Senior High band is practicing for the annual spring concert, to be held May 9.

The band is also planning a trip to Bob-Lo June 1.

The band is glad to welcome a new member, Ronald Coleman, who plays clarinet.

The Junior High band has been working hard for their next concert on May 9.

They are planning to give a concert at some Junior High school after May 9.

The first chairs are occupied by the Grove, clarinet; Loretta, also sax; Sandy Sharrard, flute; Eric Knisely, cornet; Bill Light, drum.

At the Latin club meeting of April 23, the menu committee for the Roman-banquet planned a menu.

It was also decided that the characters in the play would practice after school on the next day.

On the more recreational side of the picture, the juniors enjoyed themselves with food, laughter, and a little more dancing given at the Kausch home Saturday night, April 18. Boys and girls drifted in and out all evening.

The First World War is being studied by the junior history classes; while in eleventh grade English, students are learning about the lives and works of such authors as Poe, Thoreau, Emerson, Bryant, Hawthorne, and others.

Some ambitious students have turned politician. Seems that everyone is busy composing campaign slogans and posters for the Student Council elections to take place in May.

All hope for the victory of Earl Heller, their presidential candidate. Bob Eder is running for vice-president.

The Regional Spring Speech Contest was held on April 23 at Eastern Michigan College, Ypsilanti, Mich.

Participating from Chelsea in the original contest division was the district winner, Nancy Mayer.

Winners of the regional contest were first place, Willie Ashford, Willow Run High School; tied for second place, Mark Mason, Spring Arbor; and Dewey Barich, Roosevelt High.

The speech class is working energetically on their latest class project, a play, entitled "The Curious Savage" by John Patrick.

They hope to present it to a group of students in the near future.

The Junior librarians are planning a field trip to the University of Michigan on the morning of Wednesday, May 4.

Accompanied by the school librarian, Miss Wise, and several mothers, they will visit the four largest natural history museums on the campus, housed in the University Museums building.

They will be interested chiefly in the Exhibits Museum which has two large exhibit halls and a balcony which are available to the public. Plans await completion.

French club is considering seriously some amendments to their constitution-having to do with excluding members for non-payment of dues, and requiring advance notice of special meetings. The group is also planning election of officers and a spring picnic.

Student Council election for president and vice-president will be held May 7. Running from the Junior class are Earl Heller for president and Bob Eder for vice-president. From the Sophomore class, David Rowe is running for president and Jane McLaughlin for vice-president. An assembly staged by the candidates and their campaign managers will be presented to the student body May 5. A plan was approved for the Student Council in order that they might go on their senior trip. The decision as to what gift to buy for the new high school was postponed until next year.

HERE'S A FRESH APPROACH:

Make Your Own Rules for Your Child, Says Professor

Ann Arbor—Parents are getting so much advice from magazines and newspapers on how to bring up Junior that they are forgetting how to be normal, says Byron Hughes, professor of child development at the University of Michigan.

"Parents worry too much about the adjustment of the child, both at home and at school. My feeling is that they would be much better off to make the assumption that they are ordinary adults and that they don't need any special education about how to be parents," he says.

"Every home is an individual unit and each family should make up its own rules to keep the home going."

"If the parents want to insist that the youngsters come promptly to the table and behave themselves in a well-mannered way, there's nothing wrong with it. If other parents decide that the youngsters can piece between meals and can come late to meals, that's equally all right."

"Some families enjoy eating together and in other homes the mother and father may decide to eat alone because the kids upset the apple cart. There are a thousand different ways to do it and they are all equally good so long as the parents and children find satisfaction."

"The important thing is not to get worried about everyday frustrations. Life is full of frustrations and there's no reason to be disturbed by this simple fact. People are probably more hurt by worrying about getting frustrated than they are by actually being frustrated and acting accordingly."

He points out that when parents and children are frustrated they are quite naturally going to engage in silly behavior occasionally.

"There's nothing out-of-the-way in acting silly once in a while," says Professor Hughes. "It helps keep emotions in balance. We talk so much at the present time about the bright and gifted children, we wear ourselves out trying to put on a false intellectual. We spend too much time attempting to appear to be geniuses. It wouldn't hurt to spend some time now and then just acting stupid. Above all, we shouldn't be afraid of our occasional and inevitable stupid behavior."

In a 20-mile race, a man would win over a horse because of his endurance.

Educator Believes Television Craze May Make Us A Nation of Morons

A prominent educator has warned that the television craze, if it continues "with the present level of programs," will make us "a nation of morons."

The doctor deprecates the lazy, short-cuts that fool a student into thinking he is learning when he is not, referring particularly to television. "The habit of reading is an unquestioned sign of intelligence," declares the doctor, who thinks too much television will make impossible the formation of good reading habits by young people.

The educator has something to worry about if television will prevent the young people of this nation from developing the habit of reading. It is quite possible for a man or woman to pick up a smattering of information on television, through the movies or elsewhere, but it is important that our young people understand that a collection of scattered information can be practically useless.

An encyclopedia, or a book of facts, contains many interesting statistics and other things of interest. Nevertheless, no one who knew all this scattered information could be called "educated." The same observation applies to the mind that is burdened with the trivia that often passes for learning in circles that are uneducated.

Advertising Reported by Banker To Be Vital Force in Public Relations

Advertising is a vital force in public relations as well as in selling. George Goodwin, vice-president of the First National Bank at Atlanta, Ga., told bankers recently. He was one of the speakers on the advertising panel at the New Orleans Regional meeting of the Financial Public Relations Association.

"Advertising," said Mr. Goodwin, "is perhaps the best means of conveying a bank's image to the public. If a bank does not advertise," he said, "the public will still form impressions of its personality. These impressions may be based on its activities, the enthusiasm of its employees, the appearance of the bank's building, or on personal experience. These are all uncontrolled factors. It is dangerous for a bank, by failure to advertise, to leave the creation of its personality to uncontrolled factors."—Michigan Investor.

In support of the above statement banks of all classifications have reported an increase of 28 per cent in their 1958 advertising budget, with newspapers being by far their first choice.

In these days when the government is trying to legalize wire tapping, it is interesting to note that the Bell Telephone System is experimenting with a method of eliminating eavesdropping over the party line.—Changing Times.

MICHIGAN MIRROR

By Elmer E. White, Secretary, Michigan Press Association

Problems that plagued Michigan when the 1958 legislature convened last January are still unsolved. Most of the state's problems have dollar signs and all are tied to the economic illness abroad in the land.

The legislature will return May 15 for a two-day adjournment session at which six of the 1958-59 budget bills will get final action. Warnings three months ago that slumps in tax revenue and general resistance to new levies would lead to cutbacks were borne out with impact as the regular session ended.

Higher education was hardest hit. Michigan State University was cut $1,011,000 under current expenditures; the University of Michigan $900,000. Smaller colleges got smaller reductions.

Difficult administrative problems result from the cutbacks. Colleges and universities are trying hard to prepare for the "tidal wave" of students which has been moving through grade and high schools. Officials indicated they would be forced to "borrow from the future" by postponing purchases, slowing down programs, maintaining present pay schedules, reducing personnel in some categories, cutting back on building maintenance.

At MSU a way will have to be found to keep in existence the Traffic Safety Center and the Labor Management Relations Institute or they will die. Neither program was provided for in this year's budget. The same is true at U-M's Human Resources Institute.

In closing hours pressure developed quickly and heavily on the legislature to make adjustments. The Republican party in the House held firm for the final vote on the education bill, retaining the cuts.

"If we gave ground on education, we would have to relax on everyone else," said one House member.

The NATIONAL OUTLOOK

By RALPH ROBEY

★ Facts vs. Opinions on Business Trend

Business factual reports, on the whole, continue unfavorable. Opinions on the business outlook, however, appear to be swinging more to the favorable side.

On the factual side the following recent developments are worth noting:

1. Industrial production, as measured by the Federal Reserve Board index, declined in March another two points to 128. This index is in physical terms and uses 1947-49 as equal to 100. Last August, just before the present recession began, the index was 145. Between January and February the decline was three points, from 133 to 130. A two-point decline, therefore, is a slight improvement.

One of the major factors in the decline was the continued weakness in automobile production, which in turn held steel output at a low level.

2. A preliminary estimate of gross national product, which is the monetary value of all goods and services produced in the nation, places the figure for the first quarter at $424 billion. This compares with a high of $440 billion in the third quarter and $432.6 billion in the fourth quarter of last year. This preliminary estimate is that of the President's Council of Economic Advisors. It may be revised later, but the revision will not be of significance insofar as the total amount is concerned. The figure of $424 billion is exactly that which had been privately forecast for some weeks, and hence is not a surprise.

3. During the first quarter inventories declined at an annual rate of $7.5 billion. This was more than double the rate of decline in the fourth quarter, and appreciably higher than been expected. It can be argued, of course, that since this rate of working-off of inventories has not continued indefinitely, such a sharp drop means we are getting close to an upturn.

4. Housing starts in March were at an annual rate of 880,000, as compared with 890,000 in February, and 1,030,000 in January. It had been hoped that the March figure would show an improvement. Three factors are offered in explanation of the further slight dip: (A) bad weather which made outside work difficult, (B) delay in getting applications for mortgages processed, and (C) the fact that there has not been enough time for the latest government moves to assist housing to have had an effect.

5. Congress continues to enact spending bills of almost every conceivable kind. On the basis of what have already been passed, plus an unquestioned falling off of revenues to the government from taxes—plus the complete lack of any tendency for economy by the Congress—it is predicted that there will be a federal deficit for

★ But What?

A headline on the sports page says: Williams Homers but Sox Lose. Now since I don't live in Boston it isn't a matter of life or death to me whether the Red Sox win or whether they lose.

In fact, I think I would get more kick out of watching a losing game that featured a home run by Williams than I would seeing a winning game without any home runs.

That headline should have read: Sox Lose but Williams Homers!

Almost every human situation contains some elements of triumph and some of tragedy, and we may as well emphasize the triumph. There is a story in the Bible about a Syrian army officer by the name of Naaman, and it is recorded that: "He was a mighty man of valor, but he was a leper."

I think it was Halford Luccock who remarked that it would have been fairer to the man to say: "He was a leper, but he was a mighty man of valor." After all, he couldn't do much about the disease of leprosy, but you have to give him credit for being a hero in spite of that handicap.

I recall another story about a North American diplomat who was listening to a long and flowery Spanish oration in some Latin American country. His interpreter was relaying the orator's assurance of good will and eternal friendship. Finally the North American said to the interpreter, "Don't bother to translate for me until he says 'EUT'." He knew that the flowery phrases were from the tip of a fluted tongue, and that the more serious matters which came from the heart of the speaker and which represented his country's real desires would come afterward.

We ought to watch our casual remarks. Do we say, "She's a wonderful mother, but she's a terrible housekeeper," or do we say, "She's a terrible housekeeper, but she's a wonderful mother?"

Do we say, "He's a fine bookkeeper, but he's mighty bashful," or do we say, "He's mighty bashful, but he's a fine bookkeeper." The way we say it tells something about the way we feel, doesn't it?

A change in name dictated by growth and progress

ROCKWELL SPRING AND AXLE COMPANY

now becomes

ROCKWELL-STANDARD CORPORATION

On October 1, 1953, a new corporation took its place on the great horizon of U.S. business progress and advancement. The names and reputations of the two parties to this consolidation, The Timken-Detroit Axle Company and Standard Steel Spring Company, had been widely known and respected for almost half a century. It was thus decided that the identities and products of these two merged companies should be retained in the corporate name, either indefinitely, or until such time as events might dictate a change.

Now, four and a half years later, the stated aims and purposes of the new corporation have been fulfilled beyond our own hopes. Progress has been swift and sound under the direction of a management team that has all the requisites to build a solid future. A well planned program of diversification has been carried forward. Our product and marketing base, has been substantially broadened. A program of plant improvement, including automation, and new plant construction, has been pushed forward. Of $95,000,000 invested in these new facilities in the past ten years, $32,000,000 has been spent in the past two years.

In addition to broadening our domestic market base, we are making rapid strides abroad as international business continues to expand. We now have operating and manufacturing arrangements in Brazil, Western Germany, and India, and are continuing exploration of profitable connections in other countries.

Here at home we recently purchased a going, heavy duty equipment component business, hydraulic drives, from Westinghouse Electric Corporation. We have just completed arrangements to acquire, through an exchange of stock, more than 80% of the outstanding shares of stock of Aero Design & Engineering Co. of Bethany, Oklahoma. The proposed stock offering will not become operative until after a registration statement filed under the Securities Act of 1933 becomes effective. Aero manufactures the well-known "Commander" and "Commander-Air-Cruiser" executive airplanes.

We will continue our efforts to diversify in fields that offer strong growth potentials.

In light of these years of progress, and especially looking to the future, we find ourselves in the unique position of a business that has outgrown its name.

It is for this reason that we have now adopted the name Rockwell-Standard Corporation—a name that detracts nothing from a successful past, more accurately defines our present situation, and becomes, we are confident, a suitable identification for the broad pattern of our future.

ON CAPITOL HILL

By Congressman George Meader

In our modern complex society Congress must be fully and accurately informed in order to formulate policy intelligently.

In a famous case, the Supreme Court said: "A legislative body cannot legislate wisely or effectively in the absence of information respecting the conditions which the legislation is intended to affect or change, and where the legislative body does not itself possess the requisite information—which not infrequently is true—recourse must be had to others who do possess it."

As many of you know, I have been engaged recently in a long-distance debate with the Attorney General, William P. Rogers, over his statements asserting that bureaucrats in the Executive branch of government are the sole judges of what Congress can or cannot know concerning the public business.

Attorney General Rogers succeeded me as Chief Counsel for the Senate War Investigating Committee in 1947. He told a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee recently that because of "executive privilege" and the doctrine of separation of powers, the Executive branch of the government can withhold from Congress information requested when, in its opinion, the public interest requires it.

In a speech on the floor of the House and in an exchange of correspondence with the Attorney General, I challenged his contention. I denied existence of the doctrine of "executive privilege" and I cited a long line of Supreme Court decisions holding that the power of Congress to obtain information is a foundation for intelligent legislation was an inherent part of the legislative power, which the Constitution vested in the Congress.

This might appear at first glance to be a technical, dry, Constitutional issue, but it is far more than that. If the huge bureaucracy we have built up in the past two and one-half decades can hide its activities from the public and from the elected representatives of the people, and cannot be called to account for its stewardship of authority vested in it as a public trust, then we have taken a long step in the direction of an all-powerful centralized bureaucracy.

Smelt Dipping Time

Smelt spawning runs are a sure sign of spring in Michigan as thousands of persons line streams to dip these tasty little fish each year. Dip nets, not more than five feet in circumference, may be used to take smelt from designated Michigan streams during the March 1-May 31 season. A list of these streams can be obtained from Conservation Department district offices.

Batch of Eggs from Maine 46 Years Ago Is Source of Michigan Smelt

Lansing—A batch of eggs brought from Maine some 46 years ago is paying dividends today for Michigan fishermen.

The eggs, obtained by the old state fish commission from Green Lake, Maine in 1912, were hatched, and the young fish were released in Crystal Lake. This planting is believed to be the source of smelt now found in most of the Great Lakes.

Actually, smelt originally were introduced in the St. Marys River in 1908, but the Crystal Lake planting was the most successful and is credited with the spread of these little silver fish.

Today, thousands of Michigan residents and tourists get plenty of sport and good eating when smelt make spawning runs from the Great Lakes up streams throughout the state.

During the spawning season, which usually hits its peak during April, smelt dippers line streams with dip nets, buckets, washtubs and other implements to harvest millions of smelt.

Hand nets, not more than five feet in circumference, may be used to take smelt in designated waters from March 1 to May 31. Lists of these waters are available from the Conservation Department's Lansing offices, or at field district headquarters.

The best locations for successful smelt dipping normally are in streams flowing into the northern third of Lake Michigan, including Green Bay. Other good spots include streams and cuts draining into Saginaw Bay.

Avid smelt fishermen claim this fish is tops in tasty eating and the abundance of the species provides for many a fish fry. Incidentally, the name "smelt" has nothing to do with odor; it's the English form of an older Anglo-Saxon word, "smoelt," which means smooth, or shining.

These are the traffic engineers who study street and highway conditions to find out why you stick into other cars, why you get lost why you can't travel as smoothly as you would like. These are the men with the aspirin to cure the most horrendous headache of the age—the horror on our highways.

On their 2,400 shoulders rests the responsibility of picking out localized traffic problems and devising solutions for them. Some of these solutions seem to be right out of science fiction but many have proved to be effective in getting you to your destination in the one place you were in when you left home.

In their 1,200 brains they must figure how to keep pace with expensive super-highway construction while keeping the coffers solvent for the maintenance and improvement of existing roads.

You have no doubt complained about fighting the traffic. These are the men who do it for a living—and with great success in spite of the fact they have minimum funds and maximum problems. Their ingenuity and imagination are finding new answers to highway problems.

It was a traffic engineer who reasoned that if you separate the automotive tortoisess from the hares on uphill grades, you could cut down on head-on collisions. This relatively uncomplicated theory became practical with the inauguration of "creeper" lanes reserved for slow-moving vehicles eliminating the need for hill-passing.

It was a traffic engineer who sought to protect motorists from rushing off highways at night by tracing the outer edge of the road with a reflective white line.

It was a traffic engineer who jumped on the idea of using brilliant reflective signs, as important to your life at night as in the daytime, you can see them 24 hours a day.

It was a traffic engineer who found that trees and brush by intersection waysides kept traffic fatalities up and that trimming or cutting them down was one of the least expensive ways of keeping motorists alive.

It was a traffic engineer who worked with florists to plant rose bushes in dividing lanes providing a "crash barrier" for fast-moving cars that spin off the road, and providing an element of roadside beauty to bleak travel monotony.

And when the five billion dollar annual highway accident bill is finally reduced, it will be the traffic engineers who can take a rightfully earned bow.

MYSTERY FARM No. 2 has been identified as the Fletcher road home of Edward Brassow where he and his son, Alvin, specialize in dairying. They have lived on the farm for eight years.

Edward, Alvin Brassow Specialize in Holstein Dairy Cattle on 'Mystery Farm'

"Mystery Farm No. 2" was not so easily identified as the Elmer Mayer place which was the first of the series printed. Several people who called gave incorrect identifications of the place. First to correctly identify the photograph as that of the Edward Brassow farm on North Fletcher road, south of Chelsea-Dexter road, was Mrs. Elmer Lindow. She called at 11:15 a.m. Thursday. Brassow and one of his sons, Alvin, operate the farm. The younger man and his wife and two children, Bobby, six, and David three years old, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Brassow make their home there.

The Brassows are strictly dairy farmers, specializing in Holstein cattle. The Edward Brassows have been married 41 years and last year were honored by their family at a surprise observance of their 40th anniversary.

Their family includes, in addition to the son, Alvin, another son, Raymond, of Dexter; two daughters, Mrs. Dennis Englebert of Saline, and Wilma Brassow, now of Denver, Colo.; and ten grandchildren.

Formerly of Wayne, the Brassows had lived at Saline eight years and in Dexter five years before buying the Fletcher road farm eight years ago from George Brown. Since then they have built the silo, a milk house, granary, tool shed and hen house. Only the house, garage and barn were on the 100-acre farm when they bought it.

The farm was familiarly known for many years as the George Nordman place. The Nordmans bought the place about 40 years ago. Mr. Nordman died 12 years later but Mrs. Nordman and other members of the family resided there for some years. Mrs. Nordman, who died five years ago, was the mother of Mrs. Charles Bycraft.

Among those who correctly identified the Brassow farm are Julius Blass, Eugene Seitz, Mrs. Lloyd Schneider, Mrs. Robert Kushmaul, Herbert Erke, William Van Riper, Mrs. Bill Robbins, Philip McDaniels, Mrs. Erwin Hinderer, Mrs. Don Keezer, Lawrence Koch, Helen Jarvie, Charles Curtis, Mrs. Walter Trinkle and the Brassows, themselves.

According to tabulated opinions of judges of the contest, she was chosen by one of the judges for second place, with final results of judging placing her third. She was the only girl in a field of six contestants in her division. She spoke on the topic "These Brutal Young," describing juvenile delinquency problems and remedial measures.

Students from 15 southeastern Michigan high schools competed in the finals of the regional contest. An Ann Arbor youth, Wm. Ashford, won first place in oratory.

Judges were members of the faculties of Eastern Michigan College, the University of Michigan and Michigan State University, with Asst. Prof. Grant Wessel of EMC in charge of the contest.

THANK YOU
I wish to sincerely express my thanks and my appreciation to all who so thoughtfully remembered me with beautiful cards and good wishes for my birthday.
Mrs. Adam Eppler.

Excess Shrubs Common Error In Landscaping

Overplanting is the most common error made by amateur landscapers, believes Joseph T. Cox, extension specialist in landscape architecture at Michigan State University.

A natural impatience to fill empty spots quickly before proper size plants have a chance to mature may cause people to plant too much and choose materials that are fast without taking into account their ultimate size.

Cox points out that a foundation planting can either add or detract from the value of a house. To help owners of new homes that need to be landscaped and for those who want to redesign their landscape plan, Cox offers this general guide.

Draw two lines, beginning at the middle of the front doorstep. Run one line to each front corner of the house ending at a height halfway between the eaves and the roof. The lines should fall within these lines.

If the door is in the center of the house, the lines may be asymmetrical; if the door is to the side, one line will rise more steeply to the corner, indicating that taller plants should be used to help achieve a balanced effect.

Cox says the important thing is that the planting be balanced visually. But this doesn't mean that you need to use exactly the same plants on each side. It's a matter of balancing mass rather than form.

If you would like your house to appear larger, place plants beyond the corners of the house that will grow to a height within a continuation of the lines from the door step.

Cox says that although there seems to be a preference for evergreens these days, the twig colorings and winter effects of many deciduous shrubs are equally interesting. But if evergreens are used, plant species such as yew, juniper, and holly. These plants offer varieties that will grow into the height you desire.

Avoid full-sized trees such as hemlocks and pines. Except for small flowering species such as dogwood and flowering crab which may produce a pleasant effect at the corner of a house, trees have no proper place in foundation planting.

In general, with modern houses, foundation plants should be low and spreading. Low plants are especially desirable at doorways and under windows, unless the house has a high foundation.

BUSY BEAVERS 4-H CLUB
The regular 4-H meeting was held at the home of Janice Walz Saturday afternoon, April 22. We had two new members join us. Their names are Ruth Hannewald and Leona Tisch.

We are very sorry that our administrative leaders, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Cook have resigned because they are moving to Fowlerville. The club presented Mr. and Mrs. Cook a cake with their names on it and a nice lamp. Our new administrative leaders are Mr. and Mrs. George Liebeck.

We are also sorry to hear that the brother of one of our members, Duane Schoonover, was seriously ill and in a hospital. Now he is home and feeling well.

Members signed up for their summer projects at this meeting. The program for the summer was discussed and plans made for extra activities for the summer which will include a tour of all projects and a picnic.

After the business meeting, games were enjoyed. A pot-luck lunch was served at the close of the evening.

We all wish Mr. and Mrs. Cook much happiness in their new home.

Dianne Reynolds, reporter.

Hold good storable corn for summer sales, suggest Michigan State University farm economists. It will improve in quality and stand a chance of a little better price.

Washington Report
By Senator Charles E. Potter
The latest news from Washington of special interest to Michigan.

I WON A LONG FIGHT the other day when Secretary of the Treasury Anderson issued a new regulation permitting the deduction of expenses of members to be deducted for income tax purposes. The prelude to all this was a lifetime conviction on my part that it was unfair to permit such a deduction when the educational upgrading of teachers is so much an integral part of their job. On March 25, 1957, I introduced a bill to this effect. And when it didn't look as if the legislation was going to get out of committee, I literally haunted Secretary of the Treasury Anderson and other Treasury Department officials regarding this situation. Now, the Secretary has come through with this new regulation.

AND I'VE ALMOST WON another fight in connection with the allocation of sufficient funds to complete the Great Lakes connecting channels on schedule. Today I received a letter from Brigadier General J. Person, Assistant Chief of Engineers for Civil Works, saying that an additional four million dollars could be used for this project and I have again urged the Subcommittee on Public Works of the Senate Appropriations Committee to recommend approval of this additional amount for the fiscal year 1959.

I have pointed out that if the connecting channels are not completed within a reasonable time after the St. Lawrence Seaway is in use, a loss of vitally needed toll-revenue will result. The effect of a slow-down and stretch-out on this work can be a serious problem in the State of Michigan.

Furthermore, it means a delay in the extension of the benefits of the St. Lawrence Seaway to the Upper Lakes States, with consequent deferment of private and municipal plans for expansion of facilities to take full advantage of the St. Lawrence Seaway. This again would retard economic development in the Great Lakes area.

A JUMBO MERGER of two of the nation's most important agencies absorbed much of my time last week. In a message to Congress, the White House proposed combining the Federal Civil Defense Administration, now headquartered in Battle Creek, Michigan, and the Office of Defense Mobilization. Their powers would be transferred to the President and the new merged agency would be called "Office of Defense and Civilian Mobilization."

I have serious reservations about the plan. They boil down to two simple questions: What is best for the nation? What is best for Michigan? Let's look at a few of the angles.

IN THE NATIONAL INTEREST, I believe this type of massive shift should receive full-scale Congressional and public review. This is the only proper way, in my opinion, to handle such a vast overhaul of functions.

Our laws now permit the merger plan to go into effect if it is approved by Congress for sixty days without objection. However, immediately upon receipt of the proposal, Representative August Johansen and I introduced resolutions to nullify it. If passed, these resolutions will cause the full legislative process of hearings and floor debate on the White House proposal. We believe this approach protects the interests of the American people.

Still speaking from a national viewpoint, I have another grave misgiving. The merger includes the very unusual and perhaps unwise step of placing an executive agency under the arm of a Chief Executive when the Presidential office already is overburdened with responsibilities. This, in my opinion, deserves full study in public hearings.

LOCALLY, this picture emerges: Dispersing strategic establishments in Battle Creek, Michigan, and the Office of Defense Mobilization, now headquartered in Battle Creek, Michigan, and the Office of Defense Mobilization. Their powers would be transferred to the President and the new merged agency would be called "Office of Defense and Civilian Mobilization."

National Outlook...
this fiscal year of about $3 billion, and that the deficit next year, even without tax reduction, may run $8 billion to $10 billion.

The Federal Reserve Board has just taken two steps further to ease money rates and increase the volume of lending: (A) It approved a reduction of the rediscount rate of five Federal Reserve banks (this is the charge Reserve banks make for loans to member commercial banks); and (B) it reduced the reserve requirements for both central Reserve cities (New York and Chicago) and Reserve cities, which are the 48 next largest cities. The reduction in the rediscount rate was from 3 1/2 to 1 1/2 percent; the reduction in reserves gives the banks an ability to lend an additional $2.7 billion.
It is expected that this action will result in a reduction of the prime rate—the rate which banks charge their best customers.
In connection with opinions on the probable business trend there are three worthy of reference:
1. Senator Harry Byrd, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, says he thinks the necessity of "leveling off." He bases this upon an analysis of replies to a long list of questions he recently asked leading bankers and businessmen.

2. Secretary of the Treasury
Robert B. Anderson, in an address to the American Society of Newspaper Editors, said, "We are not headed for a depression, but for new horizons of progress." Mr.
Anderson's views are important because he has become one of the most influential members of the Administration. When he says that we are not headed for a depression, it may be taken that is the view of the President.
3. Sumner H. Slichter, professor of Economics at Harvard, and a widely quoted business analyst, in testimony before the Senate Economic Committee, said he believes the first quarter would be the low point of this recession in terms of gross national product.
Whether the facts or the opinions tell the true story of what is ahead is a matter over which there are no serious arguments at the moment it appears the economy as a whole is still on the downgrade. There are certain sections of the country, and certain industries, of which this is not true. But that is always the case except in a depression of real proportions.

At the moment, as we have said repeatedly, we are not in such a depression, and there is no indication that we are on the verge of one. This is merely a recession and recession not to go beyond what normally is indicated by that term. How soon we shall reach bottom, how long we shall stay on the bottom, and how fast we shall recover when we start up are questions for which my crystal ball does not provide answers.

Observe 50th Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Boone, Sr.

The 50th anniversary of their marriage was observed last Sunday by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Boone, Sr., at a dinner given by their family at West End Grill in Jackson and at a family gathering held in the afternoon at the home of a son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Casper Forner, 5922 Rives Junction Road, Jackson.

The Boones were married April 28, 1908, in Seattle, Wash., and a year later came to make their home on the present farm, 19850 Old US-12.

Mrs. Boone, the former Anna Sticksels was born in Detroit, June 14, 1887, while Mr. Boone was born Sept. 25, 1879, at Noyes, Mo.

Their family includes two daughters, Mrs. Forner who is the former Marla Boone, and Mrs. Doris Robbins, both of Jackson; and one son, Walter, Jr., of Salt Lake City, Utah. They also have nine grandchildren and two great-granddaughters.

Humidity is often a problem with house plants because heating systems tend to dry the air. Here are some ways you can add moisture to the air in your house.

You can put the potted plant in a saucer or metal tray which is filled with coarse sand or gravel, pieces of broken crocks or charcoal. Fill with water to the top of the gravel. Moisture will evaporate into the air surrounding the plant.

Try giving your plants a bath! It not only gives them some moisture but also opens their pores. Do this in the morning on a sunny day so the plants are dry by afternoon.

House plants like a temperature that is fairly constant. They do well at 70 to 72 degrees F. in the daytime and around 60 degrees F. at night. Sixty degrees is too cool for some plants, however; ask your county agricultural agent or florist about yours.

If you are growing plants with different temperature requirements, put those that need cooler temperature near a window, and those that like more heat toward the center of the room.

Dried foods such as beans are easy to store and they keep almost indefinitely, say Michigan State University food specialists. Store dried beans in a well covered container in a cool, dry place.

Salvage an old door—a flat one with no moldings—cut it to size and refinish it for a new coffee table. You can buy any size or shape legs for it at your local hobby or furniture shop, say Michigan State University home economists.

Homemaking Hints

Ever been discouraged when the furniture you've finished yourself has a rough, grainy texture? Dust is the culprit. To avoid it as much as possible, work in a dust-free room and rub the surface with a cloth moistened in turpentine and alcohol after each sanding, suggests Mary Shipley, assistant professor of related arts at Michigan State University.

Jewelry this year is taking on an old-fashioned look. Thirty and sixty-inch ropes are back, as are lariats. Three, five and eight-strand bibs in variations of sun-and-sea tones and citrus colors are also popular. Large pins are featured at the shoulder, hip or back of the collar. Earrings are mostly of the button and spray types, says homemaking specialists.

This year's belts are wide and low at the hip. Fringed sashes that wrap around the waist and loop are new attractions, too. Short gloves are taboo—at least for a while. The eight and ten-button lengths are most in demand. If you want a shorter glove, buy a six-button and crush it down, suggest fashion experts.

Surviving are three nieces, Mrs. Lucille Olson and Mrs. Viola Lindemann, both of Ann Arbor; and Mrs. Dorothy Platz of Detroit; and two nephews, Byford Spear of Chelsea, and Ruel Spear of Jackson, and Paul Spear of Encino, Calif.

ristown, N. J., where both were training with their seeing-eye dogs, "Shadow" and "Cindy."
