Amateurs Will Perform Three Nights At Gym

By Roderick McDonald

The Amateur Hour which is to be held in the Chelsea high school gym on November 30, December 1 and 2, promises to be a big success. Schools in the immediate area of Chelsea have responded with much enthusiasm.

Entrants who have thus far answered the call for talent are:

Martha Barber, Dwight Gault, Earl Holbrook, Mary Birch, Madelyn Rowe, Ruth Gracey, Virginia Barr, Gertrude Honeck, Betty Batoon, Barbara O'Hara, Virginia Miller, Shirley O'Hara. These are the Chelsea entries.

Other towns participating are: On November 30—Manchester, Jackson, Pinckney, Clinton, and Teahach. On December 1—Grass Lake, Saline, Whitmore Lake, Brighton, Michigan Center. On December 2 the eliminations will be held.

The two camps, Camp Waterloo (CCC), and Cassidy Lake NYA, will have their trials on December 1. The date for local talent has been set for both Thursday and Friday.

The money received from this Amateur Hour will be used for a public address system to be installed in the gymnasium for the Amateur Hour on Thursday night. Any clubs or organizations in or near Chelsea which now use, or plan to use the gym in the future, will appreciate such an addition. The public address system has long been needed in Chelsea, and at last this may be realized, if the amateur program is a success, as it promises to be.

Tickets may be bought from anyone in the high school. The cost is only 10c for one night, and 25c for all three nights.

Night Ag Classes Will Start Next Wednesday

Another series of Night Agriculture School classes, which proved so popular with people from the rural districts last winter, will be held at the Chelsea public school this year, starting next Wednesday night at 8:00 o'clock. The series of meetings will be in charge of Thomas Bust, vocational agriculture teacher in the high school, and are open to anyone interested in such a project. It is expected that professors from the extension department at Michigan State College will be present at several of the meetings.

The schedule for the series of classes and subjects to be discussed are as follows:

- December 6—Sheep Feeding.
- December 13—Horse Feeding.
- January 3—Hog Feeding.
- January 10—Beef Feeding.
- January 17—Dairy Cattle Feeding.

Michigan's New Milk Price-Fixing Act Is Providing Dilemmas

Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of articles on Michigan's new milk price-fixing act.

By Gene Alteman

Lausning—A peek into the Michigan milk picture is like Alice's first visit to Wonderland.

You run into some unexpected things. First, is a somewhat paradoxical situation whereby Detroit drivers of milk trucks receive as much out of the consumer's bill for home delivered milk as do the farmer-producers themselves.

Considering the point that labor has no investment at stake for the distributor furnishes the motor equipment and pays for its operation and maintenance, it would appear at first thought that labor was better off than the farmer who must invest and risk money in cows, land, buildings, equipment and who must dig into the purse for taxes and transportation and so on.

But don't rush to any conclusion. You'll quickly find yourself in a daze; milk economics are not simple as the ABC's.

Murphy's Speech

The state's present venture into milk price-fixing had its beginning, so it is confided, in a speech-making jaunt of Governor Frank Murphy to Uby. The year was 1937, the campaign was on, and the occasion was the dedication of a federally-financed electrical co-op.

Thumb farmers listened to Murphy's oratory with stolid indifference. But when the governor chanced to utter a pledge to provide relief to the dairy industry, the crowd cheered. The result? A milk study commission. Republicans, not to be outdone, promptly pledged assistance.

The Walsh-Patterson bill, creating a milk marketing board with authority to fix producer and retail prices for market areas was then passed by the 1939 legislature.

Burg-Guirey Wedding Vows Spoken Today

Miss Helen Louise Burg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Vincent Burg, became the bride of Thomas J. Guirey, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Guirey of Royal Oak, this morning (Thursday) in St. Mary church, Chelsea.

Mrs. R. Lonsway played Lohengrin's Wedding March as the bridal party entered the church and took their places at the altar. The Reverend Fr. Lawrence Dorr read the marriage service and celebrated mass. Jerome, brother of the bride, was one of the altar boys.

Mrs. Stanley Nitoski of Highland Park sang Rosewig's Ave Maria at the offertory. The altar was simply decorated with Norma Mums and lighted candles.

The bride was gowned in grape-wine chiffon velvet with matching pill box hat, and her corsage was an orchid. Miss Angelina Burg attended her sister as bridesmaid and her gown was peacock-blue silk crepe with pill box hat of beaver. A corsage of bronze and yellow mums completed her costume.

Michael A. Guirey of Royal Oak, brother of the groom, acted as best man.

A wedding breakfast was served at noon at the home of the bride's parents. The long table seating the forty guests and the bridal party was centered with a three-tiered wedding cake while through the center of the table was placed lighted yellow tapers in crystal holders. Bowls of yellow mums and flower tapers in pastel shades were placed at both ends of the table.

The bride is a graduate of St. Mary school, Chelsea, and of Mercy College of Nursing, Detroit, and has been employed in St. Joseph Mercy hospital, Pontiac.

The groom holds a position with the Michigan Consolidated Gas Co., Detroit. Mr. and Mrs. Guirey will make their home at 200 Alexander, Royal Oak.

Farmers' Rights Along Highways Are Outlined

An opinion recently submitted by the Michigan attorney general's department outlines the farmers' rights along highways. The opinion states that along the public highways of rural Michigan, the farmer owns to the middle of the road, except for the right of the public to travel easily and safely.

The farmer can grow and harvest crops, as long as they don't interfere with convenience or safety of the traveling public, the ruling said. He can have fruit and nut trees and has a right to keep the motorist from grabbing his harvest, if he is physically able.

The farmer can cut trees and shrubs along the right-of-way, if he has planted them there and elimination does not rob the public of benefit. He can prevent road crews from eliminating trees and shrubs, unless they constitute an impediment, a hazard or are unsightly. Within the provisions of the law, the farmer may use any means to destroy noxious weeds, the opinion stated.

Road crews can alter conditions along the highways without the consent of the owner, if such action is taken to improve the physical use of the highway, which would include the planting of trees and shrubs.

HONORED AT SHOWER

Miss Mildred Liebeck was hostess to a shower and dinner party Sunday evening at her home in Sylvan, honoring Miss Helen Louise Burg of Pontiac, whose marriage to Thomas A. Guirey took place this morning in St. Mary church.

The table was very attractively arranged with lace cloth and Wedgewood china. A centerpiece of harvest fruits, frosted grapes and pine foliage, flanked by yellow tapers in crystal holders completed the arrangements. Miss Burg received some very lovely gifts.

Out of town guests were from Ann Arbor, Manchester, Coldwater, Royal Oak and Bay Village, Ohio.

Theme on "How to Study"
By Marjorie Gilson

When you study you should always have all your equipment ready. Do your own work, pay attention to what you are doing, don't talk to your neighbor to get the answers, do your hardest lesson first, know and understand your lesson assignments. It is best to copy the assignments on a little pad and carry it with you. You should have a place suitable and quiet for your work to be done. Do the same lesson at the same time and the same place each day.

Begin as soon as possible. Read your lesson once to get the general idea, then re-read it carefully to test understanding. Try to repeat the outline. Ask yourself questions about the lesson.

These practices should make it easier to study.

Michigan's New Milk
Price-Fixing Act Is Providing Dilemmas

away as near Grand Rapids, Flint, and Lansing, the metropolitan center has set the pace for Michigan's milk industry.

Last May the price of milk in Detroit was 10 cents a quart. Farmer-producers were paid $1.00 per hundredweight for fluid Grade A milk, delivered in Detroit.

The state board held public hearings. A composite audit by Roy I. Brown, certified public accountant in Detroit, showed that Detroit distributors lost $44,415.84 during the first six months of 1939. Retail prices varied throughout the state from 7 cents in Lansing to 12 cents in Kalamazoo, Battle Creek and Saginaw. A breakdown of the dairy industry seemed imminent.

On Sept. 1 the state board raised the farmer-producer price to $2.08 and reduced hauling rates 5 cents, making an increase in revenue of 23 cents per hundredweight. (Producers had asked $2.49).

Then on Oct. 5 the board lifted the consumer price one cent to 11 cents a quart, home-delivered, and 10 cents a quart, "cash-and-carry", a price differential of one cent.

The increase of 1 cent a quart, effective Oct. 5, was split one-half between the farmer-producer and the distributor. Labor received 28 per cent of the distributor's additional revenue.

Who Gets What?

Now comes an illuminating analysis, made by the state department of agriculture and the state milk marketing board, on who gets the 11 cents:

To Producer, income for milk hauled to Detroit—4 cents.

To Labor, wages for milk delivery—4 cents.

Distributor, income for plant maintenance, delivery trucks, etc.—3 cents.

Yet the Detroit price, home-delivered, is under Chicago and Toledo prices. Toledo consumers pay 12 cents a quart, while Chicago consumers pay 13 cents. (New York prices are 18 cents; Jacksonville, 16 cents.)

In Chicago, where milk prices have gone up recently, the city is experimenting with paper containers as substitute for glass bottles which must be returned, cleaned and replaced if broken. New York distributors are experimenting with two-quart containers, thus affecting a saving in delivery costs.

Labor's Share

The milk driver, whose hours of work are conceded to be abominable, receives $12 a week plus 14 per cent commission on his sales. On his "day off", a substitute worker, known as the "swing man", takes over the route for approximately $12 a day. (Union drivers in large cities make from $40 to $50 a week.)

When the Walsh-Patterson bill was pending last spring, labor was actively for it. Likewise, labor has consistently opposed "cash-and-carry" stores and milk depots because of the obvious threat to employment, eliminating the need for home delivery.

And so the state board was a bit miffed when the Non-Partisan Labor League in Wayne county came out recently, following the footsteps of the county prosecutor in condemnation of the milk price rise. Later it was explained privately that the statement was "unauthorized." Complicating the picture are the existence of four different viewpoints. While producer, distributor and labor divide the revenue, it takes the consumer to pay the bill. Other complications have been a steady drop in milk consumption and a surplus in production. When consumer earnings decline, milk consumption falls. In 1938, for example, milk consumption was 6.89 per cent below the 1929 level.

Subways

The first subway, an experimental one-block-long road, was constructed in New York in the 1890s. It was operated by air suction and passengers paid a quarter for a ride.

You cannot see it—you cannot taste it—you cannot smell it—you cannot feel it.

Yes, this is carbon monoxide gas. You have all heard about it, and much has been written and said about it; but every year thousands of lives are lost because of carelessness on the part of the victims protecting themselves against it.

Do these things:
Always leave your garage doors open when the motor of your car is running.

Always have a car window open while driving.
This gas is so deadly that the amount produced in three minutes by an ordinary car motor running in a closed single car garage will prove fatal to the occupants.
Be careful!

"I'm a fool in more ways than one," the girl replied. "But even a fool may have eyes. Why don't you cut Florian and his gang? You're not in love with the boy and you never will be—and you're bored to death with his friends."

"Not all of them, Lin."

"I'm the single exception, my dear—and I'm catty as the devil. I could have cut your pretty throat that night when Bruce hauled you out of that mess in the billiard room and carried you into the garden. Fancy any man doing that for me! And I could have cheerfully put poison in your coffee yesterday morning when Florian told us that Bruce had taken it upon himself to defend your honor against Curly Belfort. In this day and age, my dear! Any man I have ever known would die laughing before he could bring himself to do as much for me. But you—you take it out in nursing a grudge."

"Lin, you're positively idiotic!" Autumn protested.

"I know it—I know it! But there's one particular kind of idiot that I am not—and never intend to be. I am not the kind that goes on forever when I know there's no hope for me."

Autumn laughed dryly and got to her feet. "Let's take our ride before it gets too warm," she suggested.

Linda stretched in sinuous luxury and rose from the couch. "Which—being interpreted—means, for heaven's sake, lay off!" she said, and went with Autumn to prepare for the ride.

On the following morning, Bruce Lander's foreman drove his car in at the gates of the Castle. Linda Parr had departed for home only an hour before, and Autumn was cutting roses in the secluded recess of the garden. It was no usual thing for Bruce Lander's foreman to visit the Dean ranch, and a swift shock of apprehensiveness for Bruce passed through her. She gathered her flowers together at once and went to the house.

In the yard before the door, Bruce's foreman was talking with Tom Willmar. Autumn hesitated for a moment, but at an odd glance from Tom she stepped down and approached the men.

Andrew Gilly turned his cap awkwardly about in his hands as she came up to him. His expression was one of utter distraction.

"Good morning, Miss Dean," he greeted her. In a fleeting moment of intuition, Autumn felt that there was something vaguely resentful in his attitude toward her.

"Good morning, Mr. Gilly," she returned with a smile. "Has Bruce come back from Vancouver yet?"

The question had slipped from her tongue before she had time to think of what she was saying.

"No," Gilly replied, "he hasn't. And I'm in a hurry to see him, either. I'll have very bad news for him when he comes."

"Bad news? What has happened?" Autumn asked.

"Tom Willmar cleared his throat. Gilly found over thirty of his sheep dead in the pasture this morning," he told her.

Autumn clutched her flowers tightly in her hands that had gone suddenly cold. "Not his prize sheep—the Merinos he was experimenting with?" she asked breathlessly.

"The same," said Tom Willmar. "Poisoned, they were. Poisoned with strychnine in the salt trough."

"It'll come near to breaking the boy's heart," Gilly observed in a voice that was shaken with agitation.

"Oh!" Autumn felt an abrupt stricture in her throat that made further speech impossible.

"I come over to see if you folks had any trouble," Andrew Gilly went on, "but Tom tells me there's been none of it here."

"No," said Tom quietly. "There's been a bit of vetch about that—"

"Nature had no hand in this," Andrew interrupted. "It was a sneak that did it—and he must have crawled on his stomach during the night to get to the trough or the dogs would've been at him."

"Have you any idea who did it?" Autumn asked faintly. It seemed to her that her heart had sunk entirely out of her body.

"You suspect Belfort, don't you, Mr. Gilly?" she asked bluntly. He gave her a direct look from eyes that were angrily misty. "You can make a shrewd guess," he said. "There's no doubt in my mind—and that's something more than a suspicion."

Tom shook his head. "It'll be a tough job to get anything on Curly Belfort's gang," he remarked.

"Gosh, what a shame!" Autumn stood for a moment helplessly trying to beat back the tears that sprang to her eyes. Then her emotions collapsing within her, she turned and fled into the house.

As she did so, Jarvis Dean came slowly up the path from the corral, Saint Pat at his heels.

CHAPTER X

It was only a ruse on the part of the Laird to despatch Autumn to town on business that he could have attended to as well himself on his next visit. He would have the house to himself. He would have contrived some means of getting old Hannah out of the way as well, but these were limits after all, beyond which a man of self-respect will refuse to go. For that matter, he would have permitted Autumn to remain at home had it not been that he feared the hurt to her feelings which the presence of young Lander in the house would occasion.

For the Laird had asked Bruce to come over and talk to him on matters that could not be discussed with any degree of satisfaction over the telephone. Jarvis, of course, might have gone to the Lander place and talked with Bruce, but some instinct, some sentiment, perhaps, forbade that. Besides, young Lander had not shown the slightest antipathy to the suggestion that he should visit the Laird in his own house.

And now as he sat and waited for the boy, he was strangely moved. In a few minutes he would be talking face to face with the son of Geoffrey Lander, talking as man to man, though it was difficult to think that young Bruce had really come to man's estate. In all these years he had never talked to Bruce more than to exchange a greeting when they met, or to make some polite enquiry regarding his mother's health. In that, he had often told himself, he had not been wholly to blame. The boy had been raised under the influence of Jane Lander, whose bitterness had lasted until the day of her death. Bruce had been quite as aloof as he had been. At Jane Lander's funeral, Jarvis had been deeply moved by the boy's bereavement, and had wished with all his heart that he might have been able to summon the courage to take him aside and speak to him. For in spite of all that had kept them apart, he had never been free of a desire to play the part of a father to Bruce Lander.

The sound of a car coming to a stop before the house brought Jarvis to his window. He saw Bruce step from his car and approach the door. He turned from his window and seated himself in his big chair before his desk. Presently he heard old Hannah's voice in the hall below and in a moment Bruce Lander presented himself in the library doorway.

Jarvis looked up as his visitor announced himself. It might have been Geoffrey Lander himself, he carried himself with such ease of manner and a bearing so erect and challenging. He was dressed in riding breeches and a soft gray shirt that was open at the throat.

"Good morning, Lander," Jarvis greeted him, without getting up. "Come in and sit down."

Bruce entered the room and remained standing before the Laird. "You wanted to talk to me," he prompted.

"Yes," Jarvis replied. "Sit down, sit down."

He waved a hand to a vacant chair and Bruce seated himself and glanced quickly about the room. There followed an awkward pause which Bruce sought to break at once.

"I hope you are well, Mr. Dean," he ventured with determined cordiality.

"Quite possible, quite possible," the Laird said, taking a cigar from the box on his table and nipping the end with his teeth. "Better smoke, Lander," he said then. "We'll both talk better. I'd offer you a cigar, but you young fellows—"

"I have some cigarettes with me, thanks," Bruce told him as he took a package from his shirt pocket and selected one. He struck a match and held it to the Laird's cigar, oddly moved by this momentary intimacy with a man who had been a mysterious and forbidding figure to him as long as he could remember.

"You have lost some sheep," the Laird began as soon as Bruce had seated himself.

"Thirty-four," Bruce replied. "Your prize Merinos, they were."

"Yes, sir," Bruce said. "Too bad, too bad," Jarvis observed. "Gilly tells me they were poisoned—strychnine in the salt trough. You're sure of that?"

"The vet's report was waiting for me when I got home."

"Aye—so I understand. He tells me, too, that you suspect this man, Belfort."

"We have no proof of it," Bruce said. "I have my own opinion, and it amounts to a conviction."

"You might be wrong, of course," Bruce smiled. "Certainly, sir, but I don't think I am this time."

The Laird leaned forward and tapped the ash from his cigar. "I admit the man would do it—he's the kind that would, if he had any reason for it. But even a bad man doesn't act without a motive."

"I supplied him with a motive, I'm afraid," Bruce replied directly. "Aye—I was coming to that. You had some sort of a rumour with him in town last week, I'm told."

"I had," Bruce admitted. "It was over something that Belfort had said about—my daughter—wasn't it?" the Laird asked.

"I should have done precisely what I did, sir, whether it had been your daughter or any other woman."

Jarvis dismissed the suggestion with a wave of his hand. "Certainly, my boy, certainly. But that has nothing whatever to do with the business." He paused and drew a deep breath, then relaxed into his chair. "You are still a very young man, Lander," he went on, "and I am an old man. My opinion may count very little to a man of your years. But if a young woman chooses to make a trollop of herself, I don't see how it improves matters to make it the cause of a public brawl."

"Your daughter has not made a trollop of herself, sir," Bruce protested. "Besides, I did what I did because I had little choice in the matter."

"Would it not have been better if you had left well enough alone, instead of making both my daughter and yourself the laughing stock of the countryside?"

"I'm afraid we can't agree on that, sir," Bruce replied. "I am, of course, sorry for any unpleasantness it may have caused either you or Autumn."

Jarvis Dean's face darkened. "Be that as it may, Lander," he said, "I'd prefer to look after such things myself, in the future, when they concern me or one of my own house."

"Very good, sir," Bruce returned, his lips tightening.

"In fact, my boy, I mean to do whatever I can to wipe out the unfortunate results of this affair. How much do you figure those Merinos of yours were worth to you?"

Bruce flushed. "I haven't figured that out, exactly, Mr. Dean," he replied.

"Put your own price on them, then, and let me know what it is. I want to make it good to you."

Bruce looked at Jarvis, aware of a quick surge of feeling within him. He was silent for a moment. There were times when a man might pardonably give way to anger, but this was not such a time, he told himself in a resolute effort at self-control.

After all, the Laird was making what he undoubtedly felt to be a generous gesture.

"I understand what you mean, Mr. Dean," he said at last, "but my loss is my own. I brought it on myself and I'll foot the bill."

The great hands of Jarvis Dean came down heavily upon the arms of his chair as he leaned toward Bruce. "You don't mean you are not refusing my offer?" he demanded harshly.

Bruce laughed outright. "You surely didn't expect me to accept it," he replied. "I haven't come to that yet, sir."

A livid vein stood out upon Jarvis' forehead. He got to his feet with astonishing and fiery swiftness. "That Lander, is—is sheer impudence!" he gasped.

Bruce, who had risen promptly when Jarvis stood up, looked steadily into the older man's eyes.

"Are you not being a bit unreasonable, Mr. Dean?" he asked.

The Laird snorted. "That's enough, sir—and more than enough!" he replied. "I have made you a gentleman's offer—and you have refused it. Do I understand you aright, sir?"

"I couldn't think of accepting it, Mr. Dean."

"Very well, Lander—very well! You may have it your way, then. But from this day forward there will be no dealings between us, do you understand? You are a stranger to us—to me and my daughter—for the rest of our days." He stepped toward Bruce and thrust his great head forward. "Do you understand that?" he demanded.

"Perfectly, I think," Bruce replied, and fumbled in his breast pocket for another cigarette.

The hand that struck the match was not altogether steady, but he knew now that he had his feelings under control. When he turned toward Jarvis Dean again, he was startled quite off his guard at the shocking change that had come over the old man. The Laird was leaning heavily with one hand on the back of his chair, his head bowed forward, his other hand passing unceremoniously across his eyes as though to brush from them something that obscured his vision. Bruce took an apprehensive step toward him, but immediately Jarvis drew himself erect. Although his face was drawn and white, he made a curt bow. "Good day, Lander!" he said, and stood awaiting Bruce's withdrawal.

Bruce looked at him for one brief moment in frowning perplexity and with a feeling of some unfathomable uneasiness. Then he bade the Laird a quiet good-by and turned away. As he left the room, Jarvis Dean slumped heavily into his chair and sat listening to the sound of Bruce's footsteps descending the stairs.

The Laird was still in his library an hour or so later, when Autumn returned from town. When he heard her mounting the stairway presently, he closed the large, leather-bound journal in which he was writing and laid it carefully away in the drawer of his table. He locked the drawer and returned the small key to its wonted place above the desk.

He turned as Autumn came into the room.

"You're back," he said. "If didn't take you long."

"I've been gone three hours," she remarked. "There wasn't much to do."

"Did you see Snyder?"

"I found him in his office. He'll be out to see you tomorrow afternoon."

Jarvis got up from his table and stood before the fireplace. "I had young Lander out to see me," he said abruptly.

"Hannah told me," Autumn replied. "Was there some—some trouble between you? Hannah says—"

"Hannah talks too much," the Laird interrupted. "Whatever trouble there was was of Lander's own making. He's turned out to be an impudent young whelp, that."

Autumn moved to the window and looked out toward the west where Bruce Lander's ranch lay. "Are you sure you are being quite fair, Da?" she asked quietly.

"He doesn't need you to defend him, my girl," Jarvis reproved her. "I know that," Autumn replied, "and I don't mean to defend him, either. After all, I know nothing of what passed between you."

"I offered to pay him for the Merinos he lost," Jarvis informed her. "Autumn turned from the window. "He didn't accept it, did he?"

"What? Why shouldn't he accept it?" the Laird demanded. "Whose fault was it that he lost them?"

Autumn regarded her father silently for a moment. "It was my fault, Da," she said at last. "I admit it. But the score between us could not be settled—like that."

"Perhaps you can suggest the proper form of settlement, then," Jarvis said scornfully.

"I'm not sure that it can ever be settled," she said.

"It's settled now, then," Jarvis replied. "From this day forth there will be nothing more between young Lander and the Deans."

Autumn looked quickly at her father. "Did he accept that?" she asked.

"I didn't ask him," the Laird said. "I told him it would be so—and I have a right to demand compliance with my wishes, my girl."

Autumn smiled patiently. "You have always had it, Da," she observed, then turned away and went to her room.

For the remainder of the day, Bruce was unable to shake from his mind the oppressive thought of the virulent and altogether disproportionate resentment which the old Laird bore toward him. He gave it as little thought as he could, however, and went furiously to work on the building improvements he had planned earlier in the season. With the help of his foreman, Andrew Gilly, he laid out the ground for his new dipping plant. While he helped to prepare the ground for excavating, however, or while he hauled cedar posts for the framework, his mind remained heavy with the knowledge of Jarvis Dean's violent bitterness toward him.

At the end of the day he found himself on edge with his men and his work and himself, and in an altogether unadmirable frame of mind. He hurried through his supper with scarcely a word to Gilly, who sat opposite him. The motionless heat of the evening dripped in his senses; insects crawled up and down the window screens with tiny, unpleasant activity; against the violet-tinted rectangle of twilight beyond the screen door, he could already see the bats swooping down in black and noisome parabolas. When he had finished his meal, he got up abruptly and with a brief word or two to Gilly, left the table and went out of the house.

Half an hour later, he tied his horse to a birch tree near his herder's cabin in the ravine, rubbed the animal's muzzle affectionately, and gave him a lump of sugar in response to a peremptory whinny. Within the cabin, Bruce undressed quickly, threw about himself the old bathrobe he had brought along, and with a towel on his arm, emerged and walked down into the ravine and up the creek to where the mountain stream narrowed and deepened.

IN MEMORIAM

In memory of our slain brother, Mike Cerwinka, Nov. 25, 1934—Looking over a lonely grave, Not so far away, Lies our loving brother, Whose life was taken away. No one knows the grief and sorrow Since his face we no more shall see, Many may think he's forgotten, But his memory's with us still. As has been those five long years gone by Since we laid our loved one down.—Sister.
