Thanksgiving for the Past

Hopefulness for the Future

Since the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock set apart a day after their first harvest, Thanksgiving has been an American institution. As a day of family feasting and pleasure, it has no equal on our calendar. But Thanksgiving has a deeper meaning to us, too. It is the day which we have specifically set aside to give thanks to the Almighty for the benefits received during the past year, and on which we express the hopefulness that the next year will bring us our needs and that "peace will reign on earth."

Chelsea Odd Fellows Donate to Blood Bank

A group of members from Chelsea Odd Fellow Lodge No. 101 journeyed to Ann Arbor on Sunday morning to give the first blood required for the institution of a blood bank at the University of Michigan hospital.

Odd Fellows in the State of Michigan have volunteered to give their blood for transfusional purposes to the cases in which the blood cannot be secured elsewhere. The blood is always given free of charge and only to patients who cannot afford to pay for it. This program was originally conceived by Francis M. Dodge, a Detroit attorney. Since its inception early in 1938, forty-five units or clubs have been set up in Michigan. Over 250 transfusions have been provided and this service has saved the lives of a large number of persons.

Medical records of all volunteers have been made and through this means it has been possible to use this blood as a serum. Quite a number of persons have been located who have recovered from streptococcus and various other types of infections which makes their blood valuable to persons suffering from the same disease.

Due to the reductions in various appropriations from the state and county governments to the University hospital, they have not been able to give transfusions whenever desirable. This has been especially true of cases hospitalized by the Michigan Crippled Children's Commission.

GEORGE GOT HIS BUCK!

Geo. W. Hart, one of the last hunters to go north last week, was the first to return with a buck. Mr. Hart started for the north country Tuesday night, shot a buck weighing 208 pounds on Friday morning, and arrived in Chelsea at 2:30 on Saturday morning. He was hunting in the Baldwin district when he killed the buck. The publisher of The Standard acknowledges with thanks the gift of a luscious venison steak from Mr. Hart—we hope he gets a buck every year!

FARMERS' CLUB MEETS

The Western Washtenaw Farmers' club was entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper on Friday evening. Supper was served to about 35 members. Mr. Harper showed two reels of films, one on Mexico and the other on the southwestern part of the United States. The remainder of the evening was spent in a social way.

State Liquor Sales Show Big Increase

Editor's Note: This is the second of a series of articles dealing with the liquor situation in Michigan.

By Gene Allen
Lansing—Increase of Michigan liquor sales for 1939, as compared with 1938, has far exceeded the rise in farm and industrial purchasing power.

According to latest statistics, Michigan's buying income has soared $806,000,000 since Jan. 1, 1939, due chiefly to the revived automobile industry and the resultant demand for parts and accessories, much of which are made in this state. In fact, Michigan leads the U. S. in point of new buying power. New York is next with $245,000,000, while Ohio is third with $236,000,000.

Putting this into percentages, Michigan workers have 11.4 per cent more payroll dollars to spend than they had a year ago. Yet they have been spending (January through September) 18.6 per cent more money for alcoholic beverages. Translate all this into dollars (1938 liquor sales totaled over 37 millions) and you have a pretty sum of close to seven millions.

Dead Man's Chest
In Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island" the lusty cry of peg-leg John Silvers was "15 men on a dead man's chest" with a "yo, ho, ho and a bottle of rum."

Michigan's version concerning the resurrected John Barleycorn calls for three men as members of the state liquor commission and 108 million gallons of distilled spirits, wines and beer in 1938 instead of one bottle.

The state liquor control commission has a responsibility which even Gabriel would shun. It is given the task (Continued on next page)

Former County Clerk Gets Prison Sentence

Former County Clerk Emmett M. Gibb was convicted Tuesday afternoon, November 14, of embezzling public relief funds and was sentenced to a term of 5 to 10 years in prison by Circuit Judge George W. Sample, who imposed the sentence immediately after the jury rendered its verdict. The court recommended the minimum sentence. The jury deliberated only 33 minutes.

Although accused by Prosecutor Albert J. Rapp of embezzling $5,547.52 in relief funds handled through his office between January 1, 1936 and April 5, 1939, Mr. Gibb was charged and convicted on only a single count: that he embezzled $669.51, paid into the clerk's office September 31, 1938 by Ypsilanti township for relief.

Mr. Gibb, who is 47 years old, was elected county clerk in 1934, re-elected in 1936 and again re-elected for a third two-year term last November. He resigned from office last May, after a special audit by the state auditor general's office disclosed an alleged shortage in his relief account. He was secretary of the State Association of County Clerks.

In the custody of Deputy Sheriffs Floyd A. Mattis and Richard P. Klavitter, Mr. Gibb was taken on Thursday to the southern Michigan prison at Jackson to begin serving sentence.

Principal Confers With Local U. of M. Students

V. W. Downing, Chelsea high school principal, was in Ann Arbor last Thursday consulting with former students, now freshmen in the University of Michigan. University freshmen from Chelsea this year are: James Daniels, Stuart Dingle, John Fletcher, John Freysinger, Howard Haselschwardt, Betty Seltz and Archie Wilkinson.

About 140 principals and teachers of 85 high schools and five junior colleges participated in the consultations. Altogether, approximately 875 freshmen visited with former teachers and principals, in the plan sponsored by Registrar Ira Smith of the University.

This consultation plan, which has been in operation for the past 12 years, is intended to bring about a closer relationship between the high schools and the University, Mr. Smith said.

The consultations enable the high school teachers to detect needs in local educational systems and to become more familiar with university methods. Such meetings also aid university instructors in studying preparatory school methods and permit student discussions of freshmen problems.

GRADUATES FROM J. B. U.

Miss Irene Stofer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Homer Stofer, and a graduate of the Chelsea high school, was graduated from the Jackson Business University on Tuesday, November 14.

The exercises were held at the Hotel Hayes and Rev. Carl S. Winters addressed the members of the graduating class. His subject was "Invincible Youth With An Impossible Task." The annual graduating dance followed the exercises.

Miss Stofer is now employed at the Zoerman-Clark Manufacturing Company of Jackson.

STATE DEPT. ORDERS SIGNS

A representative of the State Highway Department was present at the meeting of the village council on Monday evening and informed them that two reflector "Chelsea" signs have been ordered for the Manchester Road intersection with the new US-12.

Information has been received from the highway department that because of the shortage in crushed stone deliveries it would be impossible to surface the cement pavement in the village this fall. The work was scheduled for several weeks ago.

Show Big Increase

of controlling the liquor business—preventing abuse, greed and unfair trade practices—safeguarding youth from evils of alcohol-promoting temperance—and so forth. It's a big assignment!

To regulate the profit motive, the state "freezes" prices and turns over to the state general fund a substantial slice of revenue. During 1938, for example, liquor sale netted the state treasury $8,806,810.93, while the sale of stamps, licenses and other tax items brought in $5,084,357.35. (The state welfare appropriation for the present fiscal year was $8,750,000).

What To Do?

In handling a subject as controversial as liquor, obviously the state commission must strike a "happy medium" much of the time—the middle path between two possible extremes of public opinion.

Hence answers to the following are not easy to arrive at:

First, should the number of liquor outlets be reduced? Through several state administrations since repeal of the 18th amendment, the number of selling places has been gradually increased until today there are 16,202 different spots in Michigan where an adult can purchase a drink. This number is exclusive of the 100 state liquor stores.

In the opinion of many observers, this number is excessively high. Too many liquor dealers invite winking at the law because of intense competition and resultant lessened net profit per outlet. On the other hand, to reduce the number below reasonable needs would only invite the return of the "blind pig" of prohibition days.

Second, when should such places be required to close? The present closing hour is 2 a. m. but there has been some agitation for a midnight limit. This matter is complicated in some places by night work shifts in mass production industry. There is also the "blind pig" alternative.

Third, how can sale of liquor to minors be prevented? The state law forbids sale of serving of drinks to minors 18 years old or under. How is the bartender to know the youth's age? Should the state issue license cards to drinkers? (The tax implication of this one evoked a cloakroom tempest at the 1939 legislative session).

Politics Again

Fourth, how can politics (or favoritism) be eliminated from the state's handling of liquor goods?

Remember, the state is the employer of 730 persons who handle and sell liquor and otherwise participate in administration and enforcement of the state act and the commission's regulations. How can favoritism be removed from selection of liquor goods by the state for sale in Michigan? (Here is a potential source of major corruption. Even the "gifts" of liquor goods to politically favored individuals at the 1937 Lansing Christmas season caused a mild scandal and a public rebuke from Frank Murphy, then governor.)

It has been said many times that national prohibition was largely the result of an indifferent and selfish liquor industry. Distillers and brewers in their rush for profits condoned or overlooked abuses which finally outraged sensibilities of American voters everywhere. (Contrast to this the voluntary piloting of movies by the motion picture industry through Will Hays; control of baseball by the major leagues through Kenesaw Mountain Landis.)

Hence advocates of state liquor control maintain that reasonable safeguards against liquor abuses are actually for the best interests of the liquor business itself. Control thus supercedes revenue as the state's primary objective. It is social rather than economic in purpose.

Because of the importance of the above pending problems, considerable importance is being placed by Lansing observers on the appointment to be made by Governor Lauen-Dickinson within the next few weeks. The term of V. F. Gormley, Newberry, expires on December 15. The appointee must be a Democrat.

I am frequently asked, "Is it safe to travel as fast at night as it is during the day?"

Some persons feel that they can see oncoming cars better at night, especially around curves and over hills, because their lights reflect into the sky. This is dangerous confidence.

The driver has less visibility at night than during the day. He cannot see what lies beyond the beams of his headlights, and the glare of headlights from oncoming cars affects his vision.

Remember, at 50 miles an hour you are traveling approximately 75 feet per second. Could you stop within the range of your headlights if they brought an object on the road into view?

It's Smart to Drive Carefully!

Question And Answer Dept.

Problem—A man fell from a 20-story building to the pavement below and did not get hurt. How come? (Answer elsewhere in this department).

Ques.—How do the peoples of the major nations of the world compare in illiteracy? How much difference in percentage?

Ans.—Germany leads the world with the least number of illiterates, with a percentage of illiteracy of about one-fifth of one per cent. The United States is a close second with about one-third of one per cent. England is third with one-half of one per cent. Italy, one per cent. France, four per cent. Russia, 5 per cent. We have no statistics on Japan.

Answer to problem—The man had heart disease and was dead before he hit the pavement.

Ques.—Were there ever any presidents of the United States who could not make long speeches or addresses off-hand?

Ans.—Yes. President Coolidge always read his speeches and addresses from manuscript.

Ques.—What country in the world raises the most wheat? And what country raises the most corn?

Ans.—The United States leads all other countries in the production of corn, with an average yield of three billion bushels. Russia leads in wheat with an average of four billion bushels.

Ques.—What day of the week was the battle of Santiago fought? My history says the battle was fought on July 3, 1898, but does not give the day of the week.

Ans.—The date is correct, and the day of the week was Sunday.

Ques.—What is the correct way to pronounce Illinois and tomato?

Ans.—The correct pronunciation of Illinois is either "Illinoi" or "Illinoiz". The first is preferred. You can't be criticized, no matter which way you choose to pronounce it. Tomato is pronounced with the long "a" as in "aid". In England it is pronounced with a short "a" as in "at". The accent is on the second syllable in both cases.

Ques.—What is the meaning of the abbreviations "i. e." and "e. g."?

Ans.—The "i. e." is the abbreviation of two Latin words which mean "that is." The "e. g." is also the abbreviation of two Latin words meaning "for example."

Ques.—Is "Indian summer" a natural, fixed season of the year? If so, when does it come? And how long does it last?

Ans.—There is no such thing as "Indian summer" in accurate meteorological observations. It is commonly applied to a period of time when the weather is calm, mild and fair, following a period of unseasonably cold weather known as "squaw winter". "Indian summer" may come three or four times or not at all in the fall before real cold weather sets in.

Ques.—Were there any signers of the Declaration of Independence who were Catholics?

Ans.—Yes. Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, Md.

Expenditure of Family Income Is Itemized

Where does a family's money go for living expenses and what are the differences in such expenditures on the farm and in the city?

Answers to these questions have been ferreted out from family account books kept by typical rural and urban families in Michigan in cooperation with the home management department of Michigan State College in extension service to the state.

On the farm the average family, says Julia Pond, home management specialist, spent $814.39 for living but the average in town was $1,690.98.

Farms contribute large amounts to a family's living. For food the farm family spent cash totaling $223.82, while the town dwellers were spending $466.10. Farm families do eat well, however, for the farms contributed $207.43 to the family larders. In fact the average farm contributed $418.16 to the family living, when housing and fuel are figured.

Automobiles take second place in a year's demands on pocketbooks. Farm families averaged $127.08 spent on cars, but town families more than doubled this with an average of $271.21. Townpeople spent two dollars for each one spent by farm families as gifts or contributions. Rural expenses for entertainment and education were but half, for home-made fun proved less expensive and more commonly employed in the country.

Clothing bills were $125.09 in the country but were $308.47 in town. Medical costs in the city averaged $61.67, but were $44.80 for farmers. Farm families averaged four persons, city families 4.2 persons. Counties represented are Menominee, Delta, Genesee, Kent, Kalamazoo, Wayne, Sanilac, Lenawee, Saginaw, Ogemaw and Calhoun.

SALINE—For about an hour and a half after the Minnesota-Michigan game last Saturday the traffic through Saline was worse than Detroit at the time of change of shifts of working men. At one time the line of cars waiting for the light to change extended from the bank corner to the railroad tracks.—Observer.

DEXTER—To 14-year-old Rufus Burt goes the honor of bringing in the first buck of the season. The youth, on his first hunting trip, felled a six point buck at about 7:15 in the morning of the opening day. Many a seasoned hunter may look with envy on our youthful Daniel Boone.—Leader.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith had gone to Indianapolis to attend a convention of the Chrysanthemum Society of America and Mr. Smith was to have been the principal speaker. Mr. Smith had been a florist for 63 years. Over 50 years had been devoted to the study and development of chrysanthemums. He developed and bred 665 varieties and they ranged in size from tiny bebe mums to magnificent blooms, 12 to 14 inches in circumference, that gained for him world wide recognition.—Observer.

PINCKNEY—A few years ago Muri Defoe, editor of the Charlotte Republican-Tribune was instrumental in getting a pardon for Irving Latimer, Michigan's celebrated lifer who served nearly 50 years for homicide. Since then nothing has been heard of Latimer. An exchange chided Defoe about Latimer's drop from public sight and asked if he was employed on the Charlotte Republican. Defoe answered that he was not but was an inmate of Wayne poor house at Eloise. His release from Jackson prison at his advanced age was most likely a blunder as he would have been happier as Jackson's best known lifer. In Eloise he is just one of thousands of other inmates. He had been out of the world so long that he was unable to adjust himself to it and so presently found himself in the home for the friendless.—Dispatch.

Children In Court

By Judge Malcolm Hatfield
Spotting Future Criminals

Since all children are required to get at least a public school education, public schools are the most logical places to detect signs of possible future delinquency. In order to facilitate such work, each school system should provide for the services of a trained psychiatrist to aid in discovering children who show delinquent tendencies. Every school system should provide sufficient funds and proper methods to accomplish the following results: (1) to discover, diagnose and treat each individual case of potential delinquency; (2) to help enrich the curriculum, individualize the methods of instruction and also provide adequate recreational facilities throughout the year; (3) to provide mental hygiene clinics and child training education for both adults and high school students.

If all schools were to establish psychological clinics, it would eventually be possible to abolish the juvenile court. There is, however, no indication that our public schools will usurp the duties of the juvenile court. They often fail to interest themselves in the personalities of their maladjusted pupils or their environments. As the school controls the education of a child for eight years, it should be in a position to offer greater service in rehabilitating lives of delinquents who pass through its doors.

The cause of delinquency must be discovered in each individual case; an adequate follow-up treatment should be applied before the difficulty can be removed. Both the parents and the teachers should correct all forms of undesirable behavior at its first manifestation. The new psychological approach also insists that we cease labelling certain children as delinquents by placing them in special classes. Finally, all agencies attempting to aid children, should unite in one definite program to supplement the work of the home and school.

The problem of delinquency is so complex that its manifestation cannot be eradicated by the school alone. It requires all the united efforts of the school, the home and the community to solve this problem. The visiting teacher and the attendance officer, however, can greatly assist in the discovery and eradication of delinquency by sharing their confidences with both the home room teacher and the parents. Frequent visits to the home by the teacher and attendance officer help to maintain a spirit of cooperation between the home and the school. The visiting teacher can advise both the parents and the home room teacher in regard to the child's behavioristic problems, because such a teacher usually possesses special training which enables him to point out many obscure symptoms and thus suggest a remedy. Rural teachers should be trained to differentiate between the child with a deep seated emotional conflict and the youngster who is passing through a temporary disturbance. Such a teacher could re-direct the child into new types of activities which would eliminate certain feelings of inferiority, injustices, etc.

Odd Book Operations

Some unusual operations are performed on ancient books and manuscripts in a special laboratory at Moscow. Two thousand Chinese scrolls taken there for treatment were moldy and partly stuck together, and of fragile paper. An electrical table was made for them, and by charging them to a high potential with static electricity they were opened up successfully.

Elimination of Alfalfa Wilt Sought By Science

Scientists at Michigan State College are hot on the trail of ways to combat alfalfa bacterial wilt. The disease may not be serious enough to rob Michigan of its crown as No. 1 alfalfa state but does indicate necessity of learning to live with the crop infection.

Management practices can help immensely, yet just a simple mistake of using a mower in an untouched field after mowing a wilt infected alfalfa acreage spreads the bacteria.

Dr. J. H. Muncie, plant pathologist, and Dr. C. R. Megees, crops specialist at the college, have undertaken surveys to uncover battle tactics.

Their work to date is summarized in a new publication, Circular Bulletin 171 "Alfalfa Bacterial Wilt in Michigan," available through offices of county agricultural agents or by writing the bulletin room, Michigan State College, East Lansing.

It's wise for any farmer to recognize alfalfa wilt, learn to live with it but continue to admit and grow alfalfa as a good soil building hay and pasture crop," they conclude. But they suggest means of reducing spread, of turning an infected field into other production at least temporarily and changing management practices to cut down rotation periods. Most prevalent in southern counties in Michigan, the bacterial wilt is gaining footholds farther and farther north.

Some infection takes over a field after first cuttings. Mower knives spread infection from one plant to another and even into free fields. One recommendation involves treating a mower with formaldehyde and an airing before cutting a field which has no wilt. Smooth brooms with alfalfa seems to deter the spread. Use of clovers permits soil building without wilt. Plantings should not be made for new alfalfa where surface drainage might carry bacteria down from an infected field. A nine-point program in the bulletin highlights the findings of the men to date.

LIFT the bonnet of a 1940 Buick and you'll see a hoodful of power plant whose very dimensions reveal the vast reserve of energy it puts at your command.

But just start this over-size giant—stir this sleeping brute into action, and you find that only the blur of the fan blades betrays its readiness to get up and go!

For you're looking at an engine balanced within limits eight to sixteen times closer than ordinary practice permits.

So precise is Buick's exclusive method of micropoise-balancing after assembly that a misplaced dime's weight on the flywheel rim is enough to reject any engine until that condition has been corrected.

On that score alone this hundred-plus horsepower straight-eight qualifies as the world's one-and-only of its kind.

But in addition to that it's a valve-in-head engine, 10% more efficient, size for size—and it's a Dynaflex valve-in-head, which means it gets more good out of every drop of gas!

The car this great eight powers has plenty else to lay claim to your attention—smart new styling, Buick Coil Springing's "full float" comfort, "finger flick" Handshift transmission, seats in some models that are next thing to five feet wide.

But even if you overlook them and all the rest of its 72 new features—your best buy's still Buick on its power plant alone.

There's not a quiver in a hoodful of ready-to-ramble energy—and nobody will be more pleased to prove it than your nearest Buick dealer!

Synthetic Textile Fiber

Predicted 273 Years Ago

A prediction made 273 years ago by Robert Hooke has been fulfilled in our times more perfectly than he could possibly have foreseen. Some time prior to 1665 Hooke built himself a microscope and examined among other things, a number of textile materials, writes Edward R. Schwarz in "Technology Review."

As a result, we have from his tests not only detailed and penetratingly keen descriptions of his observations but some of the finest micrographs of fiber and fabric ever made.

Said he, in "Micrographia": "A pretty kind of artificial stuff I have seen, looking almost like transparent parchment, horn or isinglass and perhaps some such thing it may be it looked very like the substance of the silk. And I have often thought that probably there might be a way found out to make an artificial glutinous composition much resembling, if not fully as good, nay better, than that excrement or whatever substance it be out of which the silkworm withdraws his clew. If such a composition were found it was certainly an easy matter to find very quick ways of drawing it out into small wires for use. I need not mention the uses of such an invention, nor the benefit that is likely to accrue to the finder; they being sufficiently obvious. This hint, therefore, may, I hope, give some ingenious, inquisitive person an occasion of making some trials, which, if successful, I have my aim, and I suppose he will have no occasion to be displeased."

Auto Was Foreshadowed

In Early 15th Century

The idea of the automobile dates back to the Fifteenth century, according to American Petroleum Institute. The scientists in Leonardo da Vinci's time did not visualize the streamlined vehicle of today, but they toyed with the idea of mixing air and fuel, igniting the mixture in an engine and using the power for driving machinery.

There were all kinds of ancient ideas about the internal combustion engine. In the Seventeenth century a Dutch scientist, Christian Huygens, proposed to manufacture a "gunpowder engine." It was not so good, but it renewed interest in the possibilities of the internal combustion engine.

In the Eighteenth century people were agog over an engine which would run on coal gas. It was built by John Barber, an Englishman. Designs were improved, development was expedited, and the internal combustion engine manufacturing industry really was born. There were "double-acting" engines which used the crankshaft, connecting rods and piston assembly about the same as they are used in the modern internal combustion engine.

The German engine designer, Otto, adapted the principles of the first four-stroke cycle theory advanced by the French scientist, Beau de Rochas. It became the forerunner of today's four-cycle automotive gasoline engine.

Tower of Pisa Has U. S. Rival

The Leaning Tower of Pisa in Italy, long considered a world wonder, has its living counterpart in the famed Grizzly Giant, a towering Sequoia tree in Yosemite National park, comparative figures reported to the national park service regional office of the interior department disclosed.

Figures from Yosemite reveal that the big tree, 208 feet high, leans 18.3 feet off center or approximately 10 degrees and 58 minutes. So well known for its off-center angle of four degrees and 27 minutes or 14 feet, the Tower of Pisa, 179 feet high, leans less than the Grizzly Giant. While the angle is so apparent in the latter, it is far less noticeable in the great Sequoia due to its large spreading branches and proximity of surrounding trees.

CORRECTION

In the obituary of Mrs. Rosina B. Eismann, in last week's Standard, it was stated that Mrs. Eismann had resided with her sister, Miss Margaret Eisele, since the death of her husband, Christian Eismann, in 1909. This was an error, inasmuch as Mrs. Eismann continued to live on the home farm in Lima with her step-son, Paul Eismann, until 12 years ago, when she went to live with her sister in Freedom township.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish in this way to thank our many friends, neighbors and relatives for their many acts of kindness during our recent bereavement, and for the flowers sent; also Rev. Fontana for his comforting words and the choir for their music.

Courtesy

HOW one appreciates courtesy! It may be expressed in one's opening of a door, in a smiling "Thank you," in the gracious doing of a commonplace duty, or in listening with interest to another's views. Courtesy includes deference and respectfulness. Yet, is there not something more than deference and respect involved in genuine courtesy? Indeed there is. It is love for mankind. Henry Drummond has spoken of courtesy as "love in little things."

If one truly loves, does he not express that love in even his least contact with others—in thoughtfulness for others, in deeds of kindness, in little helpful acts, all of which constitute what we are pleased to call courtesy?

Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in her "Miscellaneous Writings," says (p. 250): "Love is not something put upon a shelf, to be taken down on rare occasions with sugar-tongs and laid on a rose-leaf. I make strong demands on love, call for active witnesses to prove it, and noble sacrifices and grand achievements as its results. And she also states, as a human quality, the glorious significance of Love is greater than words: it is the tender, unselfish deed done in secret; the silent, ceaseless prayer; the self-forgetful heart that overflows."

The Apostle Peter admonished this (1 Peter 3:8, 9): "Ye all of one mind, love as brethren; be pitiful, be courteous; not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing."

The dictionary defines "courtesy," in part, as "an act of kindness, or favor, performed with politeness." But what, then, is the source of inherent kindness and consideration?

The real man is not the mortal, so-called man, who may or may not be kind. The man of God's creating is His own image and likeness, as stated in Genesis. And since He is Love, man is the forever expression of Love; hence love and kindness are inherent qualities of the real man. But one may ask: Why do some persons appear to express much of love, while others seem almost devoid of it, and at times may be even discourteous and disagreeable? May not the logical explanation be that some are allowing man's true being as Love's reflection to find expression through their thinking and living; while others may have their thoughts so filled with a false sense of evil as real that love and goodness are not manifested through their thinking or living?

True courtesy expresses love. And loving consideration expressed to another arouses a kindred response from that one. The writer witnessed an example of this in a crowded streetcar one evening. Two women were standing in the aisle when a seat was vacated. The one who was obviously a worker made no attempt to take the seat, evidently expecting the other to do so. But instead, noting the telltale bag-of-the-domestic-servant, the other asked, "Have you been working all day?" To which there was a meek, "Yes, ma'am."

"Then you take the seat," was the response. Soon the other was also seated, and when the worker arose to leave the car, she bestowed a most gracious and appreciative smile upon her courteous benefactor.

Is not the test of true culture, which must include courtesy, found in the respect with which one treats others?

All of God's children express equally His infinite love. Hence God loves all, and forever expresses through men His universal goodness and love. All men are in reality the children of God, subject to His love and care. When this is comprehended, one is enabled to look through and beyond the false sense of personality, differences in social standing, education, and race, and to see and love the man of God's creation.

DO NOT CUT ROADSIDE TREES!

Lansing—State Highway Commissioner Murray D. Van Wagoner this week reminded motorists that it is against the law to disturb or cut roadside trees and shrubs.

The commissioner said that he was issuing this warning just previous to the holiday season in order that motorists would not be tempted to cut Christmas trees along state highways. "We have detected this practice in some parts of the state in previous years," the commissioner said. "It is definitely a violation of state law and it results in serious damage to the appearance of state highways."

The department warned that those guilty of cutting Christmas trees or any other trees on state-owned right-of-way would be prosecuted.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Lovely, independent Autumn Dean, returning home from a long stay abroad without her father's knowledge, stops at the home of Hector Cardigan, an old family friend. He tells her that she should not have come home, that things have changed. Arriving home at the castle of the North, she is greeted lovingly by her father, Jarvis Dean, who gives her to understand that she is welcome—for a short visit. Her mother, the belle named Millicent Odell, has been dead for years. Autumn cannot understand her father's attitude, though she gives him to understand that she is home for good. She has grown tired of life in England, where she lived with an awkward, cold, and distant father. She has changed. Between them they decide, however, to wait until the morning before they can leave.

When the night of the dance arrives, Autumn meets Florian Parr, a handsome, well-educated young man of the country. Late in the evening Autumn leaves the dance, rides horseback to the neighboring ranch where she meets Bruce Landor, friend and classmate of her childhood days. He takes her to see his mother, an invalid, his father is dead, though he has killed him. As soon as his mother sees Autumn she commands Bruce to take her away, that death follows in the wake of the Odells. Autumn is both saddened and perplexed by the invalid's attitude. Bruce, apologetic, can offer no reason for his mother's attitude.

CHAPTER II—Autumn calls again on Hector Cardigan—this time to find out the reason for Mrs. Landor's outburst. From his conversation she inferred that George Landor killed himself because he loved Millicent Dean, her mother. Meanwhile, Bruce Landor rides to the spot where his father's body was found years before. There he meets Autumn, who is leaving Hector's ranch. She tells him of her mother's death and her father's love for her. They agree that her mother and his father loved each other deeply and that their love is the cause of present animosity.

CHAPTER III—Florian Parr, at the castle for dinner, proposes to Autumn. She refuses him. The next day Autumn goes to the Landor ranch. She meets Bruce in a hidden cabin. There they decide their love for each other, and determine to stand together against everyone who might come between them.

CHAPTER IV—Autumn tells her father that she is going to marry Florian Parr. He is shocked to see her reaction and is amazed to hear him whisper that Geoffrey Landor did not take his own life. His wife, her story, Millicent's wife and Geoffrey Landor had fallen in love with each other. But Millicent would not break her marriage vows. Meeting Landor one day in a secluded spot, Jarvis Dean was forced to fight with him. Landor is accidentally shot by his own gun.

"But we're used to it, Mr. Dean," Linda offered with a smile.

"So I have been informed," said the Laird. "Are you young ladies

"But we're used to it, Mr. Dean," aware that your conduct is creating a deal of talk in the district."

Autumn smiled. "You're not bothering your head, Da, over what the gossips have to say about—"

"I'm bothering my head about you, my girl," he interrupted her.

"Do you know that your name was the center of a scandalous brawl in the back room of a dive in Kamloops the other night?"

"We've heard all about it, Da," Autumn replied. "It was simply absurd."

"But piquant," Linda put in.

"Belfort is a beast," Autumn went on.

"A girl with any respect for herself doesn't give a beast any excuse for talking," her father observed.

Autumn checked her rising anger. "There were four of us in the party—Lin and I, and Plovian and a friend of his," she explained. "We were coming home along the highway from Ashcroft. We got started later than we had intended and when we got as far as Belfort's ranch the car broke down. While the boys worked on the car, Lin and I went to sleep in a haystack close to the road. Belfort towed us to a garage about seven o'clock in the morning."

"Or we should have been there still," Linda added.

"And that's all there is to the story," Autumn concluded.

"I accept your account on its merits," Jarvis Dean said, "but it explains nothing. The whole episode was a scandal and an outrage, whether Belfort had anything to do with it or not. There'll be no repetition of the like, my girl, if you are to remain in my house!"

Hector Cardigan remained silent, but every now and then a profound sigh escaped him which was to Autumn singularly audible above the deep and vehement tones of her father's voice.

Linda Parr had turned large and wondering eyes upon the Laird. "It's probably not my place to speak, Mr. Dean," she ventured, "but the whole affair was quite accidental and we regret it quite as much as you do. We probably regret it more, since it was we who had to sleep out. On the other hand, young people are quite capable of taking care of themselves nowadays."

Autumn was amazed at Linda's sudden garrulity. At the quick glare of the old man's eyes, however, the girl ceased abruptly, and biting her lip, looked rather hopelessly toward Autumn.

"I'll not have my daughter's name bandied about the country as though she were a common strumpet!" the Laird roared, and brought his hands down resoundingly upon the arms of his chair.

Linda got to her feet with characteristic languor, and begging to be excused, left the room and went upstairs.

Autumn surprised, with a cynical affection for the girl, that it was the desire for a cigarette that sent her off rather than any marked distaste for the scene.

"You are carrying on quite unnecessarily, Father," Autumn observed quickly when Linda had gone. "It isn't good for you—and I'm surprised that you should treat such a simple situation so seriously."

"Simple? Simple?" Jarvis was almost inarticulate. "Have you no sense of decency, girl? You put yourself in a position where men engage in a brawl over you in a gambling dive—and you call that simple!"

"I have tried to explain to you, Father, that it was an accident," Autumn persisted. "We were miles from anywhere. What on earth were we to do, at three o'clock in the morning?"

The Laird drew himself up and his nostrils flared in the magnificence of his indignation. "You had no business being there—or anywhere else but in your bed at three o'clock in the morning. And I'll have no more of it!"

Autumn's eyes narrowed. She glanced sharply at Hector, who was slumped wearily in his chair. "What do you propose to do, Father?" she asked finally in a cold voice. "Keep me under lock and key?"

A dull flush lay like a sultry shadow on the old man's cheekbones. Autumn knew that her words had started the ripples of an old and cruel memory in the depths of his consciousness, and for a moment she was sorry for what she had said.

For some moments Jarvis did not reply to her question. Then, his mouth grimly set, he pronounced his ultimatum. "You will conduct yourself from now on like a lady—or back you go to where you came from! I'll not have the Dean name made the cause of drunken brawls in public dives!"

Autumn got angrily to her feet. In that moment, all the wretchedness of those long summer weeks came back upon her, those weeks of striving to tear the love of Bruce Landor from her heart, and instantly her regret for the pain she was causing her father retreated.

She confronted him now with wide, blazing eyes. "The Dean name!" she said. "That's what's behind all this! It isn't what will happen to me that you are thinking about. You know I can look after myself. I've done it for years without giving you anything to worry about. But the Dean name must be defended! It hurts your pride to see it defended by Bruce Landor. You have been living in the past so long that it's more real to you and more important to you than your own daughter. Well, let me tell you, Da, I don't give a damn for a name that needs defending. I've suffered what you will never know—ever since I came back—defending the Dean name. I can't go on—I won't go on! Let the name of Dean—"

The Laird was on his feet instantly, his huge frame trembling with emotion. "Stop it!" he cried. "Stop it! You've gone far enough. You've gone—far—enough!"

Autumn stood for an instant staring at him. He seemed to have gone suddenly feeble, defeated. He turned away from her and stretched his hand out to support himself by the mantelpiece. His body appeared to crumple forward, to sag and dwindle as though shrinking from a blow. In that moment Autumn's compassion for him rose again, and her impulse was to go to him and throw her arms about him in an effort to make peace between them. But Hector was already beside him and was waving her away. She turned silently and left the room.

Long after Linda was asleep in the room next her own, and the house stood in its dark silence, Autumn lay awake, turning over and over in her mind the restive thoughts that had had their inception in that disconcerting clash with her father. At last, unable to bear any longer the confining darkness of her own room where thinking had become a torment, she got up and put on a dressing-gown and slippers.

Noislessly, Autumn went out into the hall. Her father's hound, Saint Pat, who slept on a mat outside the Laird's door, rose at her approach, but she caressed him reassuringly, and he flung himself down again and Autumn continued on down the stairs and out of the house.

She stole quietly to a secluded nook in the garden where, within the circle of flowering mock-orange trees, her mother's bronze sundial still stood on its low pedestal. Here the smell of roses lay in a still, dark pool of heavy sweetness; in the purple field of the sky overhead the stars leaned down, a white blur stooping to the fainter nimbus of the white and yellow roses. Here Millicent Dean had counted out the days and nights of her last summer. It was because of Millicent that old Hannah had kept the retreat unchanged; it held still the spellbound air of plaintive sanctuary.

Autumn seated herself on a bench beside the sundial and gathered her robe closely about her. A curious vacillancy seemed to possess her mind now, a receptivity to some strange reassurance, to some strong and calming influence that drifted in upon her from the sweet cloistered gloom of the flower-crypt that had been her mother's. A quieting affirmation was growing upon Autumn. Millicent Odell was living again, rising above her own tragedy and that of Jarvis Dean and Geoffrey Landor, and the poor, unhappy Jane—Autumn closed her eyes in the buoyancy of her spirit, where the knowledge had dawned that her love for Bruce was an inevitable and inexorable predetermination of life that Jarvis Dean's opposition could neither change nor destroy.

She was startled suddenly out of her absorption by a sound behind her. Turning quickly, she saw Hector Cardigan standing within the dimness of the crypt.

"Hector!" she said softly. "What ever brings you out at this time of night?"

"Heckled in an embarrassed way."

"It isn't the first time I've prowled around here," he said in a low, oddly strained voice, "but it's the first time I've been caught at it."

She did not have to ask why he had come. Millicent lived for him here, as she was living for Autumn herself.

"I couldn't sleep," she told him, "—after that scene with father."

Hector came and seated himself on the bench beside her. "It was rather bad, wasn't it?" he said heavily. "But I think I warned you that your father would be difficult, though I had not foreseen—quite this, I confess."

"What am I to do?" she asked him.

"You will know that yourself—better than I can tell you," he replied.

Autumn plucked a blossom from a low-hanging branch and held it to her lips. "I love father," she said simply, "and I love everything I have come home to. I don't want to leave it."

Hector was silent for a moment. Then, as though he were talking to some third person who was present beside them, he said, "Autumn is in love with Geoffrey's son."

She straightened herself involuntarily against the weird sensation that had come over her.

"Is it so evident as that, Hector?" she said.

"The past is repeating itself," he said. "My eyes are not too old to see that."

"It is the past that has come between us, Hector—between Bruce and me," she said.

Hector leaned forward and patted the back of one hand against the palm of the other. "I shall have something to say about that, my dear, when the time comes that I must."

Autumn stared at the ghostly blur of a heavily flowered white rose bush. "If you had told me all you knew—when I first came home," she said, "we might have been spared much of what happened tonight."

Hector drew a deep and unhappy breath. "You forget, my child, that there is such a thing as loyalty still left in the lives of some of us," he said. "If I did not tell you everything I knew, it was because I could not tell it."

"It doesn't matter, after all," she said. "It is too late now."

"On the contrary," he replied, "it is still too soon."

Autumn shifted impatiently. "How long must you hold your silence, then?" she asked him.

"Until I can hold it no longer," he replied.

A slight wind stirred in the tree above them, and a shower of white petals fell on the grass at their feet.

On the following morning, when Linda telephoned to the Landor place with the intention of paying Bruce a visit during the day, the foreman, Andrew Gilly, informed her that Bruce had gone to Vancouver on business and would not be back until the end of the week.

"So that will be that!" Linda observed, stretching herself on the couch in the sunlit drawing room and opening a volume of French verse which she had brought down from Autumn's room.

The announcement that Bruce had gone to Vancouver filled Autumn with an unaccountable loneliness and impatience that annoyed her as she thought of it. She knew now that throughout the weeks of their estrangement, the mere fact that he was always there, just a few miles from her, had been a comfort to her, and that in the depth of her consciousness she had never really relinquished the hope that somehow, somewhere, they would come together again.

Autumn sat at the piano and played softly while Linda read. Jarvis had left the house immediately after breakfast, deep in the solitude of one of his unapproachable moods. Hector had returned to town, and the girls had been alone ever since.

Suddenly Linda tossed her book across the floor. "What a fine old maid I'm getting to be!" she exclaimed.

"What's the matter now, Lin?" Autumn asked, turning from the piano.

"It's a bad sign when a girl begins to live vicariously in erotic poetry," she said.

"At least, it saves one a lot of trouble," Autumn remarked.

"And leaves you where you started. There's a little satisfaction in trouble, at any rate. It has the spice of variety in it, if nothing else. I'm dying of nothing to do, Autumn. You can at least work up a good fight in your own family now and then."

Autumn stared moodily at the floor. "I'm not particularly proud of that," she said. "It was rather a mess—the whole affair—innocent as it was."

In her preoccupation with the new evidence she had had of her father's strange fixation, she was scarcely aware of what she said. But Linda must be given no inkling of the shadow that lay over her mind.

"I'd love a mess," Linda commented dreamily, "so long as I could have Bruce Landor to champion me. You're an unappreciative wench, Autumn."

Autumn got abruptly to her feet and went over to the window and stood looking out into the garden, where she had experienced so strange an exaltation the night before. Now, in the spread of the midsummer-morning, she knew that that almost supernatural assurance of the night in the garden had been a delusion. There was nothing for her to do but carry on, for her father's sake as well as for Bruce Landor's.

"How can you be anything but head over heels in love with him, Autumn?" Linda asked.

"? With whom?"

Linda clicked her tongue in exasperation against the roof of her mouth. "With whom? You know very well whom."

Autumn did not turn from the window. "You're getting positively tedious, Lin," she said mechanically.

Linda rolled over on her stomach and looked narrowly at Autumn's straight back. "Do you know what?" she said at last. "I honestly believe you've been in love with him from the very first."

"You must have your own reasons for thinking so, Lin," Autumn evaded.

"I have, my dear. In the first place, your cutting-up doesn't ring true to me. I cut up because I like it. But you—you don't like it."

Autumn turned and walked to a table, picked up a magazine, and seated herself. She thumbed the pages slowly. "I don't know what you're talking about," she said indifferently.

Linda reflected for a moment. "Well—you have no heart in it."

"I don't know what you are talking about."

You're absent-minded—and you're downright inattentive at bridge." She paused and looked at Autumn. "My dear," she said at last, "you're in love—or I'm a mental defective."

Autumn reached across the table and helped herself to a cigarette. "You're a dear imbecile, then, Lin," she smiled carelessly.

London Plans 'Youth City'

For Visiting Young People

"Youth movements" are playing a steadily growing part in the lives of many countries, but in none so great a part as in the English-speaking nations. Keen interest is now being shown in an ambitious project recently launched to create a "city of youth" in London which would form the focal point of all youth organizations in the British Empire.

Eventually it is hoped that other countries, particularly the United States, will be drawn into this foundation.

The plan is to build a "city" at a total cost of about $5,000,000, with its own theater, library, dining and common rooms and with various dormitory blocks. The foundation is intended to serve first and foremost boys and girls of student age from all parts of the empire who may visit London for study purposes and holiday tours. Suitable accommodation for such visitors is woefully scarce in London now, and the new "youth city" plan would solve the problem of how to house thousands of young people every year at a cost within the reach of far more parents than is at present the case.

The "city" will also provide accommodation for people from within Great Britain who would otherwise not have a chance of visiting the educational treasures of the capital, such as museums and art galleries, while it will be possible, too, to open the "city" to groups of visiting students from foreign countries. The impression of London that these young people would take back to their own homes would probably mean much in the sphere of international relations in years to come.

Reflected Glare Removed From Illuminating Unit

Providing illumination free from reflected glare, a new type of lighting unit was demonstrated recently. It was a desk lamp so arranged that light from an ordinary bulb was passed through a sheet of transparent material, to remove the light waves that cause reflected glare, says Popular Mechanics. Those waves or vibrations of light useful for seeing were not affected, but the waves ordinarily reflected as white specular light or glare were eliminated. The effect on the printed page was a startling clarity of detail unobscured by reflections.

With glare eliminated, other lighting problems may be solved. Intensities can be increased to desired levels without the otherwise proportionate increase in reflected glare frowned upon by optical authorities. The light source may be placed directly in front of the reader, thus assuring even distribution of light across the page without concern as to reflections. While the reader has no sense of brightness with polarized illumination, much higher intensities can be maintained.

Glare, according to optical experts, impairs the visual function because it bleaches out the visual purple faster than it can be regenerated by the human system.

Cats Called Destructive

According to the National Wildlife Federation, the animals most destructive to wildlife on the farm are three—that make their home with man—the cat, the rat and the dog. There has been so much said about the harm done by cats that progressive farmers no longer tolerate stray cats about their property. Without counting any other loss from cats, the destruction of insect-eating birds calls for the most rigorous control of the feline pestiferous prowler of the fields. Studies of hunting cats show that they follow regular routes, so that if one is seen it can usually be captured by setting a trap in the locality. Various forms of box traps are effective, since the cat is not a trap-shy animal. No estimate can be made of the damage done by rats at a distance from dwellings. In warm weather, rats take to the fields and marshes and are completely "wild." They are almost as fond of water as muskrats, and swim and dive about as well as their valuable relatives.

pital authorities that a blood bank, similar to the one instituted at Harper hospital in Detroit by the Odd Fellows, be established.

After a thorough study of blood banks at Harper and throughout the east by Dr. S. Milton Goldhamer, Professor of Internal Medicine and research assistant at the Simpson Memorial Institute a bank was constructed. The Chelsea group were honored by having the opportunity to provide the first blood.

On Sunday morning the group from Chelsea went to the University hospital to provide the blood. The group was headed by James W. Allen, who has the distinction of having the first deposit of blood in the new apparatus which had been expressly designed for this purpose. Others in the group were Robert Niehaus, Donovan Sweeney, Glenwood Novess, Louis Noll, Laverne Conk, and Marshall Stone. In addition to actually saving this bank will save the taxpayers of Michigan thousands of dollars annually. The bank will be completed by donations from other Washtenaw county Odd Fellow Lodges. On Monday evening a group from Ann Arbor gave eight transfusions, Tuesday evening Ypsilanti Odd Fellow Lodge gave eight, and on Wednesday Hamburg had their turn. This blood donation program was instituted by the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. as part of a general community service, which includes free hospital beds, wheel chairs, and many other charities.

For more than one hundred twenty years Odd Fellow Lodges have served their communities with help for the fellow who is down, and now any physician of repute, who has a patient who is convinced is in need of a blood transfusion and has no money with which to pay, with no relative or friend of the same type, may call on the Chelsea Odd Fellow Lodge, and a member will give the transfusion without cost. Should an emergency arise where the patient can afford to pay, a professional donor be available, the money derived will be given to a charity designated by the Grand Body.

Melodeon an Ancient Instrument

Melodeons go far back in the centuries for their origin. Indeed a shepherd boy blowing through a bit of willow created the first organ. As late as the early 1800s this tuneful little instrument, often in a beautiful rosewood case with quaint beading and lyre-shaped ends, was exceedingly popular. The melodeon is a reed instrument. The tone is produced through bellows operated by pedals, one serving to create a vacuum through which the air rushes and in its course passing through the reeds, the other producing the swell.
