CHAPTER I

The morning was pleasantly cool and the bed was comfortable so that when the first knock sounded on the oak panels of the door Kay Forrest burrowed more deeply into the pillows, pressed her young body closer against the mattress and sleepily tried to ignore the summons.

For a brief ecstatic moment the girl dropped off again into a deep sleep, but this time the knock at the door was more insistent and a woman's voice came to her, determined but carefully subdued so that the other members of the household would not be disturbed. It was Miss Maynard's voice, and somehow, perfectly modulated as it was, one could not hear that voice and believe that Miss Maynard ever failed of having her way. This time she said, "Five o'clock, Kay."

Kay Forrest threw off the sheet which covered her. She called to the unseen person, "All-right, Miss Maynard, I'll-be-right down." Shewalked across the room in her bare feet, poured water from an ancient china pitcher-into-an-equally-ancient wash-bowl, dipped her hands in the crystal fluid, splashed water plentifully on her face, laved slender throat and soft, white shoulders: shivered, and finally succeeded in opening wide her sleep-laden eyes. chair upholstered in red-and drew silk stockings over firm young legs, She slipped her feet into shoes ridiculously small. Then she walked to the window and for just a few moments stood looking down upon the haze which hung over the Gardens.

Cathedral Gardens at dawn! Gray shot through with crimson and yellow and the delicate white of young place them on a plane above mere loveliness. There was the famous Azalea Trail of Mobile, and certain places in the coastal country of South Carolina and Georgia where Nature had concentrated its generosity. And these spots came to be known as Gardens, though some of them extended for miles and some were reckoned in acres. In most instances, Nature had begun the work by providing a luxury of bloom and color more intense than average. .Then man had developed and organized this beauty. Where hundreds of bushes blazed with a riot of color, thousands more had been planted. The work had been done artistically, so that there were breath-taking vistas of blossoms: There were gardens which were formal and some which were informal. All were astonishingly. unbelievably, beautiful.

And years ago the first tourists, returning from winter vacations in Florida, had discovered these places Gardens spread and became national-then international. Good roads were built-so that the Gardens could be visited comfortably. railroads inaugurated excursions during the season of greatest floral perfection. Old families responded to the sudden popularity of their She sat on a chair-a dignified old places by cultivating them with greater care and expertness, and by charging admission fees to stran-what fun it is to be alive. And I enjoy posing for you, too."

"I see." Dryly. "You merely responded to the summons of Art. You left your home in Beverly to uplift the rotogravure sections of newspapers." Miss Maynard's eyes had a gentle, faraway look. "Listen, Child, keep what you've got. Make the most of it. Of this natural beauty, of your youth, of Barney . ... There I go, talking like a silly, sentimental old maid . . . !'

Miss Maynard turned away. Her voice was impersonal again, professional. "I'm going to take two or three shots by that live oak yonder. Better get your clothes off." Easily, naturally-without embarrassment or false modesty-the girl removed dress and slip and shoes and stockings. She stood forth in the dawn, firm and young and beautiful; her youthful figure touched by the first rays of the sun. She said, 'You're sure my face will never show in these pictures, Miss-Maynard?"

"Don't be absurd. I'm using you as part of the background, Silhouettes."

She walked with the girl to the ancient oak. She posed Kay and draped her with chiffon. She said, "I'd like to be young again, Kayand have your figure.'

She peered through the lens of her camera and said, "Perfect. I'll get two or three good shots here. Then we'll try some near that big azalea bush. Over yonder by the black gum." Suddenly she smiled: You're an interesting person, Kay Forrest. You're as free and natural . . "

And the young girl answered, "I don't feel embarrassed. Miss Maynard. Out here-this way . . . " She groped for words. "It sort of seems the right thing." "It is," said Miss Maynard. And

Mr. Jefferson Butler was sleeping, his bony; elongated figure covered informally by a patchwork quilt

Clem Ross said again, "We sho" better hurry, Jeff." and Mr. Butler swung off in a southerly direction, his long strides compelling the smaller man to drop into a halftrot in order to keep pace, so that "Well. Clem said complainingly.

there ain't that much hurry." "You reckon Kay Forrest will be there?" he inquired anxiously. Jeff cast a weatherwise eye skyward. "She's sho' to be."

"How come you know?" " 'Cause the sun'll be out in a few minutes. Kay an' that female pitcher-taker always go-out right safter sun-up. I found out about them accidental one mawnin' when I got to work too early."

Clem's weak eyes blinked. "But Kay-she don't really take of all her clothes, does she?"

"You'll see," "S'posin' the folks in Beverly was to know about it?" Jeff whistled. "They'd be hell to pay; sho' nuff." 'Ain't you truthin'," endorsed Clem.

Jeff Butler could not long remain silent. He said, "Beauregard County was a quiet, God fearin' place before Ruth Hamilton come down from New Yawk an' had them Gardens builded."

"Sho' was." "I never figured out what got into her . . . doin' a lot of work pretty-in' up a swamp." "Money!" sneered Jeff. "She craved to make money." Then his eyes lighted with interest. "It cost her a whole slew of cash to git things goin', but she's makin' plenty now.

"Mmm-hmm! Must be th'ee hund'ed tourists in Beverly." Then he added virtuously, "Tha's what's ruinin' the town an' sendin' our young folks straight to hell."

Jeff was in thorough agreement. He even elaborated upon the theme. He said, "I knowed Ruth Hamilton when she was knee-high to a drop of rain. Purty kid, and it never s'prised me when she married that rich feller from New Yawk."

"He died, didn't he?" "Sho' did. Left her with them two children. Folks tell that they was rich-but the depression ruint them. So she come back to Beverly an' put her money into fixin' up them Gardens. That was all the property her ol' man left her ?' Clem said, "Tchk! Tchk!"

"They're kind of nice," Jeff admitted grudgingly, "but folks hereabouts ain't aimin' to stand 'em for long. You know ... " He dropped his voice confidentially: "There's some, awful hell-raisin' goin' on in tured : with dignity and graciousness. Beverly ev'y night. Dancin' an' all

Kay laughed as she walked down bly boyish, so chronically good-humored, so attractive in his own way: a bit slouchy (so that he looked less than his six feet), a bit human so that he was not too handsome, a bit man free from care, worry and responsibility; friendly with everybody, a young man who had set himself the task of enjoying life and,

He was so irrepressi- | tionally, and until very recently her father had been her only real friend. It was difficult, even yet, for Kay to realize just what Cathedral Gardens had meant to her. It was a fulfillment of nineteen years of too assured in his acceptance of struggle. To Christine Maynard she the good things of life. A young gave freely of her body because it was an outlet for the artistic urge within her .... and in return, this communion with Nature had strengthened her faith. The Hamiltons had contributed more than they or she-suspected. Kay Forrest had been raised in that deadly middle-class atmosphere which is happily regarded as the backbone of the body politic. Her family was looked up to and regarded highly. They were fine, respectable, honest folks-held in great esteem by all who knew them. but somehow (save for her father) falling short of the ideal which she had created for herself.

And it was not until Kay had found herself briefly a part of the Hamiltons' family life that she had realized how she had, for nineteen years, been compelled to accept the used to argue violently and vallant makeshift for the genuine. She brought her thoughts back to the present as Barney shifted into gear and rolled across the parking space which was already commencing to congest with the cars of eager tourists. He swung onto the hard-packed dirt road, touched the accelerator and headed toward town. Kay said, "Have you the faintest idea, Barney Hamilton, what a wonderful thing your mother has done: creating those Gardens out of a section of swamp?" He laughed. "Mother, two hundred workmen and a landscape engineer." "Smart lad, aren't you? What I'm driving at is that it had to be someone like your mother . . . some unyou driving all the way to town, usual_person_even_to think of doing

I might have learned Latin and Greek, but some how I never found a polo pony who could understand a word of either of those languages. Therefore, all seemed useless. I made straight A's on things which I did like and ly that since there were enough courses which I enjoyed, I shouldn't be afflicted with those which bored me. "A very charming young man with a definitely lopsided education."

"But cheerful and smiling and always at your service, my darling." He chuckled. "And so, here I am. Mother had two ideas com. ing down here: first there was the thought that she could make a commercial go of these Gardens-"

"---Which she has certainly done. Beverly has been standing on its ear ever since they opened." "And secondly," he continued

"though she never was so crude as to put it into these words, she saw blossoms. Cypress trees with brownish gray trunks rising from lagoons of onyx. Overhead a canopy of gray Spanish moss casting deep shadows! It was very black there under the cypress trees; black as midnight, save where here and there the girl's keen-young-eyes could discern a splash of brilliance; the brillionce of sub-tropical flowers.

Beyond the Gardens lay the grim waste which was called Little Moccasin Swamp; ugly and forbidding-Yet from that waste these Gardens had been claimed-Gardens of such exquisite beauty that the girl at the upstairs window forgot that she had been sleepy, forgot that her whole nineteen years of life had been spent within six miles of this spot, forgot everything save that here Nature and man had collaborated to produce a place of such exquisite beauty that it was always new and always overwhelming. Reluctantly, Kay, moved away from the window. A minute later, clad in a simple dress of light blue, she tiptoed into the hallway, and down the steps: , Miss Christine Maynard was waiting in the diningroom. Miss Maynard said, "The coffee's ready, Kay. And we'll have to hurry.'

Kay glanced at her companion over-the-rim-of-her-coffee-cup-Miss Maynard now : ... well, she wasn't pretty. Somehow, you had to think of her as efficient. Just that. Thirtyeight-and Miss Maynard admitted it honestly and somewhat defiantly -immaculately tailored even at this absurdly young hour; black hair meticulously arranged, light tweed suit seeming as though just to have escaped from the pressing iron, brown eyes cool and observing, voice sharp but kindly. That was Christine Maynard of New York: Christine Maynard, spinster, who was by profession an art photographer and by nature a thwarted mother. Christine Maynard who was spending weeks at Cathedral Gardens making photographic studies. They were utterly different, these two: Kay, just half Miss Maynard's age, possessing a buoyancy and freshness and vivid beauty which Miss Maynard lacked and envied. But then Kay envied the older woman her-poise, her certainty, her assured sophistication. And between them there was this in common; that beauty, such beauty as lay just beyond the door, overpowered them; that they could look at each other with the certain knowledge that another pair of eyes was seeing what theirs was seeing, that another brain was translating it into the same emotional reaction.

They walked from the house to the edge of what had once been part of the swamp; Kay Forrest helping Miss Maynard with her bulky photographic equipment. This was stowed in half of the middle seat of a dun-colored bateau which was hitched informally to an oak post with a bit of thin rope. Miss grim ugliness. The work had been long and arduous, but this spring Cathedral Gardens had become a new shrine.

Today, as on every other day, Kay Forrest could not believe that this had recently been like the rest of Little Moccasin Swamp: dreary and menacing. If The Underbrush had been cleared away; the water was unblemished by drift. And here and there through the vaulted arches she could see islands, ablaze with Indian azalea. Each tiny island was a living flame of color; rich red and pink and magenta. There were no leaves to be seen; merely a welter of color splotching the gray-andblack of cypress and moss and water. In this hushed hour the place was unearthly, and to have conversed-would have seemed sacrilege: So Miss Maynard did not speak until they approached an isand near the edge of the Gardens, an island larger than the rest, an island rising from the water and rioting with color. Then Miss Maynard said, "We'll stop here."

The bateau nosed into the bank. and Miss Maynard stepped out, carrying her, photographic equipment. The older woman was quietly efficlent. She critically surveyed the spot she had chosen, scrutinized the light sifting through the gray moss; expertly appraising camera angles and backgrounds; observing the rich magnificence of azalea bushes, and noting with approval a great live oak rising majestically from the middle of the island. She said, "This will do, Kay. Come along."

no comment, but watched Miss May- it, chilling the air and rendering hard as the camera was set up at a Jeff's patchwork quilt more than proper_yantage spot. And while usually seductive. Clem spoke Miss Maynard was experimenting again, his beady eyes eager, "It's with camera and tripod and lens, Kay Forrest walked to the water's up we ain't goin' to see nothin' edge and stared into the infinite Remembrance came to Mr. Butbeauty.

She aldn't hear Miss Maynard approach, and she was startled by the touch of Miss Maynard's hand on her shoulder. Miss Maynard said, "It gets you, doesn't it, Kay?' "Always." The girl smiled. "You're a peculiar little thing . . .

"Because I love this?" "Perhaps., You were raised in Beauregard County. You've known these swamps all your life....." "But not as they are now. Oh. reckon it seems crazy, but I've always wondered why somebody else didn't understand how lovely the swamp could be."

"And now someone has." Miss Maynard's eyes twinkled. "I don't suppose Barney Hamilton has anything to do with this joy of yours, has he?'

Kay's eves crinkled at the corners. "Barney's pretty swell. I like being teased about him.'

You should. He's rather gone off the deep end about you." "Really?"

"What do you think?"

which made no pretensions to clean--liness. Jeff's bed had been a thing of beauty in the days of its youth-or so Jeff considered. It had been white then; white enamel, and there were curlicues of iron at the head and foot, and four brass balls marking the corners. Three of these brass decorations had long since disappeared, and the white enamel had been chipped so that the iron bedstead now was a mass of ugly black scabs.

Jeff grumbled, grunted, tossedand finally opened weak gray eyes upon a world of gray. Framed in the window was the mustached countenance of Mr. Clem Ross, a man diminutive of stature and of intelligence. Beyond Clem's face was a brief vista of Big Moccasin Swamp: Kay Forrest-helped. She offered a miasmatic blanket hovering over 'most daylight, Jeff. Don't you git ler and he eased his long figure out > of the bed. Jeff's hôme in Big Moccasin Swamp was considerably more than ever so humble. It contained five rooms and was weatherproof save when the weather was inclement. On the dogtrot stood a rickety table and five chairs. In the corner was a washtub which was used by a visiting colored woman on such rare occasions as Mr. Butler decided that his wardrobe needed cleansing. Two pigs snored happily near the back steps and chickens roosted on the chairs. An underfed and mournful hound dog slouched forward to greet his master, tail wagging warily.

In the dim light of early morning, Mr. Butler could see the borders of his estate. He could see the scraggly cotton patch, as yet not planted; and the brief field which would-if he happened to get around to itproduce corn during the coming summer. There was the truck patch, too, wherein Jeff was inclined to raise greens and turnips and potasuch as that. "It's the work of the Devil," confided Clem. Then, somewhat anxiously, "You reckon Kay Forrest really is goin' to take off evy stitch me." of clothes?"

Jeff said, "Sssssssh! Yonder she is . . . on that island."

They threw themselves flat and crawled under and between azalea bushes. And they peered out at the little island where Miss Maynard was posing, Kay and rearranging her chiffon drapes. Clem inhaled sharply. "She sho' is purty."

Jeff was pardonably triumphant. "Didn't I tell you?"'he whispered, "Nary stitch." "She's got a veil on," chided Mr.

Ross. -''Shuh! Ain't no thicker'n mosquito-nettin'."

" They watched eagerly. They saw the efficient Miss Maynard, though they were not interested in her. They saw the smooth white body of a young and beautiful girl against a background of breath-taking color. But theirs was not an artistic appreciation. Their interest was lecherous . . . and tinctured with righteousness, though it was not until the sun rose higher over the cypress trees and Kay became apprehensive; not until the girl had clothed herself again and paddled back through the Gardens with Miss Maynard and the photographic equip--ment-...that this righteousness was put into words.

Clem said, "It's awful." Then. "Me an' you can come back some other mawnin's, cain't we, Jeff?" "Sho'ly. But nobody ain't to be told. Not now."

"How come not?"

"''cause then ev'body would start a-comin'. An' she'd find out." Mr. Ross considered this judicial-"If we was ever to tell what's ly. goin' on heah Jeff Butler nodded grimly. "Some day we will," he said. "It'll be our bounden duty. An' when we do .... he gestured expressively "....well, Beauregard County knows what to do with immoral females like her."

CHAPTER II

Breakfast was over-a delicious breakfast of hominy grits and bacon and of thin, light biscuits and crisp, crumbly waffles; of grapefruit and coffee and of bright conversation and good-natured badinage.

Kay Forrest was first from the table. She ran upstairs to her room, touched her makeup lightly and somewhat carelessly, pulled a little rust-colored tam over her soft brown hair, glanced at herself once more in the mirror over the ancient dresser and gave ear to the below-stairs summons from Barney Hamilton. Kay walked to the head of the stairs, and looked down upon the

Margaret called in from the ve randa. "Take care of Barney, He's been driving more crazily than usual these past few days."

Barney backed the little car out of the shed and whirled it into position. Kay clambered in beside him, and for just a-moment her eves quested through avenues of blossoms, beyond the house and thence into the illimitable vista of graceful cypress and black water; of trees and shrubs and flowers. "It's unbelievably beautiful," she said: He caught her mood and held the car motionless for a moment. "Just finding that out, Kay?" "Yes."

He looked down at her. "You are a crazy kid. What do you mean: just finding it out?"

"Because it's always different." She groped for words. "Each day I think I know just exactly how exauisite it is . . . and then the next day I see something new."

She laughed awkwardly, "I suppose," she said, "that you'd have to be me to understand what I mean.' And in this she was right. From earliest childhood, Kay Forrest had met the world with fearless honesty. and unwavering trust ..... though the straightforward simplicity of this trust had, it is true, often reacted in a manner which would have shaken a less devout convert. At the age of six Kay had returned from the woods with chubby hands red and swollen from too intimate contact with some poisonous wild flowers. Emma Forrest had bandaged them to the accompaniment of a maternal tirade against Kay in particular and Nature in general and Kay had submitted to both treatments in stoic silence. But it was later that day-when throbbing fingers had refused to be soothed by her father's gentle, sympathetic caresses-that she had sobbed out

"Oht Daddy , ... they were so brought disillusionment and unanswerable questions, she had managed to retain her faith that somewhere there was a serenity, a beauty, which was a justification for living,

And for this ideal, Kay lought gallantly. She gratefully acknowledged her-maternal inheritance:- Fixed determination and unwavering strength of purpose. She knew what she wanted - not explicitly but vaguely-and rebuffs only temporarily shadowed young hazel eyes. Today, at nineteen, Kay was the same courageous little girl, eager to tall, blond young man: the Barney | accept the risk of throbbing fingers

"Oh! I don't know ..... She's been a tradition around here. All ponent sayeth not. The point is, I'm my life I've heard women talk about Ruth Hamilton. They all boast about the fact that they went to school with her in Beverly. They talk about what a lovely girl she was, and how sweet. They marvel at her life . . ." "From rags to riches," said he. "Ruth Hamilton, only child of a poor but honest druggist ......"

-"I'm-dumb. You-explain."

The girl laughed and said sternly, "Nuts! She was the darned attrac- frank and honest-which is a very tive child of an intelligent couple terrible thing to be-I cannot see who adored her and gave her advantages which weren't even thought of in Beverly in those days. College in the East, Europe when to most folks here Europe meant nothing but a small section of the big globe in the little red -school-house."

"Keep talking, Child. I love to hear you become enthusiastic." His I enjoy what the moment offers. I eyes were thoughtful. "Queer how like good weather and pretty flowthings work out. It was in Europe | ers and some of the folks in Beverly Villefranche, I think that and all of the ones who live in Chi-Mother met Dad." He was silent cora. I enjoy hunting quail and deer, for just a moment, "I wish you had and I love fishing. The horseback known him, There was a grand riding around here is pretty good guy."

"He must have been." "I'm stating that he was. Had enough dough and enough family not. to care about either. Fell for Mother like a ton of bricks, and they played sweetheart until he died. It was a bump ... but there's one good thing about it."

"What?" "That he didn't live to see the crash. That he never worried about what might happen to Mother and Sis and me. You see, when he did die he thought we were pretty well taken care of even unto the third or fourth generation." Barney was trying to shake off a momentary feeling of oppression. "Dad and I were mighty good pals. We played around together."

"It_must_have_been_pretty_wonderful .... " Kay made an effort to lighten Barney's mood. "You never will quite know what your mother has meant to this town. Growing up here . . . and then going away. Living in New York. Entertaining folks with names that are merely printed words to Beverly folks. It's been right funny: before I could understand I used to bear the ladies talking about Ruth this and Ruth that . . . 'My dear, did you read where Ruth Hamilton entertained the So-and-so's at Southampton last week?' And, 'Ruth' will be sailing for a season on the Riviera very soon with her family.' I didn't know who she was . . . . and it didn't matter. She was a Beverly girl-" "Home-town lady makes good,"

"Exactly." Kay Forrest was quite serious, "Perhaps that's why she came to mean so much to me, even when I thought I'd never meet her. I'm pretty much of a smalltown girl myself."

"But with possibilities."

as an artistic. success." "And you're not ashamed?" "Of what?"

"Yourself." "Why? I haven't a bad habit. Not a major vice, anyway. I never kick

. . . and I very definitely have fallen in love:"

"Another pleasure of the mo ment?"

He smiled down at her. ."If you were younger, I'd spank you for that." Then, after a pause, might be fun anyway."

Kay said, "You're utterly lazy and worthless, Barney Hamilton But I'm fond of you, just the same." He grinned. "And I'm not to be -lectured-any-more-today?!

"Not a time." "Well then," he announced stera-

"You are." ly,

'How come?" "Reasons." He gestured. "With whom are you planning to trip the light fantastic tonight?"

She said, "Kirk Reynolds." "So I thought." There was a hint of seriousness in his manner! "If ] said that Mr. Reynolds was exceed. ingly bad medicine for a young gal, would you think I was jealous? "Perhaps,"

"And maybe you'd be right. But, Sugarfoots - this lad is poison. Plumb naughty, I might say." "Because he gambles?"

"Nix. Because of lots of things. You can't tie him down to specific offenses. He's just naturally a bad citizen . . . and so you choose him as your dancing partner."

"He invited me."

"So what? You could have gone with me if you were just naturally set on edifying the tourists at the White Star Hotel."

"You didn't ask me." She hesitated for a moment. "Listen, Barney -I don't care three hoots about Kirk Reynolds. But he is a Beverly boy, and I looked up to him when I was a kid. Also, I think he's picturesque."
