WIFE

If this my pen could utter words,
Which it can neither write nor speak,
It would not be a Latin phrase,
Nor epitaph in French, nor Greek,
But in some quiet, shaded nook,
On summer eve by babbling brook,
Where zephyrs fan the birds to sleep,
It's there—it's there I'll meet with you—
And whisper words you know are true,
Down through the years, almost two centuries.

You've been a wife with allure,
To every interest of your home,
Full wide awake you've bravely come,
Through disappointment, sickness,
care,
Firmly you've stood, yes, stood four squares,
Appreciated, yes, I'll say, far more than I express today.
A husband's bond, I here impart
With retrospective loving heart.

Chinese man's chance
"Chinese man's chance" is generally employed in the sense of "a very poor chance" or "no chance at all." It is thought that the phrase had its origin in the early mining days in the West, when the Chinese, who were in a hopeless minority, had no chance at all if caught in any infraction of the law.

The Boots they Wear

by Lawrence Hawthorne

We learn the trails men travel from the kind of boots they wear!
Their old shoes soon advise us whether happiness or care
More frequently attends them as the path of life they tread.
While new shoes make prediction of the course that lies ahead.

His shoes could tell some thrilling tales about a man's career—
Some stories that, perhaps, he'd rather have nobody hear;
Yes, every step he takes, no matter where the path may lead,
Records a message on his boots for clever folks to read.

The care a fellow gives his shoes has this to say to me:
His plan of life is good or bad in just the same degree!
And every time he "shines 'em up" I'm sure he wants to feel
That he's a little nearer to his personal ideal.

Good comrades are a pair of shoes and friend—ly all the day.
With faithfulness they do their part to ease life's rugged way.
Yet though they bravely shield the one whose confidence they share,
We learn the trails men travel from the kind of boots they wear.

First Wall Paper

Wall hangings were first invented as inexpensive substitutes for the costly and sumptuous hangings of brocade, damask, tapestry, etc., used in the palaces and the great houses of Europe in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Wall paper, painted in China was used in Europe as early as the middle of the sixteenth century, although it did not become fashionable until a century later. The invention of the block as it is used in printing wall paper is attributed to Jean Papillon, a French engraver, in 1674. In 1682 a patent was granted in England to William Bayley for the manufacture of paper hangings. Paper in continuous rolls was first made in 1820 by Zuber in Alsace.

Sensitive Skin

Human skin can develop such sensitiveness that it becomes painfully itched and even becomes when exposed to daylight. This condition is brought about by the cutting of certain foods or by the application of certain compounds such as kerosene. Those afflicted are obliged to live in darkened rooms and stay indoors at night. (The World Weekly)

Colors of Humming Birds

The beautiful colors of the humming birds are due to refractions of sunlight from the feathers. Many iridescent hues are produced, and the color varies according to the angle of the light. This is why the colors seem to change as the birds change their position. Our common Rubythroat is a bright, shining green color on its upper parts, and purplish on its wings and tail. Only the male has the red throat. So beautiful are the colors that Audubon, the great bird authority, has called these birds "glittering fragments of the rainbow." Others have called them "feathered gems."

First Prohibition Law

Maine adopted what may be said to be the first prohibition law in 1819, when she passed an act drastically restricting the sale of liquors. It proved inadequate, however, and a new and stricter law was passed in 1851. When Georgia was founded in 1732, the trustees prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors, but 20 years later when the colony was taken over by the crown, Jamaica rum was introduced and legalized.

Buenos Aires

Francisco Alpi is called the Queen City of South America because of its magnificence and its splendid metropolitan character. It is situated at the base of a vast range.

Home of the Diamond

India was the original home of the diamond as a jewel. For centuries India remained the sole source of Europe's diamond supply. Diamonds were discovered in Brazil in 1730 and in South Africa in 1867. South Africa furnishes 60 per cent of the world's supply.

JERUSALEM SCHOOL NEWS

The Jerusalem school closed the October school month with the percentage of attendance 99.6.

Those neither absent nor tardy were Joyce Hoffman, Joyce and Janice Haskley, Arlene Koester, Donald and Dan McLean, Marian Schiller, Billy Stierle, Helen, Clara, Elmer and Robert Trinkle.

The officers of the Jerusalem Civic Health club for the month of October were: President, Helen Trinkle; secretary, Billy Stierle.

We have made more new things for our room. We have made a language chart. On it are the names of all the pupils. There is a little slip of paper after each name. When we use poor language the red side is on the "poor" which means danger. When we use good language the white side is turned to "good" which means good language. This helps us very much to increase our correct language.

The seventh grade made the "Land of Columbus" in the sand table. The beginners, first, second and third grades studied it. Then they wrote stories of Columbus, and drew his ships. The fourth, fifth and sixth grades also wrote stories about Columbus. We have made a Columbus book and are putting the stories in it.

We have pictures on the wall about Columbus and his trip.

We have a new picture of Admiral Byrd which we have put up.

Every week our school receives the Current Events. We read them and every Friday we report on what we have read.

We are learning the festival songs, as we go on learning them we look for pictures describing the song, for our music scrap book.

In art work we have been working on Halloween pictures, and painting leaves.

The visitors for the month were Walter Koch of Quincy and Earl Koch.

Oldest and Largest Dog Cemetery in the World

On an island in the Seine river, near Paris, is one of the oldest and largest dog cemeteries in the world. More than 20,000 dogs are buried there.

In commenting on this event a correspondent of the New York Times writes: "Many of the tombstones are as elaborate as are to be found in any cemetery for humans, and the epitaphs are as varied in their pathos, affection, exaggeration and grotesqueness. Save in one respect one might think reading the inscriptions, that one was in the presence of human remains. The one difference is that the city authorities forbid reference to deity or religion and quotations from Scripture.

Many epitaphs, however, express faith in a canine heaven. One goes so far as to express the author's wish that he may himself be denied immortality if his dog cannot share it. The inscription reads: "If my soul departs, does not accompany mine, O dear and noble friend, to the unknown spaces, I wish no heaven for myself. I desire to fall asleep like thyself and slumber without awakening forever."

"I believe," says another, "that in the perhaps, in the elsewhere for which we hope, all good dogs will await their masters, and that we shall meet again."

"Pascal's epigram, 'The more I see of men the more I love my dog, is a favorite tombstone legend in this cemetery."

Panama's History Dates to Earliest Explorers

The Republic of Panama, divided by the narrow Canal Zone strip, is one of the least known of the nations on the western hemisphere, and yet practically every school child knows of the Panama canal, the great American-built, American-owned waterway connecting the Atlantic with the Pacific.

Panama, the republic, is one of the infants of the New world, both in area and age, yet its history dates back to the time of the earliest European explorers of America.

Columbus cruised in Panamanian bays on his fourth voyage in search of a short cut from Europe to Cathay. Balboa crossed this lean neck of land to discover the Pacific ocean. Later it enjoyed high rank among the leading Spanish colonies because rich men on the west coast of South America preferred to cross it rather than the "dreadful" Cape Horn on their way to Europe.

Panama's rent advancement, however, dates from 1903, when the country changed from a department of Colombia to an independent state.

Panama City is on the Pacific side of the canal. The bay is a fisherman's paradise.

Origin of Collie Obscure

Like all herding dogs, the Collie's origin is obscure, the general opinion being that he comes from the wild dog. The Scotch developed the rough-coated variety to its present-day perfection, the breed often referred to as the Scotch collie. The English, however, specialized on the smaller, smooth-coated, black-and-white collie. "Originally, the collie was all black, the color from which he derived his name, 'Coal-lie,' by which he is still known to many. It is alleged that the rich, golden color of today's collie is due to an admixture with Gordon Suttie blood. Whether show or working collie, he is one of the most beautiful of dogs in form and grace of movement, quick in action with the precision of a smooth running machine.

Architects Organized Early

Architects for many ages have joined together in voluntary associations for the protection and advancement of their profession. As chief artificers they organized themselves into guilds in classical times and countries, and this practice was revived in the medieval period and again in the eighteenth century. An architectural club was formed in London in 1701 and there was an architectural society in the same metropolis in 1800. The Royal Institute of British Architects was organized in 1834, with Earl de Grey as president. The Architectural Association of Great Britain began about 1840 and the Architectural museum, Westminster, was opened July 21, 1869. The American Institute of Architects was incorporated in New York in 1857.

Mantelpiece Burglaries

At intervals during more than 150 years, epidemics of Adam mantelpiece burglaries have occurred in England. Back in 1770 Shakespeare's manuscript of Richard III was stolen and sent in a mantelpiece which, upon the owner's death, was sent to a close friend whose house-keeper unwittingly sold it for junk. After some time, the mantelpiece was searched for this precious treasure in vain. —Cohler's Weekly.

To the above Roosevelt prices should be added wheat and hogs benefit payments received from the Department of Agriculture for those who signed crop reduction contracts. To your return from sugar beets should be added from $1.00 to $1.50 per ton. The Republican Party and their candidates are opposed to the Roosevelt Agricultural Program. THEY WOULD DESTROY IT, if elected. The above prices represent from one hundred to four hundred per cent increase in farm prices in less than eighteen months. Notwithstanding the drought, farm income will increase one billion dollars for 1934 crops.

Thousands of Indians in Country Ahead of Whites

It is estimated that there were upwards of 1,000 Indian tribes at the time of the discovery of America, and the number of Indians has been estimated at more than a million.

The land lying both north and south of the Great Lakes, from the Mississippi to the Atlantic, was inhabited by the Algonquians, including the Delaware and the Mohicans. The Iroquois, comprising the six nations of Onondaga, Oneida, Cayuga, Seneca, Seneca and Tuscarora, inhabited what is now New York state and southern Ontario. South of the Algonquians from the Carolinas to Texas and Arkansas, were the Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws and Seminoles.

The Indians of the great plains included the Crees, Chipewians and Ojibwas in the Northwest and British Columbia were the Haida, Nootka and Flatheads. In the North Pacific area were the Bella Coola and Chinooks. Detroit News.

Toad Wins Verdict Over the Frog in Two Tricks

Toads are more discriminating than frogs, both as to when and where they will breed, says a writer in the Detroit News.

The common frog, an authority points out, will sometimes attempt to launch a mass of spawn upon the world as early as mid-February if unusually warm weather prevails, and not infrequently when this is the case a sudden frost following shortly afterward will send the breeding frogs back into hibernation without having completed their spawning operations.

But the common toad invariably waits until the end of March, with the result that its matrimonial activities are never interrupted by sudden return to winter conditions. Unlike the more discriminating toad, the frog will spawn in the first place of water available, which may be a lake or a rain-filled street.

"The more intelligent and deliberate toad embarks upon matrimony in a very different fashion. When fully recovered from its five or six months' retirement, it picks at an average speed of about a couple of hundred yards an hour towards some sequestered sheet of water which, for some inexplicable reason appeals to it as offering the ideal home. Thither all the toads in the neighborhood travel with remarkable directness. Most of the traveling takes place at night, but individuals are met with in the daytime, hopping along toward the annual rendezvous."

Andrew Johnson's Religion
Andrew Johnson has been listed as a Methodist, a Baptist and a Presbyterian. He, himself, said: "As for my religion, it is the doctrine of the Bible as taught and practiced by Jesus Christ. But he was a fearless soul, and he would (he) could not get on workable terms with the religion of the day. It seemed to him that the preaching and pulpit were promoting strife and had substituted revenge and hate for love and charity." While a United States senator, while vice president and while president, he never served on occasion at St. Patrick's cathedral, the principal Roman Catholic church in the Capital. He always was an ardent defender of the principle of tolerance, and more than once rebuked his lie to stand before a mob of fanatics, and to fever heat by sectional or sectarian passion.

Ether in Surgery
Dr. John Collins Warren of the Massachusetts General hospital, Boston, first used ether in surgery on October 16, 1846. It is said that this is also the first time that a certain operation from the French became popular, so that now it is a platitude. The sentence was, "Nothing succeeds like success." Maybe somebody knows what the successful operation was and upon whom it was performed. For it seems to me, says a writer in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, that there ought to be a monument to the man who first took ether.

Cobblers Had Union in 1648
The labor union apparently had its counterpart back in the middle of the Seventeenth century. In 1648, records show, a "Company of Shoemakers," known as the Boston Guild, was organized under a charter granted by the Massachusetts Bay Colony. A copy of the charter, appearing in colony records, shows that it was not an attempt for a closed shop but to prevent work being put into families, to protect the public against inferior work and the industry against unfair competition.

First Laundry

Both the laundry and the delicatessen are a little more than a century old. The first collar was made by Mrs. Hannah Montague of Troy, N. Y. In 1825, she is said to have tired of washing her husband's shirts so often merely because the collar part was dirty, so she separated them with the scissors.

Two years later Ebenezer Brown of that city began to make collars, called "string collars" because they were tied about the neck with a string. As a special business, the manufacture of collars was established by the firm of Montague and Granger at Troy in 1833. In 1835 Independence Stark of Troy established a laundry to take care of the product of his own factory and other nearby collar makers. A commercial laundry was started at Oakland, Calif., in 1851 to wash the clothes of gold miners. The first steam laundry was set up in 1863 at the St. Charles and Monongahela house in Pittsburgh.

Three Kindred Materials: Diamonds, Graphite, Coal

There is a strange and secret kinship between diamonds and graphite (used in lead pencils) and ordinary coal. All three may possibly have a common ancestry, though they come to very different ends. If you go back far enough you may trace the lineage of graphite and coal to those ancient trees which were cooked and changed by the pressure of hundreds of thousands of tons of rock. And whether or not diamonds are also products of tons of an ancient chemistry, they, like graphite and coal, are pure carbon.

Just why the tremendous pressure changed some of these ancient plants into hard and brilliant diamonds, others into common black coal, and still others into a soft dark gray mineral admirably suited for writing, no one knows.

Graphite is much lighter than lead, with which it is ordinarily confused, because both may easily be used for writing. But pure graphite is much too soft to be used in lead pencils unless it is first hardened by being mixed with powdered coal.

Unlike coal and diamonds, graphite is a form of carbon which does not easily burn, and when it is mixed with clay it is used in making dishes and bowls which are heat-resisting. Its two other chief uses are in lubricants and paints.

The so-called "lead" in a lead pencil is much more nearly related, chemically, to the wood that encases it, than to the metal by whose name it is so often mistakenly called. Like the wood that holds it, graphite is a plant material, though the centuries of rock pressure have changed its form beyond easy recognition.

Passenger Pigeons Extinct

About a century ago, billions of passenger pigeons flew about this country, darkening the sky for hours at a time. Flocks were sometimes four miles wide and nearly 250 miles long and the consumption of grain by such congregations was estimated to have been 17,000,000 bushels every 24 hours. Today they are extinct, the last one having died, it is believed, in the zoological garden of Cincinnati in 1914. Collier's Weekly.

Danger From Lightsocket

Contrary to the general impression, a person can be electrocuted by the 110 volts of electricity in a light socket, particularly when his other hand is on a radiator or some other good "ground," writes Dr. S. R. Benedict, Birmingham, Ala., in Collier's Weekly. There have been thousands of such deaths. In fact, as low as 54 volts has been known to kill a human being.

Question And Answer Dept.

Ques.—What are shooting stars? Where do they go to. And how do they originate?

Ans.—So-called "shooting stars" are rocks a good deal like the rocks on the earth. Some of them are iron. Very little is known of them except that they are flying about in space. Many astronomers are firm in the theory that they are fragments pulled out of the sun at the same time the earth was formed and which have in most cases missed being picked up by the earth or by one of the other planets. When they "shoot" they are merely burning up by friction through the air, making a streak of light as they burn. Those that reach the earth are the ones that have not completely burned up.

Ques.—I would like to know if there is such a stream as the Darling river, and where it is located. Will you answer in your paper?

Ans.—The Darling river is a large stream about fifteen hundred miles long in Australia. It flows southwest and empties into the Indian ocean in the province of South Australia.

Ques.—Why is Hank Greenberg of the Detroit baseball club called "Big Bertha"?

Ans.—During the World War the Krupp steel works made a gun for the German army which carried a projectile 75 miles. This gun was named "Bertha," in honor of the daughter of Herr Krupp, the head of the Krupp steel works. It was afterward called "Big Bertha," because it was a powerful weapon. The term has been felicitously applied to Hank Greenberg.

Ques.—I am curious to know just what a tail-spin is. Will you answer in this week's paper?

Ans.—A "tail-spin" is a term used by aviators, which means a maneuver consisting of a combination of roll and yaw, with the longitudinal axis of the airplane inclined steeply downward. It is so dangerous that it is rarely attempted.

Ques.—Why does the striking of stones beneath the water hurt the ears of people who may be under water when it is done?

Ans.—Because sound travels 4,780 feet per second under water. As the water is in the ears the sound thus direct contact with the ear drum. Its velocity is about four times faster than sound through the air, and this with direct contact endangers bursting the ear drum.

Ques.—What is the meaning of "bloc," as applied to "farm bloc"?

Ans.—"Bloc" is a French word that means "group." As used in the United States with reference to "farm bloc" it means a combination of members of different parties willing to make common cause for a definite purpose, such as the farm bloc formed in 1921 in which the members from the agricultural states of the middle west and those of the south sought to agree upon a plan of action in regard to agricultural legislation, irrespective of party lines.

Ques.—Who started Mother's Day? And what is the emblem worn on that occasion?

Ans.—The founder of Mother's Day was Anna Jarvis of Philadelphia. The badge of honor worn on that occasion is a pink carnation for living mothers, and a white carnation for mothers that are dead.

Ques.—What is the most distant star? And how far away is it?

Ans.—Pluto now supercedes Neptune as the most distant planet, but star known to science. It is about three times larger than the earth, and its distance from the sun is four billion six hundred and fifty million miles. It makes a revolution of the sun once every 300 years.

Ques.—I would like to know what causes color blindness. I will appreciate an answer to settle and argument.

Ans.—The eyes have millions of nerve ends in the retina. Some of these can see different colors. Sometimes these color nerves, as they are called, or at least part of them, are missing or sick or damaged. In this case, the eye is unable to see certain colors. Sometimes they cannot see any colors at all.

Ques.—Can you tell me how bees sting?

Ans.—The stinging apparatus of a bee is much like a hypodermic needle that doctors use. The bee jabs his little needle into your flesh, and through the hollow center of it he forces a tiny drop of poison.

Active Volcanoes in West

Mr. Jensen is sometimes called the only active volcano in the continental United States, but a volcano specialist says that Mt. Shasta, Mt. Baker, and several other peaks in the Northwest are active volcanoes which may erupt at any time.

"Beating the Bounds"

One of England's most ancient ceremonies is the church ritual known as "beating the bounds." The custom, which is a perambulation by clergy and members of a parish of the boundaries of the parish, is believed to have originated in Anglo-Saxon days.

"Boxer" Dog Is Without Equal as Master's Guard

"Authority" is the one-word story of the Boxer. One word that means law the law of the well-trained guard dog. A very simple law of "right or wrong," that "commands" unhesitating respect. One with which our own highly complicated judicial system might proudly be vested, asserts a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Gifted with fearless courage for defense and armed to the teeth with defiance, this 40 pounds of effective prevention is worth more than tons of our attempted cures of crime. Quick is that justice meted out to the intruder, ignorant of the dog's qualities. He will receive a very short, but most liberal and lasting education.

Rare in America, this powerful, sturdy creature is widely distributed throughout Germany from whence have come the more popular guardian breeds, the Dane, pinscher, schnauzer and shepherd.

Although termed a terrier of bulldog character, the Boxer is void of those outward characteristics of plumpness, throatiness and hanging chest seen in the bulldog. Nor is his head flat. Slightly domed, his clean-cut head shows wrinkles only in the furrow between the high-set, erect, copper ears.

His nose, a little higher at the tip than at the root, is said to be slightly dished. Not bulldog-like, it is not pushed into the forehead. The muzzle is strong, clean, but inclined toward being up-faced, due to the undershot lower jaw that curves upward to follow the vertical line of the nose.

Water Boatmen, Insects, Breathe Under the Water

In lakes, streams and ponds, one may see gray and black mottled insects. These are the water boatmen. They have the body flattened above, and swim upon the ventral surface. As they swim through the water the body of these insects is almost completely enveloped in air. An authority says:

"This air is breathed by the insects while they remain under the water, and in good water it is purified by contact with the fine particles of air scattered through the water, so that the insects can breathe their coats of air again and again. This is the case, especially, when they are in their favorite attitude, anchored near the bottom of a pond. Here they will remain for a long time, clinging to some object by their forelegs, and with their hind legs stretched out sideways; these they move frequently, as when swimming. The result of this movement is to cause a current of water to pass over the coat of air and purify it." They rise quickly to the surface, when they lose their grip on the object to which they have been holding, as they are lighter than the water, unless they prevent themselves from doing so by swimming. They often float on the surface of the water, and can leap into the air and fly away. They feed upon other insects, and their eggs are laid on water plants.

Capital of the United States
Several experiments were made in naming the capital of the United States until the present one became fixed. From the beginning until 1871 the following names were used: "The Federal City," "City of Washington, District of Columbia," "City of Washington, Territory of Columbia," "City of Washington," without reference to the district, "Washington, D. C." and simply "Washington." In 1871 the original charters of Washington and Georgetown were revoked by congress, and there ceased to be any difference between Washington and the District of Columbia so far as government and laws are concerned. In 1921 President Harding's Thanksgiving proclamation was "done in the capital of the United States." The designation raised the question as to what the official name of the national capital should be.

Accordingly an executive order was issued designating "The City of Washington" as the official name of the capital of the United States.

Wedding Anniversaries

Wedding anniversaries rose from the old custom of presenting a wife with a silver wreath when she had lived with her husband for 25 years, hence the silver anniversary. The different ones are: First, paper; second, cotton; third, wood; fourth, silk; fifth, iron; sixth, copper; seventh, silver; eighth, bronze; ninth, pottery; tenth, tin; eleventh, crystal; twelfth, china; twenty-fifth, silver; thirtieth, pearl; thirty-fifth, coral; fortieth, ruby; forty-fifth, sapphire; fiftieth, gold; sixty-fifth, emerald; sixtieth, diamond; and the seventy-fifth is also diamond. —Pathfinder Magazine.

Most Difficult Peak
Crueler than Everest, though lower in altitude by 2,500 feet, Nanga Parbat in the Himalayas is reckoned the most difficult peak in the world to climb. Its summit, 29,000 feet, is 1,210 feet higher than Kanchi, the tallest peak ever climbed by man. A nightmare of eternal ice, yawning crevasses and treacherous glaciers, Nanga Parbat offers measurably less ground for direct attack than its more famous Himalayan sister.

Albinism

Of the many interesting cases of albinism, one of the strangest occurred in Africa a number of years ago. A negro couple had three white and three black children in the following order: The first and second were black boys, the third and fourth were white girls, the fifth was a black girl and the sixth was a white boy. —Culler's Weekly.

Richardson's Skua, Bird Known as a Robber Gull

Wild nature is rather like human nature. We find birds and mammals which prefer robbery to work.

The Richardson's skua, a bird little known in the South, but met with frequently in northern seas, is really a robber gull, declares a writer in The Birds Magazine. "Thousands of years ago this bird probably obtained its flying like any other respectable gull, but it found that it could bully other gulls, even if they were twice its size, and obtain the food they had captured. It continued in its bad ways, and its descendants have followed in its footsteps, until now we find these skuas living with colonies of gulls, waiting until one has found a morsel of food, then swooping in and forcing it to drop its hard-won meal. The gulls, being simple-minded, allow the skuas to dwell with them, but there are many and more intelligent birds which would never allow such liberties.

Robbers of prey cannot be called criminals when striking other birds down, for they are simply following the law of their race in obtaining their food, but the fierce peregrine falcon is at times a bit criminal, for he will kill for the love of the sport. On some of our coast cliffs, where the peregrine and hosts of sea-birds are found nesting in close proximity, the former will often strike down puffins as they fly past. In other places where penguins are common, he and his larger mate will often amuse themselves by chasing these birds, killing them in mid-air and allowing their bodies to fall.

LAMSON-NORQUAY WEDDING

A pretty autumn wedding was solemnized Sunday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Lamson, anticipating their daughter, Virginia M. and Adrian Norquay of Tecumseh, son of Mrs. Anne Bryson of Richmond, Calif.

Before a background of autumn leaves and baskets of chrysanthemums the ceremony was performed at 4 o'clock by Rev. Henry W. Lenz. The bride was attired in a gown of pink satin, fashioned on princess lines, and she carried an arm bouquet of pink and white chrysanthemums, tied with silver ribbon. Her sister, Miss Hazel Lamson, as maid of honor, was gowned in tan crepe and wore a corsage of yellow and white chrysanthemums. Richard Pfeiffer of Manchester attended the groom as best man.

Preceding the ceremony, "I Love You Truly" was sung by J. Fred Barais, uncle of the bride, who was accompanied by Joseph Kozack of South Lyons.

A wedding supper was served to 32 guests at small tables centered with autumn flowers. Green and white formed the color motif for the decorations, also for the three-tiered wedding cake.

Mr. and Mrs. Norquay are at home to their friends at 133 1/2 East Chicago Blvd., Tecumseh.

The Feast of the Lanterns

The Feast of the Lanterns occurs in winter, and in northern China the lanterns are fashioned of ice, which in the image of flowering trees, giant frogs, fabulous tigers, scented dragons, historic courtesans, renowned warriors, happiness sprites and such, in accord with the fancy of the ice sculptors. On every Feast of Lanterns eve they are set up in competitive pairs on each side of the avenue leading to the pond. The village elders judge them after they are lighted, presenting prizes to the three best, and giving tags of honor to three others.

Legs and Character

A girl's character can be read by looking at her legs, declares a director of musical and dance numbers for a Motion Picture producing concern. "Slender-legged girls are usually intelligent to romance, whereas, chubby legs indicate an affectionate nature," contends this authority. "Sharp muscles in the legs indicate a cold, calculating, sometimes cruel nature. The more deviation there is from a customary walking position, the more eccentric the girl. If she is confident, her steps are free and forceful. If she is timid, her walk is uneven and self-conscious. Intelligent girls lift their feet high; while clever girls have rest less feet."—The Girls Magazine.

Emperor and Subjects

Marched Out of Angkor

Strangest of all stories about the cities of the Cambodian jungles, the French-Indo-Chinese, for many centuries Angkor was the capital of the great Khmer empire, and it grew to a size and importance second to none in the world at that date. It is said, says a writer in Answers Magazine, that its population actually reached a total of a million.

One day, some seven centuries ago, the emperor at the head of his people marched out of the city—and never returned. Not does history record any reason for this amazing exodus.

Angkor, with its marvelously ornamented palaces and pagodas, was left empty and deserted. The climate of Cambodia is one of the hottest and wettest in the world, and within a very few years the jungle swept in and covered the empty city—covered it so completely that its very existence was forgotten, and its rediscovery late in the Nineteenth century was one of the greatest surprises in the history of archeology.

Except for the natural changes due by the passage of time, the place was singularly perfect, and the high walls surrounding it, with their great gates, still stood. So did the magnificent Bayon or Buddhist temple, beneath which, so legend has it, lay the immense treasure of its last monarch.

Oklahoma Indians

The Five Civilized Tribes of the former Oklahoma territory were established long before the Civil war. They were southern tribes, and were removed beyond the Mississippi to make room for settlers. The first were the Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creek, Shawnee, Delaware and Seminole. These Indians took the southern plantation life. For that and other reasons they were deprived of some of the western part of their lands. On the ceded portions the government established Sac, Foxes, Cherokee and other plains Indians. Later other tribes were moved in. In the Indian territory, the eastern half of the present state, there were in 1900 not only the five civilized nations, but also reservations for Modoc, Ottawa, Peoria, Shawnee, Seneca, Shawnee and Wagoner. In Oklahoma territory there were Kaw, Osage and Wichita reservations and one for Kiowa, Comanches and Apaches.

College and University

There is no clear line of distinction drawn between a college and a university, although in the United States the college is primarily an institution of higher learning having but a single faculty or curriculum; or is an institution for special instruction, says Pathfinder Magazine. An American university usually comprises a college and one or more graduate or professional schools. In Great Britain the college was originally a corporation founded to assist its members to pursue university studies.

Sound Effects Long, Long Ago

Between 1800 and 1850 in Europe, piano players had such a mania for sound effects that all kinds of accessories were built into the instruments—tambourines, bells, drums, cymbals, rattles and contrivances for imitating storms. One company even made a grand piano for "blitz" music. At the point where the firing of a cannon was required, a special pedal could be pressed and the lid would come down with a bang.—The Weekly.

What Rattlesnakes Eat

Examination of accounts indicates that rattlesnakes feed on any sort of smaller vertebrates that may come within their reach. The following items have been found upon examination of stomachs: Ground squirrels, chipmunks, pocket gophers, young prairie dogs, kangaroo rats, deer mice, meadow mice and cottontail rabbits, various small lizards, frogs and toads and occasionally birds as large as quail.

"Food of the Gods,"

Name Given to Cacao

The tropical tree which is the source of chocolate is called the cacao. In its luscious, cucumberlike fruit are cacao pods which contain cacao beans, according to the National Geographic society. But when the beans are roasted and ground, and much of the fat is pressed out, the remaining brown substance (ground to a dry powder), is cacao. If the fat is not pressed out, the darker substance is chocolate.

Credit for the manufacture of chocolate from the cacao seed of an unimproved fruit belongs to the original inhabitants of Mexico. In 15th when Hernandez Cortez invaded that country, he discovered that the natives had concocted a drink called "chocolatl" or "capanahuatl" from which have come the names "chocolate" and "cocoa." Clothing, pictures of chocolate were served by Montezuma when he entertained Cortez.

Students of American native customs have estimated that the drink was in use 1,000 years before the arrival of Europeans. According to Mexican mythology the seed of the cacao tree was carried from a new world version of the Garden of Eden into Mexico by Quetzalcoatl, God of Air. The fruit, it is related, was a favorite food of the gods. The great Swedish botanist, Linnaeus, christened the fruit Theobroma cacao, meaning in Greek "Food of the Gods."

Where Snows Come From

The weather bureau says that the greater number of more or less heavy snows come with southerly to easterly winds, i.e., in what is known as the "rainy" portion of the cyclonic or storm area. These winds generally are relatively mild. As the storm passes, the winds come from the northwest, roughly and unrelentingly cold. In short, precipitation comes with relatively warm easterly to southerly winds, and clear weather follows with relatively cold northwest winds. If, then, the winter wind is from the northwest, it is cold and from the warm direction to give much snow. This possibility is the origin of the saying, "It is too cold to snow." This statement, however, is not literally true, for light snows can occur at any temperature and it occasionally happens that heavy snows occur when the surface air is quite cold.

Birth Rate of Twins

In a study of 217,007 births of twins it was found that out of every 1,000 of these births—303 were twin girls, 327 were twin boys and 368 were a girl and boy. The analysis also revealed that the birth rate of twins is higher in cold countries than in the tropics.—Collins's Weekly.

PREDICTS RECORD VOTE

Predicting a record off-year vote, John C. Burkhardt, president of the Automobile Club of Michigan, expressed the belief that the gasoline and weight tax amendments would carry at the polls, November 6, by a substantial majority.

"The interest created in this year's election by the injection of the amendments promises to turn out a new record vote for non-presidential years," Mr. Burkhardt said.

"As the spokesman for the 425,000 persons who signed each of the initiative petitions, the Automobile Club has conducted this campaign in the interest of Michigan's 1,000,000 automobile owners. The taxpayer will be the sole beneficiary should the amendments carry. The question is now up to the voters themselves to decide."

Wood Sorrel Said to Be Jesuit Christian Emblem

The lovely yellow wood sorrel, or Lady's sorrel, Oxalis corniculata, growing in waste places and on the edge of the forest, as well as in old fields, is no aristocrat, writes Otis Swift in the New York World Telegram. Though mingling with the common herd and helping to make ugly spots beautiful, and so serving the common good, she keeps about her a certain virginal aloofness and dignity—perhaps because of the religious sign she carries in her leaves of three heart-shaped leaflets—that mark her as a lady of that 51 per cent of creatures who mean well and generally succeed in doing well.

The Jesuits are said to have used the leaves of the yellow wood sorrel in teaching the Christian faith to the Indians. Its leaves of three heart-shaped leaflets very well illustrate the idea that life, as illustrated by the fundamental trinity of "Father, Son and Holy Spirit," is a part of the heart form of the leaflets suggests that Love and all its meanings are a part of the corollary of Creation—the marriage of Matter and Spirit. Like all who elect to serve the "low spirit," the passionately so-called materialistic, the Lady's sorrel, which makes beauty in prosaic places, not only wears her King's Daughter's pin as a protection but has a fast way about her when one intrudes on her place of personality; tries to enter her, for instance, Oxalis, or wood sorrel, is named for the Greek, meaning sour salts.

Florence Nightingale, "Lady With the Lamp"

Florence Nightingale was born in Florence, Italy, in 1820. She studied nursing at the Protestant Deaconess Institute at Kaiserswerth, Germany, and made a study of hospital methods in England, France, Italy, Constantinople and Alexandria. When she returned to England she gave valuable aid to the ragged schools and similar institutions of London.

When reports of the sufferings of the troops in the Crimea reached England, she sailed, October, 1854, for Scutari with a staff of thirty-eight volunteer nurses. There she toiled until the British troops left the town in July, 1856. Her nightly round of the wards won for her the title of the "Lady With the Lamp." She not only nursed the wounded, but started classes and encouraged organized reading from books and periodicals sent at her request from sympathizers in England. The feeling of the nation found expression in a gift of £50,000, with which Miss Nightingale founded a training home for nurses. She became general advisor on nursing organization and sanitary reforms throughout the civilized world.

Her influence and example helped the founding of the Red Cross society. She was decorated with the Order of Merit, the first woman to receive it, in 1907, and the freedom of the city of London was given her in 1908. She wrote two books dealing with nursing. She died in 1910.

The Goths

The Goths were a Teutonic people who in the first century A. D. appear to have inhabited the middle part of the basin of the Vistula river, in what is now Poland. They were probably the easternmost of the Teutonic peoples. According to their own traditions, they had come originally from what is believed to be Sweden. They do not enter into Roman history until the third century, when their frontier seems to have advanced considerably farther South. The Gothic people were warlike and not very settled; consequently they had probably not developed agriculture to any great extent. From the third century until well into the seventh century the Goths were constant in war with the Romans, and a great part of the Roman territory was conquered by the Goths, who were in turn overcome by the Roman culture, and the Gothic identity therefore disappeared.

King Arthur Legend Lives On

Whether or not King Arthur ever conducted his Table Round in the ancient seat of a king that once crowned King Arthur, it is certain that it dates back to an unbroken age. To Cornishmen it seems logical that a legend which has survived so many centuries must have a respectable origin. So stories of King Arthur, Merlin the Enchanter, and others are preserved, if not strictly believed, in Tintagel. The banquet hall of the castle is open to the sky and the sun and stars look down in turn upon its turf-clad floor. Grasses grow where once Yvain, wife of the duke of Cornwall, watched the siege of Castle Tintagel, on the mainland.

Pontine Marshes

The Pontine marshes are a tract of swampy land in the Campagna south and east of the city of Rome. They lie along the coast between the sea and the Lepini mountains, and have for ages formed a very unhealthy vicinity near Rome, which is notorious for its malaria in the summer.

Leit-Motif

Leit motif is a term intended to mean a short figure of melody or progression of harmony (frequently the two in combination) of marked character used to illustrate situations, personages, objects and ideas essentially in a story or drama to which music forms a counterpart.

Vote NOVEMBER 6 TO RETAIN HIS SERVICES IN WASHINGTON
Michigan's SENATOR ARTHUR H. Vandenberg

Made the Savings of America Safe
The greatest contribution to the return to a safe, sane security came from the pen of Senator Vandenberg when he wrote the section of the law which guaranteed bank deposits and which now protects forty million depositors. Because of Vandenberg we now can place our funds in banks with full security.

He Is Fighting the Profits from War
Senator Vandenberg is co-author of the greatest and most practical peace movement in history through the resolution which resulted in the present senate inquiry into the profits from war. He is endorsed by Veterans Organizations throughout the nation in this effort to show that wholesome wartime death pays a tremendous profit which should be eliminated from our civilization.

Rights Wrong to Michigan
For 20 years Michigan had been denied its proper representation in Congress. But almost as soon

What Senator Borah Thinks of Arthur Vandenberg
"His great ability, linked with his tireless industry and above all, his broad humanitarian grasp of public questions, makes him a senator worthy of Michigan. I feel it is in the public interest that he be retained." — Borah.

as Senator Vandenberg took office, he took up the battle for re-appointment. Michigan gained four additional Congressmen due to the energy and the outraged indignation of one man, a new senator — Vandenberg of Michigan.

His Leadership Unquestioned
Senator Vandenberg in 1933 was the unanimous choice of every Republican United States Senator for the post of President (pro-tempore) of the Senate. It is a remarkable tribute to the senator as this vote was one of the two, during recent years, on which Republican senators have been unanimous. It is the more remarkable as a tribute to his energy and his ability as a statesman when we realize that Senator Vandenberg was serving his first term.

Fitzgerald REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR

FRANK FITZGERALD is a candidate for governor because 400,000 citizens regarded him not only as an honest, able, efficient public servant, but because he is "FIRST IN THE HEARTS OF HIS FRIENDS" that he received the amazing vote of confidence last September.

These friends insure his election. But Frank Fitzgerald is not basing his candidacy upon friendship. It is based upon experience, ability and a desire to aid in solving Michigan's problems. He urges AND WILL WORK FOR:

- Elimination of the state property tax.
- Adequate aid for the public school system.
- Protection of Michigan's boys and girls by preventing the sale of intoxicating liquor to minors.
- Removal of prison-made goods from competition with the products of free labor.
- A non-partisan board of pardons and paroles.
- Unemployment insurance.
- Ninety-day maximum for legislative sessions.
- An adequate old-age pension system without the head tax.
- Repeal of the sales tax on food.

Chelsea Wins Hard Battle From Dundee

Chelsea traveled 45 miles southeast to win a hard fought game. The Chelsea lads entered the game as the "underdogs."

Couch, Smeads' lads displayed a powerful attack during the first three quarters. Chelsea's goal line was threatened several times but the Chelsea youths held their ground and Dundee failed to score.

It wasn't until the final quarter that Chelsea had a chance to display their offensive attack. "Dundee" was once again deep into Chelsea territory. Dundee tried to score by means of passes. Brueckner intercepted one of these passes and following this, Dundee started one of his "marches" which netted 30 yards. After trying two line plays Brueckner threw a pass to Youngs who stopped on the 3 yard line. Sowers was pulled from the fullback position. "Die" with plenty of power scored for the first score of the game. The team failed to convert the extra point by means of a place kick.

Chelsea pitched the ball to Dundee and with few minutes left to play Dundee was trying to score on their forces. This time Novess intercepted on Dundee's 35 yard line and was brought down on the 3 yard marker. He tried desperately to score but luck was against him. Dundee tried to score but was stopped at the line of scrimmage. Hard then took the ball on and off tackle, played and scored. A fake place kick which was turned into a pass was accounted for the extra point. Youngs this time threw the ball and was received by Dundee.

It was not long after the kickoff when the gun sounded for the finish of the game. Score, 13-0, Chelsea.

Chelsea displayed a powerful defense during almost the entire three quarters of the game. It was not until the final quarter that Chelsea showed their offensive work.

This makes three consecutive league victories for the Chelsea boys. This week the game is going to be played at Ypsi. This will wind up the final league game of the season. Perhaps you do not know that Dundee beat Ypsi 6-0. My scores Chelsea should win but in order to get a full appreciation of the game it must be attended. Each and everyone of you should support for the high school for the final league game of the season. If Chelsea wins it will give them four victories to one defeat. The boys deserve the support so let's go out Friday and give them a real treat.

To illustrate our history we have started making booklets.

The producers of our school paper are to have an office. The place is what is now room number twenty-five. At present it contains only a table and a few chairs, but be hold its appearance after the decoration committee has touched it up a bit.

After entering one of the doors, neatly lettered "Journalism Club", our eyes fall on the table mentioned around which sit the staff when a meeting is in progress. At one end of the room is a smaller table containing a typewriter for copy writing and a letter basket for all copy turned in to the paper before it is proof read. On the left wall is a bulletin board on which are pasted former issues of the Hi-Light, papers from other schools, and examples of undesirable journalism in the form of newspaper clippings. In the window is suspended a placard bearing the name of our paper, "The Hi-Light."

On the back wall is hung a list of department which is checked each week when a department turns in its material for the week. Beside it is a large calendar. It is hoped that there will be certain on the lower part of the windows also.

The end and aim of the Journalism Room is to provide for the club a place where the members may write and hold meetings in an atmosphere conducive to these activities.

Caesar Says

Halt! Caesar, I have heard you. (Emphasis on "Halt.") Signed: "Caesar." "Exquisite, exquisite, eh? Well here's a report made by a person famous for statistics and answered by none other than myself." Paul Pielemeier. At what rate do you think country children come to the city?

Myself: Oh, between 60 and 75 miles per hour.

Here's another fraction of wit. Tennyson can take a piece of paper and write a poem, making it worth $10,000. That's genius.

Rockefeller can sign a check making it worth $10,000. That's capital.

The author of this (that's me) can sign a check for $10,000 but it's not worth a cent. That's talent!

There will be a Senior Dance in the high school gym on Friday night of this week.

Well, see all of you Friday night, and so long until then.

Continued Story

No paper is quite complete without its continued story. Fortunately Chelsea High shelters a few would-be authors and authoresses. Perhaps first among them is Jane Belser, who gives us this moving account of a very human "Johnny" who entertained a most fervent desire to become a great singer. Did he succeed or did he discover that he didn't want what he had thought he wanted? Well, read our story and find out. It is written in Jane's own inimitable style. Here we go:

CARUSO, JUNIOR

The lights came on again, and slowly Johnny gathered up the different parts of his anatomy, namely, arms and legs, which had been sprawled about him and picking up his hat which lay on the next seat, proceeded up the aisle of Meadeville's and only moving picture theater, the Palace. He came into the light of the street, his hat planted on a very small portion of the rear of his head, covering very little of his heavy red hair, it was really an exceedingly good-looking auburn, but no one ever told him so. Johnny glanced once more at the picture of Dennis O'Malley, the famous Irish "tenor and baritone" combined—commonly known as Crooner to 20th century New Yorkers, Chicagoans, Detroiters, and even to the Meadevilleites.

"Heck!" muttered Johnny, evidently extremely disgusted. "I can sing as good as that guy, and I sing better music too, but you don't hear me singing in the movies, do you?" On receiving no answer but his own, he jammed his hands into his pockets, and moved slowly down Main street toward home.

Johnny was an extremely ambitious boy—some say it was the Irish in him—but at any rate he was ambitious. Johnny was especially ambitious about singing. Johnny loved to sing. He couldn't help it—it was just in him. From the time he was old enough to comprehend what he'd heard he'd been singing little Irish ballads, the ones his mother had crooned to him when she put him to bed every night. Then when he'd been just a little tike, and his father was beginning to despair over his red hair, Johnny'd sung in the Sunday school choir. He'd always helped the girls carry the tune—tho' no one ever dared hint that Johnny was a little boy-soprano (as some of the ladies of the church had made the mistake of doing) because Johnny was always ready to defend his rights, and was always very capable of doing just that.

So it had continued as he grew older Johnny sang in the adult choir every Sunday morning. Then he sang solos in the Glee Club—until finally the whole village of Meadeville took it for granted that Johnny would naturally become a singer.

Johnny'd always a good idea that he'd make a grand second Caruso, and sometimes he said he'd even be content to be somewhat like Caruso, like John McCormack. So Johnny worked every night after school at Mr. Hayward's grocery store, and he worked extra hard on Saturdays until soon he had enough money saved—in addition to what his father had donated to his worthy cause—to go to Reed City (pop. 3000) ten miles away, and take vocal lessons from the city's best teacher.

When Johnny had graduated from a piece of homemade cake. "He" gave up his job at Hayward's. He'd never cared to go to college because he thought that would be just a wasted four years—keeping him that much longer out of the Metropolitan. For this reason Johnny had been just doing odd jobs around Meadeville, until he could arrange to go to New York. And that dear readers, is the beginning of this story. If Johnny had gone to the University, he probably wouldn't have met Janet Meade. Her uncle's home was Meadeville's one mansion, and that was quite understandable since the Meades were the oldest and best family—being the founders of the city which bore the family name.

It so happened that the shabby about the mansion was badly in need of a good trimming, and Johnny heard that Hazekiah Merriek, the gardener, was having another spell of his incredible lumbago. Immediately he jumped at the chance of making a little more money, so he inquired of Mr. Merriek if he might do his work. It was agreed and Johnny set about his task.

Early Monday morning he was at the Meade mansion, busily working—honing to himself as he worked and planning for the disposal of this money he was earning in purchasing new sheet music. At ten-thirty he was still pondering over whether he should attempt the tenor parts in "Pagliacci"—true to Caruso—when his dreams and plans were quite rudely shattered by an extremely loud burst of piano music directly above his head. Johnny had been so busy with Pagliacci, he'd quite forgotten he was anywhere near the house. When he was again able to summon his senses, he became quite angry at being so startled, so letting his tools clamour to the ground, Johnny stood up. He found himself looking in a big casement window, and that's where Johnny made his first mistake. For of all the ugly moods that one can have, Johnny certainly had the worst right then, and so when his eyes encountered a girl, he was totally unprepared. Yes, there it was, an honest-to-goodness girl in person. (Continued next week)

Romanoffs Stepped Down From Lithuanian Prince

The Romanoffs prided themselves on the antiquity of their family tree, and claimed descent from a Lithuanian prince of the Fourth century. It is certain, however, says a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, that their family did not make its appearance in Russia until the fourteenth century.

In 1841 Andrew Kobyla emigrated from Prussia to Moscow and entered the service of the Grand Duke Simeon the Pious. The descendants of Kobyla held high positions, and the fifth in direct descent from him was Roman Jurievich, who died in 1854, leaving a son, Nikita Romanovich Juriev, who married a Russian princess, and a daughter, who became czarina by her marriage with Ivan the Terrible.

Nikita was one of the regency during the minority of Feodor I. and his eldest son, Feodor, under the name of Philarete, was elevated to the highest rank in the Russian church. Early in the Seventeenth century, the throne, for a variety of political reasons, was vacant. A new sovereign was chosen and to have one as nearly related as possible to the former ruling family, the crown was conferred upon Michael Feodorovich Romanoff, the son of Philarete.

Czar Peter I was the ruler who adopted, in the year 1721, the title of emperor.

The Romanoff emperors with the years of their accession were:

Male line—Michael I, 1613; Alexis, 1645; Feodor II, 1670; John V and Peter I, 1682; Peter II, 1727; John VI, 1740.

Female line—Catherine I, 1725; Anne, 1730; Elizabeth, 1741.

House of Romanoff-Holstein—Peter III, 1762; Catherine II, 1762; Paul, 1796; Alexander I, 1801; Nicholas I, 1825; Alexander II, 1855; Alexander III, 1881; Nicholas II, 1894.

There were thus, in all, eighteen Romanoff monarchs.

Common Snail Supplies
Man With Food and Dyes

The average man on the street who looks upon snails merely as curiosities does not know that these unobtrusive, one-footed crawlers supply man with food, dyes, umbrellas handles, poison, and deadly diseases, asserts a writer in the Washington Post. These cosmopolitan mollusks are found in nearly every part of the world, living in the tallest tropical trees, on the ground and in the depths of the sea.

Their fossil remains, dating back to the Paleozoic era, many millions of years ago, prove that snails have managed to adapt themselves to the many drastic changes the earth has undergone since that time.

There are dozens of species of snails and their cousins, the slugs. They are all vegetarians, subsisting mainly upon the tender parts of plants. Nearly all of our snails prefer moist environments, many living entirely beneath water, either in the river bottom or in quiet pools. The common garden slug, easily recognizable by the absence of a spiral shell, often does considerable damage to gardens.

Saskatchewan's Capital

Regina, the capital of Saskatchewan, secured having an unalloyed name. The site of the city lay where the Canadian Pacific crossed the Elbow creek. The creek was notable for the fact that heaps of buffalo bones were to be seen along its margin and Sir Sam Steele of the "mounties" suggested that the Indian name Waskana, meaning "pile of bones," should be given to the new town. Fortunately Princess Louise, wife of the Governor-General, the Marquess of Lorne, was appealed to for a suggestion and she chose Regina (Latin for queen) in honor of her mother, Queen Victoria. The province of Alberta was named by Lord Lorne as a gracious compliment to the Princess, whose name was Louise Caroline Alberta.

The Golden Rule

"Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." These are the words of what is popularly known as "the Golden Rule," says G. R. Turner in the Kansas City Times. They are St. Matthew's quotation from Jesus' Sermon on the Mount and are the essence around which Christianity is woven. But they express a philosophy not original with Christ. Five hundred years earlier Confucius gave to the world this message: "Be always kind, and act toward others as you would want them to act toward you."

Military Display in London

Among the peculiar traditions of the country is one which prohibits all except three regiments from marching through the streets of London with colors flying and drums beating. The three privileged regiments are the brigade of guards, the royal fusiliers and the Middlesex regiment. The guards regiment supplies a guard each day for Buckingham and St. James palaces, the tower of London and the Bank of England.—London Tit-Bits.

Hot Springs

Magnificent properties of the hot springs of Arkansas were well known to the Indians centuries ago and they visited them for their healing effects. Hot Springs outdates even Yellowstone as a public park, having been established as such in 1822 although it did not become a national park until 1921. It also bears the distinction of being the smallest in the park system, being only one and a half square miles in area.

Texas Rangers Proved to Be Successful Guardians

The history of the Texas Rangers is coeval with that of the Texas Republic and the formation of the Texas Republic in 1837. At that time, observes a writer in the Detroit News, the young republic had no enormous frontier to protect. Hostile Mexicans on the south, Indians and bandits on the west and northwest made a formation of a national guard necessary, so the rangers were retained, and did valuable service in repelling the outlaws and maintaining order, and became a vital force in protecting lives and property of the settlers.

When the Civil war broke out, Texas was drawn into the Confederacy, and many Texas rangers, being one of the most famous and gallant units of the army, lost 75 per cent of its original number. In the days of Reconstruction the necessity for the service of the rangers was apparent, but as order was restored, the numbers were decreased so that the companies in 1873 had 300 men instead of 1000. Soon after, owing to the unfortunate policy of the federal government toward the Indians, outlaws again ran rampant over the state and an organized mounted police was established and the rangers again in power.

In the 18 years from 1850 to 1883 the Texas rangers followed 128 Indian raiding parties and fought the rangers in 84 pitched battles, recovered 6500 stolen horses and rescued three citizens carried off by the Indians. Twelve rangers were killed. By 1885 conditions had changed. Texas was no longer harassed by Indians but by man-haters and bandits, so the rangers became peace officers, a mounted constabulary, and given the right to arrest without warrant in any part of the state. During 1885-1891 they arrested 470 persons, including 75 murderers. When the Spanish war broke out, many enlisted in Roosevelt's Rough Riders.

Those Bathroom Chords
Singing in the bathroom is popular, explains one physicist, because the singer listens not merely to his own voice but to the musical notes characteristic of the room, and in small rooms lined with tile or hard plaster this resonance is particularly evident.

Locust Some Buzz
A near relative of the cricket, the locust is a famous musician. This fellow seems to carry a buzz saw with him, but he has never been found sawing any wood. He is the most successful noise-maker in the insect world, and no carnival vendor can imitate his sounder.

A Famous Mountain
The Jungfrau is a famous mountain in Switzerland. With a hotel at very top, 11,140 feet high. The mountain is snow covered with many glaciers. The Jungfrau is one of the heights of Switzerland.

Robie Hood
Robie Hood, the celebrated author and ruler of medieval England, the best and most complete portrait of which is that which was painted by Sir Walter Scott in Ivanhoe, where he appears under the name Locksley, is the central figure of so many ballads among English speaking peoples that it is difficult to picture him as one other than a character of real life, writes G. R. Turner in the Kansas City Times. Nevertheless, there exists not a shred of evidence to prove that he really existed. Historians are almost unanimous in agreeing with E. E. Clark, who in his book "More Mistakes W. G. Make" states: "No antiquary that respects his cloth will admit that he ever lived outside his ballads."
