He was the winner of last year's national open meet at Frankfort, Michigan, and his wife, Helen, holds the American women's duration record for gliders of seven hours, 28 minutes. Their home is on South Harvey street—Mail.

TECUMSEH—State police and local authorities continued their search today for the fire bug who last week was blamed for the $10,000 fire at the Fred Rosserans & Sons Dry Goods Store, Chicago boulevard and Evans street, and for four other blazes here within the past three months, doing damage estimated at more than $75,000. The investigation is being directed by Trooper Cook of the Michigan State Police, a deputy state fire marshal, assisted by local police and members of the sheriff's department. The Rosserans fire started in a neatly piled lot of kindling wood in the basement of the store. The blaze was discovered soon after 7 o'clock in the morning by Henry Van Duzer, when he saw smoke coming from a window. Firemen brought the flames under control in about one hour, but not until the stock had been damaged by fire, smoke and water—Herald.

MASON—Mrs. Annabelle Gardner of Holt was awarded the contract by the Railway Mail Service for carrying mail between Lansing and Jackson and return, one round trip per day, six days per week. The contract price has not been announced. Service was started Monday. Thirty bids were received for serving the star route which was set up because of the cancellation of a Michigan Central train—County News.

Lansing—"The 1940 issues have already been hand-made for us.

"We do not intend to personally criticize Governor Dickinson. It will be a clean campaign, based on important public issues."

These words from G. Donald Kennedy, business manager of the state highway department and deputy highway commissioner, give a clue to the policy which Murray D. Van Wagoner will pursue if he wins the Democratic nomination for governor.

As Mr. Kennedy is campaign manager for Van Wagoner, the reference to Michigan's octogenarian executive, nationally known for his religious utterances and condemnation of "high life", may be considered significant.

It could be an intimation that the Van Wagoner forces anticipate the Republican nomination of Dickinson for governor. Also within the range of probability is an interpretation that Van Wagoner will avoid the thin ice of a personal frontal attack on Mr. Dickinson lest it be resented by temperance-loving, church-going citizens.

From an interview with the Democratic vote-getter, we did get a definite impression that Van Wagoner would have something to say about "boss control" in the Republican party. That would be meant for the Grand Rapids leader, Frank McKay, whose selection as Republican national committeeman from Michigan has placed him out in the open, either for praise or condemnation.

Survey of Issues

With exacting care, Messrs. Van Wagoner and Kennedy have been making a survey of 1940 issues, months in advance of their leader's announcement of candidacy.

In the first phase of the campaign, Van Wagoner and Kennedy traveled throughout the state to ascertain the views of local politics. Thus, possible issues have been determined on the basis of county recommendations.

"A primary contest would be a healthy thing for the Democratic party this year," said Mr. Kennedy. "It would concentrate attention on the candidates. And it might keep Democrats from going over the party fence to participate in the Republicans' primary."

National Defense

Just as Van Wagoner has capitalized on the dollars-and-cents benefit to Michigan in having a Democratic highway commissioner at Lansing while a Democratic president was at Washington, so he is expected to stress the value of a Democratic governor during these days of national defense preparations.

"Our need in handling national defense is to be in sympathy with the national administration in order that Michigan may receive full advantage of actions taken by a strong federal government," said Kennedy.

"It is pathetic what we have not done in other fields—such as agriculture. National-state activity with regard to social welfare, resettlement, rehabilitation work, civilian conservation camps and national parks also lie within the possibility of greater benefits to Michigan."

"In the field of national defense, the state program should be one of backing up the federal defense program both with regard to industrial production and use of the national guard."

State Finances

In the Van Wagoner declaration of candidacy are found some other "straws in the wind" as to his conception of issues for the fall campaign.

"Crippled state finances and muddled state purchasing must be among the first evils tackled by the next governor of Michigan," he said, referring to a state deficit of $31,500,000.

Warning that the national defense program would "necessarily" impose additional federal taxes, the highway commissioner declared: "We must initiate in Michigan a wise and thrifty state government. Home-spun economy and rigid business management must prevail."

Rather than pre-suppose what the public is thinking, the Van Wagoner formula is to "go directly to them (the people) for their opinions; giving them a chance to be heard—and hearing what they say."

With forthright frankness he is expected to condemn administrative practices without condemning Governor Dickinson. At least, such is his intention in mid-July.

National Issues

National issues—such as the administration's unofficial intervention in the European war—are to play a major role in Michigan's ballot drama.

"Michigan faces other issues which have a deeper significance even than political trends," said Van Wagoner at a Pontiac homecoming. "A war is threatening our American democracies. Our nation faces a critical period. The American people have watched and approved President Roosevelt's stalwart leadership in meeting the world crisis of the past months and endorse his now proven foresight of the past years in urging more adequate national defense for our country."

This came from a man who has never worshipped blindly at the altar of F. D. R. as has Frank Murphy. Van Wagoner has been more of a middle-of-the-road Democrat than an avowed New Dealer. His thinking has been that of a practical engineer; not social planner.

This open endorsement of Roosevelt is another indirect result of the current war crisis. It reflects the lengthening shadows of national issues over Michigan's state election in November.

Editor's Note: The Michigan Mirror, a non-partisan state news letter, presented the Republican viewpoint in a series of interviews two months ago with James Thomson, then chairman of Republican State Central Committee.

Children In Court

By Judge Malcolm Hatfield

Children Are Forced To Associate With Mentally Defective Adults

In a certain state 2,600 insane, feeble-minded and epileptic persons who were originally ordered to be admitted to hospitals, are actually roaming the highways and byways, where they are constant threats to the safety of children and adults alike. Other defectives are locked in county infirmaries where the delay in receiving adequate medical treatment is slowly destroying their chances for recovery. All these unfortunates are denied the care and treatment which would insure their cure.

A tragic case is related by a judge who committed a five year old epileptic girl to the Farm Colony for epileptics. Due to the fact that the girl's father had been permanently injured in an industrial accident, the child's mother had sought employment outside the home. When weather conditions permitted, the father frequently assisted the mother in her work so that a few extra dollars might be added to the family income. The child could not be taken with the parents when they left the home, because her condition would hinder them in their work.

The parents finally solved the problem by chaining their daughter in a manner similar to that of restraining a mad dog. On several occasions the child was able to loosen the collar and escape. As she had a mania for removing caps from gasoline tanks of automobiles so that she could inhale the fumes, she became a menace to herself and to the community. The court, through the cooperation of the Governor and State Welfare Department, succeeded in having the child admitted to a state institution six months after her commitment. The delay in receiving proper medical treatment is perhaps one of the factors which caused the child's death, four days following her admission to the state hospital.

This tragic situation is the result of the state's failure to increase its medical staff for the treatment of mentally incompetent persons, in proportion to the increase of the population of the state, and in proportion to its transition from an essentially rural to an urban state. Repeated warnings have gone unheeded, for the public has never brought sufficient pressure on the legislature to have the state hospitals increased. Therefore, during the next three or four years, this state will undoubtedly continue to have overcrowded institutions, hopelessly long waiting lists of desperately sick people kept in jails, in basement cells in their home, or roaming at large in the community, without supervision or treatment—a growing menace to their surroundings.

There is not a single community in this particular state which furnishes adequate protection for the patient or his family; nowhere are there hospital or clinical facilities sufficient to cope with the problem satisfactorily. It is a sad commentary on our present civilization that mentally sick persons are being left forgotten in jails, on the streets, in homes—perhaps to kill, certainly to stunt or shock young unfolding minds of the next generation.

Uses of Castor Plant

The castor plant is used in the manufacture of lubricants, medicine, fly paper, paints, soap, linoleum, printing and sulphated castor oil.

Small Home Laundry

Space must be provided for laundering and household tasks in the new small home. If there is a basement, laundering and most of the chores can be done there. Wherever possible, it is better for laundering to be done on the first floor. Laundry work is difficult at best, but when carried on in unpleasant dank surroundings it becomes needlessly burdensome. Sometimes chores and laundering can be done in the kitchen, utility room, and to some extent in the garage.

New Species of Bird

The first new species of bird to be discovered in the continental United States in 21 years has now been found in the "panhandle" district of West Virginia by Karl W. Haller, ornithologist of Bethany college. The bird belongs to the family of wood warblers and is small with a yellowish-olive patch on the back, a trace of brown on the sides and flanks, a tinge of raw sienna on the throat, and a little white on the tail. The last new bird found was the Cape Sable seaside sparrow, first reported by A. H. Howell from the southern tip of Florida in 1910.

Last week I wrote about the necessity of uniform highway signs.

Signs divide themselves into two groups: Yellow and black signs indicate important road hazards; curves, side roads, grade crossings, etc. Black and white signs carry legal regulations and warnings as well as information of general interest.

Keep these two divisions in mind so that, when reading future comments about signs in this column, you can make the distinction immediately and will know that even the shape of the sign means something. See next week's "Safetygram" for a further explanation.

Try Michigan for YOUR Vacation!

Michigan's fine roads do much to account for our State's prestige as a far-famed vacation playground.

HAVE you considered Michigan for your vacation? There is much to recommend it.

You can, for example, pitch your tent or park your trailer beside a lake no larger than a mill pond, or one so vast that it resembles an inland sea. You can choose among thousands of trout streams.

You can visit historic shrines and famous industrial plants... hike through splendid forests... or doze among picturesque sand dunes!

A great vacation State, Michigan has this added advantage: It's nearer, so your money goes farther!

And while you are away, remember that you are at your home as the nearest telephone.

Cassidy Lake Events

(By Clyde Melton)

To every part of Michigan the Cassidy Lake boys have scattered for their vacation over the Fourth of July. At this time there are about twenty-five fellows left here in camp.
The camp softball team was rained out Sunday afternoon. They were to play the Waterloo CCC camp. The game will be played July 13.
The camp softball team journeyed to Chelsea on July 1 and started the month out right by defeating the Hi-Speed team by the score of 11 to 5. Hubert Johnson pitched a fine game for Cassidy.

If one looks, they will see twelve more ducklings on Cassidy lake. They came sometime last week and mother duck is serving notice to all to stay away from them.
The aviation group took a field trip to Selfridge on Tuesday, July 2. There were only about eight fellows in the aviation group. The rest are on vacation.

Rural Housing Program Is Shared By Michigan

Michigan is to have a share in the expanded rural housing program, according to information received by the extension service in agriculture and home economics of the Michigan State College.

Announcement of the plan has been made in Washington by M. L. Wilson, director of the extension service of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Under the new program, farm families in Michigan and in other states are to receive information on the finance and credit facilities available through existing government financing agencies. These include the Farm Credit Administration, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Housing Administration, Federal National Mortgage association and the R. F. G. Mortgage company.

Surveys have indicated need for many types of low-cost village homes, farm subsistence homes, farm houses and productive farm buildings which can be financed through existing agencies in these areas. Cooperation from the building industry is assured through an organization of the National Homes Foundation which represents manufacturers, local building material dealers and trade associations in the building and allied fields.

Services to home builders will consist of recommendations as to type of construction for improved design and lower cost and description of most suitable financing methods. Wide-spread additional employment and sound investment of private funds are expected to result from stimulation of the program.

Conservation Dept. Buys Usable Lands

Lansing—Sites that are usable immediately are first choice of the conservation commission when it buys lands giving anglers access to lakes and streams.

General rules laid down by the commission to guide use of funds accumulated by earmarking 40 cents of each fishing license dollar provide for deferring purchase of sites requiring such improvements as earth fills, road building and brush clearing. All developments will await actual need and then working agreements for maintenance may be made with counties or other agencies. Emphasis will be on access.

Sites on the Great Lakes will be acquired where special considerations like perch runs or good walleye fishing warrant. Sites in national forests will be developed in harmony with federal policies.

Where purchase is impossible or inadvisable, long-term leases of access rights may be obtained.

Desirable features sought in access sites are trees, dry and level ground, hard beaches, and location on a road, but not on a heavily traveled paved highway, where traffic would be a hazard. On northern trout streams, campsite values will be considered. Small lakes will not be considered immediately unless springfed and now lacking developments.

Farm and Industry To Meet At M. S. C.

Invitations to leading Michigan farmers have been mailed out by E. L. Anthony, dean of agriculture at Michigan State College, to meet with more than 30 of America's leading manufacturers in a search for a better mutual understanding between industry and agriculture during a two-day discussion at East Lansing, July 24 and 25.

This is to be the eighth session of its kind held within the past 18 months at leading universities and colleges. Other broad studies of economics and farm and manufacturing problems have been held at Ames, Iowa; Ithaca, N. Y.; St. Paul; College Station, Texas; Lincoln, Neb.; Auburn, Ala.; and Lafayette, Ind.

From all sections of the United States will come business leaders under the leadership of Warren W. Shoemaker, Chicago, vice-president of Armour and Company and chairman of the agricultural committee of the National Association of Manufacturers.

No definite detailed program is to be planned. Discussion, within limits, is to be permitted to drift into problems most pertinent to farm and industry.

"We have no farm plan and never will have one," says Mr. Shoemaker in accepting the invitation to the manufacturers. "But we will be interested in listening to Michigan farmer leaders, to talk over such problems as trade agreements, the price of farm machinery, price-parities, farm surpluses and other mutually interesting subjects."

In addition to the invitations to selected farmers, other invitations are being sent to various Michigan manufacturers whose industries have problems relating to agriculture.

Better buy NOW—
And get Top Value for your Money

IT'S pretty conclusive proof of a real value when more people than ever before buy a certain make of car in a single year.

That is true of this 1940 Buick.

It's pretty good proof of value when a higher percentage of all new-car buyers selects that car after looking the field over.

That is also true of this 1940 Buick.

So on sheer value, it should be clear that right now, "Best buy's Buick"—the question we'd like to ask is: Isn't this also the best time to buy?

Isn't this the smart time to put yourself behind a brand-new power plant, husky, thrifty, thrilling—and smoother than ever?

Isn't this a smart time to get more room—up-to-date controls—sure, soft brakes—new rubber—springing that never needs lubrication—truly modern features (Buick has no less than six dozen)—months on months of reliable, trouble-free, low-cost, stay-out-of-the-shop service?

Buick prices begin at $895
for Business Coupe—
Sedan prices start at $935—

*delivered at Flint, Mich. Transportation based on rail rates, state and local taxes (if any), optional equipment and accessories—extra. Prices subject to change without notice.

All things considered, we think it is. Especially so when you consider current low prices.

It won't cost a cent to try a Buick, get the low delivered prices and have your present car appraised. Hadn't you better see your Buick dealer now—and do just that?

CHAPTER I

The bright disc of flashlight moved over the rough pine paneling of the door, found and illuminated the key-hole under the latch. Gabriella Graham, fitting the key into the lock, knew that her fingers were trembling.

"It works," she said with forced composure, then, expectancy in her voice and eddily too, a muted note of reluctance, she added a little breathlessly, "Kate, we're here!"

"So I presumed," there was no expectancy in Kate Oliver's pleasantly drawing voice, only weariness, characteristic humor, a casual acceptance of life's little surprises. "I agree with you, though," she continued. "It does, at the moment, appear to be a notable achievement. Like scaling the Alps, for instance. I feel as though I had scaled an Alp. I'm practically paralyzed all over."

"Poor Kate!" Gay said, but the words, absent-mindedly, held more of personal preoccupation than sympathy for her companion. "Never mind," she added, still absent-minded, in a tone of warm affection. "We'll have a fire and food pretty soon."

"I can use both," Kate said feelingly. "How are the beds?"

Kate was aware of her hesitancy. "Give me the flashlight," she said. "I'll go ahead."

Gay's glance turned quickly, resentfully.

"Why should you?" she asked a trifle sharply.

"No reason," Kate replied with unshaken good humor. "Just trying to be helpful. It's an irritating habit. I didn't mean to imply that you might be frightened."

"Of course you did," Gay's low, clear laugh was a plea for forgiveness. "I'm not, though," she added. She would not admit misgivings, not even to Kate, who during this tiring trip to the cabin in Maine had been disarmingly incurious, resourceful, amusing. People got at you if you let your defenses down. She pushed the door wide open and stepped inside. The temperature of the room was warmer than the air outside, as though there'd been a fire, she thought fleetingly and dismissed the idea as absurd. The cabin had been closed for three years, since Uncle John died. Not very securely, closed, though. The pale rectangles in the wall were windows. Shouldn't there have been something—shutters, boarding, perhaps? A question, startling in implication, just touched the edge of her mind.

"Is that a wood-range?" Kate asked.

"Yes," Gay replied. "Do you think we can manage it?"

"Certainly," Kate said with confidence. "On second thought, though, who cuts the wood?"

"We'll buy it cut or have a boy out from the village."

"That relieves my mind. I'm not so good with an ax."

Kate pressed against Gay's shoulder to look into the room. "What's the apparatus for?" she asked in an interested voice.

The flashlight disclosed a table with a porcelain top on which were jars, test-tubes, an object which might be an alcohol stove, an assortment of bottles. The built-in bed was neatly spread with blankets. There were no other furnishings except a straight wooden chair.

"Strange odor," Kate said, sniffing. "Smells like a hospital or a chemist shop."

"Something Uncle John left, I suppose," Gay said, entirely at random. "Fluids for developing films, perhaps," she added, slowly. "He was interested in photography. He had a great many hobbies."

The explanation appeared to satisfy Kate. She made no further comment. It did not satisfy Gay though on the surface it was plausible. Uncle John had been interested in photography. But would the odor have remained in the room for three years? Wouldn't the fluids in the bottles insecurely covered with circles of gauze have evaporated during the time that the cabin had been closed? And what had test-tubes to do with kodak films? Again, and with greater insistence, the question starting in intimidation forced its way into her mind.

"These are the living quarters," Gay turned the light through a second door opening from the kitchen at right angles to the first. The notion was absurd, she told herself staidly. The cabin was her personal property free from restrictions or reservations. "Compact and convenient. No elevators, no stairs to climb. Living-room, drawing-room, dining-room all in one," she concluded.

"What, no breakfast-nook?" Kate asked in mock-dismay.

"We'll have our meals on the porch if it isn't too cold. Do you suppose it will be?" Gay's voice rippled on, not waiting for Kate to reply. "The weather was beautiful in September. I wasn't here this late in the month, though. That was the fall Mother and me in school in Switzerland while she was in Paris. It was lovely here when I left. The leaves were just beginning to turn and the air was like wine."

She had thought—her expectancy, the strength of her desire to return, seemed absurd, now, romantic, incredibly naïve. Gay stood, conscious of fatigue, acknowledging disappointment in the frame of the open door. Uncle John was dead. She was no longer fifteen, a tall, ardent child with dreams and half-glimpsed realities mingling to veil her perceptions in a roseate mist. Six years separated her from the summer she had spent at the cabin, six crowded years filled with complexities of which she had, then, been unaware, the six important years which had produced the Gabriella she was at twenty-one. She should have known. It was futile to attempt to recapture a lost emotion, sad to go back.

"Are there lights?" Kate asked.

"Of course," the mist of introspection cleared. Gay felt Kate watching her, knew that Kate was aware of some preoccupation withheld and unshared. Her fingers groped against the wall beside the door. Then she laughed, a clear amused laugh of candid surprise. "There's no electricity," she said. "Kerosene lamps, my friend."

"Will there be kerosene? We should have gotten a supply at the store."

"I forgot the light situation," Gay moved away from the door. "Keep your fingers crossed and I'll see."

There was oil in the lamp on the table. A box of matches lay conveniently at hand. Gay placed the flashlight on the table so that its beam cut in a horizontal shaft across the room. As she removed the shade from the lamp her eyes traveled along the bar of light, saw in the clear circle against the hearth a pair of muddy boots.

"There's oil," she said when the sudden quick beating of her heart had quieted a little. The clearing mist of abstraction vanished. Though her attention was fixed upon the difficult business of striking a match, she still saw very clearly the boots upon the hearth.

"Good!" Kate said from the darkness near the door.

"Better luck than we deserve," Gay tipped the chimney, applied the flame of the match to the wick. They were high boots with laces, the sort that woodsmen wore, and the mud that caked them was fresh. It had been raining all day. The lane had been soft with mud. "The wick is trimmed, too," she said, playing for time in which to adjust her mind to this unexpected situation, searching for an explanation, not wanting, just yet, to share her discovery with Kate.

"Hmmm!" Kate said with curious emphasis. "The bedroom—come on!"

"What?" The china shade, striking the chimney, made a clattering sound very loud in the quiet room. Gay set it securely in the thin branching prongs. "Bedroom?" she repeated.

"There's something in the Bible about bedrooms and wicks and oil," Kate said in casual explanation. "Never mind. My rectory past will pop up now and then. Factless of me, I'm sorry."

The circle of flame in the lamp steadied and brightened. Gay raised her head. Through the mellow light she saw Kate walking toward her, an amused expression in her eyes under the brim of a dark felt hat which, on Kate, looked both disreputable and debonaire. She turned away, puzzling over Kate's comment, not quite understanding the skeptical expression deepening the lines around Kate's twinkling eyes. Did Kate think—?

"There's a fire laid ready for lighting," she knelt on the hearth, deliberately ignoring both the comment and the ready explanation. "We won't need more wood tonight. Will you hand me the matches, please?"

"Sheer magic," Kate said dryly. "Alice-in-Wonderland and the Arabian Nights. Oil in the lamps, a fire laid—or maybe wish-fulfillment did it. Anyway, I'm not kicking."

Gay took the box of matches without meeting Kate's glance. The implication, now, was perfectly clear. Kate thought—astonishment sharpened into indignation. She resented having her motives questioned. A denial sprang to her lips. She forced back the words. Never deny of explain. People got at you if you let your defenses down, she reminded herself again. In affronted silence she ignited the shavings beneath the pyramid of wood.

"Our guardian angel has slipped up, though," Kate said still in a tone of skeptical amusement. "These boots certainly won't fit either you or me." Her voice altered. "Who is it, Gay?" she asked with a directness which could no longer be evaded.

"I don't know."

"Someone is living here."

"Obviously."

"Who is it?" Kate repeated. "I told you I didn't know," Gay watched small active flames licking up against the logs.

Was she telling the truth? Kate watched Gay rise, swiftly, gracefully, from her kneeling position on the hearth. She had no reason to doubt her, she thought, backing up to the warmth of the fire. In the roster of Gay's short-comings, a disregard for the truth was not listed. Still—

"What are you going to do about it?" she asked more casually than she felt.

Gay paused in her progress across the room. "Do about it?" she asked. "I just wondered," Kate rooked back and forth from her heels to her toes on the field-stone hearth. She was observing, irrelevantly, the unconscious air of assurance with which Gay carried herself, thinking how trim she looked, in spite of two days and a night on the road, in the dark tailored suit which emphasized the grace of her long slender legs, the breadth of her shoulders, the rounded slenderness of her body.

Gay's glance scorned so craven a suggestion.

Ah, youth! She, herself, probably looked like a scare-crow, a particularly attenuated and angular one. Not that it mattered. The inward sigh which followed the thought was philosophical rather than envious. "I don't necessarily insist that we get out of here pretty quick," she continued, still carefully casual. "It's an idea, though. To quote your Aunt Flora, it might be advisable, perhaps."

Gay's glance scorned so craven a suggestion. "We will not," she said with spirited emphasis. "This cabin belongs to me." She pulled off her hat, tossed it on the couch, ran her fingers through the flattened red-brown waves of her hair. "I've no intention of being dispossessed, if that's the phrase. You might as well take off your bonnet and shawl. We're going to stay."

"There'd be no accommodations in the village, I suppose," she said tentatively. "An inn or a tourist camp—just for tonight."

"In Northfield?" Gay laughed. "Heavens, no!"

"And it's a long way back to Machias."

"Twenty miles," Gay was lighting a second lamp on the table behind the couch. "Have you forgotten," she asked, "the condition of the road?"

Kate was a little abashed to feel a not unpleasant thrill of excitement tingling shamelessly up her spine. After a summer at "Dunedin," the Graham estate on the Hudson, anything in the nature of an "escapade" was enlivening.

"I shall never forget," Kate removed her hat. "When I'm eighty, I'll tell my grand-nieces and nephews the reason your old auntie is an invalid, my dears, is because once upon a time she drove twenty miles along a road in the state of Maine. No, I couldn't," she concluded. "I'd rather face unknown terrors than journey over those twenty miles again tonight."

"Idiot!"

Gay was placing the fluted china shade on the lamp. She was lovely-looking, Kate thought, feeling as she frequently felt when she consciously considered Gay's features and coloring, a slight shock of surprise and wonder. The light from the lamp striking up into her face accentuated the high cheekbones, the faint depressions beneath them, the line of her jaw and rounded chin, the curve of her brows above her long, very deep blue eyes. Certain endearing flaws redeemed her face from the still perfection of authentic beauty, the straight thick lashes, the dusting of freckles across her nose, her wide, sweetly curved mouth, the way her eyes narrowed and crinkled when she smiled.

"Do you know what I think?" Kate said darkly.

"I'm breathless," Gay said through a mouthful of apple.

"Those jars and the smell in the room over there," Kate gestured. "I think he's a mad genius inventing a poison gas to annihilate the world."

"Can I depend on that?" Gay moved away from the table. "It would be a let-down to discover that the smell was moonshine brewing." She bit again into the apple. "Our cabin-mate reads," she observed.

"That's encouraging," Kate said as Gay picked up a book which lay face-down upon the couch. "Your home is known by the books you own. What is it?"

"Something about—hormones," Gay stood looking quizzically down at the book in her hand.

"Hormones!" Kate repeated, then lowering her voice dramatically. "Gay! He's planning the perfect murder. He's one of those educated criminals you read about with a keen analytical mind. A doctor, perhaps, who—"

"A doctor?" Gay's altered voice arrested Kate's attention. She glanced quickly toward the couch at the far side of the hearth. Gay's eyes were lowered over the book. She was turning pages with a quick fluttering motion of her fingers through the leaves. Kate heard a sound like a quickly drawn breath, faint but authentic.

"No name?" she asked, as Gay lifted her eyes.

"Nothing." The sound had been authentic, Kate thought. Gay had made a discovery.

Gay's eyes were, presently, aware of Kate. They dropped self-consciously before Kate's questioning glance. She placed the book on the couch, tossed the remains of the apple into the fire.

"Let's investigate further," she said, after a moment. Her voice was only a little shaken but the peach-colored flush deepened and her eyes were very bright.

"That's a sensible idea," Kate said serenely. "Leave no stone unturned. Here, I'll carry that," she added as Gay turned to take the lamp from the table.

Gay did not demur. She walked to one of the doors leading onto the porch, opened it, stepped out into darkness. Kate followed with the lamp. The screened porch which extended across the front of the cabin disclosed nothing of importance. There were built-in bunks at either end covered with blankets and tarpaulins. There were fiber rugs, a table, chairs. The glass windows above the bunks were lowered but the front of the porch stood open to the night. Kate followed Gay's heels, clicking with a muffled sound on the rugs, more sharply on the floor between, stopped when she stopped at the long table in the center of the porch.

"The rain is over," Gay said.

"Nice weather tomorrow."

Kate looked out through the screening. The yellow glow of lamplight blurred her vision. She placed the lamp on the table and returned to stand beside Gay. Moonlight lay on the clearing in front of the cabin, marked the path sloping down a gentle grade to the edge of the lake. Beyond, the water stretched silver-gray, motionless, barely distinguishable from the land.

"I'm going to like this place," she said, breaking the silence.

"Of course you are," Gay's voice was hushed, as though the serenity of the scene before her had stifled her excitement. "I've never liked any place I've ever been as well."

Kate did not question her sincerity. It was curious, though, she reflected. She would not have supposed that Gay would find pleasure in the silence of the woods. Gay, she had thought, loved gaiety, lights, the theater, supper-clubs, dancing, moving from one scene of festivity to another with her smart young intimates. Her visits at "Dunedin," her brief stays at her father's town house, were quite obviously motivated by duty and endured with boredom. She had given every indication of preferring to be with her mother and step-father on Long Island, at their apartment in the city, in Florida or Bermuda, now that cut dividends and deflated values had closed to them the playgrounds of Europe. She, Kate, had scarcely seen the child since her engagement had been announced at "Dunedin" late in June until three days ago when she had turned up there and had proposed this trip to Maine.

What had happened the summer she'd spent here to make so lasting an impression upon Gay? Why, after six years, should she have wanted to return just at this time? Kate's thought continued as Gay, standing beside her, remained silent. She spoke frequently, and with affection, of Dr. Lawrence whom she called "Uncle John," her god-father, her father's life-long friend, who had, at his death, left the cabin to her. He'd had a brilliant mind and great charm of manner. She knew that Gay's father had not understood why his friend should have been content to remain the Dean of a small college in his native state of Maine when wider and more remunerative opportunities were constantly being offered him. That was explained at his death. Dr. Lawrence had had a serious heart condition which had restricted his activities.

"It's the harvest moon, isn't it?" Gay stirred with a rousing motion at Kate's side.

"About half of it," Kate replied.

"It should be full toward the end of the week."

"I hadn't counted on that," Gay laughed and slipped her arm companionably through Kate's arm. "I wasn't thinking of moons. It's nice when the sun shines, too."

"I'm sure it is," Kate said. "Feeling as cool as I feel now was worth the trip."

"I thought you'd like it. You understand now, don't you, why I wanted to come?"

Kate was silent for a moment. Then, "Not entirely," she said.

She knew that the meaning behind the words was perfectly clear to Gay. The brief intimacy was shattered. Gay withdrew her arm. She was not resentful now, though, as she had been when Kate had first questioned her motives.

"Come along," she said, laughing, that shaken note of excitement trembling in her voice. "We have things to do. There are stones we have left unturned."

Gay walked directly to a closed door in the wall opposite the kitchen at the far end of the room.

"This is the master-bedroom," she said and opened the door.

Kate followed her into the room. It was considerably larger than the room off the kitchen and more comfortably furnished. The lamplight, bright where she stood, fading into shadows at the rim of the cone of light, disclosed a built-in bed at each end of the room. The mattress of one was covered with newspapers and upon it lay paper-wrapped bundles which might contain bedding.

The other, beneath windows which overlooked the porch, was obviously prepared for use. Between the windows in the side wall on a square of scenic linoleum stood a small stove with a length of jointed pipe.

"That looks familiar," Kate said. "It's called a chunk-stove, in case you're interested. There's one in the rectory study at home."

Gay gave no evidence of being interested in the stove. She stood looking down at the top of a low chest of drawers. Kate approached with the lamp.

"He shaves," she said, making note of a razor-case, a shaving brush, a wooden soap-bowl. "Do you suppose he dresses for dinner?"

Gay ignored the question. She turned the brushes arranged with precision on the pine top of the chest. There were no monograms.

"There's the closet," Kate suggested.

Gay turned from the mirror, walked quickly halfway across the room and opened a door. Kate, following, tipped the shade of the lamp so that the light shone directly into the closet. A brown tweed suit, a top-coat, two pairs of khaki trousers, ten pajamas striped in wine-color,

Tipped the shade of the lamp so that the light shone directly into the closet.

a wool dressing-gown which had seen service, a dark sweater with a letter stitched to the heavy ribbing, hung in a row from the hooks. A tan felt hat rested where it had been flung on the shelf above, and on the floor below a pair of brown oxfords stood beside brown leather moccasins laced with thongs. Nothing here, surely, Kate thought, and was about to voice the thought in words.

A sound held her silent, a quickly drawn breath audibly and slowly exhaled. Gay's hand touched the sweater. As Kate watched, her forefinger tipped with an almond-pink nail traced the letter stitched to the ribbing.

She turned after a moment.

"A completely anonymous person," she said and closed the door. But Kate was not deceived. The gesture of the finger with the pink-tipped nail had been very revealing. If she had not known before, Kate thought, again both concerned and amused, Gay knew now, at least, who was here.

CHAPTER II

She couldn't force Gay to tell her. Kate regarded with satisfaction a bun on a long toasting-fork which she held over the bed of embers in the fireplace. She would be obliged to bestir her curiosity until the owner of the sweater appeared. He was taking his time about it. She and Gay had unpacked the rumble of the coupe. They had found a can of kerosene beside the back steps and had filled and lit every lamp in the cabin. They had brought two pails of water up from the lake. Preparations for a late supper were well under way, now, and still he had not appeared.

Gay was in the room which she'd called the master-bedroom changing her clothes. She'd gotten herself pretty wet bringing water up from the lake. Was it deliberate? Kate wondered, not without just reason for suspicion. What effect was she creating, now, before the mirror above the chest of drawers? Her voice, sweet and husky, influenced, no doubt, by the night-club singer who was the latest enthusiasm of Gay and her intimates, floated out through the open door. She was singing with the radio.

Appropriate, Kate thought. Whew! A smell of scorching recalled her attention to the bun. She removed it from the fork, placed it with three others on a plate keeping warm on the hearth. The coffee was boiling over. Kate rose from the foot-stool on which she sat and bent forward to lift the pot from the bed of embers. "Pale brown bubbles foamed down over her hand. The exclamation she gave, sharp and unstudied, stopped the singing. Gay came into the room knotting a scarf around her neck.

"Salty language, my friend," she said. "Oh, you've burned your hand. Here, let me take it." She unknotted the scarf and wadded it around the handle of the pot. "Does it hurt terribly, Kate?"

"I'll probably survive," Kate flapped her injured hand. So the key-note was to be simplicity, she thought, considering Gay's appearance with a quizzically lifted brow. She wore a dark wool skirt, a white wool jumper, ghillies and white angora socks. She had brushed her red-brown hair into a softly curling halo tied with a bright blue ribbon. Her face had a scrubbed and shining look. The freckles across her nose, undisguised by powder, were young and endearing. Kate smiled. "Isn't the lip-stick out of key?" she asked.

"It points the contrast," Gay, unabashed, returned Kate's smile. "The coffee smells marvelous." She poured the dark brown liquid into cups from the picnic-hamper arranged with plates and forks and spoons on the low table beside the hearth.

"Does it? I hadn't noticed," Kate returned to the foot-stool. "I can't smell anything except that perfume. It's certainly off-key."

"No it isn't," Gay pulled an arm chair close to the table, settled herself, bit into a sandwich. "It breathes of the great out-of-doors, crushed ferns, mossy dells, moon-land heather. I bought it especially for the occasion."

Kate made a derisive gesture. "It breathes of Fifth Avenue and the Silver Room at the Ritz."

"Maybe you're right," Gay said amicably. "I adore hamburgers. Toasting them was an inspiration. I'm starved."

But she ate scarcely anything. She was listening, waiting, Kate thought, preoccupied with heaven only knew what thoughts, memories, anticipations. The continuing ripple of irrelevant comment was a smoke-screen deliberately raised. In the intervals of silence when she lay back in the chair, her arms crossed under her head, Kate observed her warily. She was excited. That was obvious. But, though she smiled, her face in repose reflected some more tender emotion.

"Don't you think," she began and stopped short. There were sounds outside the cabin, an expiring exhaust, a motor suddenly silenced, a brake jerked on, a door resoundingly slammed. Kate, watching Gay, saw her start forward, saw the bright trembling expectancy, unrelieved by humor or bravado which, for an instant, illuminated her face. Then, conscious of Kate's intent and somewhat disconcerted gaze, she slowly relaxed. Composure slipped like a mask across her face. She sat back in the chair.

"Arriving in a cloud of dust," she said, her voice only a little shaken, her eyes turning from Kate to the door.

"Mud, which must certainly spoil the mud," Kate rose from the foot-stool. "Well, let us be brave. Me, I feel braver standing." She walked to the end of the hearth and stood leaning against the chimney, her arm on the low mantel shelf.

On the radio a baritone sang mellowly of a rendezvous on the Isle of Capri. Through the music came the sound of a door explosively opened, resolute footsteps thudding across the kitchen floor. Kate's eyes turned from Gay's profile to the door.

"Impetuous," she murmured. "He seems to be in a hurry."

He appeared almost before she had completed the thought, a tall, rangy young man in corduroys and a leather coat, the brim of a dark felt hat pulled down over his eyes. He halted abruptly in the doorway, stood surveying the brightly lit room with an expression which changed, as Kate watched, from brusque inquiry to blank amazement. His face, lean and brown, with prominent cheek-bones and jaw line, was vaguely familiar. She had seen him somewhere, in a quite different setting. Somewhere—

"Hello, John," Gay's voice sounded completely natural, neither very cordial nor very aloof, certainly not at all surprised. Kate heard her rise from the chair. The young man in the door-way slowly removed his hat. His hair was thick and dark and cut short to thwart, Kate suspected, a tendency toward waves. She doubted whether, after the first quick glance, he was aware of her presence in the room. His eyes remained fixed upon Gay.

"Gay," he said slowly, incredulously.

He had a beautiful mouth. "Beautiful" wasn't a word you used to describe a man, Kate told herself. It was beautiful, though, generous, sensitive, expressive. Wondering recognition kindled in his dark eyes. For an unguarded moment some strong emotion gave his dark, rather grave face a glancing brilliance. Kate found herself, in that moment of silence, almost holding her breath.

"I have the advantage, John," Gay said. "I knew it was you who was here."

The brilliance faded out of his face. Kate saw his mouth set a little grimly.

"You usually have, haven't you?" he asked quietly.

"Not always." The question seemed to have shaken Gay's composure. She turned to Kate. "Kate," she said, "Miss Oliver, may I present—Is it—Doctor Houghton now?" she asked, turning again to the tall young man in the doorway.

"Doctor Houghton," he affirmed. He smiled at Kate a little diffidently. "I've met Miss Oliver," he said.

"Certainly. How—do you do?" Kate remembered now. She had the answer. This was Dr. Lawrence's nephew, John, who'd come with him to Gay's debutante party. This was the young man with whom Gay had stolen away from the party that night. She, Kate, had seen them returning. She remembered now. Gay's face, soft and bright, framed in the collar of a white fur coat, upturned to the tall young man bending to speak to her in the dimly lit passage that led to a side-door at the ball-room.

She had the answer but it did not relieve her concern. There was something between Gay and this young man. Kate felt it vibrating in the air of the room though the words they spoke were casual. This was the motive, then, whether she'd known he was here or the meeting was a coincidence. This, he was why she had wanted to come.

Kate gave a distracted thought to Gay's family, to a blond young man with charming manners whom she liked very much.

"Heaven help us!" she said silently, the shadow of events to come lying darkly across her mind. And then, because her rectory past would pop up now and then, "The prayer of the congregation are requested," she added.

"Of course you've met Kate," the singing vibration was in Gay's voice. "I'm sorry. I had forgotten."

"I hadn't." He took a few steps forward into the room. "Miss Oliver rescued me, on one occasion, from a fate worse than death."

"I remember," Kate said. Gay glanced at her quickly. Kate was lighting a cigarette. Her eyes in the spurt of flame from the match were twinkling under the frown that knotted her brows. "You had," she added, speaking to John, "a tendency to bolt into empty rooms."

"It was my first debutante party," he said. His diffident half-smile widened into an engaging grin, excluded Gay. That studied indifference enraged her now as it had when she was fifteen. She had, she discovered, exactly the same impulse to do something, anything, to attract and hold his attention.

"You're looking well," she said. "You're looking well, too." His eyes, regarding her steadily, held the space which separated them, held a faintly ironical expression which she remembered very well. "I'm relieved." The engaging grin slackened a side-wise. "Your photographs have given me the impression that you'd been skipping your vitamins and losing too much sleep."

"My photographs?" Gay questioned.

"The press has been giving you considerable space recently," he said in reply.

The press! Had they done something stupid at home? Gay's eyes flew to meet Kate's startled glance. Kate's expression was not reassuring. She looked as though she was resigning herself to some inevitable disaster. Gay turned again to John.

"This time you have the advantage," she said. "We haven't seen the papers for two days."

She glanced, for a moment, at him, as well as Kate, knew the man which had flashed into her mind. His expression was wholly ironical. But—

"I was referring to the rectory vire sections," he said, "and the fifty-cent magazines."

He hesitated, then. "May I wish you happiness?" he asked.

"Why not?"

"I do wish that for you," he continued to regard her steadily, but the slanting smile had vanished and his eyes were very grave.

"Thank you, John."

His steady gaze presently altered. He glanced around the room.

"I'm a very poor host," he said. "You've had to bring in your luggage and get your supper. I've been talking politics up at the village store. Why didn't you let me know you were coming?"

America's First Botanic Garden

George Washington, who cultivated limes, lemons and many decorative plants at Mount Vernon, recommended a botanic garden for the nation in 1798. His proposal received slight attention until 1830, when congress provided the Columbian Institute for the Promotion of Arts and Sciences with five acres of swamp land. Attempts at cultivation were not successful until 1842. That year saw the return of the Wilkes Exploring expedition, with rare plants from the Fiji, Sandwich and Society Islands, New Zealand and South America. These were transferred successively to frames in the garden after 1850, and to their present shelter in 1934.

STATE OF MICHIGAN

In the Circuit Court for the County of Washtenaw, In Chancery:

Edith G. West, Plaintiff, vs.

Clifford West, Defendant.

Order of Publication

Suit pending in the Circuit Court for the County of Washtenaw, on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1940.

It satisfactorily appearing to this Court by affidavit on file that a change of summons has been issued out of and under the seal of said Court for the appearance of said defendant therein, and that the same could not be served on or before the return day thereof because of said defendant, being a resident of said County of Michigan, was concealed there or elsewhere, and said change of summons having been returned with the certificate of the sheriff of said county thereon endorsed showing that after diligent search and inquiry the said defendant could not be found in said County of Michigan on or before the return day of said summons, on motion of Victor H. Lane, Jr., attorney for said plaintiff, it is ordered, that the said defendant, Clifford West, cause his appearance to be entered in said Court and cause within three months after the date of this order, and that in case of his appearance he cause his answer to the plaintiff's bill of complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof served upon the attorney for the plaintiff within twenty days after service upon him of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order, and that in default thereof, the said bill be taken as confessed by said defendant.

And on like motion it is further ordered that within forty days after the date hereof, the plaintiff cause a notice of this order to be published in the Chelsea Standard, a newspaper printed, published and circulated in said County of Washtenaw, and that such publication be continued once in each week for six weeks in succession, or that she cause a copy of this order to be personally served upon said defendant at least twenty days before the time herein prescribed for his appearance.

And on like motion it is further ordered that the said plaintiff cause a copy of this order to be mailed to said defendant at his last known post office address, by registered mail, and a return receipt demanded, at least twenty days before the time herein prescribed for the appearance of said defendant.

George W. Sample, Circuit Judge. VICTOR H. LANE, Jr., Attorney for Plaintiff.

Business Address: 415 First National Bldg., Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Peaceful Settlements

IT is a truism that no controversy is ever settled permanently until it is settled rightly. There must be an equitable meeting of the opposing factions, that those concerned may not continue to harbor the animosities which caused them originally to disagree. Excesses of such evils as malice, illwill, hatred, revenge, is inadmissible and indefensible. Jesus rebuked these traits in the disciple who cut off the ear of the high priest's servant. "Put up again thy sword into its place," he said (Matthew 26:52), "for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

Had Jesus told his followers merely what not to do, without telling them how to control their actions through scientific right thinking, he would have left them to the mercy of human will-power. They would have remained in ignorance of how best to conduct themselves so as to be free from the shackles of materiality. But he did not stop there. His teachings were always positive, for he understood whence came his marvellous healing power. He wanted them to understand the source of his power—which was as available to them as to him—and through their understanding of God, to demonstrate the divine power in good deeds.

Right actions follow right thinking. The only basis upon which unity of thought can be gained; it is the source of all right thoughts. On pages 469 and 470 of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mary Eddy Baker writes, "With one Father, even God, this world of man would be brethren; and with one Mind and that God, or good, the brotherhood of man would consist of Love and Truth, and have unity of Principle and spiritual power which constitute divine Science."

As men are actuated by a desire to be fair in their dealings, they express the "unity of Principle" which makes all men brothers. This is not a mere platitude; such unity can be and is being demonstrated.

In handling error of any sort, we start with the scientifically correct premise that God, Mind, is good, and that the real man, Mind's reflection, is also good. What ever wrong we see in others is but a manifestation of the carnal mind; and our part in the correction must begin with ourselves—we must destroy the wrong image in our own consciousness. This was Jesus' method of destroying error. He saw it as unreal, as no part of man's true selfhood, because he ever held to the truth, being, and that the real man is God's reflection.

As we progress in our ability to distinguish between the real and the unreal, our sense of the beauty, utility, and permanence of all that is good is enhanced. This is illustrated by a story of three men who once took a walk in a forest. One was a botanist, one a business man, and one a poet. As they went along, each asked the other what he saw in the forest. The botanist answered, "Interesting specimens;" the business man, "Thousands of feet of lumber being cut off the trees;" the poet, "Endless inspiration." They all saw the same objects with their physical eyes, yet their reactions were vastly different, and each vision was right and useful in its place.

One is false to himself when he permits evil to burden him, or when he sees evil as something belonging to persons. Evil is a negation, nothing, and he must therefore not see it as something real. To magnify human weaknesses, either in individuals or in groups of individuals, is in itself a wrong. One mind, which man regards as good, when we classify all wrongdoing as impersonal error, then we shall be able to destroy it as Jesus destroyed it. This attitude of spiritual thinking will bring about a peaceful settlement in any controversy. The Christian Science Monitor.

Containers Are Safer
A new provision of the new Food, Drug and Cosmetic act protects the public against dangerous containers, that is, containers from which the food may become contaminated. In practice, the Food and Drug administration officials expect the main effect of this new clause will be to prevent dangerous uses of lead in packaging foods, either lead in solders for cans or as foil for wrapping foods. Both these uses have made trouble at times in the past and have been difficult to deal with under the old law.

Question And Answer Dept.

Problem—A common yardstick, as you may well know, is divided into inches which are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, etc. Now then, the question is: How many of those numbers are on the full length of the yardstick? Take your guess before looking it up. (Answer elsewhere in this department).

Ques.—In the game of bridge, do hearts rank above spades in trumps?

Ans.—No. The ranking suits in trumps are as follows: No. trumps, spades, hearts, diamonds, clubs. A 1 heart bid can be raised by a 1 spade bid. Likewise with the other suits in the order named above.

Ques.—Was Major Andre executed by the American Patriots, following his capture? If so, how?

Ans.—Yes. Major Andre was hanged on Oct. 2, 1780.

Ques.—How does fear affect one's liver, if at all?

Ans.—When the adrenal glands are preparing your body for a fight, for instance, one of the things they do is to affect the liver so that some of its stored-up sugar is poured out instantly into the blood. This sugar then becomes available as a quick food supply for the muscles in case they have to work very hard fighting, running or other very strenuous work.

Ques.—When was the steamer Titanic wrecked?

Ans.—The Titanic was wrecked on April 15, 1912.

Ques.—Is there such a thing as invisible light?

Ans.—Yes. The waves which are shorter than 70,000 to the inch cannot be seen by our eyes, though they are otherwise just the same as light. They will even record themselves on a photographic plate just as light does. They are called "ultraviolet" rays because they are just a little "shorter" than the rays of visible violet rays.

Ques.—When was Daniel Boone born? And what was the day of the week?

Ans.—Daniel Boone was born on Friday, Feb. 11, 1735.

Answer to problem—The numbers on a yardstick is 1 to 36 inclusive. Some of our readers thoughtlessly said "36", but they did not take into consideration that "36" is at the end of the stick.

Ques.—Why do seeds lie in the ground all winter and then sprout in the spring?

Ans.—In order for seeds to sprout, they need three things: First, a proper temperature; second, enough water soaked up inside the seed; third, a supply of oxygen. During the winter the seed takes up the water it needs. In the spring the soil gets warmer and some of the water which filled it all winter runs out of it. Air gets in and the seed gets its needed oxygen. When this and the temperature are both sufficient, the seed begins to sprout.

Ques.—It is said that ants keep little cows. Is that true?

Ans.—The animals ants keep are not really little cows, but are little insects called "aphids". These aphids live on plants and produce a sweetish liquid. The aphids gather this liquid and carry it off to the ant hills for food to be eaten by the ants of their own colony only.
