Farm Leaders To Tour Land Demonstrations

Harry M. Cole, secretary of the Washtenaw County Agricultural Conservation Association announces that the farmers of Washtenaw county, representatives of the U. S. D. A. and other agricultural leaders have been invited to attend either or both of two tours and picnics next week. One is to be held in Livingston county on August 5, the other in Berrien county on August 7. The picnics have been arranged jointly by the Land Planning Committee and Agricultural Conservation Committee, in consideration with the Soil Conservation Service in each county.

Groups which are invited include state, county and community agricultural conservation committees, county and district F. S. A. directors, local officers of the National Farm Loan Association, representatives of the Farm-Credit Administration, U. S. Forest Service officials, vocational agricultural instructors, and county agricultural agents.

Livingston county program: Starting at 9:30 a. m., cars will start coming to the school house at Hartland for a tour of the Soil Conservation demonstration projects. Each group of cars will be accompanied by a guide who will conduct them to the different stops on the tour and to the picnic grounds.

There will be a basket picnic dinner at noon in Island Lake State Park, east of Brighton and south of US-16. For Berrien county, the program is the same, except cars will meet at the school house at Watervliet. The basket dinner will be held at noon in St. Joseph Park on US-31, on the banks of the St. Joseph river.

Half Million Motorists With Half Year-Plates

Harry F. Kelly, Secretary of State, calls attention to the fact that there are still close to a half million motorists in Michigan operating with first half year auto license plates which expire at midnight, August 31.

"Full year plates have been on sale at half price in all our offices since July 10," said Mr. Kelly, "but there has been little demand for them except from purchasers of new cars. The law does not permit me to extend the time for the use of first half tags, so all cars on the road September 1 must have full year 1940 tags. I would like to urge all owners who can possibly do so to get their tags now and avoid the inconvenience of lining up in crowds of the last few days."

Mr. Kelly also reiterated a warning that purchasers of new plates must destroy the first half tags to prevent the possibility of them falling into improper hands and being used illegally on other cars.

Church Ball League

(By William Rademacher)
Last Wednesday night, Methodists and St. Mary's battled for the league lead, with the Methodists trouncing an eager but outclassed St. Mary's team, 16 to 6.

Although the Methodists again were outbit by their opposition their brilliant defensive work kept them in the game. While St. Mary's, leading in team batting in the league, again showed their hitting prowess, were defeated by their poor fielding. In the second inning alone the Methodists scored 7 runs on but 2 hits. From then on they were never in danger.

The other game scheduled was again forfeited by Congregationalists because of their inability to get 7 players on the field by 6:45 p. m. We would like to see someone get behind the team and get the fellows out there. It would make the league much more interesting.

Games July 24—Methodists 16 runs, 8 hits; St. Mary's, 6 runs, 12 hits. Batteries: White and Riemenschneider; Rademacher and Koneski. Congregationalists forfeited to St. Paul's.

Standings

W	L	Pct.
Methodists	5	1 .833
St. Mary's	4	2 .667
St. Paul's	3	3 .500
Congregationalists	0	6 .000

Games July 31—South diamond, Methodists vs. Congregationalists; north diamond, St. Mary's vs. St. Paul's. These games start at 6:30 every Wednesday evening. Why not come out and get the boys a little encouragement. Admission free.

LAST WEEK AT SCOUT CAMP
It is not too late for Chelsea Scouts to enroll for the last week of the summer camp being held at the Newkirk Reservation, according to O. E. Roszel, chairman of the camp committee. The last week begins on Sunday, August 4, and closes on Friday evening, August 9. It is estimated that approximately 200 different boys will have spent some time at Camp Newkirk this summer.

The camp will be maintained for week-end use throughout the fall, winter, and spring, and troops desiring to reserve a cabin for two are asked to file applications at the Council office.

Forward, Chelsea!

(An Editorial)

The fact that Chelsea is forging ahead as a business, industrial and residential center cannot be questioned by even the most casual observer of conditions as they now appear in our community.

This improvement has not been brought about by an overnight boom but is the result of several years' planning and effort on the part of capable leadership in the government of the village, aided and advised by civic-minded individuals and organizations interested in the welfare of the village and community as a whole.

As a residential village Chelsea has advantages which are not enjoyed by many towns of this size. With an up-to-date sanitary sewer system, new sewage disposal plant, an excellent municipal electric and water department, natural gas, garbage collection and other services, the village is modern in every respect. Every street in the village is surfaced with either concrete or black-top surfacing, providing a cleanliness that is equalled in very few villages.

In business and professions, Chelsea is a leader in every respect. No matter what the needs of the populace may be there are very few items that cannot be found in our stores, and at prices that cannot be duplicated in larger places. The Chelsea Public Library is very complete and renders a valuable service to the community, and our churches and schools are of the best. When it comes to amusement, the village boasts one of the finest small-town theatres in the state. We have a fine athletic field, and playground projects for the kiddies.

Chelsea is enjoying a steady expansion industrially. Manufacturing plants which have been located here for some time have been steadily expanding, and with the addition of new industries which are also investing many thousands of dollars in the expansion of their plants, the village stands to benefit materially from the increased payrolls.

To warrant the faith which industries, business interests and home owners have in the community, the village must continue to show improvement in its municipal affairs. Establishment of added parking facilities is a step in the right direction, as was the placing of direction signs on new US-12 highway. Other improvements this year include the curbing of several streets.

A proposition which should now be given serious consideration is the construction of a municipal building, to provide space for rest rooms, village offices, fire-fighting equipment, etc. There is no question about the need for rest rooms, and it is hoped the proposal to construct a municipal building may be brought before the people not later than the annual election next March.

Chelsea now enjoys one of the lowest tax rates in the state, due to a large extent to the efficient management and profit shown by the electric and water department. If the tax rate must be increased to provide funds to keep the village abreast with the fortunate circumstances about us, there should be no objection, as every resident shares in the benefits derived from a prosperous and up-to-date community.

CELEBRATES 95TH BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Philip Kausch, who celebrated her 95th birthday on Wednesday, July 23, was honor guest at a dinner given by her daughter, Miss Ida, at their home on West Summit St. Covers were laid for 10, the guests including Mrs. Catherine Hundt of Mt. Pleasant and Mrs. William Doll of Ann Arbor, whose birthdays occurred on the same day. The table decorations were pink and white roses, a birthday cake with pink candles forming the centerpiece. Mrs. Kausch received many gifts and cards in remembrance of the anniversary.

Born July 24, 1845 in Reidsels, Alsace-Lorraine; Mrs. Kausch, formerly Adela Staffan, came to America with her parents when two years of age and has since made her home in Chelsea and vicinity.

ROGERS AND STEGER WIN
The weekly Chelsea Recreation Scotch foursome tournament at Inverness Country Club on Monday evening was won by Claude Rogers and Lawton Steger with a sparkling 39; second honors were shared by two teams composed of Claire Rowe and Graham Sprague, and Ed. Miller and Morris Lyons, with scores of 43. Get ready for next week's tournament boys, for it is understood that the Rogers and Steger combination will be broken up for the remainder of the season.

Fatal Home Accidents Match Auto Deaths

In the first six months of 1940, there have been almost as many fatal accidents in the home as on the highway. The Michigan Department of Health figures for accidental deaths from January through June show 689 motor vehicle fatalities on the highways, and 673 fatal accidents in the home.

A study made for the National Safety Council shows that of the 673 fatal home accidents, falls and burns account for four out of five of the deaths.

"Eighty per cent of the fatal falls in homes were accidents happening to persons over 65," says Dr. H. Allen Moyer, State Health Commissioner. "Undoubtedly most of these falls were due to the infirmities of age, rather than actual hazardous conditions in the home. It will be difficult to reduce the number of these accidents, for the actual cause of them lies in the physical condition of elderly people."

For the first six months of the year, the three leading causes of accidental deaths in the home were: falls, 404; burns and scalds, 142; suffocation, 34. About a quarter of the victims of burns and scalds were babies and children under five, and another quarter were persons over 65.

University of Michigan Offers Naval Training

A unit of the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps has been established at the University of Michigan in cooperation with the United States Navy Department.

Designed to prepare deck officers for service in the Navy during emergencies, the unit will provide systematic training in naval science and tactics for 80 selected students this year.

The new department will be directed by Captain Loyal A. Davidson, formerly commanding officer of the U. S. S. Omaha, a light cruiser in the Pacific fleet.

The training course will cover a period of four years and credits earned will be counted toward a university degree. A four week cruise in the Atlantic on a Navy battleship will be included during the summer of one of the four years. Satisfactory completion of the course will qualify the student for a commission as an ensign in the United States Naval Reserve or as a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps.

All regularly enrolled University students will be eligible for acceptance by the professor of naval science and tactics, providing that citizenship and physical qualifications are met. Uniforms and equipment will be furnished by the Navy Department. A stipend of $190 including cruise pay will be given to enrollees during the final two years of the course.

Three students may be selected by the president of the university each year to compete with students chosen from other NROTC units for admission to the Naval Academy at Annapolis. A limited number will also be nominated to fill vacancies in the Navy Supply Corps and the Marine Corps.

It is expected that 75 freshmen will be enrolled annually, 50 of which will be graduated at the end of the four years.

NYA Baseball News

(By Charles Bahamiller)
The local nine played no games the past week, but Chelsea is still at the top of the Western League with 9 wins and 1 defeat for .889 per cent.

Notice to all players who have signed to play baseball with Al Johnson's team—Walter O. Briggs, owner of the Detroit Tigers, has sent out an invitation to a Tiger baseball game for all members of Chelsea's NYA baseball team. The date Chelsea boys are invited to attend is August 14. All players that are able to attend please let Mr. Johnson know as soon as possible.

RECENT BRIDE HONORED

Miss Lillie Wackenhut was hostess at a party given on Wednesday afternoon of last week in honor of Mrs. Carl H. Fletcher, a recent bride. Games furnished diversion for the party, Mrs. William Austin holding high score in bridge and Mrs. Lewis Eppler winning in Chinese checkers. Mrs. Fletcher was presented a bouquet and Mrs. C. Z. Saunders received a greeting in honor of her birthday. Refreshments were served after the game. A lighted cake formed the centerpiece and the souvenirs were Japanese parasols in various colors.

CELEBRATES 82ND BIRTHDAY

John Kelly spent several days of the past week in Detroit and in celebration of his 82nd birthday anniversary on Monday, July 29 he was guest of honor at a family dinner at the home of his daughter, Mrs. John McLaughlin. Max Kelly and sons, David and Walter, were also present. Mr. Kelly received many congratulatory messages and gifts in honor of the happy occasion. He returned to his home in Chelsea on Tuesday.

Lansing—Let the word "lawyer" be mentioned to the average Michigan citizen a generation ago, and his mental reaction would probably form a picture along one or more of the following lines:

Michigan State Bar. For the purpose of effectively raising the standards of the legal profession and of cooperating with the courts to improve the administration of justice the State Bar of Michigan was created by act of the 1935 legislature and rules of the Michigan Supreme court.

Our Neighbors

HOWELL—Dense smoke coming from the basement of the court house this Tuesday morning caused some alarm on the part of occupants of the various offices.

PLYMOUTH—Wind, fire and rain brought heavy damage to this locality late Wednesday afternoon when the most severe storm of the year swept this part of the state.

Michigan State Bar. Headquarters office is located at Lansing in charge of Henry L. Woolfenden, Jr., executive secretary.

Every lawyer in active practice in the state—approximately 6300 in all—must pay annual dues of $5 to maintain his membership in the organization.

Free Legal Aid. The State Bar of Michigan accepts reference of every request for legal aid from both the attorney general's office and the governor's office.

Since its creation, every request for legal aid from any place in the state of Michigan has been carefully investigated and every meritorious request has been granted.

The State Bar has been working with the state board of law examiners (which gives the examinations) to insure that applicants for admission to the bar are morally as well as intellectually qualified to become lawyers.

Self-Discipline. The grievance committees of the State Bar are now vested with authority to hear complaints against lawyers and recommend discipline to the courts.

State Government. The Supreme Court rules creating the State Bar of Michigan provide that the government, the Supreme court, the legislature, or the judicial council may call upon the State Bar for assistance in any matter relating to Michigan courts, practice and procedure therein, or the administration of justice.

Every governor who has held office since the organization was created has called upon the State Bar for assistance under this provision of the rules.

The governing board of the State Bar of Michigan is a commission of twenty-one members. These commissioners are busy lawyers, at the peak of their professional careers, yet during the past year they contributed an aggregate of over one year's working time to the profession without one cent of compensation.

In addition to this governing board, over three hundred lawyers on twenty general committees and over one hundred fifty lawyers on seventeen grievance committees contributed time and services of inestimable value to the profession and to the cause of justice in this state, all without any compensation whatever.

Its instability and the technical difficulties in extracting it have been obstacles to its use in surgery.

College Reading Test A college freshman's acquaintance with literature can be measured accurately in 40 minutes with a standardized test which has been developed at Alabama Polytechnic institute. Containing 150 items, the test measures the scope of a student's familiarity with world literature from the time of Shakespeare to 1900. It was published by the Co-operative Test Service of the American Council on Education and will be used in many colleges and universities. It is titled the "Co-operative Literary Acquaintance Test."

Volcanoes of Iceland Will Aid Wine Making

Fine wines produced by aid of volcanoes in Iceland are the newest proposal of promoters in Reykjavik, the island's capital.

Iceland is much too far north and too cold in winter for grapevines to grow wild or to be produced in any ordinary way, which perhaps is why the Icelandic Norsemen who first discovered the coast of North America and were so impressed by the vines they found there that they called it Vineland.

In the past any champagne or other wines that Icelanders enjoyed they had to import from warmer climes, but now this promise to be changed.

Steam and hot water from the boiling springs, together with hot gases from the gentler of the volcanic vents, are to be trapped in vast concrete chambers and distributed through insulated pipes to fertile volcanic soils believed to be ideal for vine raising.

Volcanic champagne from Iceland is expected to be novelty enough to command a substantial market in other countries also.

Ancient Arabian Legend Is Linked to Meteorite

A slice of a meteorite which, according to an ancient Arabian legend, was a block of gold when it fell to earth and was twice changed by God—once to silver and finally to iron—as a punishment to tribes who quarreled over its possession, has been acquired by the Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago.

The authentic history of this meteorite, known as the Tamentit iron, although not as strange as the "Arabian Nights" type of tales told about it by the natives of the region where it fell, is nevertheless also extraordinary.

"For hundreds of years this meteorite has been the mascot of the people of the Tamentit oasis, and if we could only believe all that is told of it in an old, undated Arabian manuscript it would be the most extraordinary object in this or any other museum," claims an official of the museum.

Art of Marriage

Successful marriage is not a gift of nature but an art, Dr. Henry Bowman, professor of sociology at Stephens college in St. Louis, Mo., says, and there is little truth in the popular notions that "badly prepared meals and curl-papers are leading causes for wife desertion."

"A successful marriage requires patience, understanding, insight, information and idealization. Whether a husband is cleanly shaven or whether his wife looks pretty at the breakfast table doesn't count for much in making the marriage go."

It's as easy to get along with a husband or a wife as it is to get along with any other person, he says. Jealousy, a desire to dominate and a lack of understanding of the matter are at the top of his list of destructive elements.

First Hymnbook in U. S.

Mrs. Florence Bronson Hays of Gasport, N. Y., owns a copy of what she believes was the first hymnbook printed in the United States. The author and publisher was Oliver Bronson, an ancestor of Mrs. Hays.

He was a distinguished composer and teacher of sacred music during colonial times, and general master of the colonial militia. The book carries an inscription which says: "A new collection of Sacred Harmony containing a set of Psalm Tunes, Hymns and Anthems; likewise the necessary rules of psalmody, by Oliver Bronson, Simsbury, Conn. Printed and sold by the author at his house, 1788."

Gown of Abigail Adams

John Adams had been appointed to arrange a treaty with England and when he and his wife, Abigail, were presented at court she was attired "in an elegant but decently plain gown, white lutestring, covered and full trimmed with white crepe, festooned with lilac ribbon and mock point lace, over a hoop of enormous extent, a narrow train of about three yards in length, to the gown waist; ruffle cuffs, treble lace, ruffles, a very dainty cap with long lace lappets, two white plumes and a blond lace handkerchief."

Mrs. Adams had two pearl pins in her hair and set earrings and necklace of the same kind.

Georgia Marriage Laws

Marriage of a 12-year-old Georgia girl to a 51-year-old man has revived interest in that state's unusual laws regarding marriage and divorce. Legal age limits for issuance of marriage licenses, for example, are 14 years for females and 17 for males.

Common law marriages, however, are recognized legally regardless of age. Supreme court precedent also holds that a child can be forced to forfeit its privilege of attending public school because of the mother's conduct, although the child and father may be innocent of misconduct.

Georgia divorce laws also have a quirk in providing that a husband and wife may be legally divorced, leaving one free to marry again and the other prevented from remarrying. The "one-sided" divorce law has caused numerous bigamy charges.

Georgia also also rules that an "ordained colored minister of the gospel may celebrate marriages between persons of African descent only."

Asphalt Ancient Product

Asphalt, commonly used in this country today for street coatings, roofing paints and similar preservatives, was not employed in the United States until 1838 when sidewalks in Philadelphia were made of it.

It had been used by the Europeans in floor construction for many centuries, and so important was asphalt in ancient times that Herodotus wrote a booklet on "Asphalt and its uses to Man" in 450 B. C. There is a statue in the Louvre, Paris, to which shells were attached by means of asphalt by its Babylonian sculptors 5,000 years ago.

Word 'Drug' Defined

A "drug" is any substance used as a medicine, or in making medicines, for internal or external use; also, formerly, any stuff used in dyeing or in chemical operations according to the "pure food and drug act" the term "drug" includes "all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopoeia and National Formulary for internal or external use, and any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease of either man or other animals."

Properly Balanced Diet Must Contain Vitamin D

Somewhere in the array of the "balanced diet" made up of meats, fruits, and vegetables can be found all the vitamins—all but one. That is vitamin D, the "sunshine" vitamin, important in the formation of normal teeth and bones.

This scarcity of vitamin D becomes especially important when one realizes that over 90 per cent of the American people suffer from dental decay. The reason given by many investigators is "inadequate intake of calcium and phosphorus, and insufficient vitamin D to enable the body to utilize these minerals."

All of the other vitamins are found in adequate amounts in a carefully chosen diet, but vitamin D is limited. Our common foods with the exception of egg yolk, and to a variable and slight degree, butter, cream and milk, contain practically none of it.

Vegetables, fruit, meats and cereals are all lacking in this factor. The only other sources remaining are sunlight which, however, is weak and undependable especially during the winter months, or milk and other foods in which standardized amounts of vitamin D have been incorporated either by irradiation, by the addition of the vitamin D concentrate, or by feeding irradiated yeast to cows.

Two KEYS to a CABIN

LIDA LARRIMORE

MACRAE SMITH CO. W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Charming, wealthy Gabriella (Gay) returns to a cabin in the Maine woods accompanied by a friend, Kate Oliver. The idea of a stay at the cabin occurred to her when she received a key to it following the death of her godfather, Uncle John Lawrence. The two girls notice immediately that someone has been and probably is living in the cabin. Kate suspects that Gay knows the identity of the mysterious occupant.

CHAPTER II—While the girls talk the mystery man returns. Gay, surprisingly enough, introduces the man to her. He is John Houghton, a young doctor whom Gay had known in previous years. Soon after arriving at the cottage, Gay discovered the identity through an old monogrammed sweater. Immediately aggressive, Gay asks him by what right he is in the cabin. His rights, she finds, is greater than her own. He too possesses a key, but more than that, it is her Uncle John, Gay's godfather, who has entrusted the cabin to her. Looking at him in the doorway, her old feelings return. She knows that he is more necessary to her than to Todd, and she decides to marry.

CHAPTER III—Before he leaves, John goes for a walk. When he returns he finds Gay sitting before the fireplace. They begin talking on a more friendly basis, and she asks him to reconsider his decision to leave. The next morning brings a different feeling, and John decides to remain for his vacation—one more week.

"I'm not, actually," he admitted, moved by the sincerity of her voice. "Only you're always so controlled and detached. You've made me feel that enthusiasm is naive."

"I know! I hate it!" she cried. "We're all that way, my friends, I mean. We think it's smart to be bored and disillusioned. We avoid any display of emotion as we would avoid a plague. Even Todd and I—"

"You've made me feel that enthusiasm is naive."

The roadster dipped down into a hollow where fog moved before the headlights in wraith-like shapes. John felt his hands trembling on the wheel.

"Don't talk about it. You needn't, I mean. There's nothing you're obliged to explain."

"But I want to," she said earnestly. "I could have gone away letting you think what you pleased of me but someone else is involved. This yesterday morning when I pulled my set on the boat I must have given you a very unfair impression of Todd. I'm not being forced into this marriage."

John gave a short laugh. "I could scarcely have that impression," he said.

"None of the things you probably think are true," she went on. "We didn't merely drift into an engagement. It wasn't propinquity or the fact that both families hoped and expected that we would marry. I suppose that would have put us off each other, if anything. We're neither of us lambs which could be led to a sacrifice without a good deal of bleating."

Presently she continued. "I like Todd better than anyone I've ever known," she said as though she were explaining the situation to herself as well as to him. "We enjoy being together. We think the same things are amusing or sad or exciting."

"I should think that would be an excellent foundation for marriage," John said as she paused.

"But it isn't enough. It's all too controlled and detached. We hold things too lightly." Mounting passion flamed in her voice. "Todd shouldn't have let me come here."

"Let you?"

"Oh, I know." She gave a low rueful laugh. "He couldn't have vented my coming. But if I'd cared enough for him, I wouldn't have needed to come. If he'd cared enough for me he would have tried to keep me there with him. If—" she broke off, and added: "I meant to correct the unfair impression of Todd I'd given you. I'm not doing a very good job."

He ignored that. "Why did you come, Gay?" he asked.

"I've wanted to tell you." Her voice was quiet, now, very thoughtful, wholly sincere. "I've been afraid to try. It doesn't seem reasonable, even to me. I had no idea that you would be here."

"I know that," John was unconscious of the fact that he had slackened the speed of the car. With his eyes still fixed on the road ahead, he waited for her to continue.

"I'm not afraid now," she went on after an interval of silence. "Tonight, while I was waiting for you, I thought of Uncle John."

"Yes?" he said, bending toward her.

"Do you suppose that when you are dying," she asked simply, like a child puzzling over a mystery beyond its comprehension, "that some especial wisdom is given to you?"

Her phrasing of a thought he'd had, startled him with its similarity. He remained silent, his weariness gone, every nerve in his body suddenly tense and alert.

"I thought of that tonight," she went on without waiting for a reply to her question, "while you were bringing that baby into the world."

When realities touch you, pride seems unimportant. I'm not afraid to tell you now. I wanted to come back to the cabin because I'd felt intensely here. I'd been both happy and unhappy and not ashamed of either, no hidden emotion beneath mockery for fear I'd be thought sentimental and naive."

"But you were so young then, Gay," John drew in at the side of the road and stopped the motor.

"And have you succeeded?"

"I was disappointed the night Kate and I arrived. I realized how foolish I'd been. The cabin was as I remembered it, but I had no feeling about it until—"

Her voice which had been composed trembled to a faltering stop. She glanced up at him and he saw, in the light from the dashboard, the tears on her lashes, the uncertain half-smile on her lips, the melted stars in her eyes. His arms went around her, drew her close.

"Gay," he said, "Darling! I love you. It's a relief to say it. I'm not afraid either. Oh, Gay."

She turned so that her cheek touched his. Her arm went up around his neck.

"John!" she cried softly. "Oh, I was afraid it wouldn't happen. I was afraid I'd go away without having really been with you. Oh that you would. We're both so stubborn and proud and ridiculous." She laughed, half sobbing.

"I couldn't have gone while you were here," he whispered against her cheek.

Her arm tightened. Her hand moved in gentleness from his temple down along the thin line of his jaw. "I couldn't have either. It was always you. It was because you had been there that I had to come back. I loved you awfully that summer and have always since. I thought I'd just been here. But it wouldn't have been any good. The night Kate and I came the cabin was just as I had remembered it. But I had no feeling about it until I found your sweater, this sweater, and knew it was you who was there."

"That old sweater. It was new the summer you were here. You remembered!"

"I remembered everything, how you had your hair cut short so it wouldn't wave, your hands—I could have drawn them from memory—your crooked smile that disapproves of me, the way you walk, all the things that make you you."

"Oh, Gay! You make me—I can't say—His love for her, so long held in check, broke through the restraints he had set. Logic and common sense were lost in a rushing flood of tenderness, passion, relief. They had this time together, now, tonight. The past was blotted out and the future obscure. They were together on the small secure island of the present. "I've wanted you so," he said in shaken phrases. "I've ached to hold you like this."

CHAPTER V

Kate roused, opened her eyes, blinked at the light coming in through the window beside her bed. She had forgotten to draw the shade when she had retired, she thought.

She had forgotten to undress, too, apparently, since she seemed to be fully clothed. That was a little careless, to say the least. She stretched under the blankets, blinked again and remembered.

Her eyes, wide awake now, flew to Gay's bed at the opposite end of the room. The counterpane was drawn smoothly over the pillows and Gay's white wool robe lay flung across it as it had lain since yesterday afternoon. Kate glanced at her watch. Nearly half-past seven. She threw back the blankets, sprang from the bed, stood listening.

She glanced in the mirror above the low chest of drawers. Her face, colorless from anxiety and fatigue, glared back at her in the morning light. What a fright she looked! Not that it mattered. She was glad she'd done what she had. She'd wondered, last night, how she would feel about this morning. Gay would be furious. Let her. There were limits to patience and tolerance and being a good sport. Last night, at least, she hadn't let her sympathies run away with her common sense.

How treacherous sympathies were! Kate, brushing her long sandy hair, felt hers stir beneath anxiety and exasperation as she thought of Gay and John. They were so obviously in love with each other, romantically in love which was more dangerous than a mere physical attraction. Not that he wasn't physically attractive. He had charm and good breeding. His characteristic gravity, lit by flashes of humor, was appealing. He was sensitive, but Gay couldn't dominate him, which, for her, must be unique and intriguing. In that quality, call it strength-of-character or stubbornness as you please, lay, she supposed, his strong attraction.

What was that? Kate dropped her brush on the top of the chest. They were here. They were laughing together, somewhere, close at hand. Her first reaction was a light-headed sense of relief. She opened the bedroom door into the main portion of the cabin.

The sound of laughter reached her more clearly. She smelled bacon frying and toast and coffee. Relief sharpened into indignation. They were laughing, were they, having breakfast, while she worried. Kate's back stiffened. As she walked through the living-room, she glanced at the telephone against the wall. She was glad she had done it, she told herself, stealing her sympathies resentfully forcing from her mind an unjustified feeling of guilt.

But she wasn't so sure she was glad when she came to the doorway of the kitchen. Sympathy, for a sentimental moment, took precedence over indignation and anxiety. They had built a roaring fire in the wood-rang and were cooking breakfast together. Gay, wearing his sweater, too large for her, the stevens rolled back to free her hands, was toasting bread. John, standing beside her, turned bacon in the skillet. Steam rose from the coffee-pot, curled in a wreath above their heads. Sunlight streaming in through the two east windows lay over them, a promise, a seal of approval, a benediction.

They were not aware of Kate standing in the doorway. Their faces bent over their separate tasks were absorbed and smiling. As she watched, their glances lifted and met. They broke into soft laughter though no word was exchanged. Leaning toward her, his lips brushed across her hair.

The light caress, significant of a new relationship, banished sympathy and sentiment. Kate stiffened. "Well!" she said crisply. "For two people who've been out all night—"

"We didn't expect to be so long," Gay interrupted. "John had a baby. It took all night."

"What!" Kate's hands grasped the sides of the doorway.

"A Mrs. Whittaker had a baby," John said. "I merely assisted."

Kate drew a steady breath. "And what did you do?" she asked Gay.

"I waited for John outside in the car."

"I'm surprised you didn't assist."

"I wanted to. John wouldn't let me."

Kate felt her lips twitching in spite of the very real dismay that weighted her spirits. "I'm glad he had that much sense," she said. "You couldn't have telephoned, I suppose."

"There wasn't a phone."

"I am sorry, Kate. John roused from the trance-like state so alarming to Kate. "You must have been frantic. I tried to send Gay back. But you know how she is."

"Just a spoiled brat," Gay glanced up at him, smiling.

"The toast is burning," Kate said. "Heavens, yes!" Gay snatched the rack up from the stove.

"Can't you keep your mind on your work?" John took the rack from her. Their hands touched, reluctantly parted. Gay gave a laughing cry.

"Can't you? The bacon is burned to a crisp."

"Good Lord!" The rueful smile widened into his engaging grin. "Will you cook this breakfast, Kate?"

"I'll have to, I suppose," she said grumpily, "if I'm to have anything fit to eat." She took the skillet from John's unresisting hand and marched to the sink. "After you've had breakfast you'd better get some sleep. We can't start for New York today."

Kate could not see their faces. She was scraping burned bits of bacon from the skillet into the sink.

"The Northfield garage couldn't cope with the generator," she went on. "I left the car there and that boy with the teeth brought me back here last night. They kindly offered to take the car in to Machias today. That means, I suppose, that it won't be ready before night. I'll be glad to get back to civilization again where it doesn't take forever to get something done." She turned. "Where's the rest of the bacon or have you—"

Sympathies were treacherous. They looked at her as though she had given them a reprieve from death. Seeing the gratitude and affection for her which shone in Gay's face, in John's she felt with uncomfortable sharpness that unjustified sense of guilt. She walked to the mailbox, stooped, jerked open the door. She had been right to call Todd last night. But knowing that he was now, at this moment, on his way to the lake, was no longer the sustaining relief it had been. She felt like a traitor. She felt as though she should be taken out to the clearing behind the cabin, stood up against the woodshed, and shot.

The long low roadster sped down a hill, across a bridge in a swampy hollow, up a gently rising grade. Todd Janeway, his blond head bare, his body slumped with fatigue against the leather upholstery, his eyes smarting from the sting of the wind, glanced at the speedometer. Better take it easy, he thought, slackening the rushing speed of the car.

Lucky he'd left word at home where he was going last night. He'd expected to hear from her. He wouldn't have been surprised if she'd walked in on Tony Wales' party. A week, she'd said, and Gay kept her promises. But it had been Kate who called. She'd said Gay didn't know she was calling. The telephone connection was bad. He hadn't been able to hear very well. When he'd learned that Kate wanted him to come, he'd concentrated on getting the directions she gave him fairly clear in his mind.

Gay! Steady Janeway. The thing to do was to concentrate on getting there. He'd know soon enough what the trouble was. Or maybe there was no trouble. Kate hadn't made her reason for his coming very clear. Maybe Gay wanted him to drive them back to New York. The trip up in Kate's coupe couldn't have been too comfortable. That was something to tie to. But Kate had told him Gay didn't know she was calling.

He was too weary now, to think clearly. Perhaps she'd just been tired, as she said, worn out with preparations for the wedding. She'd been exhausted by all the demands upon her vitality and patience. She'd wanted it though. Had been a little surprised, last June when the engagement had been announced, that she had agreed to the hue and cry both families raised for a wedding. She'd told him she wanted everything to be right and proper and in accordance with tribal traditions. He'd been surprised but touched and pleased, though he hadn't realized, then, that she was substituting the symbols of marriage for something that was lacking, the one thing that made it right. That was before he had watched her grow more and more remote, not sharing her thoughts with him, making excuses for not being alone, with him, shutting him off behind a wall of light mockery through which he could see her but could not touch her, not actually, not the Gay herself, whom he loved.

This must be Northfield. Better ask directions from here. He pulled in at a filling-station at the side of the road. A gangling boy with buck teeth and a shock of unburned hair appeared in response to the bleat of his horn.

"Can you tell me how to get to the Lawrence camp?" Todd asked. "The boy was lost in admiration for the car."

"How far do I follow this road?" Todd asked brusquely.

"Oh, yeah. 'Bout a mile and a half. You'll see the name on the mailbox."

"Thanks."

Todd tossed a coin to the boy, released the brake and pressed the accelerator.

A mail-box. Todd slackened the speed of the car. A figure detached itself from the vines and underbrush at the side of the road. A long arm waved in greeting. Kate!

"Hello!" he called and brought the car to a stop. No other figure to greet him. He felt his heart thud painfully. "Where's Gay?"

"Kate stood in the road beside him. "Out on the lake," she said. Kate's expression was composed. She looked quite natural, a little tired, perhaps, but serene. "Fishing," she added. "You took a time getting here."

"I was arrested." His spirits lifted. Kate looked at her as he accustomed to see her, lanky and rakish in a tweed skirt and green woolen blouse, her expression a characteristic blending of wry humor and casual friendliness. He opened the door. "Get in, Kate. You look like a slightly sardonic wood-nymph. How's your generator, my friend?"

"My what?" she sat beside him and he turned the car into the lane. He laughed. "I heard, a few minutes ago, that you'd had trouble with it."

"That boy with the teeth!" Watching her in a side-long glance, he saw her expression change. She looked, though he could scarcely credit it, as if she was about to burst into tears.

"It isn't that bad, is it?" he asked, but the laughter had gone out of her voice.

"It's as bad as can be," Kate said with difficulty.

"Is Gay ill? Has she been hurt?"

"I stopped the car in the lane. "What is it? What has happened?"

"She turned to him, her face working queerly. "I meant to break it to you gently," she burst out. "I've been sitting out there by that mailbox for hours thinking of what I should say. There isn't any way to say it except to tell you the truth and I'd rather be chopped up and thrown to the wolves. I shouldn't have called you last night."

"Why shouldn't you have called me?"

"Because it's none of my business. Yes, it is. I love her and I know it's all wrong."

"What's all wrong?"

"Gay has fallen in love," Kate said wildly. "He was here when we came."

"Who was here?"

"John Houghton, Dr. Lawrence's nephew. Do you remember him at Gay's debutante party? Nice looking. Dark and rummy."

"I remember." He slumped back behind the wheel. "Did she come here to meet him?" he asked.

"No. He just happened to be here. The long arm of coincidence." She gave a crack of nervous laughter. "Don't ever say anything I'm impossible. But she came here because she's been in love with him since the summer they spent here with Dr. Lawrence six years ago. Would you have thought Gay was romantic? She's fairly wallowing in it. Little fool!"

"You aren't very convincing, Kate." He smiled wearily. "Do you like him?"

"I do. That's the trouble. He is attractive. And so in love with her. But it's all wrong."

"Why is it all wrong?" he asked quietly.

She glanced at him in relief and admiration.

"Did you expect me to go melodramatic?" he said. "I'm afraid that's a little out of my line. Why did you call me?"

"I hoped we might get her away from here—in time."

"And there isn't time? It's too late, now?"

"I'm afraid so. Last night—"

"She hesitated for a moment then plunged on. "They haven't told me anything. But the way they act is enough. I've tried all day to tell them you were coming. I couldn't. I feel like a traitor until I think of Todd. What do they think of all this at home?"

"It's been pretty awful. Funny, though—None of that seems important now."

CHAPTER VI

In the hidden inlet the sunset dimmed to a honey-colored dusk. The canoe, mired beneath low hanging branches, was motionless. The wind in the pine trees made a whispering sound.

"It's like listening to a sea-shell," Gay said. Her head, resting against John's shoulder, lifted so that their eyes met and held.

"You're crying," he said.

"Am I?"

"Why do you cry?"

"Because I'm so blissful. Because sometime you may die or I may."

She laughed softly. "I don't know."

"Darling! Sweet! Are you sure?"

"Oh John, yes!"

"It might be because we're here. The lake, the cabin—This is the setting that's most—"

He broke off with a diffident laugh, then continued. "The setting that's most—becoming to me. Will you love me in—"

"September as I do in May."

aren't you? I haven't been able to think beyond this moment, now. I may not be able to get in at Hopkins."

"I think you will. My grandfather gave the hospital an endowment. He had an operation there. It can be arranged."

His arms relaxed. His head turned. She gave a little cry.

"I know what you're thinking. Oh, John, don't! Why shouldn't I help you? I love you. Everything will be not for you nor for me but for us."

He turned to her. "I'm sorry," he said. "It's just that—I can't believe any of it—you, us, being here. I can't realize that there's no need to fight against loving you. I have for so long."

"It doesn't matter, does it? There aren't any words. Just being here with you—I feel—"

"How do you feel?"

"Safe and peaceful."

"Peaceful?"

The honey-colored dusk paled, deepened to the mauve of twilight. Darkness fell. One by one the stars pricked a brightened pattern across the sky. Gay stirred in John's arms.

"What?" he asked.

"We should go back, I suppose. Kate has probably gotten supper."

"Supper?"

She laughed. "I'm not hungry either. Her face, as he watched, became grave. "We'll have to tell Kate."

"I don't think Kate needs to be told."

"She has something on her mind, certainly. She's been cross all day."

"Kate doesn't like me."

"Oh, no, John. It isn't that. She's thinking of the fuss there'll be at home."

"Aren't you?"

"I haven't been."

"I am. Do you want me to go with you? I should be in Portland day after tomorrow. But if it would help—"

"It wouldn't. You aren't used to cataclysms. I am." She sighed, then smiled and pressed closer to him.

"Don't think of it now. Let's keep this time for ourselves. It's going to be all right. Don't think. Just love me."

"Gay!" he said barely audibly. "Yes?"

"I wanted to hear your voice. I felt as though you had gone."

"I'm here."

"Don't leave me. He dropped his hand gently upon her head.

"I can't leave you." She caught his hand, pressed it against her cheek. "I'm part of you."

Darkness lay over the landing. He stepped out and fastened the tie-rope. Bending, he took her hands to place her up to the planking beside him. His arms went around her, held her there close against his breast.

"I can't let you go."

"Let's stay here."

"Oh, Gay! If we could—"

"It's going to be all right. Nothing can spoil it, except ourselves. We must be very careful."

"You're so lovely. I can't think when I'm with you like this. What you say—that's not very flattering. I mean, I just hear your voice. I've loved you so long, so hopelessly—"

"Not hopelessly now."

"I can't believe it."

"We'll go in and tell Kate. Her voice was gay and confident. "That will help you to believe."

"I'm afraid of Kate. I'm afraid to go in."

"Silly. I'll hold your hand tightly. Like this."

They walked, hands joined, up the path from the landing to the cabin. As he opened the porch door for her, she halted.

"Someone is here!" She dropped his hand.

The windows were raised. Through the screening came a murmur of voices inside the cabin. Gay took a few steps away from him, glanced in, then turned. In the light flooding through the window he saw that her face was grave and startled.

"Who?" The question caught in his throat. He took a step.

"Todd is here," she said and was silent.

He caught her arm, drew her close to him.

"Gay," he asked, "you're all mine?"

Her face relaxed. She smiled up at him.

increasing interest.

Yes, Todd was attractive. He wore his well-out clothes with a nonchalant air and his manner, even in this difficult situation, was poised, considerate, assured. In comparison John seemed a little clumsy, diffident, unsure. What was it in him that aroused a more devastating emotion than in all the years of knowing him, she had ever felt for Todd? Her eyes moved along the back of his leather jacket to his crisp dark hair. One lock, blatantly waving, stood erect at the crown of his head. Looking at it her resentment melted and in the emotion which swept through her the comparison was impossible. John! she called silently. John!

He turned as though she had spoken his name aloud. His expression softened. His mouth quivered. His thin dark face brightened at whatever it was he read in her eyes. Their long glance asked and answered before he turned again to Todd.

"If you'll excuse me," he said very courteously, "I'll go out and get in some wood."

"Can I help you?" Todd asked.

"No, thank you." John picked up the wood-basket and went out to the room.

Silence followed. Gay tossed her cigarette into the fire. Todd walked to the hearth, stood looking at Gay through the lamplight. Her eyes rested on her hands, clasped tightly in her lap.

"It's pleasant here," he said, presently.

"Yes, isn't it?"

"Have you rested?"

"Oh, yes."

"You look very well."

College Student of 1850

Was Trained in Religion
College students between 1830 and 1850, usually pictured as swaggering, adolescent pranksters, were characterized by a preoccupation with religion, according to a study published by the Columbia Press.
Educational institutions used religion as a connecting link between all subjects, including chemistry, philosophy, and mathematics. Religious interest was fostered by the faculties. For example, one professor devoted his entire inaugural address to an avowal of his faith in God, and in the Bible as the literal expression of His will.
In a typical undergraduate essay, "On the Rhetoric of the Bible," a student declared that the word of God was the best model of literary composition. It is impossible to overestimate the importance of such religious thinking in education.
But there were frivolous moments, it is pointed out. At one meeting of a student literary society the subject was whether or not old bachelors ought to be taxed for the support of old maids, decided by young bachelors in the affirmative.
During the entire period between 1830 and 1850 there was an epidemic of interest in college education. The chief symptom was the quantitative increase of such institutions, there having been in the neighborhood of 80 colleges founded. In spite of the financial panic of 1837 and the ensuing depression more than two score colleges were begun in the 1840s, 32 of them substantial enough to survive to the present day.
Generally speaking, this furry of establishment was the result of a marriage between the then universal American respect for education and denominational enthusiasm among the churches. The colleges were designed primarily as institutions to train men for the ministry or for God-fearing professional careers, and each sect strove to outdo all others in providing its own future leaders. Amherst, according to its Greek professor, had been "born of the prayers, and baptized with the tears of holy men" early in the century, and most of its later rivals were similarly conceived.
Much of the interest in American literature during the period was expressed in earnest or arrogant denials of its nonexistence.
An Angry Thought
To gain relief from asthma, Dr. Walter S. Burrage, Boston, suggests that sufferers go to a horror movie or work themselves into a rage. In a health lecture he said that "all allergies—and asthma is an allergy—respond quickly to adrenal injection. Our bodies manufacture adrenalin when great fright or rage possesses us."

Round-Robin Letter
The "Brown Envelope," a round-robin letter, has traveled more than 147,000 miles since it was started 12 years ago by graduates of Inter-mountain college, Billings, Mont. The letter makes its rounds among 11 members of the class of 1927. According to Boyd E. Baldwin, of Terry, who engineers the route of the letter, it has made 48 trips across the United States. Baldwin estimates the post office department has received $120 in postage for shuffling the envelope back and forth across the country. Members of the families of the 11 original alumni have covered about 2,000 pages with 250,000 words.
Ethiopia's Shark Industry
Haiti has found shark fishing a profitable industry and is encouraging it among the Ethiopians. Oil obtained from the shark has been found a satisfactory substitute for cod liver oil; shark meat is a favorite food of the Arabs; a valuable leather is obtained from the skin, and the fins, when dried and properly cured, attract the palate of Chinese gourmets.

Early Maturing Corn Father W. B. Mandelartz, priest-scientist who last year produced a new type of seed corn that matures in 80 days, has been given a new assignment which will permit him more opportunity for experiment in botany and agriculture. He has been assigned to Merryknoll Apostolic college at Clark's Summit, Pa., affiliated with the Catholic Foreign Mission Society of America. Father Mandelartz experimented with corn and other plants while stationed in Oklahoma as parish priest. His purpose was to produce a variety of corn that would mature before the drouth that sometimes comes in southern climates long before the ordinary varieties of corn are ready for harvest.

Religious Fervor Sam Hines' religious fervor has put him behind bars for another 17 years and 101 days. Hines recently invaded a rival Negro Baptist church near Montgomery, Ala., and took over the pulpit from its rightful occupant at point of a pistol, then launched into a heated sermon. Meantime, the deposed preacher went for the sheriff. Hines was arrested and sentenced to 101 days for use of a deadly weapon. He was fingerprinted and it was discovered he had escaped from Kilby prison here back in 1918 after serving three years of a 20-year term for assault on murder.

Couldn't Tell a Lie Even George Washington had an eye for beauty. When he visited Andover, Mass., 150 years ago, he asked a pretty girl why she had not married. According to the WPA historical survey, the girl said that no one there would have her. Washington then replied, "The young men here have a different taste than I have."

New Variety of Tomato Resists Serious Disease

Commercial growers in the Pacific coast region, who grow tomatoes for canning, now have a new variety that is resistant to Verticillium wilt, a disease that had become so serious in some areas that it was difficult to grow a profitable commercial crop.

The new variety, known as Essar, was developed by the federal bureau of plant industry in co-operation with the California state experiment station. The Essar not only is superior in wilt resistance, but produces a better product for canning than certain varieties formerly used. It is available to growers this year.

Failure of standard varieties under disease conditions is an old story to plant breeders, says Dr. Victor R. Boswell, in charge of vegetable investigations for the bureau. If a new disease appears and the plant does not possess resistant characters in its hereditary make-up, then it is the job of the plant breeders to develop a variety that does have the hereditary characters to withstand the disease.

The Essar was developed from a chance hybrid found by Dr. Michael Shapovalov, bureau pathologist, and Dr. B. A. Rudolph of the California agricultural station. Several lines were grown from this single plant selection. After testing under wilt conditions, one resistant line was selected after eight generations because of its uniformity of the vine and fruit. Before it was released it was carried through two more generations to make sure it retained its disease resistance and uniform characteristics.

South American Population The population of South America is 87,915,000.

Champion Diarist Britain's champion diarist, J. J. Jackson Barstow, deputy lieutenant of Somerset, who faithfully kept a daily record for 78 years, is dead. The first entry in his diary, on January 1, 1862, tells of how he fell through the ice.

Pythians The Knights of Pythias was organized to spread the doctrine of friendship, charity and benevolence. It was founded in Washington, D. C., February, 1864, by Justus Henry Rathbone and four associates. It was founded on the story of Damon and Pythias, taking as its motto: "Friendship even unto death." Its present membership is estimated at 300,000.

Cow Electrocuted Frank Andrews, rancher, near Gardnersville, Nev., reports the first electrocution of a cow as the result of too much scientific advancement in dairying. Lightning struck the electric transformer of his establishment and short circuited the electricity into the milking machine circuit which in turn carried it to a chain that hung down to a cow's neck.
