Lansing—Taking the courts and schools "out of politics" are among the new issues before Michigan.

The State Bar of Michigan, representing the legal profession of the state, is sponsoring a constitutional amendment to authorize an appointive system for selection of members to the State Supreme Court. Voters will be asked to amend the constitution at our coming November election.

The spectacle of a supreme court judge taking part in a political campaign has been repugnant to the bar. Justice would be served by adoption of an appointive system, say the advocates.

Educators take the same attitude regarding the state superintendent of public instruction. In fact, the Michigan Education association is sponsoring a constitutional amendment for 1939 whereby the state board of education would appoint the superintendent for a four-year term. The same logic holds true: Why should the head of the state educational system deal with politicians in order to get and hold his office? Dr. Eugene B. Elliott, present office-holder, is leading the reform crusade to abolish his own office—"believe it or not!"

Relief in Michigan
Michigan's economic life today is primarily industrial.

More than 56 per cent of our population is concentrated in 14 industrial cities.

More than two-thirds of all employed persons are engaged in the fabrication and distribution of goods. In other words, the average Michigan resident is not self-employed, but is dependent upon someone else for wages.

Agriculture was dominant in the state until the turn of the century when mass production, new industrial techniques, and new methods of distribution.

In addition to the members of grades 6 through 12 and children of the lower grades who participate in the local instrumental music program, parents and friends from the community in general are invited to attend. No admission will be charged.

The membership of the Little Symphony is composed entirely of assistants in instrumental instruction from the University School of Music. Mr. Johnson, the conductor, is a youthful exponent of the baton who has already achieved considerable renown. Last season, as holder of the Frank Huntington Beebe Fellowship, he enjoyed a year's study in Europe under such eminent conductors as Bruno Walter, Felix Weingartner, and Nicolai Malko.

'Short Cuts' Banned By New Operators Law

The new motor vehicle operators and chauffeurs examination statute, and regulations framed on it, have brought about a change in procedure which will hereafter prevent "short cuts" to the Department of State for the issuance of licenses.

Heretofore, motorists desiring to renew their licenses quickly, especially when preparing to drive out of the state on long absences, have brought their applications direct to Lansing, after approval by local police officials. This is no longer permitted; local police examining officers are not permitted to return approved applications to motorists. Applications must be forwarded through regular channels, to afford official control over every stage of the procedure.

State's Book Prices Lowest, Case Cautions

The Department of State calls attention to the prices at which various official publications are available, in view of the fact that at least one publishing firm is offering them for higher prices than the state charges. The only source private publishing houses have for official state publications, is the state itself, and there is no limit on the number of books which can be bought at the price available to everyone. The state's prices are for cash payment; in instances where higher prices are charged, with credit arrangements available, it is the belief of Leon D. Case, Secretary of State, that the differential should be publicly known.

The Department of State will send, charges prepaid, to any point in Michigan, or express charges collect elsewhere, a number of publications. Prices of those in most frequent demand are: Compiled Laws of 1929, $1.50; Public Acts of 1931, 1933 and 1935, $1.50 each; Public Acts of 1937, $1.75; Michigan Manual, 1937 edition, $1.75.

MARRIAGE ANNOUNCED

Mrs. Foster and daughter are former residents of Chelsea.

ST. PAUL'S L. A. S. MEETING

The Ladies' Aid Society of St. Paul's church held their April meeting on Friday at the home of Mrs. George Mayer.

Rev. P. H. Grabowski opened the meeting with devotionals and the topic "Christian Fellowship With Others" was presented by Mrs. Fred Seitz. Other articles relating to the topic were "The Value of Christian Fellowship to the Kingdom Cause," by Mrs. Philip F. Seitz, and "The Fellowship of the Church Universal" by Mrs. Albert Widmayer. Mesdames Russell Holderman, Wm. Schatz, O. D. Schneider and Thomas Wall took part in the discussion which followed. A reading, "An Easter Greeting," was given by Mrs. Louis Eppler. Mrs. Fred Seitz read a birthday verse for Mrs. Henry Winter and she was remembered with a bouquet in honor of her birth-month. The meeting closed with the Lord's prayer.

With Mrs. A. Widmayer and Mrs. Lester Winans as co-hostesses, lunch was served to 26 members and five guests.

BLUE GOOSE LINES ADD FOURTEEN NEW BUSES

Fourteen new motorbuses now are operating between Detroit, Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor, Chelsea, Jackson, Battle Creek and Kalamazoo, it was announced last week by P. L. Radcliffe, general manager of Blue Goose Lines. The attractive coaches are the latest type of vehicles constructed for interurban service by General Motors Truck Corp. and American Car and Foundry Co. All vehicles seat 35 passengers.

The new buses, which are streamlined in appearance, are sturdily built of steel with the bodies well insulated to defy the cold. The exterior of the buses are painted the familiar Blue Goose blue.

Comfort of passengers is, of course, the important requirement, and in those buses it is stressed to an exceptional degree. For instance, the well-upholstered individual seats can be adjusted to an angle that assures the greatest comfort, and a soft, head fitting pillow is attached to each seat.

This fleet of buses is air conditioned, for on cold or stormy days when windows are closed, the air is automatically changed at regular intervals, stale air being removed and fresh, clean air substituted. Hot water heaters controlled by a thermostat, assure sufficient warmth for winter days.

Non-glare illumination assures plenty of light for reading at night without disturbing the rest of a sleeping neighbor. Coach interiors are attractive, decorated in a restful gray-blue color scheme.

Fumes are barred from both type coaches because of engine placement. In the General Motors buses the motors are in the rear, while in the A. C. F. buses the powerplant is under the floor of the vehicle. Safety glass is used in all windows which are of the easily operated type.

Commenting upon the installation of the new buses, General Manager

Radcliffe said: "Bus travel isn't a new or untried means of transportation, but we believe Blue Goose patrons will have an entirely new conception of it when they ride these buses."

"On these buses you enjoy real comfort, fares are low and schedules frequent and you travel at the fastest speed that is consistent with safety. Our drivers are chosen because of their ability and their willingness to be obliging."

"The people along our Detroit-Kalamazoo route have patronized us faithfully. By installing these up-to-the-minute coaches we are trying to express our appreciation."

Used Car Purchasers Must Change Titles

Officials of the license and title divisions of the Department of State, are cautioning motorists that failure to transfer titles to used cars from previous owners, to themselves, within ten days after purchase, makes car registrations legally void.

The motor vehicle statute on this point provides: "Unless such notice is given . . . such motor vehicle shall be deemed to be without registration and the Secretary of State is hereby authorized to repossess the (license) plates."

Michigan Mirror

naning industrial operations combined to produce a tremendous growth of industry.

The importance of agriculture has decreased with each decade.

The trend has been from the farm to industrial cities.

From 1880 to 1930, the total number of persons employed by others increased from 569,000 to 1,927,000—a gain of 239 per cent. In any study of economic cause and effect, here is an important fact.

Worker's Insecurity

The rapid expansion of industry in Michigan has increased the problem of unemployment. Today, we find the industrial cities confronted with a gigantic relief burden that cannot be possibly carried alone by the local taxpayer.

Nearly a half million workers have been added to payrolls of manufacturing and mechanical industries since 1900. The increase was 161 per cent. The industrial revolution in Michigan also witnessed the shift from small shops employing a limited number of relatively skilled workers to gigantic factories employing hundreds of thousands of workers under one roof.

On the assembly line the element of mechanical skill is secondary in importance. The skilled artisan has been replaced by the semi-skilled worker who has only one repetitive task—making a machine do his job. That does not make for security.

Personal Contact

In the small factory there exists a personal contact between the boss, the employer, and his workers.

The change in Michigan's industrial picture from small industrial plants to gigantic factories covering many acres of land has removed that personal contact for hundreds of thousands of workers. In 1929 more than 46 per cent of all industrial workers were employed in plants having more than 1000 wage earners.

Because of this concentration of workers in industrial centers, Michigan has been among the first states to feel the effects of prosperity or depression. The automobile, a highly specialized product, has brought with it a problem of insecurity. Figures for the Detroit area show that during the year 1920-31 two out of every five factory workers were jobless in the month of lowest employment in each given year. What is the answer?

State Problem

William Haber, professor of economics at the University of Michigan, sees no immediate solution to the threat of industrial unemployment. In fact, he forecasts that it will "probably continue to be serious for many years." He adds: "The proportion of its (Michigan) workers who are operating their own businesses or farms is smaller than in most other states, the trend to large scale industry is further advanced, and stable employment is rendered difficult by the dominance of a single industry—automobile manufacture—with its dependence on seasonal markets and a highly unstable demand for its products."

This is no Pollyanna picture. But it must be faced. It is a challenge to our capitalistic system.

Unemployment Insurance

Because Michigan had a higher percentage of unemployment during the years 1930-1933 than in any other states, unemployment insurance has become an important consideration.

Any insurance plan of this type cannot give full protection to the worker who is idle for long periods. But it can be effective during the first five or six months of the jobless period.

As the bulk of unemployment arises out of big industrial plants, removal of the present exemption in the state law would merely increase the total funds available. In other words, the small employer would be taxed to help solve the problem of the big employer. Perhaps this is as it should be—being our brother's keeper, so to speak.

If so, should it not be put on that basis?

CHILDREN IN COURT

Judge Malcolm Hatfield

One of the surest methods of developing cruelty in children is to have a mother tell a four or five year old child to pick up a stone and chase some stray animal out of the yard. Other parents accomplish the same end by urging children to set the family dog on stray cats.

At this early age, children are not old enough to realize that they might cause severe injury to animals. Fathers who purchase air rifles for boys, encouraging them to kill sparrows in the vicinity, are developing the "killer" instinct in their sons. Families that move away from a house and leave the family cat or dog behind are also seeding examples of ruthlessness in their children.

Thoughtful parents teach their children to be kind to animals instead of injuring them. Such parents animate an interest in the study of animals and birds, thus discouraging cruelty, robbing of nests, and killing the young.

34 YEARS AGO

Thursday, April 7, 1904

The builders' and trades' exchange of Ann Arbor has issued a declaration of independence and the members hereafter propose to manage their own business instead of allowing the labor unions to do it for them. They will neither discriminate for or against their men, will not treat with strikers; will pay wages according to the working ability of each employee, will discharge employees when they see it is advisable to do so and accord to employees the same right to leave their employ whenever they see fit.

GRASS LAKE—The reservoir of the new water system of the village was filled with water this week and the tank purified with chemicals. The reservoir is being kept full of water while the water pipe lines are being installed so that the village will have the use of the water supply in hydrants available in the event of fire. —News.

TECUMSEH—Harold E. Smead, coach at Dundee high school the past five years, has accepted the position of athletic director and head football coach at Pontiac high school. —Herald.

HOWELL—At last the curiosity of motorists on US-16 has been answered, the purpose and function of those stakes driven on both sides of the highway from Detroit to Lansing has been revealed. US-16 from Detroit to Lansing is to become the first highway in the world lighted at night by a reflector system. The reflectors will be uncovered on April 6, next week Wednesday. The reflectors are buttons, mounted in threes, on steel posts placed every 100 feet at the side of the highway. They are of a new substance, "lucite," bigger and 10 times more powerful than the "cat's eyes" reflectors used in stop signs and highway traffic guides. The device, which has never before been used, is designed to afford motorists a clear outline of the highway for a mile ahead by reflecting headlight beams. An unlighted obstruction causes a "break" in the series of reflections, Van Wagener said, and they provide an additional safeguard in foggy weather. —County Press.

Michigan State College Gets Poultry Plant

Early start this year on construction of the first units of a federal research poultry laboratory is expected on the campus farms of Michigan State College at East Lansing.

Officials of the government recently accepted the offer of the college to provide 50 acres of land. The laboratory is designed to define poultry disease causes. It will serve 25 north central and northeastern states in which poultry disease losses annually are estimated at nearly one hundred million dollars.

Recently Berley Winton, senior poultry husbandman of the United States department of agriculture, and J. E. Miller, government engineer, visited the campus and selected one of three sites of 50 acres that the college had offered for placement of the new laboratory.

Approximately $80,000 will be put into the first units of the federal laboratory, these men from Washington estimated. In succeeding years additional money will be spent on equipment, staff salaries and on construction of additional units of what may eventually be a quarter million dollar research plant.

Selection of Michigan pays tribute to the state and to the college. The state's poultry industry rates high in national figures and returns to Michigan poultrymen more than 40 million dollars a year. The college has supplemented the poultry industry with knowledge of efficient methods of hatching, feeding and year 'round care.

Those familiar with the campus will be interested in the location of the new laboratory. It is to use the southwest corner of the college property, a site running north and east from the corner of Mt. Hope and Harrison roads.

"This smart girl isn't going to wait until she's a Grandmother to be a grand cook."

She knows that in 1958 nearly everyone will be cooking electrically and she sees no reason for wasting 20 years and slighting 21,900 meals.

She knows that cooking by electricity is easier, for this Winter she visited a home where they cooked electrically . . . and it was more fun and no fuss at all.

This young lady lives here in town . . . her Dad is buying an electric range this month and the young man she marries will have to agree to electric cooking before she agrees to honor and obey.

You'd like this girl . . . because you're just like her.

NEW TYPE ROOF WILL BE DEMONSTRATED NEXT WEEK

Laminated rafter Gothic barn roof construction will be demonstrated by A. J. Bell, agricultural engineering department, Michigan State College, next Monday and Tuesday, April 11 and 12, at the Gilbert Thompson farm, Salem township, Washtenaw county. This farm is located on the Five Mile Road one-half mile east of Pontiac Road, or five miles west of Detroit House of Correction.

This type of roof has a distinct advantage over the old gable roofed timbered barns, and balloon plank frames used in many gambrel roofed barns found throughout the county.

Laminated rafters may be built up of narrow boards of green lumber bent to the desired curvature to form the pointed arch, or a round roof. Some of the features of this type of construction are lower costs, unobstructed storage space, less skilled workmen, rigidity of frame work, and no sagging of roof lines.

Mr. Bell has arranged for a special meeting at 1:30 p. m. on Tuesday, April 12, at which time he will explain the construction details.

He will demonstrate the construction of forms for building the laminated rafters as well as direct their erection. Many barn contractors are now following this type of construction, says Mr. Bell.

Lumber dealers and carpenters interested in barn construction are urged to attend this demonstration.

A WONDERFUL SAVIOUR

A wonderful Saviour is Jesus, my Lord.

A wonderful Saviour to me; He hideth my soul in the cleft of the rock,
Where rivers of pleasures I see.

He hideth my soul in the depths of the rock
That shadows a dry thirsty land,

He hideth my life in the depths of His love
And covers me there with His hand.

When thrilled with His raptures, transported I rise
To greet Him in clouds of the sky;

This perfect salvation, His wonderful love
I'll sing with the millions on high.

He hideth my soul in the cleft of the rock
That covers a dry thirsty land,

He hideth my life in the depth of His love
And covers me there with His hand.

YOUNG PEOPLE TAKE PART IN UNION LENTEN SERVICE

As a special feature of the Union Lenten service at the Congregational church Wednesday evening the young people's organizations of Salem M. E., St. Paul's, Methodist and Congregational churches participated in an impressive opening ceremony.

As the organ prelude was played by Miss Nina Belle Wurster, the young people, approximately one hundred in number, marched into the church, each carrying a lighted candle, and completely encircled the auditorium. As the presidents of the four groups, who led the procession, reached a lighted cross banked with Easter lilies, in front of the pulpit, the entire group paused and sang "I Would Be True," following which they occupied reserved pews.

A social "get-together," with the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Congregational church as hosts, was held in the primary room following the worship service.

Paul F. Niehaus led in group singing, accompanied by Mrs. Niehaus, after which a fine program was enjoyed, with each organization participating. Refreshments were served in the dining room, at tables decorated in keeping with the Easter season.

Junior Play

Try-outs for the various parts in "Growing Pains", Junior play to be presented in C. H. S. gym, May 12 and 13, were held on Monday and Tuesday of this week. Many loyal juniors were present, fighting for their favorite parts. The cast will be announced Thursday.

The play is a Samuel French copy-right and concerns Terry MacIntyre and her brother George who are very much mixed up by many enthralling experiences which are encountered. Remember, May 12 and 13 at the C. H. S. gym. Old and young alike will enjoy "Growing Pains".

All-High Party

The students of Chelsea high school had a grand time last Friday night in a get-together. There was a big turnout and all the students seemed to have a good time. The entertainment was excellent and it included a solo by Barbara Schenk, a tapdance number by Peggy Almond and a mock wedding for the benefit of Mr. Hargreaves and his to-be. It turned out to be such a success that we hope to have another soon.

Vacation Interviews

Mr. Bleeker: "If weather permits, I'm going to play golf. I guess that's all."
Mr. Hargreaves: "Traveling to Rochester, N. Y., Niagara Falls, and such places." (I wonder why it's Niagara Falls? I always thought that was the place where newlyweds go for their honeymoon. Maybe that's why he's going. Right?)
Mr. Wallis: "I'm going to take a day's trip in livestock judging, a day's trip in poultry judging, a day's trip in dairy judging, and then the rest of the week with my parents in the Copper Peninsula."
Miss Gibson: "I'm spending my vacation at home in Port Huron."
Mr. Cameron: "I'm going home after a short visit at Kalamazoo. I hope to enjoy myself and I'm going to rest up. Going to do some landscaping on my brother's lawn."

Miss Hannigan: "I'm going home to Grand Haven and going on some hikes."
Miss Allen: "I'm going home and sew."

What Would Happen If

Mr. Bleeker really put a cow-bell on Betty B. and Virginia B.?

The Seniors stayed in school for one class a day?

The Juniors really put on a play as good as the Seniors did?

The news was always ready to go in the paper on time?

SHINING PALACE

By CHRISTINE WHITING PARMENTER

COPYRIGHT BY CHRISTINE WHITING PARMENTER WNU SERVICE

There was a silence before the old woman continued, her voice trembling. "That is not Christian. Do not tell me that I am forgetting my place to say so. I know it. I have been your servant for more than half my life, sir; but I have been your friend as well; and you, the good Lord knows, have been a friend to me. There is no man in the world that I admire as I admire you, sir; but that does not blind me to your faults. Why should I? I have seen you show forgiveness that was almost heavenly; but you can be stubborn—too stubborn for your own good or the good of those that love you."

"I do not know what passed between you and Miss Nora before she went away. I do not know what bitter things you may both have said. I do not want to know. But we are getting old, Mr. Lambert, you and I; and old age is a lonely place, a sad time, unless one can look back over the years and say: 'I have done my best.' If you will remember, Miss Nora asked was to marry the man she loved; and—"

"There!" broke off Martha in confusion. "I did not intend to preach a sermon to you of all people! But these things have lain heavy on my heart for years, Mr. Lambert, and I had to speak. If I have offended, I can only beg your pardon."

James Lambert arose slowly. He did not smile, but rested a gentle hand upon her shoulder for a moment.

"You are a good friend, Martha. You could not offend me if you tried. You have merely shown me the truth that, down underneath, I have known for a long time." He glanced at his watch. "Ned will be here to see you in a few moments, but—but I must be going down. There are things to think about."

CHAPTER XIII
James was still deep in thought when, an hour later, his son came down from the birthday visit with old Martha. In fact, Ned found his father so noncommittal that he, too, lapsed into silence and took up a book. But he did not read. Not only had he something on his mind, but he was observing with genuine concern those lines of care and worry in the older man's familiar visage.

Ten years, and troubles with a growing son had made Ned Lambert more tolerant of others. Now, coming to a decision, he asked abruptly: "Dad, do you hear from Nora these days?"

James started, because Ned seemed to have read his thoughts. "Not a line for nearly three years, son."

"You're worried?"

"I can't help wondering if they're in difficulties; and tonight Martha—"

He stopped, not wishing to go further; and Ned moved to a window, looking into the dark night as if uncertain about something. It was James who spoke.

"Look here, son. I think you ought to know that when your sister went away I didn't change my will as I intended. Except for an extra two hundred thousand and the business, which goes to you, the estate is divided evenly, as it was then. There are bequests to servants, of course; and to the men who've been with us longest at the office, besides something for Nora's boys; but the bulk of the property goes to you and—your sister. When she left home I was too upset to think about such things. Later I let the matter drift. Now—well, if you feel that it's unjust to you and yours—"

"Why should I?" Ned turned, sat down beside his father on the davenport. "It's your money, Dad. Do as you please with it. I've got enough of my own—enough to have pretty nearly ruined my own boy, as you know. We'll both be happier, you and I, if we feel that Nora is provided for."

"You mean that?" questioned James, a trifle puzzled.

"Of course I mean it! Why in the world shouldn't I? I'll admit that I used to be jealous of Nora when I was a kid; and after I understood about things I was sometimes glad enough to feel ashamed of her. I think she knew it, and despised me a little. But I realize now that you seemed every bit as near to her as you did to me, and I shouldn't want you to hurt her in any way. Where was she, Father, when you left her?"

James cleared his throat, not in anger as he used to do in the old days; but because of a sudden rush of feeling, Ned's words had brought him immeasurable relief.

"They were in Chicago, on their way West. Her husband was planning to write a series of articles like those he did about South Africa. You read 'em, didn't you?"

Ned nodded, admitting: "They were dated good. I remember sitting up late to finish one. But I've never seen any of them since, Dad. Have you?"

"Not one." The old man's eyes grew vaguely troubled. "I watched for them too. Nora wrote as if there were no uncertainty about their publication—it was an assignment, I believe. She seemed happy; but her letter must have been two weeks old before I saw it. I was down with pneumonia just then, and all my personal mail was laid aside until I could attend to it myself. She wrote from a boarding house. I wrote, not a hotel. They were leaving in a day or two, as soon as Don attended to some business and the city got dug out of a blizzard."

Ned raised his head, quickly, as if reminded of something.

"You say this was within three years? Are you absolutely sure, Dad?"

"Sure? Am I likely to forget that wretched sickness? It was three years next month when the letter came, Ned; and since then nothing but silence. Such a thing never happened before. I didn't answer Nora's letters, but she's always written. Sometimes regularly, sometimes with several months between. I tried to persuade myself that their plans changed suddenly, especially when Don's articles failed to appear. I thought they might have gone to some out-of-the-way country and stayed there. I suppose I was just trying to 'kid myself' as the boys say. I even tried to believe that since they were apparently successful she had forgotten me—given me up as a bad job—but that's not—Nora—"

Very troubled, and tonight something that Martha said had made him more so.

James glanced up, conscious that his son was inattentive. Ned said, thoughtfully: "Do you remember a terrible catastrophe in Chicago, when the roof of a theater collapsed under a weight of snow?"

His father was suddenly erect.

"You don't mean—"

"I don't mean that anything happened to Nora," broke in Ned. "The thing occurred, as I remember now, when you were too sick to see the papers. I only glanced at the headlines myself. I loathe such details. But Corinne reveals in 'em, you know. She even read part of the story aloud at the table—how a fellow who was in the audience and got out safely, went back into the doomed place and spent hours under a collapsing balcony trying to rescue a child who was pinned beneath the wreckage. It was very luridly told. The reporter claimed to have been an eye witness. Said the man refused to quit even when he saw the child, I believe. And his name was Mason. He was caught under the timbers."

"Killed?"

"No; but I judged from what the paper said that he'd better have been. If it were Don—"

James turned on his son angrily. "Why wasn't I told of this?" Then, his voice softening: "But Mason's a common enough name, Ned. Why should you think it was Nora's husband?"

"Only because the paper said Dan Mason—not Don, you understand, but so near that a misprint might have been possible. I didn't speak of it because you were so sick just then. I couldn't worry you, Dad; though I see now that I should have investigated the matter myself. My only excuse is that it was the very time when Junior got into that sorcery at college, and Corinne was—well, she felt it was all my fault. She thought I was too strict—didn't understand the boy at all—said he forced that check because I didn't give him enough allowance and—Oh, I was snowed under! I went through things I never told you, and never will. My home very nearly went on the rocks. Dad, though that's over now, thank God! But it put everything else out of my mind at the time—the awful worry of it. And later, when I remembered, I supposed of course that if Nora were in real want she would have appealed to you."

"Oh, no she wouldn't!" The bitterness in James Lambert's voice was toward himself. "I lost my temper one day and warned her not to. And Nora's got pluck. Always said that Nora was trying to suppress her family. That she played the organ at church, and gave music lessons, and made cakes to sell during the summer season; and—Ned hesitated, as if uncertain whether to finish, "and—well, she said, Father, that she was living in an old barn—or garage—or something, down near the water."

James stared at him. "My Nora living in a barn?"

James, staring into the fire, said nothing because there was no denying this aspect of the case; and after a silence Ned went on:

"You see, I thought that story he told me was just bunk. I supposed he was trying to pull the wool over my eyes; and I as much as told him he lied. I couldn't imagine (can't now, for that matter) how any sane man could be so easy as to hand over a roll of bills to a girl he'd never seen before, without making some sort of investigation. But I suppose it takes all kinds of people to make a world; and my own kids, now they're old enough to think about it, tell me I haven't any imagination. And if Don wasn't lying (and I doubt not that he was), you can hardly blame him for seeing red, can you?"

"He didn't lie," said James, "but the fellow had no business to lose his temper to—to that extent," he added hastily, remembering occasions when his own temper had exploded too violently for the comfort of those concerned.

Surmising his father's thought, Ned smiled a little; and then went on: "Well, that's ancient history now; and since then other things have hurt me so much more that old experience doesn't seem worth remembering—certainly not worth bearing grudges for. What troubles me is that I've gone on all these years without trying to bring you and Nora together. And I might have. You can't deny that, Dad. I've known you were missing her; but I've never lifted a finger to bring her back. Years ago Martha told me how dead the whole house seemed without her. She hinted that I ought to talk with you about it; but somehow I couldn't. It was the night I made the mistake of trying to buy Nora's four-poster! Do you remember?"

James looked up, a pathetic smile in his worried eyes.

"Did I hurt your feelings, son?"

"Not so they stayed hurt. You never have, Dad. It's because you and I have always been so close and understood each other, that the gap between my boy and me has seemed so tragic. Even the girls (whom I sometimes feared I was spoiling) tell me I never see their side—that I'm unsympathetic. I suppose I am, in a way. I was unsympathetic to Nora, always; though it took a number of hard knocks to open my eyes to the fact."

James murmured, as if his mind had wandered a little from what Ned was saying: "If I could only know where she is now!"

"I know where she was six weeks ago," was the amazing rejoinder.

"You do?" James Lambert's voice sounded belligerent.

"I heard not half an hour before I started over," Ned told him. "Corinne was at a tea this afternoon and gave one of the other women a lift home—Mrs. Ed Whitney; whose niece was in school with Nora; who remembered. She and some friends were on a motor trip through Maine a while ago. They stopped somewhere for lunch and couldn't get away for several hours—some trouble with their car—and to pass the time they wandered into the hotel ball room to watch a dancing class—children of the summer population, I suppose. And Nora was at the piano!"

"She was?"

Ned nodded.

"Mrs. Whitney didn't recognize her at first. Said she looked a good deal older, and—pretty rocky. She was going to speak, but on second thoughts decided it would be kinder not to. But she made some inquiries of the hotel people who

to. And Nora's got pluck. Always said that Nora was trying to suppress her family. That she played the organ at church, and gave music lessons, and made cakes to sell during the summer season; and—Ned hesitated, as if uncertain whether to finish, "and—well, she said, Father, that she was living in an old barn—or garage—or something, down near the water."

But I suppose it takes all kinds of people to make a world; and my own kids, now they're old enough to think about it, tell me I haven't any imagination. And if Don wasn't lying (and I doubt not that he was), you can hardly blame him for seeing red, can you?"

"He didn't lie," said James, "but the fellow had no business to lose his temper to—to that extent," he added hastily, remembering occasions when his own temper had exploded too violently for the comfort of those concerned.

Surmising his father's thought, Ned smiled a little; and then went on: "Well, that's ancient history now; and since then other things have hurt me so much more that old experience doesn't seem worth remembering—certainly not worth bearing grudges for. What troubles me is that I've gone on all these years without trying to bring you and Nora together. And I might have. You can't deny that, Dad. I've known you were missing her; but I've never lifted a finger to bring her back. Years ago Martha told me how dead the whole house seemed without her. She hinted that I ought to talk with you about it; but somehow I couldn't. It was the night I made the mistake of trying to buy Nora's four-poster! Do you remember?"

James looked up, a pathetic smile in his worried eyes.

"Did I hurt your feelings, son?"

"Not so they stayed hurt. You never have, Dad. It's because you and I have always been so close and understood each other, that the gap between my boy and me has seemed so tragic. Even the girls (whom I sometimes feared I was spoiling) tell me I never see their side—that I'm unsympathetic. I suppose I am, in a way. I was unsympathetic to Nora, always; though it took a number of hard knocks to open my eyes to the fact."

James murmured, as if his mind had wandered a little from what Ned was saying: "If I could only know where she is now!"

"I know where she was six weeks ago," was the amazing rejoinder.

"You do?" James Lambert's voice sounded belligerent.

"I heard not half an hour before I started over," Ned told him. "Corinne was at a tea this afternoon and gave one of the other women a lift home—Mrs. Ed Whitney; whose niece was in school with Nora; who remembered. She and some friends were on a motor trip through Maine a while ago. They stopped somewhere for lunch and couldn't get away for several hours—some trouble with their car—and to pass the time they wandered into the hotel ball room to watch a dancing class—children of the summer population, I suppose. And Nora was at the piano!"

"She was?"

Ned nodded.

"Mrs. Whitney didn't recognize her at first. Said she looked a good deal older, and—pretty rocky. She was going to speak, but on second thoughts decided it would be kinder not to. But she made some inquiries of the hotel people who

Kilkenny Cats
Inhabitants of the Irish city of is one story of the origin of the name, according to London Ans who amused themselves by two cats together by their tails throwing them across a clothe to fight. The authorities decid

the cats bolted. When the o nothing was left but their tails.

may be a fable, but it is fact the municipalities of the Six

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Rev. Ray W. Barber, Pastor

Those of us who read the Fellowship of Prayer or kindred devotional literature, are making a daily pilgrimage with Jesus toward his cross and his tomb. And in these two events we have revealed the great truth that no matter how deep the night of human tragedy and sorrow may be there is always the sunrise awaiting us if we find our help in God. Jesus went from the scene of an earthly triumph to his death on the cross and there achieved a spiritual triumph which issued into immortality. So we, passing from some human relation into some bitter experience of defeat and despair, may find in that experience the heavenly messenger that points us the way to spiritual wisdom.

We celebrate Palm Sunday on the coming Lord's Day. The service is at 10:00, and the sermon subject: "The Real Triumph of Jesus." Sunday school follows at 11:15. Attendance is increasing and interest is rising. We will welcome you to both these services.

Next Thursday evening we shall have a special service with communion. A brief sermon on "Our Responsibility in the Cross" will be given. All are cordially invited to this time of worship. Time 7:30.

On Good Friday at 1:30 we shall have the final United Lenten service, which will be held at the Methodist church. Dr. Howard R. Chapman will be the preacher on this occasion. Since we anticipate an overflow attendance, we suggest that you come early if you wish a good seat.

LEGION AUXILIARY MEETS

The April meeting of the American Legion Auxiliary was held Tuesday evening, April 5 in Kolb's hall, with 30 members and one guest present.

The secretary read a detailed report of the Presidents and Secretaries meeting which was held in Ann Arbor on March 26. Special mention was made that all past presidents of the Chelsea Unit were present at this meeting.

Reports were given by the following committees: Fidac Essay contest, health, tennis and flower.

An interesting article was read by Mrs. Wilbur Hinderer, child welfare chairman, "A Square Deal for Every Child." During the past year more than $1,500,000 were spent by the American Legion and its Auxiliary for food and clothing for children and not only children of veterans. This is why we are constantly fighting for laws to protect the children, in order to give them the care, training and protection which they deserve.

The president appointed the following committee to conduct the poppy poster contest to be held in the schools: Mrs. W. G. Kolb, Mrs. A. L. Brock and Mrs. G. W. Walworth. Each year we make a contribution to the local Girl Scouts; we have again voted to do this.

The sewing committee purchased and distributed material which will be made into girls' dresses and sent to the "Billet at Otter Lake. With these we shall send books and games, either used or new.

Delegates and alternates were elected to represent the Unit at the next District meeting which will be held in Moreau on Sunday, April 24. The Unit voted to pay the traveling expenses of such delegates to all District conventions.

On Monday afternoon, April 25 the Auxiliary will sponsor a lecture, "American Youth." The speaker will be Justin Oline. Invitations are being issued to all women's organizations.

At the close of the meeting a social hour was enjoyed with games being played and refreshments, which were served by the committee, Mrs. Harry Foster, Mrs. Floyd Rowe and Mrs.

Paul Belser. The next meeting will be held May 8, with Mrs. E. C. Hill, Mrs. E. Gool, and Mrs. Ray Whipple acting as hostesses.

Personality and Charm
Personality is often "charm" but charm is not necessarily "personality."

Whale is a Mammal
One of the commonest popular errors of zoology is the notion that the whale is some sort of fish. It is not; it is a mammal which swims to sea. The whale is warm-blooded, has a well-developed brain, and all other respects shows a far higher organization than any of the fishes. Its young are born alive and are suckled and cared for by the mother as with land mammals.
