Fitzgerald Easily Wins In Tuesday's Primary

Former Governor Frank D. Fitzgerald easily won the nomination for governor on the Republican ticket at the primary election on Tuesday, being far ahead of his nearest opponent, Harry S. Toy on Wednesday, when the latter conceded the nomination to Fitzgerald. Luren Dickinson was leading his nearest rival, Thomas Read, for lieutenant governor, by a large number of votes. Congressman Earl C. Michener easily won the congressional nomination in this district. Albert J. Rapp, prosecuting attorney, was nominated, defeating George Meader by about 1600 votes. Lee N. Brown and Albert Hooper won the nomination for circuit court commissioners.

There were few contests on the Democratic ticket. Leo J. Nowicki, incumbent, was running slightly ahead of George A. Schroeder, for lieutenant governor. Walter C. Averill defeated Hubert N. Dukes for the congressional nomination. John Brown won the nomination for state senator, and John P. Keusch of Chelsea won by 16 votes over Miles E. Reid for the nomination of state representative.

Michigan Mirror

By Gene Allen
Michigan Press Association

Lansing—Smoke of the primary fight is now clearing away, and party managers are adjusting their gun ranges for one of the most bitterly fought political battles in Michigan history.

The state ballot test in November is assuming nationwide prominence, largely due to the unusual confidence which Governor Murphy enjoys at the White House and due to the fact that Murphy still basks in the public limelight as a possible presidential nominee in 1940.

The New Deal governor has made no public utterance that could be construed as mildly critical of the President.

In his devotion to FDR, he has voiced his blessing for a third term—and you can't go much farther than that!

"Sky the Limit"

As the opponents line up in September with "sky the limit" for charges and counter-charges, we find their strength to be somewhat as follows:

Democrats—All the payroll cash, and that is nothing to be sneezed at, considering the $9,000,000-plus payments out of the state treasury in the past 18 months. (What the civil service's new pay scale will accomplish is something yet to be seen). Millions of dollars from Uncle Sam in the form of WPA, PWA, FHA, AAA and other alphabetical benefits—all a part of the so-called "pump priming" program for spending our way back to recovery.

Republicans—No state patronage organization, but hundreds of county leaders—supervisors, etc.—eager to return to Lansing. Nursing severe and painful wounds received in the recent family row, but deriving some consolation from the thought that the Democrats have family troubles, too. (1) Former Governor Comstock grimly whetting his tomahawk; (2) Lieut. Gov. Leo J. Nowicki maintaining discreet silence as to Murphy's labor policies; and (3) Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner being more interested in highway plans than in Murphy's re-election.

Allegan Oil Is Being Shipped To Chelsea

An average of seven cars of crude oil from the Allegan fields has been shipped here daily for the past two weeks, and is being trucked from the Michigan Central siding to the pumping station of the Michigan-Ohio pipeline, five miles southeast of Chelsea.

Each car contains 10,000 gallons of oil and the Savage Truck Lines of Mt. Pleasant have been conveying the oil in two trucks with a capacity of 3000 gallons each. The oil is emptied into the pipe line at the station and is pumped on its way to Toledo.

During the past week a 2000-barrel tank has been placed adjacent to the Michigan Central about two miles west of Chelsea, and when installation of equipment is completed the Allegan oil will be shipped to that point and emptied into the tank, from which it will be pumped to the main pipeline which is near that point. It is expected this tank will be ready for use next week, and hauling of the oil to the pumping station will be terminated.

RETURN FROM EUROPE

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Panarites and son Charles returned Thursday on the S. S. Rex, Italian line, from a four months' tour of southern Europe during which they visited Italy and various parts of Greece, spending several weeks at Haraea, the home of Mr. Panarites' mother, who is 90 years of age.

This was his first visit to his native country in 25 years and many changes were noticeable. Under the dictatorship of Metaxas, conditions are greatly improved and education is compulsory, according to Mr. Panarites. They conversed with Metaxas, also with King George II.

Mule transportation is still the only method of travel over the mountains. Near Athens, excavation has begun for the original Olympic Stadium, buried hundreds of years ago.

Mr. Panarites says they encountered no storms on either trip. On the return trip, Charles was winner in a ping pong tournament of the first and second class.

Football Season Will Open On September 23

The football schedule of Chelsea high school for 1938 is as follows:

Sept. 23—At Belleville.
Sept. 30—Clinton, here.
Oct. 7—At Dundee.
Oct. 14—At Tecumseh.
Oct. 21—Saline, here.
Oct. 28—At Rosevelt.
Nov. 4—Milan, here.
Nov. 11—Jackson High Reserves, here.

Nov. 18—Manchester, here.

The following boys reported for football this year: Rabley, Strieter, Fletcher, Bahnmiller, Rowe, Hasel, Schwert, Novess, Schneider, R. White, Dick White, Dingle, D. Kinsy, F. Visel, Birch, Knickerbocker, G. Winans, R. Watson, Atkinson, L. Birch, D. Walz, D. Thomas, Thurston, J. Miller, Jack Miller, Schiller.

On Sept. 7, the opening day of school, a call was issued for football candidates which were to report to the dressing room at 3:30. Coach Cameron was there to give out football equipment and announce practice time. The first week was devoted entirely to fundamentals and calisthenics, which limbered up the muscles after a summer's vacationing. Friday's practice was something a little tougher. Blocking and tackling was the menu for the day, and this will continue throughout this coming week also.

Although there are not many veterans back, Cameron hopes to whip a winning combination into shape by September 23, when Chelsea meets Belleville.

Chelsea Scouts Invited To East Lansing Game

Scout Executive Walter MacPeak has informed local Scout leaders of an invitation extended by the Michigan State College at East Lansing to all Scout troops of the Washtenaw-Livingston Council to participate in Boy Scout Day at the football stadium in East Lansing on September 24.

Ralph H. Young, Director of Athletics, writes:

"All scouts, executives, scoutmasters and drivers of cars will be admitted free to the Wayne University-Michigan State College football game at 2:00 p. m., Eastern Standard time. The scout uniform or scout registration card will serve as admission. Scouts should wear the uniform if possible. All groups will enter at gate 20, at the southeast corner of the stadium.

"All scouts, executives, and scoutmasters visiting us on Boy Scout Day are requested to register in the main hall of the gymnasium, where they will receive complete instructions. Registration is to provide us with the name of the leader in charge and the approximate number of boys in the group. Please report immediately upon arrival in East Lansing.

"Some troops or councils may wish to make this an overnight camping trip. For the benefit of those arriving on Friday night or Saturday morning we have set aside a place adjacent to the Freshman football field on which to pitch tents and cook meals. If you expect to pitch tents and cook meals please advise the undersigned the probable time of arrival and the approximate number in the party.

"Saturday morning will be devoted to sightseeing trips around the campus. These trips will start from the gymnasium with a guide in charge of each party.

"Last year 3,345 scouts, drivers and leaders from 85 cities visited the Michigan State College campus."

WAYNE U. PLAYS HERE TODAY

The intersquad of Wayne University will play here today. It will be a regulation game, starting between 9:15 and 3:30. The game will be played on the local athletic field and the public is invited. The admission price is ten cents for everyone, and proceeds will go to the Chelsea high school athletic fund.

Coach Joe Gembs is a former University of Michigan star, and his brother is the triple-threat back on the Wayne team.

Wayne has a squad of fifty-five players this year, and it will be an opportunity for everyone to see the team that will play against Michigan State next week.

The Wayne squad has been in training at the Christmas Seal camp, North Lake, for more than a week.

CHILDREN IN COURT

Judge Malcolm Hatfield

Past, Present and Future
Many parents who are brought into court with their children lament the fact that the child of a half century ago was not as worldly wise as is the average one of today.

While it is possible that there existed as much graft and corruption during that period as in our present age, it is doubtful if the ordinary child was aware of such a condition. With motion pictures, radios, newspapers and magazines exposing crime in every detail, it is hard for the modern youth not to know more of such conditions than did the child of former days. Furthermore, our modern civilization does not enable a youngster to develop a sense of responsibility. For instance, an apartment house offers no opportunity for the performance of specific chores each morning and evening. All students of juvenile delinquency admit that many children run afoul of the law simply because they have no work to perform and no responsibilities to assume.

Such social elements would lead one to think that the problems of children are increasing. While present day children are shown far greater examples of law violation, it is becoming increasingly evident that psychology and child guidance have offset many of the emotional factors which were prevalent in children of a generation ago. Our knowledge of child psychology and youthful emotional disturbances gives us a deeper understanding of juvenile problems than was possessed by the parents of the preceding generation. When such rapid strides are made in the right direction, the future should hold a bright outlook for adolescents.

Constitution Day Message

The nation pauses to observe Constitution day September 17, symbolized by Howard Chandler Christy's famous painting reproduced above. The painting shows George Washington addressing the Constitutional convention in Philadelphia, while at the top are figures symbolizing phrases of the preamble to the Constitution and elements in the 151 years of progress under that document.

McKay, the Grand Rapids G. O. P. boss. How to pacify Labor, acknowledging their right to collective bargaining and peaceful picketing, and yet not offend Business (both Big and Little).

Democratic Schism

Comstock's determination to get Murphy's scalp is a neat sample of the schism that has been slowly growing in Michigan Democratic ranks. It isn't a split as yet.

The state administration is thankful that Senator Prentiss Brown is not up for re-election this fall. Prentiss fought the reorganization bill. He voted against the court bill. With these black marks, he would certainly be in line for the Roosevelt's own G. O. P. "Get-Out! Purge."

Brown's attitude is that of most old-line Democrats in Michigan who sympathize generally with FDR's program, but balk at some of his far-reaching reforms. Along with Brown, you will find Edward Fry, state chairman, and his brother, Theodore, state treasurer. This viewpoint is shared by Van Wagoner and Nowicki; nationally, it is held by such men as Vice-President Garner, Carter Glass and other life-long Democrats who vote straight and abhor the very existence of a Republican.

Independence

In somewhat of the spirit of a declaration of independence, State Chairman Fry greeted James A. Farley, national chairman, at Mackinac Island, with these significant words:

"Mr. Farley, Michigan is still Democratic. Some of us may not agree with everything that has been done in Washington or in Lansing. But any alterations in the course we have adopted are going to be made by an experienced pilot and not by fortune tellers."

This was interpreted in several ways: (1) Ed Fry, at least, desired no interference from Washington; (2) Practical men, not day dreamers, would determine policies in Michigan.

Governor Murphy certainly has set a shining example of how a state governor can co-operate 100 per cent with the President. In his idealist fervor for reform, he is far ahead of the party rank-and-file in echoing enthusiastic approval of every Roosevelt objective. In other words, he is willing to go the limit.

Sometimes the reformer gets too far ahead of the masses or wanders to the Left. As Roosevelt phrased the idea the other day, explaining Purge failures: "It sometimes takes years for the past to catch up with the present."

Up-Hill Fight

Except for the possibility of an out-and-out Democratic split, Michigan Republicans face an up-hill fight. For one thing, their own ranks are not consolidated.

They lack patronage payrolls to help finance the campaign. (Both primary camps were practically "broke" a week ago).

They are handicapped by not having the political key to the New Deal treasury chest. ("Murphy can get us more federal money.")

As the governor declared in his special session message, 200,000 workers are on WPA payrolls today in Michigan. The governor today has a blank check good for $10,000,000 to assure adequate welfare relief.

Yet the Michigan campaign is going to be worth watching. Anything may happen before it is over.

The growing seasonal attention to autumn and winter fashions makes this "little girl" design an attractive apparel. Black velvet fur is the big feature, while the Scotch plaid silk facing adds a flattering touch of color above a bandeau of the fur.

Ans.—Moscow, Russia, is not located on the banks of any river, nor on any other body of water. The Volga river is its nearest navigable stream which runs due east and west about seventy-five miles north of Moscow.

Ques.—What is the Jewish population of the world? And which three countries have the greatest number? Does Germany rank highest?

Ans.—The Jewish population of the world in 1910 was 16,480,000. At the present time it is about 10 per cent higher. In 1910 Poland led with 3,805,000; Ukrania second with 3,800,000; United States third with 3,100,000. Germany was sixth with 540,000.

Ques.—What is the meaning of a lithosphere?

Ans.—The lithosphere is the outer surface of the earth, forming the rocky crust, with its hills, valleys, cliffs, sandy deserts, etc.

Ques.—Why is it said that there is a man in the moon? Are there any human beings there?

Ans.—By chance the arrangement of light and shadow among the hills and valleys of the moon's surface makes it look like a human face. All scientific evidence is against the possibility of there being life of any kind on the moon.

Ques.—Why is the "red race" applied to the Indians, while they are no more red than the Mexicans or the Italians?

Ans.—Originally it was the custom of Indians to paint their faces with the juices of staining vegetables, berries, etc., in making up for their war dances. It was their symbol of readiness to go into battle. The stain did not wear off readily, and when they were at peace, their skin retained more or less of a reddish tinge. From this circumstance they became known as red men.

Answer to problem—Just the same as it is now—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Ques.—Where did the expression originate "Done by the skin of my teeth?"

Ans.—This expression which is worded in several different ways is a corruption of the expression in the Bible where it is said "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth."

Ques.—What is the name of that brightest star that may be seen nightly in the heavens?

Ans.—That brightest star that you see is "Vega". It is so far away that it does not belong to the Solar System. Its outstanding brightness is due to the fact that it is about three times larger than our Sun.

Ques.—Will you kindly answer on what day of the week I was born? The date was Dec. 8, 1889.

Ans.—Dec. 8, 1889, occurred on Sunday; that was the day of your birth.

Four-Piece Suit

Here's a four-piece suit for your autumn wardrobe, adaptable in many variations. It's a mixed tweed in honey beige. The swagger topcoat is lined with dark brown quilted taffeta and the blouse is a pullover sweater type, knitted of honey beige shetland wool.

It isn't the reputation you gained for safe driving last year or last week that counts, it's your driving today—right now—that makes safety records.

Safety precautions must be observed every minute; they must be eternal. They cannot be exercised at a few intersections or on certain hills; they must be kept up all the time you are behind the wheel.

The fact that you know the curves in a road or are familiar with its various hazards is a very poor excuse for violating all safety precautions.

Be safe all the time. The one time you neglect to be safe may be the time you will have a very serious accident.

PINCKNEY—The Pinckney school opened after the summer vacation. Tuesday, Pinckney is again a class D school as the high school enrollment is below 100. For several years it was above this mark.—Dispatch.

DUNDEE—There are 328 scholars enrolled in the high school and 217 in the elementary grades.—Reporter.

MASON—Members of the board of directors of the Ingham County Agricultural Society, creditors holding bills for the 1938 fair and others interested in the county fair are to meet at the former Dart bank building in Mason on Thursday night, September 15, to decide the future of the Ingham fair. The 1938 fair is in the red about $2000. This week an audit of the 1938 fair is being made. The audit was made to disclose the profits and losses sustained by the several departments. The horse races and the pageant rolled up most of the loss.—County News.

MASON—Leslie reports an elevated and religious sunflower. Nine feet above the ground, in the crotch of a maple tree in the Congregational church yard in Leslie, a sunflower took root. The sunflower flourished and grew to a height of five feet and blossomed. Another Leslie nature story is reported from the Ernest Sherman home where a treetoad and a wren have shared a house all summer. The wren hatched out a fine brood and the toad seemed to stand watch.—County News.

HOWELL—Emily Mutter Adams has been honored with a position as first violinist with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. This comes as a great honor to Mrs. Adams and her ability as a violinist, as she is said to be the first woman in the world to be thus honored with a place with a major symphony orchestra.—County Press.

MILAN—The first day enrollment was again larger than the first day last year. The gradual increase has been noted in the Milan schools for the past few years, with a gradually increasing number of pupils in each grade. With an initial enrollment this year of 580, as compared with the enrollment of 578 last year, a great deal of shifting of classes and class rooms was necessary. The class rooms for the most part are being used to their capacity.—Leader.

BROOKLYN—The special election held Friday to approve the issuance of $6,000 in bonds of the village for the improvement of Brooklyn streets by black-topping went over with a unanimous vote. One hundred and five Brooklyn property owners voted yes and nobody put in a no vote.—Exponent.

Name Amy Means 'Beloved'

The name Amy is of Latin origin and means "beloved." There is something sweet and gentle about the name which well fits its meaning, writes Florence A. Cowles in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Amy Robsart is the most famous in history to bear the name. Its meaning was hollow for her, for she was the unloved wife of the earl of Leicester, favorite of Queen Elizabeth. She was found dead at the foot of a stairway, with her neck broken, and it was suspected that her husband was an accessory to her murder; but there was no proof of this and some modern historians believe her death was the result of a plot to discredit Leicester.

'WAY BACK WHEN'

SINGER WAS A BISCUIT PACKER

USUALLY we are inclined to give too much credit to chance or luck in analyzing the success of prominent people, forgetting that without the talent to take advantage of an unexpected opportunity they could not have risen. Helen Morgan's sudden rise to fame is an example.

Born in Danville, Illinois, her father died when she was very young, leaving Helen Morgan and her mother practically penniless. When she was five years old, paint thrown by another child partially blinded her, and she had to spend a full year in a dark room. She sang to herself to pass the long dark hours and later she sang in a church choir in Chicago. There, she worked as a manicurist, a waitress, a comp-tometer operator, and a model. She was a ribbon clerk at Marshall Field's department store and a biscuit packer for the National Biscuit company. None of her jobs lasted long, for her eyes were always on the stage. She sang occasionally in cabarets and finally got a job through Ziegfeld in the chorus of "Sally." Dissatisfied, she quit, and Billy Rose hired her to sing in his Backstage club.

That was Helen Morgan's lucky chance. The Backstage club was so small that she was forced to sit on the piano! Most of us would consider it a disadvantage, and perhaps she did, too. But the public was interested; she became a sensation, and speedily rose to fame. Musical comedies and motion pictures started her, and soon she was singing in a night club named for her, at a salary of $1,500 per week. Today she is known the world over and, wherever she appears, sings sitting on the piano.

Perhaps, if Helen Morgan had not had to sit on the piano in the Backstage club, she would never have risen to stardom. Perhaps she would have sung comparatively unknown for a couple of years, and gone back to manure or biscuit packing. But, remember, she had something worth delivering when she sat on that piano.

Sampler-Making Pioneer

Art for American Women

Samplers, examples of needle art, are part of our country's history. In the past young and old women alike made at least one sampler, and often more, during their lifetimes. Making these was a requirement in schools as well as at home. That object over which the girls had toiled and groaned in early days assumed more value later and samplers were carefully taken along to new homes on marrying or moving to new localities.

Actually, sampler making is not indigenous to America, for it first appeared in England, but while references to samplers were made in literature as early as 1502, the first known was made in 1610 by Ann Gower who later moved to this country. There are, so far as I know, writes Rae Lewis in the Washington Post, scarcely more than half a dozen samplers of the Seventeenth century left in this country.

In the beginning, "sampler" was literally the name. There were no needlework books and every time a new stitch was learned from an older member of the family, or perhaps from a visitor or neighbor, it was "recorded," so to speak, for future use on the individual sampler.

Early ones included much open and cutwork, as well as lace. They were long and narrow, possibly because of widths the English looms were able to produce. On wider continent-woven materials, the narrowness was probably because it was unnecessary to show more of each stitch. Lengths extended to three feet, sometimes, part being rolled up while it was not being worked.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT

The betrothal of Miss Jane Fauver, who was teacher of social science in the Chelsea public schools in 1936, to Dr. Frederick A. Henry of Flint, was announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John N. Fauver at a tea given Saturday at their home on Wildemere Ave., Detroit. Thirty guests were present. Individual fancy tea cakes were inscribed with the name of the engaged couple, "Jane and Fred". The wedding will take place at 8:30 p. m. on October 29 in the Wesley Chapel of the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church, with Rev. Merton S. Rice officiating.

"Be strong and of a good courage"

THROUGH the progress of human invention, modes of living have become increasingly luxurious, and today the average person enjoys many comforts that were unheard of a few generations ago. While being grateful for every progressive step that lessens drudgery and reduces hardship, we need to watch lest the enjoyment of material comforts renders us unfit to face difficulties. One need only look around him at the state of human affairs in many countries, to realize that humanity has a great need for moral courage today.

There is a vast difference between genuine courage and a stoical submission without complaint to wrong conditions which are believed to be unavoidable. True courage or fearlessness belongs by right of spiritual inheritance to all the children of God. Divine love is an inexhaustible fountain of good, from which one can draw an endless supply of courage, patience, endurance, tolerance, and tenderness, whenever it is necessary to use these qualities. The spiritual strength supplied by omnipotent love can be realized and proved in our daily experience.

In encouraging Joshua and the children of Israel, who were soon to pass over Jordan to take possession of the land of promise, their great leader, Moses, said (Deuteronomy 31:6), "Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid . . . for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." How often we need to be reminded of this spiritual fact, when approaching some new and untried experience, or when fear and discouragement try to rob us of the fruit of our labors! It is our certainty of divine love's ever-present ability to protect and guide which endows us with courage and spiritual endurance.

"But how can such certainty be gained," asks one, "when on every side there seem to be danger and discord?" . . . In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mary Baker Eddy says (p. 228): "There is no power apart from God. Omnipotence has all-power, and to acknowledge any other power is to dishonor God." This spiritual fact, when understood and applied, enables us to face any difficulty, and teaches us how to solve our problems.

Discouragement is a mental state produced by believing that there is a power opposed to God, and that this power, named devil or evil, can frustrate God, good. Perhaps we may be listening to arguments of evil which seem to whisper, "You are sick; you are poor, lonely, miserable, unwanted." And the more we listen, the louder these arguments seem to talk, until we become mesmerized by them and self-pity clouds our mental horizon. Even a glimpse of spiritual reality will aid in breaking such mesmerism. How often a thought of gratitude destroys the gloom of discouragement, for gratitude is an acknowledgment of the reality of good. If we continue to be grateful, we shall find that other spiritual restoratives will come to our aid, and we shall regain our courage; for it is not a personal characteristic, but a spiritual quality to be claimed and utilized by each and all.

Mrs. Eddy also writes (ibid., p. 514): "Moral courage is the lion of the tribe of Judah, the king of the mental realm. Free and fearless it roams in the forest. Undisturbed it lies in the open field, or rests in green pastures. . . . beside the still waters." Moral courage is free and fearless because it is inspired by the understanding of spiritual reality. It is undisturbed, whether in the forest, in the open field, or beside the still waters, of peace and contentment. This spiritual courage proceeds from trust in the infinite ability of God to guide and guard His children, and from a deeper understanding of the obedience which acknowledges His will as supreme.

The scientific revelation of creation, as given in the first chapter of Genesis, declares God to be the only creator, and proclaims the inspired truth regarding man, the image and likeness of God, divine Mind, namely, that he is endowed with dominion over all the earth" (Genesis 1:26). Our demonstration of these spiritual truths depends on the measure of our obedience to the First Commandment (Exodus 20:3), "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," which is the basis of moral and spiritual law. The understanding and demonstration of this spiritual requirement overcomes fear, discouragement, and impotence, and brings us into our heritage of spiritual dominion. —The Christian Science Monitor.

Patience Lovell Wright (1725-55) made the earliest recorded attempt at sculptural expression in the American colonies. Her portraits, modeled in wax, were highly praised in the colonies and in England, where she lived after 1772, and modeled likenesses of the king, queen and other notables. Her full-length likeness of Lord Chatham in wax was kept for a number of years in a glass case at Westminster Abbey.

Farm Boys' Ideas Are Surveyed By M. S. C.

Throughout Michigan this month and next, conferences and public meetings are scheduled to scan the work of farm boys in the state who have been attending short courses of Michigan State College at East Lansing.

In this area the farm projects of Robert Gilbert of North Lake are included.

R. W. Tenny, college short course director, is conducting the survey of the projects. In many counties there are evening meetings open to the public. At these meetings the boys will aid Tenny in playing host to the general public. Color movies of Michigan State College activities are included in these public sessions.

Nearly all of those who are to be interviewed have been carrying on projects required of those who enroll in the two year winter short course in general agriculture. Between the first and second years the students carry on farm projects to indicate their ability in agriculture.

Buckthorn Sometimes Is Called the Christ-Thorn

The buckthorn is one of a very large family whose members grow all over the world. Some of them have long and interesting histories, but only a few of them live up to the family name by producing thorns, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune. Probably the most famous variety is the Asia Minor and European buckthorn, which is sometimes called the Christ-thorn. It got its name from the legend that the crown of thorns which Christ was forced to wear was made from this shrub.

English writings in the Eleventh century mention the buckthorn (also known as waythorn or Hartshorn) and its uses in medicine. Welsh physicians in the Thirteenth century used to advise that the juice of the buckthorn berry be mixed with honey and taken as an aperient drink.

One of the most interesting relatives of the common buckthorn is the species which grows in the western states. The Indians like the dark berries of the western buckthorn, which is unique in that it is said to color the body of anyone who eats the berries. Soldiers fighting Apaches in the early days reported they found Indians whose bodies were red from gorging on the buckthorn berries.

The buckthorn's use in medicine is not its only recommendation. Its small greenish-yellow flowers are especially favored by the bees; goats, sheep, and horses like to eat the berries, although cows refuse to touch them. Gathered before they are ripe, the berries make a yellow dye used for staining papers and maps. A different shade of yellow dye is prepared from the bark of the buckthorn, and the ripe berries make a green pigment when mixed with other ingredients.

To the landowner, farmer and outdoor fan the buckthorn is a decorative shrub which bears an attractive purple berry in the fall and keeps its waxy green leaves until very late in the season.

Bottles, Tin First Used for Preserving in 1809

Nicholas Appert of Paris, France, discovered the art of canning and was awarded the prize for it by Napoleon in 1809. He used wide-mouthed glass bottles, with cork stoppers. A year later, Peter Durand took out an English patent for preserving food in this way, but sealing it up in "canisters" of tin as well as glass, etc.

Ezra Daggett and his nephew, Thomas Kensett, introduced the canning of salmon, oysters and lobsters in New York in 1819 and Kensett was one of the pioneer developers of the tin can, with the Englishman, Peter Durand, its inventor, in 1825. Oysters and sea foods were the first canned foods to become popular and Kensett soon moved to Baltimore, which became the canning center.

Small canneries sprang up all along the Atlantic coast, but until Civil war times they worked under difficulties. The cans were crudely made by hand and were expensive and undependable. The canners were without scientific knowledge of the principles involved and each had his own secret methods. Tinsmiths or cappers sealed the food in the cans, and their demands were sometimes unreasonable. Processing was done with boiling water and took several hours. Gail Borden took out his patent for canning milk in 1856, fruit canning in California began, also the Pacific salmon canning.

The Civil war demand for canned foods gave the industry its great impetus, machinery was invented for performing the various operations and the use of canned goods became widespread. While some branches of the industry, such as meat packing, are centralized, other branches such as fruit and vegetable canning, are scattered throughout the country.

'Black Sheep' Woodpecker

The yellow-bellied woodpecker, commonly called the sapsucker, is the only black sheep of his family despite the belief that many woodpeckers who resemble him are tree killers. The yellow-bellied is the only one that will suck sap from trees.

The rest of his family drills holes harmlessly in trees. In fact, according to American Wildlife, their drilling often is beneficial, as they are looking for insects.

The work was done under the direction of Supervisor Fred G. Broesamle.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Barbara Sentry, seeking to cheer up her escort, Joanne Boyd, of the way home from a party, slaps him, and attracts the attention of a policeman, whom the boy knocks down. As he arrests him, Professor Brace of Harvard comes to the rescue and drives Barbara home. On the way they see Barbara's father driving from the direction of his office at 12:45, but when he gets home he tells his wife it is 11:15 and that he's been playing bridge at a club. Next morning, while Barbara is telling her mother about her adventure, an urgent phone call comes from Mr. Sentry's office after his departure.

CHAPTER II—Arriving home in the late afternoon, Sentry reports his office has been robbed and a Miss Wines, former temporary employee, killed. The evening papers lunch suggest that someone else shot her.

CHAPTER III—Phil Sentry, son of Yale, disturbed at the possible implications and suspicion of Miss Wines' absence from her room for three days during August, goes home to help. Sentry is arrested and booked for murder, and Dan Fisher explains the evidence against him. The robbery was a fake, the case opened by one who knew the combination, changed Miss Wines' employment to that of a back room girl's duplicate of Sentry's, was found in the girl's purse, and that Sentry, too, had been away three days. Sentry, in her denial that she could have done it, because of the discrepancy of time between the robbery and her seeing Sentry on the road.

CHAPTER IV—Phil, showing the police over the house, finds his strong box forced open and his gun, which only his father knew of. Meanwhile, the police find the stolen money buried in the furnace. Mrs. Sentry and her husband, who were his innocence, and tells her he had known of the robbery and murder the night before, but failed to call the police and came home at 12:30. Both Phil and his mother are doubtful of Sentry's innocence, but keep silent, protesting each other, and especially Barbara.

CHAPTER V—N. May, taking it bitterly, quarrels with V. May, and hysterically runs away with Jimmy Endie to the Caribbean. Linda Dane, friend of Barbara and Phil, tries to comfort Phil, assuring him the possibility that someone else might have done it all.

CHAPTER VI—Falkran, noted criminal lawyer retained, inspires hope but not admiration. Dan Fisher, whom Barbara has been meeting, has been meeting her to use influence to keep the family out of the papers, and everyone shields Barbara on the verge of a breakdown. Old Mrs. Sentry plans to see her son, but collapses at the fall gates, and dies two days before the trial opens.

CHAPTER VII—Barbara alone misses the trial because of a nervous breakdown. Miss Randall, from the office, testifies that Miss Wines always asked for Loran, not Sentry. A doctor, from the New Jersey resort where Sentry and Miss Wines registered there in August, but with difficulty identifies the girl's photograph. Police testify to seeing Sentry's car near the office. Brace gives his report of the night, and the girl's father, failing to identify any of the pictures, presents a letter from his daughter, asserting her dislike of Sentry, and Loran's invitation to dinner. Phil, in the prospect of Sentry himself taking the stand.

CHAPTER VIII—Sentry, on the stand, admits being the fatal shot in the dark and accident, and that he heard the voice of a man who yelled him running toward the door and discharged the gun. He denies acquaintance with Miss Wines, admitting it was another woman with him in August, and tells of Miss Wines' being required money by him, and being left alone in his office, and that the drawer containing his duplicate key was open on his return. Counting on this sensational testimony, Loran home again, Mrs. Sentry hears that Loran wants to buy the business. Falkran, far from acquittal, if not Sentry will testify as the loyal, all-forgiving wife.

"No, I knew she was temporary."

"You could have had Miss Randall find someone who was satisfactory, couldn't you?"

"It wasn't worth the trouble for so short a time."

"And you liked Miss Wines?"

"Not at all."

"Why not? She was pretty, young, pleasant, courteous, was she not?"

"I didn't dislike her. I thought nothing about her. She was part of the office furniture, that's all."

"But—attractive?"

"I suppose so."

"You didn't notice?"

"No."

"Didn't notice that she was pretty?"

Mrs. Sentry sensed what was coming, perceived the trap prepared, wished to cry out in warning. But Arthur stumbled blindly on, into its very jaws. "No," he said.

"Come now, Mr. Sentry, any man must notice a pretty girl, unless there's something wrong with him."

"I don't."

"You don't notice such things, aren't interested in pretty women?"

"No."

The trap closed, the jaws snapped shut. "Then if you don't notice such things, Mr. Sentry, why did you take this mysterious Enid to New Jersey last August?"

She heard Arthur mumble something, shaken, speechless, perceiving too late the pit which his own words had dug for his unwary feet. Questions rained upon him; he answered helplessly.

And Mrs. Sentry wished to cry out comfort to him; to say: "It is all right, Arthur!"

"Now Mr. Sentry, have you told us, in general, all there is to tell about your various encounters with Miss Wines?"

"In general."

By a corner where they turned toward the house, a newshy shout. "Sentry Tells Love Life! Read all about it!" He waved a paper, headlines screaming.

Phil stopped uncertainly; but Linda drew him past and on, and she saw his eyes dulled as though with a sudden thought; and she asked, "What is it, Phil?"

He looked at her in a dazed way. "Why—Lin," he said, slowly, almost incredulously, "I just realized something."

"What, Phil?"

"I just realized that I believe him. I mean—about it being an accident. I don't believe he meant to kill Miss Wines at all."

"Bless you, dear," she murmured. They were at the entrance to the drive. She stopped him. "I'm not coming in, Phil," she said. "I'll be over in the morning to stay with Barbara while you and your mother

"You had no personal relations with her?"

"No."

"At any time?"

"My only conversation with her on personal matters was when she came to my office three weeks before—"

"Before you shot her?"

"Before her death."

"Ah, yes. I forgot, you do not like that phrase. But you did shoot her."

"Yes, by accident."

"And arranged things in a way to suggest that someone else shot her."

"Yes."

"Hoping the police would think someone else had shot her?"

Mrs. Sentry, watching Arthur, saw that he was strung to the breaking point, knew that in another moment his iron control would shatter. And then suddenly Falkran was on his feet, and he and Mr. Weldon were involved in some argument, meaningless to her, yet twice welcome, since while they argued Arthur could fight back to some composure. She watched him, not listening to them; till suddenly the jury was filing out, and Arthur too, between his guards, his face haggard and drawn.

Mrs. Sentry and Phil did not hear the rest of Mr. Sentry's cross-examination. District Attorney Flood sought them during the noon recess, to urge them to stay away from court that afternoon.

Phil and Linda walked for miles, at a swift striding gait, and at first he talked, bitterly reciting to her his father's testimony, as though it were a relief to twist the knife in the wound. She listened, not commenting, but her hand rested on his arm.

"I don't know why I tell you all this," he said at last. "You can read it all in the papers. It was awful!"

"I don't read the papers, Phil," she replied. "And you need tell me nothing; but if it makes you feel better to talk, you can talk to me all you want."

"I couldn't have gone through it if I hadn't had you."

"I'm glad. I want it to be so."

"It must be tough on you, though."

"It isn't. It's sweet to think I'm helping."

"Mother's so darned brave!"

"Of course."

"But gosh, Linda, it's awful to hear him saying those things!" And he cried, "Why, I'd rather think he did it than believe the things he's saying about himself!" He was choking. "Lin, he's my father! Half of me is him!"

"No, Phil! No! You are all yourself." And she challenged, "If you did a rotten, mean thing, would you try to get out of it by blaming it on him?"

"Well, no, I guess not. I'd have to stand it myself."

"Then don't talk so!"

"But it makes me feel—rotten, rotten, that he has anything to do with me."

"Phil," she urged, "children are born because two people love each other. You were born because your father loved your mother and she loved him; and love is clean and fine and beautiful. Just remember that." And she said, "Besides, boys are always more like their mother, anyway, and your mother is grand! You ought to be so proud of her."

"She sure is!"

"Well, then," she cried, "you see?"

He grinned a little. "You're grand yourself, you know, Lin. Grand to me. I don't see why."

She looked up at him serenely. "Because I love you, Phil."

He walked for minutes without speaking, nor did she speak beside him. But he said at last: "I know it, Lin. I've tried to pretend I didn't, but I do."

"I don't mean to bother you about it, Phil," she said, and laughed a little. "I know you've got much else to do to love me very much just now. But that's why I'm sticking around so much. So that when you do find time—"

"I never can, Lin," he said in a low tone. "Never will. I'll never marry anyone, now."

"Never's a long time!"

"I know it."

"Let's wait and see."

"No, honestly," he urged. "Please, Lin, you've got to get the idea out of your head. Probably you ought to stay away from us."

"Can't," she said lightly. "Barbara needs me." And she said: "Besides, it's none of your business how much I love you—yet. I'm not asking for anything. I've never asked you to kiss me. Come on, it's almost dark. Time to be heading for home."

"It was more the way he looked, and acted," Dan explained. He heard a car stop in front of the house, crossed quickly to the window to look out. "It's Falkran," he said. "Let's go down. Come on."

And without waiting for an assent, he opened the door. They descended together as Nellie admitted Falkran. The lawyer saw the reporter and said guardedly, "Oh, hullo, Dan."

Dan nodded. "Did Mr. Battle see you?" he asked crisply. "About putting Mrs. Sentry on the stand?"

"Yes," Falkran spoke pompously. "But of course I cannot allow the newspapers to tell me how to conduct a case."

"Oh, don't make speeches to me. I'm not the jury."

Mrs. Sentry said, from the living-room door: "Good evening, Mr. Falkran." He turned toward her, with that smile so confident and reassuring, and took her hand. "Ah, Mrs. Sentry."

Phil and Dan followed him. Dan remained standing by the hearth, the others sat down. And Mrs. Sentry asked, "Well?"

Falkran cleared his throat. "Well," he said, "Mr. Sentry stood the cross-examination surprisingly well." And as Dan Fisher moved, the lawyer insisted, smiling, "Of course, for our friends the reporters this was the high spot of the trial, and they made the most of it. But as Mr. Sentry's counsel, I was proud of him."

Mrs. Sentry nodded without speaking. Falkran challenged Dan, "Wasn't that your impression—as a friend of the family?"

Dan started to answer honestly, but he caught Phil's eye with entreaty and said only: "I was too busy taking notes to think of that side of it. Our job is to report the case, not to decide it." He added guardedly, "But I thought Mr. Weldon shook him once or twice."

Falkran said, "I'm glad to have your opinion. Weldon is of course a skillful cross-examiner, makes every possible effect. It is conceivable that some of the jurors may still be undecided; but Mrs. Sentry's testimony tomorrow will turn the scales our way."

Dan protested, "I don't think you should call that."

"I know," Falkran agreed. "You and all her friends have a natural desire to spare her. That is to be expected. And believe me, Dan, I do not insist. But Mrs. Sentry understands that an acquittal may depend upon her testimony; and of course she wishes to do whatever she can for her husband, no matter what the cost to herself."

Mrs. Sentry watched them both, her face expressionless, saying nothing. Phil came to sit on the arm of her chair, his eyes holding Dan's, dreading what Dan might say.

Dan said, "You claim her testimony may acquit him?"

"I have promised her it will."

"What can she say that will help?"

Falkran hesitated. "Well, Dan," he answered at last, "you heard Mr. Sentry's testimony this afternoon. You understand that the only motive the State can suggest was Mrs. Sentry's fear of his wife's attitude. But if Mrs. Sentry testifies that he had no cause to be afraid of her, and that he knew it, then that motive disappears."

There was a silence that extended for long minutes. Dan watched Mrs. Sentry. She sat with her head a little bent.

And she looked at them, at Dan and then at Falkran. Dan stared in quick surprise. There was something in her eyes he could not read; something like serenity. "So I must decide," she said quietly. Then to Falkran: "You wish me to testify?"

"Yes."

Her eyes held his for a moment. Then she said, half smiling, looking up at Phil, "Son, a curious thing has happened to me. The room was very still. 'Phil, I have suddenly fallen in love with your father. He's so alone, so helpless. I must help him.' She met Falkran's eyes; she said: 'I want to do everything I can. Ask me whatever you wish!'"

He came leaping to his feet, smiled that great blustering smile of his. "Splendid!" he exclaimed. "I counted on you, counted on your strength and courage. Be easy, Mrs. Sentry. Your testimony will set your husband free."

She rose to face him; but, on her feet, weakness swept her. She leaned on Phil, said to them all: "Forgive me. I am tired. Phil, will you take me upstairs?"

In the morning Falkran did call Mrs. Sentry to the stand. At her name, she rose and walked steadily to the witness box. She was sworn, and Falkran approached her.

He asked simply, "You are Mrs. Arthur Sentry?"

"I am."

"The wife of the defendant?"

Falkran turned, he bowed to the District Attorney, he said, "You may inquire."

And the District Attorney said instantly, "No questions."

Falkran smiled triumphantly; but Mrs. Sentry stood dazed and incredulous. Strong for the ordeal she had expected, this deliverance drained all her strength away. Falkran came to lead her to her seat again.

Through the remaining days of the trial, she listened inattentively, even when Mr. Loran, during the State's rebuttal, took the stand. His testimony was brief. He denied any personal relations with Miss Wines; said he never saw her after her work in the office was ended. He testified that on those days in August when she was out of town, he was fishing in the Maine woods; and he testified that on the night she was killed he went to New York on the 12:30 a. m. train, boarding it at about eleven, and going to bed at once in his compartment. His guide in Maine, and the Pullman porter, corroborated his testimony.

The trial sped; the arguments began. At half-past three on Thursday afternoon, the jury retired.

To wait for the verdict, Mrs. Sentry and Phil went to a hotel, took a room. At five, and at seven, Falkran telephoned; and at a quarter of ten, he phoned again to assert that the jury stood ten to two for acquittal.

At eleven, he came himself to say that the jury, still unable to agree, had been locked up for the night.

"So there will be no verdict till morning," he said. "A verdict in less than first degree, or a disagreement, is possible; but I expect acquittal. I will give odds that tomorrow night Mr. Sentry will sleep in his own bed! You can go home and rest easy."

Mrs. Sentry and Dan went down in the elevator, out to where old Eli waited with the limousine, and so came home.

CHAPTER X

Mrs. Sentry woke next morning wearily, from sleep that had brought no repose. While she dressed, she thought: I must hurry, hurry. Perhaps already the jury has decided. I must hurry, hurry to be there. Her breath was short; it was a conscious effort to fill her lungs; and within her body there seemed to be a crawling, writhing knot, as though her nerves were in actual physical motion like the tentacles of an octopus.

She came downstairs bravely; but while they were at breakfast Dan telephoned to urge them not to come to court. "It can't possibly do any good now, you know," he reminded Phil. "The thing is settled; one way or the other."

Phil, returning to the table, repeated this advice. Mrs. Sentry cried instantly: "No, Phil! No! I must be there, must do everything I can."

"Being there can't do any good, mother," he reminded her. "When the jury does come into court again, they will have decided. The sight of you can't change them."

She looked at Phil acutely. "That means you think they will convict him? Find him guilty?"

"Gosh, no!"

"But Phil, if there's any least chance of his acquittal, I must be there. There to take him in my arms." She colored like a girl.

He put his arm around her. "I'll be there," he promised. "To bring him home. If he can come. If he cannot—then for you to be there would just break you down. And be miserably with your strength, mother. Keep it to spend when it will do real good."

It may have been two hours before he came home. Mrs. Sentry had waited in a surface calm, consulting with cook about meals before she went upstairs to sit with Barbara. When she heard the car, she descended, slowly, holding to the stair-rail, walking carefully. Each step was a voluntary action that required to be planned and with the utmost caution carried through.

She met Phil in the front hall, so that his back was to the light and she could not see his face clearly. Nevertheless she saw that he was alone. So no word from him was necessary.

She swayed toward him, and he held her close.

He said in a low tone, evading the direct statement: "Mr. Falkran wants to see you, to discuss the appeal. I told him to wait, to come in a day or two."

So she knew; and after a moment she shivered suddenly, as a sleeping dog shivers to keep warm, and she felt him stiffen into a frozen rigidity and knew he was afraid for her; so she freed herself, and smiled to reassure him.

"I'm all right, son," she said. "But I shall lie down for a little while. I'd rather be alone just now. You might go sit with Barbara."

He nodded, assenting; and they parted in the upper hall. When he came into Barbara's room, she turned her head on the pillow to look at him, and he thought how thin she was, how pale, how tired, how pale; and he thought, almost grateful for this task to do; Barbara needs me. We've left her too much alone. I must be with her now.

And he sat down on her bedside and held her thin fingers tight in his, and felt them cling and tug. She croaked something, some question; and he said:

"Yes, Barb, old girl. And now we've got to help mother, take care of her. That's our job, yours and mine."

She muttered: "Yes; mother."

This was one of those days when she could manage half-formed syllables, could make herself intelligible in brief phrases. Then after a moment she said, in a sudden passion, her voice a husky croak:

"But he didn't do it, Phil!"

Phil nodded automatically, more to content and quiet her than in assent.

He stayed a long time with Barbara; and she lay watching him, holding fast to his hand, her eyes flowing tears, as though tears were balm. He was still with her when Doctor Mainon came; and the doctor talked quietly to her for a while, and almost cheerfully.

"You've had a long siege, Barbara," he said. "But now you've turned the corner. You're going to be better right along. Be yourself again soon, won't you?"

Phil went downstairs with the older man; and he asked, "Is she as sick as she looks, Doctor?"

The other said gently: "She was worse yesterday morning than she has been at any time; but she's better today." And he asked simply, "Did you tell her your father was convicted?"

Phil said, "Yes." And he said: "A strange thing—it seemed to make her feel better, to reassure her. But she believes he is innocent, of course."

"Fine!" Doctor Mainon agreed. "You stay with her, Phil; and if she shows any inclination to talk, encourage her. Miss Dane has been much with her, hasn't she? And you and your sister are pretty close to one another?"

"Yes, sir."

"Try the clock, this afternoon; and one of you stay with her. If she tries to talk, answer her, get her to confide in you. I could come myself; but she has been afraid of me, afraid of being cured. It had better be one of you, whom she trusts."

"You think she'll be all right?"

"Try," the doctor repeated, and drove away.

Phil did not at once return indoors. He stood under the porte cochere for a moment, thinking of Barbara; and then he realized that even without an overcoat, he was comfortably warm. The sun shone, there was no wind, and the air had promise in it. He walked at random down the drive to the street, noticing without emotion how the shrubbery was broken where curious children or adults like ghouls had broken off souvenirs; and old Eli had neatly clipped the ragged ends and touched them with paint to protect them against decay. Here and there he saw buds swelling, and returning by the other side of the drive he noticed in a sunny corner crocuses just bursting through the sod. March was well begun. Four months till July. In less than four months, the week of July 1 would have come—and gone.

The week of July 1. The Judge's phrase slid like a snake through the dulled channels of his mind. He walked out toward the garage, of which the doors stood open, and saw the cars there. The old limousine which was Eli's pet and pride. The depot wagon which he and Barbara were apt to use. The roadster which his father had driven that night. The limousine and the roadster had low number plates, three digits in the one, four in the other; one of the mild forms of ostentation in which he knew his mother took a secret pride.

He went in to look at the roadster; and he stared at it with a rooted physical distaste. He made a sudden decision to be rid of it. Eli came in from the garden, and Phil started to speak to him and then remembered that he would have to shout, because Eli was deaf; and if he shouted, his mother, even in the house, might hear. Instead, he took an envelope from his pocket and wrote on it orders for the old man to drive the roadster into the country, find a dealer somewhere who would buy it at any price, then surrender the number plates, give them up for good and all. He realized as he wrote that the plates had been renewed since his father last drove the car; but the number was the same, had been the same each year since before he himself was born. Get rid of them!

Eli read the instructions, and he nodded his assent, silent as always. Phil took the registration, endorsed the report of transfer of ownership in blank, scribbled a note giving Eli authority to sell the car. He brushed his hands together in a deep relief and turned away, and it did not occur to him till years afterward, looking backward on these months, that the moment was a milestone. It was the first time in his life that he had ever made a concrete decision involving definite action on an adult plane and carried the action through. He thought in later years that his own maturity dated from that moment when, almost without consideration, he assumed the headship of the family.

He left Eli and went out past the tennis court, littered with last year's dead leaves, the remains of a drift of snow still persisting in one corner; and he stood in the little sun-lamp above the muddy stream, persisted, and looked down where his father that night had thrown the gun.

The District Attorney's words in his closing argument came back to Phil in burning phrases:

"He decided to kill her. How do we know? Because he stole his son's revolver. If he wanted to carry a weapon for any legitimate purpose, he, a man of standing, would have asked for and would have received a permit; he would have bought a modern pistol, compact, easily carried, effective. Instead, knowing his son was away, knowing the absence of the gun would not be detected, knowing it was an old weapon that could not be traced, he chose to use that to commit the murder he had planned. He planned the murder, he arranged a pretext to explain his return to the office that night—the forgotten coffee-pot—in case he encountered someone on the way. He made an assignment with his victim. He met her there, he killed her, he staged a clumsy fake robbery."

Phil's thoughts ran over and over the same words; and Linda suddenly was beside him. He had not heard her come. She said nothing; only took her stand there firmly, her arm through his, her eyes straight ahead.

He said at last, "Funny, but I feel better, now that it's over."

"Soon be spring," she murmured. He exclaimed, surprised: "Queen you should say that. It's just what I was thinking."

"I know! People get to be that way, knowing each other's thoughts, sometimes." She added: "Barbara seems better. But I saw you from the window, so I came down."

He told her what Doctor Mainon had said. "And he wants someone to sit with her, talk to her," he explained. "You or me."

"I can't stay for lunch," she confessed. "But I'll come and be with her this afternoon."

Phil and his mother had lunch together, and at first they were silent, but at last she said:

"Phil, I've been meaning to speak to you. There is something we shall have to decide. You and I, really." And she explained Mr. Loran's demand for the dissolution of the partnership.

Phil tried to focus his thoughts on this new problem. "Shall we sell?" he suggested; and he said, with a sort of shudder: "I told Eli to sell the roadster—and give up the number plates. I want to get rid of everything."

"I understand, Phil. But—will you want to go back to college in the fall?"

Polk Confirmed Gold Discovery
On December 8, 1848, President Polk's annual message confirmed previous unofficial reports of the discovery of gold in California, nearly a year before. The first of these reached the East in a letter, dated San Francisco, April 1, which appeared in the New York Herald on August 19. Subsequent newspaper dispatches from California were eagerly awaited and the posting of "gold" bulletins attracted vast crowds. It is significant that the same presidential message which confirmed this history making news also reported that steps had been taken toward "extending the benefit of our post office laws to the people of California."

Crashing its way into the headlines once again comes football, king of autumn sports. Local interest in the game will reach a peak during the next few weeks. Pictured here is Capt. Joe Kilgore of last year's Alabama championship team, who was picked on several all-American teams.

As told to: FRANK E HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Grand Fishin' in Grand Canyon
THROUGH the Grand Canyon in Arizona flows the Colorado river. Since "Colorado" is Spanish for "red" its water should be that color, but mostly it's a turbid, yellow stream. As Jim Hankins, ex-pro prospector, ex-cowboy and now a tourist guide, if there are fish in the stream and he will say:—
"Sure, there's fish there, but I 'low I'm about the only man in Arizona who knows how to catch them fish. They're right peculiar, same as everything else down in this country. One funny thing about 'em is—that they always swim backward."
"Why? So's to keep the mud from gettin' in their eyes. Ain't the best because o' that fact the I kin catch 'em. Them fish is all plumb crazy over eatin' tobacco. So when I am to go fishin' I take me a club and a ten-cent plug o' eatin' tobacco."
"Then I go down to the bottom of the canyon and I pluck me out a nice shoal place where I can see the fish as they come swimmin' upstream, tail first. Then I take my pocket-knife and I cut the plug up in little bits. I wade out in the stream a little ways and spread the bait on the top of the water."
"Well, sir, them fish grab it and go down to the bottom and start chewin'. Purty soon they get a hankerin' to spit. Not even a fish can spit under water, so when they come up to the top to spit I jest haul off with my club and hit 'em over the heads. And that's all there is to it."

Aaron Burr a Busy Man
in War and in Politics
Aaron Burr, born in Newark, N. J., February 6, 1756, was educated at the college of New Jersey (later called Princeton university) and was prominent in the war of the Revolution. In 1778 he resigned his commission as colonel, partly on account of ill health and partly through disappointment at not being promoted more rapidly. In 1782 he was admitted to the bar in Albany.

His progress in politics was rapid. In 1794 he was elected to the state legislature. In 1798 became attorney-general of the state, and was elected senator from 1791 until 1797. His efficiency in the presidential canvass of 1800 caused the friends of Jefferson to bring him forward for the vice presidency. An equal number of votes having been thrown for Jefferson and Burr, the election went into the house of representatives. On the thirty-sixth ballot Jefferson was chosen President and, in accordance with the constitutional provision, Burr became Vice President, serving from 1801 to 1805.
His unethical conduct in trying to defeat the candidate of his party caused him to lose his political influence. observes a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer. He ran for governor of New York and was defeated. The bitterness of that contest led to a duel, in 1804, between Burr and Alexander Hamilton, in which the latter was killed. Burr was later tried for treason on the charge of attempting to establish an empire which should embrace some of the southwestern states of the Union. He died September 14, 1836.

Suffrage to Women

Names of Shore Places
Puzzle the Historians

Brigantine, the sister island just north of the one on which Atlantic City stands, got its name because a brigantine was wrecked there, back in the early 1700s.

A brigantine is one of the types of sailing vessel; if it had been another type the resort might bear the name of Schooner, or Bark.

The early maps show a settlement of Wrangleboro, a little north on the mainland—but early histories give no clue to what type of people took part in the wordy argument. The place is absorbed in little Port Republic.

Those are two reasons why students declare Atlantic county holds something close to an American record for hit-and-miss selection of names.

Washington state, Minnesota and Wisconsin have their rich lore of Indian names; California and Colorado names carry the story of their early Spanish explorers, and New England points take the names of their early Colonial settlers or their English-home towns.

But around Atlantic City, says a correspondent in the Philadelphia Inquirer, historians have trouble tracing even the source, to say nothing of the motive, of some designations.

Most residents accept the legend that Bargaintown traces its name to the first local real estate enthusiast, the folks thought these lots were an excellent buy.

Crossing Sea on Dry Land
Even if you do not believe in miracles, it is scientifically possible for Moses to have crossed the Red sea on dry land as the Bible states. Napoleon records in his "Memorial de Ste. Helene" that he also crossed the Red sea "a pied sec" (on dry foot). Near the town of Suez, the crossing is only about a mile wide, and very shallow, while a correspondent in Pearson's London Weekly. "Tides and winds blow up and lower the water from time to time. Before the crossing was dredged out for the present 35 feet deep channel, it was possible to cross by stepping from sand bar to sand bar when the winds and tides combined to lower the water level.

Never Two Alike
Snowflakes fall by uncountable, unimaginable billions, in every snowstorm that blows. Sometimes they are big and moist, sometimes little and hard and dry. They always have six points; so they are always alike in that way. But they are not alike in any other way. No snowflake has ever been seen that was an exact twin of any other snowflake, and scientists have carefully examined and photographed thousands of them. Snowflakes are complete individualists; every one is a pattern unto itself.
