and in dreamy comfort travel by water through a hard-woods forest for around twenty miles. That takes two hours and a half.

A brisk walk over a woods trail to the falls. Ninety minutes' time to view the second largest cataract east of the Mississippi, and then you're on your way leisurely back to the Soo Junction. The trolley leaves at 10 a. m.; it returns at 6:30 p. m.

We saw seven deer from the boat. On the day before the trolley party was started with the sight of a bear running for cover.

Captain Joe Beach of Newberry, a former game warden, has developed this trolley-showboat trip into an ace tourist attraction. Two trips daily are planned for 1940.

Marquette on the Lake

Heading toward the Copper Country the traveler arrives at Marquette, a prosperous industrial center on Lake Superior which is less dependent on tourists and mining than most of the Upper Peninsula cities. North of the city is Sugar Loaf mountain with a blazed trail over which venturesome tourists may climb to obtain a breath-taking view of forests and islands.

Nearby are prominent iron mining towns such as Negaunee and Ishpeming.

To the east of Marquette is Munising, well known for its "Pictured Rocks." Travelers may inspect a pulp mill of the Munising Paper company which consumes Canadian logs rafted across the lake each spring, and also a woodenware plant operated by the Piqua-Munising Woodenware company. An Upper Peninsula meeting of the Michigan Press association will be held at Munising on Sept. 9 and 10.

At the lower tip of the Keweenaw bay is L'Anse, enterprising hub of Henry Ford's hardwood lumber holdings. One of the Ford boats, "Green Island," has a retracting stack and house which are lowered to clear bridges on the Erie canal between Buffalo and Albany. Lumber shipments are shipped by water from L'Anse to the Atlantic seaboard for sale on the open market.

More than 1,000 persons, employed by the Ford Motor company, dwell in model villages in the vicinity of L'Anse.

Houghton, Copper Capital
At Houghton and Hancock the United States government is spending three million dollars to improve the ship canal through Portage Lake, connecting Lake Superior with Keweenaw bay. The canal is being widened and deepened to accommodate large freighters.

Although Houghton has less than 4,000 population, it is the retailing center for a vast mining empire. The Houghton Mining Gazette, a morning daily, delivered more papers in Calumet (a city of 10,000) than does the Calumet News-Journal, an afternoon daily. Calumet, likewise, is a small municipality, actually being made up of a dozen or more villages having such unique names as Red Jacket, Yellow Jacket, Blue Jacket, and Raymbietown (which was renowned in prohibition days for its moonshine). Mining companies preferred to organize their own towns for taxation purposes.

The Calumet region once had 40,000 inhabitants; today, it has 16,000. When Michigan's automobile centers were booming, Calumet people departed by the trainloads. Detroit, for example, has a large Calumet "colony."

Mechanization of the copper mines, together with sinking shafts to unprofitable levels and the low price of copper itself, brought widespread unemployment to the Copper range. Old deserted mining towns present a picture that is strange to the average inlander. Contrasted to this are well-filled theaters and taverns.

Brockway Mountain Drive

The Keweenaw peninsula is literally packed with scenic grandeur.

After traveling through numerous mining towns, most of them situated in a valley between two ranges of hills, you arrive at Eagle Harbor on Lake Superior and soon start ascending the Brockway mountain drive.

Devoid of billboards, hot dog stands and gasoline stations, the drive sweeps around and over the Keweenaw mountains, giving you a double view of forests and lake on one side and a rocky, forested shore line of the blue Lake Superior.

When the atmosphere is clear, you can see Isle Royale, 50 miles away.

A sleepy fishing village, Copper Harbor, comes into sight, and adjoining it is the million-dollar Keweenaw Park, built by the WPA in the depression days when most of the county inhabitants were on relief. Instead of keeping the jobless miners on a dole, the government put them to work creating a model tourist park from amid a wilderness. A clubhouse, cabins and a nine-hole golf course were constructed and then handed over to the county highway department to maintain.

Harold Wescott, aviator and proprietor of the Pontiac Resort at Copper Harbor, told us that more than 70 cabins are now available for tourists. This region is especially lovely in the fall between Sept. 15 and Oct. 1 when frosts turn the forest foliage into riotous gay hues of reds and yellows.

Lake of the Clouds

Within an easy drive from Houghton is Ontonagon at the edge of the Ottawa National forest and adjacent to the Porcupine mountains.

Ontonagon is enjoying a belated boom. Seven miles of streets are being paved. Many new homes have been built this season.

The state highway department, is constructing several rustic bridges, the upper parts consisting of logs, on the Porcupine drive which skirts Lake Superior going as far west as the Lake of the Clouds. There the road terminates with a turn-around. Someday it will be pushed west along the lake shore through virgin white pine tracts to the vicinity of Ironwood with connecting roads to Duluth.

Guided by Claude Riley, publisher of the Ontonagon Herald, we climbed "Porky," abetted by a firm staff, and viewed the Lake of the Clouds. This body of water is cupped between two ranges of rolling mountains.

"This region has great tourist possibilities," enthused Riley. "But the average tourist doesn't know what to look for. We need rustic signs to guide the traveler over trails. We must acquaint the visitor with our historical lore as well as our scenic lure. The NYA is starting a sign-project here, and James Jamison, former deputy auditor general, is supplying the wording for them."

Lake of the Clouds was formerly known as Carp Lake, an abbreviation for Escarpment Lake, so named because of a high stone bluff on the mountain from which hikers obtain a rare vista of distant mountains.

Question And Answer Dept.

Problem—Can you get any of the following correct: What is a young goose called? What is a young frog called? What is a young swan called? What is a young cat called? What is a young salmon called? If you get three correct you'll score an "A." (Answer elsewhere in this department.)

Ques.—Where can I buy a new wheel chair?

Ans.—If we mentioned a name, firm or corporation, it would be considered advertising. Therefore we will simply say that you can buy a new wheel chair anywhere they are sold or where they are on sale.

Ques.—What causes eyesight in elderly people to become dimmed?

Ans.—This condition comes about because people of middle age onward become more or less subject to the lens of the eyes growing less and less elastic. As a result of this the lens constantly remains more or less flattened. Although vision for objects at some distance from the eyes remains perfect, oldish people very frequently have to wear glasses to obtain clear vision of objects close at hand.

Ques.—In mythology I would like to know where the ancient city of Troy was located?

Ans.—This mythical city was located in the northwestern section of Asia Minor, bordering on the Hellespont and the Aegean Sea. The site of the supposed ancient Troy is now occupied by the city of Hisarlik.

Answer to problem—Goose: gosling, frog: tadpole, swan, cygnet; cat: kitten; salmon: grilse.

Ques.—Why is it that a submarine boat cannot be detected by their periscope sticking above the surface of the water?

Ans.—This is because torpedo boats (submarines) seldom get near enough their objects of attack for their periscope to be seen. Occasionally the eagle eye of a vigilant enemy detects a periscope a mile away and gives the alarm and location of the deadly undersea craft.

Ques.—When a thing is said to be 18 carat gold, does that mean it is pure gold? Are gold coins pure gold?

Ans.—Pure gold is 24 carats fine; 18 carat gold means that it contains six carats copper to harden it. Pure gold is too soft for practical purposes, hence is seldom used without a hardening alloy. United States coins are 21.6 carats fine, and British coins are 22 carats.

Ques.—On what day of the week was the Battle of Yorktown in the American Revolutionary War?

Ans.—The Battle of Yorktown began on Wednesday, October 17, 1781, and ended on Friday, October 19, 1781, when the British surrendered to Washington.

Ques.—May I ask in your question column in what year the Johnstown Flood occurred?

Ans.—The Johnstown flood occurred in 1889.

Ques.—Who were the Phoenicians?

Ans.—The Phoenicians were the natives of the extinct—Phoenicia, a narrow strip of country on the southeastern coast of the great inland sea of antiquity, lying chiefly between Mount Lebanon and the Mediterranean shore, and extending about 120 miles north of Mount Carmel.

Ques.—Is there any animal called a "tench"?

Ans.—No. "Tench" is the name of a fresh-water fish found in European waters.

HYBRID CORN A POOR PARENT

Another test of using a hybrid corn yield as seed stock the second year is proving for A. R. Marston, Michigan State College plant breeder, that the hybrid makes good feed but poor seed for continued use. His tests in 1938 showed a hybrid could yield 71.8 bushels an acre, while the second generation seed from the same hybrid cross fell down to 51.4 bushels an acre.

Says Hybrid Corn
Fails Second Year

An adapted hybrid corn is useful in Michigan for producing a crop of good feed for livestock.

But a warning comes from a man who has proved his idea that it does not pay to select ears from a hybrid crop for use in the second generation for seed.

A. R. Marston conducted tests in 1938 which indicated these results and his test plots at Michigan State College in 1939 are heading toward the same conclusion. Repurchase of hybrid seed may cost more each year but the yield in the corn crib proves the economy of buying new seed each year.

Michigan farmers, for many years, have looked to the crib for seed each spring. With the standard or open-pollinated varieties this type of seed selection can be practiced. With a hybrid, however, the mixed breeding represented in obtaining the hybrid cross shows up in the second year.

Yields in the test plots in 1938 were sorted into sound ears and culls. On an acreage basis the first generation hybrid seed yielded 71.8 bushels an acre. In adjacent plots Marston had planted second generation hybrid seed corn, in other words, seed selected from a 1937 hybrid yield. The second generation yielded 51.4 bushels an acre.

"Use of second generation is inadvisable," Marston concludes. "A recombination of characters occurs in the second and subsequent generations and causes variations in type, size of plant and maturity and a reduction in yield."

BRIGHTON—A branch office of the Secretary of State has been established in this city by Harry F. Kelly, Secretary of State, for the convenience of motorists of Brighton and vicinity, who will no longer be obliged to go to Howell for their license plates. —Angus.

STOCKBRIDGE—H. W. Morgan, founder of the Stockbridge Brief-Sun, and editor and publisher for years, passed away at his home on East Main street early Wednesday morning, aged 68 years, 8 months and 18 days. —Brief-Sun.

TECUMSEH—Selection of a site for Tecumseh's new $70,000 postoffice was announced yesterday in Washington by the Procurement Division of the Federal government. The site selected is the Elliott property on South Pearl street, and the price is understood to have been $8,650. —Herald.

PLYMOUTH—The old Plymouth cemetery located at the end of Pearl street, on the north side of the city, and formerly used as the sacred burial ground for Indians of this locality in the early days, has just been taken over by the city of Plymouth for perpetual care. The cemetery is located on the top of a small hill. At the northeast corner of the hill is the place where the old Indian chiefs conducted their worship, according to Mr. Craig. At this place, records show that about 100 years ago there stood a stone altar before which the Indians met. Henry Holbrook, who platted the village of Plymouth and a Mr. Schoolcraft saw the altar and one of them saw the secret ritual which took place there before the Great Spirit. Somewhere within a few feet of that spot is where about a century ago bones of chiefs and warriors were buried by the Indians. It was the sacred repository of bones and not the original burying place. The Indians first buried the dead body and after a number of years they took it up and buried the bones elsewhere in spots supposedly sacred. —Mail.

MASON—Michigan's unusual weather is yielding some freakish exhibits wrought by Mother Nature.

One of the freaks is a one-eyed frog brought in by William Hancock, the result of duty and dry weather during July. The frog is normal in every respect except his eyes. He has no right eye nor no socket for it. Walter Cowdry brought in one little branch from a green gage plum tree with 48 plums, all good sized, hanging from a 10-inch stem. Cordie Bashford presented two branches of flowering quince shrubs heavy with fruit. It is only in unusual years that flowering quince shrubs bear fruit. —News.

DEXTER—Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Miller of Swartz Creek spent Sunday with the Steinbach family. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have just returned from New York where they with 100 other "champion farmers" of the United States, Canada and England were entertained for a week by the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. Mr. Miller, a manager of the Crapo farms, received a medal as the "Champion Hereford Breeder" of the United States. —Leader. Mrs. Miller was formerly Miss Marian Steinbach of this place.

Obeying the law may keep a person out of jail, but it won't always keep him out of accidents. Being legally careful is not enough.

I have driven with men in communities where the speed limit was 30 miles an hour, and these drivers felt that they were within their legal rights to drive at that speed. However, because of some unusual condition of sidestreets, traffic on particular thoroughfares may have been very crowded, and pedestrian traffic may have been heavy, too. Thirty miles an hour under those conditions was entirely within the law but not within the law of common sense.

Regulate your driving to meet conditions. Adjust your temper and your driving habits so that you will be a sensible driver rather than a legally safe driver.

"It's Smart to be Careful."

Binders In Use Recall Events In State History

Recent rumbling of binders and combines over millions of acres of Michigan grain recall episodes in the state's history of a century ago.

For it was then that men were sitting up, nights trying to figure out how grain could be successfully harvested without the usual hour after hour task of hand labor.

One of Michigan's students of history is H. H. Musselman, head of agricultural engineering at Michigan State College. He finds inspiration in the energetic attacks pioneers made in trying to develop farm machinery.

More than a century ago Hiram Moore, farmer, and John Hascall, attorney, paired up their ingenuity to invent a combine at Climax, Michigan. Moore, the farmer, had mechanical ability and Hascall provided him with ideas.

A. Y. Moore, no relation to Hiram, used their combine on his farm near Schoolcraft from 1888 to 1893. This second Moore is known in history as the founder of the Kalamazoo Agricultural Society, started in 1847. This later became the state agricultural society. A. Y. Moore was attending the legislature as well as operating his farm and he was on the committee which selected the site at East Lansing for the present Michigan State College.

Moore's machine was shipped to California near San Jose in 1893. It was used to harvest 600 acres of grain in 1894, was not used in 1895, and burned in the field from an overheated bearing in 1896.

Reapers and binders proved more popular for several decades, but Michigan again is seeing a revival of use of the combine in small sizes. It is estimated now that there are 1,700 in Michigan and that in 1939 they are covering about 340,000 acres of the state's two and one-half million acres of wheat, oats, rye and barley.

Children In Court

By Judge Malcolm Hatfield

Shifting for Themselves

Two fifteen year old girls were picked up while trying to hitch-hike across the state line. They had left their homes the day before and were headed for Florida, where one girl's aunt lived.

They said that their homes were overcrowded and their families were wretchedly poor. The parents insisted, however, that the girls were old enough to shift for themselves and were aware of their departure. These girls, who had less than three dollars, packed their meager belongings and moved out.

The disagreeable experiences which might have befallen these girls, if they had not been intercepted, remain open for conjecture. There are thousands of young girls in the same circumstances who are unwanted at home and who are thrust into an indifferent world to shift for themselves. With no education or assets of any kind, they fall an easy prey to all forms of temptations. (The inmates of Women's Prisons are recruited from their ranks.)

Pulling the Wool Over Mother's Eyes
It was necessary to warn a mother that she was placing too much confidence in her daughter, because it was discovered that the girl had formed the habit of telling her mother that she was spending the night at a girl friend's home whereas she remained out until the early hours of the morning with an adult man.

In other homes parents are entirely too strict, and as a result the children frequently revolt against the rigid discipline enforced upon them.

Parents should not attempt to force a blind obedience to every command, because such an unreasonable demand develops antagonistic attitudes in many children. Most children can be ruled much better by love and reason. Individuals who are not taught to reason are totally unprepared to face life.

Speed Helps In Solving Summer Stain Removal

There's a cure for most summer stains if they are treated without delay.

A portion of a Michigan State College bulletin, "Modern Laundry," Extension Bulletin No. 184, is devoted to methods of removing various stains from clothing. Typical summer mishaps occur with fruits and beverages, ice cream, mildew, rust, grass green, scorch, and perspiration.

Quick action is the first requisite with any sort of stain. It's best to take out spots immediately or at least before, tannin stains, for example, water and soap will set several kinds of stains hopelessly.

Sugar and starch spots yield readily to gentle sponging with plain cool water. Carbon tetrachloride is valuable for taking out grease and oil stains.

Glycerin should be used first with stains containing tannin. And boiling water poured from a teakettle held 3 or 4 feet above the stained area, the cloth being stretched over a bowl and held with a rubber band, will usually carry off new grape, juice and fresh berry stains.

Peaches, pears, and plums contain tannin, as do tea, coffee, ginger ale and other soft drinks, beer, tobacco, and damp leather. Tannin stains will be set by heat, alkali, and age. Except for stains from coffee containing cream, articles stained by any of the foregoing should be soaked first in warm glycerin. If necessary after rinsing, repeat.

If coffee has cream in it, sponge the spot first with carbon tetrachloride. Then pour boiling water from a height as for grape or berry stains.

Car for Every 4.3 Persons
The United States, with approximately 30,000,000 cars, or one for every 4.3 persons, has three times as many automobiles as the entire rest of the world, which has about 11,000,000 cars, or one for every 180 persons.

OFFER IDEAS FOR FALL PROGRAMS FOR WOMEN'S GROUPS

Available free through the Home Service department of Michigan Bakeries, Inc., bakers of "Michigan" bread and rolls, are a variety of new and helpful suggestions for Fall programs of women's church, school and club organizations.

Miss Ruth L. Weir, field supervisor of the department, announces that for the past several weeks the department has been developing unusual program ideas to present to interested clubs with the arrival of Fall. Included are brand new types of food demonstrations; literature containing word games and other entertainment; illustrated lectures on topics of practical education; suggestions for novel money-making projects; active assistance with penny carnivals, bazaars, suppers; and advices and booklets on economical menus for large suppers or banquets, quantity servings, party refreshments, club lunches and the like.

Detailed information on these program ideas may be had by writing Miss Helen J. Dean, Home Service Dept., Michigan Bakeries, Inc., Jackson, Mich.

Roadside Trees Sprayed By State Highway Dept.

Lansing—Nearly a quarter million roadside shade trees had a new lease on life this week as the state highway department completed its 1939 tree-spraying activities.

The attack against leaf-eating insects was launched April 4 with dormant sprays to kill insects before damage had started. In May, attention was concentrated on spring canker worm and in June the regular summer spray campaign was started. The department uses a solution of arsenate of lead.

The program was carried on by four units with power spraying equipment. Each machine was operated by two crews—one working from daylight until noon and the second crew from noon to dark. Nearly 700,000 gallons of spray solution went through the sprayers. Attention was concentrated on apple, elm, cherry, walnut, oak, and hickory trees.

State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner claimed for the program the saving of thousands of trees along Michigan roadsides. "We have expanded this program from year to year," he said, "with the result that today there are beautiful trees along our roadsides which the insects would otherwise have destroyed. It is impossible to accurately calculate the value of these roadside trees but we know that they are returning thousands of dollars in tourism income and in scenic pleasure for Michigan drivers."

Methodist Home

The entire Leeson family is enjoying a ten day vacation and reunion at their cabin home at Lake Louise. We wish great happiness for them.

On Wednesday we were favored with a call from our new Board president, Rev. Benjamin T. Holme of the Westlawn church in Detroit, who brought with him his daughter Josephine and son Richard.

On Monday afternoon Rev. and Mrs. H. E. Duttweiler, Mrs. H. S. Saxton and Mrs. Mary Palmer, all from Milford, visited Mrs. Harlow. Mr. and Mrs. Duttweiler also called on Miss Harris and Mr. Duttweiler called on Miss Gage.

Mrs. Buss returned Monday afternoon from spending a happy week-end with her sister in East Saginaw.

The outstanding event of the past week has been the completion of the re-finishing of our dining room. For weary days on days the family have mournfully eaten in the dreary and joy-quenching south dry room, but on Sunday morning we once more found our places in our own pleasant dining room, more beautiful than ever before.

Walls and ceiling were freshly painted in cream; the woodwork was newly painted in white, trimmed in tangerine; new net curtains hung at all the windows, and best of all, the old treacherous wood floor and wood supports had been removed and a solid cement base installed; over that a covering, and finally the entire floor was covered with inlaid linoleum in a handsome block pattern of brown and tan with border of black and tangerine.

The result is amazingly satisfying to the eyes, ears and feet of the diners. And are we proud! The good lady who said "I couldn't feel prouder if the queen was my uncle" only faintly expressed our feelings. Rev. and Mrs. Harvey G. Pearce of North Lake breakfasted with us and Mr. Pearce conducted our morning devotions and preached to us. Under the circumstances we hope he forgave the wandering eyes that left the preacher and looked at the floor.

She shook her head as he left. "I don't want any of his money, Judge—so I can't do that."

And then an idea came to her—an idea so impulsively generous that for the first time in weeks she experienced a thrill of happiness. Here at last was something she could do, something essentially right emerging from a background of so many wrongs.

She reached Monument Square and circled it. She entered the White Star Hotel for the first time since the fateful night of the dance which she had attended as Kirk's guest. She ignored the approving glances of the lobby loungers and tried to appear unaware of the hum of gossip. She went straight to the little door with the gold-lettered inscription:

MISS SONIA HENKEL
Beautician

The room was empty save for the long, slender figure of Babe seated in a white enamel chair and toying aimlessly with a nail-file.

"What do you want?"

They were the direct antithesis of each other, these two girls—one impulsively eager, the other coolly calculating.

Babe Henkel did not rise when Kay entered the room. Her long eyes narrowed and tiny spots of natural color appeared beneath the makeup. The nail-file bent into an arc with additional pressure, and her husky voice was hostile. She said: "What do you want?"

Surprisingly, Kay did not resent the fierce antagonism. She was deeply sorry for Babe, and so she advanced bravely, hazel eyes meeting black ones without animosity.

"I want to talk to you, Miss Henkel. About a personal matter."

"Well, I don't want to talk to you. So get out."

"Please—This is important."

"Well—"

"It's about Kirk Reynolds' estate."

Babe's hands were clasped around the nail-file. Her cheeks were white now, save for her spots of artificial color. Her manner was unyielding. She asked, "What about it?"

Kay was finding the situation difficult. She struggled bravely. "The probate judge says that Kirk left some money in the bank. He said something about it being mine because—well, because—"

"Skip it."

"Anyway, I don't want it."

"Afraid you'll dirty your hands?"

Babe's words cut deep. "That isn't it. You know it isn't. I came here to suggest that it really should go to you."

Babe rose. Her long, shapely hands rested on rounded hips. She leaned forward, eyes blazing with anger.

"What's the big idea? Throwing bones to a dog?"

Suddenly Kay was not nervous. She was more mature, more sure of herself. She spoke with quiet, effective dignity. She said, "I'm sorry you're taking it this way."

"I'll take it any way I please. And get this. You don't like me butting into my affairs."

It was not until Kay reached home that she realized she had forgotten to buy the chintz curtains.

Every Tuesday afternoon seven New York Sunday newspapers are received in Beverly. One copy goes to the White Star Hotel, one to the Elite Barber Shop, one to Mrs. Diana Guinn and three travel, via R. F. D., to plantations near Chicora.

The seventh copy goes to Red Williams' Bon Ton Pool Room.

On this particular Tuesday afternoon the pictorial section fell into the hands of a stalwart young man named Ernie Watts. Mr. Watts, being of limited education, bothered not at all with those sections of the New York paper which were devoted to the printed word, but he reveled in pictures—and today he retired into a corner and turned the pages idly.

Suddenly his feet came down to the floor from the chair upon which they had been perched. Mr. Watts said, very loudly, "Hey Fellers—looka heah!"

Mr. Williams was staring with unusual interest, not untinged by excitement, at a solid page of art photography. These pictures, delicate in tone and texture and distinctive for their composition, were on a page bearing the caption:

CATHEDRAL GARDENS
Photographic Studios
By Christine Maynard

Mr. Watts exclaimed, "Dam! If Jeff Butler wasn't tellin' the truth, that's Kay Forrester shoo' nuff."

Then somebody called, "Yonder she goes now."

All eyes turned toward the window. They caught a brief glimpse of Kay, who was seated beside Barney Hamilton in the front seat of his car. In the rear seat were Margaret Hamilton and Jim Owens, and they were headed east. Supper at the Gardens—and Kay's face was bright and alive and beautiful.

One pool-room water said, with forced humor, "She can't fool us no mo'. We know what she really looks like."

Mr. Ernie Watts was chuckling. He had a distorted sense of humor and a rather reckless courage. He produced a small pocket-knife and commenced to slice into the page of pictures. A howl of protest arose, but Ernie raised his hand. "You all wait," he said, "this'll be funny."

With meticulous care he cut from the paper a particularly impressive photograph—the one in which the beauty of Kay's figure was best revealed. He pasted this on the big plate-glass front window. Then he took the little pot of white paint the one Red Williams used for decorating his inside mirror with such inscriptions as: All Sandwiches—10 cents—and went outside, followed by a gaping and admiring crowd.

Ernie Watts was no lettering artist, but his intentions were unmistakable and his execution clear enough. Over the picture of the Gardens—and of Kay—he daubed a few words:

Home Town Gal Makes Good!
And—How!

This was regarded by the assembled young men as the high-water mark of Beverly humor. They declared vociferously that Ernie was the funniest guy! Always making up jokes, Mr. Watts was exceedingly well pleased with himself and for almost a half-hour he loafed near the front window enjoying the startled expressions which appeared on the countenances of casual pedestrians who paused to glance at this unusual display. Then Mr. Watts drifted toward his home.

In the dining-room of the little house-out-of-Chicora Avenue, young Andy Forrest was finishing an early supper. Mr. Forrest was reading in the living-room. Mrs. Forrest pressed more cold chicken upon her son and declared she was sorry he had undertaken this night-shift. She was quite positive that one hour of sleep at night was worth two hours in the daytime, and seemed assured that Andy's health would eventually be ruined. He laughed at her fears as he rose from the table, stated that he never felt better in his life (a statement which his appearance justified), called good night to his father and walked through the front door and toward town.

When he reached the Bon Ton Pool Room a white-lettered inscription caught his eye. A frown appeared on his forehead and he stepped closer, inspecting the picture with the aid of the corner arc-light.

Andy was a placid sort of a person. His reactions were usually slow and almost never violent. He had known few moments of real ecstasy and fewer of bitter anger.

Even now there was little indication of the deadly fury that boiled within him. His cheeks were white but his step was steady and not too fast. He shoved his broad shoulders through the front door. Pool-games stopped. Within the Bon Ton there was an air of hushed expectancy, and more than a trifle of apprehension.

He did not raise his voice. He made no gestures. But in unmistakable and very profane language he expressed his opinion of the man who had pasted that picture on the window—and of the crowd which had gazed over it and left it there. He flung it at them with his fury. And his scorn.

"Who ever it was is yellow, too," he said, "or he'd admit it."

Nobody moved. Andy said, "Who was it?"

Still no answer.

"I'll find out sooner or later," stated Andy. "And when I do—"

Somebody said, whiningly, "It wasn't me, Andy."

"You wouldn't have the guts to admit it if it was."

"But listen—"

"To hell with the whole gang of you. And I'll tell you one more thing, if anything like that happens again, I'll kill somebody."

One of the hangers-on, more courageous than the rest—perhaps because he stood near the back door—said, "You better not be threatenin' the feller that did that, Andy Forrest."

"Why not?"

"Cause he's mean."

"Yeah? Just tell me who it was and I'll show you how mean he is."

The tall man said, "He'll find out what you called him."

"That suits me fine."

The other man said, "That's what you think. But you better watch out."

Andy left. His face was chalky and he walked swiftly toward the garage. Behind him—in the Bon Ton Pool Room—there was a chorus of sighs. Somebody said, "Are you goin' to tell Ernie Watts what Andy called him?"

The tall man near the door nodded. "I sho' am," he announced. "An' then you'll see somethin'." Ernie Watts don't take that off nobody."

CHAPTER XIII

Kay Forrester was happy. True, she felt a sense of guilt, a furtiveness—as though there was something indecent about her happiness. She told herself—though faintly—that it wasn't right for her to forget, even momentarily, the tragic events of the past few weeks, nor her apprehension about the part which Barney might have played in Kirk's death.

But on this particular Tuesday night it was difficult to be unhappy. The house in Cathedral Gardens was as she had always known it: tranquil and pleasant and millions of miles removed from the narrow prejudices of Beverly. Mrs. Hamilton, quiet and blonde and capable—a perfect hostess, a gracefully maturing woman, an understanding mother and friend—

And after supper—long after supper—when Jim Owens announced that he and Margaret were driving out to Big Oak Plantation, beyond Chicora, Barney and Kay decided to go with them. Mrs. Hamilton begged off, claiming—with the wisdom of understanding motherhood—that she had letters to write, and they piled into Jim's car and headed for Chicora; their route carrying them through Beverly. And because they were short of gas, they stopped at Warner's Sudden Service Garage where Andy was on night-duty.

They got out of the car at the garage and went in search of Kay's brother. They found him lying prostrate beneath a recalcitrant car of a client. There was no one else in the garage and they hauled Andy out from under the automobile and chatted with him and were, altogether, very pleasant and gay.

But other things had been happening at the same time—things which were not so pleasant.

A half-hour since the doors of the Bon Ton Pool Room had swung open—and Mr. Ernie Watts had barged into the smoke-laden atmosphere. His first question was directed at the house in general, and induced a solemn hush. He asked, "Who tore down that pitcher I pasted on the window this afternoon?"

A lanky young gentleman, clad in a blue flannel shirt and decrepit trousers, answered eagerly.

"Andy Forrest tore it down."

"How come?"

"He seen it on the window an' come in. He ripped it right off. An' then he said things."

"What kind of things?"

Pool-games ceased. Cues were racked and Mr. Watts found himself the center of an avid group. The situation appealed to him, since he considered himself a rather tough person. He hooked thumbs through belt-straps and worded his question again. "What sort of things—did Andy Forrest say?"

"Ernie," declared the tall one sadly, "he said terrible things. He called you out of yo' name."

"Me?"

"Well, he didn't say you ezackly, on account of we didn't admit you done it—" but he said the feller which did it was a—was a—

"Was a what?"

"Well, I reckon you can guess what he said. He was mighty het up."

Ernie tried to look grim. "What else did he say?"

"He said some day he was goin' to find out who put that pitcher on the window, an' then he was goin' to beat that feller up."

"Oh! he said that, did he?"

"He sho' did, Ernie. Honest. Of co'se we didn't tell him it was you."

"Why not?"

"We—ell, we didn't aim to git you in no trouble. We didn't know was you scared of him or not."

Mr. Watts rose to the crisis. He announced in a large and booming voice that he wasn't skeered of nobody, an' least of all Andy Forrest. Somebody said, "You better had be, Andy said he was going to mop up with you."

Ernie inquired, loudly, "Where's Andy Forrest at now?"

"He's down to Warner's garage."

"Well, I'm goin' down there an' find out if he's so dawg-gone tough. That's what I'm goin' to do."

They applauded him. They informed him that he was some man. They expressed apprehension for Andy. They said they'd go along and watch the combat. "Ain't goin' to be no fight," sneered Ernie Watts. "This Andy Forrest don't know nothin' about fightin'."

Andy and Kay and Jim and Margaret and Barney were in the little machine-shop at the rear when the front entrance filled with young men. Barney said lightly, "Custom, Andy. Business is pickin' up."

Andy glimpsed the crowd and sensed its hostility. His lips set firmly and his eyes narrowed. A new dignity sat upon him and he spoke quietly. "You all stay right here."

"Something wrong?"

"Yeh. But I can handle it."

Kay put her hand on his arm. She felt suddenly ill—knowing the answer to the question she was about to ask.

"Something about me, Andy?"

"Maybe. But you all ain't got any thing to do with it."

Clad in overalls and a light flannel shirt, Andy moved down the middle of the old warehouse, toward the men who were crowding through the door. Andy said, "What do you want?"

Ernie Watts stepped forward. "I'm kind of cravin' to have a little talk with you, Andy."

"Go ahead."

"You was in the Bon Ton this afternoon, wasn't you?"

"Yeh."

"You tore a pitcher off the window, didn't you?"

"Yeh."

"An' you said you was gonna whip the man that put it there, didn't you?"

"Somebody," said Andy, "seems to have been tellin' you the truth."

Margaret Hamilton had been watching the scene with quiet, observant eyes. She leaned close to Kay and whispered, "Do you know the Sheriff?"

"Yeh. Why?"

"Telephone him. Quick. There's goin' to be trouble."

Kay walked into the machine-shop and whirled the handle of the wall telephone. She got the residence of Sheriff Floyd Griffin and spoke swiftly. Then, compelled by a fascinated horror, she returned to the big outer room.

Andy and Ernie Watts had moved closer to one another. Ernie's friends—a score of them—had surged in through the wide-open door, Barney and Jim Owens stood silent and tense; eyes and lips grim.
