New Curriculum Director Named for Chelsea Schools

Dr. Laurice Bissell of Ann Arbor was appointed the Chelsea school district's new curriculum director at the school board's regular July 8 meeting.

Bissell, who is employed as the chair of the education department of Marygrove College in Detroit, was the unanimous selection of the board's 11-member evaluating committee. Her appointment officially begins Aug. 1 at a salary of $33,000.

"The position was appealing to me in many ways," Bissell said, whose initial appointment is for two years. "It will be challenging to be working with the kindergarten through twelfth grades. I'll be concerned with the ecology of the school district, how it all works together. It is the same as ecology in nature, each piece affects the other piece, and it all relates to the curriculum directly."

Bissell holds a bachelor's degree in English and education from Western Michigan University, a master's degree in English from the University of Michigan, a specialist's degree in education psychology and reading from the University of Michigan, and a doctorate in education, curriculum, and instructional reading from the University of Michigan.

Bissell's teaching experience covers a diverse group of schools including Huron Valley High school in Milford, Warren Public schools in Warren, and the University of Michigan. She has also taught at Marygrove, where she originally served as coordinator of graduate reading education in 1981. She became the chair of the education department in 1983.

Bissell has also consulted in program development with the Ingham County Intermediate School District and the Office of Instructional Services and the Language Resources Unit at the University of Michigan.

"Dr. Bissell came highly recommended to the interview committee," said Ray Van Meer, superintendent of Chelsea schools. "She is an exceptionally intelligent woman, outstanding in her ability to analyze problems, offers creative solutions, and assumes leadership roles during implementation phases. She is a quiet, nice, friendly person. She is determined to fight for high standards of achievement and help teachers provide the resources to make every child a winner."

Bissell's husband, R. Ward, is a professor of art history at the University of Michigan. They have two children.

The curriculum director, according to the school board, will take the recent curriculum studies and "put them in an organized pattern to insure that students are given a methodical approach to subject areas and their program needs from kindergarten through the twelfth grade." Bissell will work closely with the board, school administrators, and teachers, Van Meer said.

DR. LAURICE BISSELL was appointed curriculum director for the Chelsea school district at the school board's regular meeting Monday, July 8.

Waste Treatment Plant Plan Complete, Village Officials Hope for Grant

All the technical aspects for the proposed new Chelsea waste-water treatment plant have been completed and approved by the state. What remains is to see whether the village will get a federal grant to proceed with construction.

"I understand we are about 17th or 18th on the state list to receive a 55 percent federal grant to start construction in 1986," village administrator Frederick A. Weber said.

"We are right up there, the highest we've ever been. We have moved up from about 30th place last year. I just hope we are high enough. It's going to depend on how much money is approved for sewage treatment grants to the states is approved in the federal budget, how much of that Michigan is allocated, and how far down the state list the money will spread.

"All we can do is wait and see and hope.

"The good news is that we are high on the list. The bad news is that there has been talk in Washington of cutting the total grant program back because of the federal budget deficit situation. It's hard to predict what will happen."

Another bit of good news is that several major proposed waste-water treatment projects in the Detroit metropolitan area may be put on hold for another year because final engineering plans have not been completed and approved, and may not be before the Sept. 1 deadline for finalized applications.

Chelsea has its plans in place and ready to go. The engineering consulting firm of Finkbeiner, Pettis & Strout of Toledo, O., has developed a proposal to construct a new treatment plant here at a cost of $4.5 million, estimated at year-ago prices.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources has ordered that the new plant be operating no later than July 1, 1988, which means construction should start next year.

Last July, the Detroit law firm of Miller, Canfield, Paddock & Stone, at the request of the village, suggested several ways how the local share of the construction cost might be met. All involved some combination of higher user rates and bonding.

At the time it was hoped that a combined state/federal grant of 70 percent might be made. The expectation now is that 55 percent is the best that could be available. The state has no money for sewage treatment grants.

A 55 percent federal grant would provide $2.475 million of the $4.5 million estimated cost. Local sources would have to come up with the remaining $2.025 million.

An alternative suggestion that Chelsea send its sewage to Dexter for treatment there has received little recognition or attention. A new sewage plant at Dexter, constructed in anticipation of population growth that so far has occurred is operating at about 25 percent of capacity. It could easily handle Chelsea's present volume of waste.

The problem is getting it there. It would involve construction of a large-diameter, 8-mile pipeline and an elaborate system of pumps and other supporting equipment which might cost more than a new plant at Chelsea.

A whole new planning/engineering process would have to be set in motion to determine if the ideas is feasible. And, should the Dexter-Chelsea area population grow as projected, additional treatment capacity would eventually be needed in any case.

Timely Rain Falls in Area During Week

As it has all season so far, rain came at the right time last week to keep west Washtenaw crops and gardens healthy and growing.

There were heavy showers on Thursday night and early Friday morning which were timed just right for viewers of Thursday evening's Fourth of July fireworks displays.

The shows were over before the rain began. Depending on where you were, somewhere between a quarter and a half-inch of rain fell during the night.

Additional showers fell on Saturday and Sunday, with amounts varying according to locality, a typical summer pattern. This area escaped severe storms which did considerable local damage north of Detroit late Tuesday evening.

Altogether, almost all of west Washtenaw got at least half an inch of moisture, and some places received considerably more.

The University of Michigan weather station in Ann Arbor recorded .86" of precipitation through last Monday, which is a little above normal for the first eight days of July.

Temperatures continued unseasonably cool with day-time highs in the low 80's or below. Extreme heat in the western part of the nation dissipated before it reached Michigan. Below-normal readings in the 70's were predicted for later this week, along with possible afternoon thundershowers.

Local Residents Support Closure Of Cassidy Lake

Local feeling that the Cassidy Lake Technical School should be closed was strongly expressed at a meeting held Monday night in the Lima Township Hall.

About 80 persons crowded into the hot and steamy hall with the temperature near 90. They sat and sweated through a two-hour session presided over by Washtenaw County Commissioner Ellis Pratt, who did an excellent job under the circumstances.

Everybody who wanted to speak was given a chance in turn. About 20 persons were heard from, some of them two or three times.

Seated at the head table, besides Pratt, were:

Kirk Profit, policy analyst for State Rep. Gary Owen, Ypsilanti Democrat who is speaker of the state House of Representatives.

State Sen. Lana Pollack, Ann Arbor Democrat whose district includes all of Washtenaw county.

William L. Kime, deputy director of the Michigan Department of Corrections.

James Curran, a special assistant to Gov. Blanchard.

Washtenaw County Sheriff Ron Schebl.

Present in the audience was State Rep. Margaret O'Connor, Lodi township Republican whose district includes all of Washtenaw county outside of Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti.

The meeting had been called to consider a report from the Department of Corrections demanded by Rep. Owen. The report, submitted by Kime and previously condemned by Owen as "the worst report I've ever seen in my life," was never discussed.

Owen had asked for a report on escapes from Cassidy Lake and Camp Waterloo, two minimum security prisons located in the Waterloo Recreation Area. Owen wanted to know how many criminals had escaped from the two institutions so far in 1985, what crimes they had been sentenced for, what security measures had been taken to keep them confined, and what it would cost to fence both places.

Monday night's meeting developed into a broad-ranging discussion of what to do about Cassidy Lake, which has been the subject of a "fence it or close it" controversy over the past two years.

Camp Waterloo was mentioned only briefly and incidentally, even though most of the 70-some walk-aways so far this year from the two facilities have occurred there.

Residents living near Camp Waterloo expressed resentment over "being left out" but were assured by Kime that the problems of the two institutions "will be considered together and decided together."

Chelsea village trustee Richard Steele, who is chairman of the Cassidy Lake Community Liaison Council—a volunteer group which has no legal standing—reported that all 21 members of the organization favored closing Cassidy Lake.

Vice-chairman, William Thomas amplified by saying that all 21 considered closure to be at least third-best of five possible options—closure, maintain the status quo, no fencing, fencing, or turning Cassidy Lake into a medium-security prison.

By Department of Corrections definition, a medium-security prison is fenced and patrolled by armed guards. There are presently no fences or armed guards at either Cassidy Lake or Camp Waterloo.

Kime responded that the DOC "supports making Cassidy Lake into a medium security institution if that is what the public, the governor and the Legislature want."

"The project could be completed in 1987 if it is pushed," Kime added.

Kime, supported by Pollack, Profit and Curran, suggested that it is unrealistic to expect that Cassidy Lake will be closed at a time when the total state prison system is badly overcrowded and state officials are scratching for money to expand it.

"There was a state referendum in 1976 on providing money to expand the state prison system," Sen. Pollack noted. "It was voted down. At the same time people were demanding better law enforcement and stiffer sentences for convicted criminals."

"The result has been overcrowding in the prison system. Now there seems to be some sentiment in favor of providing more prisons, and that is what we are trying to do."

"I don't have the political clout to get Cassidy Lake closed," she added. "I don't think Mrs. O'Connor or even Gary Owen does. At a time when we are scratching for money to expand the prison system, closing a 226-bed facility doesn't make sense."

Sen. Pollack added that she supports a change in the existing DOC classification procedures, including so-called "policy waivers," to prevent men convicted of assaultive crimes being

Two Men Flee Police in Wild Chase

Two Pinckney men are suspected of leading Chelsea police on a high speed 12-mile chase that ended in a Gregory man's field, on the evening of June 16.

Chelsea police officer John Detting questioned two men in Heydlauff's parking lot who were in a 1976 Monte Carlo. According to police, there were several bottles of open liquor in the back seat of the vehicle. After dumping the liquor in the parking lot, the men were advised to find a ride home.

However, not more than an hour later, at 10:14 p.m., the automobile was seen traveling north on M-52 and Detting followed. When the vehicle wouldn't stop, a high-speed chase ensued, which also ended up involving officer Frank Kornel. The chase proceeded down Werker Rd., to Island Lake Rd., to Stoffer Rd., left on Williamsville Rd. and right on Roepke Rd. The car then traveled across Doyle Rd. into an empty field, where the men fled on foot. Deputy Robert Moffett of the Washtenaw County Sheriff's Department brought in a tracking dog, but the trail was lost.

DEDICATION TO THE CAUSE is what it takes to make the annual American Legion barbeque the annual success that it is. Above, head cooker Tom Franklin, left, and Jim Carruthers work on a new batch of chicken to feed the many hungry folks who would show up over the course of the fourth of July. One thousand half chickens, supplied by Polly's market, were cooked by Legion volunteers.

Overcrowding of Prison System Will Continue, State Officials Project

More than 60 persons packed the steamy hot meeting room in the Chelsea village hall last Wednesday night to discuss what should be done about security at Cassidy Lake Technical School and Camp Waterloo.

When it was all over after 2½ hours of sweating, nothing was decided. The Cassidy Lake Community Liaison Council, which had called the meeting, lost control of it early and never got back in charge.

Early on, somebody decided to turn off the air conditioner in the sweltering meeting room. The idea may have been to get people to say whatever was on their minds, do it in a hurry, and go home. It didn't work that way. The gallons of perspiration matched the volume of words. There were a lot of both.

What all the words added up to was not much of anything. Most people appeared to wish that the problem of escapes would just plain go away. A show of hands indicated overwhelming support for closing the two prisons, even though Department of Corrections and local police officials had previously stated that closure is so unlikely as not to be worth considering as a serious option.

A Corrections spokesman said that, even with new facilities scheduled to come on line during the next few years, the state prison system will continue to be overcrowded.

Dr. Jack Willsey, school principal at Cassidy Lake, recited a summary of figures which indicate that projected expansion of the state prison system over the next five years won't keep up with the flow of inmates.

Chelsea's banking institutions got their start in 1868. It was then that George P. Glazier of Parma and Michael J. Noyes of Chelsea formed a partnership and established the first Bank Exchange. Later on, a State Bank emerged from this partnership, and steady progress has been made since that time with two notable exceptions. One was the forced closure of Glazier's bank in 1907 and the second, the "Bank Holiday" of the 1930's.

Today in Chelsea stands a mammoth stone structure, the former bank building and present location of the 14th District Court. The building, constructed in 1901, was built by Frank P. Glazier in memory of his father, the local banker.

The younger Glazier followed his father's footsteps as president of the Chelsea Savings Bank while establishing Chelsea's first interstate manufacturing business, Glazier Stove Works, in 1891. But in 1907, Frank P. Glazier suffered financial failure involving the Stove Works, the bank and all other interests.

One of a number of buildings constructed under the influence of Frank P. Glazier, the bank building was regarded as one of the finest of its kind in southeastern Michigan. The massive stone structure with the mammoth stone columns in front on each side of the entranceway attracted attention as soon as one approached from S. Main St. and gave an impression of solidity and stability, those qualities characteristic of banking institutions.

Upon closure of the Glazier bank, the building was purchased by a Jackson capitalist and became the home of business offices until 1923 when the State of Michigan leased it and vacated the offices.

In 1927, it was purchased by the Farmers and Merchants Bank, another Chelsea bank, which subsequently merged with the Kempf Commercial and Savings Bank and became known as the Chelsea State Bank.

When the Chelsea State Bank operations moved to new facilities at 305 S. Main St., the historic Glazier building was donated to Washtenaw county. After extensive remodeling, the Glazier building opened its doors as Chelsea's District Court in 1970.

Michigan Consolidated Gas Rate Hike Rejected
A Michigan Consolidated Gas company request for a 15 percent rate increase was unanimously rejected by the Michigan Public Service Commission. It was the first time since 1977 that the body has totally denied a utility's rate hike request.

The commission said the extra $82.3 million in rates were not needed in light of the company's earnings level over the past 12 months.

The company has been earning 17-18 percent in that time, PSC spokesman Robert Nelson said, compared to an authorized rate of return of 14.82 percent, with stockholders benefitting from the extra earnings.

The denial order also imposed a $958,950 penalty of improper charges to ratepayers during the utility's successful campaign against a 1982 ballot issue to revise rate setting procedures.

Michigan Consolidated is the first of the three major utilities to be hit with penalties, which were set in an April commission order.

PSC Chairman Eric Schneidwin said, "Mich Con's earnings are satisfactory and do not need to be improved. The cost of gas from suppliers is leveling off, the inflation rate is lower and we have authorized techniques to prevent Mich Con from losing customers." Those techniques include authorization earlier this year for the utility to negotiate a price with three steel companies considering switching to another fuel, and the new order permits the negotiated prices to apply to other companies as well.

The prices have to cover the cost of gas, but permits the company to take a lower profit margin.

Michigan Consolidated's chairman Alfred R. Glancy III said the denial "attempts to set future rates based on the company's very recent past performance rather than on future business conditions. This order places great reliance on the company's ability to make sales in the industrial market in order to maintain adequate earnings."

Attorney General Frank Kelley called the order "a clear victory for the consumers of Michigan. It was a courageous decision by the PSC."

Welfare Project Identifies $16 Million in Suspected Fraud
A state general assistance program matching welfare clients with federal social security wage reports had identified $16.7 million in possible fraud, the Department of Social Services has reported.

The department, in its second quarterly report on steps taken to reduce error and fraud, also reported an intensive review of all 141,331 GA cases has resulted in savings of $1.3 million per month.

The department, which said the wage match project is the most cost effective fraud reduction effort conducted to date, said 77 percent of the cases with apparent unreported income were referred from prosecution because of the likelihood of fraud.

Of 1,547 cases suspected of fraud, the office of inspector general has authorized fraud warrants against 592 recipients, with reviews continuing on the remaining cases. The average alleged fraud per case exceeds $10,000, the department said.

Convictions have been obtained in 26 instances, with no case yet dismissed.

The wage match project has completed investigation of 2,003 of the 6,019 cases where computer tapes identified apparent unreported income.

Uncle Lew from Lima Says:

DEAR MISTER EDITOR:

Clem Webster parked on a drink crate direct under the new ceiling fan in the back of the country store Saturday night and announced he had just saw what people need to go with all the outdoor summer heat. It's an indoor broiler for people. He had gone into town for a haircut and found one had been put in the back of the shop.

These modern wonders are called tanning booths, Clem said. Some look like coffins you lay down in, and some are made like phone booths you stand up in. Both have special lights that do the work of the sun, so down or up you get a nice store-bought tan. Clem said he didn't look to close, but he figgers both have some kind of spit to turn you on so you get a smooth, even cook.

All the fellers had heard of tanning booths and some had seen em. Bug Hookum said all they tell him is that when you got a demand for a product you git a product. People with straight hair want permanent curls that are temporary, Bug said, so it's easy to see why folks will pay good money for a natural looking artificial color. Fer his money, Bug went on, he's more interested in a new $30 gadget put out by a Colorado company. It's fer people that ain't got sense to come in out of the sun.

According to the piece Bug saw, the ray meter comes with instructions on how to rate skin one to 10. Onct you figger what kind of skin you got you set the meter on the number matching your skin type and take it with you out in the sun. When the meter takes in as much sun as your skin can handle it warns you. The idea is that without your trusty gage you might take your tan medium well instead of rare. If it works fer the sun, Bug said, sure it will work fer them barbershop roasters.

Actual, Clem Webster said, he ain't near as surprised at store-bought tans as he is at store-bought home cooking. No sooner, Clem declared, did America turn to microwave dinners from freezer to table in four minutes than she discovered meat loaf, mashed potatoes with real lumps, chicken fried steak and bread pudding. This new way of eating is called momma food, Clem when on, and it's catching on fast in the big cities where people growed up thinking a sit down dinner was eating out of a paper sack in the car.

Practical speaking, Zeke Grubb declared, this is Bug's supply and demand situation at work agin. If folks will eat it somebody will cook it, Zeke said, and he has noticed that eating places are falling right in line. Names like "Epicurean" and "Le Chateau" are going and "Momma's Kitchen" and "Po' Folks" are coming. Not long ago it was a put down to call a company a mom-and-pop outfit, Zeke said, but now your friendly neighborhood Mom and Pop Country Cooking Cafe is grossing $200,000 a month serving fresh home-made sausage biscuits and peaquat butter and jelly sandwiches turned out by machines as big as printing presses in a central plant, froze and shipped by the truckload.

While slow, Sunday dinner at Granma's food is coming on fast, the fast food places are slowing down. Bug said he is seeing where 30-item salad bars are popping up in all the big-name burger places that are bragging about burgers cooked to order. First thing you know, he said, the new Homesick Cafe in New York City will have next-door competition from Hamburgers Like Granma Used to Make.

Yours truly,
Uncle Lew.

Case Family Holds Reunion At Belleville

On Saturday, June 29, the Case family reunion was held at Van Buren Township Park at Belleville, with six sisters—Nella Damron and Easter Bentley from Pikeville, Ky., Katherine Doerr, Edna Williamson, Maudie McGuire and Ella Branham of Chelsea, and three brothers, Finis Case of Dixon, Tenn., Dennis Case of Ypsilanti, and Cas Case of Chelsea. One sister was unable to attend.

Traveling from the farthest was Carol Adkins Graf of Mesa, Ariz., daughter of the former Caroline ("Case") Adkins of Chelsea. Carol was graduated from Chelsea High school in 1957. The oldest person present was Nella Damron, 73. The youngest present was Anthony Michael Bowen, seven-month old son of Michael and Linda (McGuire) Bowen of Chelsea.

The day was spent playing games and getting acquainted and also reminiscing about former times. There were about 115 brothers, sisters, children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and in-laws present.

There was a pot-luck dinner at 2 p.m., and all enjoyed a delicious meal. Family members started arriving at 9 a.m. A fine day was enjoyed by all with the weather-man co-operating.

24 Years Ago . . .

Thursday, July 6, 1961—
An attempted burglary at the Stop & Shop store at 10:45 p.m. Friday was foiled when two men who had succeeded in breaking down a door at the east side of the building were frightened away as a passing car drove into the parking area.

Driver of the car, Ted Nixon, approaching from the east, saw the two men break down the door and enter the building, according to Chelsea Police Department reports.

The men fled on foot across a nearby field and had disappeared before police officers could reach the scene.

Investigation by the police is continuing.

At last night's meeting, the Village Council authorized the president and clerk to enter into an agreement with Warren Eisenbeiser for a sanitary land fill north of Chelsea in Lyndon township.

Preliminary work on the site will begin immediately preparing a road and fences, with the opening to be in two or three weeks.

"Biggest ever" was the description of the fireworks display at the Chelsea Community Fairgrounds the evening of July 4. It was estimated that more than 1,000 people witnessed the display at the fairgrounds.

34 Years Ago . . .

Thursday, July 12, 1951—
Five generations of the Herman family were present at a family gathering Sunday at the Julius Herman home at Half Moon Lake. They included tiny Gary Allen Nagorson of Detroit, his great-great-grandmother, Mrs. Augusta Herman of Lime City, O.; Mrs. Hermice Nagorson, the baby's mother; his grandmother, Mrs. Walter Durkin of Detroit, and Julius Herman, the youngster's great-grandfather.

Fred Kennedy and his neighbor, Walter Kuhl, got the surprise of their lives this past week when they began digging what they thought was "a little drainage ditch" and ended up with a stream of water that poured out an estimated two million gallons of water in seven days.

Kennedy, who had done extensive ditching and drainage work in the community, said he had never had such an experience before. He began the ditching to drain a low spot where his farm joins the Kuhl farm and about 1,000 feet west of Peckens Rd. He had intended to dig the ditch with about a four-foot bottom, and while thus engaged, struck the stream of water flowing 20 feet wide across the fields, washing out a solid gravel driveway and carrying drain tiles toward the creek on the farm as if they were toothpicks.

Kennedy said a 15-inch culvert was dynamited out to facilitate the flow of water to the creek. The flow continued at the same rapid pace for four days, then slowed down to about one third of its original speed.

By this time, reports were coming in of wells going dry at widely scattered spots, one as far away as near Ann Arbor. Kuhl's well and one of Kennedy's also went dry.

Knickerbockers Gather for Reunion

The seven sons and one daughter of the late Maynard and Ethel Knickerbocker gathered for their first reunion in 20 years over the July 4th week-end at the home of Ray Knickerbocker of Chelsea.

The family, some of whom came from as far away as California and Arizona, were even rewarded by some of brother George's research into their family tree, which took him back six or seven generations to Harmon Jansen Knickerbocker of Holland (the country, not the Michigan city). One of their great grandfathers, John C. Knickerbocker, was a captain in the revolutionary war.

In attendance were the following, all of whom attended Chelsea High school at one time or another.

Harvey Knickerbocker, 64, of La Mesa, Calif., who works for Edo Company, that specializes in installing sonar equipment on Naval ships.

George Knickerbocker, 62, Chelsea realtor with Thornton Co., who retired from Standard Oil in 1975.

Dorothy Collins, 60, of Napoleon, a test baker at Jiffy Mix.

Ray Knickerbocker, 57, of Chelsea, a maintenance worker at Jiffy Mix.

Clare Knickerbocker, 56, of Manchester, who works with the wind tunnel at the Chrysler Proving Grounds.

David Knickerbocker, 54, of Elk Grove, Calif., an engineer working on building construction.

Stanley Knickerbocker, 53, of Scottsdale, Ariz., a retired Air Force colonel.

Alfred Knickerbocker, 50, of Mountain View, Calif., a quality control inspector in the computer industry.

Counting cousins, and children of the Knickerbockers, some of whom came from Texas, Alabama, and Maryland, there were 46 in attendance on July 4th, and 52 on July 6th.

George said the party had been planned since last November, and that one brother wants to do it again in 1990.

Family Asthma Program Slated Wednesday, July 17

The third meeting of the American Lung Association of Michigan's Family Asthma program is scheduled for Wednesday, July 17.

Guest speaker for the session is Dr. Cary Johnson, a pharmacist at the University of Michigan Hospital. Dr. Johnson will discuss medications and their role in treating asthma.

The Family Asthma Program helps parents of asthmatic children cope with the disease. Monthly meetings are held in the students snack bar at Ann Arbor's Huron High school, 2727 Fuller Rd., and begin at 7 p.m. The informative program is supported, in part, by a grant from the Schering Corp.

For more information about asthma or the Family Asthma Program, call AIA of Michigan at (313) 995-1030.

St. Louis School Student Dies Following Swimming Accident

Trent Stinson, a 12-year-old student at Chelsea's St. Louis School, died early Tuesday morning July 9 of complications from a swimming accident at the school July 1.

According to the Washtenaw County Sheriff's Department, Stinson apparently suffered a seizure while playing in the pond on the school's grounds, and was probably under water for two or three minutes before being found. Lifeguard John Williams, 19, performed cardio pulmonary resuscitation and was initially successful at reviving the boy. Stinson was then taken by ambulance to Mott Children's Hospital in Ann Arbor where he later died. The Chelsea Fire Department was also dispatched to the scene.

St. Louis School is a Catholic-affiliated school for mentally retarded boys.

A VIEW from the CLOCK TOWER

Bill Mullendore

One of the least pleasant experiences in the life of a news reporter is to interview a person and then, a few days later, write his obituary. It has happened to me many times—too many times—most recently in the instance of the death of Stanley S. Kresge.

I talked with Mr. Kresge on Sunday, June 23, as he attended the consecration ceremony for the new nursing care building at the Chelsea United Methodist Retirement Home which is named for his wife who is now his widow, Dorothy McVittie Kresge. Mr. Kresge died exactly a week afterward, suffering a heart attack while on his way to the funeral of a friend.

If there is such a thing as an appropriate way to die, Mr. Kresge found it. He died in the act of going to honor someone else and comforting the survivors. That was his way of living.

He and members of his family had given hundreds of millions of dollars to what can be lumped together as worthy causes, including several here in Chelsea. He made a pile of money, beyond the understanding of those of us who strive to meet the monthly bills and sometimes find the checkbook doesn't balance when credits and debits are added up and matched.

Mr. Kresge enjoyed the luxury of having money to spend as he wished, and he spent surprisingly little of it on himself. From what I have been told, the Kresges lived modestly, without ostentation or delusions of grandeur.

Mr. Kresge gave most of his money back to the people from whom it came, not in direct pay-outs but through grants from the Kresge Foundation. His interests were education and religion. His gentle wife persuaded him to support the needs of the elderly and the ill. Gifts made to the United Methodist Retirement Home and to the Kresge House substance abuse treatment center at Chelsea Community Hospital testify to those interests.

Mr. Kresge was a shrewd businessman, a characteristic inherited from his father, Sebastian S. Kresge, who founded the chains of five-and-dime and K-Mart stores which bear the family name. His business sense showed in the way that Kresge Foundation grants were made.

The foundation typically offered a provisional "challenge grant," requiring that it be matched by the fund-seeking applicant. Those who sought help should be willing to help themselves, not simply sit around and wait for a total hand-out. That strategy worked in almost all instances. Tempted by the prospect of a large gift of money, grantees went out and scratched and got the matching funds.

"We approached the foundation for additional help and were politely but firmly told no," one local beneficiary of a Kresge Foundation grant said to me. "They had helped us very generously to get started, and from there on it was up to us. I really can't disagree with that philosophy of giving. The Kresge grant was to get us off the ground. From that point, it was up to us to prove ourselves."

Hindsight results in many regrets, and one I have is that I didn't spend more time talking to Mr. Kresge at the June 23 consecration ceremony. It was the first and last time that I ever had the opportunity to meet and converse with the man.

The ceremony had been moved indoors because of a threat of rain, and the room was hot, stuffy and crowded. The air conditioning for the new nursing care wing wasn't working yet. The minister who presided over the service could hardly wait to shuck his robe and cool off.

Everybody wanted to talk to Mr. and Mrs. Kresge, who were seated in wheelchairs in one corner of the room, greeting and talking to all who approached them, and there were hundreds.

My assignment was to take pictures, and it was difficult. As fast as I succeeded in getting somebody to move out of the way so that I could get a clear camera view, somebody else moved in. It was frustrating, and I may have muttered some words that should not have been spoken in a place of religion.

Finally, I elbowed my way through the throng and found myself face-to-face with Mr. Kresge. I introduced myself and we exchanged pleasantries as we shook hands.

I asked him if he would please use his influence to get people to back away for the few seconds that I needed to take a couple of pictures. He smiled, thanked me for my interest, spoke something into the ear of his wife and then said to the crowd, "Will you please stand back and let this man take our pictures for the paper."

The people moved away, and I snapped three quick shots, quite possibly the last photos ever taken of Stanley S. Kresge. Looking at him through both my naked eyes and the camera viewfinder, he impressed me as a handsome, happy man of 85 who didn't hesitate to respond to a request for a smile. Mrs. Kresge was equally gracious, a softspoken, obviously caring lady, quietly proud and pleased to be present at the ceremony at which the new building was named for her.

I walked up to Mr. and Mrs. Kresge and thanked them for their help in posing for me, and then gave way to the people who were crowding around to talk with them. I wish now that I had spent a little more time conversing with the Kresges, but I had done my job and had my pictures, two of which were printed on the front page of the June 26 edition of The Standard.

Somebody told me it was the best picture taken of the couple in recent years. If so, the credit belongs to them, not me. They made it possible. The truth is that I am not a very good photographer and don't pretend to be one.

There is an undefinable human quality which, for want of a better word, is sometimes called "class." A few people have it, most don't. The late Mr. Kresge had it, and so does Dorothy McVittie Kresge. I won't soon forget that all too brief meeting with them. I just wish it had lasted longer.

It wasn't easy to write the story of Stanley S. Kresge's death which appeared in last week's paper. I hadn't known him long or well, but felt as if he had been a friend. A very few rare people are like that.

Rattlesnake Swims River, Climbs on Dexterite's Dock

Lance Gates of 8068 Huron St., Dexter, was sitting on his backyard dock fishing in the Huron River late Monday afternoon when he saw something slide out from under a clump of overhanging trees directly across from him. Let Gates tell the story from there:

"It started to swim, and I could see that it was a snake. I thought it was a watersnake. We have quite a few of those around here. I see them all the time.

"The snake wriggled its way across the river (which is about 50 feet at that point, shallow and fairly swift). My dock sits on a platform of rocks. The snake crawled out of the water and into the rocks. I didn't pay much attention. The next thing I knew, it was crawling up on the dock and coming toward me.

"When I got a close look at it, I began to wonder if it really was a watersnake. When it started to shake its tail and make a loud buzzing noise, like a big bumblebee, I knew it wasn't. It was a rattlesnake for sure.

"I can't honestly say that the snake tried to attack me, but it didn't back off, either. It kept coming on toward me. I don't know what its intentions were but I decided I didn't want to wait any longer to find out, and that I sure didn't want it in my yard.

"I'm a wildlife lover. I feed birds and animals the year-round. I release all the fish I catch. I had never deliberately killed anything. Right then and there I made an exception. I was scared, maybe even a little bit panicked."

The only weapon Gates had at hand was the light spinning rod he was using to fish. He hit the snake on the head several times with the butt of the rod as it continued to come toward him, finally immobilized it, then finished the job with an improvised club poked off a dead tree near the dock.

A reporter who knows a massasauga rattlesnake when he sees one identified it as such. It measured 23 inches, about average size for an adult Michigan rattler. It looked like it might be a female about to bear young, although a confirming autopsy was not performed. It had five rattles at the tip of its tail.

"I was going to get rid of the snake," said a still shaken, and very excited Gates when the reporter arrived, "but I figured you wouldn't believe me unless you saw it for yourself.

There were some unusual aspects about the incident. The fact that the massasauga showed up along the Huron River inside the village of Dexter is not especially surprising in itself. The little "Michigan rattler" is a fairly common though seldom seen inhabitant of southeastern Michigan. It is the state's only poisonous snake, normally shy and secretive, avoiding contact with people.

Like all other snakes, massasaugas can swim, but they seldom do. They tend to remain in low, swampy habitat to hunt the meadow mice, frogs and other similar-sized creatures that they prey and feed on.

What prompted that particular massasauga to swim across the Huron, especially at a bend where the current is fast, the water clear and the bottom stony can only be conjectured.

"I know there is a family of mink over there on the other side of the river," Gates suggested. "Maybe one of them chased the snake into the water."

The only trouble with that theory is that a strike from a rattlesnake would paralyze a mink within seconds and kill it a few minutes later.

More remarkable was the behavior of the snake after it crawled up on Gates' dock. All the scientific literature on massasauga rattlesnakes says they will go out of their way to avoid people and usually will not even rattle a warning, much less attack, unless accidentally or deliberately provoked. This one appeared to go out of its way to be aggressive. It showed no fear of the man who was watching it cautiously and backing away until he decided he had better take some action to keep the reptile out of his backyard.

Depending on which authority you want to believe, there is either one or no recorded instance of a fatal human bite inflicted by a Michigan massasauga. Hundreds of persons have been bitten and made mighty ill.

The massasauga's venom is as potent as that of its larger cousins in the western and southern states, but the snake's small size holds the injected dose below the amount lethal to a healthy adult. Among the rattlesnake clan, only the western pygmy rattler is smaller than the massasauga.

Gates, who operates an antique store with his wife in their home, was half apologetic for having killed the rattlesnake. "I don't like the idea of killing anything," he said. "If it had let me alone, I probably would have let it alone."

It's hard to justify not destroying a poisonous snake when it shows up in a populated area where it doesn't belong, especially when it shows no fear of people.

Cassidy Lake Options

sent to Cassidy Lake. Nearly half of the present inmate population has been convicted of such crimes.

She further said that she favors legislation to reimburse county and municipal police agencies for costs of hunting down escapees from minimum security prisons.

Thomas presented data to show that nearby states—Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania—have far lower escape rates from minimum security prisons than does Michigan, in all instances less than half.

"What are they doing that we aren't?" he asked. "How do they keep people in when we can't?"

Kime answered by noting that each of those states has only one or two minimum security prisons. Michigan has 12.

"A much larger percentage of our prison space is designated as minimum security," he commented. "When you have only a few minimum security beds, you can skim the cream of the prison population and be very careful about who you assign to them. We can't do that. We know we have people in minimum security who shouldn't be there, but we have no choice. We have to work with the system as it exists."

Thomas argued, among other things, that Washtenaw county is carrying more than its fair share of the prisoner load. Washtenaw has four state correctional institutions, along with the federal penitentiary at Milan and the county jail—more than any other of Michigan's 83 counties. Only Jackson and Ionia counties rank higher in numbers of prisoners housed.

"We as a county are carrying far more than our fair share of the prisoner load," Thomas said. "Nobody denied that, but nobody had any suggestions as to what might be done about it."

"Wherever we suggest putting a prison, we run into local opposition," Sen. Pollack said. "People want more prisons, but they want them somewhere else."

Thomas also suggested that the cost of turning Cassidy Lake into

Jackson Fair Premium Books Now Available

Mallings to last year's exhibitors launched the distribution of premium books for the Jackson County Fair Aug. 4-10.

Others interested in exhibiting may pick up their books between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the fair office at 200 W. Ganson.

Livestock entries, for which fees are assessed, are due by July 9. All other entries, with no fees, are due by July 19.

Changes in this year's book include increases in some premiums and deletion of a few sections.

Fair Manager Herman Gumpfer said $42,248 was paid in premiums last year.

RETURNING FROM BOYS STATE in one of the most interesting vehicles on the road, four Chelsea youths were provided transportation home from their stay on the campus of Michigan State University last month by members of Washtenaw County Volture 957, Forty & Eight. The railroad car is a replica of the ones used as troop carriers in France during World War I, is a true "volture," a car just large enough to house forty soldiers and eight horses. The Forty & Eight

Overcrowding of Prison System

"We're taking in about 100 a day and releasing about 60," Wilsey said. "We don't have any control over the numbers. That's up to the courts. The projections we have made show that the prison system will still be overcrowded five years from now, despite additions now on the drawing board."

Sheriff Ron Schebil said he had personally checked the records of the 266 inmates incarcerated at Cassidy Lake as of last Wednesday and determined that 48 percent of them were serving time for violent, assaultive-type crimes.

"As a police officer doing my public duty, I have to consider all of those prisoners as high risks," Schebil said. "When one of them escapes, I feel that my department has an obligation to try and apprehend them. The people deserve protection against dangerous criminals on the loose."

Chelsea police chief Lenard McDougall echoed that sentiment. "When we are notified of an escape, we feel we have to try to locate the man before he does possible harm to some innocent person. Off the top of my head I can't estimate all the hours we put in on that activity, but they add up to a lot."

Sheriff Schebil, who is a member of the liaison council, came out strongly in favor of putting a fence around Cassidy Lake and upgrading the institution from "minimum security" to "medium security."

He described the enclosure he supports as a double fence, 12 feet high, with concertina wire in between, patrolled with an automatic alarm system, video screens and armed guards.

"I'm not saying that such a system is escape-proof, but it's not easy to get out," Schebil said. "The security prisons in Michigan that have such systems average less than one successful escape per year. Almost all of those who try to escape are caught on the grounds."

Over the past six years there have been more than 200 walk-aways from Cassidy Lake, including more than 30 so far this year. Escapes from Cassidy Lake and Camp Waterloo in 1985 together add up to more than 70.

Choosing his words very carefully, Cassidy Lake superintendent John Staten said, "In a minimum security institution, without a fence, there will be escapes. It would be wrong to think or promise otherwise."

Staten didn't come right out and say so, but made it pretty plain that he would welcome fencing to ease a problem that has brought a lot of criticism to the institution he administers.

Sheriff Schebil made the point that the type of prisoners assigned to Cassidy Lake has changed over the years.

"The minor offenders, the so-called hubcap stealers, don't get into the state prison system any more," Schebil said. "They are either put on probation by the courts or they are sent to county jails. I have a lot of them in my custody at the Washtenaw county jail. I keep them busy washing cars and picking up roadside trash.

"I consider most of the present inmates at Cassidy Lake to be medium-security risks who should be confined by a fence and guarded. That is how I would handle them as a professional police officer."

Staten said that a feasibility study of fencing Cassidy Lake has been made, and that the project has been determined to be feasible. "It can be done," he said. "It would require enclosing about 60 acres, and it would cost considerable money, but it can be accomplished."

Staten confirmed speculation that raising Cassidy Lake to the level of medium-security might add to the inmate population housed there. "They (Correction officials in Lansing) are talking about a capacity of 400," he said.

"We're looking at three new buildings which would house 80 inmates each. Money has been appropriated to construct two of the new dormitories at a cost of $1.8 million, and two of the old, smaller ones will be torn down. If the third building is approved, our capacity would increase to about 400."

"The difference would be that in a fenced medium-security institution, there would be many fewer escapes. We would lose something by lessening the opportunity for those who qualify for minimum security confinement. We would gain something by giving the public the protection they want."

Several area residents spoke up to say that they are terrified by the present situation of numerous escapes. "We're the real prisoners," one said. "I'm afraid to go outside into my yard because I live close to Cassidy Lake. If the place can't be closed, it certainly ought to be made secure so that we don't have to be afraid."

A couple of residents said they were keeping loaded guns in their homes and carrying them into their farm fields, and that brought an expression of concern from Sheriff Schebil.

"In a situation like that, sooner or later somebody is going to get hurt or killed," he said, "and it could very well be an innocent person. I don't like it. It's dangerous."

County Commissioners Martin Straub and Ellis Pratt, who together represent western Washtenaw, the area most affected by the escape problem, both urged that fencing of both Cassidy Lake and Camp Waterloo be supported.

"Realistically, those places are not going to be closed," Straub said, "and it would be silly to hold out for closure. We are close to getting something done, fencing, which will relieve the problem. It's taken a year and a half to get this far. Let's take advantage of the opportunity we have."

Commissioner Pratt had arranged for a meeting last Monday evening at the Lima Township Hall, at which State Sen. Lana Pollack and Reps. Gary Owen and Margaret O'Connor were to appear. Results of that meeting are reported in a separate story.

Sen. Pollack, who is a member of the Senate appropriation committee, is a sponsor of a bill to provide $600,000 to fence minimum security institutions including Cassidy Lake and Camp Waterloo. Rep. Owen, who is speaker of the House, has demanded a Department of Corrections report on the escape problem and expressed dissatisfaction with the response he got. Rep. O'Connor has made no public declaration but is generally opposed to additional state spending for any purpose.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:
I was amused and then finally frustrated after reading the story under the banner headlines in today's Standard announcing the "Fireworks Show Will Go on, Thanks to Chelsea Kiwanians."

The Chelsea American Legion Post No. 31 has always given the Kiwanis Club of Chelsea credit and gratitude for supporting the Legion in the fireworks endeavor for the years they did indeed contribute. The Legion has sponsored this event for over 35 years.

It seems to me that the Legion could have been accorded a little better treatment, by Mr. Rademacher, than being summarily dismissed as "dropping it."

Incidentally, who did the Kiwanians ask to do the "dirty job" of handling the display this year—you guessed it—the Chelsea American Legion Post No. 31.

To the Editor:

In regards to the July 3, 1985 article on the fireworks in The Standard, I feel a disservice was done to American Legion Post 31 and the Legionnaires of Chelsea.

For the past 35 plus years, members of Herbert J. McKune Post 31 of the American Legion have sponsored and shot off the fireworks on the Fourth of July. Over this period of time, these individuals have sacrificed their personal time plus the personal time of their families on this national holiday. Again, this year, members of Post 31, fired off the fireworks—not members of Kiwanis!

This year, American Legion Post 31 made a decision to cancel the fireworks for 1985. This was no quick decision. A lot of thought and research was made during the past year in regards to the fireworks. It was decided by the members of Post 31 to cancel this program with a lot of mixed emotions. If Mr. Rademacher would have attended any Legion meeting in past years he would have been aware of his Legion's concern in this matter.

In the past years, the Legion has tried to be self-sufficient in sponsoring the Fourth of July activities. The Legion has never asked the merchants of Chelsea for any contributions. The Kiwanis have donated money the past several years towards the fireworks and have been recognized for their effort. The Legion has received small cash donations from a few industries in the last couple of years towards the fireworks. When the Legion has asked for donations for the fireworks in the past from civic and fraternal organizations in Chelsea the answer has always been no! It is ironic that when the fireworks were canceled, everybody cried foul and was willing to donate to this civic function!

Since the Legion decided to cancel the fireworks for this year, a lot of comments have been made about what does the American Legion in Chelsea do? I feel it is time for people to understand American Legion Post 31 offers a lot to the Village of Chelsea and surrounding areas.

American Legion Post 31 sponsors two outstanding programs at the high school level. Each year two boys are selected from the junior class and sent to Michigan Boys State to learn the ins and outs of state government.

Whenever a boy or girl desires to get involved in police work, Post 31 sends this individual to the Michigan State Police Student Trooper program. At graduation, Post 31 honors the outstanding junior class boy and girl with an award. Post 31 offers to the community, without charge, hospital equipment (beds, crutches, walkers, wheelchairs, etc.) On Memorial Day, Post 31 conducts memorial services and decorates all veterans graves in the area. On request, the Legion provides military services for veteran's funerals. During the year, Post 31 hosts parties at the VA Hospital for veterans. The Legion will provide color guards for local community parades. In the past year, Post 31 donated the flag pole and flag at Dana Field.

The monies that had been set aside for the fireworks this year will instead be used for other community projects such as benches for the children's baseball fields.

APPLYING THE BUTTER to the chicken at the American Legion barbecue could have been a chore without the help of a pressurized sprayer. Above, Doug Helek applies the finishing touches to a few of the 1,000 half chickens the Legion cooked during the day.

BUSY IN THE KITCHEN at the American Legion annual barbecue July 4th were Walt Bolanowski, foreground, and Alvie and Dolores Fouty, to Walt's right. Looking on, for the moment, were Gary Grossman, right, and Doug Helek, left. The Legion served up hefty dinners of chicken, cole slaw, potato chips and roll.

CHICKEN TURNERS Don O'Dell, left, and Doug Helek had a long day as the American Legion cooked 1,000 half chickens at their annual chicken barbecue at the fairgrounds on the fourth of July. About 1,600 pounds of charcoal were used throughout the day.

Monday Escape Reported from Camp Waterloo

An inmate at Camp Waterloo escaped early Monday morning and is still being sought, according to Chelsea police.

Michael Stone, 25, of Detroit, serving 1-10 years for larceny from a person, was reported missing at 2:45 a.m. Monday.

TWO OF THE MEN who helped make the American Legion annual chicken barbecue a success were Ray Lutovsky, left, and post commander Don Doll. Lutovsky, among his duties, took the money from the many soon-to-be-satisfied customers. Doll helped organize the whole July 4th affair, and helped out in the kitchen as well. The Legion served up 1,000 chicken dinners, and several customers were seen carrying enough dinners to feed a growing family of 10.

THE HISTORIC MERKEL FARM, now owned by Marvin and Susan Carlson, will be the sight of the Afterglow party following the Thursday, July 18 performance of "Mame." The farm, at 14200 Dexter-Chelsea Rd., was previously owned by Martin and Henry Merkel. The Carlsons have almost completely renovated the 4,000-square-foot home in the last five years. The house was built in stages, the first part in the 1830's. There is even an old tombstone that serves as a cornerstone of one of the outbuildings. Tickets for the party must be purchased. For information contact Marge Lewis at 475-3325.

Dexter Pair Credited with Saving Life on Golf Course

Loren Yates, Dexter firefighter, and his golfing partner, Jeanette Luton, on the first golf outing of her life, were credited with saving the life of another golfer on the Waterloo Golf Course, Friday, July 5.

After a sudden freak hailstorm swept over the golf course, golfers on the seventh hole sought refuge in the clubhouse, running for cover.

Among those rushing into the clubhouse were Loren and Jeanette. Within seconds after they entered the building, Jeanette related, a man burst in, screaming frantically that a golfer had been struck by lightning.

Everyone in the clubhouse was too horrified to move—except for Loren, that is—remembered Jeanette. "He was on his feet and running out into the midst of the storm, yelling at me to follow him," she said.

"We had completed a CPR course together this spring at Dexter High, hence his call for my assistance," she advised.

"He was at the top of the hill where the woman was lying, heart and breathing stopped," continued Jeanette, "giving her chest compressions and breathing many, many precious seconds before I arrived to assist."

"Trying to locate was a difficult task with the hailstones beating on my hand and the rain surrounding us," explained Jeanette, "Loren was the only one with sense enough to order the dazed bystanders to take off their shoes (metal spikes), and remove their metal golf clubs from the hill where we were gathered."

"The storm was pounding in full force around us, accompanied by threatening bolts of lightning," she continued, "and after Yates had restored the woman's pulse, we continued to work on her breathing, and he assisted the ambulance people and members of the Grass Lake Fire Department in their life-saving efforts after their arrival."

Although the victim, Jennifer Shimek, a visitor from out of state, did not regain consciousness while at the golf course, Jeanette said it was her understanding from talking to people at the intensive care unit of Foote Hospital, Jackson, that she will suffer no permanent brain damage.

"It is my firm belief that the extraordinarily fast actions and clear-headed thinking of Loren Yates, in the midst of horror and confusion, not only saved the life of Jennifer, but restored the flow of oxygen to her brain in time to prevent serious brain damage from occurring," concluded Jeanette.

Elephants on the island of Sumatra are mad and they're not going to take it anymore, reports International Wildlife magazine. About a year after the government of Indonesia herded a group of elephants off to a preserve—making room for human settlers and agricultural expansion—herds of 50 or 60 elephants have begun daily rampages through their old grounds, terrorizing villagers, smashing homes and destroying crops. Traditional methods of dispersing the animals have failed. Authorities now admit they may eventually have to concede the turf to the persistent elephants.

Manchester Street Fair Set Aug. 10

Manchester Art Guild, in cooperation with the Manchester Area Chamber of Commerce, has begun preparation for the annual Manchester Street Fair.

The fair includes a variety of activities, including an exhibition of arts and crafts, and will take place Saturday, Aug. 10.

As in the past, Main St. will be closed to traffic in order to hold a juried show of artists exhibiting such work as painting, photography, basketry, pottery, jewelry, stained or blown glass, fiber, wood, sculpture, drawing, and prints. Any artist wishing to enter the juried fair must submit an application form as well as slides representative of the work which will be shown. The deadline for entry is July 31.

A non-juried show will share the Main St. area and will consist of original, quality, handcrafted works of all types.

Both shows have a $20 entry fee. Profits made will be used for award money given to a talented Manchester High school senior art student.

Prospective applicants to either fair should contact the Manchester Art Guild, P.O. Box 4, Manchester 48158.

Organizers wishing space for concessions of special events should contact the Guild as well.

Amy Wolter Qualifies for Top U-I Band

Chelsea's Amy Wolter ended a rigorous 20-minute audition by qualifying for the top band at the University of Illinois, a rarity for a freshman.

Amy, a trumpet player, will be studying music on a scholarship at the university this fall.

Amy's audition was nearly twice as long as a normal one due to her proficiency with the music that was given to her. Her class advisor could not remember another freshman making the top band in his seven years at the university.

The university bands consist of two symphony bands and four concert bands. There are also a wind ensemble, seven jazz bands, two orchestras, and a marching band. Amy was also accepted into the marching band as a reserve.

Secretary of State Studying Options for Location in Chelsea

The Michigan Department of State is advertising for office space in Chelsea, but that doesn't mean the branch office will necessarily move from its present location at 102 S. Main St.

"The lease on the space we now rent will expire on Dec. 31," explained Fred Gabriel, supervisor of leasing and physical plant management for the Secretary of State.

"Under the State Administrative Code we are required to advertise for bids on a new lease. The only exception is if we can renew the old lease on the same terms. In this (Chelsea) case that isn't possible. The owner is asking for an increase in rent."

The building at 102 S. Main is owned by Chelsea businessman Carl Schneider.

Leases are normally for periods of 3-5 years, Gabriel said, adding "it's not surprising that an increase would be asked for renewal at the end of such a period."

"Among the factors we consider are location, parking availability, general convenience to the public, office space layout and, above all, cost," Gabriel said. "We try to get the best possible space for the least possible amount of money. That is the policy we are required by law to carry out."

The department is seeking a minimum of 880 square feet of ground-floor, retail-type office space. The deadline for offers is Friday, July 12. Persons interested in renting space should call Gabriel at (517) 373-2034.

"We will consider all offers and make a decision," Gabriel said. "It probably will not be announced for some time, but that will depend on the choices we have."

"I'm not saying we won't move, but it is by no means certain that we will. Right now, we are in the process of finding out what our options might be."

Gabriel assured that a Secretary of State branch office will continue to operate somewhere in Chelsea. "The question of closing it is not being considered at this time," he said.

Two years ago the Chelsea office was listed as one of several around the state that might be abandoned to save money at a time when the state was struggling to manage a large budget deficit.

After local protests by citizens and politicians, the Chelsea office was taken off the list. The improved Michigan economy later removed the issue from further consideration. Funding to operate existing branch offices is available.

Police Nab Man for Larceny from Home

Chelsea Police Chief Lenard McDougall and officer Frank Kornexl watched a Lincoln Park man load up a van with a chain saw, toaster oven, fishing poles and reel-to-reel tape deck, among other items, on the evening of June 17. Unfortunately for the Lincoln Park man, the merchandise didn't belong to him.

The stake-out by the Chelsea police ended a bizarre week in which an informant twice told the Chelsea department that a burglary would take place at a W. Middle St. residence while the tenant was at work. It turned out that two separate burglaries took place, the first one netting the thief a stereo, reported missing on June 15.

The informant, identifying himself as "Paul," according to the police report, called Chelsea police on the afternoon of June 13 and said that a burglary would take place that night. He said that the Lincoln Park man told him he was going to Chelsea and if Paul didn't lend him his van he would steal it. The evening of June 13 was the first time Chelsea police staked out the W. Middle St. residence. However, the burglars didn't show up.

Later that week, on June 17, according to police, Paul William

Bennett called back at approximately 9:30 p.m. and said that he had been threatened by the Lincoln Park man but would go along with the break-in as long as no one was home. A few minutes later, police said, Bennett's mother called to say he was on his way.

At approximately 11 p.m., police said, a van was seen clearing the block, and at approximately midnight, Bennett left to make a phone call to the W. Middle St. residence to make sure no one was home. However, instead of using a pay phone, he made the call from the Chelsea police station.

After McDougall and Kornexl watched the Lincoln Park man load up the van and drive away, Chelsea police officers David Dettling and Richard Foster stopped the van and made the arrest.

Arrested was John Loturco, 58, of Lincoln Park. According to police, Loturco was able to gain entry to the W. Middle St. residence by using a key that belonged to a former roommate of the victim.

In addition to the items mentioned, also stolen were a trash can full of canned goods, a wall clock, tool box, and flashlight, police said.

Spaulding Agency Receives Grant To Produce Book

Spaulding for Children, Chelsea's adoption agency for children with special needs, was recently awarded a $4,007 grant through the Piton Foundation of Denver, Colo., and the United Way of Michigan to produce a Lifebook kit.

The Lifebook is for use with handicapped children to help ease their transition into their adoptive settings.

very difficult lives and it is important for them to have worked through what has happened to them before they go into their adoptive homes," said Joan Nagy, development director at the agency. "They can work through it page by page and it is something they can take with them."

The grant will be used to produce 500 Lifebooks.

Spaulding has placed more than 350 children during its existence, at the rate of about 20 to 25 per year. The agency is located at 3660 Waltrous Rd.

New research shows that forested land returns 10 times the moisture to the atmosphere as deforested land, and produces 50 percent of the rain that falls on it, says National Wildlife's International Wildlife magazine.

Village Seeks Grant To Develop Ponds At Veterans Park

The village of Chelsea has applied for a federal Land and Water Conservation grant of $25,053 to help finance expansion of Veterans Park at the north end of Main St.

The applied-for grant would be matched by the village for a total estimated project cost of $50,105. The money would go primarily toward putting three small ponds on the south side of the park into public use. The village owns the land.

The ponds are seen by village administrator Frederick A. Weber and the village council as potentially important recreational assets. They are interconnected, and receive their water from a municipal storm sewer outlet.

At present, they are shallow, choked with weeds, at times unsightly and smelly, and breed a lot of mosquitoes. Village officials believe they could be deepened by dredging and made into bodies of water suitable for trail-viewing and kids' fishing during the warm-weather months, and ice skating in the winter.

The ponds drain into Letts Creek, which runs through the park.

The village proposal suggests that the development project be started in the spring of 1986 and be completed during the summer.

Most of the $50,105 cost would be spent for deepening the ponds and landscaping around them.

Baseball Team Gets First Win of Season

Chelsea summer baseball team got into the win column on July 2 as they mercied Lincoln, 12-0, in five innings.

The story of the game was the pitching performance of Kevin Walz. He gave up a hit to the first Lincoln batter, then retired the next 15 in a row, striking out seven and walking none.

Chelsea's defense also sparkled, especially Brian Coy at second base, playing errorless ball.

Chelsea also got their bats going as they scored 12 runs on nine hits. The highlight was a three-run homer by Brian Robeson in the fifth inning. Brian hit it well and sent it over the left field fence

(310 feet) at Pioneer High. Sparking Chelsea with two hits each were Matt Koenn, Ron Hafley and Rob McDowell. The other hits were singles by Evan Roberts and Jeff Stacey, plus a lot of damage as Hafley, Stacey, McDowell and Robeson scored nine of the 12 runs.

"This was a game where everything just fell into place. We received a tremendous pitching performance, played great defense and hit the ball. We had some fun out there today," said coach Akel Marshall. "We needed it badly."

Chelsea stands 1-3 in the league going into their next game on July 9, also against Lincoln.

SPORTS NOTES

BY BILL MULLENDORE

The easy way to comment on the program approved last month by Eastern Michigan University's board of regents to upgrade EMU athletics is to call it ridiculous and let it go at that.

The program is, indeed, ridiculous. It merits comment only because it puts on paper and spells out some things that have long been understood within athletic circles but which have rarely been admitted in public.

The details of the plan, which have been widely publicized, don't matter. They spell out, in substance, that coaches must achieve certain goals. Those goals add up to, "win or else."

The "or else" is, don't expect a pay increase and think about the possibility that you may be fired.

The axe hanging over the head is a fact of life in coaching, one of the least secure of all professions. When a team isn't winning, for whatever reasons, the easy thing to do is fire the coach. At some schools, firing coaches is a way of life for athletic administrators. They cover up their own shortcomings by putting the blame on somebody else, and coaches are convenient targets.

Of the hundreds of coaches I have known, I have yet to meet one who didn't want to win and didn't do his or her darndest to achieve the goal of winning.

The problem is that for every winner there is also a loser, and that simple fact of arithmetic seems to elude the brains of those in charge of athletic programs. It also escapes the thinking of fans and boosters.

In a utopian world of sports, everybody would play .500 ball. All standings would be evenly balanced, and there would be no champions. There is a reason why most sports schedules include an odd number of contests. You can't evenly split seven games in the baseball World Series, for instance. The odd number guarantees that there will be a winner—and also a loser.

The University of Michigan football team was 6-6 last year, and that break-even record brought forth some pretty harsh criticism of Bo Schembechler, one of the winningest coaches in the game. Living in Ann Arbor, I hear almost every day a suggestion from somebody that this coming fall is a make-or-break season. If the Wolverines don't win big, Bo should go.

I also hear that, if the U. of M. basketball team doesn't repeat its Big Ten championship and go on to win the NCAA tournament—or at least get into the "final four"—coach Bill Frieder ought to be fired.

Back to the EMU board of regents' edict, which says that coaches will be evaluated on the basis of won-lost records, attendance at games, gate receipts, fund-raising efforts and academic performance of athletes in their charge.

Any coach who is honest—and I've known only a couple who weren't—will tell you that winning comes down to having better players than the other guy. You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, and you can't win without good athletes. All the instruction, all the strategy in the world won't make up for big differences in basic skill levels.

Good coaching is, at the most, a plus factor. The better-coached team will usually win in a match-up against two otherwise equal opponents who get an equal number of breaks (luck).

The essence of coaching at the college level is recruiting. You have to have the horses if you are going to win. There are only so many blue-chip prospects out there, and the coach who can corral a few more than his fair share is going to be a winner.

An interesting element of the EMU "win or else" program is making coaches responsible for what athletes do in the classroom. There is nothing wrong with the idea that athletes should get an education while playing games, but why fix the finger on coaches?

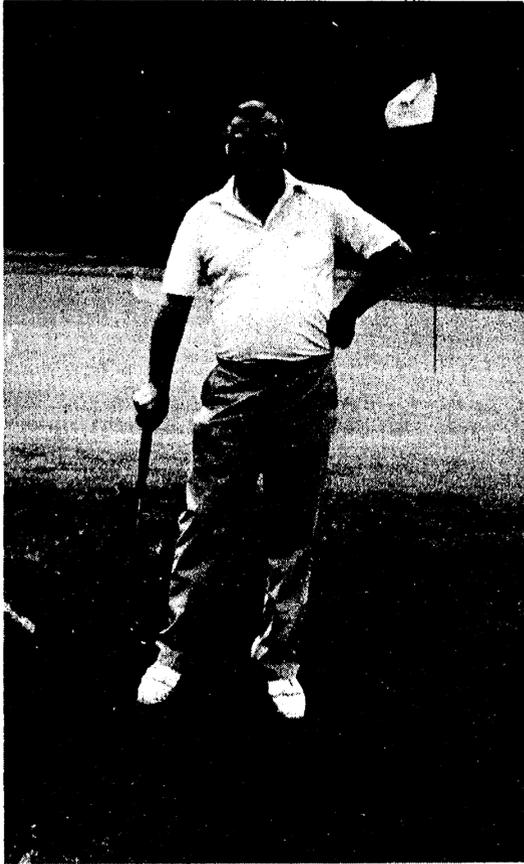

The initial responsibility rests with the college admissions office. Anybody, athlete or not, should have the potential to cut the mustard in class or should not be let in. After that, it's up to the student, assisted by teachers, to win the academic game. Coaches can't be expected to coddle their kids through the classroom or write term papers for them. They can counsel strict attendance and good study habits, and that is about all.

Making a coach liable to a low performance mark because people don't come out to watch the team play is an idea as intriguing as it is stupid. Selling tickets is the job of somebody else besides the coach. That's what publicity and promotion departments are for.

The attendance goal set for the EMU women's basketball coach is 1,000 per game, to cite just one example. That is just plain impossible even if the doors are opened wide and all comers let in free. That is not a knock at women's basketball, which is a pretty good spectator sport when played well and deserves more fan support than it has attracted. The female brand of basketball just hasn't caught on in Michigan as it has in Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and some other places.

What is really badly wrong with the EMU program is the stress of winning. Sure, it's great to be a big winner, but not everybody can be. Coaches should be rewarded for doing the best job possible with the talent they have to work with. Placing so much emphasis on winning encourages cheating, and there is more than enough of that going on already.

Still, I give grudging credit to the EMU regents for having come right out and said, in writing, what almost all other schools do but don't admit to doing.

Marine Safety Crews Patrol 377 Lakes, Streams in County

Director of Marine Safety for the Washtenaw County Sheriff's Department Mike Bailey explained that his crews are patrolling a total of 377 lakes and streams in the county this summer.

Of those 377, regularly scheduled patrols cruise Ford Lake, the Half Moon chain and the Portage Lake chain.

Included in the Portage Lake chain are Base, Portage, Little Portage, Whitewood, Strawberry, Gallagher and Zukey Lakes. Bailey explained his crews are authorized to police areas 90 rods beyond the county limits. In the case of Zukey Lake, this includes regular assistance in that territory.

Located partially or wholly in Washtenaw county, lakes on the Half Moon chain include Blind, Bruin, Half Moon and Watson Lakes. In addition, Bailey noted the WICSD units patrol the waters of Hiland Lake and also Round, Patterson, Woodburn and Mud to the north.

Bailey says the Marine Safety division also patrols the Huron River from Rawsonville to Portage Lake. The river patrol unit includes a four-wheel drive vehicle which tows an Achilles-type rubber raft equipped with a 9.8-h.p. outboard. "This type marine vehicle is required on the river," Bailey relates, "because the water is very shallow along some of the riverbed terrain."

Two "free lance" crews operate on the two designated lake chains and on Ford Lake. One is scheduled for the morning, the second for an afternoon shift, with those times overlapping on peak days, for additional protection on the waterways.

The lake crew are each assigned a four-wheel drive vehicle pulling a Bass-type board equipped with a 75-h.p. or an 80-h.p. Mercury outboard engine.

"Unregistered boats are a problem we encounter frequently this year," explained Bailey, "people who are veterans just forget sometimes about the Secretary of State's business hours, and the first-time boat owners are frequently unaware

Naturalist Offers Interpretive Walk

Is the ox-eye daisy a weed or a wildflower? County Parks naturalist Matt Heumann will answer that question at Rolling Hills Park Sunday, July 21, 10 a.m. to 12 p.m.

The interpretive walk in this rural park will be led through fields which have been reclaimed by wildflowers since the farming was discontinued.

Heumann will also discuss the order in which plants come into disturbed areas, which plants are beneficial or ecologically harmful and which plants are native or alien.

Many people don't realize how many flowers which are recognizable aren't native to this country, says Heumann. For example, ox-eye daisy, chicory, red clover and Queen Anne's lace originated in Europe.

These plants were brought over in flower pots, spice bottles, bales of hay and in mud on boots, says Heumann.

Meet the naturalist in the parking lot. Rolling Hills is off Stony Creek Rd., just north of Bemis Rd. A $2 gate fee is required so you might want to bring a picnic lunch and discover this new park after the walk.

OUT IN THE OPEN

By BILL MULLENDORE

There are two ways to look at outdoor cooking.

One is to consider it an exercise in survival. You have to eat to stay alive, so do it and get it over with. Backpackers, bicycle campers and others who must necessarily travel light take that dietary point of view, because they haven't any other choice. Mix a package of freeze-dried food with water, heat and eat.

I've tried several freeze-dried food preparations and can't honestly say that I enjoyed any of them. They satisfied my hunger, and that's all. They didn't taste bad, but neither were they good. The people who package them apparently have very dimly appetites. What the label says will feed two people will make one hungry adult comfortably full. Buy accordingly.

The other way to consider outdoor cookery is as an experience to be relished. There is fun to be had in both the preparing and the eating. This presumes you have some decent equipment and a certain amount of know-how. If you can't boil water indoors without burning it, the chances are you won't do any better outside.

Backyard barbecuing, which is a wrong word because it describes only one of many outdoor cooking methods, has risen to a state of high art. A recent article in Michigan Living, the Automobile Club of Michigan magazine, told me that you can pay $450 for a super-deluxe outdoor gas grill complete with accessories. That is more than most kitchen ranges cost.

The article went on to assure that, given such a grill, you can cook anything on your patio that you can in your kitchen, and maybe perform a few extra frills. It all made me wonder: Why bother? Why not just cook inside and carry the food outdoors if eating on a picnic table appeals to you?

You could, I suppose, hook your microwave oven onto an extension cord and operate it outside. Again, why bother?

I have never owned a gas grill, and never expect to. A $50 kettle-type cooker that burns charcoal works just fine for my purposes. It's a versatile utensil. It will do anything that my cooking ability allows. It will even bake and roast if you insist on doing either. I've cooked a 15-pound turkey in the grill, and it turned out beautifully. So have good-sized beef and pork roasts, and legs of lamb, not to mention many smaller pieces such as whole chickens and ducks. I baked some biscuits in the thing once, just to see if I could, and they came out fine. I'm sure I could bake a cake in it if I wanted to.

The kettle grill can be used with the lid either open or shut. With the lid up, it's a plain and simple grill. With the lid down, it's an oven. Temperature can be regulated by adjusting air vents in front and back. I use a meat thermometer just to make sure.

I have successfully smoked fish in the cooker, but admit that a regular smoker does an easier and better job.

There are times when I miss the rotisserie broiler that I owned before giving it up for the kettle grill. The revolving spit did a better job with some things—spare ribs, especially—the kettle does. As the saying goes, you can't have everything, but that $450 gas grill sure ought to come close.

The Michigan Living article pointed out that charcoal is expensive, and it is. It is far costlier, in terms of cents worth of fuel burned per serving cooked, than either gas or propane. I like working with charcoal, and am willing to pay the extra price. If I have to burn a dollar's worth of charcoal to cook a five-pound piece of meat that cost $15 to buy, so be it.

Charcoal requires a certain amount of patience. It's slow to ignite and get started. Trying to hurry a charcoal fire is a self-defeating exercise. The good news is that, once it gets going, charcoal burns for a long time and maintains reasonably even heat.

The best charcoal of all is the old-fashioned kind that looks like the charred remains of odd-shaped pieces of partially burned wood. The resemblance is not coincidence, because that is exactly what the original charcoal was. You just plain can't find the stuff any more, or at least I can't.

The briquets sold as charcoal these days are made of wood (and heaven knows what else) that has been partially burned in a low-oxygen furnace and then ground up into fine particles. The grindings are mixed with a bonding agent and pressed into briquet shape. The binder smells a little bad while the briquets are burning.

Commercial lighter fluid, highly refined fuel oil, is usually used to start a charcoal fire. It works if you follow the instructions on the container and give it time. Allow at least half an hour for the fire to get going. Charcoal cooking is not a good idea if you are in a hurry.

I have owned a couple of electric charcoal fire starters. Both burned out their elements after a few uses. Recently, I've seen television ads for a device to light charcoal with a few crumpled up sheets of newspaper. It's a cylinder that works on the principle of a chimney flue, and I see no reason why it shouldn't function. As soon as I see one in a store, I'll buy and try it. It would be nice to get rid of the oily smell and taste that lighter fluid imparts.

So much for backyard barbecuing. Next week I'll get into camp cooking, which is another—and very different—game altogether.

Nominees Sought For Senior Citizen Of Year Awards

Michigan Office of Services to the Aging (OSA), in co-operation with the Michigan State Fair, now has less than one month to find outstanding senior citizens to receive the Senior Citizen of the Year Awards. "That search" says OSA Director Olivia P. Maynard, "initiated back in May, has brought in several dozen applications to date. Hopefully many more will follow in the next few weeks." Since the early '70's, Senior Citizen of the Year Awards have been presented to persons age 60 and older, from every part of the state. "The winners consistently have many traits in common," says Maynard, "not the least of which is a keen interest in the welfare of their peers." Applicants are judged in two categories, either service or leadership. Judges are looking for persons who deserve recognition, but who may not be in the limelight. Anyone 60 or older is eligible as a nominee. Only organizations, however, may submit applications. Copies of the forms may be obtained through the Office of Services to the Aging or local Area Agencies on Aging (AAA's). Applications must be received no later than Friday, July 26. The awards program is co-sponsored by the Michigan State Fair. For more information contact the Public Information Section, Office of Services to the Aging, P.O. Box 30026, Lansing 48909, (517) 373-4083.

The Department of Natural Resources is looking for landowners willing to lease hunting rights to their property, and is hoping for better success than last year when only two Washtenaw county owners signed up for the program. Lease rates range from 50 cents per acre for rotational croplands to $4 for brush, swamps and woods. The money to buy the leases comes from the public access stamp which all persons who hunt in southern Michigan must buy if they plan to hunt on lands other than their own. The stamp costs $1.10. Property owners who participate in the program can limit numbers of hunters in the interest of safety and hunting quality, but must make their land available on a first-come first-serve basis. Past history suggests that the closer they are located to the Detroit metropolitan area, the more reluctant owners are to participate in the program, probably out of fear of being overwhelmed with people seeking permission to hunt. Owners in the Lansing area and westward have been more willing to register their lands and make some money by offering hunting privileges. To take part in the program, owners must have at least 40 acres of eligible land. DNR biologists will evaluate the property to determine how much should be paid for the lease. Deadline for application is Monday, July 15. They should be sent to the Wildlife Division, Department of Natural Resources, 3335 Lansing Ave., Jackson 49202. For further information call (517) 784-3188.

Veterans Park Development

(Continued from page nine) Other expenditures would be for an adjacent picnic area and fencing. The Dana Field softball complex on the west side of Veterans Park was completed in 1982, with the help of a Land and Water Conservation Fund grant, and is considered to be one of the best in the state. Weber estimated that the pond project would cost about $3,700 a year, at existing levels, for additional operation and maintenance expenses. Most of that would go to "round out" the salary of a present part-time employee in the Department of Public Works so that he could be paid for full-time work. A resolution passed by the village council promised that the village will put up the necessary local matching money if the federal grant is approved, and will pay future operating costs of the project. ## Fireworks Display Well Received

The fireworks display that almost didn't get off the ground this year turned out to be a rousing, last-minute success, with a large gathering in attendance. The area around the fairgrounds was jammed as usual as residents spread out blankets and brought out their folding chairs for the annual July 4th event.

The event, which for 35 years has been sponsored by the American Legion, was this year hosted by the Kiwanis Club. The club raised the necessary money and assumed the liability. The Legion decided not to sponsor the event this year due to both expense and safety reasons.

But the Legion's presence was felt throughout the July 4th celebrations beginning with their always successful chicken barbecue, and later in the fireworks pits as Legion members handled the actual launch of the display. There were even a few fireworks observers who saved their chicken meals especially for the late-evening spectacle.

Despite the fact that the Kiwanis Club had to order fireworks at the last second, the display drew the usual oos and aahs from the crowd. Perhaps one difference in this year's display was the relative lack of the eardrum-splitting booms, with more emphasis on the visuals.

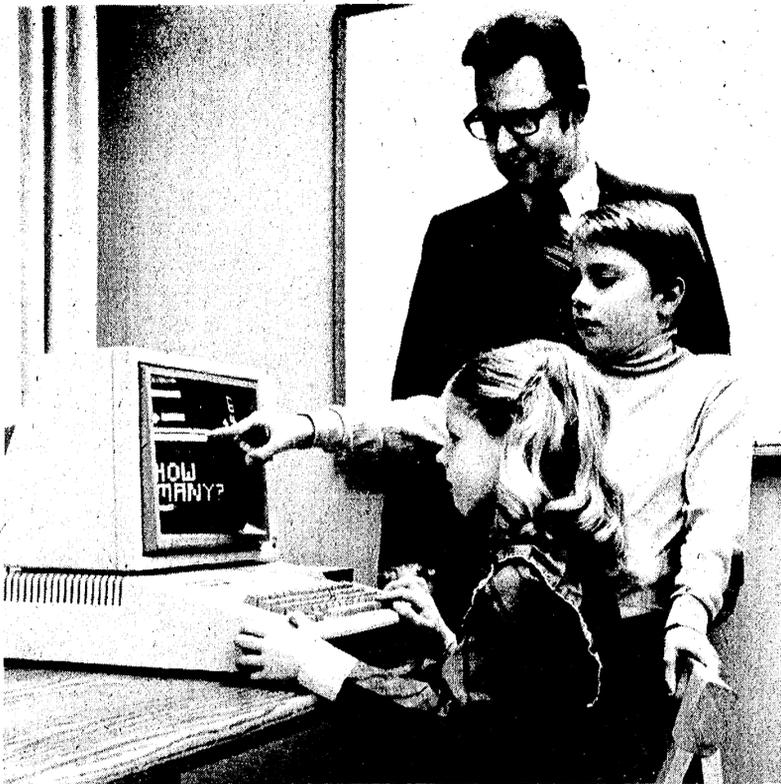

Chelsea police reported no problems with the event as traffic left the area in orderly fashion.

KARL YOUNG instructs a couple of young Montessori school children on how to use his educational software, which will be a centerpiece of the new school he and his wife, Teri, will open this fall in the Florence Howlett Memorial School building. The building was most recently the home

Montessori School Opening In Former Co-Op Nursery

Karl and Teri Young of Ypsilanti are planning to bring "high tech to the one-room school house," this fall with the opening of their new school at the Florence Howlett Memorial School, 11000 Dexter-Chelsea Rd., most recently the home of the Chelsea Co-op Nursery.

The new school, which will open Sept. 4, will be for children from kindergarten through the third grade and will be taught using Montessori principles.

However, what will make their school different than most Montessori schools, as well as most public institutions, is that they will rely heavily on the computer as a teaching tool. Karl, who will teach the school of approximately 20 students, plans to have seven Apple II computers on hand, using software that he has written and currently markets under the name of "Go Like the Wind Educational Software."

Montessori education is different than traditional public education in that there are several ages of children in the same classroom and special educational materials which emphasize the five senses are used. It is also self-paced learning where the child advances at his own speed after mastering the material. Science, history and grammar are also a basic part of the education from the beginning.

Karl said his software was written with the Montessori principles in mind.

"Using software is extremely effective," Karl said. "The children like it, they learn effectively and it is more absorbing. It is also a thorough management system. It automatically files a child's performance, which can be analyzed at great length."

The software will be used heavily in mathematics and spelling education and as a supplement in science and history. Karl said that more rapid learning in computerized areas allows more time in non-computer areas, such as reading. He also plans to give bi-weekly progress reports to parents.

Like most private, non-church schools, the education won't be expensive. Tuition will be in the neighborhood of $2,100, although an exact figure has not been set yet.

Although the school will not be church-related, there will be a definite Christian emphasis, according to the Youngs' literature.

"Prayer, sharing about Jesus and Biblical truth, and Christian relationships are practised." The literature also says that prayer will not be obligatory.

Karl and Teri, who are husband and wife, have been associated with Montessori education for a number of years. Their own children were educated in Montessori schools, and they claim that children educated using Montessori methods can make the jump easily into non-Montessori schools.

Karl earned his bachelor's degree in philosophy and psychology at Dartmouth College and later studied at the International Center for Montessori Studies in Bergamo, Italy. He has spent 14 years as a Montessori teacher and five years as a teacher trainer. His programming skills were learned at Eastern Michigan University.

Teri, who will not be initially involved in the teaching, teaches fourth through sixth grades at Oak Trails school in Ann Arbor, a Montessori school. She has been a Montessori teacher off and on for the last 14 years. Her bachelor's degree is in anthropology, from Stanford University.

The Youngs plan to lease the building from the Chelsea Co-op Nursery, with an option to buy it. They say they will do some minor renovation work to meet fire and health and safety codes but that the building and grounds are generally in excellent condition, which is one of the primary reasons they were attracted to the location.

"The first thing is to get the kindergarten through third grade in place and if we can grow and find space then we can go through the sixth grade," Karl said. "But the main thing is to get established. We have about five children signed up right now, most from the western side of Ann Arbor. With anything like this there's a risk involved, but we don't compete with any of the nursery schools, and there are very few private schools in the area."

OMGAWA! say Kristi Lentz and Heather Pratt of Chelsea who took their places on the front of the elephant at the Al G. Kelly & Miller Bros. Circus at the fairgrounds last Saturday, July 6. Annie Cantrell of Manchester took the third spot on the back of the elephant and Janel Strong of Brooklyn sat in the back. The elephant made a loop of the parking lot.

who called himself "The Barker," the side show's salesman. At the right is the "Clown," a circus "jack-of-all-trades" who was a fire eater and snake handler, among other skills

CIRCUS WORKERS PONDER the empty main tent that would eventually be filled with wondrous children and their parents as the Al G. Kelly & Miller Bros. Circus made a stop at the Chelsea fairgrounds last Saturday, July 6, for two shows.

Quite a sizeable crowd turned out for the event, which featured a side show with a petting zoo, and a three ring circus with trapeze act, wire walkers, jugglers, and other standard circus acts.

Circus Makes Big Hit Here, Drawing Two Capacity Crowds

The circus came to Chelsea last Saturday afternoon and attracted capacity standing-room crowds of more than 1,500 at each of two performances at the fairgrounds. For many of the youngsters in attendance it was their first sight of a circus put on under a tent. For many of the older "kids," ranging well up into senior citizenship years, it was a youthful experience to be relived. Young and old alike, everybody appeared to have fun. The Al G. Kelly and Miller Bros. circus is a far cry from the glory days of Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey, but it put on a good three-ring show of clowns, animals, trapeze and high-wire artists. There was an elephant ride, a side-show featuring exotic animals and people, vendors hawking cotton candy, and most of the other traditional circus trappings. It was all done on a much smaller scale than in the old days when a circus coming to town was the biggest event of the year in many communities. The elephants—three of them, including a five-year-old male calf named Brittany—were the hit of the show. The ponderous, intelligent, well trained beasts fascinated people as they always have.

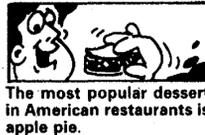

A reporter who stayed outside the tent through most of one performance, taking pictures and talking to the entertainers as they prepared to enter the "big top" and put on their acts, found them to be mostly young persons and all enthusiastic. They weren't in the least dismayed by having to put on two shows 3½ hours apart on a warm afternoon. In their star-spangled costumes and heavy make-up, they exercised to limber up, soothed the animals under their control and talked about the life of travelling with a small circus which plays one-day stands across the country. "I enjoy it," said one young woman trapeze artist. "I get to see a lot of the country and meet a lot of nice, interesting people. My act isn't really dangerous, although it may look that way. I have a very good partner, and we know and work well together. "What I like most is that we get a lot of applause. People appreciate what we do, and they let us know it. That makes it fun. We work hard and don't get paid very much, but the applause makes it worthwhile. This audience (in Chelsea) seems to be especially good, and that makes me try a little harder."

The "band" at the show consisted of a live drummer backed up by amplified recorded music. The sound was close enough to that of the old-time circus bands to be savored by those who had heard the real thing in years past. "We play the old circus marches, and people still like them," he said. "It's the kind of music that gets you stirred up. I get excited every time I do it, even though I'm only supplying the rhythm." Actually the whole show was put on by about eight entertainers, most of whom appeared in two or more acts. There were an additional eight or so employees who served as roustabouts, ticket sellers, cotton candy and soft-drink vendors, and also did some kind of double-duty. The circus travels by truck, trailer, van and car, coming into town in the morning, putting up the tent, doing its shows, then pulling up stakes and going on at night to the next stop to do it all over again the next day. The circus appearance here was sponsored by the Chelsea Lionsess Club, which will use its share of the proceeds to support its many charitable activities.

Cancer Society Nets $33,000 in Mock Lock-Up

In Washtenaw county's biggest "bust" ever, more than 100 of the area's best known citizens "did time" last week in a special jail. The result was an additional $33,000 for the American Cancer Society. The tongue-in-cheek activity, in which area celebrities raised "bail" for cancer education and research, will become an annual event in Washtenaw county, according to "Great American Lock-Up" co-chairperson Barb Jones. "When something is this successful, and this much fun, you want to do it again," Jones said, adding that the goal was "bumped" from $20,000 to $30,000 partway through the three-day event. "The ceiling was too low, so we raised it, and bumped our heads on the new ceiling," Jones said. From Chelsea, police "arrested" attorney George Parker and pharmacist Dale Schumann. They both raised their bail from the jail cell and reported having a great time. Event co-chair Bob Carr said co-operation, and authenticity, were important. "Having real, uniformed, off-duty police officers doing the arresting added just the right touch. They put in a lot of hours. We're grateful," Carr said. Police from the Washtenaw County Sheriff's Department, Chelsea, Saline, Pittsfield township, Eastern Michigan University, and Ypsilanti volunteered to "arrest" the notables, according to Carr. The ACS "jail" was set up at Arborland Consumer Mall. "Defendants," who wore striped prison garb while serving "time," were permitted unlimited phone calls to raise their "bail."
