Complications Are Plentiful In New State Welfare Act

By Gene Alleman

Lansing—Home rule for administration of relief, authorized by the 1939 state legislature as part of an "economy" program, is coming home to roost in more than 80 counties this week.

County supervisors are in session. During the last gubernatorial campaign supervisors urged defeat of the 1937 welfare act. They insisted that a centralized system of providing relief to jobless and unemployed was fodder for a highly trained social worker, yet was a luxury that Michigan could not afford. Local control would lower costs, they pleaded. Many voters agreed.

The 1937 welfare act was defeated, and the problem was thrown into the laps of 1939 legislators.

A new law was enacted whereby handling of relief was returned to counties. The state was pledged to match local payments, dollar for dollar. A three-member board was to be set up in each county, two members of which were to be named by the supervisors and the third man to be appointed by the state social welfare commission.

This sounds simple, but complications were numerous.

Big Business
Relief has become "big business" in America today.

Expenditures for the poor once were nominal. The word "poor," usually associated with "charity," vanished upon the advent of the Great Depression which swallowed millions of workers into idleness. It became "unemployed." Millions of dollars were poured out from Washington to sustain life and to maintain morale on a basis of American decency. State capitals were called upon for legislative appropriations.

To prevent possible political misuse of relief millions, the social worker was glorified in a big way. Relief applicants had to be certified as to need, and that meant careful scrutiny by trained investigators. Salaries increased as responsibilities grew; payrolls mounted as more millions were spent; the entire administrative overhead sprang up like a mushroom.

The old relief system, keyed to a limited need, was put into total eclipse by a highly centralized system focused on Washington and Lansing.

During the 1938-39 fiscal year the state spent approximately $15,000,000 for direct relief alone.

This was a lot of money. A deficit in the state treasury was one result.

W. K. Guerin, Pioneer Of Community, Dies

Warren K. Guerin, 89 years of age, who had spent nearly his entire life in this community, died Saturday afternoon, October 7, at his home on Park St., after a long illness.

He was born August 15, 1850 near Rochester, N. Y., the son of Charles and Ludy Guerin, and in 1854 he came with his parents to Lima township.

On January 9, 1884, he was united in marriage to Estella Royce, who died in 1908. In 1912 he was married to Ida Downer and they have made their home in Chelsea.

Mr. Guerin was affiliated with Olive Lodge, 155, F. and A. M., and Olive Chapter, 108, O. E. S. He was president of the Oak Grove Cemetery Association.

Surviving are the widow, a cousin, Miss Estella Guerin of Ann Arbor, and several nephews and nieces.

Funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon at the residence, with Rev. R. W. Barber officiating. Burial was in Oak Grove cemetery, with Masonic rites.

PUBLIC HALLOWEEN PARTY PLANNED FOR CHILDREN OF THIS COMMUNITY

Community Fair Gains In Exhibits and Crowds

Attendance records for Chelsea Community Fairs were broken at this year's event which was held at the public school on Friday and Saturday. Seating capacity of the auditorium would not accommodate the people who were present for the programs on Friday and Saturday evenings, and many were thus forced to spend their time in viewing the exhibits in other parts of the building and on the school grounds while the programs were being given.

Exhibits at the fair were larger than ever before. The agricultural products were of good quality and showed the results of careful selection by 4-H club and F. F. A. members, and others who exhibited. The livestock and pet stock exhibited in tents on the school grounds were also of good selection. The flower show was better than ever before, as was the hobby show, where a larger variety of articles were displayed than had been exhibited at previous fairs. The commercial exhibits were well displayed and attracted many potential customers for the merchandise.

Supt. A. C. Johnson, general manager of the fair, and E. J. Claire, president, express their gratitude to all who helped in any way to make the fair a success, especially Mrs. F. G. Schable, in charge of the hobby show, and Mrs. W. R. Daniels, who was in charge of the flower show.

The program on Friday night consisted of several numbers by the High School Band under the direction of Robert Dunstan; a one-act play entitled "Cabbages," by Edw. Staadt, with the following students taking part: Mary Jane Bahnmiller, Robert Welch, Valerie Leeman, Mary May, William Birch, Ethel Hale, Richard Riemenschneider. Mary Sullivan was the announcer, and the make-up committee was Lorraine Weatherwax and Mary Sullivan. Several vocal numbers were presented by the high school chorus, and the girls' trio consisting of Joan Walworth, Eunice Hart and Janice Dancer, with Margaret Harper at the piano. Miss Edna Horning was piano accompanist for the chorus, with Miss Evelyn Sprague directing. A tap dance was presented by Marilyn Johnson and Mary Jane Jarvis, with Mrs. John O'Hara at the piano.

On Saturday night the program consisted of impersonations of famous

Saline Defeats Chelsea

By Wayne Van Orman

Last Friday Chelsea was again defeated, this time by a peppy Saline team. The first quarter was a run-away for Saline. After taking the kick-off on her own twenty yard line, Saline threw a pass good for twenty-five. From here it was an easy matter to score. They failed to score the extra point however. Saline continued to dominate the first half although Chelsea scored a touchdown on an interception and run of forty yards by Policht.

In the second half Chelsea showed much more enthusiasm. However, two touchdowns were missed when fumbles occurred in the backfield. In the fourth quarter a Saline man intercepted a pass and raced fifty yards for a touchdown and then added the extra point. The final score was: Saline 13, Chelsea 6.

In the first half Saline made ten first-downs to Chelsea's one, and in the second half Saline made ten to Chelsea's four. Chelsea was beaten after the first quarter, which shows what a peppy team like Saline can do, and also proves that Chelsea must beat Romulus to the punch next week in order to win.

I do not see how the Chelsea boys expect to have a winning team when only half of them come out to practice on every night but Thursday.

The game with Roosevelt scheduled for October 20 has been moved up to October 18.

ROD & GUN CLUB MEETS

The October meeting of the Chelsea Rod and Gun club was held Tuesday evening at Kolb's hall. Identification hunting buttons were distributed to members, and President Geo. Hart gave a report on the jamboree which was held at Manly Sott's recently. A letter from the Michigan United Conservation League, urging members of the local club to attend the annual meeting in Mt. Pleasant Nov. 4, was read. Jas. Park, Don Miller, H. D. Witherell, Geo. Staffan and Geo. Hart were named as delegates to represent the club at the convention. Following the business meeting refreshments were served.

KIWANIS CLUB WILL SPONSOR EVENT TO BE HELD ON TUESDAY, OCTOBER 31

Music for Dance On October 27 Will Be Furnished By Tim Doolittle and His Pine Center Gang

Plans are being made for a public Halloween party for children of this community, to be held on Tuesday evening, October 31. The event is being sponsored by the Kiwanis club, and a committee was appointed last week by President James C. Hendley to make arrangements for the party.

Tentative plans call for a masquerade parade of children through the business district, to the public school grounds, where suitable entertainment will be provided and sweet cider and doughnuts will be served by the Kiwanians. Prizes will be awarded to youngsters, the number to be given and the classifications to be decided upon by the committee. The youngsters will be asked to go to their respective homes immediately following the event, and in this way it is hoped there will be fewer Halloween pranks and less destruction of property than has been customary in the community on Halloween night.

The committee in charge of the event consists of P. F. Niehaus, A. C. Johnson, Dudley Holmes, H. C. Schneider, E. W. Eaton, M. W. McClure and James C. Hendley.

In an effort to raise funds to finance the Halloween party the Kiwanis club is promoting a dance and entertainment program to be held on Friday evening, October 27 at the public school auditorium. Tim Doolittle and His Pine Center Gang, popular WJR radio stars, will furnish music for the dance and entertainment. It is planned to sell spectators' tickets at a lower price than the charge which will be made to those who dance.

The committee to make arrangements for the dance is composed of Russell McLaughlin, Chas. Cameron, A. D. Mayer, Wilbur Hinderer and John Keusch.

Public School Faculty Guests At Reception

Members of the Kiwanis club entertained their wives and members of the Board of Education and their wives at a reception for the Chelsea public school faculty, held Monday evening in the Methodist church dining room. Dinner was served to 75 by the Philathea circle.

Dr. Faye Palmer presided as toastmaster at the program following the dinner, and introduced the numbers in his usual witty and humorous manner. Group singing was led by P. F. Niehaus, with Mrs. Niehaus at the piano; a piano solo was rendered by Miss Pawloski, a member of the faculty; the high school girls' trio, Joan Walworth, Eunice Hart and Janice Dancer, sang two numbers, with Margaret Harper as accompanist.

A humorous reading was given by Miss Efty of the faculty, and Miss Sprague and Miss Efty favored with a vocal duet. Jas. C. Hendley, president of the Kiwanis club, and M. W. McClure gave short talks of welcome to the faculty, with Chas. Cameron, Vernon Downing and A. C. Johnson responding.

State Welfare Act

realizing this objective, passed a law that gives the county supervisors the whip hand with certain limitations.

First, the act attached a sting to the "home rule" proviso by requiring counties to pay the cost of local administration—an expense which the centralized system (or state control at Lansing) had previously borne.

Second, more administrative responsibility meant more financial responsibility. That called for raising the "ante" in some counties which had coasted along, letting the state carry most of their load.

Third, a practical limitation was imposed by an arbitrary slicing of the fiscal relief appropriation (1939-40) from $15,000,000 to $8,750,000, or a reduction of nearly one-half.

True, legislators prayed that business would pick up, that the new plan would effect new economies, and that counties would absorb the balance of the need. The present state social welfare commission, headed by Walter F. Gries of Ishpeming, has turned a deaf ear to occasional cries for a special session of the legislature. Even Mel McPherson, unofficial state spokesman for the supervisors, has admonished counties to prepare to carry their part of the load. Having asked for home rule, supervisors were told to shoulder the new responsibilities cheerfully. This they are doing for the most part, although grumbling profusely and loudly against Washington's hard-balled attitude that spending of social security money (unemployment compensation, old age assistance, etc.) must be done only by persons hired under federal civil service standards.

Matching Plan Is Out

The legislative intent, as expressed in the law, was that the state should match relief dollars of counties. It was thought at the time to be insurance that counties would do their part in a decentralized program.

However, just the unexpected happened. In Wayne county, for example, the 50-50 plan was hailed with delight. Wayne county had been doing more than a good many upstate counties. With only $8,750,000 on hand to spend, state officials realized the matching plan would quickly exhaust their 12-month appropriation. This part of the law has been openly ignored, and probably will not be enforced by the present commission.

A hitch also developed between the supervisors who wished to control the spending of all relief funds and the social security administration at Washington which adhered strictly to a policy of hiring skilled, trained workers on a non-partisan, civil service basis, thus minimizing any chance of political mishandling of federal or state funds.

Supervisors proposed, in some counties, to engage a single director whom they would hold responsible for administration of all welfare funds—direct relief by the state and county governments, unemployment compensation and old age pension jointly by state and federal governments, and so on.

Washington was unyielding to suggestions for an integrated system unless it was established according to civil service requirements.

And there hangs another interesting hitch in the Michigan welfare situation today.

Civil Service

This Saturday (Oct. 14) written tests will be conducted by the civil service commission for social workers and social work administrators who are to handle the social security money.

The minimum requirements for a social work administrator under federal standards are these: "Four years of experience in social welfare work in a public or private social agency, one year of which shall have been in a responsible administrative capacity and completion of two years of college training including or supplemented by courses in the social sciences."

Higher classes for social work administrators (to be hired in larger counties) call for six years of experience as a social welfare administrator and up to four years' college training.

It is said on good authority in Lansing that not one county supervisor in Michigan could possibly qualify for the job of relief administrator under these conditions!

The result was inevitable.

Dual System Favored

Because of the civil service standards which automatically ruled out the average local official, most of Michigan's four score counties are going to adopt what is known as the "dual system."

Under this plan the three-man county welfare board will either become a working board whose members draw annual salaries and devote their full time to their duties or will become a policy board with per diem allowance and with the actual work being done by full-time administrators.

Federal-state funds (social security) will be expended by persons who meet federal civil service standards. State-county funds will be handled by persons who meet requirements established by the local county board.

This, in brief, will constitute the "dual system."

For example, Genesee county has a three-man working board. One man will administer direct relief. Another will be in charge of hospitalization, infirmity, and other services. The third man will be responsible for the social security funds—unemployment compensation, old age assistance, and so on.

Each administrator will get $3,000 a year salary.

Unless Washington rules otherwise, the social security administrator must meet rigid civil service requirements for a competent, trained man in the field of social welfare. Supervisors can pick who they please for their two members on the board, and the state commission is expected to concur in their recommendation for the third man who is to represent the state in welfare activity. But the social security administrator must hurdle the civil service test of proven competency.

Short Courses To Open
At M. S. C. October 23

Forty-sixth year for short courses in agriculture at Michigan State College opens Monday, October 23, with what likely will be a record enrollment. Scholarships alone will bring 190 to the campus at East Lansing this fall and winter to enable studies by rural men and women from the age of 16 and up.

Success of past seasons keeps the 1939-40 schedule of courses practically intact, reports R. W. Tenny, short course director.

Opening courses are the first and second year 16 weeks' course in general agriculture for terms which run until March 1. Later there will be nine other courses of eight weeks duration. These begin January 2 for special study in general agriculture, in agricultural engineering, commercial fruit production, dairy manufacturing, dairy production, forestry and wildlife conservation, home economics, poultry and practical floriculture.

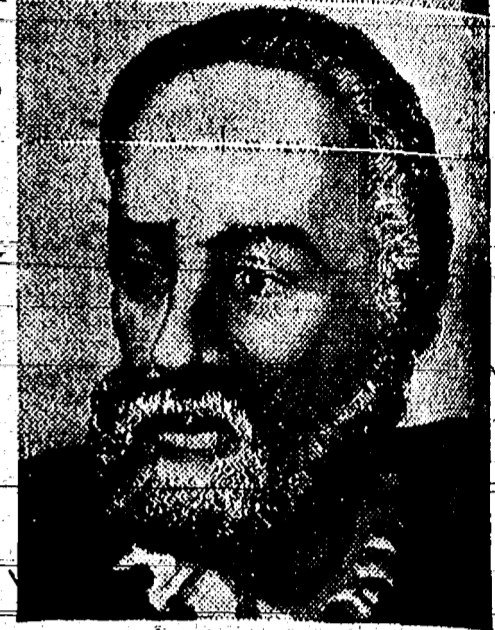

Special courses for 120 young men and women from southwestern Michigan counties are being made possible by the Kellogg Foundation. Thirty boys are now on the campus through scholarships provided by the National Youth Administration for study in classrooms and laboratories in the agricultural division.

Since the opening winter session in dairying in 1894, nearly 17,000 have received certificates or diplomas from the college short course. Livestock and horticulture study was added in 1896 and cheese and butter production in 1897.

Meet Christopher Columbus—All 4 of Him

In the 447 years since Christopher Columbus discovered America—an event being celebrated October 12—no one has been sure just what the intrepid navigator looked like. Was he tall or short, thin or fat? Was he bald or did he have curly hair? The answers can be found in almost any library in the United States. History books are full of his pictures. But he is a different man in each one. You can pick the one you like best, because even authorities have been unable to agree. So if you prefer tall, dark men, find the artist who agrees with you. It won't be difficult.

24 Years Ago

Thursday, October 14, 1915

John George Wagner, a former well known resident of Lima township and Chelsea, died suddenly Sunday night, October 10, at his home in Bridge-water.

The work of fitting up a tennis court at the school grounds is progressing slowly. The board is finding it a hard job to get someone to do the work.

Caspar Glenn has sold his interest in the garage at Stockbridge and will move to Chelsea where he has accepted a position in the Holler Eight shops.

Miss Margaretta Martin of this place and James Reilly of Detroit were married on Wednesday, October 18, 1915.

Chelsea was without lights and fire protection from about 8:30 o'clock Tuesday evening until 8 o'clock Wednesday morning. The men at the power house were cleaning the reserve boiler when the large feed-pipe running from the heater to the boiler in use burst.

New cement porches are being built at the entrances of Salem German M. E. church.

34 Years Ago

Rev. E. B. Bancroft, presiding elder of this district, Detroit M. E. conference, died suddenly Saturday night, October 7 in Ann Arbor. Mrs. Bancroft died six weeks ago.

The Washtenaw Garden Co. has raised about 4,000 bushels of onions this season, including 1,100 bushels of onion sets.

Five ministers reside on Summit street, while Park street, not to be outdone, is the home of five men who practice medicine.

The Lewis Kilmer family of Sylvan expect to leave for California about the 25th of this month, where they will make their home.

Miss Emma Seitz of Lima and Andrew Mast of Ann Arbor were married this afternoon.

Fred W. Merchant has sold his one-half interest in the Chelsea Roller Mills to E. K. White of Greenburg, Indiana.

Homer H. Boyd has sold a parcel of land in Sylvan to Merritt Boyd of this place. This transfer gives Merritt Boyd control of the Boyd homestead which has been occupied by the family since 1854.

Mrs. Mercy Boyd is making arrangements to move to Chelsea to live with her son about November 1.

Citizens' Committee Pushes Health Drive

The county health experience of 1,169 counties in 42 states clearly points the way for citizens of Washtenaw county if they are to overcome their lag in health control shown in comparison with other counties having the program, according to proponents of the county health program for this county. Led by Dr. John S. DeTar of Milan, chairman of the Citizens' Committee for a County Health Department, in which Mrs. E. W. Eaton of this community is regional chairman, widespread support throughout the county has swung into action in a campaign to bring to Washtenaw county a program which 60 other counties in Michigan now enjoy, in part at State, Federal and private expense.

Stressing the fact that the county health program is not a form of socialized medicine, and that it does not offer medical treatment infringing on the practice of physicians, advocates maintain that such a department in the county will serve as a protective service, bringing long-term returns in diminished disease costs and lowered mortality rates. For this, taxpayers of the county will face a cost of from $20,000 to $30,000, according to official estimates, with a portion of this expense shared by the State, which annually pays $3,000 to every county health department, the Federal Government, from which $4,500 a year is paid under the Social Security Act to any county establishing a unit, and possibly by the Children's Fund of Michigan and the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, both of which have allotted funds for such purposes.

The county health department movement, begun in 1911 in Yakima county, Washington, to curb a typhoid epidemic, has spread rapidly and with marked success across the United States, with the United States Public Health Service giving constant encouragement. Michigan's first department was established in Oakland county in 1927, and under Act No. 306 of that year, amended by Act No. 118 in 1929, the advantages of county health department co-ordination of facilities and trained personnel have been chosen by boards of supervisors in 60 of Michigan's 83 counties. This has meant the efficiency of municipal health control methods for hitherto neglected rural areas.

Washtenaw county should be sharing in the funds made available by supporting governmental departments and philanthropic organizations, proponents of the plan maintain, "if the high death and disease rates here as compared to such counties as Ottawa county now using the plan are to be lowered."

Dr. H. Allen Moyer, State Commissioner of Health, spoke on "The Value of a County Health Department for Washtenaw County" on Thursday evening, October 5 at the Bethlehem Lutheran church, Ann Arbor.

OLANDER COMMENTS ON SAFE DRIVING RECORD OF MICH. BELL

Oscar G. Olander, State Police Commissioner, comments on the safe driving record of Michigan-Bell Telephone Company employees in the current issue of "The Michigan Bell" employee magazine.

Olander recalls in the article that the organization for the third successive year is one of the leaders in the annual safe driving contest sponsored by the Detroit Industrial Safety Council.

As of September 1, it was only a fraction of 1 per cent out of first place in the competition, with a safe driving rate of 97.31 per cent "accident-free as drivers and pedestrians," he says. Two years ago, when the contest was initiated, telephone drivers won first place. Last year it placed fifth but again was less than 1 per cent out of first place.

He points out that the company's record this year represents the driving habits of 4,482 employees in metropolitan Detroit, while the two Detroit firms "that top you by a fraction of 1 per cent" have only 800 and 900 employees, respectively.

The state police head emphasizes that the same safety habits are found among Michigan Bell employees throughout the state. "They are not only good city drivers," he writes, "but they are also exceptionally careful drivers in smaller communities and out in the country."

Here's What we were Shooting at!

ROME, they tell us, wasn't built in a day. Well, neither was this 1940 Buick you see burning the breeze here.

You'll understand why when you know what we were aiming for. We wanted to combine in one car all the best we've learned in our 36 years in this business.

We think we've got it now. A stand-out sparkling car with action power and staying power.

It would be hopeless to try to list the whole range of new features—there are some 72 in all.

But you can't drive this car a mile without knowing that you have got hold of something that tops anything you ever handled.

It's smoother, steadier, firmer on the line. It gets up and goes right now, and keeps going without wander, tailwag or wind-swerve.

It takes the roughest roads in its stride, and while we don't want to go hinting about speed, this eager baby can do forty-five in first!

The sudden, soaring, millrace power of its matchless Dynaflex straight-eight engine, electrically balanced after assembly to micro-poised perfection, is velocity smoothed to velvet.

Yes, this beauty is our all-time high—the car we've been shooting at for 36 years.

Come drive it and you'll see why.

SPIRIT of SERVICE

Repair crews working over sleet-coated wire in a bitter storm; operators staying at their switchboards despite flood or fire—these are dramatic examples of the "spirit of service" traditional among telephone workers. But that splendid spirit is applied to routine duty too... it inspires the day-by-day work of all the men and women who help to give you the best telephone service in the world.

Islands of Norway

When Dad Bears
Slipping off the road and crashing into a guard rail at Kitchener, Ontario, James Trussler's car came to a stop, damaged. But the damage did not worry Trussler, age 75, nearly as much as what his father, age 100, would say when he heard about it.

New Sealed Beam Headlight System

The newest contribution to safety, the result of three years development and cooperative work by car manufacturers, lamp designers and governmental authorities is described in the following article by Harry F. Kelly, Secretary of State.

When a new automotive development is perfected it is usually announced by a single manufacturer. Later, if the innovation is successful, it is adopted by other leaders in the industry. However, the sealed beam headlight was developed along entirely different lines. Since it is a move to provide greater safety for night driving, the research was carried on by the entire automotive industry and vigorously promoted by the Automotive Safety Foundation.

The new lighting system, in which the bulb, reflector and lens are assembled together in a single unit, is designed to overcome a large number of difficulties experienced with conventional systems in use at the present time.

One major difficulty arises from the rapid deterioration of the finish of the reflector. This is caused by wind, water and air working under the headlight gaskets. Without proper maintenance, the light will lose about one-third of its effectiveness during the first year. And in two or three years, two-thirds of its effectiveness may be lost. This loss of reflection occurs gradually and is unnoticed by the owner, with the result that before long he is driving with poor lights and takes the risk of a collision at night because he cannot properly see objects on the highway.

A further objective was to provide more total light available and to develop a method of advantageous distribution of this light. In using a bulb of higher candlepower it was necessary to have certain laws revised in many of the states and this was the point where cooperation with government officials was so effectively used.

It was, of course, some time before all states brought their laws into line with the new headlight system.

With more light available a better beam could be directed farther down the center of the road, and at the same time light was available for greater distances at either side. Glare is said to be almost entirely eliminated by carefully directing the rays of the bulb so that nearly all light is eliminated from the upper left hand corner, which is the area that normally sends rays into the eyes of approaching drivers.

The ordinary light deteriorates approximately one-third while this new light deteriorates very little—perhaps not over five per cent, over a period of a year, so that nothing needs be done until the bulb burns out; then the entire unit is replaced.

Our Neighbors

MILAN—Announcement was made this week that the women's ward at the Milan Federal Correctional Institution would be closed as soon as the prisoners confined there could be transferred to other Federal institutions. Several of the inmates have already been moved to institutions in the south and southwest. New prisons have been established by the Federal Government for women prisoners and the lack of space in the local prison has made it necessary to move them out to make room for the transfer of prisoners to Milan. According to officials of the Milan Federal Prison the cell blocks vacated by the women will be used for isolation cells and for cells of maximum security for men serving long sentences. The matrons who have been in charge of the women's wards will be transferred to other institutions in the south and on the west coast.—Leader.

HOWELL—In the new Detroit Market Area supplied by the Michigan Milk Producers Association, approximately 750,000,000 lbs. of milk are consumed a year, and of this amount Livingston county supplies about 50,000,000 pounds, or about 6 1/2 per cent of the entire amount furnished for the Detroit market. I. T. Pickford says that records of the milk received are not definitely shown according to county lines, but that is the amount received from the milk stations in Livingston county.—County Press.

BRIGHTON—Ben Bidwell of North Brighton has quite a curiosity in a garden product, a sweet potato weighing 11 pounds. The vine was first started in water and later transferred to the ground. The one potato above mentioned was the sole result of the planting, but 11 pounds of any vegetable is enough for a meal for the whole family.—Argus.

DEARBORN—Something over a hundred years ago a group of early Michigan settlers at the edge of the Irish Hills district, seventy miles west of Detroit, needed a grist mill. They named the winding Raisin River at a place called Sharon. Hollow, and erected a sawmill to produce lumber from trees chopped along the slopes bordering the river. Powered by the turbulent stream, the Sharon Hollow Mill, typical of America's outstanding industrial unit before the centralization of industry at the turn of the century, continued to serve this rich farming country for sixty years. Today nothing remains of the sawmill at Sharon Hollow except its rude timber framework, but the dam and mill were recently rebuilt by the Ford Motor Company and are again serving the people of the country-side as the thirteenth of the so-called "Ford Village Industries." Seventeen men today work in the rebuilt mill, producing cigar lighters for Ford V-8 dashboards.—Independent.

Children In Court

By Judge Malcolm Hatfield

Total Indifference
Several churches complained that their evening meetings were being disturbed by three small brothers who were constantly throwing objects against the windows. These boys, who were from eight to ten years old, had formed the habit of roaming the neighborhood at night.

Although they had not been trained to respect religion or the rights and property of other people, they intended no real malice. An examination disclosed that their parents spent their evenings at the motion picture theater or played cards with friends, being only too glad to have their children seek amusement outside the home.

These parents were indifferent to the boys' school progress and gave only a cursory interest to their activities. They believed that they had done their duty by furnishing food, clothing and shelter for the children. No inquiry was made when the boys failed to come home at their usual bedtime. When the father was called into court a few days later and asked why he made no effort to locate his three sons, he calmly remarked: "My wife and I weren't worried because we just figured that you folks had the kids locked up to give them a good scare."

Having Their Own Way In Everything
The sister of a well-to-do mother remarked that she could not criticize her sister's four children because they desired everything in life but were unwilling to make certain sacrifices to acquire the objects of their desire.

In this instance, the aunt possessed a far greater understanding of what constitutes happiness, for she realized that her nieces and nephews were to be pitied for being pampered products of a mother who knew nothing of child psychology.

Time and again, this woman attempted to make her sister understand that it is far more important to establish habits of industry in children than to cater to their whims, but for all her pleadings she continued to see them develop into utterly selfish adults.

Do you know how many feet you travel per second at sixty miles an hour? Many accidents are caused when the motorist fails to realize the terrific speed he is traveling at sixty miles an hour and how long it will take him to stop the car.

An English physicist discovered a very simple formula by which this could be figured. The answer is correct within 2 per cent. The formula is to take the speed shown on the speedometer and add one-half the speed to arrive at the number of feet traveled per second.

Try it.
I am sure this will convince you that your brakes must be in good physical condition, and above all, that your judgment as to when speed should be used must be of the very best. Can you stop your car within the range of vision at night traveling sixty miles an hour and covering approximately ninety feet per second? It's smart to drive carefully!

Snakes Alive
A "snaking" party led by W. E. Rector, science teacher at the Mt. Victory high school, Toledo, Ohio, has added 103 new snakes to Toledo's zoological park reptile house. Nine black rattlesnakes in the collection were brought back alive by a girl member of the party.

State Highway Dept. Gets Ready for Winter

Lansing—The state highway department began mobilization of materials and equipment this week in preparation for the annual battle with snow and ice on state trunkline highways.

State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner has ordered maintenance crews to recondition all snow and ice fighting equipment and to be ready for any weather emergency. At the same time orders were either on their way or were already being filled for new equipment, snow fence, sand and various chlorides to be used on the highways during the winter months.

Nearly 800 miles of snow fence is being made ready for placement to control drift formations. This fence is largely concentrated in the northwestern counties of the Upper Peninsula and in the northwestern counties of the lower peninsula. Weather bureau records reveal that these are the areas where heaviest snow fall is encountered.

About 80,000 cubic yards of sand is being accumulated in "stock piles" at strategic points along all highways. Chlorides are mixed with the sand to keep it from freezing. It will be used as needed to combat ice on the highways. In connection with ice treatment, Commissioner Van Wagoner pointed out that further experiments would be conducted this year on a new technique. He said that the department was investigating the possibility of completely removing the ice rather than attempting to cover it with sand. The new process involves the scattering of the ice, the application of chemicals which melt the ice and then scraping of the roadway.

New equipment ordered by the state includes 76 sand spreaders, 43 plows of various types to be mounted on 1 1/2-ton trucks, 3 plows for mounting on three-ton trucks, and 17 plows for mounting on five-ton trucks. This equipment is being spread throughout the state wherever it is needed. The department will this year continue its policy of locating heavy equipment at strategic points where it may be shifted quickly to storm areas.

FIRE PREVENTION

By national proclamation the week October 8-14 has been designated Fire Prevention Week. This community, and all others, has been urged to co-operate in reducing fire hazards. Even though hazards have been checked, fires still break out. Here are a few common fires and methods of fighting them.

Kitchen stoves are a prolific source of fires—particularly when heating grease-filled frying pans. A close-fitting lid, clamped over the pan, will speedily smother flames, cutting off necessary oxygen.

An accumulation of rubbish near the furnace is always dangerous. Ashes, falling from the shovel, can easily ignite any debris. A pall of sand or water near the furnace is a necessary precaution.

Millions of dollars go up in smoke each year as the result of unconfined fires. An incinerator such as this will insure safety in burning rubbish and garbage. An adequate supply of water should be at hand.

In a majority of cases only the most elementary facilities are available for fighting automobile fires. Here a driver has filled his handkerchief with dirt and is pouring it on a motor blaze. Dirt, always available, will effectively smother fires.

The sleeping cigarette smoker endangers everyone around him. Many homes are equipped with extinguishers, the most scientific method of combating fire. However, the fire department should always be called first, then emergency measures taken by the individual.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Lovely, independent Autumn Dean, returning home to British Columbia from abroad without her father's knowledge, steps at the home of Hector Cardigan, an old family friend. He tells her that she should not have come home, that things have changed. Arriving home at the "Castle of the North," she is greeted lovingly by her father, Jarvis Dean, who gives her to understand that she is welcome for a visit. Her mother, former belle named Millicent Odell, has been dead for years. Autumn cannot understand her father's attitude, though she gives him to understand that she is homesick for good. She has grown tired of the life in England, where she lived with an aunt.

CHAPTER II—Riding about the estate with her father, Autumn realizes that he has changed. Between them they decide, however, to attend a welcome dance for the castle. When the night of the dance arrives, Autumn meets Florian Perry, a handsome, well-educated young man of the countryside. Late in the evening Autumn leaves the dance, riding her horse back to the neighboring ranch where she meets Bruce Lander, friend and champion of her childhood days. He takes her to see his mother, an invalid, but she is dead, thought to have killed herself. As soon as his mother sees Autumn she comes in and takes her away, that death follows in the wake of the Odells. Autumn is both saddened and perplexed by the loved ones she has lost, and she can offer no reason for his mother's attitude.

"My dear child, we all loved her," Hector replied with a sigh. He turned slightly away from her then and picked up one of the yellowed dice on the mantelpiece. "She was the only woman I ever loved."

The simplicity of the statement brought a momentary silence to Autumn. She was aware suddenly of an awe-filled thrill, as though some haunting fragrance of the past had for a fleet instant possessed the room. But then, as she glanced covertly up at Hector, it seemed to her that she had always known that the elderly soldier had cherished a romantic and hopeless passion for Millicent. Autumn made an effort to regain her composure.

"Did Geoffrey Lander love her?" she pursued.

"I don't see how he could help it, really."

"Please, Hector, I want the truth. You know exactly what I mean. I must know."

Hector Cardigan stepped slowly from his place and seated himself in a large chair opposite Autumn. He spread his feet before him and slowly brought his hands together, the points of his fingers meeting.

"In my time, my dear," he began, "we were accustomed to living our lives in the best way we knew how, without giving much thought to the past. This country was settled by men who had left their pasts behind them in the Old Country, and were eager to begin life anew in this. It is only natural if I should feel a bit embarrassed, perhaps, in the presence of a young woman who demands that I tell her what manner of mother she had. I have not grown used to the ways of young people today. It happens, however, that I can be just as direct in my answer as you were in your question. You say I know exactly what you mean. I do. And I tell you that Millicent Odell, who became Millicent Dean, was a woman of honor and integrity and would have gone to her grave before she would have broken her word."

The moods which had attended Bruce Lander all day had been of two disconcerting extremes. In one moment he would be swept up to heights of emotion as he thought of how Autumn Dean looked at him on their meeting last night, the quick, shy veiling of those luminous gray-green eyes of hers, a concealment that had brought a strange throbbing to his blood. In the next moment he would be in the depths, remembering how she had been sent away.

When Autumn had gone, he had done his best to soothe his mother and dissipate the fears that had beset her wandering mind. When he had finally succeeded in getting her to sleep, he had sat beside her for a long time, reluctant to call the nurse from her room.

All his life, it seemed, Bruce Lander had been compelled to adjust himself in one way or another to his mother's humors. He had scarcely known a day at home that had not been marred by her variable temper that often flared up over the merest trifle. It had begun when he was eight—twenty years ago now—and very soon he had grown, in his pathetic boyish way, to understand that his mother's sudden outbursts were her only means of preserving her sanity after what had happened to his father, that dashing figure romantically and tragically limned in memory. She must have loved Geoffrey Lander with a singular and rather awful intensity, and Bruce could imagine the dreadful scene in the birch-hung gully recurring to her with cruel suddenness in the midst of some familiar task. He could imagine her lifting her eyes from her sewing or from her work among her flower-beds, and beholding again the stark verity of Geoffrey Lander lying face down in the shallow, amber-clear creek, his head lying downstream and the white stones under the water there becoming red as sullen garnets. Out of his own young heartbreak had grown a great pity and patience for her.

In all those twenty years Bruce had never heard his mother speak the name of Millicent Odell until she had spoken it last night. His memory of his father was on the whole very vague. But he could recall one afternoon in summer—it had remained with him like a vivid dream—when they had ridden together down the birch-filled gully where they had gathered pocketfuls of vows that bound her in marriage to Jarvis Dean. He paused for a moment and gazed unflinchingly into Autumn's eyes. "Is that an answer to your question, my dear?" he asked finally.

"Partly—as far as it goes," Autumn replied.

"Partly—as far as it goes," Autumn replied.

"I think it goes quite far enough," Hector said. "I confess I—"

"Let me come to the point at once, Hector," Autumn interrupted. "Behind what Jane Lander said to me last night there exists a life-long hatred—or fear—of mother. A woman doesn't ordinarily hate another woman without reason, and somewhere at the bottom of it all, if you take the trouble to search, you find a man. It isn't reasonable to suppose that father is the man in question. We know him too well for that. What I want to know is whether Geoffrey Lander is the man."

"I think I have answered that, my dear."

"Please, Hector!" Autumn was losing her patience. "Do you think that Geoffrey shot himself because he loved mother too much to live without her?"

"It is too late—too late by many years, my dear, to answer that question. I could believe it. I knew Geoffrey well. He was headstrong. He was—romantic, I should say. But he was hopelessly in debt at the time—and he had been drinking heavily, as I recall, for several days before the tragedy. Given the facts, I should imagine your guess would be as good as mine."

"And your guess, Hector?"

He considered the question a long time before he made his reply. Then he got suddenly to his feet and stepped toward Autumn, his shoulders drawn back and his head erect in soldierly bearing. "I refuse to answer that question, my girl. You should know better than to ask it. There is a point in such matters beyond which a man of honor cannot go. I must ask you to consider the question—"

There was no mistaking his meaning. He would say no more about it in his present mood. On the other hand, his very manner was in itself a confession. Autumn's question had been answered. She had no desire to leave her old friend in an unpleasant frame of mind. She looked up at him and laughed.

"Hector, you old goose," she said, "I believe you are almost angry. After all, there isn't much that either of us can do about it now. Come along, darling, and show me your flowers."

In Hector's orderly garden at the rear of the cottage, blue flags stood tall and brave, cupping the sunlight. Autumn stared at them and tried desperately to check the shaking uncertainty of her own heart; it was in Bruce Lander's eyes that she had seen that same clean and gallant blue.

The moods which had attended Bruce Lander all day had been of two disconcerting extremes. In one moment he would be swept up to heights of emotion as he thought of how Autumn Dean looked at him on their meeting last night, the quick, shy veiling of those luminous gray-green eyes of hers, a concealment that had brought a strange throbbing to his blood. In the next moment he would be in the depths, remembering how she had been sent away.

When Autumn had gone, he had done his best to soothe his mother and dissipate the fears that had beset her wandering mind. When he had finally succeeded in getting her to sleep, he had sat beside her for a long time, reluctant to call the nurse from her room.

All his life, it seemed, Bruce Lander had been compelled to adjust himself in one way or another to his mother's humors. He had scarcely known a day at home that had not been marred by her variable temper that often flared up over the merest trifle. It had begun when he was eight—twenty years ago now—and very soon he had grown, in his pathetic boyish way, to understand that his mother's sudden outbursts were her only means of preserving her sanity after what had happened to his father, that dashing figure romantically and tragically limned in memory. She must have loved Geoffrey Lander with a singular and rather awful intensity, and Bruce could imagine the dreadful scene in the birch-hung gully recurring to her with cruel suddenness in the midst of some familiar task. He could imagine her lifting her eyes from her sewing or from her work among her flower-beds, and beholding again the stark verity of Geoffrey Lander lying face down in the shallow, amber-clear creek, his head lying downstream and the white stones under the water there becoming red as sullen garnets. Out of his own young heartbreak had grown a great pity and patience for her.

In all those twenty years Bruce had never heard his mother speak the name of Millicent Odell until she had spoken it last night. His memory of his father was on the whole very vague. But he could recall one afternoon in summer—it had remained with him like a vivid dream—when they had ridden together down the birch-filled gully where they had gathered pocketfuls of rounded pebbles from the creek and Bruce had used them in the sling-shot his father had made for him. He did not know how he had come to think of his father and Millicent Dean as friends, but somewhere in that dimly recollected past he had seen them riding together down some forgotten trail and his boyish fancy had clung to the picture so that he had rarely been able to hink of them apart. He remembered, too, the day when Jarvis Dean's wife had died. He had forgotten the words his mother had spoken that day, but the bitter spirit in which she had spoken them had lingered with his curiosity concerning the relationship of the two women.

And now, after nearly twenty years, Jane Lander had once more spoken the name of Millicent Odell, with a bitterness and hatred that time itself had failed to vanquish. Of late, he knew, there had been something almost fanatical in the proud manner in which his mother had spurned Jarvis Dean, but Bruce had found some excuse for that in the haughty arrogance of the old Laird himself, who for years had lived almost as a recluse in his formidable turreted house. Jarvis Dean's manner to the world in general had been hostile, people said, ever since the death of his beautiful wife. If Bruce was perplexed at the Laird's story refusal to acknowledge him even as a neighbor, there was at least some consolation in the fact that the dour sheepman treated everyone alike, granting each a sort of individual eclipse with the extraordinary power of his unseeing eye.

It was mid-afternoon, the light falling moist and sweet from the green of the hills into the curved valley where the Lander ranch seemed to hide in humility from its more magnificent neighbor, the domain of Jarvis Dean. The ancient weeping-willow trees drooped like a ceaseless lovely rain into their own dark and earthy shadow, and like a phalanx of green-tipped paintbrushes the long avenue of Lombardy poplars stroked the sky, swaying in a whispered rhythm from the corral to the Lander ranch house.

In the tiny patch of sunlight that lay like a gilded shield between the house and the somber poplars, Jane Lander's irises bloomed, purple, yellow, and then again purple, on each satin slip a brilliant sunny stain. Jane Lander's hands would probably never trim these beds again, Bruce thought as he strode down the walk leading from the house to the corral. The voices of the ranch hands, the bleat of sheep, the occasional barking of a dog, were rarefied to unreality through the blue filament of the air.

From the woolshed came the whirr-r of the shearing machine. Two or three hundred sheep stood in the corral outside, a ranch hand running them into the shed as quickly as the signal came from within. These were the pick of Bruce's flock of more than three thousand; they were great three-year-old Merinos, their bodies richly wattled, and their average yield of wool would be well over fifteen pounds. They were his great experiment in feeding for the best possible results in wool texture, and while other sheepmen had laughed at him and called him finicky and impractical, he had gone serenely ahead.

He went into the shearing pen, where the great tall hemp sacks were rapidly filling with wool. As the nervous sheep passed from the hands of the shearer, they were being caught by the brander, who gave each a smear from the branding brush. Bruce stood by and laughed at the ungainly look of a great-horned ram as, shorn of his magnificent coat and duly branded, he dashed to freedom.

When he had inspected the work and instructed his men, Bruce went out and made his way to the small pasture back of the poplars, where he whistled to his horse. When he had saddled him he mounted and rode off to the southward to visit one of his camps. He found the camp deserted. The flock, he knew, was grazing to the eastward, close to the edge of the Dean property. He caught sight of the sheep edging their way across the face of a hill. The herder was bringing them back to camp for the night.

Bruce rode out and circled to the rear of the flock, where he found his herder at work with his dog, bringing up the stragglers and keeping the sheep on the move toward camp. "We'll be ready for your bunch tomorrow, Ned," he told the man.

"Right, sir! I'll start 'em in first thing."

Bruce ran his eye over the flock. "They'll feel better when they've been to the shearers," he said. "It was very warm for a while this afternoon."

"It was warm, all right. I found it hard to keep my eyes open for a while."

"You've seen nothing more of that big coyote hanging around?"

"I'm thinkin' ye'll see little o' that one from now on," said the herder. "Them two shots I got at him 'day before yesterday come close to puttin' 'im away for keeps. But, since ye're askin', I'd hear something this afternoon over on the Dean place. Seemed like it was down there somewhere near the Gulch—or beyond."

"You heard something?" Bruce asked.

"It sounded like one o' them cats we get up in the hills sometimes—like a young-one cryin', it was."

"Did you go down to see what it was?"

He said that economies which he had insisted upon in his department would result in a saving of $125,000.00 per year, and while this would not go far in balancing the budget, if every state department would do as well it would help considerably. He stated that the state would have to conduct its business in the same manner as the average family conducts its finances, on a "pay as you go" basis, if the state government is to remain solvent.

NYA Seaplane

The above picture shows the dedication ceremonies at Crystal Lake, near Beulah, when the first of a series of seaplane landing docks constructed by the National Youth Administration was officially opened with the arrival of three seaplanes, one piloted by Capt. Robert S. Fogg, seaplane terminal expert of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, from Washington, D. C. Seven of these landing docks are now already completed with plans for 14 more to be constructed in the next few weeks in NYA workshops. Besides Beulah, the seven completed docks are at Houghton Lake, Bear Lake, Topinabee (Mullet Lake), St. Ignace, Escanaba and Lake Gogebic. Communities selected as sites for bases furnish the materials used in construction of the 20x10 foot docks. The interest and cooperation of these communities indicates that by next spring the state will be well supplied with seaplane bases according to reports from the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the National Youth Administration.
