24 YEARS AGO

Thursday, May 21, 1914

A. E. Winans & Son have a number of men at work setting out an apple and peach orchard on their farm in Lima.

The body of A. R. Welch of Pontiac, formerly of Chelsea, was found on Friday afternoon in the Detroit river near Grosse Ile. Welch was lost on "Black Sunday", November 9, 1913, while duck hunting in Lake St. Clair. Funeral services were held on Monday morning and burial was in Oak Grove cemetery at this place.

Emanuel Feldkamp of Sharon died on Monday, May 18, 1914.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Foster moved their household goods to Detroit on Friday, where they are residing.

Wednesday was "sneak day" for the 1914 Senior class. Supt. and Mrs. F. Hendry accompanied the class and the day was spent at Whitmore Lake. The trip was made in autos.

34 YEARS AGO

Thursday, May 19, 1904

At the Tri-County Track meet held in Chelsea last Friday and Saturday, Chelsea won the meet with 62 points, Plymouth 42 points and Wayne 27 points.

Mrs. Isabelle Hartsuff died at the home of Mrs. Frank May in Lyndon on Sunday, May 15, 1904.

The Charles Canfield house in Lyndon was burned to the ground yesterday afternoon. A great deal of the household furniture was burned.

Farmers report an unusual death rate among lambs and young pigs. The cause is unknown, but it is attributed to the severity of the winter.

A $1,000,000 mortgage, covering the bond issue of the Jackson Consolidated Traction Co. was filed in Jackson on Friday. The reconstruction of the lines is now well under way and once more assurance is given that Boland cars will be running to Chelsea and Ann Arbor during June.

LET'S DRIVE SAFELY

Thinking ahead is a habit every Michigan driver should develop.

Every accident is the result of some driver's failure to look ahead and his failure to foresee possible sources of danger.

Accidents by mechanical failure of automobiles or tires also result from failure to look ahead, to have the automobile checked for weaknesses and these weaknesses corrected.

Michigan highway engineers cannot construct highways to eliminate every possible danger. The driver still has a responsibility even on the safest roads. He must have his car under control at all times and he must be prepared for emergencies.

Over the crest of every hill there may be a car parked on the roadway. There may be an animal in the road around the next curve. Or there may be a dangerous road surface. Safe drivers think ahead, foresee these possible emergencies, and regulate speed to allow for them.

Pedestrian accidents usually result from either the pedestrian or the motorist failing to think ahead.

Anticipate possible accident situations and be prepared for them, state police suggest. Rewards are more numerous, safe journeys.

MILAN—Forty-five members of the Senior class of Milan high school will finish their work in the school June second and receive their diplomas at the annual commencement exercises that evening. Included in the group are a number of pupils who have moved to Milan since starting their work in high school and a number of the graduates have come to the local high school from the district schools in the neighborhood of Milan. The class will have the unique distinction of having two valedictorians this year. Seldom in the history of high school commencements has this been done.—Leader.

TECUMSEH—The presence of a fire bug in this locality was hinted to day following Monday night's blaze at the Mrs. Anna Scott farm, four miles northwest of Tecumseh, that caused a loss estimated at several thousands of dollars. The fire was discovered about 11:30 o'clock in the barn, 100x40 feet in size, which was burned to the ground. The loss also included three pigs, an automobile and tractor, other farm machinery and tools, and hay and grain. The fact that other barns in this vicinity and in the vicinity of Manchester have been destroyed by fire within the past few weeks is leading authorities to consider the fire-bug theory and an investigation is now in progress.—Herald.

to envision a sound spanking for the Michigan New Deal in 1938.

As the significance of new federal billions spending begins to unfold, Republican observers today are still optimistic but not so confident.

They see possible damaging factionalism developing in G. O. P. ranks between followers of Fitzgerald and Toy. There is even talk of a third candidate.

They point out the handicap of not having millions of dollars at their command just before the balloting.

An important part of the Michigan party organization are the postmasters, most of them New Deal appointees, who will hear Postmaster General James A. Farley in blossom-hoasting Benton Harbor next Sunday, May 22.

Statements are given in this column without partisan bias or prejudice. We interpret events as we see them. And it is our belief that Republicans are not going to have a "walk away" next November and, likewise, that Murphy is a long ways from being a licked man.

Labor's Row
The rash leadership of the C. I. O. in Michigan—seizing utility plants a few weeks ago and refusing admittance of non-dues paying members to automobile plants—remains a headache to John Lewis and industrialists alike.

Even Richard T. Frankenstein, just deposed as assistant president of U. A. W., is weary over the lack of discipline among Michigan union automobile workers, many of whom are young and inclined to be headstrong. He saw his plan for rigid discipline receive a public rebuke from Homer Martin, at a time when a new Gallup survey showed public opinion in Michigan as strongly in favor of outright repeal or revision of the Wagner Labor Act.

In this weary picture the moderate policies of the American Federation of Labor stand out in favorable contrast.

Labor Gains
Generally throughout the nation, labor's share of the national income increased 54 per cent between 1933 and 1937, according to the Department of Commerce. These figures, however, include wages of workers on federal work relief which in 1937 alone accounted for two and one-half billion dollars.

In dollars this is a rise from 29 billions to 45 billions.
Capital's gain was 41 per cent, or from eight and one-third billion to just under twelve billion dollars—mostly in dividends and rentals.

The national income has already declined twelve billions. Who will absorb this loss?

Economic Opportunities

Science and industry are creating new economic opportunities today.

The Dow Chemical Company at Midland is experimenting on the utilization of poplar trees for industrial plastic products and newsprint. These trees grow like bamboo shoots. Millions of acres of cut-over land in northern Michigan may be put to profitable use if the Dow experiment succeeds.

At Kalamazoo, the paper city, is another interesting illustration of how farsighted men have created wealth for labor and capital alike. The Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment company is "big business" today. From its modern mills come such products as waxed wrappers for bread, breakfast food, soap and so on; oiled dusting paper that grabs the dirt; household parchment for cooking food without odors; paper dish rags which wear for weeks; and even paper tape for Mother's pie.

The mills, employing 1200 men and women, are running at over 90 per cent of capacity. Wrapping paper and pie tape!

Pasture Profits Are Proved By Milk Pail

Right out of a milk pail comes proof that planned summer pastures which feed rather than provide standing room can turn loss into profit.

Figures kept for three years by a Pentwater, Mich., dairyman, Richard Schober are cited by A. C. Baltzer, extension dairyman of Michigan State College. Back in 1935 the light soil failed to yield more than 30 days pasture, that in June, and for six months of May through October, the herd took labor that only returned $7.61 above feed cost.

Schober reformed his pastures and converted that picture to a return of $284.51 for the same period in 1936. Further improvement in pastures found the herd in 1937 returning $478.20 summer profit above feed because of five months out on pasture.

Typical of the resources to which dairymen in Michigan can turn in stretching pasture are some suggestions prepared by Baltzer.

1. Rye pasture from fall seeding to be disced and seeded now to sudan grass which will feed cows from July 15 through August—seed about 20 pounds sudan to the acre.

2. Bromus grass for more permanent feed. On the Kellogg farm of the college, bromus provided feed beginning April 12 this year.

3. Two to four acres of fodder corn such as Eureka or sweet corn; begin to cut green daily August 15 until silo filling.

4. Use reserve silage in poor pasture seasons, not only corn but alfalfa-molasses type.

5. Plan long-term pasture program, seeding five to six pounds smooth bromus grass with alfalfa and oats mixture for 1939-40.

6. In flush pasture season, grain can be 800 pounds cereal to 100 pounds cottonseed or soybean oil meal, on poorer pasture after July 15 cereal grains are cut to 300 to 400 pounds to 100 of the oil meal.

"Fip," Slang Term
"Fip" was a slang term used during early American history to denote a monetary value of 6 1/4 cents, or a half shilling. Two fips equaled a bit, a shilling, worth 12 1/2 cents. Two bits is a term used today to describe a quarter.

June 10th Selected As Feeders' Day at M. S. C.

Annual livestock feeders' day at Michigan State College when results of new practices and experiments are to be offered visitors will be Friday, June 10, it is announced by members of the college animal husbandry department.

Does it pay to purchase and fit for market the low quality type of feeder steers?

Is it more profitable to feed large quantities of alfalfa hay instead of corn silage?

These are some of the typical feeding questions that will be answered in the day's program.

"Extremely high prices for feeding steers during the past year and the losses which have been incurred by many feeders are lending renewed interest to the establishment of breeding herds in the state," says George A. Brown, head of the department at the college.

Much of the information that will be available to farmers visiting the campus will concern the herd of 10 Aberdeen Angus beef cows that the college has maintained for three years for experimental purposes.

Complete records of winter feed costs have been kept. In one test the ten cows and their calves were summered on 10 acres of pasture. Half the calf crop was full-fed after three months until marketed at 12 months of age. The other half were fed a limited ration the first winter and fitted for market during the following fall, to compare methods, costs and profit or loss.

Question And Answer Dept.

Ques.—Who wrote "Das Kapital"? Would it be possible to put it in this week's Standard? We enjoy this department very much, along with the rest of the paper.

Ans.—Sorry to say that we have no data on the author of "Das Kapital". Possibly someone of our readers may supply us with the desired information. We appreciate your expression of interest in the questions and answers along with other material in the Standard.

Problem.—If a hog and a half brings 10c for each pound and a half what will three hogs bring for each pound? (Answer elsewhere in this department.)

Ques.—Where and what are the West Indies Islands and the East Indies Islands?

Ans.—The West Indies are a group of islands south and southeast of Florida, now known as the Virgin Islands. The East India Islands are a group of islands southeast of the Malay Peninsula, the southern extremity of India. The largest islands of the group are Sumatra, Borneo and Java.

Ques.—What is the largest city in Canada, and what is its population?

Ans.—Montreal is the largest city in the Dominion of Canada. The population in 1930 was 618,506. However, Greater Montreal is now estimated approximately 1,000,000.

Ques.—I would like to know which is the largest stadium in the United States?

Ans.—Stanford Stadium is the largest in the United States. It has a seating capacity of 88,000.

Answer to problem: The price will be 6.25c per pound, regardless of the number of hogs.

Ques.—Can you answer who was the greatest American aviator in the World War?

Ans.—Eddie Rickenbacker of Columbus, Ohio enjoys this distinction. He had 26 victories in the air without a defeat.

Ques.—On what grounds are the largest number of divorces granted in the United States?

Ans.—"Cruelty" tops the list with approximately 55 per cent. "Desertion" is second, with about 33 per cent.

Ques.—Our history teacher said the Mayflower landed at Plymouth, Mass. on Sunday. But another teacher disputes it, and says it was on Monday. It is agreed to leave it to you as to which is right. Thank you.

Ans.—Monday is right. The fact that 1620 was a leap year, probably has confused your teacher. Therefore the Mayflower landed on this hemisphere on Monday, Dec. 21, 1620.

Ques.—How high does the pineapple tree grow? And are there any trees in this country?

Ans.—Pineapples do not grow on trees. The pineapple is the fruit of a tropical plant that consists of a central axis with a tuft of rigid leaves springing from the roots to the upper part and grows to a height of ten to twenty inches, and bearing a single fruit. It is cultivated in some Southern States, but grows wild in Brazil and other South American countries.

Ques.—What is Ping Pong?

Ans.—Ping Pong is a modified form of lawn tennis, but is adapted to be played indoors on a table about 4x8. The rules and play are quite similar to lawn tennis, but the ball is usually a light sphere of celluloid, and only a single service is permitted.

Ques.—Was Edgar Allen Poe an English or an American poet?

Ans.—Edgar Allen Poe was an American poet, born in Boston, Mass., Sunday, Feb. 19, 1809.

CHILDREN IN COURT

Judge Malcolm Hatfield

Thrills on the Highway

The tragedy of a boy with too much idle time on his hands was revealed in court when a college freshman was convicted of a reckless driving charge in which several persons were hurt. Contrast this with the following episode:

Some twelve years ago the son of the late Calvin Coolidge was approached at his work in a tobacco shed by a young man who casually remarked, "Believe me, if I had a car, and my father was President of the United States, you wouldn't catch me doing this kind of work."

Young Coolidge is reported to have looked up and replied, "You would, if Calvin Coolidge was your father."

If there were more parents like the late President, we would have fewer boys, with high powered automobiles and large expense accounts, seeking excitement and thrills on heavily congested highways.

I firmly believe that most driving weaknesses can be corrected if recognized by the driver. The trouble with most of us is that we do not want to recognize our own faults. On the other hand, we are always ready to mention the faults of the driver ahead of us.

Here are suggestions for correcting some of the most common mistakes made by drivers:

1. Drive within your limit. You may have your car under control at 40 miles an hour, but not at 60.

2. If you are color blind, watch others at stop lights.

3. If you cannot judge distance, do not take a chance in passing other cars.

4. If you get nervous, keep out of congested areas.

5. If you are not sure of the meaning of a sign, ask about it. Safe drivers ask many questions.

Watch these points. Your observation of them will make you a safer driver.

HIS LOVE CAN NEVER FAIL

I do not ask to see the way
My feet will have to tread,
But only that my soul may feed
Upon the living bread.

'Tis better far that I should walk
By faith close to His side;
I may not know the way I go,
But, oh, I know my Guide.

And if my feet should go astray,
They cannot, for I know
That Jesus guides my faltering steps,
As joyfully I go.

And tho' I may not see His face,
My faith is strong and clear;
That in each hour of sore distress
My Saviour will be near.

I will not fear tho' darkness come
Abroad thro' all the land;
If I can only feel the touch
Of His own loving hand.

And tho' I tremble when I think
How weak I am, how frail,
My soul is satisfied to know
His love can never fail.

Junior Play Was Very Successful Production

A large crowd assembled Friday night to see what was later declared by everyone to be a very successful play, which was staged by the Junior class of Chelsea high school. Many memories were revived again in the minds of the elders in regard to that period of time they had seen their sons and daughters through, and had themselves struggled through—namely, adolescence.

"Growing Pains" was a very realistic play, and members of the cast as they stepped upon the stage to perform also stepped into their characters.

The McIntyre parents showed the patience and tenderness of the many suffering parents concerning their children, George and Terry, and the "kids" in turn bobbed through the difficult stages of adolescence, falling into the net of the inexperienced.

The stage conveyed a beautiful setting for this fresh amusing play. It was made by the Junior boys under the capable guidance of Stuart Dingle.

Summarizing the successful points of "Growing Pains" shifts a shining reflection on the director, Miss Josephine Gibson.

The spectators extend their praise to the director, members of the cast, and those numerous other helpful hands who, though back stage, held an important part in working for a successful play and achieved their goal.

CHAPTER I

One chattering-brazen-olash. Old White always set about its Sabbath-morning summons with a discord. Until the hempen bell rope, writhing through various floor openings, furnished impetus needed for the stately cadence of mellow boomings that followed.

Today there appeared to be an unusual outpouring of Locust Hill's faithful bent upon worshipping within the austere walls of Old White church. Before the bell finished its reminder, a growing stream of arrivals was converging on the front of the edifice. Singly and in groups they made their way up the foot-worn treads serving the two entrance doors.

The atmosphere held a noticeable air of expectancy. It was reflected in the vigilance of ushers prowling along the carpeted aisles and darting glances into the black walnut pews. Ushering at Old White was a function demanding nice perception. Particularly if there chanced to be a liberal sprinkling of strangers, as on this October afternoon.

Conspicuous among their number was a personable young man who arrived early and appropriated a choice seat on the center aisle, where he remained apparently insensible to the polite censure of the ushers' regard.

The youth's roving blue eyes, their whites showing rather oddly against the deep tan of his face, scanned the growing congregation with unflagging interest. The alertness of the eyes was in decided contrast to the well-knit figure relaxed comfortably in the pew corner. To the loose-fitting gray tweeds and carelessly knotted scarf of blue silk. And to the wavy hair, a warm chestnut brown.

Only once did the young man stir from his languid pose. That was when a trio of elderly women, all in black silk, hesitated reprovingly at the entrance to the pew. Then he scrambled to his feet in apologetic haste and stepped into the aisle.

"I hope I'm not intruding," was his low-voiced suggestion. Two of the newcomers passed him without a word or glance. But the third lingered for a swift appraisal. Something she encountered in the frank smile brought a touch of color to her faded cheek.

"You are welcome, I'm sure," she murmured politely, hurrying after her companions. A last muffled stroke from the old bell overhead died with a lingering note. Quiet strains stealing from the bronzed pipes of the organ.

Sunlight filtering through the stained glass of narrow windows, dropping multi-colored mosaics here and there on the heads of waiting worshippers.

One vagrant shaft dattled with the crimson bat worn by a small woman who sat directly in front of the blue-eyed stranger. The small woman straightened her thin shoulders in an annoyed fashion. The gesture, however, was not directed at the prying sunshine. Another woman, exceedingly stout, was displaying an intention of sharing the pew with the red hat.

Its wearer looked up as she offered a subdued but audible "Good morning, Hannah. You can sit in here with me."

The new arrival worked past the relentless knees of her hostess and sank heavily to the wine-colored cushions. There was an unobstructed view of the rostrum along the center aisle and the woman under the red hat had no intention of relinquishing her advantage.

An amused glint in the eyes of the young man indicated his appreciation of the little maneuver. Swaying slightly in the direction of the stout Hannah, the smaller woman remarked in a whisper that carried clearly:

"So you thought you'd come out and see our new preacher."

Hannah admitted the charge with a nod that added interestingly to her assortment of chins.

"Don't worry," came her neighbor's assurance. "Plenty of your members tagged along."

"His name's Farwell, isn't it, Abbie?" Hannah-parried the thrust.

"Yes, Doctor Jonathan Farwell." This direct bid for information exercised its placating effect. "My brother Tom was on the committee, you know. He says we'll like him. He heard him preach twice. He comes from out West. . . . Some place in I-o-w-a."

Abbie's second syllable with an impressive accent. "Is his wife here, Abbie?"

"He hasn't any. Widower. Mrs. Farwell's been dead for quite some time, I heard. He's never married—so far."

"Any children?"

"One boy. He must be grown up. Dale's his first name. Sounds too fancy for a man. I don't know where he is. Not in the minister's pew, anyway."

Had Abbie Brown carried her investigations farther, a pair of twinkling blue eyes directly behind her would have furnished the desired information. Instead, she gave Hannah a quick nudge with her elbow.

"There he comes!"

Like the dropping of a stone in a placid pool, the opening of a door at the right of the altar sent an attentive flutter rippling over the congregation. A tall black figure made its appearance, Jonathan Farwell, the new minister of Old White church. In a single instant he was made the target for a host of inquisitive eyes.

These saw above the pulpit a white rugged face, its pallor heightened by coppery red hair brushed straight off the lofty forehead. Penetrating black eyes, seemingly oblivious to the sea of staring faces below and fixed steadily upon a clock hanging against the rear gallery panels. A generous mouth flanked by deeply etched lines running to the nostrils. There was a distinct cleft in the center of the square chin.

While observers were still engrossed with first estimates, they were caught and held by the sound of a voice announcing the opening hymn. A vibrant voice, very nearly harsh in its penetrating quality.

As the familiar strains of the hymn sounded from the organ loft, the minister turned abruptly and seated himself in the center one of three tall chairs that stood with their backs stiffly to the choir. His chin dropped against his breast, strands of the red hair falling forward and covering the white fingers that shaded his eyes. He might have been engaged in prayer or meditation.

He might have been engaged in prayer.

Nor did he stir when the congregation rose to its feet to join in the summons to praise.

The younger Farwell had reached Locust Hill late Saturday, making a hurried cross-country trip in order to be present when his father appeared for the first time in his new pulpit. Recently graduated from a mid-west university, Dale had spent the summer in camp assisting with the direction of a geological survey. The field work finished, he returned to school for several weeks of compiling reports and arranging specimens for the department's museum.

Doctor Farwell's household goods were delivered by a moving van but a short time before Dale put in his own appearance and both men worked until a late-hour settling of the parsonage for a housekeeping program of sorts.

Soon after their first breakfast together, Dale appeared in his father's study ready for church service.

"I'm going early," he announced. "I want to size up the crowd before you give them their big moment."

Despite his pride and an impetuous faith in his father, Dale had approached the day with some misgivings. The preceding pastor had served Old White for something over forty years. That sort of thing sounded very much like the Enslaw, was Dale's rather patronizing decision. Doctor Bailey must have been pretty tolerant and easy-going to last so long. Young Farwell was aware that his parent had the name of being "different."

Disguised by a seemingly cold personality, the clergyman from the West possessed a dynamic forcefulness. To an unwavering directness of address and a scorn of mincing words, he added the readiness to declare himself upon popular issues whenever he deemed such a course appropriate. Unrighteousness in every form drew the withering fire of his denunciation.

Dale's brief sight of their new home town convinced him that the place was reserved, set in its ways. It was more than possible that these people would resent a progressive minister, even if the causes he championed were just.

Jonathan Farwell's coming to Locust Hill was the result of a coincidence. It began with an invitation to deliver the baccalaureate sermon at the university where his son was receiving a degree.

After the services, Doctor Farwell found himself accosted by a tall smooth-shaven man with keen eyes peering through silver-rimmed glasses set astride his thin nose and tethered to a black ribbon. The eyes, thinning hair and immaculate clothing combined to produce a cool grayness.

"I am Cassius Brady of Locust Hill, New Jersey," the newcomer announced crisply. "And this is my daughter, Lenora." He indicated a slender dark-eyed girl standing at his side. "I was greatly impressed by your sermon, Doctor Farwell. Very much so. In short," he added bluntly, "it set me wondering if you would consider a call from our church."

"This is a trifle sudden, Mr. Brady," Farwell returned with a slight smile.

"I suppose it is. I dropped off here yesterday on my way from the coast to meet my daughter and take her home. I am glad I did. Now, I want very much to have a talk with you."

* This brief encounter was followed, by an invitation to dinner at Brady's hotel and a meeting between Dale

Farwell and Lenora Brady. If the lawyer was impressed by the minister, the latter's son was attracted to the lawyer's daughter to a degree that rendered him almost incoherent during their introduction. He scarcely removed his eyes from her face when he found himself sitting opposite her at dinner.

She was the prettiest girl he had seen in a long time. Not exactly pretty, either. Something better than that. She particularly liked the way those bronze curls framed her plump face, that vivacious turn of the head when she was interested. Most of all, it was her eyes that held him. They were different from any Dale remembered seeing. The iris appeared to be a red-brown, flecked with dark spots.

Later, when their elders had withdrawn for their talk, Dale found himself charged with the responsibility of entertaining Miss Brady in a secluded corner of the hotel lounge.

"What I can't understand," he declared wonderingly, "is how you've been around here for three years and I never saw you. I still don't believe it. I should have found you before. I feel cheated."

"And now it's too late," she teased. "You're all through here."

"I'm not so sure. I'm thinking of doing post-graduate work next year," Dale volunteered hopefully. "I know I'll be around for a while when you get back. I'm going to see you."

"But I may not be here," Lenora remarked soberly. "Daddy hasn't brought me a very good report about my mother. I haven't told him, but I've almost made up my mind that I ought to stay with her next year."

"Well," Dale ventured boldly, "perhaps the Farwells will be living in your town by that time. Your father seems rather keen for it."

She laughed softly. "Daddy has amused me so today. He's been the treasurer of Old White for ages and he almost never attends. But don't tell him I gave him away. He surely is enthused over your father. You should be proud. Doctor Farwell is a wonderful speaker."

"Pretty fair," Dale agreed complacently. "I wouldn't be at all surprised if he is the man you need. I'm growing convinced of it."

Before the day was over Cassius Brady had gained Jonathan Farwell's promise to consider the new pastorate, if the proposal came through official channels. Within three weeks a committee from Locust Hill waited upon the western pastor and heard him preach in his own pulpit. A formal invitation followed and was accepted.

Dale would not admit to himself, least of all to his father, to what degree his expectations regarding that first church service included seeing Lenora Brady. But he was doomed to disappointment. There was no sign of the Brady family in the congregation.

When Doctor Farwell mounted the rostrum, Dale made a swift survey of the faces within range. The brief tension gave way to a general rustling. Whispers. By the time the minister finished reading the lines of the hymn, Dale experienced his first feeling of relief. The reaction on the majority of the listeners was undeniably favorable.

Dale rose to his feet with the others, smilingly declining a share of the hymnal offered by his neighbor in black.

"I know the words," he assured her. With his brown head tipped back, hands clasped behind him, the minister's son raised his voice in song, all unmindful of the interest his vocal effort was creating among the nearby listeners.

CHAPTER II

Staid composure marked Jonathan Farwell's demeanor when he stepped down within the altar rail after the benediction to meet the members of his congregation, many of whom pressed forward for the purpose.

Each new arrival was greeted with a firm handshake and a searching glance from the black eyes, making it evident he would be known by name when he met the minister a second time. Approving comments upon the morning sermon, many of them effusive, were accepted with grave unconcern.

When Henry Marblestone, Locust Hill's banker and wealthiest citizen, elbowed a way through the milling crowd to proffer his own particular greeting, those nearest to Doctor Farwell gave place deferentially. Marblestone had headed the committee responsible for the pastoral selection and the satisfying prestige lingered. With his florid face wreathed in smiles, Henry declared:

"Well, Doctor, that was a very good effort. I can see where you and I think alike on a lot of things. Congratulations!"

"That is very kind."

Some undertone in Farwell's response had a chilling effect upon Henry's ardor. There was an awkward silence, then Marblestone deferred hurriedly to the two women at his elbow.

"My wife has been very anxious to meet you, Doctor. And this is my daughter Evelyn."

"Welcome to Old White, Doctor Farwell. Your discourse was positively delightful. Inspiring. Wasn't it, Henry? You know I . . ."

This breathless and unfinished offering came from a pudgy woman, wearing a white fur-piece that came nearly to the crown of her lavender hat. Seemingly waiting to observe if her encomium had registered, Sarah Marblestone merged unobtrusively into the atmosphere of her husband, leaving the field to her tall daughter.

Farwell's black eyes narrowed a trifle as he found himself elevating his hand so that it might encounter the limp fingers of Miss Marblestone. He saw a wistful figure in a clinging green gown. A pale blonde with eyes very nearly matching the shade of her dress. A smiling red mouth displaying small white teeth. The voice suggested a cultivated drawl.

"So glad to meet you, Doctor. We just heard that your son had arrived, too."

This momentary respite served to aid the banker in recapturing his former assertiveness.

"Where is the boy, Doctor? We're taking both of you home to dinner," he explained heartily. "My car's out front. Just as soon as you can break away from here . . ."

"Thank you," Farwell returned mildly. "Dale and I have arranged to dine at home. We are scarcely unpacked, you know. I appreciate it just the same."

"Oh, well—whatever you say. We'll make it later." It was evident that invitations to the Marblestone board seldom were treated so cavalierly.

In the vanguard of those pressing forward at the conclusion of the services was Miss Abbie Brown. She sped swiftly down the center aisle leaving her friend Hannah Garner staring after her in helpless vexation.

As Abbie hovered uncertainly on the side lines, her birdlike glance chanced to fall upon Dale, who had taken refuge in the shadows under the gallery until his father should be at liberty. At the moment, the younger man was bestowing absorbed attention upon a bronze tablet set in the wall.

Abbie regarded him closely. Speculation became a certainty. Making a brisk circling movement, she approached the stranger from the rear and announced her presence with a playful tap on the arm.

"Aren't you Doctor Farwell's son?" she demanded.

"Yes, I'm Dale." His eyes lighted with amusement, remembering the red hat and its owner's comment upon his name.

"I thought so. You don't look much like your father. I'm sure I hope you'll like Locust Hill."

"I'm going to. It is a very attractive town, the little I've seen of it." Dale's eyes strayed towards the tablet. "I didn't know before that this was such an historical spot. I've just discovered that the British burned the church here!" He smiled again, a trifle apologetically. "I've always been rather keen on American history."

"Really? Then you must meet my brother. He has everything about Locust Hill right at his finger ends. A Son of the American Revolution, of course. He'll be so glad to know you're interested in Colonial things." With this common ground established, Miss Abbie ventured to bridge the years. "And I'm sure you and your father will find the parsonage very comfortable. It must seem dreadfully large for just two men. I was sorry to hear about your mother . . ."

"My mother?" A startled expression in the blue eyes. "My mother is dead."

"For goodness sake! What will you think of me, Mr. Farwell? Here

I've been talking your arm off and I never thought to tell you who I am. I'm Abbie Brown. I guess I just took it for granted that everybody here knew me."

"By the way, Miss Brown . . ."

Dale's eyes had sought the front of the room. "Do you mind telling me who those people are—the three talking to my father?"

"That's Henry Marblestone and his wife. And their daughter. Evelyn's pretty, isn't she?"

"I'll say. If you'll excuse me, I'll see if father isn't about ready to go now."

Dale received another playful tap on the arm. "You're interested in other things besides history, aren't you?"

Quitting the church together, Dale Farwell and his father walked in silence over a path that led past the thickly set gravestones—a short route to the parsonage that stood on a far corner of the church property.

The new home was a roomy brick house, product of a more modern era than the picturesque church with its wide white clapboards. As Doctor Farwell hunted through his pockets for the door key, Dale stood regarding the burial ground.

"Did you know there was fighting around here, father? I just saw a tablet that says the church was burned by the British in 1781. Seems a lot of your former parishioners were in the Colonial army. Some of them buried here after the fighting. Soldiers of 1812, too."

"It would not be surprising," Farwell had located his key. "We are living in an old part of the country now. You should find it interesting." He thrust open the door and passed within, Dale following.

"I didn't see anything of Mr. Brady today. Did you?"

"He was not at the service. I had a note from him yesterday explaining that he and his family were out of town. Have we some milk? I will take a glass up to my room. I have some work to do."

With the reopening of Old White's parsonage, Locust Hill's feminine contingent found itself faced with a problem for which there seemed no immediate solution.

The two Farwells were living alone in the house. Not only was the fact well established, but it appeared that the pair in some preposterous fashion were managing their own meals. There might be no logical argument against a father-and-son ménage, but the idea was disquieting. It was one of those situations which carried an appeal for action.

To add to the general irritation, no visitor to the parsonage had succeeded in penetrating farther than the parlor. Closely drawn window shades gave rise to the interesting speculation that the remainder of the ground floor was "unsettled."

Watchful eyes had accounted for the fact there was none too much furniture unloaded from the van.

Women visitors, comparing eager notes, agreed reluctantly that the one attainable apartment was more attractive than might have been expected.

Carefully verified statistics accounted for the room's inventory. One grand piano, tightly closed. One mahogany center table. Four upholstered chairs and three floor lamps. One oriental rug in dull coloring and considerably worn, covering most of the oak parquet.

Two large steel engravings hung on opposite walls. One of the pictures, Abraham Lincoln surrounded by his cabinet, was a trifle askew on its wire.

No women could sit in a room five minutes with a crooked picture on the wall.

Lesser items in conference had to do with the utter lack of those little homelike touches that bespeak a woman's presence. The marble mantelshelf, for example, its dreary expanse was broken by a small clock. Nothing else. Not even a photograph to furnish speculation.

Most unbelievable of all, the parlor and its deficient furnishings were immaculately free from any vestige of dust. A grudging unanimity in that finding.

"But the kitchen's what I'd like to see. I'll venture it's a mess." It thus the oracular comment of one of the parishioners.

It remained for Abbie Brown to try to seek information on this score. With her characteristic energy, she marched briskly up to the front door of the parsonage bearing a pan covered with a white cloth. No sooner had she rung the bell than she chided herself with a want of foresight in not presenting herself at the kitchen entrance. Still, that might have looked rather "funny," was her consoling thought as she heard approaching steps in the hall.

Jonathan Farwell answered the summons.

"Oh, good morning, Doctor! I've brought you something."

"Please come in, Miss Brown."

"I guess you'll think I've got a nerve," was Abbie's bright comment when the doctor relieved her of the proffered pan and ushered her into the parlor. "It's something I know every man loves, and I'm sure you don't make them yourself! This is the coziest room!"

Miss Abbie's glance traveled swiftly and hopefully about the parlor as the minister deposited the pan on the center table.

"Fancy, Doctor! I'm such a rattletrap when I get going. I never once thought to tell you what I brought. Doughnuts!"

"How thoughtful."

"Yes. Mother was baking this morning. She's really quite famous here in town for her doughnuts. They're not greasy like so many. And I said: 'I'm going to take some over to Doctor Farwell and his son. I know they'll adore them.' She was shocked. But my brother Tom used to love doughnuts. When he was living at home with us, before he was married, that is, he was forever . . ."

"Please thank Mrs. Brown for the two of us. They look delicious."

It was about this same time that Albert Hickman, Locust Hill's popular milk dealer, was mystified at the sudden interest along his route in the daily deliveries of his product at the parsonage. It developed that Mr. Hickman was in the habit of leaving two quarts of "Grade A" at the Farwells', but always deposited the bottles on a table within the kitchen porch. He reminded persistent inquirers that his arrival was timed with the dawn, or thereabouts. Hence the table arrangement.

So there was little help from that quarter.

If the town's housewives ever permitted their imaginations to tour the second floor of the parsonage, most of them were too modest to give voice to such speculation. As a matter of fact, they would have found this portion of the dwelling more revealing than they hoped.

Doctor Farwell had selected the large "spare room" for his own use.

A broad table, with books and papers scattered untidily about the base of a green-shaded lamp, stood in front of the tower windows. One entire wall was given over to ranks of crowded bookshelves. A double bed and dresser had places in the background, but the general atmosphere was that of a workroom. Its appearance suggested that sleep was a matter of secondary importance to the occupant.

A bath, used jointly, separated the minister's quarters from his son's.

Dale's room was sparsely furnished, severe as the cell of a monk, with painted floor and curtainless windows. A narrow iron bed in one corner, maple chiffonier and wood-bottomed chair accounted for the major comforts. A table with neat piles of textbooks and writing materials. A possible explanation for so Spartan a simplicity was a punching bag affixed to a side wall. Under the apparatus a pair of Indian clubs stood at soldierly attention. Two pairs of boxing gloves were suspended on a hook.

There was but a single effort at adornment.

Within a niche formed by the chimney was a shelf. Over it a framed photograph, the full-length portrait of a young woman. There was wistful beauty in the girlish face. The wide appealing eyes were so like Dale's own that even a casual inspection would have identified the picture as an early one of Mrs. Farwell. The trailing gown with its high collar and long sleeves belonged to a past mode. A wedding dress, presumably.

On the under margin of the print was a single word. It was done in a child's painstaking lettering.

ELAINE

An old-fashioned brass candlestick stood at either end of the shelf. The arrangement suggested a shrine.

CHAPTER III

"You get all the mail today," Dale announced, coming into the kitchen where Doctor Farwell sat at the table pouring himself a cup of coffee. "It looks interesting."

As he spoke, he laid a heavy white envelope near his father's hand. It was addressed in a woman's handwriting, fashionably angular and bold.
