Berlin Crisis Demands That We Stand Up for Our Established Rights We don't know about you, but the more we read about

the Berlin crisis the more confused we get.

But this is nothing new. It's been that way from the start. Americans troops on their way to Berlin at the close of the European phase of WW II were held up to let the Russians go first. And it would appear that this peculiar insistance of Washington that the Russians should have credit where none was due, has kept us off balance ever since. Historically, since the Allies beat down their Axis foes, there would seem to have been no sane reason for deciding that Germany should be half slave and half free—and the city of Berlin likewise.

But today, 16 years and several crises later, we are again told by the the Kremlin to get out of Berlin-or else. Krushchev is again threatening the West with turning over control of all Berlin to the East Germans by means of a treaty with this satellite country—even though he has previously announced a number of times that the Ulbricht stooges were in control!

And now, after Khrush's latest saber-rattling we and our allies have sent him what the papers call "stern notes"—of which ours is said to be the sternest of all. After stating our basic and irrevocable rights in Berlin, repeating our insistence that the two Germanies must be reunited by vote of the people, and that insistence of the Soviet Union on its tion delegates, indicate public apathreatened course of action could bring war, the note then thy at an all-time peak, suggests that everybody sit down and talk over the whole

It would seem sufficient to have stated flatly that we will stand up for our established rights and that we will stick in fully, in the convention itself, Berlin until the German people can decide their future for themselves. Having learned the futility of discussion with the Russian and the worthlessnes of Soviet pledges, an invitation to further conversation (which was contained in all the delegate hopefuls have indicated the state Attorney General, allied notes) can only be considered a delaying tactic.

Perhaps the West need to gain time. If so, it had better the state.

More Grain Needed by Dairy Herds

More grain is necessary for the adequate feeding of Michigan's dairy cattle, says Donald Hillman Michigan State University dairy

Grain-feeding recommendations n recent years have generally emphasized minimum grain with high quality hay, he says, but have failed to recognize that most hay on farms is not high quality. Hillman cites several reasons for increasing the level of grain

Because cattle do not get enough dry matter from high moisture hay-crop silage, the lack of adequate nutrients must be made up by increased grain feeding, he

Also feeding grain in milking parlors does not allow enough time for high-producing cows to eat adequate amounts of grain.

Feeding strictly to a grain-milk ratio, such as one pound of grain for each 3.5 or 4 pounds of wilk produced, does not allow for changes in roughage quality and individual cow differences. Modern recommendations should read "feed for production", rather than "feed according to production," says Hill.

When a dairy herd is underfed he says, the underfeeding is most obvious on the better cows because they require more energy to naintain high milk production. Today's cows are sometimes never given an opportunity to produce at given capacity because of the low level of grain they get wonderland attractions will dential use, according to Don while going through the milking will cover more than 800 company of Lansing. "There have The dairymen whose herds make
