Children's Halloween Party On October 31

The committee in charge of arrangements for the children's Halloween party to be held on Tuesday evening, October 31, announces that progress is being made in definite plans for the event, which is being sponsored by the Kiwanis club.

One of the features which will add greatly to the masquerade parade of youngsters through the business district will be the appearance of the high school band, which will lead the multitude of children who are expected to take part in the festivities. Present plans also call for prizes to be awarded on various classifications of costumes, and also for the best decorated bicycles, which will also be allowed in the parade.

There will be favors for all youngsters, as well as free cider and donuts, which will be served on the public school grounds. It is planned to have games, contests, and entertainment features for the pleasure of the children.

The committee for the Tim Doolittle dance and entertainment at the public school auditorium on Friday night, October 27, reports that ticket sales are satisfactory and from all indications there will be a large crowd at the dance. Proceeds from this event will be used to help defray the expense incurred in giving the children of the community a Halloween party.

Complete details concerning the Halloween party will be published in next week's Standard.

Rural Letter Carriers Hold Annual Meeting

The 2nd, 16th and 17th Congressional Districts, National Rural Letter Carriers and Ladies Auxiliary held their annual meeting on Saturday evening at the local Congregational church. Dinner was served to 90 members of the organization by the Baker Group of the church, assisted by Harry Russell of Ann Arbor, president of the district.

Arthur Schuman of Milford, state president of the Rural Letter Carriers association, addressed the group and gave a report of the national convention. Music was furnished by the Chelsea high school orchestra. Addresses were then given by Mrs. Burbridge of New Era, president of the Ladies-Auxiliary; Mrs. Alice Crist of Deerfield, secretary of the Auxiliary, and Mrs. Dorothy Holmes of Blissfield, district president of the Auxiliary.

Ivan Crist of Deerfield showed amateur moving pictures which he took while on a train trip from Chicago to Portland, Ore., then to the Golden Gate Exposition and on the return trip by the way of Pike's Peak. This feature proved very interesting.

At the business meeting following the program the following officers were elected:

President—Theo. Woods, Garden City.
Vice-Pres.—S. Gibson, Milford.
Sec.—Treas.—Frank Elliott, Sand Creek.
District President Ladies' Auxiliary—Mrs. Dorothy Holmes, Blissfield (re-elected).

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Allshouse were in charge of local arrangements for the meeting.

Honored On Fifty-fifth Wedding Anniversary

The 55th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. William Atkinson on Saturday, October 14, was the occasion of a delightful surprise gathering at their home on Madison St.

The rooms were decorated with garden flowers and three plants of yellow chrysanthemums, gifts of the Methodist Central Circle, the neighbors and relatives.

Dinner was served at 6 o'clock. The table, laid with a lace cloth, was lighted with green tapers, and was centered with a three-tiered wedding cake in white, dotted with silver, made by Mrs. Verne Evans of Flint.

Covers were laid for Mr. and Mrs. Harry Love of Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Haze Bennett and son, Leonard Alber, of South Lyon, Mr. and Mrs. Max Friedrich of Flint, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Alber and son of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atkinson of Wayne, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Gieske and daughter of Dearborn, and Mr. and Mrs. George Atkinson and daughter of Chelsea.

State Parks Provide Recreation Facilities For Many Tourists

By Gene Alleman
Lansing—The modern American gypsies, the Henry Smith family, have been re-discovering Michigan's 56 state parks.

Whereas Grandfather Smith was content to pitch his tent on any well drained camp site along a lake or stream, Henry and his tribe are spoiled to comforts of civilization. Grandfather may have liked to "rough it", but the present Smith clan go to a state park and they want conveniences of home.

All of this is merely leading up to the interesting fact, and a rather timely one too, that the state conservation department has a new problem child on its doorstep, and while officials think they know what to do about it, they're not absolutely sure.

One reason for getting the ending at the beginning, was the 1939 legislature's action in authorizing $500,000 more funds for the state parks' biennial appropriation (and that in the teeth of a determined economy crusade) for the express purpose of modernizing state parks throughout Michigan. Through the magic of CCC and WPA, this amount will be pyramided to $2,000,000 or more and the conservation department expects that many dollars to go a long way to pacify Henry Smith and his youngsters.

Trailer Gypsy
During 1938 the state parks issued a total of 51,000 camping permits. Approximately 188,000 persons lived in tents or trailers for one or more days.

Thirty-three per cent of all camping permits were for house trailers, those miniature homes on wheels that go rolling over highways, complete with beds and dishes and other domestic articles. That meant around 60,000 persons. Put that many people in one place and you'd soon have to have everything from a police court to a hospital to take care of them. Many state parks are just busy small cities, located miles from a municipality, but with most of city complications arising just the same.

The house trailer was responsible for 31 1/2 per cent of all camping permits in 1938. In the next year it climbed to 35 per cent, and conservation leaders began to wonder if parks might be overrun someday with the blooming things. Trailersites wanted (Continued on next page)

"Triple A" Officers Are Elected By Farmers

The Washtenaw County Agricultural Conservation Committee for 1940 was elected last Saturday at a convention in Ann Arbor, by delegates from all townships in the county. Fred Blumhardt of Bridgewater township was re-elected chairman, and Emory L. Mulholland of Superior township and Leo J. Heatley of Dexter township were re-elected members. Clayton H. Parr of Manchester township and Max M. Kalmbach of Lyndon township were chosen alternates. The 1940 term of office began immediately upon the re-election of the members to office.

Harry M. Cole of Lodi township was re-appointed secretary-treasurer by the committee at the conclusion of the election.

The community and county committees were selected by farmers in the townships and county to cooperate with and assist the Secretary of Agriculture in the administration of the national farm program during the coming year.

Delegates taking part in the county convention were chosen at community elections on Friday. At these elections, community Triple A committees were chosen. Community committees in Sylvan and nearby townships are as follows:

Sylvan—Chairman, Reuben A. Lester; vice-chairman, Wm. C. Pritchard; third member, Arthur W. Grau.
Freedom—Chairman, Wm. Uphaus; vice-chairman, Alfred H. Kuhl; third member, T. J. Kuhl.
Lima—Chairman, Arthur Koeng; vice-chairman, Fred Barth; third member, Ralph Stoffer.
Lyndon—Chairman, Max M. Kalmbach; vice-chairman, Homer Stoffer; third member, Earl G. Lee.
Sharon—Chairman, Gottlieb Jacob; vice-chairman, Raymond C. Jacob; third member, Herman Kulenkamp.
Dexter—Chairman, Leo J. Heatley; vice-chairman, Ernest J. Hopkins; third member, Earl Doletsky.

TRUCKS WILL HAUL LEAVES
Village authorities wish to again call the attention of residents of the village to the fact that it is unlawful to burn leaves on the streets, as the heat damages the blacktop surfacing. The leaves should be raked to the edge of the street and trucks will be provided by the village for hauling them away.

JOIN FRATERNITIES
The following students from Chelsea were recently pledged to fraternities at the University of Michigan: Paul D. Rogers, Psi Upsilon; John E. Fletcher, Phi Delta Theta.

Children In Court

By Judge Malcolm Hatfield

Racial Prejudice

The case of a young Chinese boy deserved special attention, for it revealed the existence of racial prejudice among the boys of one school.

The Chinese boy had been so badly beaten by his schoolmates that he suffered permanent head injuries. A witness, who could not identify any of the boys who had attacked the child, explained that before he could stop them several members of the gang had boasted that they were out to get all "Chinks".

The viciousness with which this child was struck on the head gradually led to a deterioration of his mental capacities. For three years his parents were able to care for him, but finally they had to appeal to the authorities to have him admitted into a state hospital for the feeble-minded.

Since this child was only twelve years old when he was sent away, it is likely that taxpayers will be forced to pay his care during the next fifty years or so.

No doubt the boys who comprised the gang merely reflected the attitude of their parents who were too ignorant to appreciate the rights of any other race. Too many children are led to believe that the foreigner within their gates, about whom they know nothing, is a creature of another world. Such children must be taught that all human beings are subject to the same feelings and desires, worthy of equal consideration. It should not be difficult to teach youngsters what a rich heritage each race has given to world culture.

Reclaiming the Family

About three months before a boy was to be paroled from a state reformatory, the court appointed a social worker to prepare the home for his arrival.

Upon approaching the boy's parents, the social worker informed them that it would be impossible to return their son to them unless they could correct their habits, ideals and mental attitudes. When the parents asked what was expected of them, the social worker stated frankly that the boy could not be placed in an environment where shiftlessness and drunkenness prevailed.

The parents heartily accepted her offer to provide remedial treatment so that the home could be approved by the court in time for the boy's return. After calling on the family each week for three months, the social worker had the satisfaction of observing that a permanent change had taken place in the lives of both parents. However, even after the lad was placed on parole in the custody of his parents, the social worker continued her visits for a period of eight months to forestall any possible relapse on the part of the parents.

Safetygrams

With the coming of the new sealed beam headlight it is going to be more important than ever that motorists who have this type of light dim their lights when approaching oncoming cars. More and better light will be given by this improved headlight, which makes it more convenient for the driver of the car; but it will be necessary that he dim his lights so that they will not obscure the vision of the drivers coming in the opposite direction.

A great many motorists do dim their lights, and much credit and commendation goes to them for this act of courtesy. But those who are indifferent to this rule and who flatly refuse to dim their lights make it not only inconvenient but dangerous to themselves and others.

Courtesy is the answer. It will promote safety for everybody.

Dust Important

Some of the dust particles in the air are very important as they form nuclei on which water vapor condenses when air is cooled sufficiently and without which there could be no clouds or rain.

State Parks Provide Recreation Facilities For Many Tourists

electricity for lighting. They brought radios along and wanted to plug them into the nearest light socket, just as they did back home. It was new and most complexing.

Today, 32 of the 56 state parks offer electricity at cost. You purchase "juice" according to the fuse, 50 cents per week up.

The campers, whether they live in trailers or in tents, want other conveniences, too. Chick Sales and Grandfather Smith got along together pretty well, but times have changed! But we're getting ahead of our story.

No Camping Fee

The average camper comes with a well-filled basket of food and leaves a few hours later. For him the basic state park law, passed during Governor Groesbeck's administration in 1921, provides that all parks must be open to the public without an admission charge.

Indiana charges a park admission of 10 cents per person, but Michigan has always adhered to the idea that state parks should be free.

Concessions are leased on annual contracts. Revenue from such concessions (refreshment stands, etc.) go into the state's general funds to be expended later for any purpose whatsoever.

To the Henry Smiths who ask park caretakers why the state does not provide more modern services in its parks, the stock answer has always been: "We are sorry. We do not have sufficient funds to provide these services free."

When Smith goes fishing, he expects to buy a fishing license.

When he goes hunting, he fully is aware a hunting license is necessary.

True, the price of the license in either case is nominal. "But multiply the small sum by tens of thousands, and it quickly grows into 'big money'."

Furthermore, the fishing or hunting license revenue returns to the sportsmen. It enables these services, to an important degree, to be "self-supporting."

Not for the state park camper, however. He pays no fee on a daily or weekly basis, although he expects a lot more service than the casual picnicer. The state department faces the quandary: "Shall we establish a nominal fee for camping privileges in state parks, say 25 cents per day for the entire camping party?"

If such a camping fee would be acceptable to the Henry Smiths, do we possess legal powers to authorize such a fee or must we ask the legislature for the right?

First Park in 1917

The state park system isn't old. Michigan's first park was acquired only 22 years ago when there wasn't such a thing as a state park commission or even a conservation department.

A virgin pine tract at Interlochen faced extinction in 1917 when lumber interests, sensing war-time profits, set up operations to reap a fat harvest.

The state legislature was opportunely to save the forest for posterity. Nearly 250 acres of timber were purchased for $60,000.

Mackinac Island, of course, was transferred from federal to state ownership in 1895 with the congressional stipulation that a separate state commission would be created to preserve the historic forts at Mackinaw City and Mackinac Island.

In 1915 the legislature created a seven-member state park commission. Two years later the Groesbeck administration merged various bureaus for forestry, fish and game, geology, law enforcement, forest fire fighting, and so on into one department, and called it the "conservation department."

To keep conservation out of politics, a non-partisan commission was created. The law also stipulated that preference should be given in choice of park sites to those on the Great Lakes and then, after that, to those on inland lakes or waterways.

Eleven Dodge Parks

Many state parks are the result of gifts.

John and Horace Dodge, the automobile family of Michigan, presented eleven parks to the State of Michigan. These parks are located in Oakland, Macomb, Livingston, Monroe, Wayne and Chippewa counties. (The Upper Peninsula park was once a hunting lodge of the Dodge family.)

At Grayling there is the Hartwick white pine state park, a gift from Mrs. Karen Beasle Hartwick.

In honor of the W. J. Hayes of Detroit, his sister presented the state with a park tract in the Irish Hills near Jackson.

J. W. Wells, lumberman of Menominee, was responsible for the state park at Cedar river on Green Bay.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard B. Bloomer of Detroit donated sites for four state parks in the Detroit metropolitan area.

These are a few examples.

Helpful Uncle Sam

Points along the Great Lakes where the federal government once maintained lighthouses have become state parks. The Old Mission park in Grand Traverse county, the Northport park in Leelanau county, and Fort Wilkins in Keweenaw county are illustrations. The state also owns sites for 19 additional parks.

When the Great Depression hit Michigan, times were tough. The state conservation department tightened its belt. No money was available for purchase of parks or for development of existing parks. Operations were curtailed to a low level.

Then came chronologically and alphabetically the CCC, the CWA, the ERA, and recently the WPA, each with millions of dollars of federal relief money. Work projects were needed. The conservation department had a backlog of work, long postponed. Thousands of young men were put at jobs, improving state parks and forests.

Today, four CCC camps are located at state parks. Eight CCC camps are performing forestry work in state forests, some nearby to state parks. The Grayling Winter Sports state park is being improved chiefly through the assistance of the National Park Service and the CCC.

Parks to be Modernized

Times have changed, and the Henry Smiths want more services than their pioneering ancestors. And so, largely through action initiated by State Senator Don VanderWerf of Fremont, chairman of the senate finance committee, the amount of $500,000 was set aside for needed improvements in Michigan's many state parks.

Because the tourist business is Michigan's No. 2 industry, few taxpayers will begrudge the spending of $500,000 to obtain $2,000,000 worth of improvements in our state parks. How to maintain the parks, thus modernized, is a horse of another color.

HOWELL—Three black bass that weighed over 10 pounds were caught in less than half an hour Tuesday morning by Frank Macki, 202 Madison street, from Howell lake. He caught them casting, using a pike plug for bait. The fish were exhibited to several about town to verify his claim. Mr. Macki is enthusiastic about bass fishing in Howell lake, and claims to have caught 37 of them weighing between two and three pounds each within the past few weeks. — County Press.

MORENCI—About $150 worth of garage equipment was stolen from the O'Donnell Chevrolet garage sometime last Thursday night when the thieves gained entrance to the building by removing a pane of glass in one of the rear windows. When the garage was opened the next morning, mechanics found the back door open, and footprints were tell-tale evidence that the intruders came in after the rainstorm. Also a large window frame, that was beneath the window where the thieves entered, was smashed to kindling. A close check revealed that a good many tools were stolen. Among the list of stolen goods were electric drills, reamers, an electric valve grinder, quite a few smaller tools, and a new energy wheel. All told, the loss of tools and accessories amounted to over $150.—Observer.

Another Fish Story
A fisherman near Manton, N. C., netted a 270-pound, eight-foot-long cow sturgeon, one of the largest fish ever caught in that region.

Jonah and the Sea
Davy Jones is said to be a corruption of Jonah, the name given by sailors to the evil spirit supposed to rule over the sea demons. Thus, to go to Davy Jones' Locker means to be drowned or to be buried at sea.

Third Grade

We have been studying about Indians. We know where they lived and how they built their homes. We have made a tepee and Indian books. Now we are learning about their food.

Now that it is autumn we are studying leaves. We are making spatter prints of different kinds.

We are glad that one of the third graders won a prize at the Fair. It was Jane Merrill. She received third prize for her baby tears.

Fourth Grade

We now have twenty-seven pupils in the Fourth Grade. Janis Turnbull has gone back to Dearborn.

In our courtesy play, "The King of the Kings," Douglas Vogel was the king and Sonja Weatherwax was the queen.

In arithmetic we are having a race. The ones who know their multiplication ride in a modern car. The others ride in an old-time car.

Our hippo booklets that we made while studying about Belgian Congo contain some of our work in language, arithmetic, and spelling. We made a folder and printed the words "My Papers" on it. In this we keep some of our daily papers.

We have been playing Hit-Pin-Baseball in our gym class. We like it very much.

Sixth Grade

Reporters: Joan Shutes and John Wellnitz.

We have a boy in our room that has to walk on crutches and we hope that he can throw them away soon. His name is John Wellnitz. His uncle has a moving picture of John limping and a picture of John walking on crutches.

Later his uncle is going to take a picture of John throwing his crutches away and walking away without them.

If we want our chryslid and cocoons to emerge in the spring and summer we must leave them outdoors all winter.

The chrysalis that Leroy May brought died. We did not know what was wrong. We were sorry that it died because we wanted to see what kind of a butterfly it would be. The larvae that Robert Breitenwischer and Laverne Holbrook brought died because it didn't have any dirt to go into.

Joan Shutes went to the fifth grade and borrowed a story of Christopher Columbus. She picked out the most important parts of the story and read them to the class.

The boys and girls are all playing baseball together now.

Shirley Pierce brought a Myrtle Warbler. It had been shot in the eye. We fed it on flies and two days later it died from the injury. We took about three pictures of the Myrtle Warbler. Shirley Platt brought the camera and we are glad she could.

We have many people who won prizes at the Community Fair. They are: Jane Downer, cookies, first prize; a dress, second prize; Barbara Eaton, terrarium, second prize; Doris Nagy, dresser scarf, third prize; Shirley Platt, dog, second prize; Edwin Lantis, rabbits, two first prizes.

Seventh Grade

The seventh grade is beginning to realize why gas and electric service costs as much as it does. They've decided that the reason lies in the difficulty in figuring out what to charge each customer. Since they have been working on tax rates in arithmetic class, they have begun to appreciate the "tax problem."

Much excitement was shown lately when one seventh grade girl lost what she called "her foot", in reality a paper tracing of the outline of her foot. The girl in question accused a seventh grade boy of having put "her foot" in his desk!

The seventh grade practices penmanship every day, but its themes still require greater neatness. The group is writing friendly letters for its theme work.

Marjorie Unstead won third prize on her canned goods and Norman Krantz won first prize in the handicraft section on his boats.

Road Mileage Will Be Tabulated By Counties

Lansing—The state highway department was preparing this week to furnish material to county road commissions throughout Michigan for a complete tabulation of county road mileage throughout the state.

State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner said that the recording of county road mileage was being undertaken at this time in accordance with Act 36, of the Public Acts of 1939. This is the law which requires a biennial certification of county road mileage by the State Highway Commissioner.

Complete map kits are being prepared by the highway planning division of the department to be mailed to each of the 83 county road commissions. On the maps, the commissions will designate the roads which were a part of the county road system in September, 1931 when the McNitt township road law became effective.

In another color, they will designate those roads which became a part of the county system between September, 1931, and July 1, 1939. This will include roads taken over by the counties under the terms of the McNitt law as well as roads which have become part of the county road system as a result of construction or for any other reason.

In order to qualify under the terms of the law, all roads to be designated must not only have been taken over and included in the county system but they must also be in use for at least three months of the year. The official mileages thus determined for each county will be used in allocating funds available from the gasoline tax to county road commissions.

"Safety" Is Slogan of Department of State

Harry F. Kelly, Secretary of State, and his entire organization have entered wholeheartedly into the "Safety" campaign that is now being actively pushed throughout all Michigan in cooperation with the model safety regulations recently enacted into law and which recently were put into effect. Mr. Kelly recently returned from a tour of the Upper Peninsula where he addressed motor vehicle division officials and investigators and acquainted them with all the provisions of the new law, and stressed its importance. He is earnestly striving to have all Department of State employees so fully acquainted with the necessity for general safety education that they can assist in this campaign in every way possible.

Other meetings of Department of State branch managers and employees will be held throughout the Lower Peninsula of Michigan to make this safety campaign effective and to help make all operators of motor vehicles safety-conscious.

Mr. Kelly is very appreciative of the splendid cooperation being given by the press of the state, automotive publications and other media in acquainting every citizen with the importance and timeliness of the new safety regulations that will cause many of the present-day traffic problems to disappear, and save lives and property.

Oldest Company

At Falun in Sweden is the oldest commercial company in the world. It has owned a mine there for 700 years and extracted from it over half a million tons of copper, more than 15 tons of silver and a ton of gold.

Ruling On Road Rights Being Sought at M. S. C.

"Who owns the rural roadsides?" That is a question which has been submitted to Michigan's State Attorney General Thomas W. Read to answer some of the problems that face P. A. Herbert, head of the forestry department at Michigan State College.

Need for a clarification of the legal rights of the public, of county and state highway commissions and of the owners of abutting properties is cited by Professor Herbert. Contrary to general belief, he says, it is apparent that the counties or the state do not ordinarily own the roads.

He commends the state highway commission for its program of ad-quate supervision of landscaping and maintenance of roadsides, but finds fault with many of the programs of county road commissions. Unsupervised roadside work, he indicates, is resulting in poor care of roadside trees and shrubs and building up friction with landowners. Exceptions among the counties, he says, are Wayne, Kent and Oakland where beautification is supervised under trained arborists.

In most cases a property owner's deed "runs" to the center of the right-of-way, or gives him title to an entire acreage without any mention of an easement for highway purposes. Ultimate solution would be outright purchase of highways, but this is admitted a costly correction.

We even "PEEN" the Springs!

The model illustrated is the Buick Super model 51 four-door touring sedan $1109 delivered at Flint, Mich.*

ONE little thing will illustrate the unsparing care we're spending to make this 1940 Buick the best car we've ever built.

Take the springs—not simply the great soft-action spirals that cushion the car, but even the valve springs.

After they're shaped and tempered and finished there's likely to be here and there a tiny scratch on the surface of the steel.

Such a scratch conceivably might start a fracture. So we shot-blast our springs—to heal such tiny scratches, "peening" the surface in miniature like hammered silver.

All through this massive, powerful, beautiful car you'll find special precaution like that.

For example, we used to balance by weight all sets of parts in our tornadic Dynaflex straight-eight engine, to cancel out even a hint of "rough."

We do that still, but now we do more. On special machines we electrically balance this great engine to microprecision perfection after assembly, paring metal if need be to smooth its velocity to velvet.

Seat angles, pedal positions, shock absorber travel-arc, brake areas, control tensions—every detail comes under special study.

When the experimental models had done their stuff on the General Motors proving ground, we turned 'em over to sharpshooters to punish, over thousands of miles of bad roads and good.

Out of it all comes an automobile we're mighty proud to offer—an unbeatable travelmate you will be thrilled to own.

Come drive it—see how excitingly close steel and rubber and glass can come to being alive!

Chelsea Defeated

By Wayne Van Orman

Last Friday, Romulus defeated Chelsea by a 28-7 score, and keeps a tight hold on first place in the league. Chelsea seemed to hold their own in the first half. When Romulus scored a safety and two touchdowns, Chelsea came back to score a touchdown on a line buck by Polich, after a series of passes had brought the ball down to Romulus' three yard line. Chelsea luck did not last however, and Romulus scored 14 more points in the last half, to Chelsea's none.

The Chelsea tacklers cannot seem to tackle low, although Cameron has been pounding that into their heads since the season began. Also, if there had been any blocking for Chelsea, several of our men would have scored instead of being thrown for losses.

"Home Safety" Will Be Conference Topic

Invitations to leading organizations in the state sound the call for a conference at Michigan State College on Tuesday, October 24, on "Home Safety," first of its kind in Michigan.

Under sponsorship of the division of home economics, the conference is designed to spur statewide educational efforts that will reduce needless accidents in Michigan homes, declares Dr. Marie Dye, dean of the college home economics division.

Sessions during the day are to be open to the public, but special invitations are addressed to chairmen and committees on home safety of the clubs in Michigan.

Included are such organizations as the Michigan Congress of Parents and Teachers, the Michigan Federation of Women's Clubs, the Detroit Federation of Women's Clubs, Michigan Federation of Business and Professional Women, State Department of Public Instruction, State Department of Health, Michigan Tuberculosis association, city supervisors of home economics, leaders in home economics extension groups, the Michigan State Grange, the Michigan State Farm Bureau and the Farmers' Union.

Outside speakers will include Miss Marion Telford, Chicago, representative of the National Safety Council. State department personnel and members of the college staff will contribute other portions of the morning and afternoon sessions.

Italian Clock

One of the oldest clocks in the world is on the old Clock tower of Venice, Italy. It has been ticking time since 1498, or for 441 years. On its platform are two black giants who have struck the hours 24 times every day or nearly four million times.

Oldest Toy

The doll is the oldest toy known and has been found in various forms among all nations and tribes from remote antiquity. In the British museum in London there is a collection of dolls, one of which is 4,000 years old, having been found in an Egyptian tomb. Dolls were also common in Greece and Rome. Recent scientific investigations seem to indicate that dolls were also used by some tribes in religious ceremonies.

Hunting Code Given By Conservation Dept.

Lansing—To guide the half million hunters who will frequent Michigan's fields and woods and waters this fall, conservation authorities bring to their attention again a hunting code that embodies many essential points of sportsmanship.

Without doubt most Michigan hunters do have great respect for both the written and unwritten laws which govern their sport. It is believed, however, that few will fail to benefit from occasional reference to the "rules" in printed form. The code follows:

Remember that hunting was once the sport of kings and princes only, and was regarded by them as an honorable and chivalrous pastime. Today it can be the sport of every man. Do nothing to degrade it.

Be considerate of others always. Do not use intoxicating beverages while hunting.

Wear the back-tag of your hunting license at all time afield. Keep a copy of the Michigan game law digest in your hunting jacket, your car or your suit coat.

Study the game laws. Be firm in your determination to observe them.

Do not forget the law forbids the cleaning or dressing of game in the field so as to destroy the identity of sex or species. Wait until you get home.

Learn to distinguish readily the legal game species. Always be sure of your target before you shoot.

Always ask for the privilege of hunting on a farm. Be polite. Introduce yourself to the owner. Park your car out of the way in his yard.

Remember that under the Horton trespass law a farmer may have you arrested for entering his premises to hunt without permission, even though his land is neither fenced nor posted.

If you are responsible for any damage, or find that damage has been caused by others, report it to the landholder.

Learn by practice to handle and shoot a gun safely—before you go hunting.

Adopt the slogan—"A gun is always loaded." Don't forget it.

Leave a clean camp. Be careful in disposing of lighted matches and cigar or cigarette butts.

Do not forget, discard or lose the report form attached to your hunting license. Use it to report your game kill before Feb. 15.

Cooperate with the conservation officer. He is employed to serve you and protect your rights. Sportsmen have nothing to fear from him.

'Peanut Belt' Is Extensive

The "peanut belt" stretches from Virginia to Florida, across to Texas and Oklahoma. It produced 1,300,540,000 pounds in 1936.

Colorado Program

Alarmed by a steady decline in the number of hogs on Colorado farms, state agricultural officials have promoted a state-wide financing program to aid farmers in buying hogs.

Birling

Birling is the art of navigating on logs. The sport is divided into three classes: racing logs, rolling logs and trick performances on logs, all taking place while the log is in water, usually on a rather turbulent river.

Maple's Fine Color
A great recommendation for the red maple in your tree-planting plans is its all-the-year-round beauty, says the American Tree association of Washington, which will send you tree-planting instruction. Even winter does not rob this tree of its attractiveness.

Creed of the Late King George V

The creed of the late King George V of England was as follows: "1. Teach me to obey the rules of the game. 2. Teach me never to cry for the moon; never to cry over spilled milk. 3. Teach me to win if I can; if I cannot, teach me to be a good loser. 4. Teach me to distinguish between sentiment and sentimentality; to esteem the first and despise the second. 5. Teach me never to accept and never to offer false praise. 6. Finally, if I must suffer, may it be like a thoroughbred that goes away by himself in order to suffer in silence."

Wagon Train Ruts
Aerial photographers, taking pictures of Haskell county, Kansas, farm lands for mapping purposes, saw lines across dozens of negatives and thought they were scratches. Closer examination disclosed they were ruts that had been made by wagon trains 70 years before.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Lovely, independent Autumn Dean, returning home to British Columbia from abroad without her father's knowledge, stops at the home of Hector Cardigan, an old family friend. He tells her that she should not have come home, that things have changed. She is welcomed at the "Castle of the Nobles," where she is greeted lovingly by her father, Jarvis Dean, who gives her to understand that she is welcome. Autumn cannot understand her father's attitude, though she gives him to understand that she is home for good. She has grown tired of life in England, where she lived with an aunt.

CHAPTER II—Riding around the estate with her father, Autumn realizes that he has changed. Between them they decide, however, to give a coming-out dance at the castle. When the night of the dance arrives, Autumn meets Florian Parr, dashing, well-educated young man of the country. Late in the evening Autumn leaves the dance, escorted home by Florian. He takes her to see his mother, an invalid, who is dead, thought to have killed himself. As soon as his mother sees Autumn she commands Bruce to take her away, that death follows in the wake of the Odella. Autumn is both saddened and perplexed by the invalid's attitude. Bruce, apologetic, can offer no reason for his mother's attitude.

CHAPTER III—Autumn calls again on Hector Cardigan this time to find out the reason for Mrs. Landor's outburst. Florian Landor himself because he loved Millicent Dean, her mother. Hector tells Autumn that the spot where his father's body was found years before. There he made Autumn, leaving with her a searching for a lost child. Bruce had found the child and there Autumn and he talk of their families. They agree that her mother and his father loved each other deeply—and that their love is the cause of present antagonism.

"I went as far as the Dean place, but I could hear nothing. I heard it once or twice after that an' I could a' swore it was a kid cryin'."

"When did you hear it last?"

"Mebbe an hour back—after I started headin' for home. I thought I'd come out in the evening, just to make sure."

Bruce turned his horse about and looked eastward beyond the line that separated his own land from that of Jarvis Dean.

"Perhaps I'd better ride down that way," he said, then betwought himself. When he had been very much younger, he had heard the men talk among themselves of the haunted gully known as Landor's Gulch. His herder had doubtless been loath to venture too far that way alone. "You're sure you heard a cry of some sort, Ned?" Bruce asked him.

"Oh, indeed I did, sir. As I say—like a young-one cryin' it was."

"I'll go down and take a look," said Bruce and rode away.

At the entrance to the ravine, Bruce swung his long body out of the saddle and walked slowly into the birches, letting his horse wander off to nibble the sweet young grass. On a little rise of ground he stood and listened. The shimmering air held a sad stillness; even the coquettish young leaves of the birches drooped in a melancholy quietude.

He had been standing there only a moment when from somewhere deep within the birches came the tiny bleat of a lamb. Bruce knew it could not be one of its own flock. Ned was too experienced a herder to permit any of his wards to stray. Besides, the sound had come from well within the land of Jarvis Dean. The responsibility was not his and yet he stepped down from the rise of ground and strode through the birches till he came to the creek. He followed the shallow stream downward until he came at last to the fatal spot which he had marked years ago and which he had visited occasionally during the summers that had come and gone since his boyhood—the spot where the sheep-herder had found the still form of Geoffrey Landor lying in the shallow creek.

He paused a moment and looked about him. The light of the waning afternoon was a pure amber sprayed with lacy leaf-shadows. Here it was, and on such a day as this, that Geoffrey Landor had last looked upon the world he had loved.

He lifted his eyes suddenly at the sound of a child's whimper. Only a few yards away, half-hidden behind the shining birches, a small boy was leading a lamb at the end of a rope. At first he could not believe his eyes. But when he called and the boy turned his face toward him and began to cry, Bruce knew him at once. It was the young son of Tom Willmar, Jarvis Dean's foreman. In a moment he had the boy in his arms. "Why, Simmy! Where did you come from?" he asked.

Simmy buried his face on Bruce's shoulder and sobbed. The lamb promptly lay down in the fern that grew beside the water.

Bruce laughed as he hugged the boy close. "Where in the world do you think you're going, Simmy?" he asked.

"I want to go home," Simmy sobbed. "I want to go home."

"Sure you do. Come along, son, and I'll take you home," Bruce comforted him.

He caught up the lamb under one arm, and carrying the boy on the other, made his way quickly out of the birches and whistled to his horse. Almost at the same instant he heard a woman's voice call from the hilltop to the northward and looking up he saw Autumn Dean riding toward him. He hailed her and waited until she had come down to him and had dismounted beside him.

"Where did you find him?" she asked Bruce.

"Down there in the gully. He looked as if he was getting ready to put up for the night."

"Simmy, you little imp!" Autumn said, stretching her arms out for him. "Come to me, darling."

Bruce surrendered his charge and stood by, the lamb still in his arms, while Autumn wiped the boy's eyes and cheeks with her handkerchief and kissed him to still his crying.

"Don't cry, darling. Autumn will take you back home." She looked at Bruce. "Could anything be sillier?" she said and laughed. "That's Mo-mo you have in your arms. The men told Simmy that they were going to dock Mo-mo's tail this afternoon and Simmy just wouldn't stand for it. He ran off to hide Mo-mo in the hills. He must have been gone for hours before anyone missed him."

"How did you know where to look for him?" Bruce asked.

"We have young Dickie to thank for that. After all hands had made a frantic search about the place, Dickie confessed he had seen Simmy go away in this direction and I rode out at once. The men are scouring the hills. I had no idea he would have come so far."

"It was sheer luck on my part," Bruce told her. "One of my men was over this way and told me he thought he had heard a child crying. I took a run over and—"

"Simmy, you little idiot!" Autumn scolded the boy. "We might never have found you. If it hadn't been for Bruce—"

She cuddled the youngster and smiled over her shoulder at Bruce who stood watching her.

"Send the reward to Ned, my herder," he said.

She set the boy on his feet and drew a sigh of relief as she looked down where the birches stood along the creek. Abruptly and disquietingly out of the obscure weave of the past, a pattern, a color, stood out vividly before her. This was the gully she had visited years ago against her father's desires.

"I used to come down here often," she said.

"I still do—sometimes," Bruce replied slowly.

She was sorry then that she had spoken. A wistfulness had come into Bruce's eyes that caused her to turn away.

"Come along, Simmy," she said quickly. "We've got to get you back home."

"I'll go along with you," Bruce suggested. "You won't be able to manage alone."

"Thanks, Bruce," she said, and got into her saddle at once.

When he had seated the boy before her, he lifted the lamb and mounted his horse, and in a moment they were riding slowly up the hillside on the way to the trail that led back to the Dean ranch-house.

"I hope you will try to forget what happened last night,"

Autumn turned to him and smiled

reassuringly. "One doesn't try to forget such things, Bruce," she replied. "One tries to understand them."

"That's better, of course," he said. "I am sorry it happened."

"It couldn't be helped. It was I who insisted on going down. Besides—I think I'm glad rather than sorry."

"I can't quite see that," Bruce protested.

Autumn was silent for a moment before she replied. Finally she turned and looked squarely into his eyes. "You and I, Bruce, have grown up together—without knowing much about ourselves. I lay awake last night wondering why your mother should have hated mine for twenty years or more. I think I have learned the reason. I spent an hour today with Hector Cardigan."

"Hector?"

"Yes. Has it ever occurred to you that your mother's bitterness comes of—"

She hesitated and Bruce spoke up. "Of jealousy?"

"Do you think it possible that the two—your father and my mother—may have been in love with each other?"

Bruce's eyes were straight before him as he replied. "I have never thought of either of them—without the other."

There seemed to be nothing to be said after that. They rode forward together, aware of a deep and silent understanding that was more than words. Once Autumn permitted her eyes to move quickly over his strong brown hands and along his arms to the powerful curves of his shoulders. And once he turned and saw that her rippling hair had come loose from its knot at the nape of her neck and had fallen deliciously about her rose-blown cheeks. Her hair must be a sort of autumn, he thought, but in the low sun it had tints of plum color. He found himself thinking that she had deep-sea eyes—mermaid's eyes, luminous gray-green. He wanted to tell her so, but forebore.

And just then a rider came racing toward them across the range. It was one of Jarvis Dean's men who had been searching for the lost Simmy.

CHAPTER IV

In his somber-toned study Jarvis Dean sat smoking his cigar. On a small, low table beside his chair a large book lay open, face downward, at the page where he had left off his reading nearly two hours ago. It was now five o'clock and the Sunday-afternoon sunshine lay in long slanting beams across the dark green rug that covered the floor. He must have dozed off, he thought, as the clock on the mantel chimed the hour. He had no idea it was so late. Dinner would be on before he knew it. It was odd that Autumn had not yet come back. Florian Parr had come up from Kelowna for the day and the girl had gone motoring with him. They would be in any moment now, surely, drinking their abominable cocktails and shattering the Sunday quiet with their inconsequential chatter.

Well, the younger generation had come to claim its own. It was only natural, after all, he supposed. But the coming had irritated him. He had never given much thought to the younger generation until Autumn had returned unannounced and taken possession of the gloomy old house with no other thought, apparently, than that the place was hers. It was surprising, too, how immediate and complete the possession had been. Even old Hannah had readjusted her whole psychology with Autumn as the center and controlling force of the new order. That, no doubt, was what irritated him. He could never have admitted to himself that anything or anyone in the world could have usurped his place in this house that had sheltered him for almost a quarter of a century. Nor was the girl conscious of what she had done—he would say that for her. She would be the first to protest that he was still master in his own house and his word was law. She was loyal, if loyalty could be said to exist in the hearts of these young irresponsibles, and she was affection itself. He had loved the girl devotedly during the years she had been away from him, but the feeling he had for her now that she was back had grown so deep that the tears started to his eyes now as he thought of her.

Just now he was more resolved than ever that they should quit the country. He had seen Autumn in the company of this young Parr. There was a nimble, quick, if ever there was one. What was wrong with a man like old Elliot Parr that he could breed nothing better than a hare-brained numskull like Florian? The race must be going to the dogs! And what could a girl like Autumn see in him? He wasn't even thoroughly a bad one—he was a mere nothing! Why in the devil hadn't the girl found herself a decent husband long ago? He blamed her Aunt Flo for that. Flo never had been one you could count on. Well, he would have no daughter of his mate with Florian Parr—much as he admired Elliot.

A cold chill passed over him as his thoughts turned to Bruce Landor. Jarvis had seen Landor and Autumn riding home together last night after that fool affair of the lost Willmar boy. What was getting into them that they couldn't take care of their own brats any longer? Damn it all, parents nowadays had no sense of responsibility. Well, he would look after his own, at any rate. M^{rs} Dean was called upon to do so, he would tell Autumn emphatically that the Deans and the Landors belonged to different worlds and they would stay where they belonged. If that wasn't enough, he would go further. He would—But why get so wrought up over a mere hypothesis?

He got up quickly at the sound of a motor coming to a halt before the house. He tossed his half-smoked cigar into the fireplace and stepped to a small cupboard that stood back in one corner. He poured himself a sizable drink of his favorite Scotch blend and held it for a moment toward the sunlit window before he drank it. He closed the cupboard and went to his room on the same floor. He would have to brush up a bit before going down to dinner.

Florian Parr filled the two glasses a second time and handed one to Autumn. He was well pleased with himself. He had spent a large part of a beautiful Sunday afternoon in the company of Jarvis Dean's daughter and had watched her as she swung her car dizzily over trails he had never traveled before. He had listened to her gay chatter and had done his best to contribute his own share of small talk about London and Paris and the men and women that belonged to the world he had left when his father had made it plain that if he wished to remain in it any longer he would have to pay his own bills. It had been a delightful outing—almost like a visit with an old friend.

He had thought Autumn beautiful when he had sat beside her during their ride but he had never seen anyone quite so ravishing as the girl who stood before him now and lifted her refilled glass. She was gowned in a coolly glowing white satin that clung the length of her body and flared out almost to the floor; small tips of green pumps peered out from below the white, and at her throat on a platinum chain hung a large single emerald, her father's gift, she had explained, on her twenty-first birthday.

He raised his glass toward her and smiled. "You may drink to what you please," he said, "but I'm toasting the queen of the Upper Country!"

"Queens are becoming so old-fashioned," Florian said, countering. "I am not flattered."

"My error," he apologized with a slight bow. "I'll compromise on the Princess—they're still in style, aren't they?"

"Expatriated," she observed.

"Good enough," he said, and drained his glass eagerly.

Autumn sipped her cocktail and took a cigarette from the box on the low table that held the shaker and its tray.

"You know," Florian went on, setting his glass aside, "I can't help thinking of you as carrying on the legend of your forebears—your mother and her mother. They must have been lovely creatures to have given life to such traditions as they have handed down."

"Lovely," Autumn said, "and flaming."

"Lovely—and flaming!" Florian repeated. "My father has told me about your mother, especially. You must be very like her."

"I know very little of my mother," Autumn replied, "except what I have been told."

He came and stood beside her, erect and confident in his manner. His eyes were narrowed as he looked down at her.

"You will find me very abrupt at times," Autumn, he said. "I have learned it simplifies matters very often to speak one's mind. I have been thinking about—us."

"Us, Florian?" Autumn smiled. "I'd almost swear you were going to propose to me."

"But I am," he said. "I believe you and I were made for each other."

She laughed lightly. "Why, Florian—what a quaint idea! I don't believe those words have ever been used before!"

"They may have been," he admitted, "but never more appropriately. We both come from adventurous stock. There is something untamed in both of us. We are both—gamblers. But I've never been more serious in my life. I want to marry you."

Autumn could not doubt his seriousness. The knowledge made her thoughtful. "Florian," she said, "you really are a dear. A perverse humor seized her. 'Suppose I tell you that I'll think it over?'"

"Excellent!" he replied, placing an arm abruptly about her shoulders. "You are permitting me to hope, then?"

She laughed up at him. "Not at all, Florian," she said. "I am—in effect—refusing you."

His serious mood vanished suddenly. He was actually amused at the situation. He chorled and stepped back from her. It was the first time he had ever really proposed to any girl in earnest—and she thought she was turning him down! Jarvis Dean's girl at that, with a background as ingenuous as sin! It was that background that lent piquancy to his quest, after all, and besides, by the Lord Harry, he was crazy about the girl!

Presently his amusement subsided and his lips drew to a thin, petulant line.

"I'll give you time to think about it, Autumn," he said, striving to carry it off with a gay, inconsequential air. "When we are alone again, I'll tell you how I love you."

"And how do you love me, Florian?" Her tone was gently mocking.

Florian stepped toward her again and grasped her wrist. Autumn was amazed to see that his face had gone suddenly pale.

"Don't be a little fool!" he said. "You know when you've met your equal—in nerve—in contempt for life. You are going to marry me, Autumn, because we see-eye to eye."

He released her and walked away as Jarvis Dean's footstep was heard descending the stairway. Autumn turned to greet her father.

"Come along in, Daddy!" she called. "Florian has just been proposing to me."

Jarvis Dean's face lighted with a smile as he entered the room. "He'll be safe enough so long as you don't accept him," he said.

"I think it was the cocktails that did it," Autumn laughed.

"A good dinner will fix that," said the Laird, giving Florian his hand. "How are you, my boy?"

"Topping!" Florian said, as their hands crossed. "I hope you have no objection to my proposing to Autumn. I really couldn't help it, you know."

"None whatever, sir. It's my opinion that she has had some experience in the business. She ought to be able to look after herself by this."

"Rather," Florian drawled. "She managed the affair quite nicely. I should say. Can I help you to a cocktail, sir?"

"No," Jarvis replied. "I'm a serious man and have too much respect for my stomach, thank God, to punish it with such infernal concoctions."

Florian laughed and filled his own glass. "Father sends you his respects, sir," he said, "and would like to see you when you can take a day off."

"And I'd like to see him, too," Jarvis replied, seating himself.

"I have asked Autumn down for the polo game next week-end," Florian went on. "Perhaps you could find the time, sir—"

"Not yet, not yet," Jarvis replied. "It's a busy time of the year for me. Besides, your youngsters will have more fun without too many old codgers hanging about."

His big white head was thrust forward in its characteristic way as though he were eager to show an interest in the plans and projects of these youngsters while his mind and his obscure spirit remained withdrawn, remote. Autumn had seen the deaf and the blind make that same piteous effort at sociability.

"Now, Daddy!" she rebuked him. "You're just fishing. You want us to assure you that you are the best-looking and most fascinating gentleman in the Upper Country, and that no party would be complete without you."

The tapers of the Laird's infrequent smile lighted for a brief moment of pleasure in his eyes.

"I could go—perhaps," he admitted. "I'll see how things are in a week's time. I'd enjoy a day with Elliot Parr."

Old Hannah stepped into the doorway and announced dinner.

An hour before sunset the sky had been overcast, with a purple caravan of thunderheads in the west; the thrumming of insects and the humid, flower-smell of the air presaged rain. On a grassy hilltop ten miles eastward from the Castle, Autumn dismounted from her horse and let the animal graze while she stood and looked into the valley below.

On the slopes that streamed into the valley like smooth reddish cascades in the low sun, more than seven thousand head of sheep moved in bands, twelve hundred to a band. At dawn the herders had started them from home on the trek up into the mountains to the very margins of the eternal snows; in the relentless, lonely quest for grass.

Now, from the hillside directly opposite her across the little valley, a crow's flight half-mile away, came the limply sweet note of a bell. It seemed to Autumn that the sound was almost visible, floating like some silver bubble within that rosy dome of silence, lingering and vanishing into the infinity whence it had come.

It was the note of the Basque bell. A fancy had seized her that morning while she had watched her father's men preparing for their departure. Only a week before, there had come to the ranch a youth of nineteen or twenty whose appearance had been so bizarre that the Willmar children had gathered around him with frank curiosity. He had come from the soda mines up north, and was seeking employment as a herder. He was slight of build, not over medium height, and on the back of his head he had worn a shapeless homespun cap, set so that a twine-colored mop of hair started out abruptly from beneath its peak. He had worn a short, tight-fitting coat, a jerkin, Autumn had supposed it was, also homespun and of a faded pea-green, so inconspicuous in the sleeves that the red joints of his wrists stuck painfully out from beneath them. Under the jacket he had worn a checked shirt and where the jacket gaped aside, suspenders of a brilliant green drew his threadbare trousers almost up to his armpits, leaving his bare shins exposed. He had worn hobnailed boots, and had carried a birch stick over his shoulder, at the end of which a gray bundle had been securely lashed. The Laird out of the kindness of his heart, and probably a whimsical humor, had given him employment as old Absalom's helper. His name, they had discovered, was Clancy Shane, but Jarvis Dean had jocularly nicknamed him "Moony."

On a sudden impulse, Autumn had gone back into the house and brought out the Basque bell. She had entrusted it to the keeping of Clancy Shane, who had secured it to the wether of the flock. And now, from the opposite hillside, came the pure sound of the bell, singularly innocent across the hollow distance.

The sound turned her thoughts again to Bruce Landor, who had scarcely been out of her mind during the past week. She thought of their meeting at Hector Cardigan's, when she had gone to fetch home the bell, and of her telling him about Hector's conceit concerning it. There was something in the sound of the bell now that brought the lovely wraith of her mother before her out of the nebulous glamor of the past. This had been Millicent Odell's world, the world of the pioneers and the subtle architects of empire, and now in turn it was her world. Suddenly she was glad, glad with all her heart that she was back home where life had meaning, where life was a profound harmony.

She pulled a bit of bloom off a sage bush and began to pick it to pieces with her fingers. There had come upon her a revelation that dismayed, frightened and exalted her. She stood for a moment looking down into the valley where the shadows were beginning to deepen; then, impulsively flinging away the shrub which she held, she mounted her horse again and rode westward toward the Landor ranch.

Bruce Landor sat before the rough plank table in the herder's cabin in the ravine. The place was deserted now, the men having gone to the hills the previous day. The lamp stood lighted on the table before him. He had put the place in order and was ready at last to leave for home. He drew together the papers on which he had been idly speculating, making estimates of his returns from the season's shearing, and noting the increase over last year's gains. The season had begun auspiciously. He swung quickly about in his chair as a slight sound came to him from the door. Autumn Dean stood there in her black riding habit, a russet scarf at her throat, the dim light casting little facets on her brown leather boots. Her hat was in her hand, and her hair had blown free. Her face was a glowing cameo against the outer darkness.

"Am I intruding?" she asked, entering almost hesitatingly. "One of your men told me I should find you here."

Bruce got up hurriedly and drew out the other chair. A flush had mounted to his brows, and as he stood for a moment uncertainly before her, he drew his hand diffidently back across his hair.

"You certainly aren't intruding," he said. "I was just waiting time with figures. But wherever did you come from?"

She seated herself and tossed her hat upon the table.

"Out in the hills," she said. "We had an early dinner, and I took a ride out for a look at the sheep. The men left for the range this morning. The evening was so soft and cool—I just couldn't go indoors. I came deliberately to see you after I got back. You see—I'm a bold woman, Bruce!"

"I'm glad you are! I've been as lonely as hell tonight. With the men all gone—"

"Loneliness is in the air, I guess. The sound of that darn bell did for me."

"That bell I got from Hector, you know. I gave it to a young Irish lad that father hired last week."

"You mean you sent that Basque bell of Hector's into the hills? You'd better not tell Hector that."

"Oh, I don't know. I think Hector would understand. That bell wasn't meant to hang in a drawing room."

"But it's such a precious thing—out on the range all summer—"

"It will come back. It's charmed. Anyhow—I like the idea."

Bruce lit a cigarette and Autumn, watching him, thought how well-shaped and brown his hands were. "May I have one?" she asked.

"Sorry," he apologized. "You see, in spite of myself, I still think of you as the little schoolgirl I used to know."

"That one you fought for?" she asked.

"The same," he replied. "You'll have to get over that, much grown up."

"Perhaps I'm afraid of getting over it," he said bluntly.

"Because—as a woman you've been in my mind constantly ever since I saw you again that first night," Bruce leaned forward slightly and looked directly into her eyes. Her glance fell slowly, and a line of quick pain appeared between her brows.

"And that frightens you, Bruce?" He rose abruptly, strode to the open door and stood looking out. A thin, misty rain had begun to fall. He tossed his cigarette out into the wet darkness and kept his eyes upon the spark until it died. He turned where he stood and looked at her.

"Autumn," he said simply. "You have been living in a world where men who were skilled in the art have made love to you. I know very little about that sort of thing. When I tell you that I've thought of nothing but you since that first night—I mean just that."

She looked at him gravely. "I rode over here tonight because I have thought of no one but you," she said softly. "But it hasn't frightened me."

"I've been thinking of one other thing, perhaps."

"I know, Bruce."

"Of course you do. We have talked about that. We will never know whether it was love that caused that tragedy twenty years ago. Perhaps no one knows."

"We do know they loved each other, Bruce."

"And we must settle between ourselves, once and for all, what bearing that has on our own lives. I have settled it for myself."

He moved back into the room and leaned against the table looking down at her. She returned his gaze for many moments without speaking. At last she got up impulsively and began to pace to and fro, her hands deep in the pockets of her coat. Bruce looked at her, and his muscles seemed to ripple all over his body. Her lithe, tempestuous motion back and forth across the room was like that of some beautiful, caged animal.

Presently she turned on him. "You and I have our own lives to live," she said vehemently. "It's absurd to think that we should be ruled by something that befell two people whom we can scarcely remember. They lived their lives as they wished—I shall live mine, in my own way."

He lifted one of her hands and kissed its soft palm. Then he took hold of her shoulders and turned her about so that she faced him. She let her head fall back and met his eyes solemnly.

"Autumn," he said. "My darling Autumn!"

Autumn slipped forward and was in his arms, and Bruce was kissing her in a glowing dimness which seemed to have caught them both up from the surrounding shadows. The rain drifted in gently over the still depth of their kiss. It was a rain that left a light, glistening web over their hair, their eyes, a young rain that spun them into one indistinguishable passion.

"I love you, Bruce," her voice was a stumbling whisper. "Terribly—so terribly."

Her lips moved softly over his eyes, over the line of his brown cheek where a hollow came when he smiled, and over his lips and throat. Presently Bruce placed his hands strongly upon her

Question And Answer Dept.

Problem—A plane leaves Los Angeles, Calif., at noon, traveling 300 miles per hour over a charted course, with New York City its destination; another plane leaves New York City for Los Angeles, Calif., at the same time, traveling over the same course at the same rate of speed. The difference in time is three hours between the two cities. Assuming the distance is 3,000 miles. Now then, will both planes arrive at the same time? If not, which will arrive first? Why? (Answer elsewhere in this department.)

Ques.—Can you answer me in your valuable paper just what coal is?

Ans.—Coal is an impure form of the chemical element carbon. When it burns, the carbon combines with the oxygen of the air. The impurities are left behind as the ash.

Answer to problem—The plane bound for Los Angeles, Calif., will arrive at its destination first, by six hours; it will gain three hours in traveling west, while the other plane will lose three hours in traveling east against the sun.

Ques.—What rare metal is used on the tips of high-priced fountain pens?

Ans.—The rare metal is called iridium, a metal which is somewhat like platinum, but much harder. This is why it is used for pen tips. It wears away much less rapidly than gold or platinum, and is equally resistant to corrosion. If you have a high-priced pen, look at the under side of the pen-point and you will see a little whitish speck; that is the iridium. Of course, the cheaper pens do not have the iridium.

Ques.—Can you answer what was the first metal to be used by man? Thank you.

Ans.—The first metal to be used by man, so far as is known, was gold, as it was found in metallic form in the beds of streams more than six thousand years ago. It did not have to be extracted from ores, and was used as ornaments before any other metal was discovered. The first metal put to practical use was copper, which began to be used for knives and other implements about five thousand years ago.

Ques.—How does a thermometer work?

Ans.—When things get hot they swell and expand a little. The quicksilver in the thermometer does this, and the glass tube and scale are merely devices which show us just how much the quicksilver (mercury) has expanded.

Ques.—I would like to know the date and day of the week on which the Battle of Santiago was fought in the Spanish-American War?

Ans.—The Battle of Santiago was fought on Sunday, July 3, 1898.

Ques.—Is it true or false that there is a plant that actually eats flies?

Ans.—It is true. There are several kinds of plants that do this. One of the best known is called the Venus Fly Trap. The leaves of this plant are double-like an open book, and on the inside of each leaf are three small hairs. If a fly touches one of these hairs the two halves of the leaf snap together and the fly is caught. The plant then digests the fly and absorbs the nutriment.

Half Million Hunters Go for Game and Birds

Michigan's army of small game hunters, half a million strong, began shooting Sunday in the lower Michigan season that lasts 22 days for upland birds and continues as late as December 31 in the southern part and January 31 in the northern part for rabbits.

Grouse hunters are fortunate in finding their birds this year near the peak of their cycle of abundance that had its low point in 1934-35. Pheasants, which were the quarry of most opening day hunters, are reported plentiful again throughout southern Michigan after a kill of more than 521,000 last year.

From the upper peninsula, where the season opened October 1, have come reports of an abundance of birds and fair to good hunting conditions as heavy foliage and high winds made the game hard to get. Hunting is good in the eastern end of the peninsula, fair in the western end with most birds taken near Kenton, Covington and Crystal Falls. Upper peninsula bags included partridge, sharp-tails, prairie chicken and rabbits.

To cope with the expected heavy concentration of hunters in southern counties during the season, 35 conservation officers from the upper peninsula and northern lower Michigan have reinforced the southern Michigan staff. Protection of hen pheasants particularly will be rigidly enforced.

Supplementing the work of department of conservation enforcement officers are more than 100 special deputy sheriffs, some of them paid by sportsmen's organizations interested in game law enforcement. Sunday hunting bans in southeastern Michigan counties somewhat complicate enforcement problems in adjoining counties.

Opening of the season found 110 cooperative hunting clubs in 24 counties and controlling 497,563 acres organized in cooperation with the conservation department and the Michigan State College extension service. Hunting is limited on the farm lands included in the club areas by a ticket system designed to protect farmers against trespass and vandalism while insuring continuance of controlled public hunting.

After a closed season in 1938, fox squirrels may be hunted in the lower peninsula from October 15 to November 5 inclusive. They are reported abundant in some sections. Gray squirrels may be shot in that northwestern part of the lower peninsula bounded by highways M-46, U.S. 131, M-113 and Lake Michigan.

From numerous lower Michigan points have come reports that rabbits, favorite quarry of many a small game hunter, have increased considerably in numbers during the last year.

Raccoon hunting, with no bag limit, will not begin until November 1, the season extending through Dec. 15.
