Dumping Rubbish At Roadside Prohibited

With the approach of the annual "Clean Up - Paint Up" week the Washtenaw County Road Commission issues another warning that the highway roadways are not intended to be the dumping ground for rubbish or other trash. In fact the State law states that such practice is a misdemeanor and upon conviction is punishable by a fine or imprisonment, or both.

K. L. Hallenbeck, Superintendent of the County Road Commission, stated that "it is inconceivable that some otherwise respectable citizens countenance the practice of disposing of their rubbish upon public roads and literally in the doorway of a neighbor and thereby create a needless unsightly condition. It certainly is not a function of our department to expend public funds to pick up and dispose of private rubbish."

Mr. Hallenbeck further stated that "public spirited citizens should cooperate with us in eliminating this nuisance by reporting violators as we are anxious and willing to prosecute the case in court if such action is necessary to stop the practice which has become quite general throughout the county."

County Bankers Hold Monthly Forum Here

The monthly Forum meeting of the Washtenaw County Chapter of the American Institute of Banking was held in Chelsea on Thursday. The Chelsea bankers were hosts to the group and Paul G. Schable was in charge of arrangements.

At 4 o'clock a business meeting of the Advisory Council of the Chapter was held at the Chelsea State Bank, and dinner was served to 78 members at 6:30 at Kolb's dining room.

Community singing, led by Paul F. Niehaus, opened the evening program, and the speaker was Prof. Allen F. Sherzer of the Mechanical Engineering department of the University of Michigan. He spoke concerning his latest trip on a Hudson Bay Company trading boat and illustrated with moving pictures.

Prominent Kiwanian Addresses Local Club

Claude Dock, Past International Trustee of Kiwanis International, who has held every office in Kiwanis except International President, spoke at the Chelsea club meeting on Monday night. He was introduced by "Jerry" Niehaus, who said that at the district convention at Flint when Mr. Dock was governor, he called every speaker from the floor by his name and gave the place from which he came and the club to which he belonged.

His address on building American morale began with an illustration from the early revolutionary times. Benjamin Franklin, in Paris, saw how things were going with Washington's army. He had heard of a discredited Prussian army officer by the name of Von Steuben. He met him and commissioned him to Washington. Von Steuben took fourteen American men at Valley Forge and trained them in his style of army organization. When the fourteen men were ready, Von Steuben said to Washington, "Now we are ready to create a division."

Mr. Dock closed by saying that if we are to do anything about the ills of the United States we must start training boys in Boy Scout and other like organizations. They are the bulwark of the future.

The occasion of the meeting was the fifteenth anniversary of the local club. Visitors from Jackson, the sponsoring club, Dexter, the sponsored club, and Ann Arbor were present.

A brief memorial service for Kiwanians who had departed this life was conducted by James Hendley, Jerry Niehaus, Ed. Eaton, and Ray Barber.

Mayer, who has been associated with an Ann Arbor insurance agency for several years, has severed his connections in that city and has established an office in Chelsea, where he will devote his entire time to the insurance business. At states that he has connections with the same sound companies as in the past and will be pleased to meet his friends at his new location.

Eight Days Remain for Introduction of Bills in Legislature

Lansing—Eight legislative days remain for filing of new bills for the 1939 session of the state legislature.

Pet measures of every kind are being dumped into the hopper, referred to sundry committees, and left to await their fate which, in most cases, will be oblivion.

The very fact that more than 600 bills have been introduced here to date and that around 900 will probably be the final total offers an insight into the hazards which legislation must surmount "twix introduction and passage."

More than one conscientious representative and senator has voted in favor of a bill on the say-so of a friend without giving it more than a passing glance. In the mad rush of the final weeks of every legislative session, unwise bills often slip through, due to realistic circumstances rather than to deliberate intent.

266-Page Bill

A case at hand is Senate Bill No. 1, the probate code, representing months of work by a study commission created by the 1937 legislature.

This measure, sponsored by Senator D. Hale Brake, contains 266 pages. It is the prize measure to date for length.

On Monday, March 13, the senate judiciary committee reported out the bill. The official journal of the senate, No. 45 of the 1939 series, might well be a text for students of political science on the modern art of government. This issue contains all the amendments recommended by the committee for the probate code—exactly 450 in number!

Senators were appalled at the prospect of having each amendment read by the clerk, as is necessary during general orders if one senator so desires. Obviously the senate would be in continuous session for many, many hours. Few, if any, of the members would have the patience or endurance to survive the ordeal.

What happened? You guessed right. The senate passed the bill, hoping for the best. It was more of a vote of confidence in Senator Brake and his colleagues, all attorneys, than one of approval of the bill and its 450 amendments.

Here is modern government in operation.

JOHN PARKER HONORED

John Parker, who celebrated his 80th birthday on Saturday, was honored at two parties. The first, arranged by Harvey B. Murphy, was given on Friday evening at Kolb's hall. It was a surprise and 40 of Mr. Parker's friends were present. Cards furnished the diversion of the evening, and lunch was served. A gift was presented to the honor guest, George Parker, 88 years of age, of Selo, a brother of Mr. Parker, and two nephews were among the guests.

On Sunday a dinner was given for Mr. Parker at the home of Mrs. Mary Huston, where he makes his home. A beautifully decorated birthday cake centered the table. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. John Lowery of Kalamazoo, Miss Luella Huston, Miss Helen Wagner and Fred Stinebaugh of Detroit and Mrs. Myrtle Hartford of Plymouth. Mr. Parker received many lovely gifts.

WILL INSTALL NEW SIGNALS

As the result of a request by the State Highway Department, the Michigan Central will install new warning signals at the North Main street crossing, according to village officials, who have been cooperating in bringing about the change. The present signals are in the middle of the street and were declared by the highway department to be a traffic hazard. The new signals will be at the side of the street so they will not interfere in any way with traffic crossing the tracks. According to village authorities the change will be made in the near future.

ROD & GUN CLUB ELECTS

At the annual meeting of the Chelsea Rod & Gun club, held on March 14 at Kolb's hall the following officers were elected:

President—George Hart.
1st Vice-Pres.—Henry Annenhill.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Harold Spaulding.
Secretary—Alfred Mayer.
Treasurer—Herbert Loeffler.
It was planned by the club to hold their annual euchre party and guest night on Tuesday, March 28 at Kolb's hall. Progressive euchre will be played and lunch will be served.

ATTEND RECEPTION

Sixteen members of Olive Chapel, No. 108, O. E. S. of this place were in Ypsilanti on Friday afternoon and evening to attend a reception given for the Grand Officers of the Grand Chapter of Michigan. Dinner was served at 6:30 and in the evening the exemplification and initiatory work were given by the Grand Officers.

Am. Legion Celebrates Twentieth Anniversary

The 20th anniversary of the American Legion was celebrated with an enjoyable party given Friday evening at Legion hall, Cavanaugh Lake.

At 6:30 a delicious chicken dinner was served, with covers for 61, including Legion members, their wives, and the members of the Legion Auxiliary. A special feature of the dinner was a three-tiered birthday cake, decorated in the patriotic colors.

Following the repast, Mrs. Wilbur Hinderer, of the Auxiliary, gave a toast to the Legion, to which J. A. Dumouchel, Commander of the Legion, responded. The program of games opened with a Prof. Quiz number with four Legion and four Auxiliary members, which was won by the Legion 42 1-3 to 32 1-3. In the naming of towns and cities alphabetically, the Auxiliary were winners. Bingo furnished entertainment for the remainder of the evening.

Too much credit cannot be given the following committees: Kitchen—Mr. and Mrs. Larry Christwell, Mr. and Mrs. Merle Barr, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Schiller, Mr. and Mrs. Claire Rowe; Entertainment—Dr. A. L. Brock, Paul C. Maroney.

Winter Classes Will Be Summarized March 29

The last of the regular meetings for instruction in adult agriculture will be held March 29 at the high school, at 8:00 p.m. A complete summary will be formulated under the direction of Roy Wallis, Vocational Agriculture instructor. This will be the thirteenth meeting of the evening school, on "Feeding Farm Animals," "Diseases of Farm Animals," and "Testing Soils for Acidity."

A fine average of attendance is reported for the evening classes. It is hoped to have those people who have attended a major percentage of the classes to participate in the summary.

A committee under the leadership of Henry Heim is planning a social get-together for April 12. It is expected to include a speaker, entertainment, lunch and awards to members attending 60 per cent or more of the evening classes. Watch for further announcements.

NYA Places Youths in Private Industry

Lansing—As a result of training and work experience obtained on projects of the National Youth Administration of Michigan, 127 youths were placed in private industry during February, according to Orin W. Kaye, State Director of the NYA. Of this number, more than 103 received permanent employment.

Kaye said that a total of 405 young people left the NYA rolls during the month—the remainder because of marriage, loss of age eligibility, school entrance, or other reasons. He also disclosed that the figures for February reflect a rise of more than 5 per cent over the preceding month in the number of young people leaving the NYA who were placed in private industry.

In its 45 work centers and 7 resident work training projects particularly, the National Youth Administration for Michigan is equipped to give unemployed youth the practical training which will assist in its obtaining jobs. Nearly half of the young people on the NYA program a year ago have left the NYA since then, a large percentage securing permanent private employment.

At the present time 6,581 unemployed young people between 18 and 25 years of age are assigned to the NYA work project program in Michigan.

Prospectors Used 'Doodle Bug'

The "doodle bug" was a forked hazel or peach bough used as a sort of "divining rod." It never had any scientific standing but some early prospectors were said to have used it. The prospector walked over ground he hoped contained oil, and held the twig so that the fork pointed upward. When the prospector stood above a pool of oil the "doodle bug" was supposed to point downward.

State Seed Bill Will Be Millions of Dollars

Mother Nature has been a bountiful provider of crops in Michigan for a century or so, but once again she is about to exact that spring tribute—the seed supplies that must go into the ground.

Within the borders of this state the seed bill in 1939 runs into millions of dollars.

Little estimate can be made of what it takes to plant the backyard, vacant lot or farm gardens. With specific farm crops where the acreages are known, however, it can be accurately estimated that for but six of the major crops it will take more than five million dollars in seed, even if these are taken out of ordinary market supplies.

Largest of these seed bills is that for potatoes.

Two of every three of Michigan's 196,000 farms produce enough potatoes to be considered in the commercial production, which has raised the state to second in the nation. So the 260,000 acres which the crop occupies will require 3,750,000 bushels, whether from ordinary bins or from higher priced certified seed supplies. So that's an item of $2,911,000, as near as specialists at Michigan State College can estimate.

Wheat and oats are the next two important items for seed. Michigan is not an important wheat growing state in national ratings. But nearly a million acres will require about 1,300,000 bushels of seed wheat, worth even at ordinary farm prices, about $780,000.

Oats occupy about 1,225,000 acres, each seeded at a rate of about two bushels to the acre, another matter of $812,000.

Alfalfa acreage in Michigan leads the nation. Even if but one-sixth is reseeded or replaced this year, it will take about 30,000 bushels worth a half million dollars to cover 175,000 acres.

Another crop is beans. If recent plantings are repeated there will be about 460,000 acres of beans in Michigan in 1939, requiring 300,000 bushels of seed. At $1.05 a bushel this is another $315,000. Barley seed for 166,000 acres will total 250,000 bushels, worth $165,000. Sugar beet plantings to cover 140,000 acres can cost $252,000.

R. E. Decker, known throughout the state for his work as Michigan State College farm crops extension specialist, and now beginning work as assistant state agricultural county agent leader, points out these immense seed supplies as an instance where dollar saving can mean poor quality, poor crops and poor prices.

Although it is economy, he says, to gather seed out of bins on the farms, the quality should be above average. He has worked for years with certified seed growers whose relationship with the college is to increase new seed varieties, to maintain purity and quality in recognized stand-by varieties.

Potato seed stock, he finds, could be renewed each year to advantage, and certified seed should be used each three years or so in planting such crops as oats, barley, wheat and beans.

"Many farmers overplant in seedling barley, oats, clover, alfalfa and perhaps wheat," warns Decker. "One crop which proves underplanting is common is potatoes. About 15 bushels to the acre is the common planting rate, but those who get high yields usually drop in 20 to 25 bushels of seed to the acre."

So there is a brief picture of what faces Michigan's farmers in the next few weeks. One might add an estimated four million dollars and more for commercial fertilizers, also purchase of new seedling and land working equipment, but Dame Nature waits to turn on spring breezes, so it's time for city folks to scan seed catalogs and for farmers to size up bins of suitable seed stocks.

Name Eliza Was Borne by

Two Wives of Presidents

The name Eliza, a short form of the Hebrew Elizabeth (meaning "consecrated to God") has not retained the place in popular favor it once held, as has the longer form. Still, there are many women who bear it, especially in cases where it is a family name, according to Florence A. Cowles in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Two wives of Presidents have borne this name, Eliza Kortwright Monroe and Eliza McArdle Johnson. Napoleon had a sister Eliza whom he made Grand Duchess of Tuscany. The true name of the French tragedienne, Rachel (d. 1852) was Eliza Rachel Felix. Elise and Elisa are French forms.

Eliza Lucas Pinckney, in colonial days, capably managed her father's farm while he was away on government business. Later she married Chief Justice Pinckney and became the mother of that C. C. Pinckney who said to France: "Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute." Eliza Haywood (d. 1756), English novelist and dramatist, acted in the plays she wrote.

Eliza Ware Farrar (d. 1870) wrote "The Children's Robinson Crusoe," etc. Eliza O'Neill, later Lady Becher (d. 1872), Irish tragedienne, was the most popular actress of her time in Great Britain. Eliza M. Gillespie (d. 1887) became Mother Mary of St. Angela, founded some 30 academies in the United States and organized a corps of nurses who did good service during the Civil war.

Bottles Earliest Glassware

Bottles were the earliest form of glassware made in America.

Origin of Diamonds

Much doubt exists as to the origin of diamonds. The French geologist, De Launay, argued that diamonds came up from the bowels of the earth. This view seems to be supported by the fact that their occurrence is apparently independent of enclosing rock, whether it is the carbonaceous shale found at the surface, or the underlying diabase and quartzite. The conditions necessary to the crystallization of carbon in the form of a diamond seems to be intense heat and great pressure such as exist during the forming of igneous rocks.

Tea-Plant Flower as Food

Many centuries ago the flower of the tea-plant was cooked and used as food.

Anxiety and Faith

The beginning of anxiety is the end of faith; and the beginning of true faith the end of anxiety.

Fire Brat, Silverfish

A fire brat is a kind of silverfish, or small scale-covered insect, which is a household pest.

Glass-Blowing by Egyptians

Glass-blowing was practiced by the Egyptians more than 4,000 years ago.

"Burning low-cost fuel saves me plenty of money."

JOHN DEERE Two-Cylinder Tractors have a 15-year record for burning low-cost fuels successfully, efficiently, and safely. They are specially built to save on fuel costs.

The fuel travels from the carburetor to the short, hot manifold, vaporizes, and passes quickly into the combustion chamber before it has time to relliquefy. Thermo-siphon temperature control maintains proper engine temperature. Crankcase breather removes harmful gases... prevents oil sludge.

Join the army of John Deere Tractor owners and save hundreds of dollars in fuel costs during your tractor's long life.

FEATURES

- Designed to burn low-cost fuels with outstanding economy
- Thermo-siphon temperature control

Question And Answer Dept.

Problem—Take a piece of paper (supposed to be an envelope) and write on it the word "Hill". Beneath this word write the name "John". Beneath "John" write the word "Mass.". In these three words is the full name of the man, the name of the city and the name of the State. The postal service figured it out correctly. Can you do so? (Answer elsewhere in this department.)

Ques.—When a lady and her escort enter a church does the man walk ahead of the lady or behind her, if he wants to show good manners?

Ans.—We believe that Emily Post would say that either way is perfectly correct. Having this view in mind, we believe that better judgment would be exercised if the man preceded the lady. It would then be easier for him to guide the lady gracefully to her seat.

Ques.—Is there any harm washing a U. S. flag? I am told that it should never be put into water.

Ans.—There is no harm whatsoever to wash a U. S. flag. In fact, this practice to clean a flag is resorted to by the United States army and navy.

Ques.—I would like to ask you if there is a university in the Hawaiian Islands? If so, where is it located and when founded?

Ans.—Yes. It is known as the University of Hawaii. It was founded in 1907 as the College of Hawaii, but was reorganized in 1920 and given its present name. It is located at Honolulu.

Ques.—During this war scare we hear talk about Ukraine. Is it an independent country?

Ans.—Ukraine is technically an independent soviet republic, but it works in harmony with soviet Russia. The country is largely influenced by the policies of the Russian government.

Answer to problem—"John Underhill, Andover, Mass." (John under hill, and over mass.)

Ques.—Is Maine or Oregon the most northern point in the United States?

Ans.—Neither one. The most northern point is in Beltrami county, Minn., on the northern shore of the Lake of the Woods.

Ques.—Does the temperature of a healthy person vary any from normal? What is normal?

Ans.—The normal temperature of a healthy person is 98.4 degrees. However, this temperature moves up and down a few tenths of a degree.

Ques.—What became of the stone which the Pope of Rome contributed to the Washington monument at Washington, D. C.? What kind of a stone was it?

Ans.—That's a mystery that has never been solved. The stone was a block of African marble from the Temple of Concord at Rome, and bore the inscription "Roma to America". All that is known about it is that in 1854, during the Know-Nothing terrorists excitement, the place where the stone was kept was forcibly entered and the stone carried away. The United States offered a liberal reward for its recovery, but its whereabouts remains a secret to this day. It is supposed that the stone was thrown into the Potomac river.

Ques.—Did Mark Anthony, the Roman soldier, spell his name with or without the letter "h"?

Ans.—Neither way. As Latin was the prevailing language he wrote his name "Marcus Antonius". The English form for this name is "Mark Antony", without the "h".

Mount Vernon Memorial Highway

What about law enforcement on our streets and highways? Do the drunks in your community get by with a small fine, and are they allowed to go back on the roads and repeat their offense?

It behoves every citizen who travels on our highways and who obeys the traffic laws to investigate this.

Fixing tickets is as bad a violation of decency and courtesy as the crime itself. Spineless enforcement, usually diluted with politics, can never reduce highway accidents. It's bad enough for motorists to wink at the law, but when the law winks right back, the people in a community are not safe on the highway.

Check up on this point and remember—"It's Smart to Drive Carefully."

Children In Court

By Judge Malcolm Hatfield

A Perplexing Problem

The parents of a popular boy appealed to the court for advice. This young man who was formerly a member of the high school football team, had been a good student. However, his studies began to suffer, as he was spending most of his evenings taking girls to night clubs and road houses. His parents' protests met with open defiance. The boy's early training was not at fault; many youngsters go through these trying phases of adjustment from childhood to adulthood.

While it may seem impossible to keep the boy from entertaining girls at this stage, much can be done to remedy the situation. Parents who have the means should arrange a place of entertainment in their own home which would eclipse outside places in the interest of the boy and his schoolmates. When this is not practical, the careful substitution of other interests and a serious talk with the young man can accomplish wonders.

Repairs Fit Urge of Sun in Springtime

It's an instinct for humans to get out into the sun early in spring, but it's more profitable for farmers to link that urge with the ambition of getting machinery in shape to do a season's work.

At least that's the psychology of H. H. Musselman, head of the agricultural engineering department of Michigan State College.

If a farm does not have a shop equipped for repair work, that is no excuse in his opinion for not performing work that will save valuable time in planting and harvest periods. The sunny side of a building will serve as a suitable site for operations.

Plows that need new shares ought to get them now, or especially hard steel should be welded to the points. Moldboards ought to be polished and greased.

A good supply of eveners, single-trees and clevises and chains are in order before planting time arrives. Broken or worn-out teeth in the springtooth harrow should be replaced and where frames or hinges need strengthening it is economy now to have them welded by acetylene or electrically.

For disc harrows it may be advisable to replace wooden bearings for these cost but a few cents. Grain drills need to be in working order, with all hose and feed tubes cleaned and cleared, grease on the outside of the steel tubes and the machine perhaps checked on the barn floor for rate of feeding.

The mower likely needs some new sections and guards. The cutter bar should be checked for alignment, for this must be at right angles to the direction of travel, or parallel to the axle of the mower. And sunshine can go with all these jobs, says Musselman.

Early Court Cutting Plan

An effort of congress to reduce the number of Supreme court justices, cutting them to six, was nullified in 1869, before sufficient vacancies had occurred to put the act in force.

Mumby officiating. Besides the parents, he is survived by two sisters.

OUR SON

He has left us, yes, he's gone away, I knew my darling couldn't stay, One look at his sweet, smiling face, I knew in heaven was his place.

When I see the stars shining thru the night, It helps me to know our son's alright, When we feel the soft winds warmly blow We know why our darling had to go. He was with us such a short sweet time, Just long enough to know he was really mine, All we can do is to be contented—or roam, Until Jesus sees fit to call us home. Then with our son we will always be, My babies are sweet—I just had three, Jesus needed an angel, I did my best, I gave Him one, I pray to keep the rest.

—His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Rowe.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank all our friends and neighbors for their many acts of kindness during our bereavement, and for the beautiful floral offerings; we especially wish to thank Rev. Mumby for his words of comfort, and Mrs. Gertrude Hackenberg and Miss Almeda Kimmel for the songs.

Hi-Y Activities

The Chelsea Hi-Y club brought the nationally-known speaker, Dr. Samuel Graffen of White Plains, New York, to our high school on Monday, March 20. Dr. Graffen is making a week's tour of southern Michigan schools and service clubs under the auspices of the State Y. M. C. A. In his address to the student body, Dr. Graffen outlined a six-point way of living, and illustrated it by examples. The points stressed centered on "Good Health; Grow or Go; Take care of your pennies while you are young and your pennies will take care of you when you are old; Keep your prayer path open; Live in a Spirit of Service; and crown it all with a sweet disposition." Dr. Graffen pointed out three important phases of living: The job we work at; the associations we keep; and the God we worship.

On the evening of March 20, the Hi-Y boys enjoyed the use of the swimming pool at the men's Union in Ann Arbor.

We have been reading considerable in our newspapers and magazines lately about the National Wildlife Restoration Week sponsored by the National Wildlife Federation, Washington, D. C. The local Rod and Gun club has asked the Hi-Y to cooperate with them in the distribution of colored pictures of American wildlife for uniting the efforts of all friends of outdoor America to the end that future generations shall have their rightful heritage of Wildlife.

HAROLD CHANNING WIRE

COPYRIGHT-HAROLD CHANNING WIRE. W.N.U. SERVICE

She used his name familiarly, with that little tone of dependence in her voice. He wanted to laugh and tell her he understood. But a man couldn't. Later perhaps.

He dismounted, pretended to adjust the stirrup that needed no adjusting, then regained his saddle.

"Thank you so much," Irene coaxed him. "It does feel better."

She drew her horse's head around. "Master Temple was very kind, offering us lunch, but mother looks so tired. Really, if she ever gets off her beast she'll never get back on."

And when we reach your station I don't believe I will move for a month."

So it was settled. The Senator, campaigning from long habit, had stubbed that had not yielded to cold water and a dull blade.

"This is a ranger station, ain't it?" he demanded.

Breck nodded, making certain the boy was not drunk.

"And you give out information here, don't you?"

"What is it, Art?" Breck asked flatly.

A thumb jerked backward. "I want to know who is that girl. And is she married to that Jasper?"

Following the thumb, Breck looked through the open doorway, seeing a section of tourist pasture fence. Irene and Toby stood there, coaxing horses with bunches of grass. The animals held off suspiciously.

"Her name is Miss Sutherland," he answered, then added with deliberate purpose, "they aren't married—not yet."

Without a word Art turned and slung his hat and continued on until he halted next to Irene. Breck saw her smile, and saw Art hold something over the bars. At once the horses came to his hand, nodding their heads comically as they took lumps of sugar.

Irene shrieked and clutched the fence. Art laughed with her, wiping his hands on his trouser legs.

Breck left the door open when he returned work and between pages of his diary watched the progress of events outside. He saw Toby go back to the Senator's camp, probably upon Irene's order. She strode over to young Tillson's truck, where he whistled a note for her to approach. She slipped down the back of the truck, and came back to the house, looking about her.

From the kitchen Breck's interest was aroused. At last, Breck noticed the girl and her mother. They were already won their Temple and said she was a good girl. But Irene begged him to think of mother.

"Why, mother is all right," he insisted.

Irene turned. "You never understand."

The Senator returned and called at her station.

"Well, anyway," Temple said, "you can't get a horse back for the barnyard."

Breck groped for some excuse to slide again to the door, yet knew that would be foolish. There was nothing. Breck, however, was still close to him. She remained there at the party started on, and riding almost knee to knee gave him a sense of being loved.

As soon as they had passed through Temple's and were in the forest, the boy with laughter, "Oh, my dear! I'm so glad. Those boots! A real set!"

Breck faced her from his saddle. "You're a real girl."

She sobered. "I am, aren't I?"

Suddenly her dark eyes surveyed him in disbelief. "Dadman spread over her face. Her lip curled. 'You don't mean it! Gordon, you're not really in this primitive country, I suppose it's called, is it?'

Oh, my, oh, my. That's dreadful. Almost indecent."

Before Breck could answer, she lashed her horse cruelly and jogged ahead.

Rock House at sunset brought cries of wonder from the tourists, weary as they were. The train dropped out of the eastern notch and into a bowl of opal light, through which the grass bottom, the fence, the cabin far across appeared more as a bit of fairyland than a ranger station in the Sierra Nevada.

Halfway into the meadow, Kit threw his ears forward and whinnied. The call was answered. Breck recognized Custer and smiled. But immediately there followed a chorus from mules braying further on, and then he saw Art Tillson bouncin under a lone pine near the tourist pasture gate.

CHAPTER XIX

A rap on the cabin door aroused Breck from the table where he was writing out his week's report. The camp had been lifeless when he woke at daybreak, and he had taken his time to complete the diary. Glancing at his watch, he saw it was now ten o'clock.

"Come in!" he called.

The door opened. Art Tillson confronted him.

Breck stood up, and looking at the cowboy's face, was puzzled. He expected trouble. Instead, Art forced a grave expression to cover a queer grin. He had shaved very close. A few spots of powder clung to stubble that had not yielded to cold water and a dull blade.

"This is a ranger station, ain't it?" he demanded.

Breck nodded, making certain the boy was not drunk.

"And you give out information here, don't you?"

seeing a section of tourist pasture fence. Irene and Toby stood there, coaxing horses with bunches of grass. The animals held off suspiciously.

"Her name is Miss Sutherland," he answered, then added with deliberate purpose, "they aren't married—not yet."

Without a word Art turned and slung his hat and continued on until he halted next to Irene. Breck saw her smile, and saw Art hold something over the bars. At once the horses came to his hand, nodding their heads comically as they took lumps of sugar.

Irene shrieked and clutched the fence. Art laughed with her, wiping his hands on his trouser legs.

Breck left the door open when he returned work and between pages of his diary watched the progress of events outside. He saw Toby go back to the Senator's camp, probably upon Irene's order. She strode over to young Tillson's truck, where he whistled a note for her to approach. She slipped down the back of the truck, and came back to the house, looking about her.

From the kitchen Breck's interest was aroused. At last, Breck noticed the girl and her mother. They were already won their Temple and said she was a good girl. But Irene begged him to think of mother.

"Why, mother is all right," he insisted.

Irene turned. "You never understand."

The Senator returned and called at her station.

"Well, anyway," Temple said, "you can't get a horse back for the barnyard."

Breck groped for some excuse to slide again to the door, yet knew that would be foolish. There was nothing. Breck, however, was still close to him. She remained there at the party started on, and riding almost knee to knee gave him a sense of being loved.

As soon as they had passed through Temple's and were in the forest, the boy with laughter, "Oh, my dear! I'm so glad. Those boots! A real set!"

Breck faced her from his saddle. "You're a real girl."

She sobered. "I am, aren't I?"

Suddenly her dark eyes surveyed him in disbelief. "Dadman spread over her face. Her lip curled. 'You don't mean it! Gordon, you're not really in this primitive country, I suppose it's called, is it?'

Oh, my, oh, my. That's dreadful. Almost indecent."

Before Breck could answer, she lashed her horse cruelly and jogged ahead.

Rock House at sunset brought cries of wonder from the tourists, weary as they were. The train dropped out of the eastern notch and into a bowl of opal light, through which the grass bottom, the fence, the cabin far across appeared more as a bit of fairyland than a ranger station in the Sierra Nevada.

Halfway into the meadow, Kit threw his ears forward and whinnied. The call was answered. Breck recognized Custer and smiled. But immediately there followed a chorus from mules braying further on, and then he saw Art Tillson bouncin under a lone pine near the tourist pasture gate.

CHAPTER XIX

A rap on the cabin door aroused Breck from the table where he was writing out his week's report. The camp had been lifeless when he woke at daybreak, and he had taken his time to complete the diary. Glancing at his watch, he saw it was now ten o'clock.

"Come in!" he called.

The door opened. Art Tillson confronted him.

Breck stood up, and looking at the cowboy's face, was puzzled. He expected trouble. Instead, Art forced a grave expression to cover a queer grin. He had shaved very close. A few spots of powder clung to stubble that had not yielded to cold water and a dull blade.

"This is a ranger station, ain't it?" he demanded.

Breck nodded, making certain the boy was not drunk.

"And you give out information here, don't you?"

"What is it, Art?" Breck asked flatly.

"Why not put a gang of men to work? They could open it."

"Who would pay them?"

"Why, the government, of course."

"On seventy-eight dollars?"

"What do you mean seventy-eight dollars?"

"That's exactly the amount my chief was allowed for trail work this year."

"The device it was?"

Breck laughed, and deciding to let that one point sink in, wheeled his horse toward home.

Their shadows were lengthening before them when they came into Rock House. Breck's thoughts returned to Irene, and a little later were materialized by two figures sitting on a boulder where the meadow creek began its descent. The trail led close to them. Irene looked up, waving one hand as her father passed. Art Tillson kept his eyes on the stream.

"Who is that fellow?" the Senator asked, riding on to the corral.

"A cowboy," Breck answered. "Owns a herd north of here."

"Safe enough, I suppose? He looks like a pretty determined customer."

Breck considered. "Safe enough for Irene," he said then. "I only hope the boy doesn't take it too seriously. He might have told Sutherland more, but felt the time had come for him to explain things to Irene herself."

That night he went to their camp with a Dutch oven supper of roast meat, potatoes and carrots that he had left buried in the coals all day; and after the meal, passed time with stories of his work, waiting until he was alone with Irene.

"Now," she said, facing him from her seat across the fire when all others had finally gone to their tents. "I know what you're going to do. You're going to lecture me. Save it."

"Why should I lecture you?" Breck asked.

Irene gave a little shrug, half-impatient, half the manner of a naughty child. "Oh, I suppose it's your job. The ranger keeping tab on his people and all that."

"All right," he agreed, "it is part of my job. But not the way you put it. He knew he could talk to her openly. Her instincts were well-bred; she would not betray his confidences. Things have happened up here, Irene, serious things. I'm not trying to frighten you and this matter doesn't concern you at all. Only don't play up to that boy any more."

Irene's eyes opened wide in the fire's glow. "Play up to him?"

"Yes, because you two understand each other. He's got you."

"He interests me."

"So does a silver bug."

"Gordon?"

"Sorry, I'm not trying to be rude. Will you drop him?"

"The bug?"

Breck started at her exasperated. She had never so put all her effort into being antagonistic. "You'll have to mind Irene," he vowed.

"That boy is not friendly to the forest service. He's dangerous. I can't let you bring on any more trouble. Things are close to an edge already."

For an instant she seemed to comprehend. But her sardonic smile banished that. "It makes a man awfully dangerous. I'm not cutting him, Gordon. You understand how that is?"

"You mean you have a date with him?"

"Tomorrow. He promised to teach me how to lead. I certainly cannot refuse."

"You'll have to."

"Oh, pooh! You can't prevent us from riding on your meadow," Irene teased, frowned, smiled brightly.

"Really," she finished, "if you are so worried, you can invite your cowboy friend and go with us."

Breck stood up, concealing his flare of anger. He knew with Irene in this mood, any further argument was futile. He could only appeal to her reason.

"Think it over," he asked. "I'm not fooling."

Any thought she may have given to it during the night did not change her action the next morning. About nine o'clock Breck saw her come down to the tourist pasture, dressed in fresh riding habit, with little snub-nosed spurs jingling at her heels. He did not go out and she went directly to the corral where Art had brought up her horse.

Breck understood the game. Perhaps Irene could not lose cowboy fashion, though she knew how to center well enough, having been taught that by various young men on the social paths of Flintridge. Now she was sweetly helpless. Art saddled for her, readjusted her stirrups, let her put one dainty boot on his knee in assisting her to mount. Then he handed up a leather quilt, the braiding of which must have taken half the night.

Side by side they moved out across the meadow, heading toward a level spot beyond the stream. Breck left his cabin. The Senator came down from his camp to meet him.

"Well, my boy," he chuckled. "Your treatment worked. I'm not nearly as stiff this morning. Where do we go today?"

Breck had intended a trip into country where Sutherland could find golden trout, but now canceled it. "I'm sorry. I'll have to put off our ride. My horse has cast a shoe and I might as well go over the whole bunch at once."

He felt it unwise to leave the station as long as Irene was nearby, courting trouble. His fear was not for her. She could freeze a man when the time came. Yet if Tillson realized she had deliberately made a fool of him, there was no telling what way his vengeance would turn.

"Anything suits me," the Senator answered genially. "I'll take Mary for a walk up the canyon. The fish can wait."

"Tomorrow, maybe," Breck suggested, but gave even that with mental reservation.

When Sutherland had gone back to camp Breck tied his stock under a pine and went to work. He had attempted the job only once before, and that was at headquarters with Sierra Slim's help. Now he had no envy for the village blacksmith.

At times when he straightened from bending over a hoof, he glanced off across the meadow. Irene's lesson was progressing. He saw her lunge short distances with Art close at her side. The length of their galloping increased, taking them further along the flat, until most of the practice was being done at the eastern notch. Presently they dismounted near a spring.

Breck finished with Kit, then began on Custer, and as the big gray objected, his whole attention was given to the job. When he did look up again, Irene and Tillson were not in sight. He stepped out from the tree and surveyed the meadow, following with his eyes up a narrow arm that disappeared behind a ridge of rock. For a moment he stood doubtful. Perhaps he was making too much of the whole affair. He strode back to work.

It was half an hour later when two figures came from the gap and turned toward his station. Immediately Breck saw the unusual distance between them. Irene rode in the lead. Art held back. They kept that position across the meadow and at the stream Irene swung up to the camp alone. Tillson continued without a glance the way she had gone.

He hopped into the tourist pasture, brought out his mules and saddled them. Then he lashed on the salt bags, drawing cinches savagely and cursing any animal that moved. With packs secured, he flung himself into the saddle and pushed his train in a fast walk north toward Sulphur Creek.

"And that," Breck wondered, "means what?" It could mean much, and he knew the waste of time in trying to guess. One thing he felt would follow now. Irene would come back to him. She usually did. "Give her time."

He cooked his noon meal, loitered in sight about the cabin, then went back to finish his shoeing. Goof was the last. Breck had three shoes on the mule and the fourth fitted, when a small voice behind him said:

"You don't know how poetic you look! The village smithy!"

He dropped the hoof and turned. Irene was perched on a log.

"How long have you been there?" he asked.

"Hours. I thought you would never look around."

Breck picked up the hoof again and tacked on the shoe. "Where's Arthur?"

"That cowhand?" Irene corrected. "O, he couldn't stay any longer. Had some important business."

He looked at her. "You're not here?"

"No, I'm not. I'm not here."

"You're not here?"

"No, I'm not. I'm not here."

Eight Days Remain for Introduction of Bills In Legislature

ture, and the unforeseen results led to the election of Wilber M. Brucker as governor.

A voluminous bill, dealing with crime and justice emerged one day from committee. It consisted of pages and pages. Among the many restrictions was a sentence that provided up to life sentence for a habitual offender—one convicted of four offenses. The bill became a law.

During prohibition days more so than now, enforcement of the state liquor law was a much-publicized issue.

Michigan awoke one morning to read in the daily newspapers that the legislature had provided medieval punishment for a citizen seized with a pint of liquor on his possession. In the public controversy that ensued,
Mr. Brucker, then a deputy attorney general, became the man of the hour.
It was a publicity break that resulted,
later on, in his elevation to the governorship.

Regulatory Bills
As the deadline nears for introduction of bills, more and more regulatory measures appear at Lansing.

Each special group seeks to have the state government regulate "its business," ostensibly in the name of fair trade but in reality for the purpose of controlling competition.

To remedy these so-called abuses
(if free competition is an abuse) sponsors would have the government set up bigger and better bureaus, backed by systems of license fees and staffs of investigators with varying police power.

Just as the 1937 legislature sought to establish trade barriers to encourage home consumption of Michigan beer and wine, so many of these measures would set up new barriers.

Protection of the public is given as the benefit, but the undeniable trend is toward monopoly.

Senate Bill 186 would erect barriers against the consumption of oleomargarine. Each manufacturer would pay a fee of $2,500; each wholesaler and distributor, $1,000 and each retail dealer, $100.

House Bill 293 would license barbers and haircutters, define an apprentice barber, and authorize regulations, fees and investigators.
