Approval Given for Addition To School for Home Economics

About sixty people attended the annual meeting of School District No. 3 Fr., Sylvan and Lima townships, held on Monday evening at the public school auditorium. O. D. Schneider, president of the Board of Education, presided at the meeting and appointed Jas. C. Hendley and H. D. Witherell as tellers for the election of two directors. C. O. Bahnmiller acted as secretary. The terms of J. N. Strieter and Geo. W. Walworth expired, and they were re-elected without opposition.

The principal item of business to come before the meeting was the vote on the proposition of transferring funds from the general fund to the building and site fund for the purpose of making alterations which will provide space for adding a home economics course. The proposition was explained in detail by Mr. Schneider, and when the votes were tabulated the count was 43 for and 14 against authorizing the Board of Education to transfer $5,000.00 to the building and site fund.

Action was taken immediately by the Board of Education to have T. S. Tanner of Ann Arbor, architect on the project, proceed with plans and specifications for the proposed addition so that bids may be received on the construction and work started as soon as possible in an effort to have the room ready for occupancy when the school term opens in September.

Plans call for enlargement of the kitchen to a room 28x51, which will provide ample space for the home economics course as well as kitchen space in one end of the room. It is hoped that when bids are received the cost will warrant adding a second story so that two much-needed classrooms can be provided on the second floor.

With the addition of home economics the Chelsea school will have a course for which there has been much demand for the past several years. Many requests have been received by the Board of Education for such a course and for this reason they presented the present proposition to the taxpayers of the district, believing that under the present set-up the construction work can be done at a minimum of expense to the district. The tax rate will be raised one mill for one year only, according to present plans.

Annual Farmers' Day Will Be Held July 28

Observance of 25 years of service to the state's agriculture and home life by the Federal-state-county cooperative extension service is to be the keynote of the Michigan State College annual Farmers' Day to be held Friday, July 28.

Each summer the college invites the rural public to stroll the campus, through barns, field plots and laboratories as an inspection of current progress in research and experiments.

A bit of entertainment starts off the program this year. The four Girards of Gladstone, Mich., will display their bag of tricks in riding logs and fancy and trick log riding. This opening event at 9:30 a. m. is to be held on the Red Cedar river near Farm Lane bridge.

E. L. Anthony, dean of agriculture, is general chairman for the day, working with V. R. Gardner, director of the extension station, and R. J. Baldwin, extension director. R. W. Tenny, short course director, is program chairman.

When the lumberjacks' band quits playing after the Girards perform, guests will scatter over the campus and farms to pick out those departments which interest them most. Until noon the departments holding field and office open house will include agricultural engineering, animal husbandry, dairy, farm crops, farm and horse, farm management, landscape, forestry, horticulture, poultry, short course, soils, veterinary, botany and entomology.

In the afternoon a program on the lawn north of the library opens with a concert by the Michigan Future Farmers' band. At two o'clock Frank Peck, president of the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul, will describe phases of a quarter century of agricultural progress. Mr. Peck served 22 years in Minnesota as extension director. Floats depicting how Michigan has been served by the extension service in agriculture and home economics will conclude the day's events.

1940 Triple A Wheat Program Announced

The 1940 wheat allotment for Washtenaw county is 22,758 acres, according to an announcement made this week by Harry M. Cole, secretary of the Washtenaw County Agricultural Conservation Committee. County wheat acreage allotments for 1940 represent an apportionment of the State allotment of 789,792 acres, which in turn represents Michigan's proportionate share of the national allotment of 62 million acres. The 789,792 acre allotment for Michigan was established in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. It compares with an allotment of 669,954 acres for 1939.

Announcement of the Washtenaw county allotment is being made nearly six weeks earlier than last year in order that farmers may have the opportunity to plan operations for 1940 well ahead of seeding time.

In announcing the county allotment Mr. Cole said that he believed the county office would be able to notify farmers in the county of their individual allotments by the middle of July or shortly thereafter.

The Washtenaw county basic wheat loan rate for farm storage of the 1939 wheat crop was also made known this week. The basic rate of Red Winter, Hard Winter and Soft Winter Wheat, No. 2 grade with a maximum moisture content of 14 per cent, will be 71 cents per bushel. The loan value on mixed wheat or wheat with a moisture content between 14 and 14 1/2 per cent will be two cents per bushel below the established rate. Smutty and garlicky wheat also will be subject to a lower loan value, ranging from 3 to 6 cents less than the basic rate of 71 cents.

Crop insurance on wheat planted this fall will be available to those farmers who planted within their 1940 wheat acreage allotments. Last fall, 5077 farmers insured 76 per cent of their average production. State Crop Insurance officials expect the number to be at least doubled this fall. Active selling of Federal crop insurance will start in August.

Geo. T. English Has Pretty Cherry Orchard

Anyone who will take the time to drive to the Hardscrabble Fruit Farm, located two and one-half miles north-west of Chelsea, will have the pleasure of seeing one of the prettiest cherry orchards in this part of the state, and one which is no doubt as pretty as will be found in the Traverse City district, although smaller in size.

George T. English, owner of the farm, states that there are more than 100 cherry trees in the orchard. There are 30 trees of Early Richmond cherries which have been picked; but the more than 70 trees of Montmorency cherries will not be ready until next Monday. These trees are loaded with fruit and at a distance seem to be almost a solid red in color.

Mr. English has owned this farm of 70 acres for 20 years, and most of the fruit trees were planted 19 years ago, although there were some trees set out each year for several years. There are about 15 acres of the farm set to cherries, apples and peaches. Mr. English states that there will be a fair crop of peaches and apples this year.

People come for many miles each year to pick the cherries, according to Mr. English, who says they will be there next week from Flint, Pontiac, and several towns in this part of the state. There are six families from Dearborn who come each year to pick cherries at Hardscrabble.

Although Mr. English is 75 years of age he is very active in helping with the management of his farm, driving from his home in Chelsea to spend practically every day of the season there. The farm is rented to Mr. and Mrs. Walter Zeeb, who reside there.

Local Masons To Hold Picnic Next Sunday

Don't forget the Masonic picnic on Sunday, July 16 at the Dexter Huron River Park. A pot-luck dinner will be served at 1 o'clock sharp.

At 2 o'clock there will be a ball game between two mixed teams consisting of ladies of the O. E. S. and men of the Masonic Lodge, the teams to be named the Tigers and Wolves. Captain for Tigers, "Gussie" Hilsinger; captain for Wolves, "Windy" Belser.

There will also be a tug-of-war, and races for the ladies, girls, and boys.

All Masons and their families, and members of the O. E. S. and families are urged to be present.

FIRE DESTROYS GARAGE

The local fire department was called to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Schenk in Sylvan township last Thursday night to aid in extinguishing a fire which destroyed their garage and two cars which were in the building. Neighbors had the fire under control before the fire department arrived, and efforts of the neighbors also saved other nearby buildings.

In his garden at 306 Alger street he has five rows about 100 feet in length of this new variety of Golden Bantam, planted the second week in May, on land on which rye has been plowed under. The Perkins corn is about ready to form ears and in three or four weeks he may have some for the table. — County Press

Michigan Mirror

(By Gene Alleman)

Lansing—The paradox of Luren D. Dickinson, prominent layman of the Methodist church and national state figure in the Anti-Saloon league, being responsible as governor of Michigan for administration of a vast liquor retail business and a horse race gambling set-up is one of those colorful situations that makes the octogenarian governor "good copy" for a news-hungry public.

Being a practical man of all things, Governor Dickinson probably smiles at the moral dilemma in which he finds himself.

Perhaps no governor in a half century is so fervently and unequivocally dry as Mr. Dickinson. He is state president and national vice-president of the Anti-Saloon league, which in prohibition days was a powerful pressure group, along with the Ku Klux Klan, in Mid-West states.

The Eaton county figure is high in laymen's circles of the Methodist church. He headed the Michigan delegates to the national conference in Kansas City.

As lieutenant governor, Dickinson had no direct responsibility in what the state did and did not do, in the field of selling liquor and running horse races. But fate intervened unexpectedly this year. Upon him was placed the mantle of chief executive of the commonwealth of Michigan. Attorney General Read ruled that he was both acting governor and lieutenant governor, and that he would draw the governor's salary. In any event Governor Dickinson today finds himself indirectly running liquor stores and horse races, and you can imagine his extreme distaste in engaging in either of these activities of old-fashioned moral ill repute.

"Drunken Carousals"

Mr. Dickinson left no room for doubt as to his personal feelings about these two activities last January in his "inaugural" address this year to the State Senate.

He called attention to an estimate that Michigan people pay $120,000,000 annually for liquor, that the liquor control commission's revenue last year was $8,000,000 and that the price of crime traceable to abuse of liquor could be put reasonably at $90,000,000 annually in Michigan.

Then came a blast that would do justice to a Methodist prayer meeting: "Again we see parents, young men and women and boys and girls, even from funds that should be used to buy clothing, food, shoes, medicine, rent, toys, furnishings, etc., in drunken sprees and carousals, handing out millions to the bars, beer gardens, road-houses and restaurants in the fashion of ancient Greece and Rome to sustain the liquor traffic while state and nation are devising new modes of taxation and borrowing more millions to support and feed tens of thousands of these."

Quite a mouthful, that! Like a stenographer voice from the sky is this indictment of gambling also expressed in the inaugural address:

"Conceded gambling practices, permeating all grades of our society, can well be likened to these ancient countries' indulgences. The vehement outcry from every locality of our people, as well as from other sections of the country sending millions of tourists into our commonwealth annually, are uttering vociferous demands that we purge our state of these gambling leeches, habits of our fairs, races, resorts and roadsides, extracting millions by every conceivable device from fathers, mothers, boys and girls that should be used to buy shoes, clothing, fuel, food and other necessities thus turning over thousands upon thousands to be fed, clothed and warmed by State or Federal aid." To all this you need only a loud "amen" to complete the picture.

Political Patronage

Michigan's retail liquor business is politically controlled to the extent that a large number of its jobs are handed out as patronage to deserving party workers.

The Murphy administration put its followers into store managements before civil service "killed" them in their jobs. Now the Republicans are doing the same thing, handing out plums to those who served faithfully during the campaign.

The same thing could be said of the Michigan racing commission, a board responsible to the governor, which manages the legalized pari-mutuel betting system at the state fairground track in Detroit.

Following a visit to the state fair office where Dr. Linwood Snow, Northville, is doing an efficient job as manager (despite attempts at political interference) we visited the nearby race track. Twilight races were being run, 4:30 to 7:30 p. m. Several thousand people (a small box-office) were there, not to witness the races as much as to gamble.

Long rows of betting windows, $2 to $100, would require a good two blocks. Loud speakers carried frequent reminders of the time available to place bets. After each race the winners present their tickets to the cashiers for the pay-off.

Of course it is called a sport for the improvement of the breeding of better (and faster) horses. But we all know that it is gambling, pure and simple, and not so much of either at that.

This gambling business is condoned and supervised by the state under legislative authority. Being legalized by the legislature, betting has become a law which Governor Dickinson, by his oath of office, agreed to enforce along with all other laws on the state statute book.

Surely here is a paradox, a conflict of moral issues, if there ever was one.

Governor Doesn't Worry

Despite his age of 80 years, Mr. Dickinson enjoys the responsibilities of being governor.

He relishes it.

In fact, he has gained weight. Worries which plagued the late Frank Fitzgerald into an early grave apparently do not inspire a wrinkle on the Dickinson brow.

Admitting frankly that he wasn't "losing any sleep" over the then prevalent budget problem, the governor packed his bags and left in a state police car for the governors conference in the East. Let the legislature worry about a prospective deficit, he said, if it failed to cut school aid to $38,250,000.

And worry the law-makers did, while Governor Dickinson enjoyed himself at New York City and Washington, D. C. They reduced the school aid to $39,000,000 and left a loophole for $2,000,000 more revenue if budget-balancing would permit it.

It was a triumph for economy, on paper at least. Actually, however, the state is still in the hole financially and another "recession" or a prolonged automobile strike would impose another heavy burden on welfare needs, enough to quickly exhaust the reduced appropriation which the legislature authorized.

The Dickinson administration then would be bogged down in the same morass that befell Frank Murphy. It would be a case again of inducing the Great White Father at Washington to feed the jobless or of dipping more into non-existent state funds. With an election due, and the 1940 ballot isn't so far away, politicians would see to it that plenty of spending was done. As the records prove, welfare rolls have a funny habit of going up just before votes are to be cast.

Lefty Purkiss and Jay Olsen are at the present very popular. It seems that they are the only ones able to catch the juice from the grapefruits as they are squeezed.

Work will begin immediately for installing the two new ranges in the kitchen. One of the old ones will be retained, making three ranges in all. In the past two haven't been enough for the size of the camp.

The Aviation Club is again victorious. They received a navy amphibian from Grosse Ile airport, to use for study purposes.

The Agriculture finally opened up and presented the kitchen with the season's first cabbages. This was on July 6.

Mr. Taylor was seen the other day riding the horses. He claims that they needed exercise. Maybe he was right, but we can't help but wonder if it wasn't too warm for him to walk.

The material for the laying house is here. It was purchased from the Chelsea Lumber Co.

Two of Bow's pups are back in camp. They have been taken by Ruth Fordyce for the past few weeks. We have named one "Boots". Mrs. Fordyce will name the other.

The baseball uniforms have arrived. They are grey with green lettering on them.

Mr. Fisher had a crew of men trimming the trees around the project last Thursday. It sure improves the beauty of the place.

Wells Kemp injured his knee during a wrestling match with Tiny Rogers, and is in the hospital at the present time.

Mr. Bishop, the State N. Y. A. reporter, was guest for dinner Thursday. He is writing about Cassidy.

Monday night, July third, was the official opening of the Fourth of July at Cassidy Lake. The Kiwanis Club of Chelsea played the long postponed game of softball with the Cassidy Lake staff.

After partaking of a hearty meal, everyone went to the Cassidy Lake stadium for the biggest softball game of the 1939 season. It seemed that the game would get under way immediately, but the mighty Pirate Van Houten, coach of the staff, was having a hard time finding his center fielder. However, before long the distant thunder of hoofs became audible, and over the horizon could be seen his center fielder astride his favorite steed, Fred. After a heated argument, Osborne was finally convinced that the "center field" position could not be played astride his steed. Reluctantly he climbed off his horse and the game got under way. The Kiwanis Club started out with a bang, and it looked like a sure walk away for them, but the Cassidy staff turned on the power and won the game 14 to 10.

 Nothing in this world is so good as usefulness. It binds your fellow creatures to you, and you to them.

Question And Answer Dept.

Problem—You may say this one is paradoxical. Not at all. What or who is it that is older than its mother? (Answer elsewhere in this department).

Ques—How did the term "China's Sorrow" originate?
Ans—This is the name often applied to China's Yellow River, which is one of its principal rivers. It is so called because of its frequent devastating floods.

Ques—Is it lawful to re-print Confederate money from the original or new plates for the purpose of selling the "money" as souvenirs?
Ans—No. It is unlawful to print Confederate money from old, new or bogus plates.

Ques—Where is the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States held for safe keeping as the original copies?
Ans—Those two documents, the original Declaration of Independence and the original Constitution rest in a vault especially built for them in the main lobby of the Library of Congress in Washington, D. C.

Ques—Why do people use the word "Dear" in writing to people they don't even know, such as "Dear Sir", "Dear Madam", etc.
Ans—In olden times the people were more formal and effusive in their manifestations of their feelings. Consequently they used the word "dear" as a mark of high respect or esteem. The long-established custom is still in good usage.

Ques—Why were the United States marines called "Devil Dogs" in the World War?
Ans—This was the name given to the United States marines by the Germans during the World War. The Germans called them "Teufel-Hunde", which in English is "Devil Dog".

Ques—What is meant by collective bargaining?
Ans—Collective bargaining means acting or bargaining in groups. If a labor union makes an agreement with an association of employers through their representatives, that is collective bargaining as opposed to individual bargaining in which each person acts for himself.

Ques—When was "In God We Trust" first put on the United States coins?
Ans—In 1864 the United States Congress authorized the motto be placed on the two-cent piece. Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury, suggested the wording of this motto, but he did not originate the idea of putting such a motto on our coins.

Ques—When a person "turns State evidence" does he do so because of a promise of some kind from the prosecution?
Ans—Only in rare cases when stronger evidence is needed by the prosecution to convict.

Ques—Will a given solid object weigh the same at the North Pole as it does at the Equator?
Ans—Not exactly. Although the difference is very slight. An object weighing 100 pounds at the Equator will weigh 101 pounds at the North Pole. This is due to the fact that the North Pole is a little nearer the center of gravitation than the Equator, and thus has stronger drawing power.

seldom at home, and when they were, invariably favored the smaller child. The young girl had been driven into a situation with which she was not equipped to deal. She felt a keen responsibility for her brother but knew no other way to discipline him than by whipping. When he fought back, she would lose her temper and become more severe in her treatment.

If neither parent could remain at home, they should have instilled in the boy obedience and respect for his sister, or relieve their daughter of all responsibility by punishing the boy themselves whenever he deserved punishment.

Employment Service Offers Competent List

The most complete list of competent workers available in Michigan is offered to employers by the Michigan State Employment Service, according to Hilton P. Aitken, manager of the Ann Arbor office.

This list contains not only the names of workers available in Washtenaw county, but also the complete registration of workers in every section of the state, so that if the particular type of person needed by the employer in Washtenaw county is not listed by this office, the files of the entire state may be consulted for the right worker.

Pointing out that trained personnel are ready to aid both the employer and the worker Mr. Aitken urged all employers to use this service whenever they are in need of help, whether it be skilled or unskilled.

"When an employer places an order with us for a certain type of worker," Mr. Aitken said, "the employment service makes the contact between the probable employer and the worker on a referral basis, refraining from dictating the employment of the applicant."

"The employer is the one who determines whether or not the applicant is qualified for the job to be filled. As many applicants are sent to the employer as he may indicate he wishes to see. When a person is interviewed in our offices, we try to classify him according to his ability in a particular line of work and send him to employers in that line only."

The Service is open to all unemployed individuals in the State. The same applies to employers and the Service is ready to help any firm or business, or single employer in search of a good worker.

The whole world was shocked recently at the loss of three submarines, American, English, and French. Everybody spoke about the terrible loss of life and expressed sympathy for the wives and families of the men who died under water. Hundreds of thousands of dollars will be spent to bring those submarines to the surface, if it is at all possible, and to determine the cause of these terrible accidents.

While we are discussing these submarine fatalities, have you and I thought about the daily traffic toll? Ten times more persons were killed by automobiles on our highways during the days we were discussing these submarine accidents than died in the submarines. These families deserve sympathy, too.

You and I can help to eliminate these accidents by driving carefully and by supporting the many safety campaigns sponsored by organizations.

Reflecting a Trend

It takes more than 12,000 workers to produce the polished plate glass mirrors sold in this country. Mirroring of large sections of walls in homes, a recent decoration trend, is "reflected" in the mirror industry's annual purchases of $41,000,000 worth of raw materials and sales of $88,000,000, according to a Toledo, Ohio, glass company.

Manufacturing

The number of persons employed in manufacturing and mechanical industries in the United States has increased approximately six times from 1870 to 1930. In 1870 there were 2,674,000 employed in these fields, and in 1930, 13,790,000, more than any other occupation. Agriculture was second with 10,242,000.

Fishing Improves As Season Progresses

Angling on Michigan's inland lakes continued to improve as the open season entered its third week, bearing out predictions of the department of conservation that more favorable weather conditions would increase the catches of bass, bluegills and sunfish. The number of fishermen taking to the lakes in rowboats and waders received impetus from favorable weather over the fourth of July week-end, and reports rolled in in larger quantities accordingly.

Upper peninsula pike fishing was favorably mentioned in weekly reports from conservation department district supervisors. Walleyes and northerners were being taken in gratifying catches on lakes in the central section, where weather was warm with very little rain. Eastern upper peninsula counties reported exceptionally good pike fishing.

Panfish and bass were said to have held up remarkably in the northern counties of lower Michigan. Catches "continued as good as the first day," one district agent remarked, adding he had witnessed more persons doing fly fishing for bass and bluegills.

Fly, mosquito and grasshopper hatches proved as abundant as the fish division of the conservation department had anticipated at the opening of the season. Reports in general from southern counties were showing fair, "better" and good fishing, with water levels and temperatures approaching normal.

TRUTH about ADVERTISING

By CHARLES B. ROTH

IF EVERYTHING else that gifted writer, Michael Quern de Montaigne, wrote were to disappear, the world would still be indebted to him for his ideas on what he called his "great register."

Montaigne was a Frenchman who lived and wrote 400 years ago. Now admired exclusively by a few readers, he's almost forgotten by the world at large. But every time you read an advertisement in your newspaper, you do homage to his memory.

For it was his idea that people, who want to buy, need some place where they can get information about the products which others have to sell. In Montaigne's time the buyer had to look for the seller, the seller had to look for the buyer.

Montaigne proposed a register to be posted where all might see. Here the owners of things they wanted to sell would list them. Here also those who had needs would list those needs. Buyer and seller would thus be brought together.

It was a good idea. It still is a good idea. Every time, indeed, you look over the "ads" in your newspaper you express your approval of the idea.

Sellers tell you what they have.

Montaigne's "great register" You save time and money because you compare what one seller offers with what another offers. You judge which is the better value.

Norman Angell, the English writer, wished that someone had advertised more in England when he set out to buy a horse scraper for some farming operations he had on hand. He scanned the advertisements. No scrapers. He wrote a few manufacturers he knew. No scrapers. Later he came to America and in Chicago discovered, through an advertisement, of a horse scraper for sale. He looked into the matter, and found it was made within 20 miles of his English farm.

That you have a "great register" coming to you regularly, with the day's best opportunities to buy the things you need, is one of the beauties of living in America and in these modern times.

You do not, like Mr. Angell, have to fret and worry and search for what you need. You merely open the pages of the newspaper, and, lo, there right in front of you, you find a world of useful things from all over the world.

The more you rely upon the "great register" of modern life to help you in your buying, the more you get from every penny you spend. The best values, the best merchandise, the best prices—they comprise the contents of that useful, indispensable modern version of Montaigne's sound idea.

LIBRARY NEWS

This week adults, too, come in for a splendid array of material for leisure reading.

The Beards, Charles and Mary, have worked out a relationship of Past and Present in another spectacular but artistic piece of literature. Twelve years ago they published their notable "The Rise of American Civilization", a survey of the course of American history from its beginnings to the middle of the Coolidge administration. Their new book "America in Midpassage" is the log-book of the succeeding fifteen years. It attempts to provide to the people confused, alarmed and hurried, a chart of the past, a guide for the present; it attempts to justify our faith that we know, whether we are bound.

Men will enjoy John Jennings' new contribution "Next to Valour". It is called the Historical Romance of the year—a substantial tale of colonial New Hampshire. Its authentic background, picturing rivers, lakes, valleys, mountains, and the existence of the frontiersman, vigilant, wise in the ways of both wild game and Indians, and in the signs of the forest, is full of interest for those who enjoy vivid stories of the past.

You have become familiar with the books by Honore Morrow and have grown to like them through knowing them. Here is another—"Demon Daughter". Mrs. Morrow tells her story from the point of view of the Demon Daughter's mother, but before we are through we always get the daughter, Felicia's angle. We, therefore, have an intimate and frank tale of an American girl growing up today, told by her mother, with the novelist's eye for drama and suspense. Demon Daughter is a rich, wise and humorous chronicle of family life that will delight any reader who has watched a real relationship worked out to a happy ending by perpetual trial and error, only made endurable by a deep affection on both sides.

Perhaps "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" can best be expressed by quoting Stephen Leacock's analysis: "A Connecticut Yankee, a man without the refinement or the weakness of a college education, but with a perfect knowledge of machinery, transported backwards in time, to the England of the Court of King Arthur—a background both for pure fun and deep reflection—the contrast between the life and thought of the half-mythical days of King Arthur and those of the age of machinery in which we live. It stands as a noble and passionate expression of an ideal of freedom". In this, we have the work of one of our outstanding humorists and a genius of literature—Mark Twain. You will live with his characters through every page.

You must not fail to listen to Edward Bok's own story in his autobiography—"The Americanization of Edward Bok". It is one of the choice bits that reeks of modesty and refrains from claiming any self-imposed laurels. By no means, must you omit the introduction, for in it you will learn the reason for the success of a potential American. Each following chapter is an episode in itself, and you will not only read the book, but will repeatedly return to live again with Edward Bok in the years of progression which he experiences.

These and many others are now ready for you in the Library. I might mention "Stag Line" by Lorimer, "Mrs. Pennington" by Carson, and "Ordeal" by Shute—this latter book is quite modern in its picturization of air raids.

Old French Custom
Absence may make the heart grow fonder in other lands, but not so in southwestern France. When a young man there does not show up to kiss the waters of a famous well with his sweetheart the match is off. According to custom, betrothed couples often take themselves to the well in the La Double forest near Riviera, kissing the water as a symbol of their future union. If the young woman in the case becomes impatient at not being invited to the forest, she can test her sweetheart by suggesting the excursion. Should he fail to come, however, she knows that the match is definitely off.

New Architecture Seen For Buildings of Future

Prof. Shirley W. Morgan, head of the school of architecture at Princeton university, says that "blind" buildings are contrary to the modern trend in architecture. "There may be some special cases," Professor Morgan says, "in which such a building would serve a particular purpose or location, but the architecture of today and tomorrow is decidedly on the other track, toward the more liberal and wiser use of daylight."

Students of architecture, Morgan says, are fascinated by the realms opened to them by recent developments in structural and architectural uses for glass, "and these students are the architects who will design our homes and buildings of tomorrow," he added. "Architecture today must conform to the demand for health and cleanliness. This means plenty of light and sunshine."

"In the Nineteenth century, architects designed their buildings to please the eye of those on the outside; today, they design their homes and business structures for those living and working on the inside—looking out."

Professor Morgan maintains the demand for more light challenges the architect to design his structures so that there will be no blank walls or dark recesses.

"The architecture of tomorrow," he says, "is being dictated in the main by the demand for light and fresh air; by demands for healthier and more sanitary living and working conditions. Our architects must meet these demands, always creating beauty as well as accomplishing the utilitarian requirements of their structures."

CHILD OF EVIL

by Octavus Roy Cohen

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Beautiful, young Kay Forrest has been employed by Christine Maynard, photographer, to pose for a series of pictures, the background of which will be the exclusive Cathedral Gardens, famous Southern resort. Unknown to them, one very butler, mean, unscrupulous "swamp angel," has led a friend to spy on the two women. Kay, of necessity, is secretly clad while posing for the camera studies.

CHAPTER II—Kay frequently stays with Mrs. Ruth Hamilton, her son Barney, of whom Kay is very fond, and her daughter Margaret. Mrs. Hamilton, a remarkable woman, conceived the idea of the gardens following the death of her husband. One night, after a local dance, Kay Reynolds, a ne'er-do-well gambler of Beverly, a resort town, and Kay go for a ride. Kirk's car collides with that of Harvey Jackson, and during the ensuing argument Kirk whips out a gun and kills the young, popular engineer.

These sign-boards are a direct and proximate result of the successful launching of Cathedral Gardens. With the Gardens completed, the gravel road leading to them freshly scraped, the White Star Hotel newly papered—in spots—leading citizens and business men conceived the idea that tourists might come to visit awhile. The signs were therefore erected and casual arrangements made to entertain a few strangers.

But for some reason which Beverly never could quite understand, the fame of the Gardens spread overnight. There were other beautiful Gardens in the South, many of them, whose fame had been broadcast for decades, but there was something about this new place of Mrs. Hamilton's which intrigued the fancy of tourists. They came not singly, but in battalions. They descended upon the somnolent little town and swarmed about its streets. And since Beverly was a considerable distance from any large city—being a mere metropolis of sorts—there usually remained for two, three or four days.

They visited Cathedral Gardens in the early morning. They flocked during all the daylight hours, almost invariably, they remained in anticipation of moonlight when the Gardens reached the zenith of enchantment. Visitors were to their friends:

"Of course Cathedral Gardens are beyond description. You must see them. But when you do come, plan to stay a few days. This is a queer little town, but lots of fun. The hotel isn't half bad and there's dancing every night. One good picture-house, and several places along the roads serve barbecue, sandwiches which are worth driving a few miles to get. There are other things, too. The proprietor will tip you off if he thinks you're safe—believe it or not—to a dice-game on the second floor. Regular crap-table, and it's fun, provided you don't mind losing a little. We have stayed five days and we're coming back when the azaleas are over and the lotus season begins. They say that's going to be breath-taking."

And, on more than one occasion, letters were despatched from gentlemen tourists to other gentlemen who might become tourists. These letters touched on another point:

"And in addition to all that, Jim, old man, there's plenty of hot-cha here. If you're lonely, meet Miss Henkel, the beauty operator in the hotel. She's easy on the eyes—and boy! how tropical! The rest is up to you. As a matter of fact, the whole thing is a miracle. I can't help wondering what the old-timers in this burg think of the jazz invasion."

"P. S. This Henkel dame answers to the name of Babe. What she answers is something else again. A word to the wise is foolish."

It had taken Beverly no time at all to become tourist-conscious, nor to export his visitors. Robbie Morse raised the price for his best rooms to two dollars a day, and never quite oriented himself to the fact that it was paid without question. Pleasant homes on streets jutting off from Monument Square placed signs in their front yards: "Tourists Accommodated" and some of them assumed names: "The Gray House—Meals & Beds for Tourists," "Welcome to Ye Olde Inne. Chicken Dinners and Comfortable Rooms," "Rooms, Meals, Free Parking. Make This Your Headquarters While Visiting Cathedral Gardens."

And all of this had happened suddenly and bewilderingly to a town which for more than two hundred years had dozed placidly under southern skies; a town which business had been depression-proof and boom-proof; a town unaware of the outside world except on those in-requent occasions when the nation had indulged in warfare. Beverly was startled, business men applauded.

A little roadster, having as passengers Kay Forrest and Barney Hamilton, approached Beverly from the east, bumped across the railroad tracks and moved slowly up Palmetto Avenue toward Monument Square.

The Square was crowded. Outside the White Star Hotel was a fleet of cars, most of them wearing the license plates of other States. The general trend of passenger traffic was eastward, toward Cathedral Gardens. Farmers, in from the country in rattle-trap flivvers, searched desperately for parking space and cursed Beverly's new popularity. The Constable on duty at the Square made large and frantic gestures in an entirely futile effort to regulate traffic.

Barney asked a question. "Home?"

"Yes."

"Right away?"

"Yes."

He said, "You're funny. You haven't even been to town in two weeks, and now you have to run home. Why?"

"I must. Really."

"Before you get out—" he started.

"What?"

"Well, I suppose it's none of my business and I swore I wasn't going to butt in."

"Go ahead, Barney."

"All right." He drew a deep breath. "What's wrong?"

"What's wrong with what?"

"With you?"

The smile died from her eyes. She said, "Nothing."

"Tell that to somebody else. I know there is."

"Lots of things. It started the day after you went to the dance with Kirk Reynolds two weeks ago. You've been different. And you haven't even wanted to come to town until this morning. It's almost as though you were afraid of something."

She said, "Maybe I am."

"Then spill it. You know how I feel about you."

"How?" She tried to relieve the tension.

"Let's put it that I'm a sap, which might explain why I love you. Her face flushed and she touched his hand ever so gently. "But damn it! don't you see where that puts me? I want to help and you won't let me. You're stalling."

She said, earnestly, "I'm not really. There's nothing wrong."

He shrugged. "You win. I'll check out."

"Barney! Please."

He turned on her then, his blond, boyish face serious. "Let's talk turkey, Kay. Something happened when you came into town two weeks ago. When I drove you in, you were bright and happy. The next day you came back to the Gardens all shot to hell. Mother and Margaret have both noticed it. I've seen it in your eyes. You're scared, and don't say I'm wrong, either."

She shook her head. "You may not be wrong, Barney, but I still can't explain."

"Kirk Reynolds is mixed up in it, isn't he?"

She was startled. "What makes you think so?"

"I've got to think it. Whatever the trouble is, it started the night you went to the dance with him."

"Yes." Her eyes were somber.

"As a matter of fact, Barney, that's why I'm in town today."

"Why?"

"To see Kirk."

"But why? What's the big idea of wasting your time on a louse like him?"

She said, "I've got to talk to him, that's all I can tell you."

The boy's eyes narrowed. "That telephone call you got last night, was that from him?"

"Yes."

"He told you to come in this morning?"

"He asked me to."

"And you won't explain what's eating on you?"

"Barney! I can't! It isn't that I don't want to."

"I see." He spoke gently. "Listen, honey—there's a lot of nasty talk going around regarding Kirk Reynolds. You haven't heard it because you haven't been in town in the last two weeks. And I haven't told you. But I'll tell you this much—I don't like the idea of your playing around with him."

She said, "I don't either, Barney. But this morning I've got to see him."

"Check! I wish you'd tell me what's what."

"If I could."

"I'd light a cigarette with fingers which were none too steady. Going back to the Gardens tonight?"

"Yes."

"With me?"

"I hope so."

"I'll pick you up here at five. Okay?"

"Right. So now—" She put a warm hand over his in brief caress. Then she jumped out of the car and moved up the walkway toward the veranda of her home. He looked after her with troubled eyes.

"Something's awful wrong," he told himself, "and I'm going to find out what it is."

CHAPTER IV

Mrs. Emma Forrest was a fine woman. Her friends agreed that she was fine; that she had an overplus of those sterling and pious qualities which make for social success and domestic happiness in a town like Beverly.

No one, or at least very few, persons ever criticized Emma Forrest. She ran her home immaculately, dressed well and plainly, did ardent church work, belonged to a reading circle, and was inordinately fond of helping neighbors when there was illness in the house, though it was not unknown that after these neighborly excursions she invariably had something to talk about: something personal and intimate, like the death of a bed linen or the shocking failure of the ill woman to have stocked her pantry shelves with preserves.

Mrs. Forrest was forty-eight years of age. She was not fat, but she definitely was heavy. Solid. Not comfortable at all, but solid. Folks asserted that her face showed strength of character. Her manner was positive—so positive that Andrew Forrest, her rather smallish husband, had acquired a chronic submissiveness. He never—or very seldom—argued with Emma, and on such rare occasions as he did, he never won. At least Emma never acknowledge that he had. She was that sort of a woman; a thing was right because she said it was right.

The good upper-middle-class housewives of the town admired Emma Forrest. They admired her sterling qualities, her goodness of heart, her efficient management of her household, her success in having molded her twenty-two-year-old son, Andy, into a stalwart masculine edition of himself. And they wondered why a thoughtless Providence had inflicted upon her such a daughter as Kay. "She's wild, that's what she is—in spite of everything her mother has tried to do for her." They said, "She'll come to no good end, mark my words." They said, "It's a pity Kay couldn't have turned out to be a fine girl. Emma didn't deserve to have that sort of daughter."

By that, Beverly did not mean to infer that Kay Forrest was immoral, although there were some few who, without particular conviction, hinted that they wouldn't be so terribly surprised to learn that she was.

This morning the family had finished breakfast. They were waiting, Mrs. Forrest and Andy rather grim and pious. Andrew Forrest, who, by original selection and biological chance, had become nominal head of the household, uncertain and ill at ease. He knew that Kay was to be greeted with a barrage of criticism, and inasmuch as there existed between him and his nineteen-year-old daughter a bond of friendship and sympathy and understanding which was beyond the comprehension of the virtuous Emma, he waited gallantly to give such meager support as lay within his power.

They saw Kay step out of Barney Hamilton's little car. They saw her move up the walk; cross the veranda. They saw her come through the front door and approach the dining-room. Mrs. Forrest greeted her with a remark which was not unobvious.

Mrs. Forrest said, "We've been waiting for you, Katherine."

Kay caught an almost imperceptible warning flicker of her father's right eyelid. Therefore she answered meekly, "Yes, ma'am."

Mrs. Forrest found it necessary to make her point more impressively. "Andy hasn't gone to work yet."

Kay glanced without particular enthusiasm at the sturdy figure of her brother. He was clad in the habiliments of a garage mechanic. But she merely said, "I see he hasn't."

"Sit down, my dear. We wish to talk to you." Emma's requests were always unmistakably commands.

Kay seated herself, but not comfortably. She was grateful for the presence of her father—how ever unable he was to render assistance in this domestic crisis.

"Do you realize," inquired Mrs. Forrest, "that this is supposed to be your home?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Then why don't you stay here instead of gallivanting all over the country all the time?"

"I wasn't gallivanting, Mother. I've been staying with the Hamiltons."

"And driving out every night with that worthless Barney Hamilton?"

She said, "Barney's all right."

"He doesn't work," interjected Andy virtuously. "Just plays around. I've got no use for these fellows that think they're so elegant."

Mrs. Forrest was not to be diverted. "Beverly is talking about you, Katherine."

"That's nothing new."

"And it's not new that you're not ashamed of it."

"Why should I be? I've never done anything wrong."

"You went to one of those terrible orgies at the hotel, didn't you?"

Kay was battling for self-control. "I don't see anything wrong with that, Mother. They're just dances."

"Riff-raff! Tourists! No decent girl would be seen there."

"Now, Mother—" It was Andrew speaking. Mrs. Forrest flashed her husband a hostile glance. She said, "You keep out of this, Andrew Forrest. I'm Katherine's mother, and God knows I get no help from you in trying to raise her as a lady."

"I was only going to say—" Kay shrugged wearily. "Keep out of it, Dad."

"You see?" Mrs. Forrest's voice crescendoed triumphantly. "There's your own daughter giving you orders. Telling you not to interfere in her upbringing—as though you would, anyway."

Kay leaned forward. She said, "Suppose you stick to me, Mother."

"Such impertinence! Andrew, are you going to let your daughter speak to her own mother in that fashion? I declare I don't know what I've ever done that God should have given me such a child." She was whipping herself into a fury of virtuous anger. "And you listen to me, Miss—! I'm not going to stand it any longer. It's time I set my foot down. From now on, you're going to do as I say."

Andy spoke again. "You stay away from Kirk Reynolds, Sis."

Kay was startled. "And if I don't?"

"Then I'll have to take matters in my own hands."

She smiled slightly. "Better not, Andy. I don't think you could scare Kirk very easily."

Mrs. Forrest had risen. She was a purposeful and dominant lady, overflowing with righteous indignation.

"Will you promise me never to talk to Kirk Reynolds again?"

Kay met her mother's eyes squarely. "No, ma'am."

"Why not?"

"Because I don't make promises that I can't keep."

"Can't! Can't! You hear that, Andrew?"

"Now, Mother—aren't you a trifle hard on Kay?"

"Not certainly not! I'm only doing my duty as a mother."

From outside came the insistent honking of an automobile-horn. Four pairs of eyes quested through the window toward the curb. Mrs. Forrest said, "Of all the nerve! And Andy gasped, "It's Kirk Reynolds."

Kay rose. Her face was white. She walked from the room and onto the porch. Her voice came back to them—clearly. She called, "I'll be with you in a minute, Kirk."

She walked up to her room—not hearing—or not noticing—her mother's statement that she positively was not going riding with that ruffian. She did hear, faintly, her mother's protests that this was more than any good woman should be called upon to stand. She heard her mother stating to husband and son that the neighbors would talk, that this was an unbearable disgrace—her own daughter riding around in bright, broad daylight with a professional gambler. She called upon Andrew Forrest to do something about it, and Mr. Forrest—glad enough to escape—plodded up the stairs after Kay.

Andrew Forrest was a meek person, albeit a gentle and kindly one. By profession he was a lawyer; a keen student who was consulted on intricate matters by his less learned contemporaries. His practice was arduous and not very remunerative. He was short and slight and on the verge of baldness. His eyes were gentle and not too strong. He was a student and a philosopher; a man of scrupulous integrity—both of thought and deed.

He came now into his daughter's room and touched her shoulder affectionately. He said, "Must you, Kay?"

She nodded. "Yes, Dad."

"I'm sorry. Your mother isn't entirely wrong, you know. Kirk is bad medicine."

"Yes, Dad."

"Just this once, I'd rather not, but I can't help it."

His eyes clouded. "Something serious?"

"Yes."

"And you can't tell me?"

"I wish I could."

He smiled bravely. "Don't forget we're buddies, Kay."

She kissed him, hard, on the lips. "You know how much I love you, don't you, Dad?"

"I know." He patted her shoulder gently. "Watch yourself, Kay. And don't forget you're mighty young."

She walked downstairs, swiftly, purposefully. Mrs. Forrest made a last, desperate stand. "I order you not to go out with that man."

Kay's glance was unyielding. "I'm sorry, Mother."

She passed through the front door, climbed into the little coupe beside Kirk Reynolds and rolled west on Chicora Avenue. Her lips were set.

Kay said, "You sent for me, Kirk. What's wrong?" And he answered, "Plenty."

They rode in silence, Kay's eyes cloudy with trouble; Kirk's face inscrutable. The sapphire sky was brilliantly clear, the April sun bright and warm, yet Kay shivered.

A car approached them, coming from Chicora. The driver saw Kay as they passed, and her face flushed.

It was a brief passing, a quick recognition—yet Kay knew, without looking around, that the driver of the other car had been startled—and that he had turned to look after her. She said, somewhat bitterly, "It would be that way."

Kirk said, in a flat voice, "Who was it?"

"Barney Hamilton."

"The lad whose mother owns the Gardens?"

"Yes."

They reached the intersection of the concrete Federal highway and Kirk swung to the right. His voice was toneless, almost disinterested.

"What's the setup there, Kay?"

"Where?"

"Between you and that Hamilton guy?"

"What difference does it make?"

"None. I just asked."

His eyes did not leave the broad ribbon of road which unwound under their wheels.

Kay said, "I like him—a lot."

"So I imagined."

"What made you think so?"

"Your expression when we passed him." That faint, mocking smile passed briefly across Kirk's lips.

"Has he gone for you?"

"I don't know."

"Okay. But he has."

Kay's body felt uncomfortably warm. "I'd rather not talk about Barney."

"To me, you mean?"

"Yes." Her own voice had become edged. "And I might as well tell you something else, Kirk. This is my last ride with you."

"That so?"

"Yes. People are talking."

His voice was sharp. "Who?"

"Everybody. My family and—"

"What are they saying?"

"That you're not the sort of person a nice girl should be going with."

He laughed mirthlessly. "I'm not. Then, after a brief pause, "Are they saying anything else?"

"I don't know."

"I mean about the last time we were out together?"

She shrugged away from him. "Please, Kirk."

"They will," he remarked acridly, "sooner or later."

She said, "I know it. That's why I'm not going out with you any more."

He didn't answer that. His foot depressed the accelerator, ver so slightly, and the speedometer moved ahead to forty-five. The road was broad and smooth, cars buzzed by, farm cars and trucks and several big sedans headed toward Beverly and Cathedral Gardens. Kirk said dryly, "Your boy friend's mother has done quite a job."

"Please, Kirk."

"She has, really. The town was dead until she came into the picture."

"I'd rather not. Why did you send for me?"

"Reasons."

"Nothing wrong, is there?"

"Yes."

"You mean—"

"You'll find out."

"She pressed her lips together. "Please take me back."

"Not now."

"But it's getting late."

"Not now, yet."

"Where are you taking me?"

"Springdale."

"To Springdale? But Kirk—I can't!"

"Yes, you can. You can do exactly what I say."

She glanced at his face. It was like granite. Hard. Unconsciously hard and dangerous. She asked, "Why are you taking me there?"

There was no emotion in his voice. He made a flat statement. He said, "You and I are going to get married."

Kirk Reynolds drove on in silence. He might have said, "The weather is pleasant." He might have said, "We're going to Springdale for lunch." Instead, in just so casual a manner, he had stated that they were about to be married.

Kay's hazel eyes were wide and frightened. Unconscious of the gesture she pressed one hand against her lips. She didn't even ask whether he was serious. Kirk was not addicted to making statements which he did not mean. But she answered, tersely, "That has nothing to do with it."

Words were a relief. "It's impossible," she declared, and she smiled again; that mirthless, mocking smile. He said, "I don't think so."

Then she asked, "But why? Do you think that you care for me?"

"No."

"And yet— Oh, Kirk! You're joking, surely."

"Not exactly. Here's the license."

He tossed it into her lap. It had been issued in Springdale, that prosperous agricultural county which adjoined Beauregard on the north. The names stared up at her: Kirk Reynolds, age 28; Katherine Forrest, age 19. "We'll be married by a magistrate or a preacher. It's your wedding. Take your choice."

The thing was too startling, too bewildering. She said, without conviction: "I won't do it!"

"Yes, you will."

Named by Mormons
The brightly-colored canyons and formations in Zion National park, Utah, were originally named Zion by religious-minded Mormons.

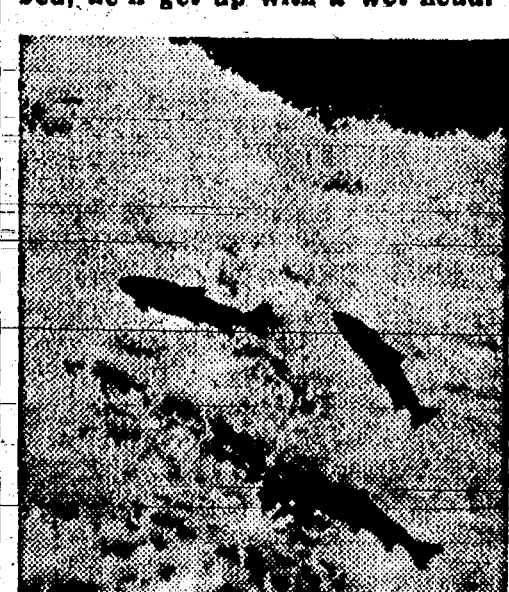

Use of Charcoal in Great Britain
When charcoal was used in Great Britain toward the end of the Sixteenth century, the timber supply was depleted so rapidly that the government restricted the cutting of timber—and the decline of the wrought iron industry followed at once. With the introduction of coke, a product of coal, the industry revived immediately.

Prophets

According to ancient English legend, rain on St. Swithin's Day, July 15, means rain for 40 days. The folk lore of every country imbues animals, fowl and insects with the gift of foretelling rain. Here are a few of the more popular superstitions:

Despite meteorologists, many farmers here and elsewhere listen to the rooster's crowing for advance weather information. This superstition is based on the age-old couplet: "If a cock crows when he goes to bed, he'll get up with a wet head."

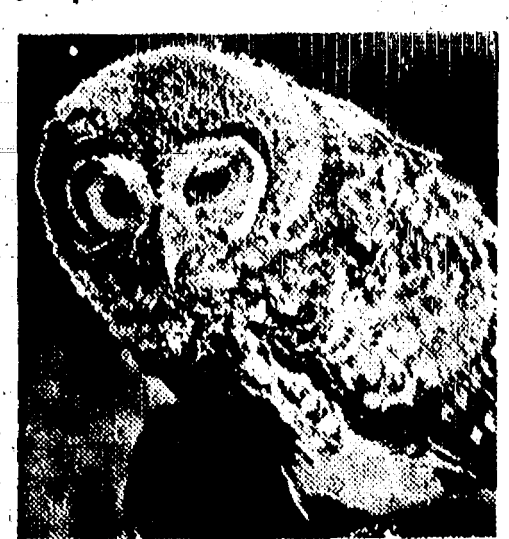

Another "sure-fire" indication of rainfall, fishermen to the contrary, is when "Through the clear streams the fishes rise, and nimbly catch incautious flies."

Government weather experts look upon kitty as nothing more than a household pet, but according to diehards, rain is a two-to-one bet when "Puss on the hearth, with velvet paws, sits licking o'er her whiskered jaws."

The not-too-particular housewife can disregard scientific prognostications, according to legend, because rain is definitely due when "The soot falls down, the spaniels sleep, and spiders from their cobwebs creep."

And this wise old bird may be as smart as his reputation paints him, for "When the owl does hoot within the day, in 48 hours the skies are gray." So—if your newspaper didn't come, and your radio isn't working, try dozing out your own weather prophecies.

Military Drill Is Gaining In American Universities

Although only 139 out of a total of 1,706 American colleges and universities offer military drill, and a still smaller percentage of public high schools provide such instruction, 135,794 college and high school students received military instruction under United States army officers in the 1937-38 school year, as compared with 35,091 such students who received army-supervised military instruction in 1916. Another 18,729 young men received such instruction in eight military colleges and 46 military academies qualifying under war department reserve officers training corps standards, making a total of 154,523 R. O. T. C. trainees in the year 1937-38. A small increase in these totals is expected in the school year 1938-39. The training is generally approved by the vast majority of students, and as a result of its effectiveness, the U. S. now has a reserve of competent commissioned officers numbering just short of 100,000 men. Of the 139 colleges and universities offering military training, 72 require attendance at military courses for two years by able-bodied male students, and offer an additional two years of training as an elective course; 67 schools offer either two or four years of military training purely on a voluntary basis.

Diabetes on Increase
Deaths among Americans from diabetes have increased by 400 per cent since 1900; over 30,000 deaths in the U. S. estimated from this disease in 1938. The American death rate from diabetes was 9.7 per 100,000 population in 1900; estimated to exceed 23 A. M. 100,000 in 1938. The U. S. has more cases of diabetes and more deaths from this cause per 100,000 of population than any other nation because diabetes is essentially a "prosperity" disease, flourishing in countries where living standards are highest. The death rate varies widely among the different states, but parallels per capita income with surprising exactness. Alabama with a per capita income of $189 in 1935, 58 per cent below the national average of $432, had a diabetes death rate of 9.1, 59 per cent below the 1935 national average of 22.2.

Banana Tree Dwarfed to Facilitate Harvesting

A banana "tree" will grow to a height of 30 feet, and with leaves 10 feet long, but on plantations it is kept much shorter to facilitate harvesting. Bananas are a commercial proposition to grow, for on the land required to grow a hundred pounds of potatoes you can grow as much as four thousand pounds of bananas, notes a writer in London Answers Magazine.

Apart from this, the plants need very little attention and little effort is necessary to cultivate further trunks.

The fruit we know can either be eaten fresh or in a dried state; beverages are also made from bananas, and the dried fruit can be ground into an excellent flour. In the tropical countries where the plant is cultivated, the ten-foot leaves are used for thatching roofs.

The common banana we eat grows on a tree which is only one of a family. In East Africa, one variety grows fruit to the tremendous size of two feet long and about nine or ten inches round, but it only grows one to every bunch of the other tree, and the fruit has to be cooked.

Another member of the same family gives us the famous Manila hemp, which is made from the fibers in the leaves.

After only a short history, the banana has become Britain's most popular fruit food, imports jumping about 70 per cent even in the last nine years. Unlike apples, lemons, and oranges, which are often consumed in cooked and liquid forms, the banana is mostly eaten in its natural state.

By the way, no banana trees have been grown from seed in living memory. It has been so scientifically cultivated that seeds aren't necessary.
