Wheat Loans Available To Washtenaw Farmers

World wheat supplies in 1938-1939, excluding the Soviet Union and China, totaled 5,166,000 bushels. With annual world consumption about 3,900,000,000 bushels, the carry-over on July 1, 1939 amounted to 1,200,000,000 bushels. Wheat farmers had one bushel of wheat begging for market for every three bushels used during the year.

Prospective world wheat supplies for the year beginning July 1, 1939, are estimated at about 5,290,000,000 bushels, or about 120,000,000 bushels above the record supplies of last year.

Prices in foreign markets are depressed by prospects of the largest supplies in history; Liverpool wheat prices have dropped to the lowest level in modern times. In comparison, domestic prices have remained independently strong. The price of No. 2 hard red winter wheat at Kansas City for June 1939 averaged only 6 cents lower than June 1938, while prices at Liverpool averaged 36 cents lower than a year ago.

The comparatively strong wheat prices in the United States have been greatly influenced by the size of the 1939 wheat crop, which is very little above our annual needs for home consumption and exports. The Federal export-aid plan and the wheat loan program also have been strong factors in stabilizing United States prices.

Loans up to 71 cents a bushel are now available on farm-stored wheat to 2468 farmers who planted within their 1939 wheat acreage allotments, according to Harry M. Cole, secretary of the Washtenaw AAA committee. These loans which will be made after the wheat has been in storage for at least thirty days, expire May 1, 1940. The interest rate is 4 per cent.

Wheat under loan can be redeemed by a farmer at any time. His obligation to the government may be met by paying off his loan or delivering his wheat to a local elevator at the end of the loan period. In case a farmer delivers his wheat as payment of his loan, he will receive 7 cents a bushel for his storage.

Ancient Lands

Bakhalin's history begins with the Stone age, relics of which and of the Bronze age are still extant, as seen in houses, bones and implements discovered. The island formerly belonged to the Chinese empire, but early in the Nineteenth century it was annexed by the Japanese, who ceded it to Russia in 1875. By the treaty of Portsmouth, N. H. (1905), following the Russo-Japanese war, the southern portion of the island was ceded to Japan by Russia, which retained the northern portion. The Japanese portion is now known as Karafuto.

Question And Answer Dept.

Problem—What animal is it that has the characteristics of a cow, looks like a cow, but does not give milk? (Answer elsewhere in this department.)

Ques.—Why are Italians called "dago"? And what is the origin of the term?

Ans.—This term applies to the Spanish and Portuguese as well as to the Italians. The word is a corruption of the Spanish proper name "Diego", corresponding to the English "James". It is a slang word used in derision loosely to most dark-skinned people of the white race. American sailors first called the West Indians "Diegos" because so many of them had that name "James", as we have said.

Ques.—Was Jefferson Davis hanged for treason? If so, when and where was the execution?

Ans.—Jefferson Davis was not executed for treason. While he was indicted on that charge by the District of Columbia grand jury, he was not brought to trial after two years of bickering on the part of government and court. He was released on bail, and was included in the General Amnesty Act of Congress passed in 1868.

Ques.—What is the correct way to pronounce "depot"? American, English and French dictionaries differ. And I see the American dictionary gives first and second choice in the pronunciation.

Ans.—We Americans consider Webster's International Dictionary as authority. "Dee-pot" with accent on the first syllable is first choice, which means that it is preferred. High-brows and others who want to be affected will say "day-po".

Ques.—Is it true that doves are known as the symbol of peace because they have no gall?

Ans.—No. That is an old tradition that really has no foundation. Doves have galls the same as any other fowl.

Answer to problem—A calf.

Ques.—What is the meaning of "dail eireann"?

Ans.—"Dail Eireann" is the Irish name of the lower house of the Irish Free State.

Ques.—To what country is the ant-eater a native of? Did it get its name because it eats only ants?

Ans.—The ant-eater is a native of the tropical zone of South America. It is an animal that has no teeth whatsoever and is harmless to man. It lives chiefly on insects of all kinds, but goes after ants mostly because of numerous colonies it can find.

Ques.—Who was Susan—B. Anthony? And what was her middle name?

Ans.—Susan Brownell Anthony was a school teacher, author and lecturer. She espoused the cause of female suffrage about 1867, for which she fought hard and long to make it an amendment to the United States Constitution. She died in 1906 without seeing her life's labor come true.

Ques.—At the Boston "tea party" prior to the Revolution, how much tea was there dumped into the ocean, and what did England do about it?

Ans.—On the night of Dec. 16, 1773, sixty men who attended a meeting in protest against taxation of imports from Great Britain, disguised themselves as Indians, boarded a ship and dumped 842 chests of tea into the ocean. Great Britain did nothing about it except to close the port at Boston.

"I'll kill that guy!" So spoke a friend of mine recently when a driver behind us persistently blew his horn at an intersection.

How many times have you felt the same way? About the most discourteous driving habit people have is to try to "blow others out of their way." This is dangerous as well as discourteous. Frequently drivers become frantic in traffic when this is done, and I know of many accidents that were a direct result of such action.

Public opinion should rise against this type of driver until he realizes that courtesy is the keynote of conduct on our highways.

"It's Smart to Drive Carefully."

Indian Physique

Physically the Indian is not the fine specimen that he is pictured. Generally he is shorter than the white man, and he is apt to be stooped or round-shouldered from carrying packs and paddling canoes. Often he is bowlegged.

Cassidy Lake Events

After October 1 about 600 Michigan NYA youths will begin a course of training in airplanes and airplane engine mechanics. Of the 100 training centers throughout the United States, Michigan will have ten, seven junior units and three senior units. Cassidy Lake will be one of the senior units. Lieutenant Colonel Victor W. Page, NYA associate engineer, visited Cassidy last Wednesday afternoon. Plans are being made for another industrial building for the training of airplane engine mechanics. This building will be 12 feet wider than the present one, and will have a large wing for offices, lecture rooms, and drafting rooms.

Last Sunday afternoon Farband invited Cassidy Lake to a program given by the younger children in the camp. A large group attended the program.

The wood shop made an ultra-streamlined double bank desk to put on exhibition at the Michigan State Fair.

Last Friday the machinery from the machine shop and auto shop was moved to the new industrial building.

Most of the boys were home over the week-end.

Daniel Davis, former educational supervisor at Cassidy, has gone to Dryden high school to teach History and English.

A large group of guests visited Cassidy last Sunday and saw the project.

Last Tuesday the first meeting of the Glee club was held in the library of the new recreational hall. George Booth was elected president; Larue McMillen, vice-president; John Olen, secretary-treasurer, and Harold Parker, librarian. It was decided that each would give twenty cents for music.

Last Saturday Cassidy journeyed over to Farband and lost a double-header. The first game by the score of 11 to 7. Techjma, the starting pitcher, allowed several hits, and was relieved in the fifth inning by Brown. Farband won the second game 17 to 15. Kotyok hurled the second game, with Martel catching.

"D" Group won a game from the counselors, 22 to 2. Techjma pitched for D group, Urpila catching. Fisher, hurled for the counselors, with Van Houten catching.

125 musical instruments were brought into camp last Friday. A band will be organized as soon as possible.

We wish to welcome Henry Levy, Johnny Nemon, and Bertold Hausman to Cassidy Lake.

Mr. Silver of Detroit was a guest last Friday. Mr. Silver brought three new boys to camp.

5,500,000 More Cars
In the year 1940, if the present automobile ownership ratio in the United States of one car to every five persons continues, there will be 5,500,000 more cars. The national resources board estimates that the population will reach 155,333,000 in that year.

How to Display the Flag
"When the flag of the United States is displayed in a manner other than by being flown from a staff, it should be displayed flat, whether indoors or out. When displayed either horizontally or vertically against a wall, the union should be uppermost to the flag's own right, i.e., to the observer's left. When displayed in a window it should be displayed the same way, that is, with the union or blue field to the left of the observer in the street. When displayed over the middle of the street, as between buildings, the flag of the United States should be suspended vertically with the union to the north in an east-and-west street, or to the east, in a north-and-south street."

Children In Court

By Judge Malcolm Hatfield

The Answer to a Boy's Prayer

A farmer brought his young son in to court because he had mysteriously acquired a pony and refused to tell his parents where it had come from. The boy had always wanted a horse of his own and was now ready to face any odds to keep his animal.

It developed that a small band of gypsies in horse drawn carts had passed the farm. After the caravan had disappeared, a pony had come trailing along with a broken halter. The appearance of the pony seemed almost like a miracle, but the boy hesitated to catch the animal. He began to reason, however, that since his parents had told him that gypsies always stole everything they had, the child thought that if this were true, he was justified in taking the pony.

The father readily saw his error in making such accusations against gypsies for it produced false reasoning in the boy. The gypsies in question were located in a nearby village and the boy was given money to purchase the pony from them with the understanding that he would repay his father by working on the farm.

Daily Scene In Any Juvenile Court

An ignorant mother pleaded with a juvenile court judge: "I love my daughter so much, your honor. . . . Just give her another chance and I'll make sure this time that she's a good girl."

Turning to the court psychiatrist the judge said, "Will you kindly explain to this woman why we cannot permit her daughter to remain in her custody?"

This was not an uncommon request; the psychiatrist immediately explained: "While the judge sympathizes with you, he cannot allow sentiment to rule his better judgment when advocating proper treatment which will cure your daughter. If he were to return her to you today, he would be sending her out into society totally unprepared to cope with the problems of life. If he permitted your pleading to sway his judgment, he would sin against society, because probation is not an act of mercy but a means of reclaiming young offenders. The court cannot give you a second chance because you failed in your duty when your daughter was first placed on probation—in your custody."

"That may be so," the mother replied, "but I just can't live without her—I love her so much. I'll commit suicide if you don't send her home with me."

"You should have thought of that," the judge remarked, "when you failed to notify us after your daughter left the state with a truck driver."

Three years later this girl graduated from a recognized business school and now holds a responsible position. The mother, who did not carry out her suicide threat when the court refused to return the child to her custody, now realizes that the court had actually befriended both her daughter and herself.

Poultry Course Opens At M. S. C. On Sept. 11

Opportunity for Michigan poultrymen to learn scientific methods in selecting birds for breeding purposes and to qualify to test their breeding flocks for pullorum disease is announced in the annual poultrymen's course and pullorum testing school to be conducted at Michigan State College, Sept. 11 to 15.

About 40 are expected to enroll for the first three days of the schedule in which culling and the pullorum work are to be offered.

In the disease testing work Drs. H. J. Stafseth and E. S. Weisner of the bacteriology department will be in charge.

The short course in bird selection for breeding is to be conducted by members of the college poultry department. Subjects will include moulting, pigmentation, body and head conformation in relation to egg production. Breed and variety disqualifications of the most popular breeds also are to be pointed out in the course.

In the final two days, Sept. 14 and 15, the conference will attract nearly 200 as it shifts to important poultry problems. Moving pictures, talks and discussions are scheduled.

Outside speakers for the final two days include E. A. Beamer, state commissioner of agriculture, Glen N. Davis, Lansing, director of the state bureau of foods and standards, H. G. F. Hamann, Chicago, regional supervisor of federal poultry and egg grading, Dr. C. A. Brandy, senior poultry geneticist of the newly dedicated federal regional poultry research laboratory at East Lansing, is to describe functions of the laboratory. Dr. N. F. Waters, senior pathologist of the same staff, also is to appear.

Other speakers scheduled Friday, Sept. 15, include J. D. Sykes, poultry coordinator, Washington, D. C.; C. W. Sivert, Chicago, Milk Institute; H. G. Gallagher, Jackson, rural electrification specialist. A banquet is to be held Thursday evening in the Union. One other special session is the annual meeting of the Michigan State Poultry Improvement association at 1:30 p. m. Friday, immediately followed by the annual meeting of the Michigan Record of Performance association.

FLOWER SHOW SEPT. 9-10

C. J. Myers, secretary of the Battle Creek Dahila Club, sends an invitation to his Chelsea friends to attend the annual Battle Creek flower show which will be held at the Kellogg Auditorium on September 9 and 10. It is expected the show will be far larger than ever before.

Housewives No Longer Guess On Egg Quality

After September 28, the housewives of Michigan seeking eggs for delicious meals will no longer be guessing at quality or size, providing she specifies "fresh" rather than "just eggs". Under the provisions of the new egg law, supplemented by rules and regulations issued by Agricultural Commissioner Elmer A. Beamer, egg purchasers will be protected both as to quality and size, the leaders in the poultry industry of the state expressing opinions that to recapture consumer confidence will prove of benefit to the industry as a whole.

The law and supplemental rules and regulations provide, briefly, for placing all bulk lots, for marking of all cartons, and other containers, against the misuse of marked containers and prohibits false advertising of eggs. The first provision, as applying to bulk eggs, provides for marking of all eggs by the display of an 8x11 card, advising the customer if the eggs are "large", "medium", "small", or "peewee" in size and the grade designation, if above Grade C in quality. If no marking as to grade, the housewife will avoid the purchase of such eggs if she desires to use them for table purposes.

There is a tightening of regulations regarding cartons, with the purpose of eliminating all false writings, and cartons provide information necessary for the Department of Agriculture to check infractions of the new law.

Commissioner Beamer pointed out that the "truth in advertising" clause would prove especially beneficial because if eggs are advertised as "strictly fresh", the eggs sold must be "Grade A" eggs, advertised as "fresh" must meet the requirements of "Grade B" eggs. The department is printing a book containing details of the egg laws and description of grades, available by writing Department of Agriculture, Lansing.

Livingstone's Tomb

The marble slab on the tomb of David Livingstone, the explorer, bears the following inscription: "Brought by faithful hands over land and sea; here rests David Livingstone, Missionary, Traveler, Philanthropist. Born March 19, 1813, at Blantyre, Lanarkshire. Died May 4, 1873, at Chitambo's Village, Ilala. For 30 years his life was spent in an unwearying effort to evangelize the native races, to explore the undiscovered secrets, and abolish the desolating slave trade of central Africa, where with his last words he wrote: 'All I can say in my solitude is, May Heaven's rich blessing come down on every one—American, English or Turk—who will help to heal this open sore of the world.'"

Trick With a Purpose

They had a stand of steel tubular scaffolding to seat nearly 12,000 people—the largest ever put up in the country—which swayed alarmingly under certain conditions: for instance, when the whole audience rose to "God Save the King." It was, of course, perfectly safe, and intended to vibrate according to the principles of its special construction. However, says Sir Barry, "we arranged for the band to play one or two false starts for the national anthem, which had the result of making the huge audience arise at different moments instead of loyally all together," and this had considerable damping effect on the vibration."—Humorist (London).

HOWELL—The streets of Pinckney are being used for shooting moving pictures this week and when scenes in the village are completed the company will continue its operations at the Lou Shehan farm east of that village. Pinckney has been selected by a farm machinery company as a typical small village in a farming community and in this setting a commercial picture is to show the conveniences of modern farm equipment over more ancient methods.—County Press.

TECUMSEH—The village of Tecumseh is debt-free. While a crowd, estimated at 15,000, looked on, Mayor Karl M. Schneider, Wednesday afternoon, burned the last bond that the village owed, the ceremony climaxing the greatest fun day this town has witnessed in the 115 years of its existence. The bond-burning ceremony was only a part of the Band Battle and Fun Day that brought a throng of merry-makers, some 500 musicians and at Tecumseh's flying field, a score of airplanes to assist in the dedication of that now $8,000 enterprise.—Herald.

NORTHVILLE—Fire, discovered shortly after 8 p. m. Monday, completely destroyed the secretary's office and the adjoining poultry exhibit building at the Northville Wayne County fair. A second alarm at 11:55 p. m. called firemen to the fairgrounds where a straw fire in the rear of the cattle barn had been discovered. This was quickly brought under control before more than slight damage was done. The afternoon fire burned the electric wires, keeping the village without service for a short period of time until a Detroit Edison crew from Wayne could rush to the scene to make repairs.—Record.

New Tobacco Paper

Cuba will shortly issue postal paper to let the world know that one of the island republic's chief industries is tobacco raising and cigar making. The three initial values of a new regular series will appear in a regular series will appear in July. The one-cent pictures one of the island's original inhabitants, a Siboney Indian, cigar in left hand, against a background of native landscape, and within foliage at right is a cigar with its band adorned with the lone star which is Cuba's national symbol; "Tabaco Habano" (Havana tobacco) is inscribed. The two-cent with the same wording, illustrates a cigar superimposed on a wreath-inclosed hemisphere. On the five-cent are a box of "Tabacos Habanos" in lower right and a tobacco plant in upper left.

New Brunswick Food

European culinary tradition has many provincial strongholds in New Brunswick, where the descendants of Scotch, English, Irish and French settlers have preserved their menus and recipes in the face of Twentieth century standardization. Visitors find French cooking especially well adapted to the orchard and dairy products of farms north of the Maine border and the fish and sea-food along the coast. The simple New Brunswick hospitality is best expressed in cod outlets au fromage, ragout of halibut and lobster, rich pea soup and wild strawberry omelet. It is fare well suited to a summer sports program that includes fresh-water and deep-sea fishing, swimming and boating.

Fractional Currency

Fractional currency, or scrip, was first issued August 1, 1862. This included postal currency. These were last issued February 15, 1876.

Diplomatic Moves
Of Administrations
Show Real Contrast

By A. W. Wilkinson

With the sinking of the British liner Athenia it is consoling to know that the present administration in Washington has some good international lawyers in the State Department and the mistake of the Wilson administration of writing first, and thinking afterwards that led to the destruction of American citizens on the Lusitania will not be repeated.

We seem in this administration to have a Caleb Cushing in the background or from a lawyer's standpoint a Chief Justice Cockburn. In the Lusitania catastrophe the State Department made a terrible mistake. On February 4, 1915 the German government announced to our government that it would sink all enemy vessels in British waters without taking steps to provide for passengers or crews and that it might make a mistake and torpedo neutral vessels.

A mistake against a neutral was a minor matter as all-Americans were crossing in British ships, but the astounding fact was the readiness and intention to sink British merchant boats with Americans on board and without warning.

On February 10, 1915 our government protested against sinking neutral vessels or endangering American lives on neutral boats but said not a word about American lives on British passenger boats. This was the strict accountability in the sinking of the Lusitania.

It was nothing of the kind. So far as Germany was concerned she had claimed and did claim that we in our note conceded she was acting within her rights in sinking an enemy merchant vessel even if Americans were on board. On February 16 Germany restated her intention for the second time to sink British passenger boats with Americans on board. This note was not then answered and another opportunity was lost to put the country right.

Sometime after April 22 the German ambassador to this country drew up and published a notice, dated April 22, addressed to all-Americans travelling to England on English passenger vessels were to be killed on the high seas. This notice was published in the New York daily papers on May 1 early in the day and the Lusitania sailed at 1 o'clock. Our government knew Americans were on board, knew the sailing time was wireless to submarines, and knew that the Germany Embassy had published a notice that they were to be killed, Americans peacefully and lawfully upon the high seas, but it sat helpless, failed to call the ambassador to account, failed to send an actual warning to Germany, failed to denounce the expressed purpose of Germany. This was the worst diplomatic failure in American history.

On May 7 came the awful slaughter of Americans, ruthlessly butchered to make a German holiday. The government then discovered in the explosion of wrath, horror and disgust of the voters that it was contrary to international law for Germany to sink on the high seas a British passenger vessel carrying American passengers.

The Lusitania's sinking settled in international law, for all time, that a merchant vessel carrying neutral passengers cannot be lawfully sunk except first providing for the safety of passengers and crew.

Village 'Flopped' at First

In Greenfield Village, at Dearborn, Mich., the heart of his industrial empire, and in the vast museum that adjoins and complements the village, Henry Ford has gathered the largest, finest and most diverse collection of Americana extant. Conceived by Mr. Ford many years ago as an educational project, the Edison institute (named for his great friend, Thomas A. Edison), which comprises both museum and historic village was opened to the public in June, 1933. Fewer than 400 persons visited it on the opening day; fewer than 12,000 the first month. By the summer of 1935 its fame had so spread—by word of mouth and the increasingly voluminous books and articles about it by collectors, antiquaries, historians and special writers for every type of publication that 4,000 visitors in a day and 60,000 in a month were not unusual attendance figures. More than 350,000 saw it that year.

South Dakota's Black Hills

Many residents of the Black Hills cities think the name is lacking in distinction, and would change it if they could, to strengthen South Dakota's appeal to the tourists.

However, the name "Black Hills" has been identified with the range westward of the city since before the coming of the white man. The Sioux called it "Pa-ha-sa-pa," which means Black Hills in their tongue.

The blackness of the Black Hills consists in the discoloration of the rock outcropping (the first land to emerge on this continent) and the darkness of the surrounding foliage, so that the hills appear quite black from a distance. Even at closer inspection, many of the canyon walls look like rock from chimneys that have seen the smokes of many fires.

Bird Banding History

Bird banding was practiced in the Middle Ages by falconers, who fastened tags to herons and other birds brought down, but not fatally injured, by trained hawks. Bird-banding has become an important part of wildlife research, and in North America a recognized pioneer is Jack Miner, founder of the famous sanctuary near Kingsville, Ont. Miner reports to the National Wildlife federation that in 25 years he has banded and released 20,000 wild geese. What is believed to have been the first complete banding record and return was of a duck banded by Mr. Miner in August, 1909, and shot in South Carolina in January, 1910.

An Echo-Less Dome

One of the few echo-less domes in the world covers the star-studded Planetarium at the New York Museum of Natural History. This famous dome duplicates the bowl of the sky; when a complex lantern slide machine on the floor below it projects images of stars and planets on its surface, an actual night sky is approximated. A lecturer identifies the various constellations with a pointer of light for his listeners. In order to enable the speaker to be heard, however, it was necessary to eliminate the discord and echo which would have been set up by the waves of his voice striking against the rounded surface of the dome. To eliminate the echo in the Planetarium dome, it was lined with mineral wool, a soft, fluffy material that is widely used to insulate the side walls and top floor ceilings of homes. The mineral wool acts like a sound cushion. Sound waves striking it are swallowed up and absorbed, instead of being bounced back to annoy those below.

CHILD OF EVIL

by Octavus Roy Cohen

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Beautiful young Kay Forrester has been employed by Charles Maynard, photographer, to pose for a series of pictures, the background of which will be the famous Cathedral Gardens, famous southern resort. Unknown to them, one Jeff Butler, mean, unscrupulous swamp angel, has a trick to play on the two women. Kay, of necessity, is scantily clad while posing for the camera studies.

CHAPTER II—Kay frequently stays with Mrs. Ruth Hamilton, her son Barney, of whom Kay is very fond, and her daughter, Margaret. Mrs. Hamilton, a remarkable woman, conceived the idea of the Gardens following the death of her husband. One night, after a local dance, Kirk Reynolds, a ne'er-do-well gambler of Beverly, a car comes with that of Harvey Jackson, and during the ensuing argument, the car is run over and kills the young, popular engineer.

CHAPTER III—Kay is completely stunned by the tragedy. Kirk threatens to drag her into the thing if she tells even her father. Turmoil-stricken, she agrees to remain silent. However, the next time she goes out with Barney, he realizes something is wrong. She tries to reassure him, but tells him nothing.

CHAPTER IV—Mrs. Emma Forrest, Kay's mother, looks upon her as being completely righteous. She is firm, positive and demanding. Her father is exactly the opposite, kindly and unassuming. While at home Kirk Reynolds calls for her, and she is forced to go with him despite her father's protests. He tells her the circumstances make it necessary for her to marry him so she cannot be forced to testify against him if he is accused of Jackson's murder.

CHAPTER V—The next time they are together Kay tells Barney she loves him, but is married to Reynolds. She refuses to tell him why she married him, but promises to try to understand. Meanwhile, Miss Sonia (Babe) Henkel, Beverly beauty operator of questionable morals, and intimate friend of Kirk Reynolds, persuades him for marrying Kay, feeling that he has overlooked a responsibility to her.

CHAPTER VI—Jim Owenby, landscape engineer in love with Margaret Hamilton, discusses the affair with her. He is sure Kirk has married Kay so she cannot be brought into the case. But is afraid of what might happen if he and Barney confront Reynolds.

CHAPTER VII—Barney is forced to whip Jeff Butler, discharged from the Gardens for drinking. He is warned that the unscrupulous Jeff will look for a way to even the score, but is not worried over the possibility.

CHAPTER VIII—Sonia Henkel is angered when Kirk tells her he intends to bring Kay to live at the hotel. He thinks this will keep people from talking about the murder of Jackson. He has been linked by gossip to the crime. Reynolds calls Kay, who, despite Barney's protests, can do nothing but agree to accompany him.

CHAPTER IX—When Kay has finished packing, her father and brother, Andy, call at the Gardens to talk to her. They do not know she is going with Kirk. They leave and Reynolds tells to show up. The next morning his body is found in a nearby lagoon. Kay is frightened by the possibility that Barney, Owenby, her father or brother may have killed Kirk.

Babe straightened. She walked across the room and back again. Her lips were pressed into a straight, scarlet line; there were tiny, vertical furrows in her forehead. And

"You mean you'll stick?"

Finally she spoke, as though the mere fact of words might clarify her ideas.

"Listen—there's just exactly one guy in this town who might help out."

"Who?"

She spoke in a tense whisper: "Jeff Butler!"

"He probably won't work out, you know."

"Sure I know. But we got to try him."

"What are you going to suggest to him?"

"I don't know the answer to that one, either. But after I've talked to him a few minutes." She put her hands on Crendon's shoulder.

"What I want you to do is this, Dan: Beat it downstairs and mosey around town. Find out where Jeff Butler lives and how to get there."

Dan rose, though with visible reluctance. "You ain't being very bright, Babe."

"We'll see. And bring Kirk's car back when you come. I'll be ready."

He returned in forty minutes. "Got the dope," he reported. "And I think

I can find the place. Let's go."

They drove east—toward Big Moccasin Swamp. Their road wound into the swamp. At best, it was poor, and eventually they came to the old and untouched section of highway: a road-bed reinforced with sapling trunks. They were jolted and jounced unmercifully on this corduroy road; their wheels skidded in the deep sandy ruts. Dan Crendon gave his attention to the business of driving, and Babe Henkel sat back in her seat, staring into the cool shade under the pines.

Thinking—

It was eerie, desolate country. The swamp weighed upon her, so that she shivered. She said, "God! How can human beings live out here?"

His answer was apparently irrelevant. "Think we'd better call it off."

She shook her head. "No." Then, "I think so. They said this was the only road."

And then they came to the cabin they sought. An old Negro, repairing the ancient harness of a bony mule with a bit of rope informed them that this was the residence of Mr. Jeff Butler, who said—

They glanced uncertainly at one another as they turned from the road and progressed in second across the sandy bit of land between cabin and tool-shed.

Jeff Butler's long figure appeared on the dogtrot which bisected his cabin. His weak gray eyes blinked into the sunlight and he shaded them with a bony hand. When he squinted there were innumerable crow's feet at the corners of his eyes, and he cocked his head at an angle as though better to focus upon his visitors. His high, nasal voice came through the morning air.

"You all lookin' fo' somebody?"

Dan Crendon answered. "We want to see Mr. Jeff Butler."

Jeff thought it over for a moment before answering. Then he said, "I'm Jeff Butler."

They got out of the car and approached the cabin. Jeff watched them impassively, his leathern face expressionless. What he was thinking—or if he was thinking at all—they could not tell. His costume definitely informed, overalls and ragged shirt with sleeves cut off above the elbow. They walked to the house and onto the dogtrot.

"My name is Crendon. This is Miss Henkel."

"Yeh . . . I know."

They stood about awkwardly. Then Babe spoke.

"You here alone, Mr. Butler?"

"Yeh'm." Jeff was neither cordial nor hostile. He simply stood there, rocking slightly on the balls of his overlarge feet.

"This is very important," said Babe. "I want to be sure nobody can overhear us."

Jeff shrugged. "There ain't nobody heahabouts."

"Good!" Babe lowered her voice. She felt that she understood this man and knew how to handle him.

But there was one thing that Babe Henkel did not know. One vitally important thing.

Babe Henkel did not know that she was seeking help from the man who had killed Kirk Reynolds!

Jeff dragged out three comfortable chairs, and they seated themselves. Then Jeff asked, "What you all cravin' to see me about?"

Babe hesitated, but only briefly. "It's about Barney Hamilton."

"Yeh'm." Jeff was noncommittal. "He killed Kirk Reynolds."

Jeff swallowed, so that his Adam's apple bobbed up and down alarmingly. His shrewd, weak eyes narrowed and focused speculatively upon the orchidaceous woman opposite. But he betrayed no emotion.

He merely said, "You reckon?"

"I'm sure of it."

A warm glow suffused Jeff. He had been considerably perturbed since the night he had killed Kirk, and it was pleasing to hear someone declare suspicion of another's guilt. So Jeff merely said, "He could ef, and waited."

Babe talked straight. "You hate Barney Hamilton, don't you?"

"Yeh'm. I reckon I do."

"He beat you up, didn't he?"

"Yeh'm. He never give me no chance. Just hit me when I wasn't lookin'."

"And you'd like to see him, get what's coming to him for killing Mr. Reynolds, wouldn't you?"

"Yeh'm."

"Then," said Babe, "you can help—if you will."

Jeff Butler produced a dirty sack of tobacco and a malodorous pipe. With fingers that were not altogether steady, he tapped the tobacco into the bowl and held a match to it.

Fragments of unpleasant recollection came to him: the fight with Barney Hamilton, his own ignominious beating, the drunken stupor from which he had roused himself the following day with head splitting and pride irreparably injured.

He had turned back to his jug of raw corn liquor and sought the solitude of Big Moccasin Swamp to reflect upon the indignity which had been put upon him. He had brooded for hours, fanning himself into an unreasonable anger against Barney Hamilton. His meager brain—fogged by alcohol—had concentrated upon this single idea: that his honor had been dragged through the muck.

He convinced himself that Cathedral Gardens was a cesspool of iniquity, and that any man who destroyed a portion of it would be doing a fine community service. And so he had cut himself a lightwood knot and had lurched through the swamp that night with the idea of burning the Hamilton home. Of committing arson. Of jeopardizing human life. Of exacting revenge for the beating he had so justifiably suffered the previous day.

Half stupefied with corn liquor, and finding therein a courage which was not natural, keyed to high pitch by the magnitude of the thing he planned, Jeff Butler had skirted the Gardens end and approached the house from the rear. He knew that the family would be in the front of the house, that the Negro servants had left, that the Gardens were not then open to tourists at night.

Walking stealthily, carrying his lightwood knot, making a stern effort to control jagged nerves, reflecting upon the nobility of his enterprise, Jeff Butler had come closer and closer to the house. And suddenly in the darkness, he had collided with a man.

Instinctively he struck at the masculine figure before him. There was the bruising impact of fist on flesh; then a snarl from the man who had been hit. A snarl and a vicious threat. Jeff stumbled away. He dropped his lightwood knot and grabbed for his claspknife. At the touch of his thumb—the long, keen blade sprang open. The figure of the other man came toward him: deadly, menacing, seeking combat with this man who had struck first.

Jeff slashed with his knife. The blade sank home. Scarcely a sound. And not until the body lay still did Jeff Butler realize that he had killed Kirk Reynolds.

The instinct for concealment prompted Jeff to risk detection by dragging Kirk's body to the edge of the lagoon and sliding it into the black, shallow water. He knew he was taking a desperate chance, but that he figured—was better than being recognized en route to his home, and then of having Kirk's body found.

He escaped. He slithered away into the shadows of the night. He lurched back through the swamps to his home in Big Moccasin. And for hours he drank steadily. He was palsied with fear. And all the next day he drank until someone rode by his place and mentioned that Kirk Reynolds had been murdered, and Jeff had asked, "Who done it?"

"Dunno," said his informant, "but folks is sayin' it was Barney Hamilton or either Andy Forrest. It sho' is one hell of a mess."

Babe was surprised—and pleased—with the readiness of Jeff Butler's response. She had hardly anticipated so eager an alliance. She had sought Jeff because the lanky swamp angel was the only person in all Beauregard County whom she knew had reason to hate Barney Hamilton. And she did not know that Jeff was still thinking.

He was thinking that if anything happened to Barney Hamilton, the public would be glad enough to consider the matter closed. If a suspect has been executed for murder, the populace does not interest itself in other suspects. It is willing enough to accept the fact of punishment as proof of guilt. And so Jeff remained willing—though cautious.

Babe caught Dan Crendon's eye. The gambler nodded and Babe took the hint, pressing her advantage. She said, "They'll never do anything to Barney Hamilton for killing Mr. Reynolds, will they?"

"No ma'am. I reckon they won't. It's only us po' folks that gets punished fo' things." Then he added hastily, "Fo' things we never done."

"I know Barney killed him. I know why Kirk went to the Gardens that night. Mr. Dixon knows it, too. But he says that ain't evidence. They're not even going to arrest anybody. And they've told me I've got to leave Beverly."

"How come, ma'am?"

"Because I was a friend of Kirk Reynolds', that's why."

"Shut! They never give nobody a square deal."

Babe's voice was hard but persuasive. "You hate Barney Hamilton, don't you?"

"Yeh'm. I sho' do."

"Well, so do I. And I'm not going to get out of town without doing something about it."

"Yeh'm." A man like him ain't got no right to live. He ought to be lynched."

Jeff's voice trailed off. Three pairs of eyes looked startled; in recognition of the fact that a chance remark had given them their cue. Jeff repeated, "He ought to be lynched."

The idea penetrated. Babe said, "If the law won't punish him, somebody ought." And she was sincere about it. She was convinced that Barney had killed Kirk. And Jeff Butler was thinking—clearly now—

"Was Barney Hamilton to git hung, there wouldn't nobody never suspect me of doin' it."

The situation was sardonically perfect. Jeff was more than willing—he was eager. Babe asked, "Could we?"

Jeff nodded. "Folks heahabouts is mighty het up about things, Miss. They say the Gardens was built by the Devil. Preachers been talkin' 'bout how bad things are. An' we never did crave to have no Dam-yanks comin' down heah killin' our own folks."

Dan Crendon spoke. "Let's talk turkey, Butler. We've plenty of money, and we're willing to spend it. We'll see that you're protected if anything should go wrong. Have you any friends who will help?"

"I reckon so."

"Do you hate Barney Hamilton enough to go in on it?"

"I ain't got no use fo' that feller, mister. Not no use at all."

"Then, will you?"

Jeff pondered. He saw the future, if Barney were lynched. The public would know why . . . that he had been strung up because he had murdered Kirk Reynolds. And if anybody had to be punished for the lynching, it would be these two outlanders. Dan Crendon and Babe Henkel. Folks didn't like them no how.

Jeff said, "I reckon it could be done, ma'am. Us folks heah in the swamp is God-fearin'. We b'lieve in right an' decency. We all the time say it would be an eye fo' an eye . . . and the law ain't aimin' to take no eye fo' somebody killin' Kirk Reynolds."

Babe asked, "Will you do it?"

"Yeh'm."

"Tomorrow night maybe." Jeff blinked. "But you-all both has got to be there."

"I'll be there," said Babe.

Jeff was highly pleased. He who had murdered Kirk Reynolds was about to avenge the death of the man he had killed by directing the lynching of an innocent person. Mr. Butler's sense of humor was not highly developed, but this struck him as irresistibly funny. He was grateful to Babe and to this saturnine person, Crendon. They were furnishing the inspiration, the leadership . . . and would be the victims in case the county became suddenly righteous after the lynching.

CHAPTER XV

Jeff Butler devoted himself, with understandable enthusiasm, to the task of organizing a mob to avenge the murder which he himself had committed.

Mr. Butler recognized the value of approach on ethical grounds though he had never heard the word. He knew that for more than a month the swamp angels had been fanned into a fine frenzy of indignation against the sins which were supposedly attributable to Cathedral Gardens and the owners thereof. He knew that his contemporaries were always responsive to the idea of a moral crusade.

Therefore—starting with the reliable Clem Ross—Mr. Butler spent the next morning and part of the afternoon visiting a meticulously selected list of friends. Men who had grievances against the constituted authorities. Men in whom class hatred was deeply rooted. He drove from cabin to cabin in a battered, old farm-wagon, the wheels of which tilted at crazy angles; and in the back of that wagon was a five-gallon jug of raw corn whiskey. Mr. Butler was shrewd enough to understand that liberal draughts of the yellow fluid gave additional persuasiveness to his exhortations.

The response was invariably satisfactory. Mr. Butler, in each case, approached the matter circuitously; taking great pains to keep himself reasonably sober, though not so sober as to find himself tongue-tied.

There is never too great difficulty in organizing a crusade, nor appreciable trouble in rousing men of limited intelligence to venture forth in an effort to improve the moral tone of the world, particularly when there is no danger attendant upon the enterprise. Jeff Butler was shrewd enough to know how to approach his men, keen enough to understand how much to say and when to stop saying it . . . and so, by four o'clock that afternoon they commenced to gather on the dogtrot of Jeff's house where a meal of corn-bread and sausage cakes and gravy had been prepared by an ancient Negro woman.

Seven men in all: seven men with leathern skins, calloused, overlarge hands, stolid faces, unkempt hair and more-or-less tattered clothes; men who had been born in the swamp and raised there; who tilted tiny tracts of clayey earth when the spirit moved; who had ruined their digestions with too much fresh pork; who fished indifferently for porgie and mullet and eel and sucker and sunfish; who shot—in season—deer, possum, coon, rabbit, squirrel, duck, quail and turkey; who accepted the gray drabness of Big Moccasin Swamp as the only thing they knew; whose private lives were sordid and, on occasion, unethetically immoral . . . but who prayed loudly and frequently and considered themselves very virtuous men indeed.

The assembled crusaders appeared to be startlingly indifferent to the fact that they were about to take human life. All except one little man—a man smaller even than Clem Ross—who had been quaffing sparingly from the jug and whose beady eyes moved furtively from face to face, as though to find an ally in his contemplated desertion. He said, whinnily, "You reckon there ain't no danger, Jeff?"

"Who's a-goin' to know we done it?"

"Somebody's liable to suspect, ain't they?"

"Naaa! Whole county will say Thank You when we finish."

"But Jeff."

"Ain't gittin' skeered, are you?"

"No-o. But if anything went wrong."

"Nothin' ain't goin' wrong."

"S'posin' . . . s'posin' there's trouble?"

"Ain't a-goin' to be no trouble. We got guns an' a rope. We take him out an' string him up. Oh, if things look mean, a gun can go off—kind of accidental—an' Barney Hamilton will be just as dead. Don't the Good Book say 'A life fo' a life'?"

"It sho' do."

"Ain't we been commanded to do this by the preachers?"

"Yeh . . . but they didn't ezactly say nothin' 'bout no lynchin'."

"An' besides," stated Jeff, "if the Sho' it was to git set on making trouble fo' somebody, he'd arrest these city folks. Not us."

"You reckon?"

"I'm sure. We got votes."

"Mob spirit. Courage of numbers. Colossal ignorance and stupid piety. Class hatred. Sense of security. Stimulus of raw whiskey. Righteousness. False logic. Herd instinct. Leadership. Grims hysteria."

Thus mobs have always been created; thus they are aroused to peaks of insensate, homicidal fury. Thus they justify the unjustifiable. And dusk—closing down over Big Moccasin Swamp—cast sinister shadows and evil invitation.

Just before dark an automobile appeared, bumping nervously over the corduroy road. Dan Crendon and Babe Henkel stepped out. Babe was dressed in unobtrusive brown. Her lips were tight and there was high unnatural color in her cheeks.

Babe stared at the swamp angels. But she said nothing, gave no sign of approval or disapproval. It was Dan Crendon who talked. He asked, "Everything ready, Butler?"

"I reckon."

"THOU SHALT NOT KILL"

DRIVE CAREFULLY

School Has Begun-- Watch Out For Children!

STOP THIS SLAUGHTER!
By Fred W. Braun, The Safety Man

The School Bell often means the death knell for some child. For two months or more children have not been seen on their regular day-in and day-out trek to school, and motorists have relaxed from their customary "School Time" driving caution. Now that school has begun again, the watch must be resumed. The streets are crowded with children at certain hours. Many new faces are among them—the little tots just starting to school, many of them unfamiliar with traffic conditions. Keep an extra sharp lookout for these.

Each year automobiles take a toll of child life that is alarming and needless. The schools are doing their part to teach the child care and caution on the streets and it's amazing to see how carefully the children conduct themselves as a result. Motorists can well take a lesson from this training and exercise equal or greater care in driving—especially near schools—and the accident records among school children will take a most gratifying drop!

Atomized Aluminum May Banish Feared Silicosis

Finely atomized aluminum inhaled into the lungs may banish silicosis, dread lung disease contracted by those who work in atmospheres of silica dust, according to a patent (No. 2,186,378) issued to James J. Denny and Wilmet D. Robson of Schumacher, Ont., who are research workers at a large Canadian mine.

The aluminum powder, assert the discoverers of the treatment, neutralizes the silicosis-producing properties of silica. They explain that as a result of experiments it has been "proven that when fine particles of siliceous materials are brought in contact with alkaline fluids, a chemical change in the silica particles takes place. The fluid in the lungs of humans being alkaline, the inhalation of such siliceous particles results in a chemical change in lung cells which produces a toxic condition causing the death of tissue cells and the production of fibrous (scar) tissue, resulting in fibrosis of lung structure."

Inhalation aluminum powder in small amounts of 1 per cent checks this chemical reaction which results in toxic acids that destroy lung cells, it is said.

In factories the aluminum dust would be disseminated by the air-circulating fans. In mines, when blasting rock, cartridges of the pulverized aluminum would be exploded at the same time as the rock-shattering explosive, so that aluminum would be disseminated in the rock dust raised.

The inventors have reported their discovery to the Academy of Medicine at Toronto, it is set forth in the patent.

New Form of Insulin Is Patented by Doctor

Alum-insulin, a new, improved form of insulin for treating diabetes, which is said to be slowly absorbed in the system, thus avoiding shock, and which is stable and non-toxic, has been developed at the Israel-Zion hospital of New York, according to a patent granted to Dr. Lazar Rosenthal and Jonas Kamlet of Brooklyn.

When injected in a diabetic patient, alum-insulin has been found to function as a "supply depot," slowly liberating and yielding substantially constant and uniform amounts of insulin available for absorption by the blood stream. One injection a day is all that is required for treatment of diabetes.

The alum-insulin is simply prepared by adding an aqueous solution of alum to an acid solution or suspension of insulin. The result of the mixture is the formation of a copious precipitate, which is a new compound of alum and insulin. When suspended in water it may be injected in the blood stream.

Tests carried out at the Israel-Zion hospital on diabetic patients indicate the superiority of the alum-insulin over plain insulin and protamine insulin, the patent papers claim.

Black Beetle Has Four Eyes

Many insects have compound eyes or eyes composed of a multiple number of facets. One family of beetles includes species with four eyes. These are the black beetles which float lazily on the still surface of ponds and quiet streams, or, when alarmed, swim dizzily about on the surface of the water in active motion. We call them whirligig beetles but the family name is Gyrinidae, from gyros, a combination of Greek words meaning ring and circle.

The beetles are rather flat and as they float on the surface of the water, one pair of eyes is above the water and one pair is below. It is believed that both adults and larvae feed upon other smaller insects and water creatures. When diving they carry a bubble of air down with them by means of hairs on the body. The adults hibernate in winter and in summer fly freely, frequently being attracted to lights.

Modern Debs Celebrate by Drinking Milk

By PATRICIA LINDSAY
© Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.

A FEW days ago in a popular social column of a leading New York paper this item appeared:

"The pretty, blond debutante, Lesley Bogert of Newport, arrived at a popular night club after midnight last night with a party of friends. The party all drank champagne with the exception of Miss Bogert, who followed the current debutante milk fad!"

And there you have it. Society's younger, pampered darlings have more sense than you would believe! The majority of debutantes, post and present, are in their 'teens and they go to more parties in a week than you and I are likely to attend in a month or two months!

What would happen to the health and beauty of these young girls if they sipped cocktails and highballs at every party?

A large percentage of New York's debutantes have hopes of careers even as you and I. They are not going to jeopardize their chances of a successful career or a good marriage. They protect their beauty by getting plenty of rest—even if they have to sleep in daytime hours—and by carefully watching what they eat and drink.

Rochelle Hudson is just one of Hollywood's younger set who believes in passing up cocktails for more health-giving drinks. On the way to stardom she knows what's best!

Beauty Requires Proper Diet

Young beauty, it is true, can stand a lot more wear and tear than older beauty. Nature does allow a quick rejuvenation of tired tissue, and muscles of the youthful body naturally have greater duration of strength. That is why many young girls feel that they can eat and drink what they desire, and sleep when they want to, without losing any of their fresh beauty.

They rely on strong facial muscles, unstrained tissue, and other youthful assets, to see them through. But woe to those who do not realize that nature demands consideration or she just falls down on her job! Those girls find themselves tired looking at 20, and completely faded by 30 when any American girl should be her most beautiful!

The recent improvement of the enlarged Big Lake migratory bird refuge in Arkansas will considerably aid the migratory bird conservation program along the Mississippi river, says the United States biological survey. Big Lake refuge was originally set aside by executive order of August 2, 1915. Later orders enlarged the refuge until the area reached its present size of 9,379 acres.

Stockholm Restaurant
In dining several stories above the street in Stockholm, Sweden, is the Ny Katerinahiss, a restaurant that hangs "by its toes" beneath a sky bridge. Both the meal and the extraordinary view are worth the small charges on the menu.

Chinchillas Like Vegetables

Chinchillas do practically all their eating early in the evening and during the night. In captivity, therefore, they are usually fed once daily, late in the afternoon. Fresh water should be available to them at all times. Their ordinary food consists mainly of vegetable matter. They are fond of rolled oats, rolled wheat, dried bread, whole corn and wheat-germ meal. They will thrive on these grain foods if an abundance of green food also is given, such as alfalfa hay, lettuce, lawn clippings, dandelions, carrots and any kind of weeds, which they consume readily.

Early Violin History

The first decade of Antonio Stradivari's greatest period dawned with 1700. The Amati tradition was slowly but surely discarded, and while adhering to the 14-inch length, he so developed and arched his model that it assumed "unsurpassable grandeur and symmetry." The years following 1710 undoubtedly ushered in production of some of the finest instruments, and also marked production of some of the finest violoncellos. His methods, preserved from century to century, have become the basis for the art of violin making.

New York Goldfish

On New York's Lower East Side, where there is a constant demand for carp, shipped to the market alive in tank cars, gigantic goldfish are now being sold. The National Wildlife federation reports. These fish are the descendants of fancy aquarium specimens that were released in Lake Michigan after the World's fair in 1893, it is believed. They are especially numerous in Lake Erie, are netted in large quantities by commercial fishermen and closely resemble the common carp.

Natives Like Uniforms

A large business has been built up by an enterprising London firm. They buy discarded uniforms and ship them to the interior of Africa where they are in great demand by the natives. One highly prized article is the monocle. After a native secures part of a uniform he will do anything to get a monocle.

Wins Title for Fifth Time

FOR THE FIFTH consecutive year, Tony Accetta, star of the popular sound motion picture, "Let's Go Fishing", out-distances his rivals to win the coveted title of U. S. professional all-around bait-and-fly-casting champion, taking six firsts and two seconds in a nationwide competition sponsored by the National Association of Scientific Anglers. The annual tournament was held this year at San Francisco. Fishing enthusiasts are being given the benefit of Accetta's wide experience through the medium of the 2-reel film, which has been viewed by nearly three-quarters of a million persons since its availability as a free attraction was announced by the Fisher Body division of General Motors just a few months ago.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD
AUTUMN PICTURES

The changing foliage and pleasant weather of autumn make it an ideal season for outdoor snapshotting—whether in black-and-white or full-color.

AUTUMN, with its bright hues, pleasant weather, and feeling of seasonal change, is one of the most delightful times of the year to be outdoors. And it is a time rich in picture material—a perfect season to load up your camera, climb in the car or put on hiking boots, and go afield with an eye alert for picture chances.

Look for these picture opportunities in harvest scenes . . . on the farms . . . wherever there is rural activity. Watch the skies for cloud formations that will add glory to your landscape shots. As leaves begin to fall, and bonfires are burning, look for atmospheric effects—sunbursts slanting through trees and smoke—for these too will make fine pictures.

If your camera can be loaded with full-color film, by all means plan to take advantage of the brilliant colors as leaves begin to change and look for color-film opportunities in the orchards where bright-colored fruit hangs against the green of trees. If you go on group hikes at this ideal hiking season, see that members of your crowd wear suitable costumes—with bright touches of color that will add appeal to your full-color shots.

In black-and-white shooting, keep a color filter on your lens to bring out the clouds in landscape shots and harvest scenes. Don't confine yourself to general scenes and views—keep an eye open for close-ups that reflect the spirit of the season. Let your pictures show people at work . . . picking fruit, husking corn, perhaps sowing winter cover crops . . . so that your autumn record will really portray this time of year, and its typical activities.

If you picnic at this season—and you should—you'll find the camera an ideal means of recording your outdoor fun. Wherever you go . . . whatever you do . . . picture opportunities are waiting—and the wise snapshotter will try to utilize them all.

PHOTO-TIP: On outings, hikes, a roll of high speed film—the kind for night snapshots. It's four times as fast as regular daylight film, and comes in handy for snaps in late afternoon, or in shady spots such as the picnic grove.
