War Dead Honored At Services Here

The exercises held Wednesday forenoon at the public school auditorium in observance of Decoration Day were well attended and the program, in charge of Supt. H. L. Bleeker was much enjoyed.

The High School Band, American Legion, Legion Auxiliary, color guard, firing squad, Sea Scouts and Boy Scouts marched in the parade which formed at 9:45 at Kolb's restaurant, following Park St. to the auditorium.
Rev. Henry W. Lenz offered the invocation and features of the program were: Reading of Logan's Orders by Ransom Armstrong; Lincoln's Gettysburg Address by Jean Rossbach; "In Flanders Field" and "Response" by Max Young and Richard Sowers. Ver-cal solos were rendered by George W.
Atkinson and Paul E. Niehaus.

The address of the day was given by Rev. Frederick D. Mumby of the Methodist church, who said in part:
"To all veterans of the Nation's armed forces and their descendants, we extend greetings.

"We honor ourselves in honoring the heroes living and dead in this Memorial Day celebration. We trust that a grateful nation may never cease to pay her floral tribute to the veterans who gave or offered the full proof of their patriotism and devotion in the hour of her greatest need.

"Those who defended the flag and preserved the Union have well nigh all departed. Veterans of the Spanish American and the World War are with us today to share in the ritual of this hour and carry on the glorious traditions of the past in peace even as in war.

"The threat of war hangs over the world today. Huge and powerful manufacturers of armament and munitions have sown the world with the vicious propaganda of suspicion. Crescent of France aiding the mighty Krupp Works to rearm their late opponents; Skoda of Central Europe will sell to France, Italy or anybody who will buy; Vickers, Armstrong and others supplying the world with guns, ships, airplanes, etc.; Germany buying airplane engines from Britain and America that later on may be used to slaughter the sons and daughters of the nations that are so eager for the profits of this bloody business.

"Each nation should limit the activities of firms who traffic in this profitable business. Our own representatives in Congress should be urged to support the President in his desire to control either by license or some other effective manner, the activities of arms manufacturers, and to secure the cooperation of the world powers in a treaty agreement to prevent the abuses which abound at the present time.

"Each new day calls for a finer brand of patriotism and devotion.
This virtue is found in every nation.
The Japanese sailor who volunteers to pilot a torpedo to its mark and his own certain destruction illustrates the kind of loyalty and sacrifice needed to win and preserve a lasting peace. The soldier goes forth to war not to win a battle but a Peace.

"The heroes of the past have done this for us and yet there is need every day for the unselfish sacrificial patriotism which shall destroy the rats, and eliminate the traitors who for personal gain would scuttle the ship of state and sacrifice the nation.
"Let us therefore pledge ourselves to the unfinished task of preserving the Union, protecting the flag, and the honor and integrity of our beloved country from domestic disturbance and the foreign foe."

Following the program, the parade, joined by children from both schools, marched to the cemetery for decoration of the graves of veterans and conclusion of the day's exercises.

Approximately 150 graves of veterans in Chelsea and surrounding cemetery were decorated by the American Legion, including 74 in Oak Grove, 15 in Mt. Olivet, 17 in Lima Center, 4 in Clemens, 2 in Francisco, 3 in Mt. Calvary, 2 in Moore 2 in Rogers Corners, 4 in North Lake, one in Four Mile Lake and one in Jerusalem.

WE THANK YOU

We wish to thank the people of the community for their generous support of the poppy sale which was held on Saturday. Also, we thank those who took part in the Decoration Day exercises and helped to make the day a success.

BIBLE

Acts 3:7-8

Two men on a day
Starting out for church,
Met a forlorn brother
Sadly in the lurch.
Crippled in his legs and feet,
Sitting at a gate,
Asking alms from passers by,
Early, until late.
Pity—tender pity—
Moved by loving thought,
THEY HAD BEEN WITH JESUS, Knew the power He brought.

Neither gold nor silver
Had they to command,
But the mention of that name
Electrified the man;
Starting up he leaped and walked
To the House of Prayer,
Praise from his rejoicing heart
Sounding everywhere.

All the people knew 'twas he
Who asked alms that day,
At the gate called Beautiful,
Whence they came to pray.

By this lesson I would be Thrilled by love divine,
Such a Saviour's power and grace
Also may be mine.

Mine to have, to hold, to give—
As they gave that day,
By the gateway Beautiful,
As they went to pray.

—Arthur Carlton.

We are uniting with the Dexter church and are planning to go there to attend Sunday school, which begins at 9:30 o'clock and the church service, which begins at 10:30 o'clock. The North Lake Junior Choir will sing at the church service. We hope that everyone that possibly can, will go to Dexter and attend these services.

The Epworth League of the Dexter and North Lake M. E. churches will give a three-act play, "Fuller's Fortune," Saturday evening at the North Lake church. The prices are 15c for children, 25c for adults. It will be well worth your while to come.

Speed of the Lie

The reason a lie can travel faster than the truth is probably that many people will repent a lie hoping it's the truth.

They're Not Police Dogs

British dog fanciers are insisting that the Alsatians (known as police dogs in America) are improperly called and state that this breed should be registered as German wolf dogs.

Rates Are Reduced By Michigan Bell Tel. Co.

For the purpose of avoiding further costly litigation, the Michigan Bell Telephone Company will comply with the May 9 order of the Public Utilities Commission by eliminating the charge of 25 cents per month for the hand telephone, offering optional flat rates for one and two party residential service in Detroit, and reducing rural line rates 25 cents per month, according to announcement by G. M. Welch, vice president and general manager of the Company, Monday. The rate changes will become effective on the date of the June bill for service mailed to each customer.

While protesting formally to the Commission that its revenues already are inadequate, the Company will place the changed rates in effect and leave the entire question of proper rates to the settlement of the case already in the courts, Mr. Welch said. Notice of compliance with the order will be filed in the offices of the Commission at Lansing on Tuesday.

Elimination of the hand telephone charge of 25 cents per month will become effective after it has been paid 18 consecutive months. The order of the Commission does not contemplate any refunds on hand telephone charges that have been paid over a period longer than 18 months. The optional flat rates to be offered on Detroit residential service, without limitation as to the number of originating local calls, will be at $6 per month for individual lines and $4.50 per month for two-party lines. The rural line rate reduction of 25 cents per month will affect all rural line rates, except that no rate shall be reduced to less than $1.50 per month.

"We want to avoid any additional costly litigation, and seek an early conclusion of the general rate case," Mr. Welch said. "We protest the Commission's opinion that the rate changes ordered for Detroit and rural line service will not reduce our revenues. No other result is possible than a substantial and serious loss of revenue. However, with the promise of the Commission that these rates are merely experimental, and with the expectation that the general rate case will be taken up within a reasonable period of time, it has been decided to put the changes into effect. The general rate case was started in 1928 as the result of a rate cut made by the Commission. The Company put those rates into effect and appealed to the courts."

Languages in India

India has 222 vernacular languages of very considerable variety. The languages spoken by the great majority of the people of India are grouped in seven families. The principal languages are western Hindi spoken by 100,000,000 people; Bengali, spoken by 50,000,000 people; and Telugu, Marathi, Tamil, Punjabi and Rajasthani, each of the language of from 12,000,000 to 25,000,000 of people. The languages of India are for the most part descended from the old Sanskrit. Hindustani, a dialect of Hindi, has become the literary language of Hindustan, and chief medium of communication among natives of one part of the empire and another. English, however, is understood by hundreds of thousands of persons, chiefly business people.

Changes

Don't you think the changes have grown rapid since 1900?

When the World War broke out we were all wearing long dresses and our hair was done up with large nests. The women were not allowed to have any cosmetics on. Well do our grandfathers or even fathers remember when the family got ready to go on a little jaunt, how they would all get into the car. Mother wore many clothes with a large hat and a veil, her shoes were very high with a long row of buttons up the side to hook up. The father was dressed in a long swallow tail coat with a very uncomfortable high stiff collar around his neck. He also had high shoes on. His hat had a wide rim that turned up and it sat on the top of his head in a very straight position. The children were dressed in similar costume. Finally all got into the car except father and he would proceed to start the car. He would hook his finger around the choke and with the left hand crank the car. Mother would endeavor to take care of the operation to be done in the front seat of the car until father "piled in" and then away they would go. And don't think it was such pleasant riding, driving over the gravel roads (most always bumpy). The engine never failed to give some trouble and a flat tire or two was to be expected in the best of cars. Believe it or not, in those days people did not motor just for the ride.

Now when the family goes for a jaunt (probably a hundred miles) they are dressed in as few clothes as possible and very modern. Their dresses are the length they prefer them. The women and young girls have short hair which probably has a permanent in it (never heard of around 1912). Their shoes are oxfords, sandals or pumps. They hardly wear hats any longer. It was considered terrible to go without one around 1912. The men wear as comfortable clothes as possible. They have light suits now, but earlier only dark clothes were worn. The children are dressed in similar manner. Finally they step into a nice shiny car which is long and modern in every convenience. Poor father doesn't have to crank the car; he can step on the starter or press on a button and the motor starts. How easily they travel mile upon mile over smooth pavement.

It is a good entertainment to look back at the changes that have in 1900 up to 1934. If you haven't already done it just for curiosity's sake do it. You will get many a good laugh from it.

EDITORIAL

If some of the older people were able to visit the Senior Economics class I think that some would find a distinct shock in store for them. The students of that class, and no doubt, in similar classes all over the United States, have forgotten the tenets of "laissez faire" and "rugged individualism" advanced in the past by our two leading political parties. They are thinking economically and find the old plans wanting.

The plans which they formulate are not exactly practical in some phases, but they all center about one practical theme, "rigorous government control." This is the moderate course, the first of two alternatives. The other is not government control but government ownership.

The student of today does not desire to be radical. However, he, and many older people as well, sees influences under the present system. Get hold of a good economics book (the Senior textbook is excellent) and read it. Think it through—don't just agree or disagree because of some preconceived ideas. This is a period of rapid change in which old ideas are being rapidly discarded. Find your new viewpoint and fight for it. Then, indeed, will the United States find the Progress which is her birthright.

Daisies Do Tell

Daisies, do tell what secret you hold in your long, slender petals so white; Why, in your snowy white loveliness you are shy as the stars of the night.

Daisies, do tell how you can smile in the dark and gloom of the day, And brighten the countenance of a passer-by.

As he travels on his way.

Daisies, do tell the secret Concealed in your heart of gold, For I'm sure its rich in beauty And happiness of wealth untold.

—Annabelle Vicary.

OUR NEIGHBORS

STOCKBRIDGE—Word was received yesterday of the death of Dr. Brogan, who for many years was a doctor in the village. Last Friday afternoon, he was operated on at the Mercy hospital in Jackson, and seemed to improve until Monday, when double pneumonia set in. He passed away about 6 p. m. Tuesday. —Brief-Sun.

CHARLOTTE—Mrs. Fred L. Van Vlack of Potteryville received a letter from her niece in Ellendale, N. Dakota, telling of the severe drought in that section. One rain this spring. "No feed for the cattle and the farmers are waiting for rain before sowing oats, barley, etc. Some have sown but unless rain should come it is useless. The dust storms have been terrible; some afternoons had to light the lamps to see in the house. The men had to wear goggles outside to work. There is sand piled up against the fences in places a foot high. The temperature varies from 105 down to 60 in a few hours. The air is so full of dust that pneumonia has set in with other complications and taken several neighbors by death. Fifteen carloads of cattle, many of them milk cows, were shipped out today due to the feed shortage." —Republican-Tribune.

HOWELL—Miss Wanda Bowdish, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bowdish of Gregory, has been honored by the State Committee of the Michigan Branch of the International Order of the King's Daughters and Sons by her selection to receive a six weeks scholarship in the summer school at Chautauqua, N. Y. —Republican-Press.

DEXTER—Village President W. F. Jerome has made arrangements for the establishment of a canning factory in the Hay building at the foot of Main and A Sts. —Leader.

MANCHESTER—Sand Lake in the Irish Hills was long considered one of the most beautiful of Michigan's many lakes, but today the water seems to be gradually receding from its shores. It is a lake with neither inlet nor outlet and it is a mystery to everyone why the water should disappear as it has been doing for the past several years. The lake is surrounded by cottages on all sides and they represent a large outlay of money. Other lakes in the vicinity show no evidence of a lowering of their water levels. —Enterprise.

TECUMSEH—The Clinton Woolen Manufacturing Co. of Clinton, now completing its first 100,000-yard woolen cloth order from the federal government, has announced receipt of a second order for 50,000 yards of overcoating material from the government. The cloth to be manufactured is for the navy, will be dark blue in color and 30-ounce material. After a brief shut-down of the night force, the mill will reopen again with a double shift, insuring steady work for all employees for five months. The double shift will mean the employment of 280 men and women, it was said. —Herald.

BRIGHTON—The Ploverville Review, published by James M. Gilbert for the last four years, has been sold to two Howell men, Andrew Rudnicki and Gordon Harmon who, it is reported, will take the paper over on June 1. Both the new proprietors have had years of experience in the newspaper business, and have been in the employ of the Livingston County Republican-Press at Howell for the past six years, and are both well fitted for the new enterprise which they are entering. —Argus.

DUNDEE—A Hudson car bearing an Ohio license and occupied by two people, caused a flurry of excitement here Sunday morning about nine o'clock. The occupants parked the car near the Meyer grocery store, and went to a restaurant. On returning, the car refused to start and another car ventured to push them. This failed to start the motor. Suddenly an explosion occurred, the motor flying to pieces, one of which tore a hole in the side of the Meyer store wall. The steel body of the car prevented the occupants from being injured. —Reporter.

Not Familiar With Wood

Wood is one of man's oldest and most useful materials for an almost unlimited number of purposes. Man's familiarity with it has very often bred, if not contempt, at least carelessness in its use, which has resulted in unsatisfactory service attributable not to the inherent qualities of the wood itself, but rather to its improper handling. One serious mistake is to neglect the moisture content of wood, says a bulletin of the Canadian department of the interior. In common with all other vegetable products, wood contains moisture. The amount so contained is usually expressed as a percentage of the bone-dry weight of the wood. Thus "25 per cent M. C." indicates that the weight of water present is one-quarter of the weight of the absolutely dry wood. The importance of the moisture lies in the fact that the dimensions of a block of wood are, within definite limits, dependent upon it.

Senior Carnival

Although the seniors had hoped for a little larger attendance, they feel that their carnival was quite a success.

A variety of attractions were afforded to those who attended. The new attractions that were offered this year included: The Magician, Miss Warsaw; a ten-cent-a-dance hall (but this time only a nickel); the music for which was provided by Ozie Hart's orchestra; the baked goods booth; a shot at the nigger babies; keno; fortune telling; and a "Fun Fest" given by the seventh and eighth grades.

To the seventh and eighth grade we offer our congratulations for the interesting program which they provided and which their audience enjoyed so much that they commented on the performance all during the evening.

The high points of interest during the evening was the one-act play entitled "Miss Civilization" and the coronation of the Blossom Queen. The success of the play goes to Miss Barros, director, and the cast which comprised Joan Blecker, Donald Osterle, Tom Kinsey, Max Young and Nicholas Panaritis. Bud Gildio, as Master of Ceremonies, placed the crown on Miss Leona Weinberg, who was elected Blossom Queen. Miss Barbara Blecker and Miss Helen Hofferik, who came in second and third place, respectively, attended Miss Weinberg. As an acknowledgment of the place which she honored she was presented with a lamp.

At the close of the coronation the crowd either went to the dance hall or to "The Orchard" where delicious lunches were served by the Sophomores.

Spending Less Than One Earns

Everyone knows that it is not what is earned, but what is saved, which measures the difference between success and failure.

This difference is so slight from day to day that it seems of no consequence, but in the aggregate of even a few years, it amounts to a sum of great importance.

The man or woman who saves that little bit, each day, week or month possesses that ability of "self-control," which assures financial success.

engineers just as accurately as "more Live Power per gallon." The amount of keen, responsive propelling power delivered by gasoline is the only true measure of its dollar-and-cent value. On that count, Standard Red Crown Superfuel gives you a full money's worth, plus. We know that. It has been established by tests of many gasolines.

A new car with a high compression engine requires Superfuel's responsiveness to perform at its best. And, if you have an older model which has begun to slow up, Standard Red Crown Superfuel is prescribed. Chances are there is still plenty of vigor in the motor. The extra Live Power in Superfuel will bring it out.

May we suggest that you get a tankful? Make Superfuel prove, in your engine, what has been said here about its economy and performance. Judge it critically—fairly.

Bird Expresses

The speeds of some birds are remarkable. In California a duck hawk was once timed while chasing its prey, and its speed was found to have reached nearly 105 miles an hour. Mallards timed in England and France have exceeded 50 miles an hour, and when pintails were chased by an airplane it was found that they flew at between 65 miles an hour. The common Canadian goose normally flies at between 40 and 45 miles an hour, but it has been estimated that speeds of over 100 miles an hour have been attained by frightened birds.

Abyssinians' Idea of World

Ostrich egg shells are considered highly decorative in Addis Ababa, Abyssinia, where the religion is a mixed form of Christianity and the church owns one-third of all the land. # THE STUDENT FRATERNITY MURDER

by Milton Propper

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Stricken during initiation into the Mu Beta Sigma fraternity, Stuart Jordan, university student, died almost immediately. His death was a tragedy to his friends and family. His father, a prominent lawyer, took charge of the investigation.

CHAPTER II.—An injection of cyanide is shown to have been the cause of Jordan's death. Rankin finds all the students who were present at the initiation. He only left with the student, Rankin, who was a detective. Rankin also was a detective, and he left.

CHAPTER III.—Two students from the vicinity of Vandellia, Michigan, home town, Ralph Buckley and Walter Randall, figure in the investigation. Also the fact that a St. Louis physician, Arnold Prince, was chiefly responsible for Jordan's admission into the fraternity. Rankin, present at the initiation, also engages Rankin's attention.

CHAPTER IV.—A significant fact discovered is that a student, Larry Palmer, Mu Beta Sigma member, was charged with the initiation and his keys, including a key of the fraternity house, stolen from him.

CHAPTER V.—Jordan has been paying by check, $100 a month to a woman named Mrs. Fletcher. The canceled checks are not among his effects. How and where he got the money is a mystery. He was twenty-two years old, when the boy's large fortune became his own. Jordan's father, a prominent lawyer, was the university laboratory. A student, Ned Patterson, is suspected of having stolen the money. A woman, Ned Patterson, is suspected of having stolen the money. A woman, Ned Patterson, is suspected of having stolen the money.

CHAPTER VI.—The letter to from Stuart Jordan, a student, was found in the possession of a student, Rankin. Rankin, a student, was found in the possession of a student, Rankin. Rankin, a student, was found in the possession of a student, Rankin.

"Can you swear, Mr. Patterson, he asked sharply, "that no use was made of either poison you selected? Either for your own purpose, or by anyone else in connection with the murder?"

The student looked up listlessly. "No one except myself touched them since I took them, sir."

"Then what happened to almost half of the coffee?" Mr. Hayward reported the loss of two grains of atropine and six drops of coffee, and all the missing atropine was in one vial in your dresser. But the other contained only three drops of coffee."

"I spilled a bit in pouring it out," Patterson responded unhesitatingly. "I was nervous anyhow, and hurried for fear Ken might return and interrupt me. And with the liquid, my hand shook a little and some fell outside the test-tube. He spoke earnestly, studying Rankin intently. "I'm telling; the truth, sir," he added, "whether you believe me or not."

The detective definitely reached a decision. "I do believe you," he said more kindly. "In fact, there is just one more point I'd like settled before you go; then you can leave with Mr. Stanton and Mr. Crawford; and forget about the thefts. As far as I am interested, they are closed books."

Patterson's eyes lighted with relief and Stanton expressed his appreciation.

"That's mighty fine of you, Mr. Rankin," it helps the fraternity out of a very bad hole. I'm speaking for all of us in saying how grateful we are."

"My question is about a student named Ralph Buckley," Rankin pursued, disregarding his thanks. "He is a freshman and a good friend of Larry Palmer. You recall him, Patterson, I'm sure; during rushing season, Palmer sponsored him as a candidate. Only he failed to make the grade and was not pledged."

"Ralph Buckley?" The boy nodded. "Yes, I remember him," he said bluntly. "I expected you would, because I understand it was you who voted against accepting him. That's exactly what I'm after—why you didn't approve of him. Was it some information Jordan had given you that resulted in your veto?"

"Information from Stuart, sir?" A puzzled look crept into Patterson's face, echoed by his query. "That's news to me; I didn't even know he was acquainted with the fellow. He never once mentioned his name to me."

It was the detective's turn to be surprised. "Do you mean he had nothing to do with your rejecting Buckley? Then why did you object to him?"

"Because he happened to know I gambled at the Morton club," the sponsor returned. "As I told you, I wasn't anxious to have my fraternity brothers find that out; call it a guilty conscience. And if he was a prospective brother, it would have been just as uncomfortable. He had visited the club several times and seen me there, though I didn't learn who he was until the first smoker. Still, he couldn't help guessing my business." He paused with a touch of bitterness. "Besides, if he frequented a place like that, I figured he wasn't desirable material for the chapter."

"And you were correct," Rankin agreed. "Thank you, Mr. Patterson; that is all I wanted."

He rose to close the interview. "But a word of advice before you go," he said, suddenly severe again. "Now that you've finished with the Morton club, you had better stay away in the future. This should be a lesson to you, mingling with a bunch of swindlers and card-sharps will get you nothing but trouble. And you may not be lucky enough to get off so easily the next time."

When Rankin returned to headquarters after a belated lunch, he found the long expected reply to his inquiries at Aberdeen awaiting him. It was just a telegram, verifying Walter Randall's tale of the gambling episode in the dormitories. Buckley's run-in with Jordan and his subsequent expulsion from the college; the complete report was following by mail. But as soon as he read it, the detective saw out a warrant for Buckley's arrest. Unlike Patterson's case, he felt confident of his grounds; the freshman's incriminating activities could only mean that he had a hand in the crime. And too, unlike the sponsor, his conduct proved that he was an unprincipled and incorrigible rascal, for whom there could be no excuses or extenuating considerations. The only disquieting element in Rankin's assurance was the contradictory evidence of the lawyer's guilt.

In deference to Mr. Warwick, he decided to consult him before executing his warrant. The supervisor had cooperated with him wholeheartedly, when it would have been more advantageous to obstruct his inquiry and hush up unnecessary publicity. In return, now that even more unpleasant notoriety impended, Rankin felt he owed him some warning of his move. Accordingly he phoned Mr. Warwick's office and informed him that he would call on him. He requested him to send for Buckley at the same time, to interview him in the supervisor's presence.

That done, he drove to Mr. Warwick's office, along Walnut street, several blocks from the campus. They were on the second floor of an ancient brown building with a high porch, once a private residence; and consisted of an outer room, untidily furnished with a waiting bench, book-cases and a secretary's desk, and an inner private one. A flaxen-haired young lady at the desk was the only occupant of the office Rankin entered. He stated his name and business; and she plugged a connecting wire into the next room.

"I'll just let Mr. Warwick know you're here," she addressed him with mingled interest and respect. "There's a young man in there with him; but he said he would see you as soon as you got here."

"A young man?" Rankin repeated, interested. "Then Mr. Buckley has arrived, already."

The secretary shook her head. "No, that wasn't him," she replied. "It's some student, who wanted to consult Mr. Warwick about dropping out of school. He ought to take it up with the dean of his own department, really. I told him; but I guess Mr. Warwick will tend to it for him."

At that moment, the door to the inner office opened and unexpectedly enough Walter Randall appeared. He was as surprised at meeting Rankin as the latter was to see him. Now in civilian clothes, they accentuated his slumped, slight stature, and the pallor of his small symmetrical features; they had an almost sickly hue. He greeted the detective with a quiet pleasant smile.

The coincidence of encountering the boy responsible for his own errand made Rankin ask quietly:

"Did you speak to Mr. Warwick about the matter we discussed in your room? The trouble between Ralph Buckley and Jordan at Aberdeen last year?"

Randall responded soberly. "No, Mr. Rankin, I've been too busy with my own troubles. I believe I said the other day, I couldn't last out the year at school with these junks of mine. Well, it looks as if I was right."

"I'm sorry to hear that," Rankin said sympathetically. "I didn't realize your condition was that serious."

"Yes, I've just been talking over when I can leave," the student returned. "I'm checking out Monday morning or afternoon at the latest. I brought Mr. Warwick a letter from my doctor at home, advising my nihilist continuing this term; and he has been mighty decent about arranging for another leave of absence. The letter was all I needed. But I'm afraid," he added quietly, "it means my stopping school for good."

"Well, I wish you the best of luck, Mr. Randall," the detective said. "The university has your address in case I should have to get in touch with you."

Mr. Warwick appeared in the door of his private office. "You can consult Dean Stone of the business school," he informed the student, "and complete your arrangements for going in your own department. Your records will be sent there and filed. Come in, Mr. Rankin; how are you?" He shook hands with Rankin and led him into his room, similarly disordered and filled with book-shelves. Closing the door, he motioned him to a chair beside his desk. Scattered on top lay the records of Randall's transfer to Philadelphia, his filled-out matriculation blanks and the doctor's certificates.

The supervisor gathered these up; and as he seated himself, offered Rankin a cigarette. "I've followed your instructions," he lighted a cigarette himself. "And Mr. Buckley will be here shortly. He's from Jordan's home town, Vandellia, isn't he? I suppose you think he might know something about him that Mr. Merrick couldn't tell you."

The detective spoke gravely. "No, Mr. Warwick, my business with Buckley is more unpleasant than that. I am here to make an arrest for young Jordan's murder; and I regret to inform you I have a warrant to take him into custody."

Sudden anxiety clouded the supervisor's features and his gaze reflected his surprise and concern. He pushed back his chair to regard Rankin. "Arrest Buckley?" he exclaimed. "Why he isn't a member of Mu Beta Sigma at all! Surely you don't consider him guilty of the crime, Mr. Rankin."

"Some student did it," Rankin returned bluntly. "And I've ascertained how he entered the chapter room during the initiation. I had Buckley in mind when I asked you whether a student expelled from one college could get admitted to another by a false high school record. He also went to Aberdeen last year, and because of Jordan, he was disgracefully dismissed for gambling. Besides, he had other reasons for hating him."

Increasingly perturbed, Mr. Warwick pursed his lips. "Where did you hear about this?"

"In the first place from the young man who just left your office, Walter Randall. He told me that Buckley, where he heard of the incident though he didn't know either boy well."

"He can vouch for that?" Momentarily, this new charge appeared to disturb the supervisor more than that of murder. "If that is true, I must take immediate steps to have Buckley's matriculation stricken from the rolls."

Rankin was emphatic. "You can be sure I verified all my discoveries about Buckley, Mr. Warwick. In fact, I promised Randall to get the proofs from Aberdeen to save him from being involved in the case. This is the answer I received today."

He gave Warwick the telegram to read and then proceeded to summarize the evidence incriminating the student. The supervisor listened with lowering brow and ever tightening jaw to the details of his motive for the crime and his opportunity to commit it. Asking only a few pointed questions, he shook his head solemnly at the conclusion of the account.

"It's very upsetting, Rankin," he commented, "that every once in a while, an utter rotter finds his way into college. Fortunately that isn't often; the average representative student, whatever his weakness is, is of high caliber. You can usually count on his appreciation of fair play to make him essentially trustworthy. Still, it's hard to believe that even Buckley would actually poison the boy because of their feud."

"And just as difficult to conceive of any other explanation for his deliberate plotting," Rankin returned brusquely. "I realize that. But before you serve your warrant, I should like an opportunity to question him. It's barely possible there is some mistake; and I am anxious to save the university additional notoriety. This dreadful affair has already ruined our reputation."

"I only want a few minutes," Mr. Warwick argued persuasively. "It is for the boy's benefit, if by any chance at all he had nothing to do with Jordan's death. And it's also to your own advantage. Of course, if he cannot offer any vindication, the law must take its course."

With nothing to lose by this concession and wishing to be reasonable, Rankin nodded.

"Very well, I'll hear what he has to say," he agreed. "But I'm afraid you're deluding yourself, Mr. Warwick. In all my experience, I've never known a clearer, less dissemblable case."

"The ringing of the buzzer from the outer office interrupted further conversation. Over the phone, the secretary informed her employer that Mr. Buckley had arrived; and the supervisor immediately instructed that he enter."

Showingly the detective studied the student Gilmore had described as attractive but dangerous. And, despite his virility and broad clear profile, Rankin was no more favorably impressed. In his features, flitting slightly at the Magyar or Tartar, his eyes were too narrow and close above his fine nostrils. They lacked the directness of candor and excesses had drawn lines beneath them. His mouth was heavy, twisting in an unpleasant smile, and his firm chin mingled strength and surliness. Pleasantly formidable, he was far from an inexperienced youngster; clearly he possessed subtlety and intelligence.

On being introduced to the detective, he showed no fear; as if on guard, he faced both officials truthfully, if not in actual defiance.

Mr. Warwick began without offering him a chair. "My reasons for sending for you are serious, Mr. Buckley," he stated. "According to the record you filed on your enrollment; you matriculated here directly from Vandellia high school. That was untrue; you had already attended Aberdeen college from which, I have learned, you were disgracefully expelled. You gained admittance here through a fraudulent high school record, containing no notice of your previous enrollment. He extended the telegram. "What have you to say to this?"

"I've followed your instructions," he lighted a cigarette himself. "And Mr. Buckley will be here shortly. He's from Jordan's home town, Vandellia, isn't he? I suppose you think he might know something about him that Mr. Merrick couldn't tell you."

The detective spoke gravely. "No, Mr. Warwick, my business with Buckley is more unpleasant than that. I am here to make an arrest for young Jordan's murder; and I regret to inform you I have a warrant to take him into custody."

Though the detection must have shaken him, Buckley might have been indifferent as he read the message. "I don't suppose I can say anything. Since you have the facts directly from Aberdeen, why deny them?"

"You could scarcely expect to get through four years of school, undiscovered," Mr. Warwick spoke in censure. "This means the end of your career here, you understand—or for that matter, at any other college. At the same time, I'm pleased to emphasize his words, 'you've placed yourself in an extremely dangerous position.'"

"Dangerous? How?" A slight quiver in the boy's voice betrayed his first alarm.

"This matter is trifling beside another charge against you," the supervisor replied. "Your one chance of escaping it, young man, is through absolute frankness. I'll do my best to help you and Mr. Rankin has no wish to be hard on you; but unless you tell us the complete truth in every detail, I cannot do a thing for you."

"The truth? What do you mean, sir?" But Buckley's bewilderment did not ring convincingly and his eyes distinctly reflected the alarm of comprehension.

Rankin lost patience at his fencing. "Mr. Warwick has warned you, Buckley," he broke in sternly. "It is a waste of time to pretend you have no idea why I am here. It is only in deference to him that I give you this opportunity to exonerate yourself if you can and refrain from arresting you at once."

"Arrest me for what?" the student

"Arrest Me for What?" the Student Protested. "I Haven't Done Anything Wrong."

protested. "I haven't done anything wrong."

"For the murder of Stuart Jordan last Tuesday night during the initiation at the Mu Beta Sigma house?" If it was Rankin's intention to remove the last vestige of Buckley's assurance, he succeeded. Stark terror replaced his boldness; he started spasmodically, his features suddenly pallid. But his consternation was lessened by amazement and perplexity, written in his drooping jaw, that the detective found disturbing.

"Jordan's murder?" he cried in horror. "Oh, my G—d! I had nothing to do with that—I don't know anything about it!"

"But you didn't like him, did you?" Rankin continued in charge of the situation. "In fact, you hated him because you considered him responsible for your dismissal from Aberdeen. You believed he had reported your gambling to the college authorities. He sides, he denounced you as a cheat."

"That was a d—d lie! I always played a straight game!" Momentarily, Buckley's resentment overcame his apprehension and his eyes flashed. Disregarding his outburst, Rankin pressed his attack aggressively.

"And when you discovered Jordan at Philadelphia, Buckley, you had even more cause to hate him," he insisted. "He was acquainted with your trouble at Aberdeen, which you hoped to suppress; and he might have guessed the artifice by which you enrolled here. But whether he did or not, there was danger that he would report your past to Mr. Warwick or some other official and again get you dismissed. Especially knowing Larry Palmer, if he supposed your friendship with him was for some dishonest purpose. You heard from Palmer that any chance of your joining the fraternity was blasted by Ned Patterson, who was Jordan's sponsor. Naturally, you attributed his opposition to your enemy's interference and he threatened you still further."

As the detective paused, Buckley's silence and twitching features were a sufficient reply; and he pursued his indictment with telling effect.

"Immediately after that, you pumped young Palmer in his unguarded moments about Mu Beta Sigma's secret codes and ritual. You learned its passwords and customs; the kind of robes members of the fraternity wore at their initiation ceremonies. About nine days ago, he told you this year's installation would be held on Tuesday night at eight-thirty. You questioned him about the average attendance at them. And during your thinking hours, he let slip enough of the proper signs of recognition to enable you to enter the chapter's private chamber past the sergeant at arms."

"My interest was harmless!" Buckley insisted feebly. "I was just curious about frats, like others who don't belong to them, Mr. Rankin."

"Yes, so you gave Palmer to understand that. Rankin met the evasion almost exultantly. "Yet you made every preparation for getting into the ceremony yourself on Tuesday night. You see, I know all about that, too—how you persuaded young Palmer to visit the Morton club that evening, and drugged him to insure his absence from the house and a place for you to fill. He stilled the boy's attempt to speak with a harsh gesture. "You stole his keys to enter the house after the ritual began. You abandoned him at the club at eight-thirty-five and taxied to your apartment for a robe you had obtained in advance to pass as a member. That came from Kingston, the costumer. By eight-forty-five, you had entered the house, where you slipped into the gown in the deserted hallway." He paused before concluding. "Buckley, the evidence is too complete and damning to mean anything except that you plotted to murder Stuart Jordan in revenge for...

In his dread, the student interrupted despairingly: "No, no, that wasn't my purpose at all! I swear it was something different—to get hold of something inside! I didn't hear of his death until afterward."

"You didn't?" the detective began incredulously. "You can hardly expect me to believe that."

But Mr. Warwick snatched at the possible loophole before he could express his skepticism.

"To get hold of something?" he demanded. "Just what were you after?"

"A check I had forged," Buckley answered unhesitatingly, almost eagerly. "To prevent discovery, I had to recover it before it was investigated. If I had the proof of the forgery, I could have got away with it."

The supervisor knif his brow gravely. "Recover it from whom? I don't understand; whose check did you forge?"

"Larry Palmer's. It was for two hundred and fifty dollars; I needed that amount to pay for my tuition this second semester of school. I couldn't borrow it and I was almost broke; I tried to win it gambling at the Morton club, but—had a streak of bad luck. And I didn't want to quit school."

"How long ago was this forgery committed?" Mr. Warwick queried. "You had better make a clean breast of it," he added warningly. "It's your only hope of avoiding the more serious charge of murder."

The student's unassuaged panic drove him to speak freely. "I intend to, Mr. Warwick," he assured anxiously. "I had been planning it for some time, but only carried it out on Friday, February sixth. The term began on the second; and you know all bills were payable not later than the ninth. Monday one week afterward. So I had to draw the money from Larry's bank before that."

As he spoke, Rankin saw his carefully constructed case collapsing. He could not disregard the student's statements; if confirmed by the bank and the evidence of the check itself, they explained his activities in a way that freed him of all suspicion of the murder. Especially as no part of Rankin's arraignment accounted for where he might have secured the confederate. And in the lesser crime, the detective was no more concerned than in Patterson's theft; that could be left to Mr. Warwick.

"Just how did you manage it?" He put the next question himself. "The signature, the blank check and cashing it?"

"As you've probably found out," Buckley addressed him directly. "I have been palming around with Larry for the past five months or so. We take the same courses; and several times, I studied with him at his home upstairs in the fraternity house. When I looked through some of his assignments in his bureau, I learned he kept his correspondence and check book in the top drawer. Then I also happened to accompany him to his bank, the Security Trust company on Walnut street near Thirty-sixth, and watched him make deposits; the tellers got to know me. So that when I decided to profit by my information, it was quite easy to get one of his checks and to copy his handwriting from his school notes. My imitation was good and I cashed it at the bank without any trouble. The only danger came later, after the bank statement and canceled checks were returned to Larry. That occurred monthly, I discovered, at the end of the first week; he always received them the following Monday."

"Monday, you say?" Rankin inquired sharply. "And you forged the check on February sixth? That means it would come back this month on the ninth—the night before initiation."

"That's right, sir," the student nodded, "and that was the risk I ran. Once Larry had a chance to notice the discrepancy in the statement, investigation at the bank would implicate me. I had to steal it as soon as he got it. Of course, I couldn't prevent the statement from showing the mistake; but if I had the evidence, nothing could be proved even if I was suspected. But I could never get hold of it among all his other checks and papers in the bureau while he was anywhere around."

"So you planned to remove it Tuesday evening instead," Mr. Warwick remarked bluntly, "while the chapter was busy with the installation ceremonies."

"Well, I had to use my opportunity. You see how lucky I was to have it at the very moment I needed it. Otherwise, I shouldn't have succeeded. Except for the chapter room, the house was dark and practically deserted; it was easy for me to enter unobserved. That was why I asked Larry about the attendance—to learn how much chance there was of running into anyone in the hall or upstairs."

"And you wore the robe as a disguise, of course," Rankin asserted.

"Yes, in case that happened," Buckley admitted. "I ordered it from Kingston—a week before initiation. According to Larry's description," He shrugged. "Any brother I met would take me for a member and suppose I had just left the services; he'd think nothing of seeing me enter Larry's room. As a matter of fact, I met nobody. I merely closed the door and searched until I found what I came for; I slipped off my gown just before quitting the house and was in the street again by nine o'clock."

Rankin bent forward. "Then none of the boys might remember your being upstairs between eight-forty-five and nine? A witness to your movements would be valuable to verify your story."

"The student shook his head slowly. "No, I didn't run into anyone from the time I entered till I left."

"And you didn't return then, to Mr. Palmer, the detective observed severely. "What was your object in drugging him at the club in the first place and letting him shift for himself?"

"I didn't intend to harm him," Buckley assured him promptly. "But that was the only way I could go through his pockets. You see, he might not have put the bank account away, but he carrying it with him as he had only received it the day before. Then I wouldn't need to visit the house at all. I hunted through his clothes while pretending to talk confidentially to him; the place was empty enough to get away with it. But he didn't have it. At the same time, I took his key which I used to open the front door. Then, as you've already learned, I took a taxi to my apartment for my costume."

"Can you tell me anything about the car or the chap who drove it to help me trace him?"

"No, my mind was too full of my plans and I didn't pay much attention to him, I'm afraid."

"Well, what has become of the check?" Rankin asked next. "Is it destroyed?"

"No, I kept it; in fact, I have it with me now. As long as I hold it, I figured it is harmless. And it was barely possible that for some reason, as in this very case, it might prove valuable to me again."

"Give it to me, Buckley," the detective directed, extending his hand.

From an inner pocket, the student willingly produced a small slip of paper that went far to substantiate his narrative. Drawn on the Security Trust company by Lawrence Palmer to Buckley's order, it was dated February sixth; the amount was two hundred and fifty dollars. On the back, the latter's endorsement and the single stamp "Paid 3-7," the date of the March monthly clearing, proved indisputably it had been cashed directly by the bank. Particularly, Rankin compared the slanting, somewhat wavering writing on the face in imitation of Palmer's style with the firm straight characters of Buckley's undisguised indorsement.

He gave it to Mr. Warwick. "I'm turning this over to you, Mr. Warwick," he stated. "As long as it appears to have no connection with the murder, I shan't take any steps regarding it. You can do as you please."

The supervisor indicated the culprit. "Then you are satisfied Buckley is innocent of the crime, Mr. Rankin?"

"Not entirely; I can't be sure until his statement has been investigated thoroughly. But it certainly seems I've been working on a mistaken theory," Rankin acknowledged candidly. "Except for your advice, I might have made a grave error. I have no desire to cause the university unnecessary unpleasantness."

Buckley's audible sigh of relief was echoed by Mr. Warwick's gratification. "That's very good of you, Mr. Rankin," he said. "Now it will be easy to hush the matter up. It isn't likely that young Palmer will care to prosecute."

A few minutes later, when the detective left Mr. Warwick and the student together and took his departure, the warrant of arrest was still in his pocket, unexecuted.

CHAPTER IX

The Stone Wall

It was a disgruntled and decidedly perplexed detective who returned to headquarters at four o'clock Friday afternoon, three days after the murder. In turn, two suspects—Ned Patterson and Ralph Buckley—had cleared themselves; the evidence he had so painstakingly collected had disintegrated—before explanations—that changed their value. The only important case remaining was that incriminating the lawyer. And against him, Rankin was not yet prepared to move. Though a civil lawyer, Mr. Fletcher was acquainted with the subtleties of criminal law, and no mean opponent; it was no trifling matter to charge him with murder until his facts were altogether irrefragable. First he wanted to ferret out and marshal every possible proof of his guilt. He dared leave no loophole through which the attorney might escape because of his position or superior knowledge of legal technicalities.

Momentarily, Rankin experienced a qualm of alarm lest if again developed that he was dealing a hard hand. Then, unless Jordan's guardian was so far, he had unearthed only a motive to implicate Mr. Morrice—the estate his nephew would inherit at twenty-two, if he did not forfeit it by improper conduct. But even supposing that in some mysterious manner, the uncle could have got into the initiation chamber, he had no opportunity to commit the crime if he actually came east from Vandellia on Wednesday morning. Nevertheless, as the sole remaining suspect, his alibi de-

Fletcher hoped to bide his guilt? Or was his indignation sincere? Unable to judge as yet, he met it without the least hint of perturbation.

"I am not aware, Mr. Fletcher, that I've overstepped the bounds of my authority," he said evenly.

"You haven't?" As the lawyer's wrath increased, he outwardly became more subdued. "What right had you in the first place, to distress my wife just because she was in the vicinity of the university? She had been interested in Stuart and merely went to learn if there were new developments in the case. Not content with that, you questioned her again last night, and at my own home, too. And you intimidated her into letting you examine my grounds and property. Oh, I've heard all about your activities and I warn you to watch your step or you'll surely be in hot water."

Rankin ignored the threat. "Who gave you this information?" he inquired. "Mrs. Fletcher?"

"Indirectly, yes, but not until my chauffeur, Max, told me what he witnessed last night. From the servants' quarters, he noticed a light on in the garage. He got up quietly to investigate and saw you and my wife together. This he reported to me and also Mrs. Fletcher's indiscreet trip to the university yesterday. When I taxed her, she told me why she had gone there; but she was kind enough not to want to make you any trouble over what had happened."

manded attention which thus far in the press of events it had not received. This was a task for Gilmore, the detective decided, until he could handle it himself.

The most serious weakness in his theory of Mr. Fletcher's guilt, he realized with fresh dismay, was the extra person at the initiation. It was certain someone besides the thirty-one brothers already identified had attended; but unless he was Ben Crawford, his identity was still an enigma. But Crawford had every right to be present and hence no apparent reason to deny his whereabouts. Only his peculiar tale of the "pick-up" rendezvous that had not materialized was responsible for whatever suspicion he was under. And the nurse with whom he claimed to have spent the night could not check his movements; he had not joined her until three-quarters of an hour after the murder. On the other hand, if he told the truth about his absence from the ceremony, then the unknown intruder, and not Mr. Fletcher, must inevitably be the murderer he sought.

As he reached the central detective bureau, Rankin resolved to delay dealing with the lawyer at least until Gilmore reported his interview with Crawford's nurse friend. But it was Mr. Fletcher himself who forced the issue, for he was there, waiting to see him. He had first phoned about two-thirty. Captain Thomas informed the detective, and learning that Rankin was expected back later in the afternoon, stated he would stop in when the court closed.

"He got here about forty-five minutes ago," the captain related. "It sounds like something serious, Tommy; I was talking to him just before you came in and he seemed quite upset, though I can't say what about. Now he's in the empty office down the corridor."

"Thank you, Captain," Rankin returned. "I'll see him right away."

As he entered the room in question, he too sensed the promise of trouble brewing. Mr. Fletcher's greeting was harsh and he was manifestly angry. But typical of the man, his resentment smoldered, controlled and im-placeable, and did not express itself in any outburst of temper. At the same time, he was uneasy, as if anxious and

Latin America Supplies

Most of World's Coffee

Although over fifty countries produce the humble but necessary coffee bean, the world looks to Latin America for 80 per cent of its coffee needs. Coffee is the principal crop of many tropical countries in the Western hemisphere. While the Americas produce large crops of corn, potatoes, and other vegetables which were first discovered in this part of the world, it is of interest to know that coffee was originally imported from the East.

The discovery of coffee as a beverage is sometimes accredited to an Arabian goat-herder who observed that his four-footed charges, after browsing on coffee plants, became unusually sleek and healthy. Upon sampling the coffee cherries, each containing twin coffee beans, he was disappointed. He then tried roasting the beans and brewing them in water and the result was invigorating, stimulating and healthful.

Some historians claim that coffee was brought to Arabia from Kaffa, Africa, which may account for its name. From Arabia the beverage spread to Constantinople, and eventually to Europe. Some assert that coffee was first brought to the New world by the Dutch while others give credit to the French. In any event, the fact remains that Central and South America produce nine-tenths of the world's coffee supply, of which the United States imports more than any other country, and the people of the United States consume approximately 37,000,000 cups of it every year.

Mint, an Ancient Plant, Is Used in Various Ways

Mint is not a bough plant, although it has come down in the world, for at one time this fragrant herb was the associate of kings and its possession a measure of wealth.

The mints grow wild all over Europe, says the Montreal Herald, and the herbal use of different species has been known for centuries. Pliny wrote of it in A. D. 70, and in the days of ancient Rome mint was used as a bath salt, as a venet to cure headache, and as a herb to spruce up the floors of temples and public buildings.

Mint is one of the plants of the Bible, and in the book of Matthew you may read of the Pharisees paying tithes of mint, anise, and cummin.

The spirituous cinnamon vine, used in such large quantities for the production of chewing gum, is native of many hedgehogs. Possibly it was the same species which the Israelites employed for seasoning their food, a custom which has been passed on to the present day. As a seasoning, there are several methods of using mint.

In England mint sauce is regarded as essential when lamb is served. In Italy it is often boiled with vegetables, and perhaps it was from the Italians that we learned this method of seasoning.

The peppermint of commerce is obtained from the leaves of mentha piperita. It is used in sweets and in medicinal preparations for colic.

Train Seven Years Late

A train on the Gulf and Interstate railway arrived at its destination more than seven years behind time. The train started from Beaumont, Texas, bound for Port Bolivar, 11:30 a. m. on September 8, 1906. The distance is 71 miles, and the train was due in Port Bolivar at 1:55 p. m. When it reached High Island it was surrounded by waters from the Gulf of Mexico, which had flooded the railway. Eventually the road was rebuilt, and when the rusty locomotive was examined she was found fit to complete her journey. She was fired up, and amid cheers of every one she moved off, creaking and "rheumatic" in her joints, but still serviceable. The news was telegraphed to Port Bolivar, and when the train, more than seven years late, arrived, half a dozen of the original passengers assembled to greet it. Montreal Herald.

The Aztec Calendar

The famous Aztec calendar stone in the National Museum of Mexico is a block of basalt weighing 25 tons and having a diameter of 11 feet. Engraving the head of the sun god is a diagram bearing hieroglyphs representing the divisions of time and the Aztec method of numbering the years. The first year was called Tochtli, or rabbit; the second, Acatl, or reed; the third, Teotl, or flint; the fourth, Calli, or house. The years were further arranged by thirteens, four such periods making a Mexican year. When the City of Mexico was taken by Cortez in 1521, and the great temple destroyed, the calendar stone was left in the square. It was buried in 1555, and not recovered again until 1790.

The Barnacle Goose

The barnacle goose, a small goose closely related to the brant, owes its name to a curious belief which gained much credence prior to the seventeenth century. The distant Arctic nesting places of these birds were as yet undiscovered and it was believed that the goose developed from the barnacle, a small crustacean that grows on wood that is exposed to salt water. Theorists who accepted this strange theory got into endless disputes as to whether or not the flesh of the barnacle goose should be eaten on Fridays or fast days, for they were unable to decide whether it should be considered meat or fish.
