Dexter—Last Sunday thirty-five bicycle racers used Urquhart's Gulf Service, Dexter, as a checking point in their bicycle race from Detroit here and back. The racers ride 100 miles every Sunday as a hobby, using specially built racing bicycles with special gear-shifting apparatus. The bicycles are built in England, France and Italy and weigh from 17 to 19 pounds. The racers started last Sunday from Six Mile Road and Woodwind avenue and came to Dexter and returned to make their 100 miles. With their special gears these bicycles are able to attain a speed of 45 miles per hour.—Leader.

Brighton—The children of the fifth school were very pleasantly surprised on Monday afternoon, when they received a call from Barney McCoskey, center fielder for the Tigers, who stopped over for a short visit at the school. He presented each of the children with his autograph and autographed the school bat. To say the youngsters were thrilled is putting it mildly, for it was one of the major events of their young lives. They will never forget it and will tell for years to come, how one of the outstanding players on the world famous "Tiger team," visited their school.—Argus.

Saline—A quail nested in the yard of Miss Anna Smith this summer. She had 17 eggs in the nest, all pointed end down to the ground. Miss Smith looked up the habits of quail in a bird book and found that they always place eggs in this manner. Watching the nest closely, she wanted to see the young flock leave the nest. One night she looked rather late and Mrs. Quail was still faithfully sitting on her nest. The next morning she arose early and tipped by the nest but even before that early hour Mrs. Quail had taken her fledglings and departed, leaving in the nest several eggs which were pipped.—Argus.

Business Groups Should Organize To Combat Crime

Business groups can render the nation a great service if they would organize intelligently in an effort to remove the causes of crime, and to prevent unscrupulous members of their own group from setting improper examples for children to follow. In the past various organizations sponsored by business men have done little more than prosecute certain isolated cases. They felt that their work was completed when they exposed practices which injured members of their own group.

This sort of activity by such voluntary organizations merely allows various executives to draw large salaries without actually getting at the core of the entire crime situation. Can anyone, for instance, truthfully point to a case where a gang of criminals hesitated to hold up a paymaster simply because his particular firm happened to hold membership in some nationwide association which employed a few detectives and lawyers as a mere form of routine to investigate and prosecute gangsters? If this was true, it would not be necessary for such firms to employ factory police and detectives to guard their plants.

Importance of Proper Recreation
It was discovered that a large band of delinquent boys spent much of their time in pursuit of questionable methods of amusement outside their home and school. Before the court could return them to their homes, adequate means of caring for their leisure time activities had to be furnished. No recreational program should ever be set up which does not take into consideration the needs of every child in the district. Then, correlate the individual need for such activities with other projects that attempt to solve the same problem.

It has been found that children will not walk more than a half mile to a playground. Since delinquency is much more prevalent in highly congested districts, playgrounds should be established in the center of each square mile of territory. Adequate recreational facilities should also be provided in all sections of a city where children congregate near railroad tracks, manufacturing plants, rivers, etc. While approximately six and one-half or seven acres are necessary for an adequate athletic field, four hundred and fifty children can be accommodated on a playground which is one acre in size. In addition to the usual outdoor equipment, it is important that the playground should be under the direction of trained leaders. Requiring a playground leader to supervise more than eighty or ninety children reduces his efficiency.

Lansing—Wendell L. Willkie and Governor Luron D. Dickinson have one trait in common: Neither man will make a political speech on Sunday.

When the Republican presidential nominee greeted audiences from the rear platform of his train on a recent Sunday, he said he did not intend to campaign on the Sabbath.

Well, Governor Dickinson doesn't either.

In fact, when an Upper Peninsula editor visited the executive office recently, Dickinson remarked he was not going to campaign in an old-fashioned barn-storming way.

The editor smiled in agreement, and then asked: "And how was the audience yesterday (Sunday) at Owosso?"

Michigan's 81-year-old executive, who had addressed a Bible Fellowship rally, remarked glowingly that several thousand people were present. He said he had "visited" with quite a few. For Sunday "visiting" during a political campaign, Dickinson's tactics are highly effective. He doesn't talk politics. He just emphasizes the value of personal character and public morality.

You can't argue with God; neither can you accuse the governor of being insincere.

It's one of those things.

Discipline

Last summer the state newspapers sponsored a national defense program at Port Huron. Among the speakers were Governor Dickinson and Murray D. Van Wagener.

Because last-minute complications prevented a visit of Michigan editors to Canada, the enterprising Floyd J. Miller, daily publisher of Royal Oak, obtained as a pinch-hit attraction a Michigan-born newspaperman by the name of Fred Brace from Sparta.

Brace was a Paris correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune in 1919-20, and he had been with the American Chamber of Commerce at the French capital until its fall to the Nazis in 1940.

"Look at history," he said, "and you will find that it has been a constant swing of the pendulum of public opinion—either towards individual freedom or a disciplined state. France under tyrannical kings had a disciplined state; Bastille Day brought just the opposite—freedom for the individual which in its excess led to terrorism of the guillotine."

"Russia's history is almost parallel. Who can say that the dictatorship of Stalin is not worse than the autocratic hand of a czar?"

"Germany had disciplined control under Bismark and Kaiser Wilhelm. In the first and second reich the Germans had individual freedom, but they were not happy. Hitler restored the pendulum to its accepted course—that of a powerful central government of discipline, of law and order."

"In the United States we had individual initiative under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. Now we are getting a strong disciplined state under Roosevelt. If centralization of power goes too far, public opinion will demand a return to less regulation by Washington, more freedom for the individual."

A Slant on Dickinson

One of Lansing's close observers of public opinion, a staunch friend of Governor Dickinson, unknowingly applied the same philosophy in a recent analysis why the Republican nominee is such a consistent vote-getter.

"In this country today we have several groups of people. One group is bewildered at our technological unemployment; our industrial insecurity; the complexity of social problems at every direction. Then there is the disillusioned group—those who are disappointed at the failure of government to end unemployment, for example. Others remember that America fought 25 years ago to make the world safe for democracy. These people are plainly disillusioned. To them, change has not meant progress."

"In such a flux of attitudes, Dickinson appeals to these groups as a Gibraltar of morality. To them he represents law and order, strong discipline, unyielding character."

"He has never imposed his personal likes and dislikes on others. As lieutenant governor he would never pack committees with drys just because he personally disapproved of the public sale of liquor. He was fair to both sides."

"In my judgment, there is the key to Dickinson's popularity."

Van Wagener Personality

The famous Van Wagener personality, which has made the highway commissioner such a consistent favorite even in arch Republican counties, is now being pitted against the astute, quiet-speaking Republican governor.

At the democratic state convention last week we watched the democratic nominee in action. He was enjoying the show. Always possessed with a saving sense of humor, "Pat" laughed broadly when State Chairman Charles Porritt slammed the gavel and railroaded over a delegate chorus of prankful nays, "the ayes have it!" When the loud speaker system went hay-wire just as Frank Murphy II was making a maiden speech, "Pat" was still in good humor.

Two attractive girl entertainers came to the platform to provide an interim of relaxation, playing "Happy Days are Here Again." The Van Wagener smile went into action, like FDR's charm and magnetism, and everybody was right at home.

This beaming personality is one of the nominee's chief assets. It "proclaims confidence."

Federal Spending

Like the PWA and WPA federal grants to local governments, the national defense program has provided a new field for political cultivation.

Senator Prentiss Brown in his keynote address at Grand Rapids (incidentally delivered by someone else) pointed out that more than one-tenth of all national defense appropriations by the federal government (other than those for the navy) have been with Michigan industrial firms.

"Up to September 17, $275,000,000 of contracts have come to the citizens of our state," he pointed out. "We are proud that we have the facilities, the capital, the labor to do our part in the defense program. We are also happy for the benefits which have come and will be so largely assigned to our state."

The rush to get political credit for the arms contracts is now on.

Rep. Paul Shafer, Republican critic of the New Deal, was not adverse to announcing an important contract with a Battle Creek firm.

Even the heralding news of Willkie's visit to Lansing was eclipsed, in the top newspaper headline at least, by word of a $9,500,000 contract to manufacture shells at the capital city. Such is plain irony.

Peanut Deficit

At a time when the federal government is headed for a five billion annual deficit and Congress has approved a program calling for eight additional billions, Michigan's modest bookkeeping deficit of $29,000,000 is almost peanuts to state politicians.

The national debt is nearing 49 billions, and a 60 billion total is viewed as inevitable.

What the price of American participation in the war would mean financially is a subject to stagger the imagination. This country spent $6,148,000,000 for military purposes alone during the 1917-18 fiscal year; $11,081,000,000 in the 1918-19 year.

It makes the Michigan concern of a few millions a problem for Budget Director Gus T. Hartman and Auditor General Vernon J. Brown, but for very few others.

Hard-boiled Gus has taken on the state troopers, "fifth columnists" or not. "If the state police want money to finish out the fiscal year, they'll have to get it from the legislature by special appropriation," declared Hartman.

With one-tenth of non-naval arms expenditures already assigned to Michigan, popular spy fever should mount. We venture to guess that Oscar G. Olander, commissioner of state police, will get his money—if not from Hartman, from the next legislature.

Announcing the big NEW FORD 1941 FORD

In some years, some cars take a big jump ahead. The Ford does that for 1941.

It has jumped ahead in size. It's the biggest Ford we've ever built, inside and out. It's wider. It has a longer wheelbase. Its seating room is wider by as much as 7 inches. It has new wide doors and semi-concealed running boards.

You'll notice also a new beauty, achieved by a skillful blending of mass with longer flowing lines. Larger windshield and windows give better vision all around.

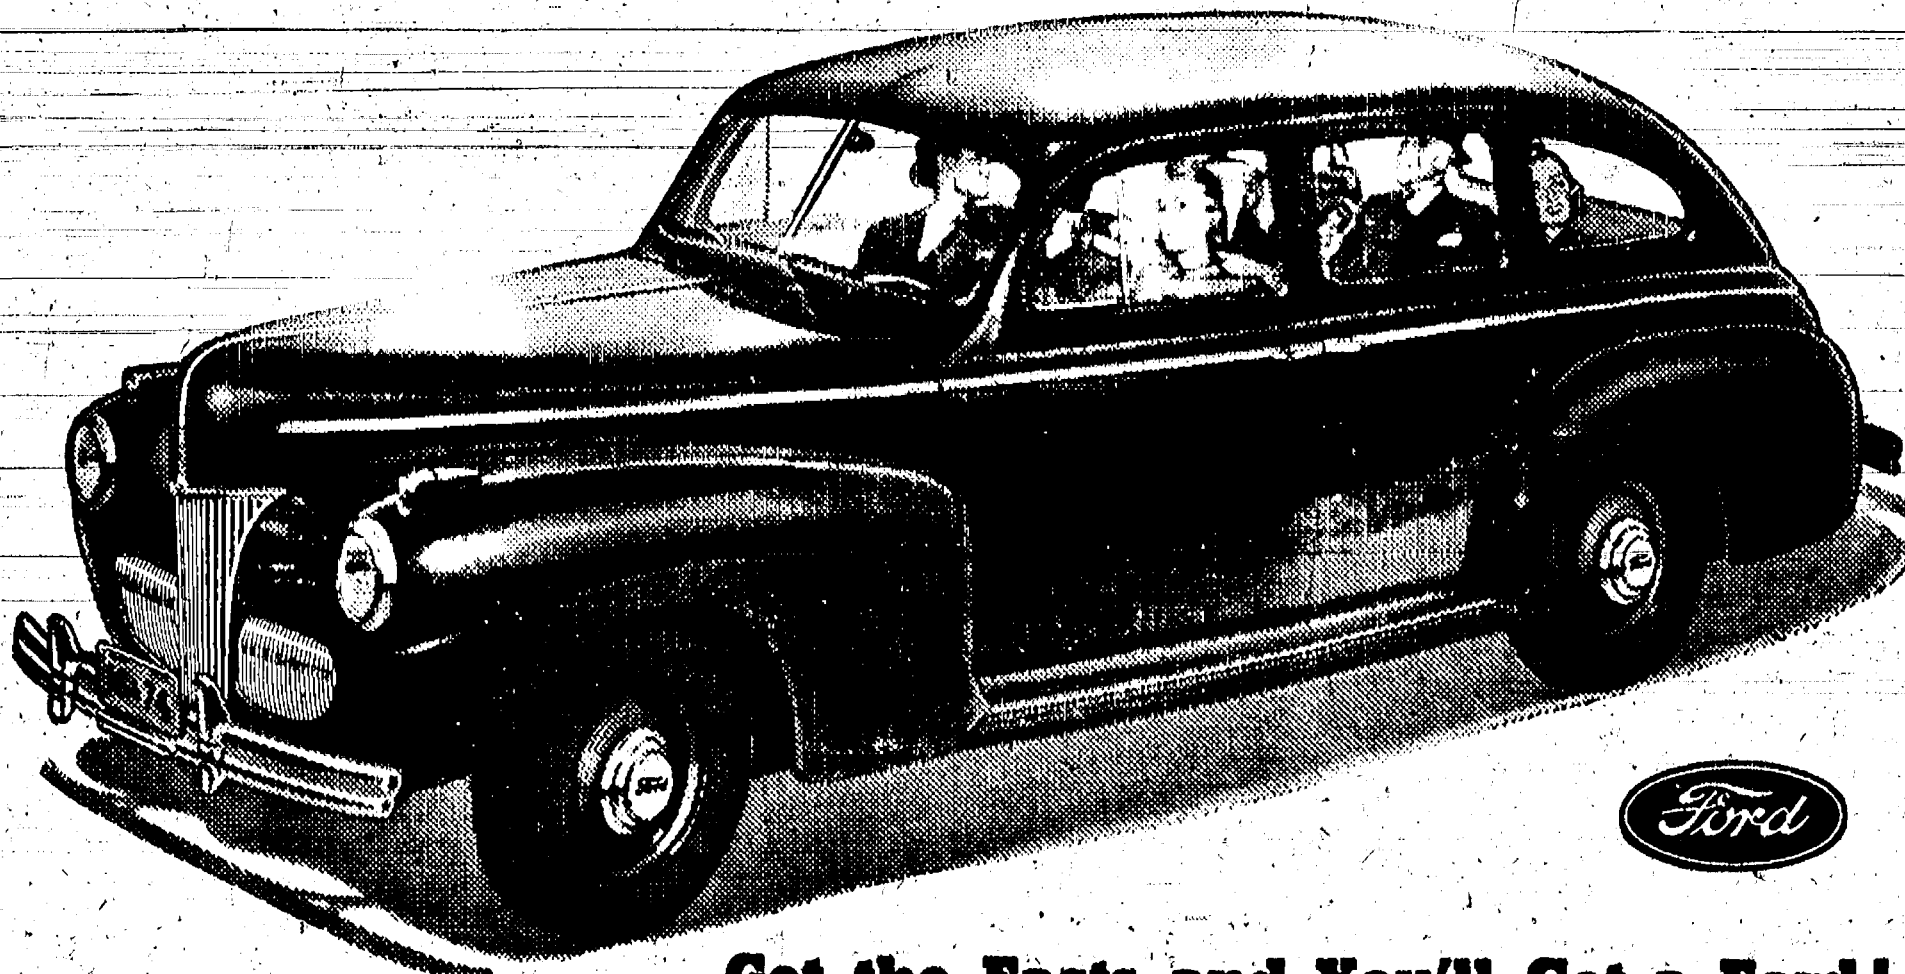

One of its biggest advantages is the new soft ride.

New, slower-action springs give a slow, gentle, gliding movement. A newly designed stabilizer helps absorb road shocks, and maintains balance on sharp curves and in cross winds.

More rapid acceleration to match its familiar speed and power makes this new Ford an even livelier car to drive.

These are only a few of this new car's outstanding features. It represents all the rich experience gained in building more than 28 million motor cars.

Any Ford dealer can give you many good reasons for making this your 1941 car.

The Welcome Visitor

Promotion Is 'Secret' Key To Success

Advertising Essential to Rapid Turnover in Business, Merchants Told.

By MERLE THORPE
Editor of Nation's Business.

A wise and successful business man once said to me:

"Big business is without exception a little business grown up. Only a few small enterprises ever become big. Most of them are differences in the technique. Each buys, displays, sells, watches charge accounts, establishes credit, is courteous, tries to render a service to customers. There is one crucial difference in the degree of emphasis the successful business places upon one practice. That is promotion. He considers almost first the methods of getting more customers—and holding them. Observe the businesses around you and see if I'm not right."

That was years ago. I have observed. I'm ready to go him a step further and say that the main reason most small businesses that do not get ahead is the lack of appreciation of, or lack of ability to promote.

Now "promotion" to some has a bad flavor. But I use it in the dictionary meaning, to encourage, to move forward, to provide the incentive. Promotion in a business is known technically as merchandising.

Helping a Business Man.

I talked with a business man the other day who thought I could help him. He said he wasn't doing so well. He had recently set up in business, having raised and put $10,000 into the venture. This included his stock of goods, something left over for rent, clerk hire, telephone and lights, stationery, etc. He had it budgeted down to a nickel.

When he lamented that the electric sign with his name on it cost him $30, that people didn't respond as he expected, that gave me my cue.

"How much did you set aside for promoting this new venture?" I asked.

He looked at me blankly.

I explained. "Here you have everything to take care of customers. But what provision and thought have you given to getting the customers to come in and give you a trial? Do you think that when they happen down this way they are going to drop in just because you are a new store? Out of curiosity? Do you trade that way? Perhaps, some one disgruntled with his present merchant, may 'give you a trial.' But he won't stay around, hit-or-miss. He must have a reason."

Dressing Up Helps.

"Now you appreciate this a little when you put up a sign, and dress your window. But you let it stop there. You have not faced the necessary item, as necessary as rent or light or heat, the item of encouraging customers to come in. Successful merchants after they are established set aside from 2 to 5 per cent of their sales to be spent in holding their old customers and attracting new ones by advertising. When they were getting started, as you are, they had to set aside much more.

"How simple starting a business would be and how hazardous carrying on an established one if all there is to do is to 'open shop' and customers would come running from other merchants."

"I doubt if 10 per cent of your prospective customers pass your store and see your sign and window. Even those who do, see nothing but a sign, they feel no personality, no human pull, no special information of what you have to give them for their patronage. Oh, yes, you go to church, join a lodge or civic group, and thus you give lip service to promotion. But you must figure out ways to induce all prospects to try out your goods and services. You must consider this as important as any other phase of your undertaking."

Turnover is the life-blood of any business. A $10,000 stock ought to turn over three times a year. $30,000 in sales warrant from $900 to $1,500 a year in advertising. Stocks won't turn unless there is effort. The additional $1,000 in sales nets more than the first $10,000. Overhead re-

There was a crude little handpress of wood and iron, a strongbox tied with leather thongs, jingling with the sound of metal type, two "inkers," (deerskin balls stuffed with wool and attached to wooden handles) and a bundle after bundle of paper. The onlookers gazed at the cargo, then at each other. "We are certainly going to have us a news paper," Old Settler drawled. "That's just what we've been needing here for a right smart spell."

On tributaries of the great Mississippi, or in boom-towns bordering the Great Plains; in mining camps or the cattle country the advent of the printing press was the symbol of civilization. Dismantled into packs for mules to carry, or crowded on the bed of a Conestoga wagon—the press arrived, with the types and paper, and the owner thereof was a westward-faring frontier editor. Hard on his heels, as a rule, came the pioneer preacher, together with the school master.

The Press helped to conquer the wilderness. Dixon Ryan Fox, president of the New York State Historical society, has written:

"The printing press is a social instrument, especially when in the regular production of a newspaper it keeps the diary of the community, maintains a forum for its discussions and provides an exchange for its commerce. It is a public institution and yet, at the same time, a private industry."

"Seldom in those early days, or later, was a printer called to a community with general and responsible assurances of support, as a minister, or a teacher is called." Each risked not only his time and effort but the capital tied up in an extensive and cumbersome equipment. No pioneers needed more courage to face disappointment than this vanguard of editor-publishers moving on their own frontiers just behind that of the homesteaders. Heroes of the civil state no less than of the battle field, these men bore a close relation to the American progress and they worked in the elation of public service.

The frontier era of American history is long since erased. But in villages and cities today there are editors who are carrying on the traditions of the pioneers in journalism. Examine the country press for evidence that there are newspapers which "keep the diary of the community," the day-by-day report of life, death, love, business, the intensely human and simple accounts of American energies.

These editor-publishers, like their forerunners who risked lives and fortunes in the westward march, still "work in the elation of public service."

MERLE THORPE

This man was not a merchant. He was a storekeeper. There is a vast difference. The storekeeper puts a "sign" in his local paper and whines about its being charity or unnecessary expense. The merchant spends time in preparing each week on paper what he would say to 1,000 prospects if he called upon them personally. He makes it the first item on his weekly calendar. As definite a chore as opening up in the morning or sending out his bills on the first of the month. And the cost of sending this personal invitation into the homes of possible customers he includes not as an expense, but as an investment as important and necessary as the same amount invested in goods on the shelves.

Many successful business men are called, but few are chosen. The buying public stands ready to respond to personality, real service, expert buying. The opportunity may be there. The storekeeper is there, waiting, but the public doesn't know and is woefully indifferent to finding out. The storekeeper takes too literally the Emersonian fiction that the people will learn in some mysterious way of the better mousetrap, and he waits. The merchant, on the other hand, loses no time in telling the people about the better mousetrap, for he realizes that time is money.

The little group of backwoodsmen, lolling in the sunshine in front of a log cabin on the river bank, lazily speculated on who was pulling a clumsy raft in midstream currents and why he was aiming for their side of the shore. As the traveler succeeded in reaching his objective—a large stump handy by a narrow stream, he said, the idlers set up to take inventory.

Lambs Piggish Whet Served At Cafeteria

Michigan farmers about to begin their annual purchasing and fattening of more than 300,000 feeder lambs can find profit hints in recently completed research at Michigan State College.

Under a cafeteria system which offered shelled corn, oats, bran and linseed cake the lambs consumed so much of the linseed cake that this proved the most costly of any method employed.

Here are the summaries arrived at by George A. Brown and Leonard Plakeske of the college animal husbandry department:

1. Virtually no difference in rate of gain between hand-fed lambs given a full feed of grain and self-fed lambs given the same feeds.

2. Feed consumed by hand-fed lambs consisted of 54 per cent hay and 46 per cent corn, while lambs fed the same feeds in a self-feeder consumed 56 per cent corn and 44 per cent hay.

3. With hay selling for $5 a ton, hand-feeding was most economical with corn costing from 42 to 84 cents a bushel.

4. When hay was worth $7.50 a ton, and corn 56 cents or less a bushel, self-feeding produced the cheapest gains. With hay worth $10 a ton, self-feeding produced cheaper gains when corn was worth 71 cents or less a bushel. With hay at $12.50 a ton, self-feeding was cheaper when corn was worth 85 cents or less a bushel.

One part linseed oil cake to seven parts shelled corn made the lambs gain more rapidly with a lower feed loss, but these results were not worth enough to pay for the linseed cake.

Hobby Show

This is the week for the Hobby Show, beginning Friday, Oct. 4 and closing Saturday evening, Oct. 5 at the Chelsea public school. School children must bring their exhibits before school Friday. All exhibits must be in by 12 noon Friday. Displays will be arranged Friday morning and afternoon. The exhibits will be judged Friday afternoon after 4 o'clock.

It is hoped that besides showing the finished work this year, many exhibits will include the different steps of construction. For instance, if there is an unusual piece of needle work or rug, an additional exhibit could be shown of the various stitches necessary, along with the finished product. Or a stamp collector may devise some means of displaying his entire kit, such as: Album, stamp hinges, tweezers, method of removing stamps from the envelopes, watermark detector, stamp catalogue (may be borrowed from the library) and other catalogues and references.

In many instances the displays may be covered with cellophane to discourage handling.

The committee will do all in its power to keep the exhibits safe but no responsibility can be assumed for things lost or damaged.

Below is a suggested classification of possible entries with the chairman and judges for each:

Lib. Summer Reading

At the close of school last June a summer reading program was set up by the Public Library, with the cooperation of Supt. A. C. Johnson and the teachers of the public school from grades one to eight inclusive. Reading lists were made out by each teacher for her respective grade. A copy of these lists was placed in the library for children's reference in selecting books. Upon request the children were given record books at the library which were used to record all books read during the summer. It was planned to close the summer reading program with an assembly at the school at which awards would be made for reading accomplishments.

The assembly for the recognition of the achievements of summer reading is scheduled for October 14 at one o'clock in the public school gymnasium. All pupils of the public, parochial or rural schools from grades one to eight inclusive will be invited to attend this meeting. A special invitation is extended to the teachers and pupils of St. Mary's school and of the rural schools surrounding Chelsea whose children have participated in the summer reading program.

All children who return their record books to the library will receive some recognition at the assembly. Children who read ten or more books will receive a Diploma for Summer Reading. Children who did outstanding work will receive special recognition. The library committee is looking forward to the recognition of the achievements in summer reading of the children of Chelsea and surrounding rural districts and to the presentation of suitable awards.

Many record books have not been returned to the library. In order to arrange for the program it will be necessary to have these books at the library not later than Friday, Oct. 4. Children wishing to keep their record books may call for them at the library after the assembly.

Michigan Quarantine On Dogs Is Rescinded

With the rescinding of all dog quarantines in Michigan, Agricultural Commissioner Elmer A. Beamer, said that if all dog owners in the state would comply with regulations as set up in the Michigan Dog Law, it is quite likely that quarantines would never be necessary.

"Two very important parts of the law," Beamer said, "which would help in doing away with quarantines, if complied with are as follows: 'It shall be unlawful for any owner to allow any dog to stray beyond his premises unless under reasonable control of some person. Every dog shall at all times between sunset of each day and sunrise of the following day be confined upon the premises of its owner or custodian, except when said dog is otherwise under the reasonable control of some person.' If these two small sections of the dog law were adhered to by all dog owners, the situation might be remedied completely in time."

The quarantine which was rescinded because of the improvement in the situation which has occurred, will be re-established whenever and whenever necessary if the disease again approaches epidemic proportions.

Prized Indian Photos

Depict Early Culture

Actual photographs depicting Indian life before the advent of the white man's civilization have been reproduced and published by the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D. C.

The photographs were made in 1873 by John K. Hillers, photographer traveling with Maj. John W. Powell, famous as the first white man ever to go down the treacherous Colorado river in a boat.

The pictures were taken in the Ute and Southern Paiute territories which are now incorporated in the states of Utah and Arizona.

Powell's publications contained valuable information on language, customs and mythology of the tribes he encountered, but include no systematic account of the data assembled and for that reason the photographs constitute the most valuable result of his explorations. They are of particular interest because few early explorers had such opportunity to study Indian life in its primitive state.

These prints are of special value because they were made of tribes which had only a meager association with white men at the time the pictures were taken. It is true that the Ute had bought horses from the Spaniards and encountered a few white trappers, but these associations had practically no effect on their primitive culture.

The Southern Paiute, living in the more arid and uninviting region of the Southwest, had even less contact with the whites and were even more primitive.

Valuable information not only of shelters, but also on camp accessories, basketry, weapons, dress, transportation, dancing, games and other phases of Indian culture are recorded on these glass plates. Their value can best be realized when it is considered that they show not only the general features of the Indian life, but also the details.

Anthropologists say the pictures constitute a priceless record of true Indian customs before the irrevocable changes wrought by the domination of the white man.
