mr. Palmer," the detective said, "on which Buckley inquired about the affairs of the fraternity. No doubt, you also discussed this subject at other times in your conversations."

"The boy looked at him warily. 'Well, naturally, Ralph was interested in our doings,' he agreed slowly, 'and we talked about them now and then.' 'Of course,' Rankin chose his words carefully. 'What I want to know is whether he ever asked about your private business... those secrets known only to the chapter. Your signs of recognition at meetings, for instance—was he curious about them?'

Palmer's hesitation and sidelong glance at Stanton gave him the answer before he spoke. Too innately honest to dissimble, his reticence failed to ring true.

"If you mean," he began, "whether I intentionally told him fraternity secrets..."

"Go ahead, Larry," Stanton urged. "Tell Mr. Rankin how much you spilled to him."

"It was nothing that isn't general information and common to all fraternities," the boy asserted fervently. "I did chat with him, it's true; and about three weeks ago, I described how our officers dressed like monks at the initiations, in yellow robes and hoods. But where's the harm in that statement? Practically every secret society in the country uses some sort of costume, so it wasn't anything he didn't know before."

"Then he did question you about your ritual and ceremonies," Rankin concluded, nodding.

"I... yes, he must have," Palmer confessed reluctantly. "Though never directly, and I took it for just ordinary inquisitiveness. When I wasn't under the weather, I was pretty careful, but every so often, we got to discussing the boys after a couple of drinks."

"Was that what you talked of at the Morton club?" Rankin demanded shrewdly, "while you drank and before you fell off the effects of the drug in the liquor?"

"The boy frowned in his effort to concentrate. 'I believe it was, since you mention it. Something about how we ran our initiations.'"

"Try to recall exactly what facts Buckley asked you about, Mr. Palmer."

"But I can't sir," Palmer responded uncertainly. "That is just the trouble. Like everything else last night, it is all vague and indistinct; I was in a fog the whole time. . . . Maybe Ralph wanted to know about our attendance."

"For some moments, Rankin continued in the same strain to refresh the boy's memory of how much he had, however inadvertently, imparted to Buckley. But Palmer's impression of once telling his friend the fraternity's rules on attendance was the only tangible item he elicited. Nevertheless, in the end, Rankin was satisfied that Buckley obtained from him the knowledge he needed to enter the chapter room and approach Jordan. The evidence was merely circumstantial, but clearly pointed in that direction, regardless."

But this accumulation of incriminating proof was worthless, he realized, if Buckley could not have reached the fraternity house by eight o'clock the night before. He must have arrived there, the second late comer, according to Lew Kurly, guarding the chamber door, or not at all. Obviously, he was not present at the roll call at eight fifteen and the first late arrival was identified as Patterson. This all-important element of time had to be established. Rankin dared not take it for granted. Since the boy was ignorant of when Buckley deserted him, the detective must seek that information at the club, itself. The doorman or the waiter who served the two students could surely supply it.

As to Buckley himself, Rankin had decided not to interview him immediately. Instead, he would postpone that interrogation until he completed the case against him.

The detective much preferred his visit to the Morton club to be unofficial. As an officer, he might encounter some difficulty in obtaining the required information; and he hesitated to resort to his authority to compel the club's employees to speak. Whereas, as a guest, introduced by Palmer who already had an entry, he might question them casually on one simple pretext or another. Accordingly, on concluding his inquiry, he requested the boy to accompany him to the gambling house that night, both to gain time and admission and to point out the waiter who served him. And Palmer, on comprehending the need of the visit, agreed to cooperate with him.

When the detective reached the Morton club, his first act was to dispatch a lengthy telegram to the authorities of Aberdeen college. He asked for a verification of Walter Randall's account of Buckley's expulsion from that school; also a complete summary of the incident, such as he had promised Randall he would secure from the West. In addition, he requested Jordan's history at Aberdeen, in relation to his class and school activities, particularly as his freshman class secretary. There was no telling what was important; it occurred to Rankin he might have to visit Hamilton himself if the secret of the crime were hidden there.

The message sent, he sought out Detective Sergeant Daniel Gilmore for the first assistance he required in handling the case. Due to its extraordinary nature, Gilmore was one of the few men to whom he would dare entrust it. For the enterprise included a measure of risk and demanded caution; it had more than a slight tinge of illegality. Openly, at least, Rankin's superiors would have frowned on his proposed method of collecting fresh evidence against Ralph Buckley.

"I'm not sure you'll like my proposition, Dan," Rankin said. "It may not agree with your principles; and if you don't think you ought to take it up, just say so. I'd tend to it myself, only there's this trip to the Morton club tonight, and tomorrow the boy's guardian arrives. And this needs prompt action."

"That sounds rather serious, Tom," Gilmore commented curiously.

"So that's what has become of 'Nick Lucia,'" he remarked cheerfully. "I often wondered; it is two years since I saw him last and I've rather lost track of him. . . . Well, it seems we will have to finish this business in the usual manner, after all."

"That was the fellow who served us," Palmer said, a new respect in his tone. "You gave him quite a shock, sir."

"I hardly suppose though, that I'm more squeamish about resorting to a subterfuge than anyone else. At any rate, I'm free to lend a hand at the moment."

Rankin nodded his head. "That is one reason I brought this matter to you. The other is that I'd hesitate to propose it to most of the force. You see, I want young Buckley's belongings and apartment searched thoroughly without his knowing anything about it."

Gilmore puckered his lips in a soundless whistle and eyed the other shrewdly.

"So, I am to inspect Buckley's rooms secretly. What, exactly, do you expect me to find?"

"I don't know, Dan, but I am taking a chance there may be something valuable. If he has been wise and destroyed any incriminating evidence, you'll draw a blank. On the other hand, there might be some clues—the hypodermic he used, or perhaps even some more of the conine. If these things are still hidden in his flat, I want them before he gets rid of them."

Gilmore hitched back in his chair for a moment, pulling meditatively. "Well, Tommy," he gave his decision at length. "His your case and you know the best way to treat it. I suppose I could manage it for you."

"Good!" Rankin exclaimed, gratified. "Of course, you'll have to wait until Buckley is absent; tomorrow morning during his classes would probably be the safest time. It's doubtful if he could make trouble for us, but watch your step. We don't want any embarrassment that can be avoided."

"You needn't worry about my getting into a jam," Gilmore smiled faintly at his advice. "All you have to do is to let me have the apartment address."

For a while, the two detectives discussed various other matters of mutual interest until Rankin left headquarters at eight-forty-five. As prearranged, he met Larry Palmer at West Philadelphia station for their visit to the club together.

He had instructed Palmer to advance how to present him. Their arrival automatically rang a buzzer, and to the stirring eyes that appeared at the slit in the portal, the boy explained.

"I'm Larry Palmer. You remember, Ralph Buckley introduced me here yesterday evening." He spoke convincingly. "I've brought along a friend, Bill Kendall."

Rankin stood gazing about with all the apparent curiosity of a stranger; his hat, drawn at a rakish angle, well-nigh hid his features. For a moment, the piercing inquisitive eyes studied both in silence. Then there came a grunt and the click of a bolt thrust back in its socket. A tall muscular individual with lowering brows swung the door wide and permitted them to pass in.

There were no customers at the tables, and Larry Palmer designated one of them, close to the entrance.

"That is where Ralph and I sat," he stated. "Later we intended looking about the place; we might even have taken a flyer at the wheel upstairs, but first, Ralph suggested a glass or two."

The detective took a chair beside it. To account for his interest in Buckley's movements, he had prepared a credible fiction about Palmer's desire to prove that after leaving the club, he had visited a mutual girl friend. Supposedly, Buckley denied doing so; and his friend, so the waiter would be given to understand, hoped, as a jest to lay bare the misstatement. The detective considered it less suspicious to approach the waiter first, before the doorman.

But the instant the waiter emerged from a door behind the steps, he realized the futility of his wish to remain inconspicuous. The sight of Rankin produced almost ludicrous results. The man stopped completely; recognition brought a look of mingled amazement and apprehension to his sharp eyes and widened, ferret-like countenance. For an appreciable time, he stood motionless; then he vanished precipitately through the door from which he had come.

Amusement twinkled in Rankin's eyes. "So that's what has become of 'Nick Lucia,'" he remarked cheerfully. "I often wondered; it is two years since I saw him last and I've rather lost track of him. . . . Well, it seems we will have to finish this business in the usual manner, after all."

"That was the fellow who served us," Palmer said, a new respect in his tone. "You gave him quite a shock, sir."

informed him. "Nick was one of the most clever pickpockets and petty thieves in the East; he got away with murder until I was instrumental in sending him up for a two-year stretch. That was five years ago, and he has evidently been laying low."

The waiter returned, talking volubly to a heavily built, well-dressed man, whose crafty look and florid face Rankin at once knew as the club proprietor. The recognition was mutual. For all Gusle Morton's affability in greeting the detective, the encounter manifestly disturbed him.

"How are you, Tommy?" he greeted him. "It's a pleasure to see you. . . . In some vexation. 'How in the world did you get by Cassidy at the door?'"

Rankin shook hands without cordiality. "Hello, Gusle," he returned. "It wasn't difficult; I came in with my friend; this is Mr. Palmer." Completing the introductions, he went on: "How is business these days?"

"Not like old times," Gusle replied. "Things have changed since the HU was clamped on. I've paused a second. 'But what can I do for you, old fellow? You never were very sociable and haven't dropped in just to learn how we were getting along.'"

Easter Time

I long again
Of love's redeeming grace
That opened wide the heavenly gates
To make for me a place
And may I ever thank be
Until I see His face
The Easter time!

I pray again
To know His blessed will
And in my heart I bear again
His voice say, "Peace, be still"
For all the compass of life
He comes from heaven to fill
The Easter time!

I live again
The stone is rolled away
From every tomb of doubt and grief—
My night is turned to day;
And in my heart Christ reigns as king.
This resurrection day!
