Plans for Community Fair Near Completion

Plans are nearing completion for the annual Community Fair which will be held at the public school on Friday and Saturday, October 6 and 7. Some changes have been made for the location of exhibits, and it is now planned to have the hobby show in the agricultural room of the high school, with the flower show occupying the kindergarten room. The agricultural products and canned fruits and vegetables will be placed in the auditorium, and the livestock will be on the school grounds.

Those who plan to make entries for the show are requested to notify Thomas Bust, agriculture teacher, not later than Monday, October 2, so that ample space will be provided for placing the exhibits, which must be in place by Friday noon, October 6. As previously announced, displays of agricultural products, canned goods and livestock will be limited to 4-H club and F. F. A. members, with the hobby and flower shows being open to the public. Prizes will be awarded in all divisions.

Some of the superintendents in charge of exhibits will be on hand at all times to see that the displays are not disturbed. The superintendents are:

Cattle—Don Cook, LeRoy Loveland.
Sheep—N. H. Miles, Roland Helm.
Hogs—William Heurion.
Poultry—Loren Koenigster, Arthur Schiller.
Wool—Warren Heim.
Pet Stock—Roderick McDonald.
Grain—Oramel Schiller, Roy Broesamle.
Potatoes—Warren Hoover, Lloyd Collins.
Apples—Ed. Visel.
Vegetables—Robert Schwartzmiller.
Domestic Stock—Mary Sullivan, Joan Walworth.
Hobby—Mrs. P. G. Schaeble.
Flower Show—Mrs. Warren Daniels, Mrs. Kent Walworth.
Canned Fruit—Miss Muzzal.

Few Changes Made In Bird Hunting Laws

Few changes in regulations covering the taking of waterfowl and migratory upland game birds during the approaching season are announced by the Michigan Department of Conservation.

Federal seasons, shooting hours and means by which waterfowl and upland game birds may be taken are practically identical with the 1938 regulations except that bow and arrow may be used this year.

Only changes of importance are the raising of the possession limit on woodcock from four to eight and the lowering of the daily bag and possession limits on geese. This season the daily bag will be four and the possession limit eight. A daily bag of five geese, with 10 in possession, was allowed in 1938.

Daily bag limit on rails, gallinules and snipe has been increased from 10 to 15, with 15 in possession. Daily allowed bag of woodcock is four. Daily bag limit on coots has been increased from 10 to 25 per day on advice of the U. S. Biological Survey. An enormous increase in the species is reported.

The woodcock season has been adjusted to coincide as nearly as possible with the upland game bird season in both the upper and lower peninsulas and the long season allowed in other years on snipe, rails and gallinules has been shortened to coincide with the waterfowl season. The woodcock season in the upper peninsula will be from October 1 to 20, inclusive, and in the lower peninsula the dates are October 15 to 31, inclusive. Other seasons, all dates inclusive, are: Ducks, geese, brant, coot and jacksnipe—October 1 to November 14; rails and gallinules (except coot)—October 1 to November 14.

Hours of legal shooting for ducks, geese, brant and coot are 7 a. m. to 4 p. m. and for jacksnipe, rails and gallinules (except coot) and woodcock are 7 a. m. to sunset. All times are Eastern Standard.

Bag limits for ducks is 10, with 20 as the possession limit, provided that when any daily limit includes canvasback, redhead, buffhead and ruddy ducks, not more than three of any one of these species nor more than three in the aggregate may be taken, and the possession limits of these particular ducks are not more than six of any one kind or six in the aggregate.

31 ENROLLED IN MUSIC SCHOOL
The enrollment of St. Mary School of Music numbers thirty-one. Those students who take thirty-six lessons and give satisfactory work will be awarded a certificate.

The annual Musicale will be held at the end of the scholastic year. This is a source of encouragement and appreciation to the pupils for their interest in the fine arts. Likewise the parents have an opportunity of following the progress of the work made by the other members of the class.

The periods after 3:30 have been set aside for those students not attending St. Mary school.

Highlights Of State's Uniform Traffic Laws

Editor's Note: These are the fifth and sixth of a series of ten articles prepared by the Michigan State Police, high-spotting Michigan's new traffic law. Important changes have been made in customary driving habits. Greater safety—and fewer traffic arrests—will result from a close study of these articles.

Overtaking and Passing
An important section of Michigan's new traffic law from the standpoint of accident prevention regulates the conduct of the motorist overtaking and passing other vehicles.

No vehicle shall be driven to the left side of highway on the approach to the crest of a hill or upon a curve where the driver's view is obstructed to such an extent as to make it unsafe to pass.

Outside of cities and villages the horn must be sounded before passing another vehicle.

As soon as a driver is safely clear of an overtaken vehicle he should return to a normal position as far to the right as possible. Usually only about 12 seconds are required to pass another car.

If the driver ahead has signalled his intention to turn left he must not be passed on the left.

No motor vehicle shall be driven to the left side of a highway when approaching within 100 feet of an intersection or railroad crossing. Michigan State Police point out many lives would be saved annually if this rule was never violated.

Turning

The vehicle moving straight ahead at a prudent speed is rarely the car involved in an accident. But the new Michigan traffic law takes recognition of the fact that when a vehicle is turned from its straight course, the accident risk increases.

The act provides that the right turn be made as in the past. Keep as close as practicable to the right curb or edge of the highway.

The left turn is to be made by entering the intersection in the lane to the right of and nearest the center line and by leaving the intersection in the line to the right of and nearest the center line. In other words, Michigan now has the "inside turn."

At traffic signal locations, vehicles intending to turn left shall permit vehicles bound in the opposite direction to pass the intersection before turning left. This same rule applies at non-signalized intersections.

Before turning, one must signal his intention by extending the hand and arm straight out from and beyond the left side of the vehicle. The next step, the Michigan State Police point out, is to move into the proper lane. If proper signals are indicated by a driver about to change his course, other drivers can handle their cars in accordance with such signals and avoid the accidents so common when confusion and misunderstanding attend a change in course or speed.

BOYCE-LA SOVAGE WEDDING
Miss Dorothy Boyce, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Boyce, 207 West Middle St., became the bride of Stanley La Sovage, son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony La Sovage of Caspian, Mich. on Saturday, September 16, at 2:00 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Lawrence Dorr at the St. Mary's rectory.

The bride wore a costume suit of grogto blue wool crepe with brown accessories and her bouquet was of gardenias. The bridesmaids, Mrs. Merrill Highland, sister of the groom, wore maroon corded satin with colored accessories, and Miss Ruth Boyce, sister of the bride, wore a grape colored suit with matching accessories. Their corsages were tallman roses. The groom was attended by his brother, Walter La Sovage, and the bride's brother, Ellis Boyce.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents for relatives and friends. The bride's cake was a three tiered oblong cake with pink and white floral decorations and topped with a bridegroom. The groom's cake was a two layer ice cream cake with strawberry filling, decorated with roses and the names of the bridal pair. Lighted white tapers in crystal holders were at each end and sprays of pink and white flowers were arranged on the buffet table.

After a wedding trip to Northern Michigan Mr. and Mrs. La Sovage will reside in Chelsea.

Mrs. Merrill Highland, assisted by Ruth Boyce, entertained at a shower in honor of Miss Boyce on August 22.

WILL HOLD BOOSTER NIGHT

Booster Night will be observed by Lafayette Grange on Thursday evening, September 28, at the Grange hall at Lima Center, to which they extend a hearty welcome to the entire community. There will be a program and entertainment for all, followed by pot-luck lunch.

Come one, come all, To the Lima Grange hall, Meet your neighbors at your left, Meet your friends at your right, Lafayette invites you for Booster Night!

Two Local Business Places Burglarized

Burglars entered the A. B. Clark grocery store last Thursday night and took cigarettes valued at about $250, and $25 in cash. The safe was opened and papers were scattered about the floor, the culprits no doubt expecting to find money in the safe. Entrance was through the basement, the thieves going upstairs to the grocery room. Their car was parked at the rear of the store, where the loot was loaded. Sheriff's officers investigated but no clues as to the identity of the robbers have been found.

Harper's Garage was entered on Tuesday night and about $250 worth of merchandise and equipment, and a small amount of cash was taken. The burglars broke a glass from a side door in an effort to gain entrance there, but could not unlock the door. They then climbed up and broke a window but could not get in there, and finally broke almost an entire window frame from the large rear door and opened the door.

The loot included four new tires and tubes, batteries, new heavy duty generator, electric drill, paint gun, reamers, grease guns, etc., in addition to some cash.

Sheriff's officers who investigated Wednesday morning took finger prints, and the tire tracks at the rear of the garage where the car was parked show that it was the same car that was parked at the rear of Clark's grocery when that store was robbed last week.

An intensive search for the vandals is being made by the sheriff's department and it is hoped they will be apprehended at an early date.

Chelsea To Play First Football Game Friday

By Wayne Van Orman
Chelsea's first football game of the season is scheduled for Friday, September 22, at Clinton. Last year Chelsea defeated Clinton in a close game, six to nothing. It is destined to be a close game Friday, the teams being very evenly matched.

During last week's practice there were two unfortunate injuries. Early in the week George Knickerbocker, star guard of Chelsea, received a cracked rib, and a day later Stanley Policht, a likely-looking freshman, back, received a shoulder injury.

Here is a list of the boys who turned out for the first two weeks' practice: Backfield, Schneider, White, A. Policht, West, Holbrook, S. Policht, Gadd, Combs, Slaine, Walz and Kern; on the line there were Winans, Knickerbocker, Schiller, Lindauer, Riemenschneider, Dietle, Visel, Strieter, Kusterer, Lane, Grieb, Niehaus, Parsons, Rademacher, Clark, and Hale.

GRANGE "BOOSTER" MEETING

Cavanaugh Lake and North Sylvan Granges will hold a joint "Booster" meeting Friday night, September 29, at Salem Grove church at 8:00 o'clock. The 4-H Garden club will exhibit from their gardens. Mr. Bust will judge their products, stating his points and reasons.

A one-act comedy entitled "Rosie Lind's Wedding" will be presented. Characters: Rosalind, Miss Irene Wahl; her fiancé, Miss Virginia Lehman; aunt, Ruth Schweinfurth; Hilda (the bad luck prophet), Charibel Hoppe; Rosalind's father, Mrs. C. Wahl. Pot-luck lunch will be served. Every member be a "booster!"

FARMERS' CLUB ELECTIONS

The September meeting of the Western Washtenaw Farmers' club was held on Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Allmendinger, Crooked Lake. A picnic supper was served on the lawn to 43 members, after which the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—T. G. Riemenschneider, Vice-President—Walter Harper, Secretary—Mrs. Evelyn Smith, Treasurer—Henry Musbach. The evening was spent in a social way.

CIRCLE MEETS IN PLYMOUTH

Twenty-three members of the Central Circle of the Methodist church motored to Plymouth on Thursday, where they were entertained at the home of Mrs. Blake Fisher, a former member. A co-operative dinner was served and plans for winter activities were discussed.

Two State Sales Will Aid Livestock Breeders

Two events designed with the cooperation of Michigan State College to spread better livestock breeding animals throughout the state are on the calendars of leading livestock men in Michigan.

September 23 marks first livestock show usage of the newly completed livestock pavilion on the campus at East Lansing. Michigan's first statewide ram show and sale is to be held through sponsorship of the Michigan

Purebred Sheep Breeders' association. At least 800 of the best rams from flocks in the state are to be assembled for grading by G. A. Brown and C. L. Cole of the college animal husbandry department.

Nearly 200 animals are to be selected from the top grades for sale to Michigan flockmasters. This is to precede the annual tour of the ram truck which in other years has carried outstanding breeding animals into various counties in the state to buyers.

Second of the events is to be held at Lapeer on Thursday, October 26. This is to be the first state consignment sale of Michigan's best cattle blue bloods. Sale catalogs are available through R. C. Lott, Lapeer, county agricultural agent and general sale manager.

Fifty animals of the state's best purebred beef breeding herds are to be paraded down the main street of Lapeer. Sale by auction begins at 12:30 p. m., preceded by a cattle judging contest.

Wednesday evening before the sale there is to be a banquet at Lapeer. H. C. Rather, head of the college farm crops department, and G. A. Brown of the animal husbandry department are two of the speakers assigned to the serious portions of the banquet program.

Chairman Gives Results Of Crippled Child Care

Lansing—Hugh E. van de Walker, chairman of the Michigan Crippled Children Commission, in a statement last week made reply to criticisms regarding overdrifts on appropriations for the care of crippled and afflicted children under the state law and pointed to savings amounting to millions of dollars resulting from the rehabilitation of crippled children, who might otherwise have continued as public charges.

"We have been criticized over a long period of time for the amount of money expended for the care of children," said Mr. van de Walker, "but until the present time we have been utterly without control over these expenditures because the legislature, until this year, had seen fit not to confer upon us any authority for the commitment of these children nor any control over the length of time they were allowed to remain under treatment or in hospitals."

"Ten years ago the Crippled Children Commission served notice on the Governor and the State Administrative Board that there was imminent prospect of the funds being over spent because of lack of such control. Until this year the state appropriated money for crippled and afflicted children and provided 83 uncoordinated outlets for spending it. The intention was the best in the world but the method was a direct bid for overdrifts and trouble. In each county the probate judge could commit children when satisfied that the family of the patient could not bear the cost, and the cost of care then became a charge on the state or, in some cases, on the county. There was no centralized control."

"Under the new law commitments are to be cleared in advance of actual treatment through the Commission at Lansing, where the outgo can be measured to the money available."

"I believe we can assure the people of Michigan that there will be no overdrifts against the appropriations this year, even though the money provided and allotted to counties is so small that some counties will not be able to care for even one crippled child, unless the legislature provides further funds."

"For example, Oseoda county has a monthly allotment of $9.09 for the care of crippled children, or a total of $109.08 for the year. The cost of the care of crippled children in that county for 1937-38 was $1,976.80. The situation is quite similar in Roscommon county, whose monthly allotment is $10.13, a total of $121.56 for the year. Expenses there in 1937-38 were $616.64. Montmorency county will receive $14.50 a month, a total of $174.00 for the year, and the total cost there for 1937-38 was $345.05."

"The average cost of care per case was approximately $155.00. Can you tell me how these counties are going to care for more than one child in a year? There is not one county in the State which will receive more than one-half of what was spent in that county during the last fiscal year."

Mr. van de Walker declared that during the life of the Michigan Crippled Children Commission, 8,074 persons have been rehabilitated, that is, physical deficiencies have been corrected and the children have been given vocational training. The latest figures from the Michigan Department of Rehabilitation show that these persons are earning an average of $18.25 per week.

"Taking an even 8,000 rehabilitated persons as the basis of our figures, that would be a total earning for the group of $146,000 per week," continued Mr. van de Walker, "multiply this by four and you will arrive at the total of $584,000 a month. Now again, multiply the $584,000 by 12 and you have a total income for these rehabilitated people of $7,008,000 a year."

"It is said that the average earning period of time in the life of a person is 40 years. I shall not attempt to figure this out, but you can readily see that it would run into a tremendous sum."

"It seems to me that with all the hullabaloo that has been made over the expense incurred incident to the operation of the Commission when these figures are taken into account the State must have made considerable financial gain by having these people taken out of the 'red' and made self-sustaining persons. In addition to this, many of them are married and are supporting families of their own—others who are unmarried are making contribution toward the support of their families, and in some instances are the sole support."

"It has been stated by an eminent hospital authority in this state that it costs approximately $385.00 per year to maintain an individual in one of the institutions of the state. If this is true, and even one-half of this is true, and even one-half of this eight thousand were public charges, as they were before they were found, rehabilitated, educated and taught a trade, the cost of their maintenance before this was done should also be added to their present earnings in order to get a true picture of their status so far as the State is concerned as of today."

DUNDEE—How many Dundee people remember the old Brush car, manufactured in Detroit some thirty years ago? One of their 1910 models came breezing into town on Wednesday under its own power from Maybee where its owner lives. It was a classy two-seater model and boasted a lot of brass trimming. Small tanks for acetylene gas to feed the headlights were carried on the running board.

The parking lights were of "candle" power. The appearance of the car, parked next to a DeLuxe 1939 model, drew a large crowd of spectators. —Reporter.

HOWELL—In a cribbage game played a few evenings ago by Sam Vreeland, Owen Fisher and Wesley Wilson at the Wil-Vree Service Station, Mr. Vreeland held the very rare hand of 28 points, so much hoped for by cribbage players. Vreeland's hand consisted of three five spots, and the ten spot of diamonds, and the fourth five spot was turned on the deck. —County Press.

The bomber's efforts to gas Mason birds have resulted in flat failure. I would like to see someone try out Monty Voss' suggestion of feeding mash; then picking up the intoxicated birds, destroying the starlings and blackbirds and sobering up and releasing the robins and other songbirds. —The Leslie Local-Republican is interested in Mason's fight against starlings and offers the suggestion that the tops be cut out of all the trees. New Apple Spray Is Invented By College

Science at Michigan State College has been invoked over a five year experiment in apple orchards to find a new spray combination which controls the codling moth, prevents wormy apples and yet does not leave a spray residue containing so much arsenic that the apples need washing before going to market.

Nearly 500 orchard owners in the state have been using the new type spray in 1939, helping to prove with other 1939 plot tests by the college that a less harmful spray still protects the crop.

And this is important this year, says Professor Ray Hutson, college entomologist, for crop reports indicate a harvest of more than eight million bushels in Michigan. To wash that many apples would be costly, to have that many wormy would be ruinous.

The secret lies in a combination of nicotine sulphate with bentonite, a type of clay found in large deposits in Wyoming and other states.

Ordinarily, says Professor Hutson, the nicotine sulphate has the immediate power to kill the codling moth but is so volatile and soluble that insufficient residual effect remains. Sufficient amounts of the clay are mixed to force a suitable percentage of the nicotine to remain volatile and soluble while the remainder continues to provide a residual protection over a period of days until growth of the fruit requires another application. Present federal food standards limit the amount of poisonous residue of the arsenic. Over that limit the fruit must be washed. With two of Michigan's most popular varieties, the McIntosh and the Spy, washing induces bruising of the fairly tender apple skin. A heavy arsenical residue also brings blotching of the skin coloring because the residue spots permit only uneven coloring. Burnt foliage often is another effect of the now out-of-date arsenic.

Food Price Boost Called Boon to State Farmers

Attorney General Thomas Read replied Tuesday to the complaint of Detroit's Mayor, Richard Reading, about food profiteering with the following statement:

"We acknowledge your letter of the 7th instant in which you suggest that this office assist in overcoming the alleged practice of food profiteering in Michigan.

"Should there come to your attention any specific and concrete evidence of the existence of conspiracy to create a monopoly in or to fix the prices of any commodity, we know you will bring the facts to our attention. We assure you that on receipt of such evidence we will commence immediate action and do all in our power to enforce the law.

"It is well to bear in mind, however, that it is generally acknowledged that for many years our farmers have been underpaid for their produce. Endeavors have been made to find some way to increase the price of farm commodities to a parity with manufactured goods. It may be that the present crisis will succeed in doing that which numerous economic laws have failed to do. Natural price changes should not be confused with price advances based on criminal conspiracy."

We were invited to the "open house" of the National Park Service Waterloo Project last Sunday at Portage Lake. Several fine talks were given by Fletcher Reynolds, L. Claire Hubert, Walter P. Nickell, C. A. Faquin, Chief, Division of Education, State Conservation Department, acted as master of ceremonies. Mr. Reynolds talked on the subject "Reptiles of the Waterloo Area." Mr. Reynolds is from the Toledo Museum of National History, Toledo, Ohio. The subject of Mr. Hubert's talk was "Birds of the Waterloo Area." He is president of the Michigan Audubon Society. Mr. Nickell, a member of the technical staff of Cranbrook Institute of Science talked on the plants of the Waterloo area in autumn. After the short talks those who were interested took a short hike. Mr. Reynolds took the group interested in reptiles, Mr. Hubert the group interested in birds, and Mr. Nickell those interested in plants. A motor tour was taken over the entire Waterloo area after the hike.

Robert Callahan has obtained a job in the Federal Screw Works plant in Chelsea. Callahan, a former Cassidy youth, is in the drafting department.

Weldon Wilson is going to attend the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor this year. Weldon will take a course in aeronautical engineering.

Due to the lack of transportation, the boys have been hitchhiking to Chelsea on town nights. Reports are that it isn't as bad as it might be.

A pheasant flew through the windshield of Alton Scott's car last Wednesday morning. Mr. Scott, project electrician, was on his way to work when he was startled by something crashing through his windshield. Upon investigation he discovered a full grown pheasant in his car. Mr. Scott was uninjured.

Six boys entered camp last Wednesday. They are Glenn Gallop, Denzil King, Thomas Embury, Marvin Killinger, and Russell Vittitow, all of West Branch, Michigan, and Charles Spicer of Alpena, Mich. They all entered on the same day.

Thursday night, September 21, Cassidy Lake is sponsoring another dance. Music will be furnished by Le Roy Smith and his orchestra from Detroit. There is no admission fee. Everyone is invited.

Monday evening, September 11, C and D groups combined against A and B cabin groups for a game of touch football. The game ended in a 6-6 tie. Tuesday evening they played off the tie. A and B cabin groups won 6-0.

Bob Beecham has left camp to go to college while Bob Goddard has left camp to go to work at Flint.

A steak dinner was enjoyed by the boys in 4-A cabin last Thursday evening, at Lake Winnawana. "Katie" Kitchenmaster and "Cappie" DeMeyere were unable to attend. They were confined to the hospital with colds.

Big Brown Bear
Robert Colhart, shop instructor of the Dunsmuir, Calif., high school, while trout fishing in the middle of the stream had the doubtful thrill of seeing a big brown bear come out of the forest, wade across and eat his entire day's catch of rainbow trout. In the meantime, Colhart transferred himself from the stream to the branches of a nearby tree.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish in this way to thank our friends and neighbors for their many acts of kindness shown us during the sickness and death of our husband and father; also for the beautiful flowers, and Rev. Mumby for his comforting words, and Mr. and Mrs. Niehaus.

Mrs. Geo. Fauser and family, Brothers and Sister.

Carelessness in driving is increasing on our highways. The figures for the first seven months of 1939 show an increase over those for 1938.

Are our law enforcement agencies becoming discouraged? We find police are very anxious to enforce the law, but in many cases we find a growing tendency on the part of our courts to become lenient and lax in enforcing the laws.

Educational agencies are trying their best to bring before the public the need of safe driving and instructions on how to do it. We must have law enforcement agencies and the courts to assist safety people in this work so that we will have a maximum of protection while we are driving or walking.

The newspapers have done a splendid job in calling this to the minds of their readers, and we urge that more stirring editorials be written in regard to the need for strict law enforcement.

Ventriloquism Mechanism
The essential mechanism of ventriloquism consists in taking a full breath, then keeping the muscles of the chest and neck fixed, and speaking with the mouth almost closed, and the lips and lower jaw as motionless as possible while air is very slowly expired through a narrow glottis. No air must escape through the nose.

Children In Court

By Judge Malcolm Hatfield

Getting the Jump on Mother

For many years a mother steadfastly hoped that her daughter would outgrow many undesirable traits she had acquired. But this program of wishing and hoping failed to correct the habits which the child had formed. The result was that by the time this girl reached her sixteenth birthday, her headstrong disposition made life miserable for herself and for the entire family.

Finally, when the daughter took matters into her own hands and remained away from home for days at a time, the mother went to the juvenile court judge and frankly admitted her own inability to cope with the problem.

When brought into court, the girl immediately adopted a defensive position and assumed the attitude that the court "had it in for her." To her intense surprise she accomplished nothing with such tactics. For the first time in her life she was confronted by a situation which could not be circumvented by her usual display of temper or tantrums.

Constantly Repeated Ideas Become Fixed Habits

The case of a certain high school boy definitely proves that no child ever succeeds in any undertaking which lacks a definite purpose.

When this boy was interviewed by the judge, he frankly admitted that he knew that he was violating the law when he borrowed an automobile and took a young lady for a ride. However, he was willing to take a chance, since this was the only means he had of seeing her alone for an hour or so.

When the boy felt sorry that he had brought disgrace on his parents, he did not ask for leniency because he realized that he had made a serious mistake and was prepared to pay for it at the expense of his freedom.

The youth's stolid attitude was directly attributed to his parents, who had continually charged him with being bad and with tauntings that he would eventually land in the reform school. Such accusations had become so firmly fixed in his mind that it was impossible for him to ward off temptations. No matter how he tried, he could not escape the "What's the use?" feeling that seemed to permeate his entire life.

Malnutrition Studied

The board of education of St. Louis has ordered an investigation of malnutrition and other bodily impairments among children living in the central business and industrial district there to determine the connection of health with more than the usual amount of failures throughout the area.

Fishskin Shoes

Patriotic Italian women soon will be wearing shoes made of fishskin to save leather and help the campaign for national self-sufficiency. Displays of these shoes, made from the skin of a certain kind of large fish, were a feature of the fishery fair held recently at Ancona, Italy.

Cause of Red Nose

Vienna doctors, after a study, have concluded that a red nose may indicate unbalanced hormones, and may have nothing to do with drinking. Other causes may be poor circulation, changes in temperature, nervousness or congestion from over-indulgence.

A PEEK THROUGH THE KEYHOLE AT NEXT YEAR

"It appears Buick is going to be the spark plug of the 1940 General Motors lines"

—From a recent issue of the magazine, STERN.

WE think the statement quoted above takes in altogether too much territory.

Everyone knows all General Motors cars are good cars and good values—no one division needs to "spark plug" that great line.

Just the same, it's true that here at Buick we're straining our suspenders to produce something special for 1940.

We've spent, for example, eight millions more for tools, dies and new plant equipment to make sure of that.

We plan to offer you for next year not only our accustomed four Series of cars, but two completely new numbers also.

There'll be something pretty important for you to learn about in connection with making our famed Dynaflex engines even more to be desired.

In every Buick there'll be more swell features of ride and stride than you've got time to count.

So, whether we're "spark plug" or not next year—who cares?

The main thing is, we'll be "in there pitching" with the grandest automobiles you ever saw!

TEACHERS MUST FILE OATHS

Superintendent A. C. Johnson has received a supply of teacher's oath forms from the Superintendent of Public Instruction at Lansing. According to Act 54 of the Public Acts of 1939, all persons holding a Michigan teacher's certificate are required to file an oath of allegiance, properly notarized, in the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction between the dates of September 29 and December 27, 1939, in order to protect the validity of the certificate.

The act applies to teachers in public and parochial schools and also to persons who hold certificates but are not now in the teaching profession.

After the oath is filed, Dr. Eugene B. Elliott, Superintendent of Public Instruction, will send the certificate holder a card certifying the fact that the oath has been filed. Proper forms for filing the oath, which need be filed only once, may also be secured from County Commissioner Julius Haab and Superintendent of Public Instruction Elliott at Lansing.

CHAPTER I

For one of those minutes that are not reckoned as time, but rather as a curious vessel to hold experience, she had stood still on the station platform, rapt and breathless and unmindful of the inquisitive glances that rested on her taut figure. The desire had been acute to fling out her arms to the circle of the mountains that rose from the valley like a prodigiously wrought gold and purple bowl filled with the wine of sundown in May. She had stood, aware of the cool star on the southern crest, and of the silver shallop of the new moon a-sail with its veiled and mystical cargo. Then the words had shaped themselves in silence upon her lips, words she knew you had paused far back in her childhood, waiting for her return: "You beautiful Oh, you beautiful!"

Only a few moments before, she had checked her luggage without giving her name, and the slight narrowing of the old clerk's eyes had brought a twitch of amusement to her mouth. She remembered him well enough, and although it was nine years since he had seen her—she had been but fourteen then—it was evident that some recollection stirred behind the old man's eyes. Perhaps, after all, she might have told him she was Autumn Dean, so that he might be the first to know that the Laird's daughter had come home. He was one of the "relics of Barkerville," as her father used to call them affectionately, those old men who had become as legendary as that long-dimmed field of gold. It would have been fitting to tell him first, this old man who was the essence of everything to which she was returning, this fabulous, romantic northland of her girlhood. But it amused her to keep her secret a little longer, to be to herself alone the daughter of old Jarvis Dean, the Laird of the "Castle of the Norms." That phrase brought an almost unbearable ennui for what had been when she herself had so named her father's house.

The murmur of the valley town, like the warm sound of a human heart within the cool heart of the hills, lay below her now as she made her way quickly up the steep dark street to the house—she remembered in the mountain's cleft, a few new dwellings had appeared, the shade trees had grown, there was a denser thicket of shrubbery flanking the street, but the curious upward climb of the way was unmistakable. There, where the gravel road took a frankish turn as though seeking greater seclusion under the brow of the hill, old Hector Cardigan's cottage peered through half suspiciously as she had remembered it, as though it had made its way from the inner secret of the mountain and were of half a mind to return there. Her heart gave a little leap of delight as she saw the "monkey-puzzle" tree on the tiny front lawn, and the two sinister, meticulously clipped yews on either side of the shell-cracked walk. The ancient wrought-iron lantern hung as of old in the narrow crypt of the porch, but instead of the wanly flickering oil-wick, a dim electric bulb glowed steadily behind the parchment. Old Hector had had his house wired, then.

Her impulse was to go bounding up the steep little steps two at a time, as she had been wont to do, but she reflected quickly that Hector, grown older and more than ever given to solitude, from her father's reports of him, might be startled at such an intrusion. Instead, she ran lightly up the flight to the carved, narrow, oak door, and clutched her handbag to still the excitement of her heart as she lifted the heavy brass knocker. She remembered that the knocker had been level with her eyes when she was a reedy kid of fourteen.

That was Hector's step now, quick and military still in its precision. She could remember that long polished panel of hardwood floor of the hall within, polished to mirror luster by Hector himself, as no servant could do it, had the old man ever been able to afford a servant. The door opened quickly, boldly, in its old manner of brusque inquiry. And there stood Hector, erect and fiery, fastidiously groomed as of old, severely dinner-jacketed, his gray hair grayer now but combed as ever with sculptured nicety. He stood very little above her own height, so that it seemed to her that she was smiling on a level with his eyes.

As she waited for his recognition, a curious thing was happening. She had snatched off her hat and stood with her head flung back, her hair shaken vividly about her cheeks. Hector's eyes were fastened upon her face with a look that grew from strange, incredulous amazement to something verging upon pain. His hand reached uncertainly out toward her, as though he expected her to vanish before his eyes, then his fingers grasped the door-knob until the knuckles gleamed white. His face had become drained of all color, and although she saw that his hand leaned heavily on the door knob for support, Autumn laughed gayly, stepped over the threshold, and flung her arms about his neck.

"Hector! Hector! Don't you know me, you old goose?" she demanded, shaking his shoulders as she smiled up at him.

"Forgive me, child," he said.

"You—you startled me. I hadn't expected—but here, come inside. My manners are abominable."

They proceeded into the low, shadowed living room, Autumn pausing just within the door to let her eyes sweep over the place. She wanted to make sure that the character of this extraordinary room had not changed. No, except for an added piece or two, it was the same as when she had last seen it—a haunting medley of the centuries, the oak walls dim and secret with their tapestries, the Louis XIV Gobelins, the fragile and priceless Renaissance grotesque with its quaint assembly vanishing irretrievably into the weave, vanishing back into the dead hands of the weaver, and the bold Francois Spierinx of Delft with its heraldic challenging time. Autumn's eyes moved quickly over the room, resting for a fleeting moment of delight upon one dearly remembered treasure after another, until Hector's voice, from where he stood near the fireplace, recalled her.

"But—when did you get back, Autumn?" he asked, his voice firm now, with its old courtly infection.

"I've just come. I walked right up here from the station."

"But your father didn't tell me you were coming home."

Autumn tossed her hat and purse on the low Spanish settle, ruffled her fingers through her hair, and came over and stood beside him, her feet spread boyishly apart, her hands clasped behind her back. She looked at Hector with grave amusement.

"He isn't expecting me," she said lightly.

Hector started. Autumn looked at him sideways, frowning a little. Then he began fingering the black silk guard of his glasses, his lips tightening.

"He isn't expecting you? You mean he doesn't know you are coming home?"

"Just so," Autumn told him. "And I haven't phoned the ranch, because I want to surprise him."

Hector turned slowly away. "H-m-m, yes," he said, thoughtfully. "It will be a surprise to him."

"Besides, you old fraud, I wanted to surprise you. Think of it, Hector, it's nine years since you saw me last."

"Nine years! It seems impossible. We were getting older. I'm approaching my dotage, child. But you—you are eternal youth itself. You have the heritage of your mother."

Autumn's laugh pealed out deliciously. "But not her beauty, Hector."

"That was what startled me when I saw you at the door. You are her image."

He moved to the couch that faced the fireplace, seated himself, and clasped his hands between his knees. Autumn turned and looked down upon him, and a wave of swift pity for him swept over her, obliterating for a moment the bewilderment and dismay that were growing upon her at the strangeness of his reception. Time, the merciless invader, was storming the fine citadel of that gallant old soldier, and already had taken an intimation of the ruin that was to be. Autumn went quickly and seated herself beside him, taking his brown hand in her own.

"Is this all the welcome you give me?" she asked. "You look as if I had brought you the plague. What's wrong, Hector?"

He looked at her thoughtfully, then got to his feet.

"There's nothing wrong, my dear. It's just the surprise, I suppose. It has knocked me quite silly. Here—let me get you some tea."

"No, no, Hector," Autumn protested. "I had dinner just before I stepped off the train. Besides, I must hurry along before it gets too dark."

"Yes, yes, of course. There'll be time enough for visiting later on."

"Plenty," Autumn declared. "I'm coming in to spend a whole day with you just as soon as I get settled at home."

"How are you going out?"

Autumn patted one of his brown hands affectionately. "I'm going to ride one of your hunters," she told him. "It wouldn't look right for the daughter of Jarvis Dean to go home in an automobile, would it?" Hector smiled. "One of my hunters? I have only one left, my dear, but you are welcome. Are you going to ride in those clothes?"

"No. I'll telephone for my luggage. I have a riding habit handy in a bag. You see, I had it all planned. Where is the telephone, Hector? Isn't that frightfully stupid? It's the only thing about the house I have forgotten."

Hector pointed to a low Japanese gilt and black lacquer screen that stood below a Seventeenth century brass lantern clock with single hand. "Back there," he said.

When she had arranged for the immediate transfer of her luggage to Hector Cardigan's house, she returned to the fireplace. Hector had laid another log on the fire, and the pitch was snapping spiritedly. He had also brought out a remarkably cut old English decanter with a ruby glass snake wound about the neck. Two fragile wine glasses stood on the tray beside it, and the liquid within them glowed with a fixed and inviolate coruscation. On a Meissen porcelain plate were tiny frosted cakes and shortbreads.

"O, Hector! You sweet!" Autumn cried, kneeling before the wine to look at the light flaming through it. "I take back all I said about my welcome." She seated herself upon a battered hassock and took the glass he offered her. She sipped the wine and reached for one of the tempting little cakes.

"Chablis, isn't it?" she remarked. Hector smiled at her over his glass, and it seemed to her that he was more his old self again; the surprising and eternally enigmatic old self that she had known, Puck and Pan and Centaur, all in one, and sometimes Ariel and sometimes Caliban—all the naive and grotesque and impish legendary beings she knew.

"Your education is complete, I see," he laughed. Autumn laughed

"Your education is complete, I see."

too, and ate another cake in one mouthful.

"Oh, when I went over," she said, "they were teaching children to drink so that they would stop begging for another war." Her mood changed then and she frowned down at the last drop that lay in the crystal hollow of the glass. "Seriously, though, that's why I wanted to come home, Hector. I had to get away from the constant reliving of a nightmare that my generation missed."

"I know—I know," Hector remarked. "The only real thing in the pampered life of Aunt Flo was the loss of her son—my cousin Frederick, you know. I don't know whether there is such a word or not—where ought to be—but Aunt Flo simply voluptuated in her loss. I couldn't live with it any longer."

"It isn't the same back home as—"

"Oh, I don't mean they are all like Aunt Flo," she hastened to add. "But there is something smothery about England now, with all those hungry-eyed women stepping on each other's toes. Do you know what I mean?"

"Yes," Hector admitted. "I think I do. You wanted room to breathe in. Well, you are right, too. Only—your father isn't the same man either. You will find him very difficult at times. He rarely comes to see me any more—and you know how devoted I have been to him."

"Father has always been difficult, Hector. But I've always loved him, nevertheless—and he has always loved me."

"Certainly. He loves the ground you walk on. I think, perhaps, that was one of the reasons he didn't want you to come back."

"Listen, Hector," Autumn said, shaking a finger at him. "I know father wanted me to stay in England. He wanted me to marry and settle down over there. Why?"

Hector coughed lightly and took another sip from his glass. "If Jarvis has any reason for not wanting you back here," he said finally, "he'll probably tell you what it is better than I could, my dear."

Though, for that matter, I am inclined to agree with him in this, I think."

"What do you mean by that, Hector?"

"I mean—you should not have come home," Hector said abruptly. Autumn got impatiently to her feet and stood before him, her hands on her hips. "Now, see here, Hector," she exclaimed, "are you going to be as unreasonable as father has been about my coming back where I belong? He has been perfectly ridiculous about it all this time. I've been fed up with Europe for two years. I wanted to come back when I was through college—and I certainly should have come if it had not been for Aunt Flo's illness. If I ever see a French watering place again I'll explode!"

Old Hector rubbed his palms nervously together. "I know, Autumn, I know. But—your father is not a happy man, my dear. He—he is given to moods of melancholy—of brooding. Moreover, he has never considered the ranch a proper environment for you. I'm afraid it will distress him very much that you have come back."

Autumn flung her head impetuously upward. "That is simple nonsense!" she declared. "Is Monte Carlo my proper environment? Is Mayfair? She reached for a cigarette on the low lacquered table beside the couch, lit it and waved it triumphantly. "I've put up with erudition and polishing and attempts to marry me off to anemic noblemen until I'm sick of it, and now I'm home. I'm home because I belong here—here in British Columbia—here in the Upper Country—here between the Rockies and the Cascades. Doesn't that sound dramatic? And here I'm going to stick!"

"You'll probably stick, as you say," Hector commented. "You've got enough of Jarvis Dean in you for that. And if you hadn't—there's still the blood of Millicent Odell. If you don't get what you want from sheer stubbornness, you'll get it because no one will have the heart to refuse you."

"A very dangerous combination, eh, Hector?" Autumn observed. She refused a second glass of wine, although Hector filled his own more.

She moved to the mantel and examined one or two of the curios upon it, amulets, ancient dice, an Italian dagger with a jeweled hilt, a string of Inca beads hanging down over the Dutch tiles. Some of the things she could recall, others had been acquired by Hector in his travels since she had last seen him. Presently her eyes fell upon a strange brass object with a strap attached to its top. She picked it up. Instantly a sound of unutterable purity pierced the room with a thin, thrilling resonance that seemed to drift on and on, beyond the confines of the bedecked walls. Startled and entranced with the beauty of the sound, Autumn turned to Hector and saw that he had risen and was coming toward her.

"I picked that up in Spain on a walking trip I took one year through the mountains," he told her. "It is a Basque bell—a Basque sheep-bell."

"I've never heard anything so lovely!" Autumn exclaimed, turning the bell up to examine it more carefully.

Hector looked down at it and whimsical wistfulness came into his face. "I should like you to have it, Autumn," he said. "When you come in again, take it out with you. There is no one else I would give it to, my dear—not even your father."

She looked up at him in quick, pleased surprise, holding the bell so that it chimed again, light and clear as the echo of a fay song in some unearthly place. "Do you really mean that, Hector?" she said softly. "I know how you hate to part with your treasures—and this one—"

"It's very old," Hector murmured, and his eyes narrowed with a strange absent dimness, as though he were looking into the remote past where his spirit abode in a brilliant reality. "Some shepherd—in the Pyrenees, perhaps—heard that bell fifty years ago—when your grandmother was a girl here in these hills, just over from Ireland. When your grandmother was breaking hearts up and down the Okanagan, my dear, some shepherd boy was listening to that plaintive note on some mountain-side—on the other side of the world."

"What a lovely thought," Autumn observed eagerly. "But was Grandmother Odell such a heart-breaker, Hector? I have never been told much about her. For that matter, they have never spoken much of mother, either—and I have always wanted to know—" Her voice faltered and she shrugged her shoulders as if to dismiss the subject.

Hector took the bell from her hands and held it thoughtfully on his palm, stroking the satiny texture of its semi-spherical upper half with his eloquent fingers. "The Odell women," he said slowly, "had small respect for hearts."

Autumn leaned back, resting her elbows on the mantelpiece behind her, and glanced up at him diffidently from beneath her lashes. "Even mother?" she asked.

He swung the bell just perceptibly, and the eerie thrum of it, a vanishing wraith of sound, caught at her throat. It might be the mingled tears and laughter of a ghost heard from infinity. Hector did not reply at once.

"You knew mother very well, didn't you?" she prompted him. "She couldn't have been more than ten years younger than you."

"Millicent Odell—" It might have been the wine he had had, Autumn thought, but it seemed to her that for an instant he was quite oblivious of her presence. His narrow, brown face with its myriad fine-veins glowed as though he were listening ardently to the music of that name, the name of her mother, twenty years dead. Then he glanced down at the bell once more. "I have fashioned a little conceit about this bell, Autumn. Perhaps you would like to know what it is."

"Do tell me, Hector."

He smiled boyishly. "It is like the Odell women. Its beauty casts a spell over a vast distance. Its music echoes and re-echoes into eternity—and haunts you forever. It is as an elfin soul, my dear, and its power is blackest magic."

Autumn clasped her hands and laughed with delight, although an incomprehensible tremor stirred within her. "You were meant to be a poet, Hector—not a collector of antiques," she said gayly.

The doorbell rang and Hector went quickly to answer it. Autumn's luggage had arrived.

Autumn Dean reined in where the road curved up to a steep incline above the town, and looked back down upon the diamond-studded valley she had left. When she was a little girl she had thought of the town of Kamloops by night as a jeweled brooch lying on a bed of black velvet, the river a ribbon of dim silver festooned about it.

The miles slipped away behind her, and now she recognized the features of her father's land, the beginning of those thirty thousand acres that led sheer up into the dusk of the southern mountains, and spread fan-wise to the river on the north. There on one side of the trail was the somber promontory now, that jutted out like a monk's cowl above the abandoned copper mine, and on her right the grassy trail that led through ghost-grass hummocks of sage up a steep hillside and down again to the sheltered valley where the lambing corrals were. She paused to listen for a moment, and across the dim solitude came the lonely tinkle of a sheep bell. The sound carried her poignantly back to her childhood, when she had ridden her pony on spring evenings such as this—the Laird's disapproval notwithstanding—to visit old Absalom Peak, the faithful herder, where he tended the lambing ewes. At the sweet thrust of memory her eyes filled with tears. She shook the reins and followed the trail westward along the valley.

Here, at last, was the little schoolhouse, with its pile of seasoned firewood, its pathetic little outhouses, and its elfin host of memories that lurked in every shadow and danced before her under the pale light of the stars. What had become of that troop of boys and girls with whom she had romped in the days when she herself had been one of them? The Careys and the Cornwalls, the Lloyds and the Murrays? Just there, under that dark pine, young Larry Sutherland had washed her face with a handful of the first snow of the year. And here young Sandy Cameron had fought with Bruce Landor who had elected himself her champion—though she had been a mere slip of eight or nine years at the time, and Bruce had been five years her senior—Bruce Landor, whose father had shot himself down there in the little ravine that ran through the northern end of the Dean acres. She had often thought of Bruce, the wistful-eyed young dreamer, always a little sad because of the tragedy that had befallen him, and of his spirited mother, who had struggled along somehow and ruled the Landor ranch with a fierce will that had won the respect of the countryside. It was ten years since he had bade her a rather lofty and grown-up good-by when—at eighteen, he went away to college. She had been thirteen then, and had wept despondent, little-girl tears at the departure of her hero who had outgrown her. Before his return for the summer vacation, she herself had been despatched, protesting, to England.

Three miles beyond, she came to the massive pillars of field stone that stood at the entrance to the Castle of the Norms. The name still suited the place as it had done when she was twelve years old, her fancy steeped in ancient lore. Her father had been pleased with the name she had chosen for that odd pile with its curious gray stone turrets and parapets, the like of which had probably never adorned another ranch house in all the world. Uncharitable people in the community had called it "Old Dean's Folly," but Autumn had adored it from her earliest memory.

She checked her horse to a walk as she rode up the gravel approach between the tall pines. A light was discernible now in the east tower of the Castle. Her father's study was there, and he himself would probably be seated now in his deep leather chair, lost to his surroundings in the pages of one of his old and beloved books. Except for the subdued glow of the light in the spacious hall, the house was in darkness. Old Hannah, the housekeeper, who had been Autumn's nurse, would have gone to bed long since.

Now from within the house a dog barked—once, twice, a deep-throated and ominous sound. Autumn hurried up the steps and glanced through the heavy glass panel of the door. Her father's great Irish wolfhound was coming down the staircase with his loping, magnificent gait. She tried the door, found it unlocked, and entered.

Old Jarvis Dean, his heavy briar stick in his hand, was coming slowly down behind the dog. At the first sight of her he let his cane fall and supported himself with one hand on the shining black balustrade. The other moved slowly across his brows.

Autumn rushed up the staircase. "Hello, Da!" she cried, and flung her arms about his stooping form.

"Don't faint, darling. It's really me! Down, Pat, you jealous old thing!" "God bless my soul!" Jarvis exclaimed. "What's this, what's this?"

"I tell you, it's me, darling!" Her father placed an arm tremblingly about her and held her for a moment without speaking. Presently she heard his voice, a voice almost a whisper, the defenseless voice of a sleepwalker.

"Autumn—my little Autumn!" She thrust him back from her, laughing with excitement. "Oh, Daddy—let me look at you!"

He stooped and picked up his cane, then turned and took a couple of steps up the stairway. His great

"I tell you it's me, darling!"

voice resounded in the hall. "Hannah! Hannah! Come down!" He beat his cane sharply on the stairs. "Hannah, I say!"

The old woman's voice responded from above, breathless from excitement. "I'm coming, I'm coming. What in the world has happened?"

"Come down, you underhead, and see for yourself!" He turned to Autumn and put his fingers to his lips to warn her against crying out. Then he began walking uncertainly down the stairs, Autumn moving before him, her voice vivid and young in the austere silence of the lofty hall.

"O, Da! I can't tell you what it means to be home again." She turned upon him suddenly and threw her arms about him once more. "I didn't say a word to you about my coming, darling, because I—I didn't want you to know. I wanted to surprise you."

He looked at her sternly. "Don't lie to me, you young brat," he warned her, with enough humor in his eyes to take the sting from his words. "You didn't tell me about it because you knew I'd forbid it. That's why."

Autumn kissed him and laughed. "What difference does it make, you dear rebel? We belong together—and we belong here. That ought to be reason enough for anything."

"Reason? Reason? There is no reason in anything you do. You're a woman, and the devil himself is in women! But go into the room there and get some light on you so I can see what you look like."

Autumn turned from him and skipped toward the doorway that opened into the drawing room. She pushed the button on the wall and the long room became flooded with a pleasant amber radiance. Autumn clasped her hands as she stood still for a moment, her senses possessing the room, making its simple harmonies her own again.

Jarvis seated himself before the white marble fireplace, where a pink glow glimmered in the violet-colored ash. From a tiny, lemon-hued satin settee opposite, Autumn looked at him. His long, bony hands were clasped above his cane, his leonine head jutted forward, and there was in his eyes a naked look of—was it fear or mere perplexity? Autumn did not know.

A hideous feeling came upon her that this was not her father at all who sat facing her, but some grotesque old changeling with a demon-ridden soul. His eyes burned as he searched her face, his massive hands clenching the arms of his chair.

A tremor took possession of her so that her shoulders quivered involuntarily. She twined her fingers tightly together and bent forward.

"Tell me—what is wrong?" she said softly.

The old man's body seemed to sag, exhausted, into the depths of his chair. "Your mother's hair—burnished as October," he said absently, then lifted his head slowly. "Nothing is wrong, my child, nothing."

The sound of Hannah's footfall on the stairway broke the moment's spell and Autumn got up as the old housekeeper hurried nervously into the room.

"Hannah!"

The woman halted suddenly, her head clutched at her breast. She eyed Autumn incredulously, then drew her breath in a quick gasp. Autumn hurried toward her and put her arms about the bowed shoulders. "Hannah—don't you know me?"

The only immediate response was a sob that shook the old woman's frame as she clung to Autumn.

"My baby—my baby!" Hannah said at last, her voice thin and broken and incredibly old.

Autumn drew her close and soothed her with little words of endearment remembered from her childhood. "Hannah, Hannah! Little old Murzy-wurzy!"

Jarvis Dean drew himself up ponderously in his chair. "Come, now!" he thundered. "There'll be time enough for that! Put the kettle on the fire and make us a pot of tea."

Hannah drew away and Autumn patted her affectionately on the shoulder. "Yes, Hannah, make us some tea. We'll have days and days to talk. I'm never going to leave home again."

The old woman pattered away to the kitchen and Autumn sat down again on the satin settee.

"So you're counting on staying here," her father said.

"If I have to turn sheep and run with the flock, Da," Autumn laughed.

Jarvis Dean's head sank forward on his chest. "Were you not well enough off with your aunt, then?" he asked her.

"I have nothing against Aunt Flo, Da. She has always been lovely to me."

"What brings you home, then?" Jarvis Dean's voice was deep, his breathing labored.

"I'm fed up with all that meaningless existence—and this is my home." Autumn's voice quivered and broke at the realization of the fantastic heartlessness of the situation. Bewildered and appalled and crushed, she struggled to regain control of her voice. "Do you mean—you really don't want me here, Da?" she asked.

The old man shifted uneasily in his chair. "Here? What kind of a place is this for a girl like you?" he demanded.

Autumn's eyes darted helplessly from one object in the room to another, as though she were seeking refuge from the overwhelming and cruel stupefaction that had come upon her. "Why—whatever can you have against my being here—I can't believe—"

Her father held up his hand with a peremptory gesture. "What did I tell you in England last Christmas when you wanted to come back here with me?"

"I never believed that you really meant that I couldn't come back. Why, it's—it's the most unreasonable thing I've ever heard of. We've always had such wonderful times together and I—"

Jarvis Dean rose abruptly to his great height and the anguish in his face wrung her heart in amazement and mystification. "Let's talk no more about it," he said with an effort. "You have come and you will have to stay—for a decent length of time, anyhow—or people will have something to wag their damned silly tongues about. I'll not have them talking about the Deans."

A change came over him, so swift and brilliant that the horrible thought swept through Autumn that perhaps he had, for the agonizing period just past, been mentally deranged. His head, with its smooth waves of white hair, rose proudly, a half mocking smile played about his stern mouth, but his eyes were wistful as he came toward Autumn with his hands outstretched.

She got up quickly and put her arms about him, beating back the tears that threatened. "Poor old Da!" she said softly. "I should never have come if I—"

"Enough of that! You are here. He turned from her. "What's keeping you, Hannah?"

"I'm coming directly," Hannah replied querulously.

The old man shook his head slowly. "She's about done, that one," he muttered. "She's more misery to me than she is help, but there's nothing I can do about it. I can't kick the old underhead out at her time-of-life."

"The more need you'll have for me about the place, Da," Autumn observed archly.

Her father turned on her brusquely. "It'd be a poor creature that couldn't get along better without either of you," he told her.

"That'll be enough of that fool talk for this night," said old Hannah as she entered the room and came toward them bearing her loaded tray. Autumn laughed and placed a small table before the fireplace as her father sank once more into his chair.

Chinese-Japanese Arts

Have Same Backgrounds

Most of what has been said of Japanese art applies also to Chinese art. There is greater use of stone in architecture and sculpture. There is more that is decorative and less that is decorative in Chinese art. But in their idealism, symbolism, indifference to human figure, and preference for two objects taken from nature, the two national systems of art are much alike. The conventionalized Chinese art is perhaps even more pronounced. The high place given to calligraphy as an art is an excellent illustration. In both China and Japan often specimens of fine writing hung upon the walls of rooms for purposes of decoration. In fact, in the six arts recognized by the Chinese—namely, ceremonial, music, archery, charioteering, and painting and mathematics—writing, sculpture are included under writing. This is reminiscent of the fact that the written characters itself used were derived more or less directly from pictographs.

Sky Writing

Sky writing was invented in the World War as a signaling method.

MORTGAGE SALE

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of money secured by a mortgage dated the 3rd day of March, A. D. 1930, executed by John Haselwerdt and Elizabeth Haselwerdt, his wife, of the Township of Sharon, County of Washtenaw, State of Michigan, to The Prudential Insurance Company of America, which mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Washtenaw County, Michigan, in Liber 168 of Mortgages, on Page 609 at 9:40 o'clock A. M. on March 8, 1930.

And Whereas, by the terms of said mortgage, it is provided that in case default be made in the payment of any installment of principal or of the interest, taxes, assessments or insurance or any part thereof on any day whereon the same is made payable, and should the same remain due and unpaid for the space of 30 days, then and thereupon, the principal sum of said mortgage, together with all interest, taxes, assessments and insurance paid, shall, at the option of the mortgagee, become and be due and payable forthwith, and default having been made in the payment of the interest and taxes provided in said mortgage, which default has continued for more than thirty days, the said mortgagee do hereby exercise its option to declare the principal sum of said mortgage and all arrears of interest and taxes due and payable.

And Whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage is the sum of $4500 principal and interest of $245.13 to July 20, 1939, and the sum of $58.07 taxes and $36.00 as an attorney fee stipulated for in said mortgage, and the whole amount claimed to be unpaid on said mortgage is the sum of $4803.20, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted at law to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder at the south front door of the court house in the city of Ann Arbor, in the County of Washtenaw, on the 20th day of October, A. D. 1939, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as all that certain piece or parcel of land situated and being in the Township of Sharon, County of Washtenaw and State of Michigan, to-wit:

The west sixty (60) acres of the Southeast quarter of Section nine (9) and the East half of the East half of the Southwest quarter of Section nine (9); also the Northwest quarter of the Northeast quarter of Section sixteen (16), and the East half of the Northeast quarter of the Northwest quarter of Section sixteen (16), all in Township three (3) South of Range three (3) East of the Principal Meridian, containing one hundred sixty (160) acres, more or less.

Follow These Exercises to Keep Figure

By PATRICIA LINDSAY
© All Syndicate—WNU Service.

WHY is it necessary for the modern woman to use an artificial method to strengthen her muscles and to promote good health? It is because our manner of living offers almost no opportunity to use the larger, important muscles of the body—the abdominal, back and thigh muscles.

We live inactive lives. We travel by motor or train more than we walk. We do our housework with electrical aids or have servants do it for us. Most office jobs demand eight hours of sitting and frequently in poor posture. Selling work in stores requires the over-use of the legs and feet. Sewing, writing, bridge and many other so-called activities are actually inactivities!

Games No Substitute.
You probably think that recreational sports such as tennis, bowling, badminton, golf and riding are sufficient exercise. But they are not. They stimulate the body through increased circulation and allow the skin pores to secrete waste but they do not build the body symmetrically because they are "one-sided." Seldom is a woman adept in using both her right hand and her left hand in sports.

Walking can be an excellent activity if it is done on soil which allows a spring to the step and if the body is carried with good posture at a steady pace and if you wear loose clothing and correct walking shoes.

Swimming is the exception in recreational sports. It exercises all the muscles of the body providing no one stroke is overpracticed, and it develops the body symmetrically and beautifully.

These Exercises Will Help

So, you see, unless you can swim daily it becomes quite necessary for you to resort to corrective exercises if you desire good health and a supple body. Exercises that will offset the ravages of our sedentary, inactive living. Here are two for firming the vital abdominal muscles, or in other words, for flattening your tummy! Why not begin scientifically to develop a pleasing figure!

(Exercise 1)

For Stout Women

Lie flat on your back, arms at sides—parallel with body. Bend knees back to abdomen. Then pull knees with clasped hands back to chest, gradually raising the hips from floor three to four inches. Lower hips—keeping knees bent. Repeat four times and relax. Repeat not more than 12 times each day.

(Exercise 2)

For Thin Women with Protruding Abdomen

Sit on floor with legs wide apart and knees slightly relaxed. Place hands palm downward just behind hips for support. Now push your abdomen out, to right, back, to left—making a complete circle such as you would in a Hula-Hula dance! As you circle consciously tighten the muscles. Circle five times without stopping. Relax. Circle five times in opposite direction. Circle twenty times in all.

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

If you are the nervous, high-strung type of individual, why not learn to relax your way to poise. Take things easy. Rest. Exercise to relax only. Stop worrying.

It is never the thoroughly relaxed person who suffers from insomnia. Lack of sleep is usually a symptom of a harried mind or a nervous disorder. Much can be done to overcome insomnia.

Regular sleeping hours are quite necessary. Make it a habit to retire the same hour and to arise the same hour until you are relaxed.

Do not overeat or eat too fast. Both are likely to give you restless nights. You can skip a meal a day if you wish. Or substitute for two meals each day, a glass of milk every four hours and glasses of fruit juices in between.

Do not resort to nerve sedatives unless your physician advises them for you.

Unlimited Visibility

THERE are perhaps few reports more welcome to an aviator than that of "unlimited visibility," with its assurance of a clear atmosphere, unobstructed ceiling, smooth passage. Not alone to an aviator, but to others also, is the phrase significant, hinting something deeper than the mere technical implications. For instance, in whatever walk of life one may find himself, what peace and joy would come from an assurance of definite, continuous progress with no obstructions or reversals!

Such assurance is by no means impossible of achievement. If one were to depend simply upon mortal theories and pauses for guidance and inspiration, he might sometimes enjoy temporary success, but ultimately he would experience disappointment and frustration. Yet in turning to the truth, founded on the Scriptures, he would have the sure basis for hope, and realize progress and well-being. Throughout religious history, the consciousness of unlimited good has been the experience of many devout and spiritually-minded men and women. Christ Jesus possessed, in the highest degree, true spiritual vision, which enabled him to overcome every untoward condition presented to him.

John, in the bleak setting of Patmos, was so imbued with spiritual light that he received a glorious vision of "a new heaven and a new earth" (Revelation 21:1). . . . The term "visibility" is defined, in part, as "perceptible by the eye," and also as "mentally perceptible." When one grasps in some measure the great facts of spiritual being which are not cognized by physical sight, the possibilities of spiritual vision are seen to be unlimited and unimpeded by material conditions, and would be obstructions. In the words of Paul (II Corinthians 4:18), one learns to "look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." These eternal virtues, discernible to spiritual sense, include limitless goodness, affluence, and harmony.

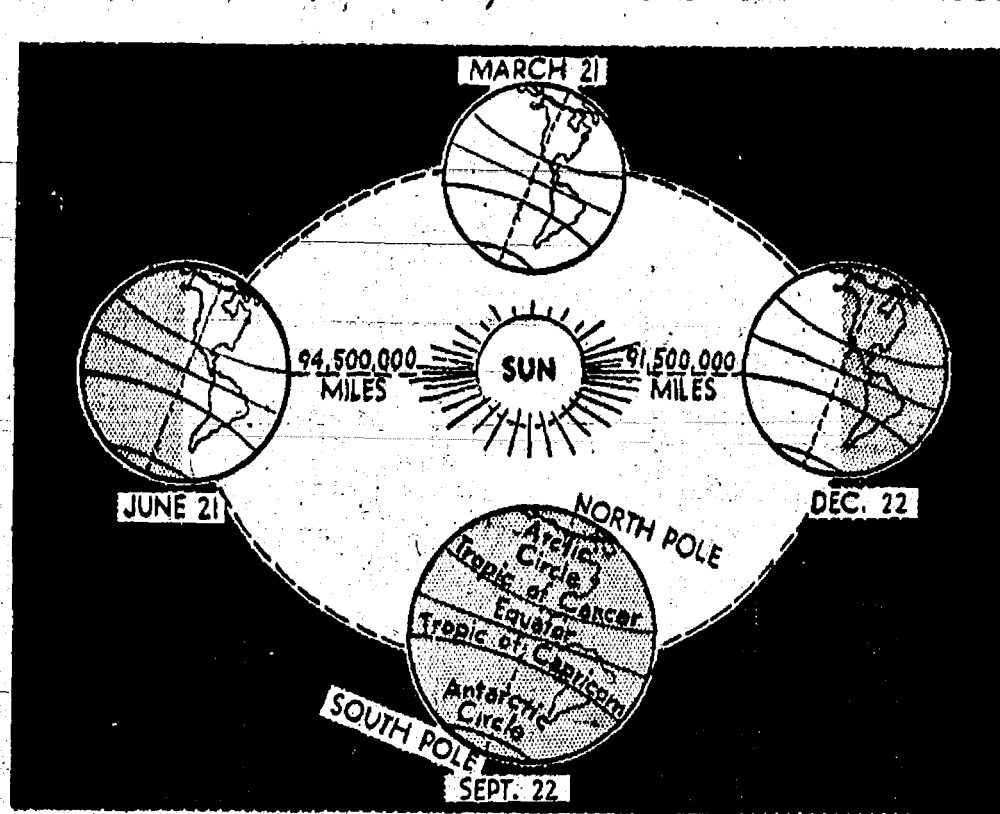

Spiritual man is fetterless, unfallen, reflecting infinite Mind, God, his origin. Man's possibilities for expressing good and blessedness are therefore as unrestricted and inexhaustible as his source. In human experience, the arguments that would make for mistakes or obscurities—fear, doubt, discouragement, ignorance, worldliness, sin—are the outcome of the belief that man has a mortal existence separate from God. But Christian Science reveals man as the individual expression of divine Mind, incapable of knowing right but perfection, since Mind is perfect. All attributes of God, including discernment, wisdom, and ability, are expressed by man.

Freedom from a false sense of responsibility and the depressing fear of failure are won when one realizes man's eternal oneness with his heavenly Father. What serenity comes from the recognition that man, as God's idea or reflection, is dependent only on Mind for all capability and sagacity, and that this reflection is immutable, eternal, and irrevocable. Likewise, to man, the flawless manifestation of Life, superstitious beliefs regarding sickness, age, accident, are unknown. However aggressive, terrifying, or stubborn the appearance of discord may seem to material sense, spiritual harmony alone is supreme and abiding. Appreciating this fact importantly and consistently, one can triumph over false beliefs and prove his God-given dominion.

"God's gifts put man's best dreams to shame," a well-loved poet once wrote, as perhaps a gentle, though forceful rebuke to the human tendency to outline what one might consider best and most desirable for his welfare. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 591) Mrs. Eddy defines Mind, in part, as "Deity, which outlines but is not outlined." . . . Love has established all good, unimpaired by its lofty, made in harmony, completeness, perfection, and joy. This truth, understood and applied, acts as law in one's human experience, supplying whatever the need may be—harmonious relationships, home, food, clothing, employment.

Progress in its highest sense, means working with God, and is evidenced in one's intent and conduct rather than in merely material enrichment. But right reward necessarily follows righteous endeavor, and is inseparable from it. In these inspiring words Mrs. Eddy has assured us of ever-present divine help (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 113): "Divine Love is our hope, strength, and shield. We have nothing to fear when Love is at the helm of thought, but everything to enjoy on earth and in heaven."—The Christian Science Monitor.

Autumn Arrives; Here's the Route

Autumn arrives officially here and throughout the northern hemisphere on September 23, bringing what astronomers call the "autumnal equinox" when the sun crosses from north to south across the equator. In the above chart, which shows the various "leanings" of the earth with regard to the sun at the start of each season, the earth is shown to be something like a great movable floor in space. The sun is near the center of this floor and the earth moves around the outer edge of it.

TWO APPLES SHOW OLD, NEW SPRAYS

These two McIntosh apples, sprayed in the old and the new ways, illustrate what Michigan State College entomologists have found in a five year series of experiments. Neither of these apples is wormy, but the one at the left, protected on the tree with an arsenical spray, needs washing before it could be marketed. On the right, also protected and not wormy, is an apple with no appreciable residue and what little spray still remains is harmless because the spray was a nicotine product. Adoption of the new spray by Michigan apple growers is expected to aid in marketing a better quality apple without necessity of washing, which often bruises the skin and adds to production costs.

Memorial To First Michigan Trading Post

The above monument commemorating the first trading post is erected on the original site of the village of L'Anse on the picturesque shores of Keweenaw Bay in the Upper Peninsula. Built of red sandstone and situated in the beautiful L'Anse township park it presents a very striking appearance to Michigan tourists. Its setting is steeped in Indian lore and when recently dedicated over 5,000 people watched a magnificent Indian pageant depicting the "Coming of the White Man to the Land of Hiawatha." Part of the pageant was enacted on the water and the rest on the adjoining lake shore as the spectators watched from a huge natural amphitheater. The park and the monument were constructed by youth workers of the Michigan National Youth Administration. The inscription on the face of the memorial reads: "This monument marks the site of the first trading post established for the American Fur Trading Company by Peter Grubbs in 1837. This tablet was presented by the students of L'Anse Township schools and the National Youth Administration—1938."

For Their Sakes...
Drive Carefully!

It's the beginning of a new school year. Thousands upon thousands of our beloved youngsters are making their way schoolward through crowded streets—five days a week. Those in charge of guarding their safety have done everything possible to protect the lives of these children. They have assigned special officers to school duty—stowed traffic in school districts—set up many types of warnings to approaching motorists in school blocks.

Although the automobile is a boon to mankind, it becomes an instrument of destruction in the hands of a careless driver. With this in mind, we urge you to be mindful of the need for extra caution in driving through school districts. Remember, caution in driving, as well as moderation in all things, is a highly commendable quality—one that commands the respect and admiration of your fellow men. So, once again we say—For Their Sakes... Drive Carefully!
