Chelsea firefighters, joined by crews from eight other fire departments, battle a blaze Monday morning at 12855 E. Old US-12 in Lima Township. The fire completely destroyed Jan and Bill Salter's home, as well as the home's contents. Four pets — two dogs and two cats — were inside the home when the fire started. Firefighters found one of the dog's remains Monday.

Morning fire destroys home

Pet supply store owner loses his own animals in Monday's blaze

By Steve Ricci
Staff Writer

Bill Salter sat at his Chelsea pet supply store Monday and managed to smile at American Red Cross workers, customers and well-wishers who stopped by.

But between his smiles and good-natured laughs, Salter's face lapsed into a shell-shocked gaze that eventually turned into a haunting look of sadness.

Salter's eyes welled up and spilled over with tears as he wondered aloud about his two golden retrievers.

Both dogs are believed to have died Monday morning, on an unlucky 13th day of the month, after his two-story house at 12165 Trinkle Road in Lima Township was destroyed by fire.

Two of his cats also were at the home when the fire started, but Salter said they might have escaped through a trapdoor.

Salter, 57, owns Animal Lovers, a pet supply store at 12855 E. Old US-12.

At 8:46 a.m., roughly a half-hour after Salter left his home and went to work, someone called the Chelsea Area Fire Authority reporting smoke coming out of the house.

Firefighters arrived at the scene eight minutes later and found flames spilling out of the windows and roof.

About 50 firefighters from eight other fire departments — Unadilla, Stockbridge, Dexter, Manchester, Saline and Scio, Ann Arbor and Pittsfield townships — also helped fight the blaze.

A Huron Valley Ambulance crew was at the scene.

Stockbridge Fire Department personnel manned the Fire Authority's main station as Chelsea firefighters responded to the call, said Chelsea Area Fire Authority Acting Co-Chief William Paul, the officer in charge at the scene.

Students graduate alternative school

Total of 14 seniors receive diplomas at June 7 ceremony

By Rita Fischer
Special Writer

Chelsea Alternative High School students marked a milestone June 7 as they graduated, accepting words of encouragement and congratulations from family, friends and school staff.

Shawn Lewis-Lakin, director of student performance for Chelsea schools, spoke to the students and certified their diplomas.

"The (Alternative High School) students are extraordinary, necessary, unusual — not better than all the other kids, nor are they worse. Alternative students are just different," he said. "If we all choose to understand the differences, then it would be OK to just be different."

The ceremony was held at the Washington Street Education Center and featured Tara Murillo and E.J Perdomo as masters of ceremony.

Shaun Carpenter, Rachel Corser, Michael Day, Nichole Gibbs, John Henderson, Landon Hawker, Kyle Johnson, Brian Katakowski, Ashley Kime, David Miller, Bradley Robert, Timothy Svetkovich, Daniel Swain and Francesca Tiseo earned diplomas.

Francesca Tiseo walks off the stage with diploma in hand. She was among 14 students to graduate from Chelsea Alternative High School.

Kyle Johnson, who was chosen to give the senior class address, talked about members of the class being hard to define as a group. He pointed out the unusual qualities of those graduating and wished everyone the best in their future pursuits.

"The 14 students sitting here before you make up a group of very different students, but in many ways we are much alike," he said. "We are a group with diverse ideas, skills and opinions. We

Board approves hiring of Little

Dexter's interim principal to succeed Robin Raymond

By Heather Connor
Staff Writer

After stepping down from an interim principal appointment at Dexter High School, Pat Little has been hired as an assistant principal at Chelsea High School.

Little will succeed Assistant Principal Robin Raymond, who is transferring to a math teacher position at Chelsea High School.

Raymond, who recently lost his wife to cancer, is taking on a less demanding position to better coordinate his role as a single parent, said Chelsea High School Principal Ron Mead.

Mead is unsure who will take over the administration of the Alternative High School program that Raymond currently oversees. It could be either himself, Little or Assistant Principal Julie Deppner, he said.

Little's duties will include discipline and attendance, curriculum and instructional development and general supervision, Mead said.

Little was appointed interim principal in Dexter last year when then-Principal Glen Stevenson was named assistant superintendent of

Sesi – 59 years in business and counting

Tradition of service, honesty, integrity and caring continues

Sesi Lincoln Mercury Volvo, located in a brand-new facility at 3990 Jackson Road, between Wagner and Zeeb roads, may be a relatively new dealership, but it is backed by a 59-year tradition of service, honesty, integrity and caring.

Sesi Lincoln Mercury Volvo has been in business for 4 years but the Sesi family's successful business experience dates back to 1946 at its Ypsilanti location.

Now serving its third generation of customers and still treating them like honored members of the family, Sesi's Ypsilanti Lincoln-Mercury-Mazda dealership, located at 950 E. Michigan Ave., is in the top 25 in the nation for vehicle sales among all Lincoln Mercury dealerships and is also among the fastest-growing Mazda dealerships in the nation.

The customer-friendly environment allows Sesi to offer better service to their customers and keeps them coming back for future purchases. More than 75 percent of Sesi's business comes from repeat customers or those referred by other Sesi customers.

"Our reputation, our employees, and our customers are our biggest assets," Sesi says.

Chris Conley, general manager at Sesi's Jackson Road location, is enthusiastic about the new facility and the fantastic opportunity for service it provides.

"Our service and parts departments have doubled in size," he says. "Even though we're a relatively new dealership, it's important for people to know that we operate under the Sesi family's tradition. Our employees are committed to honesty, integrity and caring for people."

Providing free loaners to customers who need transportation during warranty related service appointments, helps customers to have a pleasant experience even when their car needs service.

"We have a great team of highly qualified and experienced mechanics who have the same commitment to outstanding customer service as our sales group," Sesi says.

Sesi is also one of the top used-car dealers in the state. With a large inventory of quality low-mileage used cars, trucks and vans, Sesi says the used car selection is second to none.

"They're safety-checked, cleaned, polished and priced right with no confusion," he said. "If there's a problem, we handle it." The Certified Pre-Owned vehicles have been well received by their customers. With factory-backed warranties extending up to 72 months or 100,000 miles, the Certified Pre-Owned vehicle offers the customer greater Peace of Mind.

Now that Sesi is selling cars to the children and grandchildren of its original customers, they rely on the trust they have established with generations of clientele.

"Our customers trust us because we don't let them down," Sesi says. "Our reputation depends on it."

The new Ann Arbor location is well on its way to establishing a tradition of its own. With true 21st-century style, Sesi hopes to become the benchmark by which all other dealerships are measured.

Sesi has also integrated all of their websites under a single homepage, www.sesimotors.com . Both Sesi locations are open on Saturday for Sales, Service and Parts.

With a sales and service staff averaging 15 years of service, Sesi has one of the most experienced staffs in the business.

"Our employees stay and our customers keep coming back," says Joseph Sesi, owner of the dealership. "That combination has always led to our success."

The unique aspects of the Ypsilanti dealership, including up front pricing, great deals in financing and dealing with the same person throughout the sale process, have extended to their new Scio Township location as well.

A state-of-the-art facility opened at 3990 Jackson Road in December, offering separate and unique showrooms for Lincoln, Mercury and Volvo brands; customer lounges featuring amenities such as wireless internet, kids' play areas and flat-screen televisions.

Restaurant owner found guilty of arson

Holzer to be sentenced July 18 after a jury found him guilty

By Gary Anglebrandt
Staff Writer

A jury found Uwe Peter Holzer guilty of arson and insurance fraud June 6 in Washtenaw County Circuit Court.

Holzer owned Countryside Catering and Restaurant at the corner of North Territorial and Dexter Townhall roads in Dexter Township. The restaurant sustained $200,000 in damage after the Nov. 10, 2003, blaze.

Holzer's sentencing is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. July 18 in Washtenaw County Circuit Court.

The trial, held in Judge Melinda Morris' courtroom, took a long time to occur in part because of several motions filed by Holzer's attorneys to suppress evidence, said Washtenaw County Sheriff's Sgt. Brian Filipiak.

Holzer pleaded not guilty at an arraignment in March 2004. He told sheriff's deputies that he was on his way to the Washtenaw County Road Commission building on Zeeb Road when the fire occurred and that an intruder might have broken into the building.

Holzer's attorney, Peter Kelley, refused to comment for this story. Neither Holzer nor his wife, Pam, returned a phone call seeking comment.

During the trial, Kelly said his client had a heart condition. Holzer testified that when he received the call from the Sheriff's Office that his restaurant was on fire, he felt like he was having a heart attack. He said he went to the hospital and his memory from that day could not be relied upon because it was unclear after his health crisis, according to court transcripts.

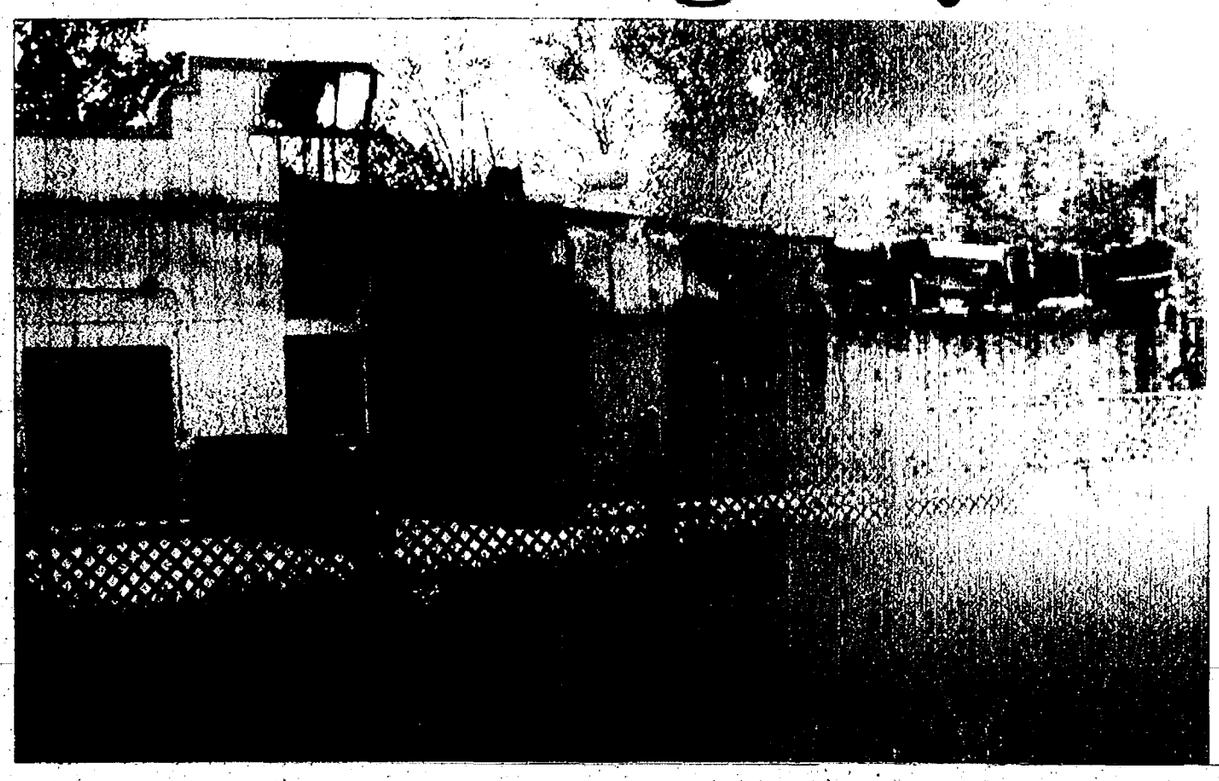

But the jury didn't buy it.

Neither did Cpl. Mark Mesko, the investigating officer who first responded to the scene. He testified throughout the trial that Holzer's account of when he left the building and arrived at the Road Commission didn't add up.

Mesko also said a break-in was unlikely because it was not possible to pry open the restaurant's door without leaving marks.

As part of an affidavit submitted for the preliminary hearing in May 2004, Michigan State Fire Marshal Jack Hooker said there were no signs of forced entry. He said the cause of the fire was arson started by a liquid accelerant poured on the floor of the restaurant.

Court documents going back to the original arraignment show that Holzer had, as of the time of the fire, a mortgage valued at $500,000 and 27 employees. He was two months, or $10,000, behind in his mortgage payments, according to the documents.

Holzer had a policy with Hartford Insurance valued at $596,000.

The insurance company hired an electrical engineer who said the cause of the fire was not electrical. A fire investigator hired by the insurance company said the cause of the fire was a flammable liquid poured on the floor and "ignited by human means."

In addition to the loss of the restaurant, Dexter Township has been left without any public restaurants since the closure last December of the Inverness Inn. Portage Yacht Club remains open, but requires a membership.

STRAIGHT FACTS

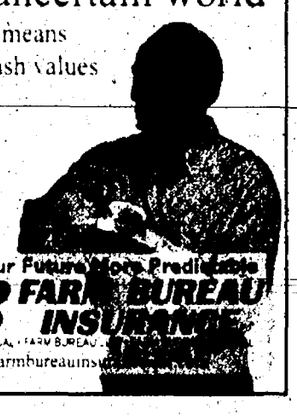

An article in last week's edition titled "Study: Residents value parkland" should have been more clear in stating that while most respondents said they were neither satisfied nor dissatisfied with outdoor recreational facilities for teenagers, the average of the responses showed slight dissatisfaction with the facilities for teens. The average was 2.8 on a 1-to-5 scale in which a 3 would mean neutrality. In contrast, the average response for satisfaction with outdoor recreation facilities for children age 5 to 12 was 3.4, which means some satisfaction.

The Baby Talk column in last week's edition should have said a parent educator other than Kris Miller diagnosed writer Jennifer Sinkwitts' friend's child with epilepsy.

coming out the windows."

Firefighters first attempted to enter the house, but were turned away by intense heat and smoke. They then attacked the fire from outside with hoses, Paul said.

Using eight tanker trucks and approximately 64,000 gallons of water, firefighters had the blaze under control by 9:53 a.m. and extinguished the last flames around noon.

The fire destroyed the house and all its contents. Salter said he could not estimate the cost of his losses.

Amid the debris, firefighters found the remains of one of the dogs, but did not any of the three other pets.

As of Monday, Paul said firefighters had no idea what ignited the blaze, adding that Michigan State Police fire investigators, along with Chelsea fire personnel, would work on determining a cause.

Part of the home was built in 1860 and was added onto in the 1920s, Salter said.

Paul said because of materials used in construction, older homes tend to burn faster than newer houses.

"Older homes have more wood," Paul said. "They burn quicker and they're harder to extinguish because they have so much more fuel."

Salter's wife, Jan, was at the couple's rented home in Florida Monday.

The couple was planning to move permanently to Florida and one of their neighbors agreed to buy the house, Salter said, adding that they recently renovated portions of the house.

Animal Lovers is currently listed for sale.

Salter, who learned of the fire when a neighbor came to his store, did not have any time to remove belongings from the house.

He opened a door and screamed for his dogs, but got no response.

"You couldn't see a couple of feet ahead of you at that point," he said.

Salter, who has had a heart attack and triple bypass surgery, said the personal disaster triggered more heart problems at the scene.

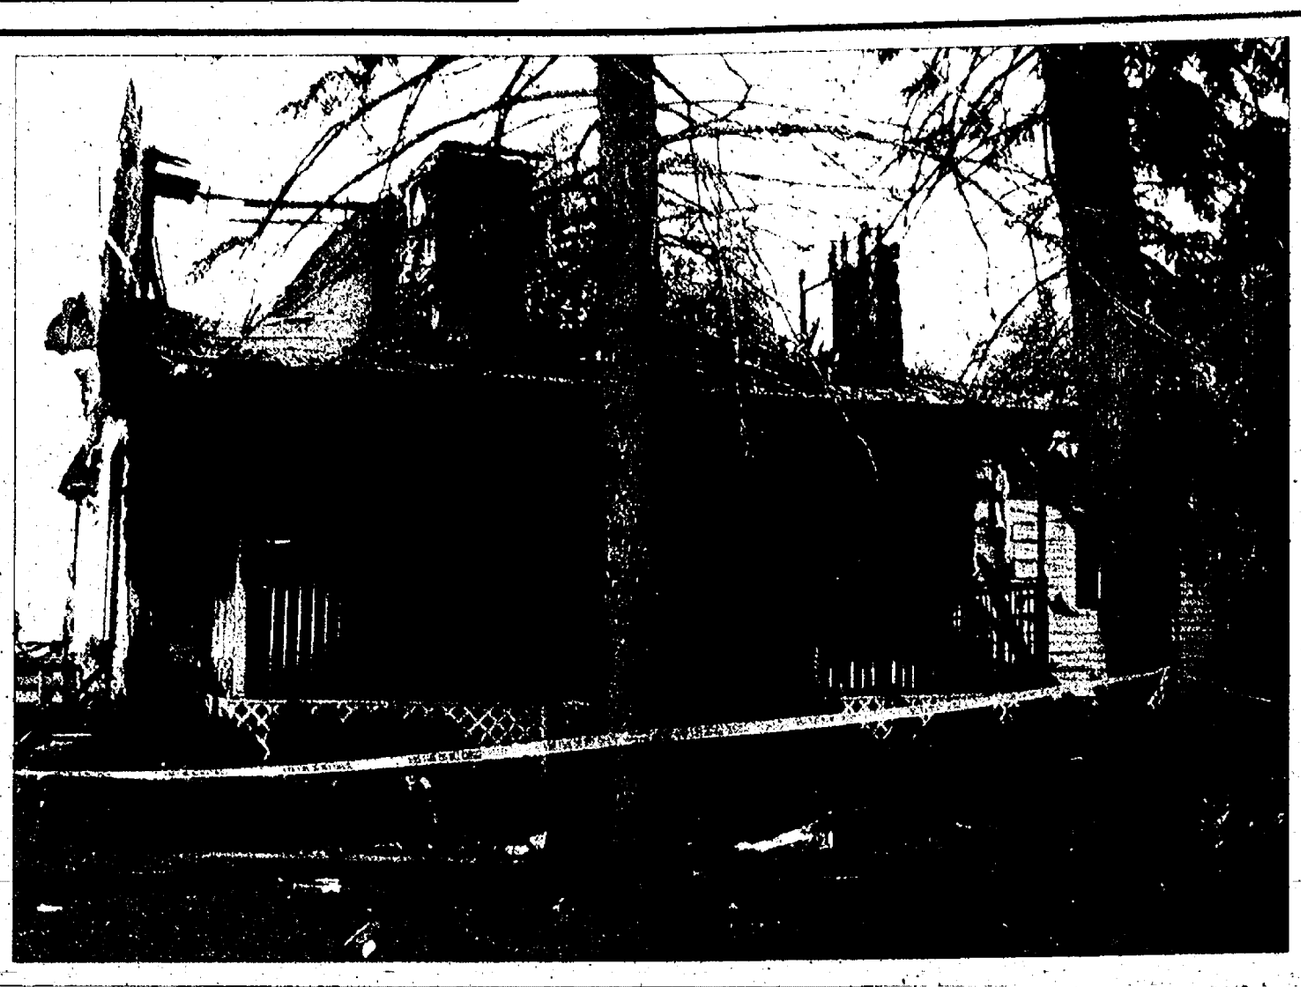

"They stuck me in an ambulance and gave me oxygen and nitroglycerin," he said.

"When I couldn't find the dogs, it really bothered me."

The fire spared two sheds and Jan's glass studio on the couple's 10-acre property, where they have lived for 10 years.

They lost virtually all their possessions in the fire.

"The only thing we didn't lose was our china," said Salter, who observed that all the clothes he had left were what he was wearing.

After firefighters extinguished the blaze at noon, all that remained of the Salters' home was a charred shell.

He said that the fire appeared to have started in an area of the house that had electrical problems in the past.

Salter, who was joined at the store by his son, Sean, an Ann Arbor resident, said he could only find a local hotel room for three days, at a rate of $189 per night.

Local hotels already are filling up with people attending races this weekend at Michigan International Speedway, he said.

Help is on the way for the Salter family, however.

Pamela Reading-Smith, director of public support for the Washtenaw County chapter of the American Red Cross, said Tuesday that the organization has provided Salter vouchers to purchase food, short-term hotel lodging, clothing, medication and counseling.

Reading-Smith said the Red Cross steps in immediately to help victims of disasters put together recovery plans.

"We try to alleviate the immediate stress and fear of the unknown and let them know that they can get control of their lives again," she said.

After providing hotel lodging, the agency can help Salter find apartments or shelter with nonprofit organizations.

Reading-Smith said Salter has accepted Red Cross-provided counseling to alleviate the psychological trauma caused by the disaster.

Staff Writer Steve Ricci can be reached at 475-1371 or sricci@heritage.com.

Dexter schools.

Dexter Community Schools Superintendent Evelynn Shirk recommended Little fill the principal post May 13 pending school board approval. The item was removed from the board's agenda May 23 by Board of Education President Larry Cobler after a student petition opposed the appointment.

The petition asked board trustees to re-evaluate Shirk's recommendation and reopen the interview process.

Little said he was fine with a re-evaluation, but withdrew his candidacy amid the controversy.

Patrick Little

He said the petition was a reaction to a controversial disciplinary matter he handled along with Shirk earlier last month. A student was suspended for having a teacher's password to the school's grade database.

The student received a seven-day suspension, reduced from 10 days based on a willingness to perform community service, Little said.

"The petition also questions the consistency of discipline at the high school," Little said earlier this month.

"This is always an issue and one that all schools work hard at ... The problem is that students and staff do not always know the entire story as to why some discipline is done. Student discipline is a private matter, legally and ethically."

Shirk would not disclose how many students signed the petition or the general concerns the students had with Little's appointment, but rumors and criticisms have circulated in Dexter schools about his disciplinary tactics.

Mead said the recent controversy does not cause him to second-guess the hiring committee's decision.

"I'm fairly familiar with the situation," Mead said. "Little and others did the right thing. Some kids don't like to be disciplined, even when they deserve it."

Mead said the students who signed the petition received a lot more credibility than was warranted.

"We shouldn't be supporting students who are doing things wrong," Mead said of the suspended student.

Mead said the district received more than 100 applications for the assistant principal position, 21 of which were current administrators. The top 14 were interviewed and then narrowed down to the top five candidates.

"Any four of the five would have been excellent," Mead said.

Little stood out as the best among the five, Mead said.

"This is the top 1 percent right here," Mead said Monday as he introduced Little to the Chelsea school board.

Little said he was officially offered the job June 6. The Chelsea district was the only one he applied to after announcing earlier this month he was seeking employment outside of Dexter, he said.

"I've always been impressed with Chelsea schools and I look forward to being a part of their team," Little said. "The communities are so close it's kind of like getting to know your neighbor."

Little's current salary as interim principal is $83,000. According to Chelsea Superintendent David Killips, the base salary for an assistant principal is $81,278 with his district, but administrator's contracts have not yet been established for next year.

Killips said the administrators could receive a 2.1 percent increase along with the teachers. The decision will be made at the June 27 meeting are reactive, stubborn and refuse to compromise. We can be looked at as bright, outgoing, creative and determined."

Little's last day with Dexter schools is June 30.

Carpenter also spoke during commencement exercises, comparing life to a roller-coaster ride.

"It's said that life has its unexpected turns," he said.

"A wise person told me that I have to get that chip off my shoulder. For many of us, the roller coaster is what caused our chips. After 12 years of school, our new beginnings start today. I am proud to say that our graduating class can now push the chips off and step toward a new beginning."

Friends and relatives shared memories of each student before diplomas were handed out.

Carpenter's mother, Kathy, stood up to talk about her son and his first steps as a child. She said when her son was young his hand was so little that it fit in the palm of her hand while she hung on to him.

"It was not time then for you to get away," she said.

"As he graduates, I can finally say, 'It's time.'

"Today I will let go of your hand, with tears on my cheeks and a lump in my throat as I watch you go. I have never been prouder, more sentimental or bursting with joy as I am tonight."

Josh Glaspie presented a diploma to Hawker, his friend. Hawker is known for his artwork and glass creations.

"Landon is rare or one of a kind," Glaspie said. "His personality and looks make him stand out from the crowd. He is a gifted glass blower, he paints, draws and designs jewelry. His work has been shown at galleries and art shows in the area. School will not be the same without him."

School-to-work coordinator Annette Bragalone spoke of the success of the program, which started in 1997 through the efforts of teacher Barb Fisher and Chelsea High School Assistant Principal Robin Raymond.

"I would like to congratulate our graduates tonight and remind them that the work skills you have learned are invaluable, and never quit your job unless you have another one lined up," she said.

MDOT marks 100-year anniversary

Former State Highway Department began with five workers, $10,000

By Jim Kasuba
Heritage Newspapers

The Michigan Department of Transportation is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year.

Gov. Jennifer Granholm has proclaimed 2005 to be "Transportation Centennial Year" in Michigan.

An executive proclamation issued by the governor's office says: "For 100 years, transportation workers have pledged their commitment, often working around the clock, in rain and snow, and along with transportation partners in communities across the state, we honor their efforts."

James DeSana, who served as MDOT director under Gov. John Engler from 1997 to 2000, said he could attest to the dedication of transportation workers.

"I know of no department that was so loyal to their job than those in the highway department," DeSana said. "I was overwhelmed by it."

DeSana, who also served in the state Senate, thoroughly enjoyed serving as MDOT director, saying it allowed him to see all parts of the state. He said he'd always been interested in roads and that made him a natural for the job.

But perhaps the best part of it, DeSana said, was the transportation workers.

"They made management look good by doing their jobs so well," he said. "They took criticism personally. They were loyal and hard-working people."

The department was created in 1905, when voters in all 83 counties approved an amendment to the Michigan Constitution authorizing state spending for roads. On July 1 of that year, Michigan became the 18th state to establish a state agency to supervise road improvements.

A colorful character named Horatio "Good Roads" Earle is credited as the founder of the department. Earle's zeal brought him national prominence and focused the attention of Michigan residents on the growing roads movement.

The new State Highway Department, as it was called in those days, set up business in the office of the Speaker of the House in the state Capitol. The annual operating budget of $10,000 paid for a staff of five, including Earle.

In 1973, the highway department was reorganized and gained jurisdiction over all transportation modes and programs. For the first time, Michigan's agency for highways expanded its responsibility to aeronautics, railroads, buses, ridesharing, water transportation, port development and non-motorized transportation.

"From simple beginnings 100 years ago with little more than plank roads to our credit, the Michigan Department of Transportation is growing into a multi-modal agency of the 21st century," state Transportation Director Gloria Jeff said.

"Our employees have kept Michigan on the leading edge of change with innovations, such as the first mile of paved rural concrete highway, the first painted centerline dividing traffic lanes of dangerous curves, and the nation's first roadside park.

"We are national leaders in safety innovations, engineering, highway beautification and technological advances, such as our Intelligent Transportation System Centers in southeast Michigan and Grand Rapids."

Jeff said the multi-modal department works with partners as diverse as county road commissions, councils for the aging, public transit operators and marine port authorities.

The department also inspects airports, manages 650 miles of state-owned rail lines, builds freeways handling 180,000 vehicles per day, and designs bridges that are among the busiest trade connections in the world, Jeff said.

MDOT kicked off its centennial with a Jan. 6 celebration at the Van Wagoner Transportation Building in Lansing, along with simultaneous celebrations in MDOT region offices and transportation service sites across the state.

Later this year, MDOT will host Transportation Day at the Michigan Historical Center in Lansing on May 14, and in July employees will participate in community events and parades.

A centennial Web site, www.michigan.gov/mdot100, serves as a source of information for the general public, teachers and students. It includes features such as 100 Michigan transportation facts, a transportation timeline with highlights from each decade, photo galleries, information on transportation careers in a trading card format, the story of "Good Roads" Earle, a teacher's corner (including a plan on how to read a state map) and more.

Web site visitors also can send an e-mail postcard with a choice of four transportation scenes. The site will be updated throughout the year.

Research studies mixed dementia

Could the same actions that help prevent a heart attack or stroke also prevent or slow the memory loss, confusion and thinking problems of dementia?

A new study suggests that for many people, the answer could be yes.

And for some, the impact of steps like controlling blood pressure and cholesterol might be greater than the effect of high-priced memory-preserving drugs.

In the Dec. 15 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, researchers from the University of Michigan Health System, the Veterans Affairs Healthcare System in Ann Arbor and the Group Health Cooperative Center for Health Studies in Seattle present a comprehensive review of what's known — and what's not — about a condition called mixed dementia.

Mixed dementia is a combination of Alzheimer's disease and vascular dementia, caused in part by problems with blood flow in the brain. It may affect as many as 20 percent of the 6.8 million Americans with dementia. It's particularly common in older patients, who often have memory problems due to several conditions at once.

Doctors now think that many people with symptoms attributed solely to Alzheimer's — memory loss, confusion, wandering, trouble following instructions — may in fact have mixed dementia.

"Having risk factors like high blood pressure and high cholesterol does damage to small blood vessels in the brain and can cause death of brain cells over time," lead author Dr. Kenneth Langa said in a press release. "In addition, the Alzheimer's disease process itself can affect the walls of blood vessels in the brain, making strokes more likely.

"Strokes can cause dementia through the death of large areas of brain tissue, or through the build-up of damage from multiple small strokes cased by athero-sclerosis in small arteries in the brain or the larger carotid arteries in the neck."

In other words, processes that hurt the cardiovascular system also hurt the brain, and inflict a further toll on those with Alzheimer's disease.

For the new paper, the researchers reviewed all recent medical studies on mixed dementia, vascular dementia and Alzheimer's. They analyzed hundreds of articles, noting any results from drug studies that were relevant to mixed dementia.

The review shows that drugs designed to slow the progression of Alzheimer's disease have about the same effect in people with mixed dementia as in people with Alzheimer's alone.

That is, in some people, they cause a measurable but not dramatic improvement on tests of cognitive function or other measures, or slightly slow an inevitable decline. The authors looked at drugs like galantamine (Reminyl), rivastigmine (Exelon), donepezil (Aricept) and memantine (Namenda).

But when the authors reviewed the evidence relating to heart-protecting therapy and dementia, they found significant benefits. They conclude that efforts to treat cardiovascular risk factors, especially high blood pressure, may be more effective than memory drugs in protecting brain function.

Still, the authors note that more studies are needed to give doctors a full picture of mixed dementia, and to show them what works, and what doesn't, in preventing and slowing it.

"Until those studies are completed, physicians should talk with each patient or family individually about the treatment route to pursue," Langa said.

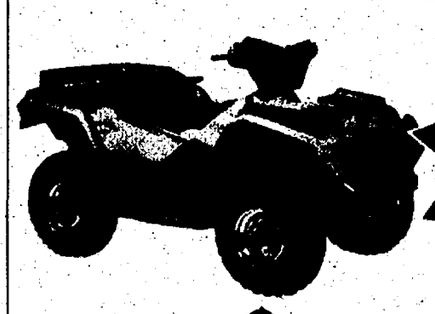

That discussion, in all patients with dementia who might have a cardiovascular component, should include advice about lifestyle changes and treatments to address risk factors such as high blood pressure, high cholesterol, diabetes and physical inactivity.

In patients with heart rhythm problems, blocked neck arteries or clotting disorders that can greatly increase the risk of stroke, further treatment may be needed.

If a decision is made to prescribe one of the new Alzheimer's drugs, the authors recommend that doctors follow up with patients or their families in two to three months, to see if there has been any improvement in memory or behavior, or whether the patient's cognitive decline has slowed. A discussion of costs and benefits, because of the high monthly cost of the drugs, is also advised.

Langa said that the review's findings have changed the way he handles his patients with dementia and cardiovascular risk factors, in the primary care

Article on parkland seemed to be absurd

OK, so we are now officially part of Ann Arbor?

According to an article in last week's Chelsea Standard, "Study: Residents value parkland," a study says we want more parks and open land, according to 109 people out of 4,000 residents. That's a very good representation.

The only thing more absurd is it being on the front page of the newspaper.

Let's work on a city hall and traffic problems before we waste millions on something only a few Ann Arborites want.

Graduation should be joyous time for all

We all know that teachers do not pursue a career in education for the money. Nearly all teachers in Chelsea teach because they love kids and want to make a difference in young people's lives.

Commencement day ceremonies ought to recognize and celebrate our educational community, including these educators and the many wonderful students in the graduating class.

Class speakers, therefore, should be voted on by the students and the administration so as to provide a ceremony that not only celebrates and represents our graduates, but is also a family friendly event for all ages, including younger siblings of graduates, grandparents and out-of-town guests.

Teachers and administrators present at commencement, you deserved better and we thank you for all you do for our children.

Graduates, we are proud of you and we are excited to see you go out into the world and have a positive impact in your community.

Chelsea provides close-knit community

On June 5, we had a whale of a windstorm in Chelsea. It caused the split in a beautiful maple tree, which fell across my driveway and partially obstructed Cavanaugh Lake Road.

The neighbors across the street, the Polens, helped to clear the road of limbs and debris. A passerby saw that a large portion of the trunk was across the driveway. He stopped, used his chainsaw to cut the trunk and move it out of the way so that we would be able to get out. His name is Richard Hutter.

I have never met him and do not know him. He was simply a good Samaritan.

By the next morning, the Washtenaw County Road Commission sawed the major pieces down to more reasonable sizes, and Bob Polens cleared the rest.

I wish to thank everyone who helped. Though I always knew there were wonderful, selfless individuals who live in my wonderful town of Chelsea, I now have proof.

Gallery's student art show was admirable endeavor

Kudos to the River Gallery at its recent student art show. What an admirable community service the River Gallery has provided. The entire first floor of the gallery was used to showcase the talents of budding young artists in the Chelsea schools.

I saw the proud faces of the artists, as well as their beaming families, as they gazed at art of their own creation, hung in a "real" art gallery.

To donate valuable retail space for a student show is highly commendable.

I'm proud to be part of a retail community that sees the importance of public service.

Columnist doesn't present evidence

Congratulations to The Chelsea Standard/The Dexter Leader for its Michigan Press Association 2004 Newspaper of the Year awards of excellence (promoting the newspapers as part of an ad) in the June 2 edition.

We are new to Michigan, having moved here a year ago from the Chicago suburbs, and we are happy we have chosen to live in a community that sets high standards for many things, including good journalism.

The Chelsea Standard/The Dexter Leader provides important information to us about local and state politics and, we regret to say we are disappointed with the "veteran observations" of state politics reported by Tim Skubick in your "Other Voices" column.

Pertinent political commentary provokes thought and persuades by raising questions, interpreting and providing a logical line of reasoning with supporting evidence. Mr. Skubick's sarcastic rhetoric and partisan muckraking undermine the veracity of his "observations."

We don't need to be made believers when it comes to dirty politics, what we do need to believe is that we're getting a dependable perspective from an honest observer, skip the mudslinging and let the facts speak for themselves.

In his May 5 "Other Voices" commentary, Mr. Skubick complains and warns about "Town Hall-ittis" "...gobbling up a ton of free media with no tough questions from the local news hounds. And as far as your input goes, don't kid yourself, in the end your opinions won't mean much."

We might agree with Mr. Skubick if he reported the "tough question" he asked that exposed the "real reason" for these town hall meetings. Give us some evidence.

He continues to make pot shots quoting one source's assertion that "most of the 'citizens'" in attendance at the Senate Democrats first meeting were lobbyists and saying Senate Democrats "...rarely go anywhere except to dinner with lobbyists" and that in the end, ... "your testimony will be but a fading public relations memory."

Give us the details so we are in the know along with Mr. Skubick. Now that he has exposed the ugly underside of town hall meetings, what should we do, discontinue them because they can be exploited? After all, he told us our testimonies "won't mean much" and "will be but a fading public relations memory."

So, if the citizens can't affect government at the town hall level and the Democrats are in bed with the lobbyists, their town hall meeting "the 'Comedy of Errors,'" who's left to run the government?

In the June 2 edition, he talks about some key elected officials attending a rally for education. In one paragraph, he says, "If they don't show up, somebody will not only questions their commitment to education, but they might be called hypocrites."

As a so-called veteran political observer, Mr. Skubick should be able to give us, with some authority and objectivity, an accurate assessment of that commitment and declare that he, not "somebody," is calling them hypocrites.

He doesn't take a stand and leaves us wondering who "somebody" is. Mr. Skubick closes by saying, "The GOP would love to have the video of Granholm being yelled at by her own political base. That might make a nifty campaign commercial next year."

We place a high value on open discussion of government, which includes asking the "tough questions" Mr. Skubick describes. Vitriolic muckraking doesn't effectively inform or define and solve problems. We need objective, astute commentary that takes a critical and candid look at the political arena, presents the evidence and lets the truth as it is known speak for itself.

Ah, summer as a kid

MARK RUTKOWSKI

Twenty-five years ago, this was the best week of the year.

It was like standing on the deck of a ship and looking out over the sea. You weren't sure exactly what lay before you, but man, you knew it was going to be great.

When you're a kid, there's nothing like waking up the first few mornings of summer vacation.

Suddenly, after nine months of not being able to drag yourself out of bed in the morning, you're wide awake the moment the first tip of sunlight cracks the horizon.

You almost hate to waste time with silly things like eating breakfast or getting dressed.

You can't understand why, at 6:50 a.m., you can't walk over and see if your friend can come out to play.

And you really can't understand the concept of going over to someone's house but "not being allowed to get wet."

The worst possible thing you can hear in the morning from mom or dad? "Don't get dirty. We have errands to run today."

As Charlie Brown would say, "Uuuuggghhhh!"

When I was younger, there were two very distinct summer vacations, and they were separated by a single item: the bicycle.

Before you had a bike, or, more specifically, before you had free rein with your bike, vacations were good. You could ride around your block, or maybe to a nearby friend's house and play all day.

But when you got older, and you got to experience that second kind of summer — the one when you could get on your bike in the morning and go anywhere — good vacations became fantastic.

Throw a lock and chain around the seat post, a baseball mitt over one of the handlebars, a ball in the spokes, and you were good to go.

I'm only now remembering just how great summer vacation is because my oldest son, Stephen, just wrapped up first grade. There were vacations before this one, but until you're in school all day, every day, they don't carry the same meaning.

When he went to bed last Sunday night, we talked about the fact that he only had three days left of school, and he said he was really excited about being on vacation.

"How long am I on vacation?" he asked. "I think it's like three weeks."

When I told him it was really 12 weeks, he blinked a couple of times and just looked at me. I imagine it's the same look someone gets when they realize they've matched all six Lotto numbers.

Goodbye spelling words, hello squirt guns. Farewell fractions, greetings freeze tag.

Politicians split hairs

TIM SKUBICK

It's all Bill Clinton's fault. His little song and dance over the definition of the word "is" during his Monica Lewinsky deposition has given other politicians the courage to do their own hair splitting over the definition of words they use.

Take Harvard-educated Gov. Jennifer Granholm. She has been going merrily around the mulberry bush with reporters over the difference between supporting and endorsing a candidate for office.

She contends there is a difference. Of course, there is not.

How about the GOP rascals in the Michigan House? With a straight face they suggested the other day they were not cutting $800 million out of state services in their new budget.

Of course, they just weren't funding programs this year that they funded last year. If that is not a cut, what the heck is?

Now there is political newcomer and Granholm protege Scott Bowen is caught in the crossfire over the definition of campaigning.

Bowen is a west Michigan judge itching to knock Republican Attorney General Mike Cox out of his job. Even though he has not announced his candidacy, Bowen hightailed it up to Mackinac Island recently to attend a political confab.

According to those who watched him, Bowen worked the crowd, and a Republican leader in attendance cried foul. The GOP circulated copies of the code of judicial conduct and argued that Bowen had violated it by campaigning as a sitting judge. The charges were denied.

One of Bowen's sidekicks points out that the code does allow judges to "attend political gatherings" and that's where the hair splitting comes in.

He said Bowen was merely "meeting" people. But to be fair, Bowen never attended this event before and the only reason he was there was to lay the groundwork for a future campaign, if indeed he decides to run.

That's exactly what Granholm did in 1998 at the same event, but nobody jumped all over her because she was not a judge.

Somebody around Bowen should have done a better job of insulating him from this GOP attack. State GOP Chairman Saul Anuzis, never one to miss a chance to shoot at the other side, called it "blatant political activity" and even alleges Bowen was being introduced as the Democratic Party candidate for attorney general. To top it off, Anuzis is "looking" at filing a formal complaint against Bowen.

The Democrats see all this as proof that Cox is "very, very, very worried" about Bowen, and they thank Cox for the added publicity Bowen has received as a result of this flap.

On the other hand, Cox might not be worried — just smart — as he tries to knock out his potential opponent before he leaves the bench and joins the game.

For example, Bowen, who has resigned his judicial post but is awaiting a replacement before stepping down, has said he is interested in public service.

That's not all of it, say Cox and company.

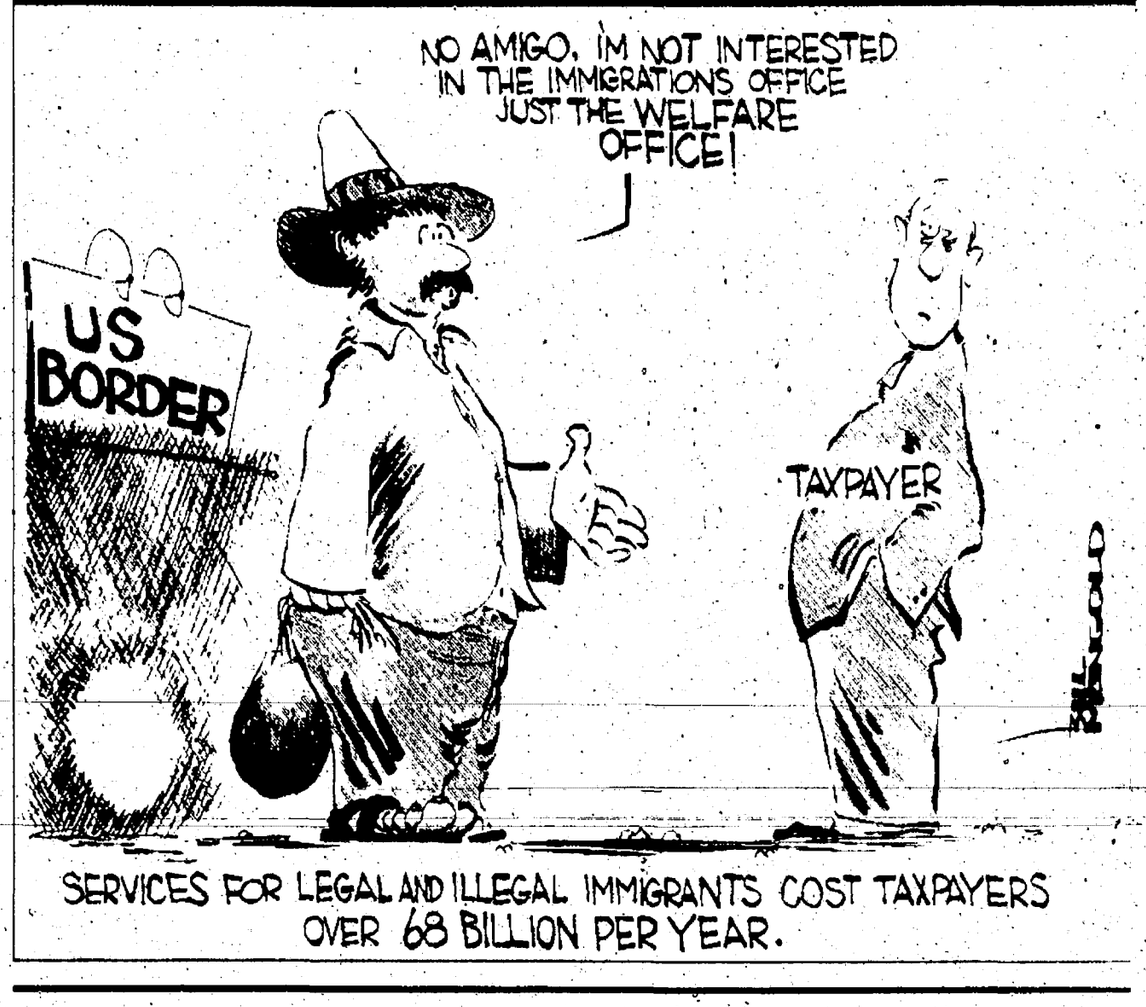

"Bowen has held two public posts and has resigned from them both," a Cox insider argues.

You can bet Cox is not done. He is a former Marine, a scrapper with a short fuse, and

My wife, Kelly, is a teacher, so for the past decade I've gotten a little sampling of summer vacation every year; but it's nothing like seeing it through the eyes of a 7-year-old once again.

Growing up, we had certain rules. You couldn't call a friend before 10 a.m. You had to check in sometime around lunch (even if you didn't actually eat lunch). You did have to come home for dinner. And, of course, you had to be home when the streetlights came on.

Working around those guidelines were baseball games; playing strikeout against any available building; playing tennis behind Board of Education offices only until it was time to play basketball.

My son won't be doing any of those things this year, but every child needs to create his or her own summertime adventures and memories.

It's less about what you do, and more about the fact that you're doing something at all.

Just like I was, he's standing on the bow of that ship, looking out over the horizon.

I have no idea what the summer is going to bring for him.

But man, it's going to be great.

small house in downtown Chelsea, and I had imagined Dexter would hold several of the similar values I had loved about Chelsea.

I have lived in Dexter for almost seven months now, and I am very disappointed. I moved to a house that my fiancé already owned in the country and he is running a successful business out of it.

I had lived in town all my life and I was looking forward to getting out into the open space. Unfortunately, my current neighbors don't feel as though we have a right to be here. And what is even more unfortunate, Webster Township is siding with them.

It's now very uncomfortable living in a house that I love. My neighbors hold meetings about us and are very unfriendly.

I have been attending the township meetings to support the landscape business and other small businesses in Dexter, and I realized that my voice doesn't even count.

Someone stood up and said that they would rather build several houses on our lot rather than have just the one house because of some mulch and rocks on the property. I have to ask, "Is this what my neighbors want? More houses? Fewer trees?"

I live next door to a farm field and it's exciting to me to look out my door and see an actual tractor picking homegrown corn on the cob.

All my fiancé ever wanted to do was run a successful landscaping business and now, when he looks out our front door, he sees it. I am not sure why some people are trying to take that away from us.

As I sit at my computer typing, I am drawn to the village map on the wall above me. It says: "The village of Dexter was originally plotted and organized in 1824 by Judge Samuel Dexter. Although its rich heritage has been steeped in an agricultural community, it has developed a variety of industrial and professional services to meet the economic challenges for the day. Still, the residents take pride in preserving its history and retaining a small-town, rural character. This philosophy of reflecting on the past as it aspires for the future truly makes Dexter 'A place to grow.'"

I am asking, if you are my neighbor or on the Township Board, please reconsider what you are trying to do. Support local businesses, don't destroy them.

Statistic in article correct, but misleading

I want to thank The Chelsea Standard and Staff Writer Steve Ricci for reporting in the June 9 edition the results of the Committee for Chelsea Parks survey of local residents' views regarding parks, recreation, natural area and open space.

However, there is one statistic reported that, although correct, is misleading. The article stated, "Most respondents said they were neither satisfied nor dissatisfied with outdoor recreational facilities for teenagers."

Although most responses were neutral, the average of the responses showed slight dissatisfaction with the facilities for teenagers. The average was 2.8 on a 1-to-5 scale in which a 3 would mean neutrality.

In contrast, the average response for satisfaction with outdoor recreation facilities for children age 5 to 12 was 3.4, which means some satisfaction.

Anyone interested in obtaining a copy of the report may pick up one at the Chelsea Community Education Office at the Washington Street Education Center, 500 Washington St.

clinic of the VA Ann Arbor Healthcare System. He is also an assistant professor of general medicine at the University of Michigan Medical School, a research investigator at the Ann Arbor VA, and a faculty associate at the U of M Institute for Social Research.

The new review focuses on findings from randomized controlled drug trials, and observational studies based on trends among specific populations. Taken together, the analysis suggests that the cardiovascular system may have a lot more to do with mental function than many people realize.

Paying attention to cardiovascular risk factors could prevent some dementia and decrease the added burden of strokes in those with Alzheimer's disease.

Langa said evidence is building that mixed dementia can be prevented or slowed by addressing both factors that cause it: the Alzheimer's disease process and the acute or chronic reduction of blood flow to the brain.

The two are intertwined, he said, noting animal research data showing that amyloid protein, the chief sign of Alzheimer's disease, can infiltrate the walls of brain blood vessels and increase the risk of small bleeding strokes.

And other evidence suggests that an under-supply of blood to the brain can stress brain cells and perhaps jump-start the Alzheimer's disease process. Chronically high blood pressure also impacts the brain's auto-regulation system for its own blood supply.

"Mixed dementia will continue to grow in importance as our society ages and deals with the cardiovascular effects of our current obesity and diabetes epidemics," he said. "We need to help those who have it now, and gather the data that will help us take steps to prevent it in the future."

Thieves caught breaking in

Couple may be linked to other break-ins along Jackson Road

By Gary Anglebrandt
Staff Writer

Two people were caught June 9 trying to break into businesses on Jackson Road in Scio Township.

Washtenaw County Sheriff's deputies Ron Blackwell and Keith Dalton were patrolling the area at 1:40 a.m., checking businesses because thieves have been hitting the Jackson Road area in recent months.

When the deputies looked behind a building that houses several businesses, they found a pick-up truck with its door open. According to a reports, when they approached the truck, the driver sped off.

A chased ensued, with the couple, a man and woman from the Ann Arbor-Ypsilanti area, driving west on Jackson Road to southbound Parker Road. The chase ended at Lima Center Road when the suspects' truck broke down.

Police believe the couple pried open the doors to three businesses in the building and took checks, a passport and a bank bag filled with pennies. In addition, a safe was pried open, said Lt. Ed Toth, who oversees the sheriff's substation in Scio Township.

It's still unclear how many other local break-ins the couple may have been involved in, but the June 9 break-ins probably weren't the first, Toth said. The man was on parole for a previous breaking-and-entering offense, he said.

"These guys have been doing significant damage all over the county," Toth said.

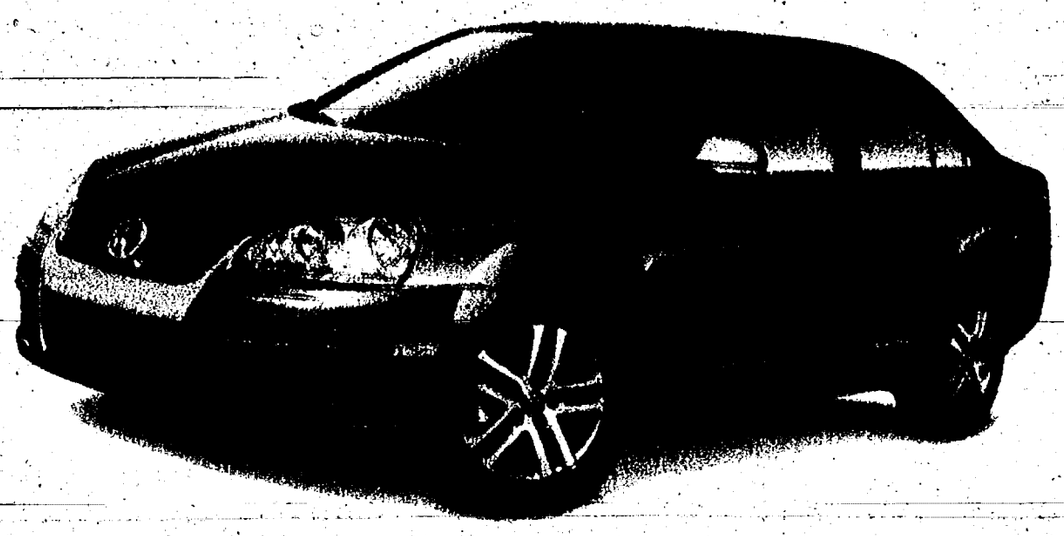

The couple was arrested and an investigation is under way.

Study helps doctors understand depression

The brains of people with severe depression have lower levels of several related molecules that are key to the development, organization, growth and repair of the brain than the brains of people without the disease, or those with the bipolar form of depression, a new study finds.

The discovery, which surprised researchers in the multi-university consortium that made it, suggests a whole new direction for understanding depression and developing new depression treatments. It may even help scientists understand how some antidepressant medications work in the brain to ease symptoms, and why there is wide variation in how depressed people respond to different antidepressants.

The finding was made in two specific areas of the brain known to be important to depression. The study relied on microarray analysis of 32 post-mortem brain samples.

Researchers found that levels of molecules called fibroblast growth factors, and two of the receptors that bind to them, were significantly lower among people who had been diagnosed with severe clinical depression and had died in a depressed state.

There was also some indication that those depressed people who had been taking antidepressants before their deaths had levels of fibroblast growth factors and fibroblast growth factors receptors that were closer to normal.

The results were recently published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences by researchers from the Pritzker Neuropsychiatric Disorders Research Consortium, which is supported by the Pritzker Family Philanthropic Fund and by the National Institute of Mental Health.

The research team consisted of scientists from the University of Michigan's Mental Health Research Institute and Department of Psychiatry, working in collaboration with researchers from the University of California's Davis and Irvine campuses and from Stanford University.

"This finding comes from a completely unbiased search that began with no hypothesis, to find what genes best differentiate major depression brains from normal and bipolar brains," senior author Huda Akil, professor of neurosciences in psychiatry at the University of Michigan, said in a press release.

"A wide set of individual genes came up as different between the depressed and control individuals, but the family of genes that was most different and showed the highest significance as a coherent group was the fibroblast growth factors family. This suggests a more profound change in an entire system of communication and control within the brain."

No previous studies have directly examined the role of fibroblast growth factors or their receptors in psychiatric illnesses. Another growth factor, called brain derived neurotrophic factor, has been hypothesized to play a role in the effects of stress on the brain and in the mode of action of antidepressants.

Fibroblast growth factors are a family of molecules that stimulate cell growth in many areas of the body, and are involved in the growth of multiple tissues and in growth that takes place at various stages of life. They have potent effects during embryonic, fetal and child development, and can modify the size and structure of particular brain regions.

They are also involved in the repair of adult tissues after injury and may mediate the cross-talk between different cell types in the brain.

As a result, they can be seen as mediators of the property that neuroscientists call "neural plasticity," the ability of the brain to adapt to stress, experience, disease and the effects of drugs.

The analysis was conducted on samples from two areas of the brain involved in the coordination of thinking and emotion: the dorsolateral prefrontal cortex and the anterior cingulate cortex. Both are located toward the front of the brain behind the forehead. Previously, brain scan studies have found differences in brain activity levels and size in these areas in people with psychiatric illnesses.

The researchers emphasized that they do not yet know whether the depressed people were born with lower levels of these molecules, or whether the lower levels were brought on by the effects of depression on the brain or by external factors such as stressful events.

Other studies have shown that genes involved in brain chemistry and stress response are expressed differently in the brains of depressed people and non-depressed people.

"We can't say whether these FGF gene expression changes are a predisposing factor for depression, or a consequence of the disease process itself," lead author and U of M research investigator Simon Evans said in the release. "There may be totally normal people out there with compromised FGF systems, but if they don't experience stressful life events they may never develop major depression. We need to study this system further to unravel this question."

Even as they made their discovery, the researchers grasped the potential significance of the finding.

"It's a new direction for depression research to go," Evans said. "Given the known roles of this FGF family in neural development and maintenance, it's not a huge leap to see how compromising the system could lead to changes in neural circuitry and contribute to mood disorders."

People get relief from hydrocortisone

One of the downsides of summer can be the itchy skin that goes hand-in-hand with this season of bug bites, sun-related rashes and poison ivy.

But researchers have some good news. Adults and children generally apply over-the-counter hydrocortisone cream.

Dr. Charles Ellis of the University of Michigan Health System said he was pleasantly surprised by the number of study participants who complied with the usage guidelines. Ellis is the lead author of the study, which appears early in the online edition of the Journal of the American Academy of Dermatology.

"The people in the study reported that they're following the label in large part," Ellis, professor and associate chair of dermatology in the U of M Medical School, said in a press release.

"Not many of them have used it beyond the suggested amount of time, and not many used it more often than recommended," he said.

"Our findings suggest that people who use over-the-counter hydrocortisone cream generally do so in a way that is likely to be safe," he said.

Adults were found to be compliant with the instructions about three-quarters of the time, and they reported following the recommendations for treating children about as often.

The most common way in which people were not compliant with directed uses was in using the creams to treat cuts. It also was used to treat acne, athlete's foot, arthritis and jock itch, against the recommendations on the label.

The 2,000 study participants were asked in phone interviews if they had used over-the-counter hydrocortisone products such as Cortaid, Cortizone 10 or other similar products in the past six months. Those who had used over-the-counter hydrocortisone products were asked questions about their patterns of use. They answered questions without being able to refer to the product label.

Respondents also were asked if they had any children younger than 18 in the house who had used hydrocortisone; if so, they were asked about the use by the youngest child in the past six months.

Respondents who had used hydrocortisone or whose children had used it were asked what conditions they had treated with the cream and questions about their usage patterns, including the frequency and duration of use.

They also were asked if they had discussed with a doctor their own usage of hydrocortisone and/or their use of it on the youngest child in the household.

In all, 396, or 20 percent, of the adults in the study reported using over-the-counter hydrocortisone in the previous six months. The most common conditions they treated with the creams were rashes, insect bites and itchy skin.

Researchers found that when adults were using hydrocortisone, they did so an average of twice a day, and 98 percent of them used it four or fewer times a day, which complies with directions for use. That means only 2 percent of adults reported using it more times in a day than recommended.

In all, when factors such as the type of use and the duration of use were factored in, almost three-quarters, or 73 percent, of adults in the study were compliant with the instructions on the label.

One-third of the adult respondents had discussed the use of topical hydrocortisone with a doctor. The compliance level rose to 89 percent when the results were recalculated with the assumption that the doctor had allowed for wider uses and treatment regimens.

In children, hydrocortisone tended to be used primarily for insect bites, rashes, eczema and itchy skin. Of the 2,000 households, one-third had a child younger than 18 living at home and a quarter of those reported treating a child with over-the-counter hydrocortisone in the previous six months.

The frequency of use was more than the recommended maximum of four times a day in only 3 percent of cases, and only 6 percent reported using it for longer than the recommended maximum of seven days.

More than half, or 55 percent, of these households reported talking to a doctor at some time about their child's use of over-the-counter hydrocortisone.

In all, given the duration and frequency of use, the type of condition treated, and the age of the child, 72 percent of the use on children followed the recommended usage guidelines. When the figure was recalculated to assume that the physicians who were consulted had allowed for wider uses and treatment regimens, the compliance level rose to 89 percent.

DEXTER TOWNSHIP

Inverness Inn likely to remain closed

Indebted owner keeps mum about business, unpaid taxes

By Gary Anglebrandt
Staff Writer

The Inverness Inn in Dexter Township is headed for its first non-operational summer in nearly 100 years.

Michigan's Department of Treasury earlier this year seized and shut down the restaurant because the owners had not paid their sales taxes, said Matt Hintzen, who has issued a legal complaint against the owners of the Inverness.

The business closed its doors Dec. 20, 2004, Hintzen said. Former employees of the Inverness have called Hintzen complaining about not receiving their last paychecks.

"He disappeared," Hintzen said of Paul Ledwidge, one of the owners.

Hintzen in 1997 sold the business to Paul and Laura Ledwidge, a married couple, and entered a $200,000 land contract deal to sell the land and property to them, as well. The Ledwidges set up their business under the name 3 Bird L.L.C.

Hintzen filed a complaint against the Ledwidges for not paying $29,000 to him since October of last year.

Following a May 4 hearing, Judge Richard Conlin of 14A-3 District Court issued a consent agreement June 6 in favor of Hintzen. The Ledwidges must pay the $29,000, as well as late fees, and maintain ongoing monthly payments, all within 180 days, or else the land and property will return to Hintzen.

The Ledwidges also can try to sell the land, said their attorney, Mark Cunningham.

"We're getting ready to list it with a Realtor," Cunningham said.

The buyer would be responsible for paying the debts, so it would be a hard sell, Hintzen said. It doesn't help that the state is likely to auction off any valuable equipment inside to recoup some of its money, Hintzen said.

The sale of the Inverness Inn at this point would be difficult because of the many associated legal issues, said Eric Lipson, an attorney who works with Hintzen's attorney, John Shea. Shea is also the Township Planning Commission chairman.

Another complication is the business side of the Inverness Inn. Hintzen sold the business to the Ledwidges on a promissory note, and they have not kept up with those payments, either, he said. That matter is currently going through circuit court in Ann Arbor.

The Ledwidges owe Hintzen roughly $90,000 in back payments for the business, Lipson said.

Even if they pay Hintzen, the Ledwidges still have the state to contend with, but from the state's point of view, the matter is simple.

"They could pay us now and be open today," said Caleb Buhs, a spokesperson for the Department of Treasury.

Buhs would not disclose how much the Ledwidges owe. No auction of property inside the Inverness has been scheduled yet, but that can happen within a few months, depending on the actions of the debtor, Buhs said.

The consent agreement also says the Ledwidges must pay any property taxes Hintzen has paid on their behalf. Hintzen has paid $15,000, so far, he said.

The Ledwidges did not return two phone calls from the newspaper this week seeking comment and their attorney, Cunningham, answered only a few questions.

Visitors to the township's lakes and cottages will have to start packing more lunches. The Inverness was the last functioning public restaurant or bar in Dexter Township. Countryside Catering and Restaurant at North Territorial and Dexter-Townhall roads closed after a fire and subsequent arson investigation Nov. 10, 2003. It sits as a charred-out ruin.

The Inverness Inn hasn't been closed during the summer since it opened as a trading post in 1907, Hintzen said.

Visitors to the Inverness Country Club, across the street from the Inverness Inn, have long considered the Inn to be the 19th hole.

"I wish it was open. They would like to have a restaurant around here," said Dave Scriben, manager at the club.

Some members have expressed interest in purchasing the Inverness, he said.

"It's a landmark for the lake community," Dexter Township Supervisor Pat Kelly said.

Charles Moore, president of Wolverine Moore Glass in Dexter, was a partner of Paul Ledwidge when they bought it in 1997. He sold his share back to Ledwidge a year later, and then had to sue Ledwidge to get the full amount for the sale. They eventually settled for less than the original price, Moore said.

They turned the inn into bar and restaurant. It had been primarily a bar when Hintzen owned it. The location made it easy to succeed, Moore said.

"We tripled our business with no advertising," he said.

But, after a while, he came to believe Ledwidge did not have the right mind for business.

"I saw the writing on the wall. That's why I got out of it," Moore said.

Ledwidge is guilty of "extremely poor management," Moore said.

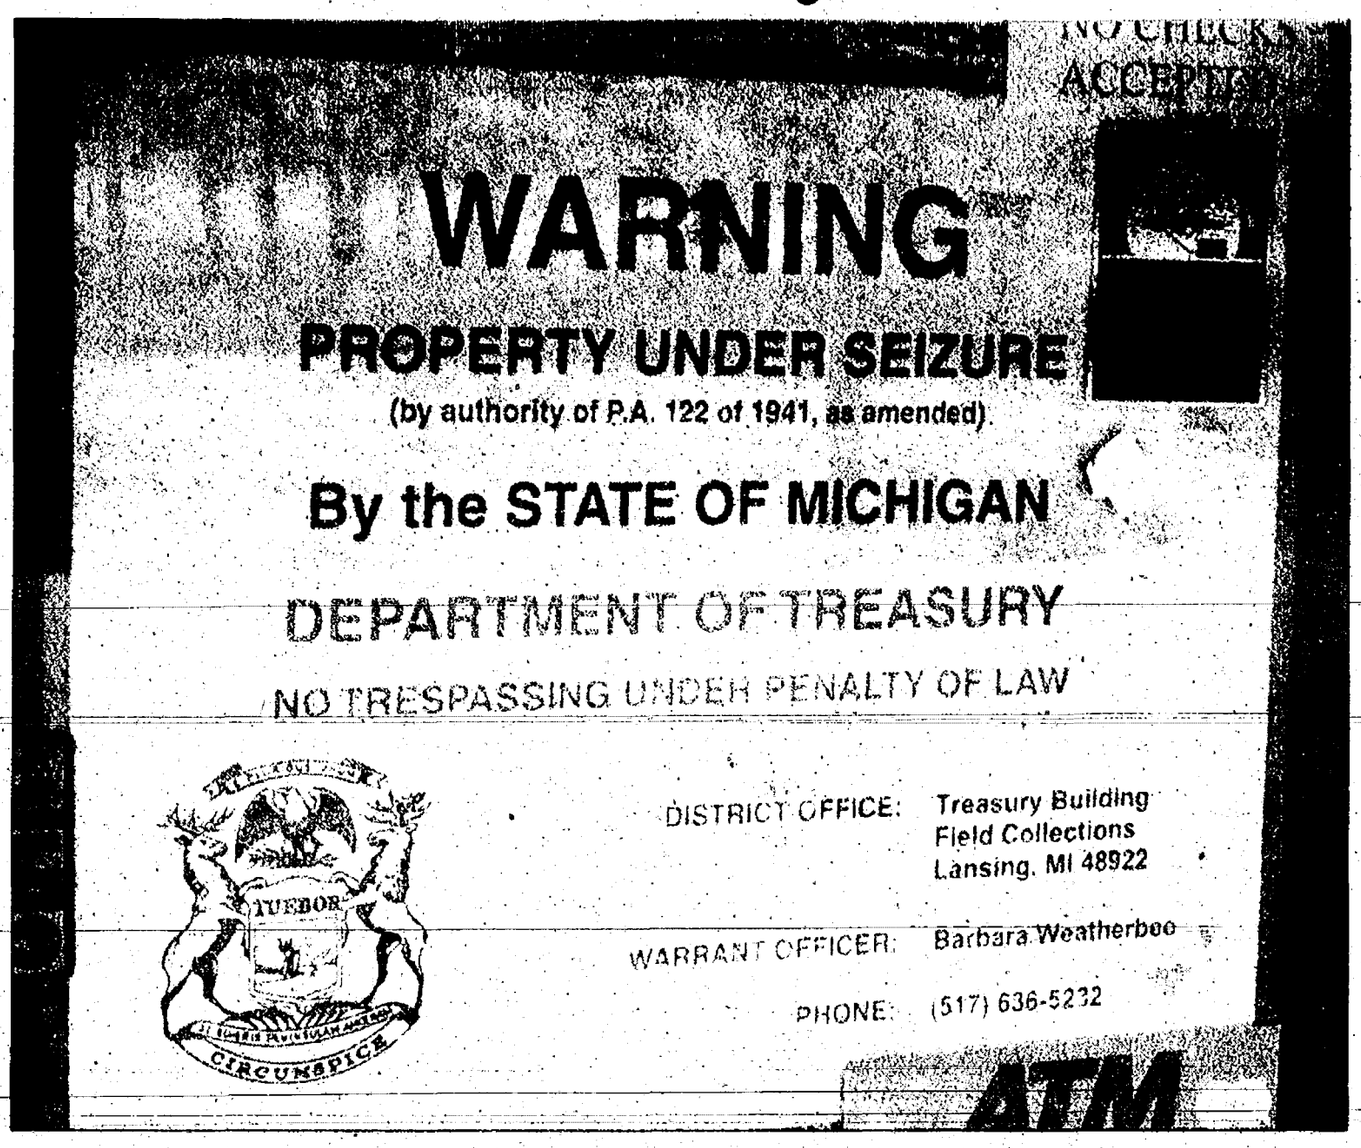

But, he added, "He really is a good guy."

Hintzen bought the Inverness Inn in 1972. An article published in The Dexter Leader at the time said the location was the first commercial establishment in Dexter Township. It became the Inverness Inn sometime after Prohibition, Hintzen said.

Hintzen would like to see control of the Inverness Inn return to him because he wants to sell it to "somebody interested in keeping the tradition going," Hintzen said.

Ideally, that would happen in time for a 100-year anniversary in 2007, he said.

Staff Writer Gary Anglebrandt can be reached at 475-1371 or garya@heritage.com.

Visitors to the Inverness Inn have been greeted by this sign instead of a smile and a beer since the restaurant's closing Dec. 20. The state Department of Treasury seized and shut down the Inverness because management did not pay sales taxes.

A woman reported May 23 that $1,000 in charges had appeared on her credit card. She said she probably lost the card at a gas station.

Possible Shots Fired

A woman in the 13000 block of Old US-12 reported someone fired a gun at her home several times May 25. Troopers found no evidence of the allegation.

Property Damage

A vehicle hit a fence May 24 and 25 at Reddeman Farms Golf Club, 555 Dancer Road. The estimated damage was $400. A manager said an employee would stay out all night to watch for more vandalism.

Sylvan Township

Suspended License

Two Ohio men working for a Michigan construction company were arrested after state troopers stopped their work van because of a broken taillight. The men had valid Ohio licenses, but both had suspended Michigan licenses for various traffic and civil infractions and failure to appear in court.

Dogs at Large

Two dogs killed about 25 chickens May 23 in the 17000 block of Ash Hollow. When troopers went to the home, the dogs were near a swamp away from the home.

When the troopers tried to find them, the dogs managed to get back toward the house and kill more chickens. The troopers found the dogs on Garvey Road shortly after. The dogs were heading toward another chicken coop.

The troopers kept the dogs away from the coop and were able to read the phone number on a dog's tag. The owner of the dogs said the dogs got away from his wife earlier in the day.

Scio Township

Larceny

A man in the 900 block of Marshal Lake Drive reported wood stolen May 31 from a new home he is building. He said workers at a neighboring home stole the wood.

A deputy suggested to a manager of the workers that the wood be returned to the man. The deputy noted that markings on the wood in the man's possession matched markings on wood at the neighboring house. The manager returned the wood.

Breaking and Entering

Two Jackson Road businesses were broken into the night of May 27 and an attempt break-in was reported the same night. All three incidents involved someone using a tool to pry open doors.

Value Copy at 7100 Jackson Road lost $350 and sustained $200 in property damage. C&M Insurance Services lost $945 and sustained $150 in property damage. The attempted break-in at Lifestyles Hot Springs, 4788 Jackson Road, caused an estimated $500 in property damage.

The same night, an employee of Uptown Coney Island restaurant said he saw two men approaching the restaurant's back door. The employee, who was driving at the time, drove his car toward the back of the restaurant, and the men ran away. They were wearing ski masks, he said.

The owners of a home in the 2000 block of East Delhi Road believe a truck driver for a charity may have been the person who broken into their home May 25 and stole a Macintosh notebook computer valued at $1,200. The residents had left some items on their porch for the driver.

A dispatcher at the business said he would tell deputies if the driver had a computer matching the one stolen. The suspect has several previous felony charges, including a home invasion in Washtenaw County.

Trespassing

A 23-year-old Toledo woman was issued a trespass notice May 23 at TA Travel Center, 200 Baker Road.

Home Invasion

A home in the 1000 block of Shady Oaks Drive was broken into May 17. The resident reported $15,000 worth of jewelry was stolen.

One neighbor saw a Pontiac Bonneville near the house at the time, but thought the car was there for repairs at a nearby house. Another neighbor saw a newer, white car driving slowly through the neighborhood and thought it was suspicious.

Arson

A high school boy admitted May 28 to throwing a smoke bomb into an outside garbage can at McDonald's at 373 North Zeeb Road. Customers and employees saw the boy and his friends put the bomb in the garbage can and drive away. A license plate number was recorded.

The boy apologized for the incident. The case has been turned over to a prosecutor for review.

House Fire

A man in the 600 block of Lakeview smelled smoke in his home May 30 and found the electrical box in his basement on fire. He was unable to get a fire extinguisher to work, so he called 911. The cause of the fire was water in the electrical box.

Possession of Marijuana

Deputies visited a home in the 6000 block of Jackson Road May 25 to question a man about a neighbor's complaint that he had been knocking over trashcans in the area. The neighbor also said the man sells drugs. The man denied knocking over the cans and having drugs in the house. He and a woman living there allowed the deputies to search the house.

The man went to his room before the deputy came into the home. The deputies smelled marijuana and asked the man if he had put the marijuana in the toilet, and he said that he did.

The deputies saw a scale, Ziploc bags and marijuana residue on a table. The man collected the marijuana from the toilet and it appeared to be about a half-pound. The man said it was for personal use.

The deputies noted empty 1-pound bags in the vicinity of the scale and concluded the man was selling marijuana. They collected the marijuana and sent it to a lab. They did not arrest the man, but sent the case to a prosecutor.

Assault and Battery

A man at Woodchase Apartments in the 1000 block of Rabbit Run confronted three other men at the complex's pool May 27 after his wife said they had been rude to her. One of the men punched the victim two or three times and then placed his knee on the man's back while he was on the ground.

The wife said the suspect lives in Ypsilanti. The man did not want to press charges because he pushed the conflict.

Stolen Vehicle

Two personal watercraft and a trailer were stolen from a home in the 4000 block of Scio Church Road. The theft occurred between May 28 and June 2.

Suspicious Incident

A man in the 1000 block of Parker Road told police that he saw a man in his mid-20s and speaking with a Hispanic accent in his garage June 8. The suspect was opening cabinet doors in the garage. He said he was there to see his friend.

The resident said there was no one in the home by the name of his friend and the suspect left.

Burglary

A Two Men and a Truck reported $1,000 was stolen from a safe between 8:30 a.m. and 10 a.m. June 5. A worker said he had been in the safe's room that morning and noticed nothing unusual. He left and locked the doors at 8:30 a.m. Another employee at 10 a.m. noticed the money was missing.

Suspended License

An Ypsilanti man arrested in recent weeks for driving with a suspended license rear-ended a car on Jackson Road between Zeeb and Baker roads June 7. The 22-year-old was arrested, fingerprinted and released. The case has been sent to a prosecutor.

Check Fraud

A Detroit man cashed $8,300 in counterfeit checks March 8 and 11 at Chex Max Check Cashing Center, 5680 Jackson Road. The clerk took fingerprints, digital photos and called the credit union that issued the checks before cashing them.

The credit union verified the checks, but later sent the checks back stamped "counterfeit."

The suspect has a prior criminal history. The information was sent to a prosecutor.

Larceny

An employee of Fort Knox Self Storage at 3870 Jackson Road believes a former employee stole $2,500 in power tools May 31 from a truck parked at the business. The employee found the tools at 3D Pawn Shop in Ypsilanti. The employee and a sheriff's deputy went to the shop and retrieved the tools, which were then sent to an evidence room.

Two trailers loaded with fountain equipment were reported stolen May 29 from Daily Rain, an irrigation systems store at 25 Jackson Industrial Drive. The total estimated value is $41,000. The owner believes the suspects simply drove away with the trailers.

Ethnic Intimidation

A teacher at Christian Montessori School, 5225 Jackson Road, reported May 27 that someone had spray-painted "Jews" on the sidewalk near the school and "Your school bus stop" on a wooden fence around a garbage bin. The teacher said she did not know who did it or why.

Fraud

A woman in the 700 block of Lilac Lane said her electric bill from DTE Energy had an incorrect charge of $288 that had been transferred from a Melvindale address. DTE reportedly would not relieve the woman of the charge.

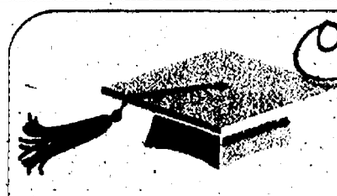

The woman believed someone had used her personal information to transfer the charge. A former boyfriend had stolen her purse with personal information it a few years prior, she said.

The people living at the Melvindale address did not know the former boyfriend. Melvindale police said they would try contacting possible suspects.

Domestic Violence

A 39-year-old man in the Polo Fields subdivision was arrested after his 23-year-old girlfriend called 911. She

In addition, both were issued tickets for not wearing seat belts.

Non-Aggravated Assault

A 15-year-old Chelsea boy told Chelsea police the owner of Fancy Nails, 1109 S. Main St., assaulted him June 4.

The minor said the storeowner, a 30-year-old Chelsea man, became upset after he asked the minor about the identity of his friend who allegedly smashed the man's car window.

The minor refused to provide his friend's name and the businessman told him to leave the salon.

The man told the boy to leave the lobby outside the salon, where the boy was waiting for his friend. He allegedly grabbed the boy by the neck and by his right arm, escorting him outside the building, after the boy refused to leave the lobby, according to a police report.

The boy, who told police he later talked to the man and "had worked out" the dispute, said he was no longer interested in pressing charges.

Bill addresses problem with mold infestation

Bill would create National Mold Hazard Insurance Program

By Emily Burton
Heritage Newspapers

The way mold infestations are treated under federal law may change soon.

That is, if House Resolution 1269, the U.S. Toxic Mold Safety and Protection Act of 2005, also known as the Melina Bill, becomes law.

U.S. Rep. John Conyers, D-14th District, said he introduced the legislation because "people are suffering."

"We cannot wait for that suffering to rise to a boiling point," he said in a recent press release. "It is essential that we not only begin (a) national discussion over mold, but that we also start to relieve some of that suffering."

Joel Segal, Conyers' senior legislative assistant, said the congressman saw mold as "a crisis similar to lead, asbestos and even radon in the 1970s."

He said Conyers wanted to act "before more people got sick and more kids got sick."

"There are no government standards for mold, and a lot of people lose their homes from mold, and there is no recourse for them," Segal said. "It's really just a nightmare."

The main goal of the bill is to create the National Mold Hazard Insurance Program through the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

The bill says the program would "establish and carry out a national toxic mold insurance program to enable interested persons to purchase insurance against losses resulting from mold hazards."

Owners and tenants of residential, church and small business properties, as well as state and local government-owned buildings, would be eligible to apply for the insurance.

This bill seeks to address the spread of so-called "toxic molds." The bill defines toxic mold as "any indoor growth capable of creating toxins that can cause pulmonary, respiratory, neurological or other major illnesses after minimal exposure."

In addition to creating the insurance program, the bill's language calls for both the National Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, as well as the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, to "jointly undertake a comprehensive study of the health effects of indoor mold growth and toxic mold."

The study would establish information about which types of mold are detrimental to human health.

Exactly how to detect the presence of toxic mold, the dangers of prolonged exposure to indoor mold, the minimum levels at which exposure is harmful and hazards involved in mold remediation also would be part of the study.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development would be required to study how current construction standards prohibit or increase the growth of indoor mold.

In addition to the first study, the EPA would "conduct a comprehensive study on the economic impact of mold on homeowners, renters, businesses, residential and commercial real estate and litigation."

A former Woodhaven resident recently won a $925,000 settlement against her former landlord after a jury found that her severe, permanent asthma was caused by mold growing in her apartment.

The jury further found that her landlord had caused the mold growth by not properly cleaning her apartment after a flood in 2001.

Based on the results of the CDC and EPA studies, the EPA would "set standards for mold inspection, mold remediation, testing the toxicity of mold, and protection of mold remediators," according to the bill.

Further, HUD, the EPA and the National Institutes of Health would begin a public education campaign on the dangers of indoor mold.

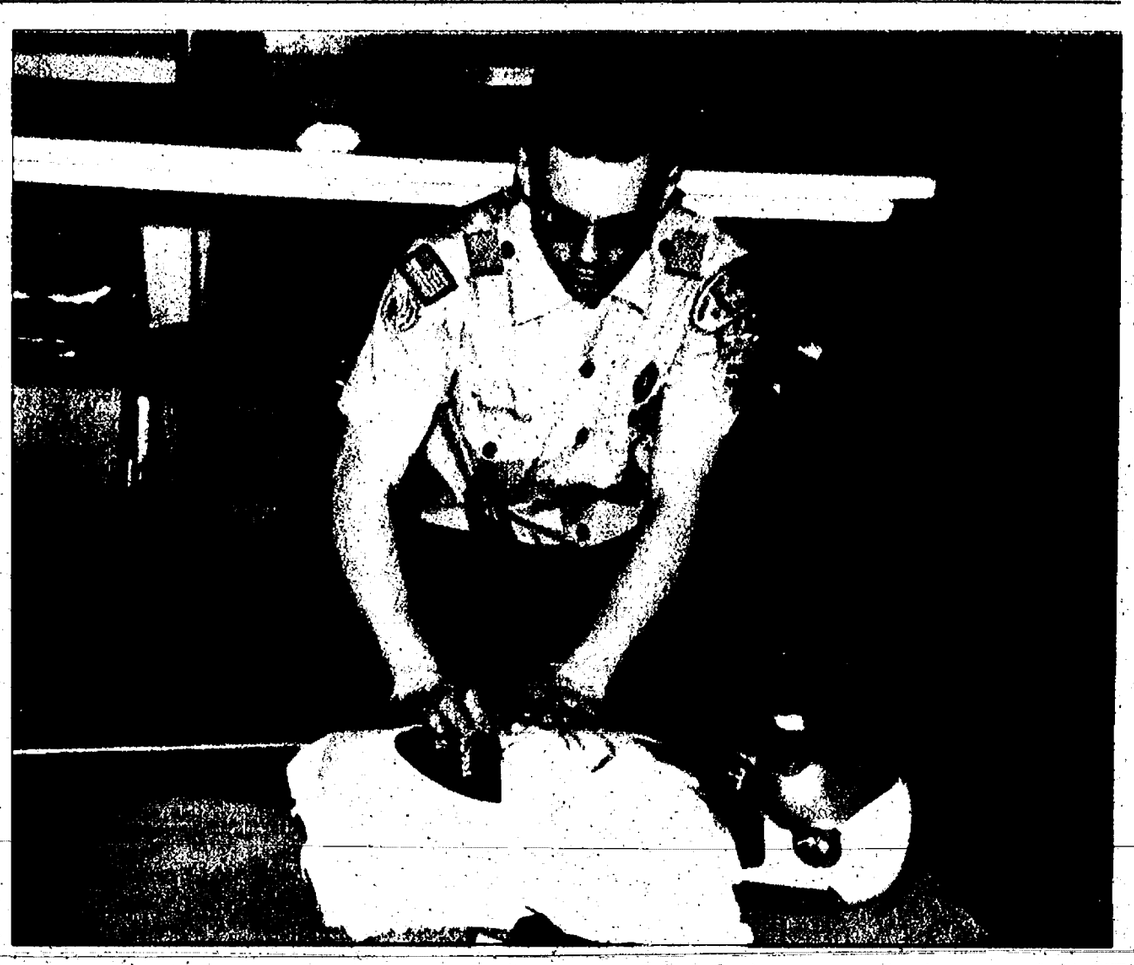

In addition, the bill would require all landlords to conduct annual inspections of their properties for the presence of mold, and to notify the occupants of inspection results.

Also, no less than two years after the bill's passage, HUD and the EPA must establish regulations requiring homeowners or landlords to disclose any mold hazards if that dwelling is being sold or leased, and to report the inspection results to the buyer or renter.

Grants for remediation of public buildings, as well as private homes severely impacted by mold, would be available to state and local governments through the EPA.

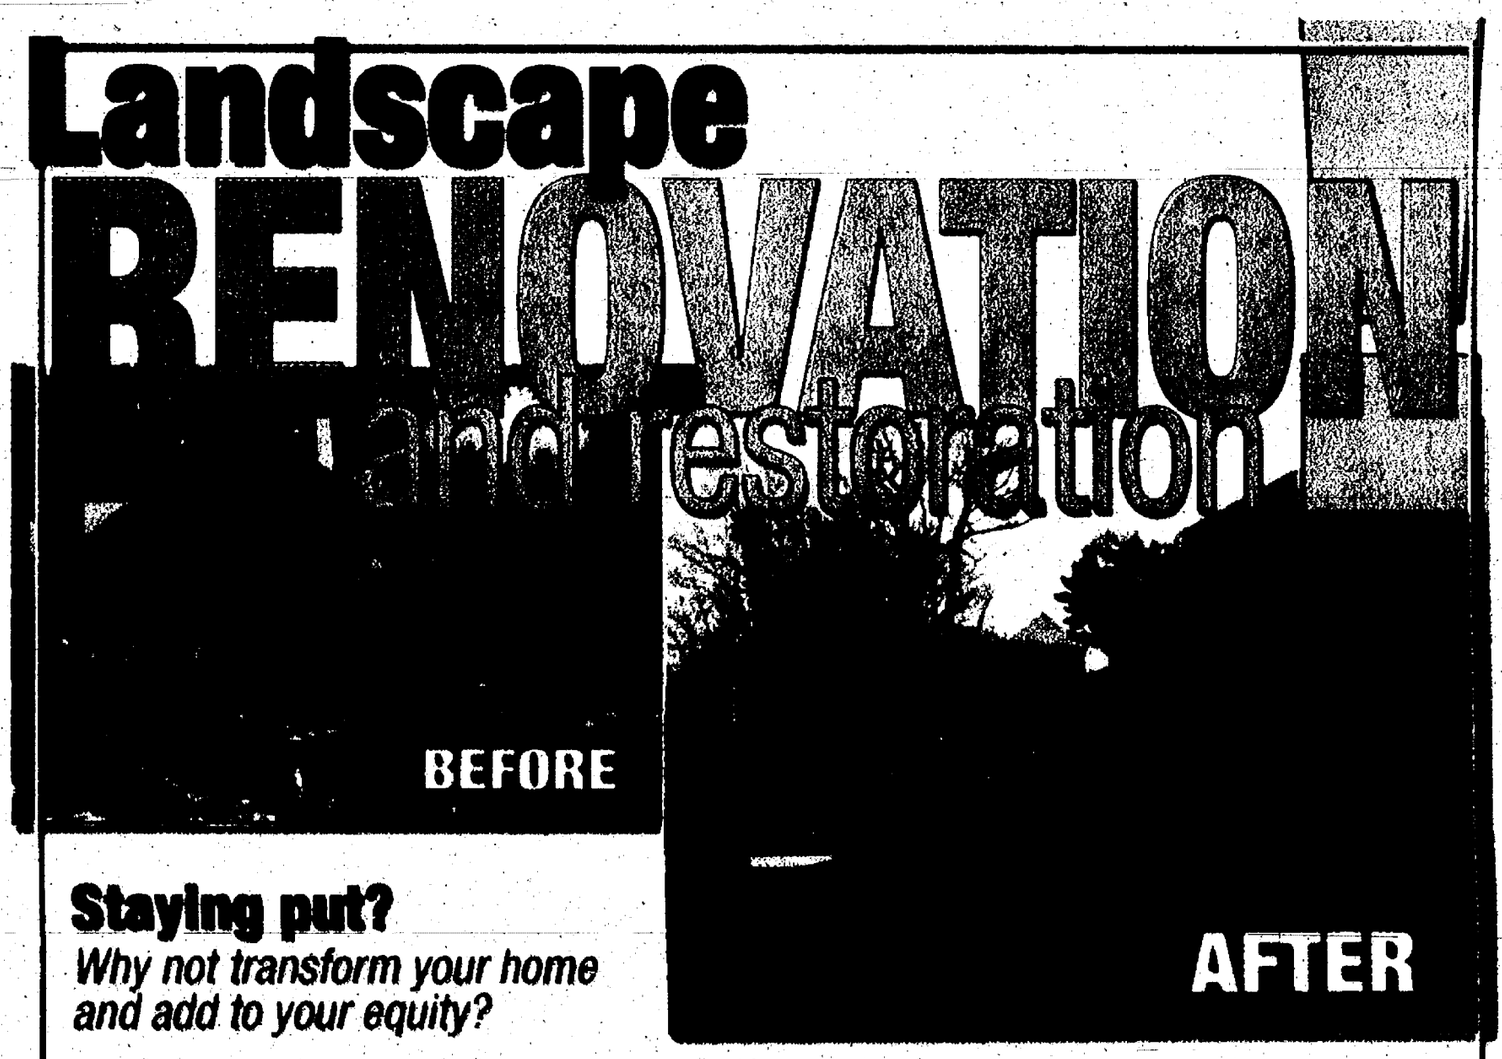

Tax breaks would be made available to those who cover the costs of remediation, and medical assistance would be made available to people whose health is severely impacted by mold and who do not have health coverage to aid in the cost of treating ailments contracted due to toxic mold exposure.

The legislation, introduced in late April, has been moved to the House Judiciary Committee, the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, the House Committee of Financial Services and the House Ways and Means Committee. The bill has not yet been scheduled for discussion in any of the committees.

Learning First Aid

Life Scout Jeremy Loy practices CPR on a mannequin. Scouts in Dexter Boy Scout Troop 442 recently learned first aid from American Red Cross instructors. The Scouts received training in many first-aid methods, including CPR, treatment of stroke and emergency breathing. The emergency training counts toward earning a first-aid badge. Troop 442 is sponsored by American Legion Post 557.

WRITING MATTERS

Poetry and prose from the students in Chelsea

Walking Proud

Jared Gentz
Eighth Grade
Beach Middle School

Walking proud
through the plains
the lion is like a king.

With its crown of fur glistening in the sun
and its throne of grass, this is its home.

Jared Gentz

After a nap the lion goes freely to roam in the land
that he claims as his own.
His muscles ripple
as he tackles his prey.

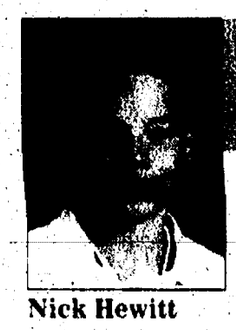

He sits down again
to start his meal.
His family comes from behind and hungry joins the feast.

Lazily back to their home
the five of them go.
The cubs joyfully play
until the sun sets and they all lie down in their bed of grass.

It's the end of the day
And time to rest.

One Copper P

Nick Hewitt

I am reaching in my pocket for some extra change.
That fact that it was copper was very strange.

And I think to myself,
where has this been?
What has it seen?
Ages passing by with varying trends.

It rolled from the mint shiny and new ready to be spent on books and shoes.

But no ordinary life
did this coin retain.
It traveled in the pocket of famous and benign.

It stayed in America
nigh till '52
until with a traveling man to Japan it flew.

From embassy to embassy
this little coin did travel, visiting India and Asia passing farmers herding cattle.
Until one fine day
it made its way back to the good ol'
U.S. of A.

It visited many places in the United States, traveling shop to shop,
never long in one place.

Then something happened around 1930.
Suddenly its value plummeted.
America's economy was hurting.

After that, it rarely saw the penny candy store.
Its one true home.
Slowly faded, 'til it was no more.

But things got better after that.
With plastic, malls
and the new technology.
People would spend to a fault.

As the years passed by,
it began to see
wearing away
was its shiny covering.

It flipped and flopped through the baby boom hippies, weed and dangerous typhoons.

Until it fell into my hands, something I earned
at the newspaper stand.

I looked to the cashier and told him that.
"I think I'll skip candy today.
Could I have my penny back?"

I left that store without my candy bar, but with the knowledge
history is immensely large.

Taken Over

Mark Smith

The world weighs down on you.
And there is nothing you can do.
Shall you ever find peace?
Oh shattered heart.
Oh scattered soul.
You feel your story must be told.
So you do what comes natural.
The lyrics, how they bounce in your head.
And the steps, how they pick you up.
Soaring high, your battered shell you shed.
You embrace your right to fly.
Your only way to cut all ties.
You feel taken over.
You have no idea how much you inspire.
Every time you fly even higher.
Showing how dreams can always be alive.
No matter how far the road,
You can always arrive
Where you want to go.
How, if you try, you can leave those weights,
No longer in tow.
You may not be super,
But you can fly,
And you are a hero in my eyes.

All the War

All the shooting and killing, how can it be fulfilling?
All the people dying, and every child crying.
All the money wasted on the hatred tasted.
All the friendships harmed, causing chaos and alarm.
All the sad eyes seen,
making poverty gleam.
All the training has been for, the life ruining thing called war.

TRACK AND FIELD

Esch earns top Chelsea honor

Bulldogs celebrate state record-setting season on oval

By Don Richter
Sports Editor

The Chelsea boys' track and field team held its end-of-season banquet last week.

Named the Bulldogs' MVP was senior sprinter Justin Esch. This past year, he set two school records in the 200 meters (22.20) and 400-meter run (49.85).

"The way he has improved through hard work is an inspiration to younger runners," said Chelsea coach Eric Swager. "He is a quality individual who will be sorely missed."

Receiving the Most Improved Award was junior Ian Girard.

Earning the Coach's Award was senior Dan Lewis. He placed fifth in the state in the 1,600-meter run this year.

"Dan was a great leader by example for the distance squad," Swager said. "I have coached him for four years, and he is outstanding in many ways. I will miss his performance and influence."

Receiving the Southeastern Conference Sportsmanship Award was Charlie Riedel.

Earning senior Scholar-Athlete Awards for having a 3.25 grade point average or better were P.J. Sawicki, Steve McDonald, Max Wineland and Lewis.

Receiving varsity letters this year were Brad Hinderer, Alex Rabbitt, Paul Ernst, Austin Rodgers, Alex Stewart, Drew Wint, Doug Devol, Chet Hopp and Ben Johnson.

Also earning their varsity letters were Antwan McClendon, Danny Ngo, Jason Ratliff, Brendan Smith, Jeff Squires, Evan Carpenter, Justin McGrath, Zach Gregory, Nathan Vlcek, Esch, Lewis, Sawicki, Wineland and Girard.

Presented JV certificates were Steven Bauer, Brad Ratliff, Sean O'Connell, Mike Hankerd, Ryan Lenehan, Josh Golec, Kiefer Forsch, Sam Dyer, Dave Case, Dan Case, Seth Breezee, Tyler Ball, Drew Hamilton, Mike Hamilton, Adam Booth, Nick Downey and Riedel.

Named Academic All-State were Stewart, Smith and Girard.

Swager said it was a successful season for Chelsea track and field.

"More than anything, I appreciated the positive attitude from this very responsible group," Swager said. "Many athletes on this team are excited about the sport, and it shows in their performance.

"The capstone of the season had to be the state record setting performance of the 3,200-meter relay (7:55.4). I really emphasized the strength and hard mileage facet of training with the distance guys this year, and it paid off for most of our runners.

"I must thank my assistant coaches and all the parents who volunteer their time and effort. They make Chelsea track the outstanding program that it is."

The Bulldogs finished 2-1 overall in dual meets this season. Chelsea was second in the SEC White Division, fifth at the regional meet and 14th at the Division II state final.

Chelsea girls' soccer concluded its season, losing 3-0 to No. 2-ranked Mason in a Division II district game earlier this month.

The Bulldogs (9-6-4, 6-3-1) scored 38 goals this year, while allowing 20. Defensively, Chelsea had seven shutouts this season.

Selected as team MVP this year was senior defender Jen DeWall.

"Jen loved soccer and this program," said Chelsea coach Chris Orlandi. "That's why the girls chose her as MVP. Jen has such an impact on this program, I truly believe that when she went down with her injury, the team lost something it truly never got back.

"Jen was excellent on the ball, a great dribbler and passer, and she understood the game very well. She'll be tough to replace."

DeWall injured her leg late in the season and was out for the rest of the year.

Receiving the squad's Most Improved Award was junior Jessica Lodewyk.

"We figured Jessica would give us some quality minutes each game to spell some of the projected starters," Orlandi said. "Injuries mounted as time went by, and when the dust cleared, we saw Jessica starting against the likes of Dexter and Mason. We came to count on her aggressive play and tremendous work ethic.

"I think it will be very difficult for an upcoming player to wrench a starting position from her next year. She'll be a force on our defensive line next season."

Named the Bulldogs' Offensive Player of the Year was Kellyn Pagliarini. The junior scored a team-high 13 goals and had one assist.

"Pags is a good player in every phase but one — scoring," Orlandi said. "And when it comes to scoring, she's fantastic. Kellyn had more goals in SEC (Southeastern Conference) games (11), than our other forwards combined. She's a relentless worker and great pest. She just works hard and causes things to happen.

"The amazing thing is that she scored all these goals in significantly less playing time than the other forwards."

Selected Chelsea's Defensive Player of the Year was senior Danielle Stahl.

"Danielle was the absolute anchor of this team," Orlandi

Second baseman Dunn named Chelsea's Most Improved

By Don Richter

Chelsea baseball ended its season last week after losing in district play to Dexter.

Despite the early exit from the state playoffs, the Bulldogs (26-9) had a fine season in 2005, winning the Southeastern Conference White Division championship.

Earning the team's Most Improved Award was Bryan Dunn. The senior second baseman batted .297 this year.

"He was able to get off to an awesome start," said Chelsea coach Wayne Welton. "He had 10 hits in one week. He's come a long way from a year ago."

Receiving the Coaches Award was Aaron Parisho. The senior pitcher finished with 40 strikeouts in 42 innings of work. The award is given for leadership, commitment and loyalty to the Chelsea program during a player's career.

"He's been a wonderful example of a student-athlete," Welton said. "He's a quality person. He pitched against other teams' best pitchers. He deserves this award."

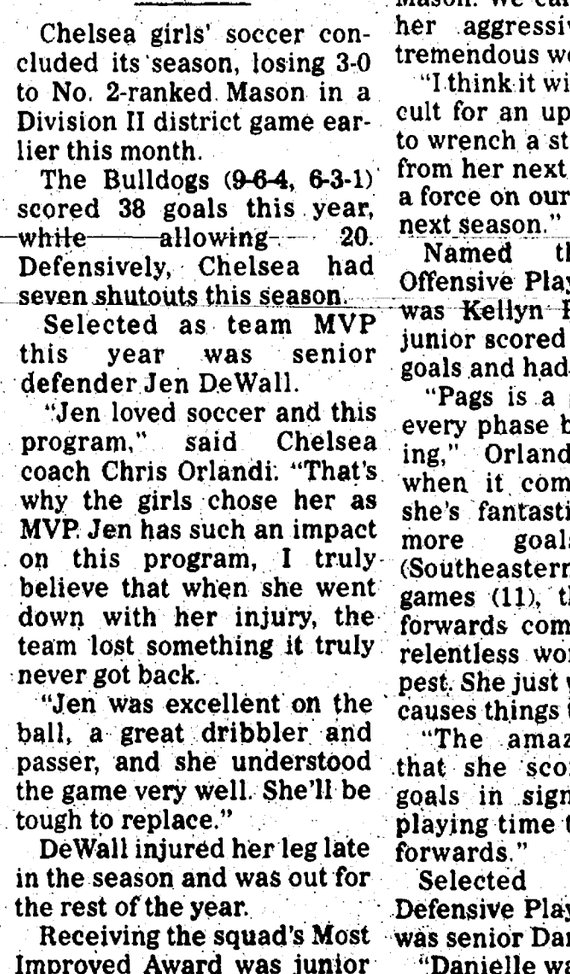

Presented the Teammate of the Year Award was senior outfielder A.J. Bach.

Korc named Gatorade Player of the Year for Bulldogs

By Don Richter
Sports Editor

The Chelsea girls' track and field team conducted its end-of-season banquet June 7.

Earning the Bulldogs' MVP award was Emily Woodruff. The junior sprinter was All-Southeastern Conference and a state qualifier in the 400-meter run this year. She also was a key member of the 800- and 1,600-meter relays.

"Emily was a leader in the sprint group and one of the overall team leaders," said Chelsea coach Bill Bainton.

Receiving the Coaches Award was Nicole Bougher.

"Nicole was a leader in the distance running group and ran two to three races every meet," Bainton said. "She worked hard to condition in the off-season, and improved by 30 seconds over last season in the both the 1,600 and 3,200."

Presented the Most Improved Award were freshman Lindsay Keyes and sophomore Kelly Anderson.

"Keyes had never competed in track before and had never pole vaulted," Bainton said. "She steadily increased from no-heighting in the first meet of the season to qualifying for the state meet. She then moved to No. 3 on Chelsea's all-time list, with a freshman record of 9 feet, 6 inches in the state meet.

"Emily was a leader in the sprint group and one of the overall team leaders."

Bill Bainton
Chelsea coach

"Anderson added 25 feet to her discus and almost 3 feet to her shot put over last year's performances. She worked hard on conditioning in the off-season and finished the season as the team's second leading scorer."

Rachel Severin received the Gatorade Rookie of the Year Award. A junior, she was SEC champion and a state placer in the 1,600- and 3,200-meter runs. She also earned Academic All-State accolades. She was Chelsea's leading scorer.

Laura Oberholtzer was presented the Gatorade Will-to-Win Award.

"She has a great competitive spirit and tremendous desire," Bainton said.

Megan Korc was named the team's Gatorade Player of the Year. A senior, she was All-State and All-SEC in the pole vault. She finished second in the state in the event at the Division II meet. She also was Academic All-State and was the squad's third leading scorer. She was a four-year letter winner for Chelsea.

Nikki Oberholtzer received the SEC Sportsmanship Award for the Bulldogs.

Presented a third-year trophy was senior Chelsey Verardi.

Earning second-year awards for Chelsea were Kelly Catalina, Ann Cerveny, Elise Dunn, Hillary Phillips, Laura Oberholtzer, Marissa Guysky, Anderson, Bougher and Woodruff.

Receiving first-year awards were Ashley Clouse, Jillian Fischer, Andria Fitch, Katy Martin, Sarah Myers, Nikki Oberholtzer, Ballie Simpson and Keyes.

Also earning the award were Margy Brill, Leah House, Kimmi Zimmerman, Rachel Stone and Severin.

Presented with JV certificates were Corey Block, Nikki Hastings, Megan Nichols, Robin Olinyk, Anna Rowland and Kathryn Brieland-Shoultz.

Bainton received a plaque honoring his service from Chelsea Athletic Director Wayne Welton. A Bulldog track coach for 35 years and a head coach for the past 28 seasons, Bainton is retiring. Numerous former athletes from Chelsea teams from the 1980s to the present reconnected with him at the banquet.

"He did the unselfish little things to support the team," Welton said. "He's a selfless person. He's been a pleasure to coach these last two years."

Selected All-Southeastern Conference this season for the Bulldogs were Cam Hawkins, Dan Augustine, Chad Nielsen and Joe Welton.

A junior catcher, Hawkins batted .356 this year.

"He caught 32 of our 35 games," Welton said. "He's very durable. He's a great receiver who blocks the ball well."

Augustine, a sophomore leftfielder, hit a team-high .458 this season. He walked 13 times and struck out only four times. As a pitcher, he finished 4-1 overall with one save.

"He simply had an outstanding year," Welton said. "He also played solid defense for us in the outfield."

A sophomore, Nielsen ended up 10-1 overall on the mound for Chelsea. He had a 1.88 ERA and two saves on the season. In 59 and two-thirds innings, he walked 24 and struck out 57. At the plate, he batted .297.

"He was the only guy this season to beat (No. 1-ranked Ann Arbor) Pioneer," Welton said. "He beat some outstanding teams. He has great control. He throws three pitches and throws them all for strikes. He's an outstanding student of the game."

A junior, Welton was selected to the All-SEC team as a designated hitter-utility player. This year, he batted .337, with one home run and 23 RBIs. On the hill, he finished 2-0 overall with a 1.97 ERA.

"He hit in the three hole in the line-up all season for us," Welton said. "His best baseball is yet to come."

Named All-SEC honorable mention for the Bulldogs were Steve Crews, Rob Moffett, Dan Rhodes and Parisho.

A senior third baseman, Crews batted .406, with team-highs of 39 hits and 13 doubles.

Moffett, a junior infielder, hit .316 this year.

Rhodes, a sophomore pitcher-utility player, batted .265. From the mound, he was 6-0 overall, with two saves and an ERA of 2.90.

Parisho batted .258 this season.

Selected All-District for Chelsea were Adam Connell, Hawkins, Welton, Augustine and Nielsen.

Connell, a sophomore shortstop, hit .386 and had nine stolen bases this year.

Nielsen was the lone Bulldog named to the All-Regional squad.

All-State teams have yet to be selected.

Despite dropping out early in the state playoffs, Welton said it was an outstanding season, especially for his upperclassmen.

"Our seven seniors are all wonderful people," he said. "They will be missed. I'm very proud of this senior class."

Smith wins national honor

Tanker receives title as country's best prep in the pool

By Don Richter
Sports Editor

The awards and honors keep rolling in for Dexter's Hannah Smith.

Last week, Smith was named the National High School Coaches Association Swimmer of the Year.

The prestigious award took Smith, who will swim for the University of Michigan next season, by surprise.

"I didn't even know I was nominated," she said. "(Dexter coach) Mr. (Cory) Bergen called me and told me last week. I then went in (to the pool) and he showed me the letter."

Bergen said Smith deserves the award because she represents the finest qualities of a student-athlete.

"When you talk about scholarship, athletic achievement, work ethic, leadership, moral character and being a role model, Hannah is the top echelon for everyone of them," he said. "There may be others in the nation who are as deserving, but it's hard for me to imagine someone more deserving."

Though surprised, Smith, the state's reigning Division II Swimmer of the Year, said it's an honor to receive the award.

"It's special because it means I'm recognized nationally," she said.

Bergen said earning the award elevates Smith to a different level.

"Hannah's our third athlete in the last four years to be named D-II state Swimmer of the Year (Amalia Sarnecki and Lindsay Smith are the others), so I'm used to our athletes getting that kind of state recognition," he said. "Hannah, along with others, have achieved All-American status through their swimming times, but that is an objective measure you can target and work toward.

"This is not an award that you try to win, but simply a tremendous feather in her cap that adds a spectacular epilogue to her legacy at Dexter High School. This is obviously further recognition on a national scale for Dexter swimming, but in my mind, this is a Hannah Smith award. She did all the work and deserves all the credit."

Bergen said it was still up in the air when and where Smith would actually receive her award.

"But the really cool thing is that Hannah will have a section with a bio and photos on display at the NHSCA Hall of Fame in Easton, Pa.," he said.

Smith, who set state records in winning the 50 freestyle and the 100 backstroke at last year's Division II state meet, leading Dexter to a runner-up finish, is next aiming her sights on making her mark nationally.

"Right now, I'm training with the Ann Arbor Swim Club," she said. "Then I'm going to the Senior Nationals in (Irvine) California at the beginning of August."

Smith said she would compete in the 100 backstroke and the 200 backstroke at the high-profile event. Her sister, Lindsay, an All-American junior on the U of M women's swimming team, also is participating in the meet.

Smith said the nation's best swimmers, including former Olympians, would be entered in the meet.

"It's a long course meet, and I'm not as good in that, as I am in short course," she said. "It'll be my first Senior National meet. I'm looking forward to it."

Bergen said he couldn't be prouder of his star swimmer.

"I'm mostly just really happy for Hannah because I've seen up close all the hard work she's put in the pool and the classroom," he said. "The dedication to those pursuits is unmatched in my experience. She has set a new standard for everyone to follow."

Toon, Darwin earn Chelsea MVP recognition

By Don Richter
Sports Editor

Christyna Toon and Brynna Darwin were named Chelsea softball MVPs last week.

A senior shortstop, Toon batted .254 this past season with 23 RBIs. Defensively, she finished with 37 assists.

"She was a vocal leader on our team," said Chelsea coach Kim Reichard.

A senior first baseman, Darwin, who will play at Albion College next season, hit .434 with 25 RBIs.

"She was our top hitter on the team this year," Reichard said of her No. 3 batter.

Receiving the Most Improved Award was freshman catcher Brogan Darwin.

"I've never had a freshman catcher," Reichard said. "She had big shoes to fill (replacing last year's Miss Softball winner Katrina Moffett). She did an excellent job learning the game and calling pitches."

Earning Academic All-State was Annie Guertin. The senior outfielder had a grade point average above 3.5 and batted .250.

Presented the team's Sportsmanship Award was junior outfielder Megan Nadolny.

"She was another real good leader for us," Reichard said.

Selected first-team All-Southeastern Conference White Division were senior centerfielder Mary Kate Setta, junior pitcher Kelly Jo Milliken, Brynna Darwin and Toon.

Setta, who will play at Madonna University next year, batted .326 with 23 RBIs this past season. A terrific defensive outfielder, she committed only two errors all year.

"Plus, she has a very strong arm," Reichard said.

Milliken, Chelsea's cleanup batter, hit .400 with 24 RBIs and two home runs. As a pitcher, she finished 12-10 overall, with four shutouts, 111 strikeouts, 31 walks and 39 earned runs.

Earning All-SEC honorable mention were junior Hannah Myers and freshman Annie Hollandsworth. A third baseman, Myers hit .333 and had a team-high 78 assists on the season. A second baseman, Hollandsworth hit .400 with 14 RBIs and two home runs.

Selected to the All-District team were Darwin and Setta. The twosome was also named to the All-Region squad.

The Bulldogs finished second in the SEC White Division. Chelsea lost 2-1 to Tecumseh in the Division II district championship game.

The Bulldogs ended the season with a 19-17 overall record.

said. "A two-time captain, she's the reason why we were so successful switching defensive schemes this year. Her devotion to the program and her teammates was evident on the field.

"Even when it seemed like her teammates were down and out, Danielle never quit. She would fight just as hard when it seemed like we were out of the game, as when the result still hung in the balance.

"I think she'll be the toughest player we'll have to replace next year."

Earning All-SEC first team honors for the Bulldogs were junior Jaime Franks, sophomore Maggie Manville, DeWall and Stahl.

Franks, a three-time All-SEC pick, finished the year with nine goals and three assists.

Manville, a keeper, ended the season with a save percentage of 82. She had a goals against average of 0.94.

Named All-SEC honorable mention for Chelsea were Kaitlin Ehman, Sarah Reinhardt and Pagliarini.

A sophomore midfielder, Ehman scored one goal and had six assists this season.

Reinhardt, a sophomore forward, finished with eight goals and six assists.

Others scoring goals for the Bulldogs this year included senior Brenda Satterthwaite with three, sophomore Amanda McKenzie with two, and senior Stacia Morrison and junior Angela Koich each with one.

Senior Bekah Sauers finished with five assists, while Morrison had four, junior Ariel Schepers three, McKenzie two, and Manville and Koich one each.

Orlandi said the season, as a whole, was successful.

"We generally beat the teams we were supposed to and surprised programs like (Ann Arbor) Pioneer, (Ann Arbor) Greenhills and South Lyon with ties," he said. "We were frustrated that we weren't able to upset any of the big guns like Saline, Dexter or Mason. Five of our six losses came to those teams, who are certainly some of the elite programs in the state."

Orlandi said the Bulldogs improved as the year went on and believed in themselves.

"More than wins and losses, these girls appreciated each other, and that always makes coaching pleasant," he said. "We had none of the drama that we've had in the past. These girls loved each other and they loved the game. That, and my assistant coach Dave Pieske, make my job pretty easy."

Orlandi said he's looking forward to next season.

"We'll return 11 girls to the varsity next season, and our sophomore class is absolutely loaded with talent," he said. "From a talent standpoint, we'll be better next year than ever, but they'll have to show the same commitment, togetherness and passion that previous teams have, if we're going to hang with Dexter, Saline and Pioneer.

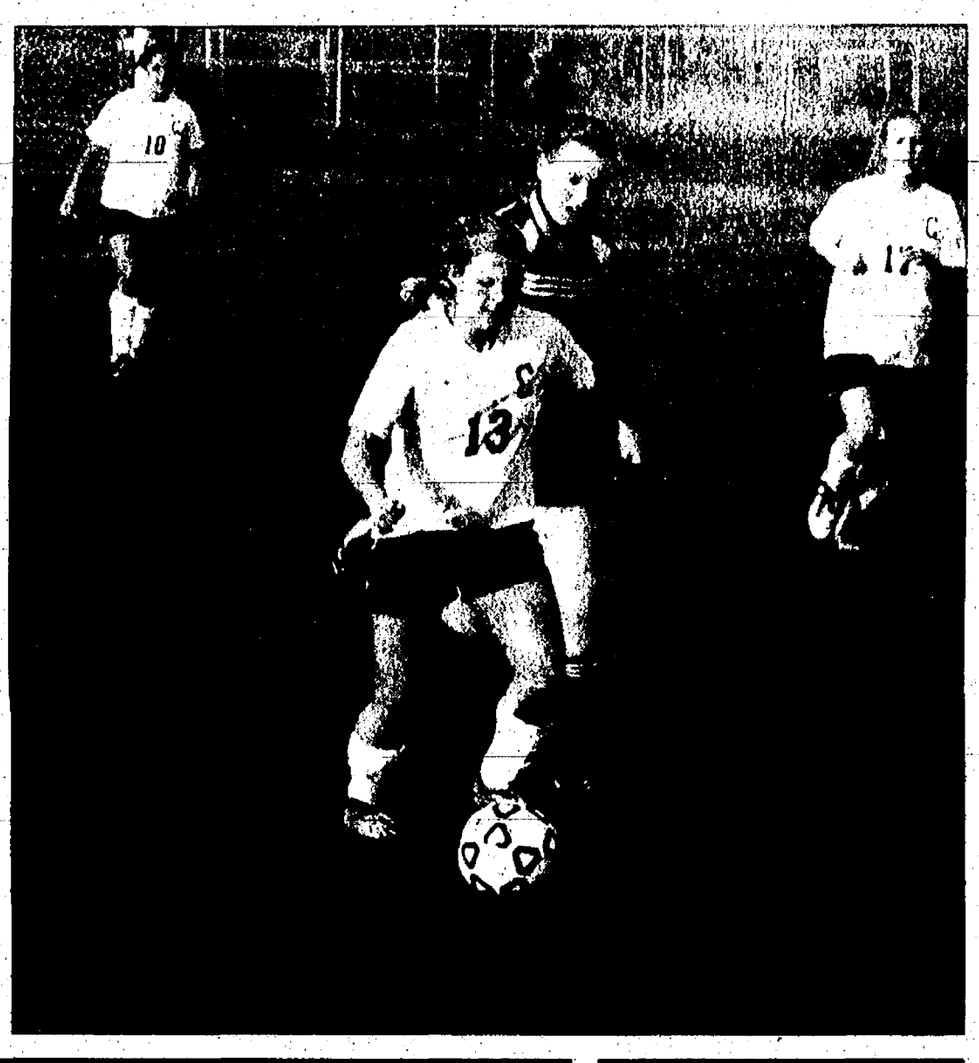

"The soccer bar in this area is so high, it will be a tough road for sure. Nevertheless, the sky is the limit for this program next year. It could be a very special team."

Marge and Dave Cornish, owners of Baxter's in Scio Township, stand before their last inventory of wine before they close the doors Saturday. They plan to retire and rent the space to retailers.

SCIO TOWNSHIP

Baxter's last day approaches

Dave and Marge Cornish to still manage retail space

By Gary Anglebrandt
Staff Writer

A local institution is closing its doors Saturday, marking the end of a business relationship with origins dating back to 1968.

Lodi Township residents Dave and Marge Cornish, owners of the store, plan to retire but will continue to manage the small retail center they own at the corner of Zeeb Road and Interstate 94.

The couple originally began their business as an Amoco gas station in what is now the parking lot of Baxter's. They later converted it to a shop featuring wine, freshly baked goods and a café.

The store's name came from their son's Doberman pinscher.

The couple plans to divide Baxter's into three retail spaces and rent them out.

Baxter's was doing fine, but they wanted to retire, Dave Cornish said.

The idea of selling the business so Baxter's could continue was out because Costco has plans to build a store next to the Baxter's retail center, Cornish said.

"To have a wine store in front of a Costco doesn't work," he said.

Costco is buying Baxter's liquor license, he said.

The closure has left at least two local workers without a place to eat doughnuts on their way to work. John Psychas of Ann Arbor and Keith Patterson of Canton work in Scio Township and frequent Baxter's café because the store has the best doughnuts in the area, they said.

"I'm going to miss them, that's for sure," Psychas said.

Everyone talks about Baxter's, Patterson said.

"I've been pretty much coming here for 10 years," he said.

The next best thing is Dimo's, a deli on West Stadium Boulevard in Ann Arbor. Panera, the bakery and deli on Jackson Road in Scio Township, is "too frou-frou," Psychas said.

ChelseaCare to pilot project

ChelseaCare Home Health has volunteered to partner with Michigan's Medicare Quality Improvement Organization in a pilot project to reduce the number of avoidable hospitalizations for home-health patients.

The hospitalization rate for home-health patients has been steadily rising in the past three years. Statistics indicate that since 2003, the national rate for patients requiring a hospital stay following a home-health admission was 28 percent, according to a press release from Chelsea Community Hospital.

As part of the pilot group of 100 agencies nationwide and 15 in the state of Michigan working with the National Quality Improvement Organization Support Center, ChelseaCare Home Health will work toward developing new approaches to reduce the number.

Strategies will be tested among pilot agencies with results and final products to be shared with more than 5,000 home-health agencies nationwide.

"Our agency is dedicated to improving the care that all our patients receive in their home. Keeping patients out of the hospital is our top priority and we are dedicated to this goal," Lisa Senawi, director of ChelseaCare Home Health at Chelsea Community Hospital, said in the statement.

"We are pleased to join home-health agencies across the nation to work on this pilot program developed by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, MPRO and 10 other QIOs. We believe that MPRO's pilot project will set the standard for achieving meaningful reductions in acute care hospitalizations nationwide."

The project is part of the preparation for the next phase for the Quality Improvement Organization under contract by CMS, an agency of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. One of the key measures for home-health agencies will be improving systems related to home-health care to reduce the number of avoidable hospitalizations.

ChelseaCare Home Health is a department of Chelsea Community Hospital. It offers certified home health services, private duty, physical, occupational and speech therapies, as well as medical social services and home-health aide services.

ChelseaCare Home Health serves Washtenaw, Jackson, Livingston, Lenawee, Ingham, Wayne, and Oakland counties.

Silver Maples receives grant

Silver Maples, a retirement community in Chelsea, recently received a grant from the Community Foundation of Southeastern Michigan.

The $7,500 grant will support an energy conservation and use reduction project.

Jerry Wilczynski, executive director of Silver Maples, said the money will allow Silver Maples to hire a professional consultant to gather technical data and make energy efficiency recommendations for the facility.

Jay Butler, operations director for Silver Maples, will provide oversight to the project, focusing on energy consumption to assess potential for gas, water and electric savings, Wilczynski said in a press release.

In addition, building shell components will be studied. The plan is to identify improvements in building lighting systems, heating, ventilation and air conditioning components, kitchen practices, water system improvements and estimates on pollution reduction possibilities.

Without the Community Foundations' support, this project work would not be possible, Butler said.

The Community Foundation of Southeastern Michigan, founded in 1984, is a permanent community endowment built by gifts from hundreds of individuals. The foundation supports a wide variety of activities benefiting education, arts and culture, health, human services, community development and civic affairs.

Beach Fun

Employees and volunteers at Chelsea Community Hospital recently hosted a day in honor of employees and customers at the hospital. Gift shop manager Russ Billau stands with volunteer Rosella Bradbury June 2 while displaying a beach theme. Fruit, cheese and crackers were served, along with the tunes of Jimmy Buffet. Some of the profits from the beach-theme sale at the gift shop will benefit a heated concrete ramp for the hospital.

Pool to reopen

A grand re-opening of the Charles S. Cameron Pool at Beach Middle School in Chelsea will be held from 1:30 to 3 p.m. Monday. A ribbon-cutting ceremony will be held and will include games and prizes.

Residents of the Chelsea School District are invited to attend.

Open swim and lap swim will be available for no charge that day. Registration for swimming lessons, Chelsea Aquatic Club, pool rentals and discounted swimming passes will be available on deck.

Lap swim times are from 6 to 7 a.m. and 5:30 to 7 p.m. Open swim is from 1:30 to 3 p.m. and 7 to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The pool was renovated as part of a bond issue passed by Chelsea School District voters last spring. The pool was constructed in 1975 and now has a fresh look. This is the first time any major upgrades to the facility have been made, Chelsea Community Education Director Jeff Rohrer said in a press release.

One of the largest changes is the spectator entrance to the pool. Spectators who are watching aquatic events will no longer have to walk across the pool deck to be seated, he said. They may enter the pool area and go directly to the bleaches and access the bathrooms.

Renovations include a new entrance, concession stand, bathrooms and locker rooms with showers, bathrooms and lockers.

In addition, a non-slip floor surface was added, and repairs were made to the deck surface. A new public address system was installed, enhanced lighting, new storage facilities and scoring area, bleachers and a fresh coat of paint were added.

Also, a new filtration system and doors were added. The scoreboard was moved, upgrades were made to the ventilation system, and the diving boards and stands were recondition. A new roof was built and a new control system for lighting, chemicals and heating were also added.

New Mexico artist to teach class

The Pottery Mill hosting Juanita DuBray

By Steve Ricci
Staff Writer

The trademark artistic motif for Juanita DuBray, who was named a master potter by the School of American Research in 1994, came to her in a dream shortly after her 25-year-old daughter's tragic death in a 1984 motorcycle accident.

Sort of.

Actually, DuBray dreamed that she needed to make a design to memorialize her daughter, but she didn't know what the design was.

Then one day, as she sat at a table making pottery, an image of corn creeped into her consciousness.

"I realized the corn motif was given to me as a gift, and what I was making became a healing pot," DuBray said from her home in the Native American reservation of Taos Pueblo, N.M.

As it turned out, of all of DuBray's work, which has been featured in numerous museums across the country, including the Smithsonian Institution, her corn-motif pottery is by far her best seller.

"It's just something that makes me happy," she said. "I can't be doing the corn motif in all my work, but the corn always wants to come."

DuBray, a 75-year-old Taos Pueblo Tewa Native American, will teach "Coil Building with Micaceous Clay," a weeklong pottery workshop starting June 20 at The Pottery Mill, 1250 S. Main St., in Chelsea.

Chelsea potter Michela Kolleth recently opened the store. In the past, she sold her work while doing business as Red Mesa Pottery.

The business combines a retail pottery section with a workshop for students to learn the craft.

By happenstance, Kolleth and her husband, Chris, met DuBray last summer during an impromptu road trip to New Mexico.

While visiting Taos, Kolleth wanted to watch someone making pottery using the ancient coiling method of molding clay, as opposed to the more contemporary practice using a spinning wheel.

Someone gave Kolleth DuBray's telephone number.

"I called her, and she said she didn't have a studio," Kolleth said.

Instead, DuBray invited the Kolleths to her house on the Pueblo site, where she creates her art. Her property includes a fire pit she uses to solidify the pottery.

"We got along well and I asked her if she could come here. She said yes, and here we are."

DuBray, who worked for seven years as a pharmaceutical technician before transitioning into a full-time artist, also has a son, Ralph Suaco, an internationally renowned sculptor.

She said making pottery and other clay creations was her dream job and she didn't like punching a time clock.

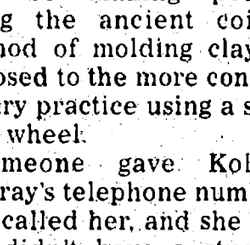

Eventually, she quit her pharmaceutical job and started making pottery. Her passion was nearly derailed — then enhanced — by her daughter's passing.

DuBray had a difficult time making pottery and clay figurines, which is a spiritual process for her, immediately following her daughter's death.

"I was so hurt, but something told me I have to go on

BABY TALK

Recognize fathers for what they do

JENNIFER SINKWITTS

Did you know that the male's DNA is responsible for making the placenta? When we visualize conception we see a mother nourishing her embryo. We see her belly grow and a child form. We tend to forget the man's role.

It's 7:56 p.m. and dinner has been ready for an hour. The rice is on the stove keeping warm and the pork tenderloin still marinates in the refrigerator. Still waiting and very hungry, I snack on the raisins and croutons that dress my salad.

This is the life of most fathers today. Working hard. Staying late. Racing home to kiss their children goodnight as they drift to sleep. Like conception, their many contributions go unnoticed.

In today's work-driven society, careers can deprive both parents, but especially the father, of quality family time. They miss soccer games. Rarely do they see their children run from the school bus, with arms wide open, waiting to hug them hello.

They are so engrossed with paying bills, saving for retirement, sending kids to college, funding family vacations, taking the family out for dinner and buying mom the pair of shoes she so desires.

The phrase, "putting food on the table" doesn't quite capture the expectations we put on our husbands. Often, we are upset with them for golfing late and missing dinner or forgetting to mail their mother's birthday cards that we begin to see only in black and white.

Do we ever wonder what his day is like? Why he returns home late? Deadlines. Meetings. Performance reviews. Salary adjustments. Layoffs. It is easy to imagine the workplace as prime-time television depicts.

Did you know the character attorneys on the popular drama "The Practice" earned a salary or more than $250,000 per year? Well, we don't live in Hollywood and cases aren't resolved in 60 minutes.

Sometimes balancing work-home obligations and mowing the lawn is enough. So, let's rid ourselves of high expectations and realize that our husbands usually have the short end of the stick.

When I was pregnant, everyone doted on me. I loved the attention and deserved it since I was the one gaining 30 pounds. But not once during my pregnancy did anyone say, "How is your husband doing? Is he adjusting well?" The funny thing is, I don't even think he noticed. He, too, was focused on me. He let me take center stage.

My husband saw our son, Nolan, enter the world. He saw me struggle during childbirth. He held my hand. He kissed my cheek. He said, "I love you to the moon and back." The events that swirled around our delivery room were unknown to me.

Just recently, I asked my husband what it was like seeing him born. I have no image to reflect on or remember.

He was speechless. Words could not describe the miracle he witnessed. The moment, captured in his mind, will remain his exclusive and cherished memory forever.

So, let the occasion of Father's Day bring praise and recognition and let him play that round of golf. Remember the game is his spa treatment. And we wouldn't want to miss ours.

As a new mom in Chelsea, Jennifer Sinkwitts wants to connect with other moms who may be experiencing the same joys, transitions and struggles of raising a family in the decade of the Super Mom. As part of this new column, she welcomes input. E-mail her at jsinkwitts@aol.com with this clay work," DuBray said. "When I did, I would cry and wipe the tears off my face and work on the clay."

DuBray's persistence eventually helped her to live better with her loss.

"In the background something was coming to me, and I wanted so much to talk to my daughter and see what she did. In my heart, I knew (making pottery) is what I was meant to do."

Circumstances would later validate her feeling. A large piece of her pottery incorporating cutout corn images wound up on display at the Smithsonian in 1981.

Until that time, DuBray said she had difficulty selling her creations to galleries. Afterward, however, people started seeking out her work.

Following her mother's tradition, DuBray makes all her pottery out of micaceous clay, a substance sprinkled with rocks and particles, which she gathers from mountains near her home.

"The reason I have so much appreciation for this clay is because it could be part of our burial grounds or where my ancestors lived before," she said.

"When I'm working on my clay, I always leave an offering of blue cornmeal for Mother Earth. As a Native American, these are respects we've been brought up from childhood to use."

With the coiling method of pottery making, DuBray affixes rope strands of clay atop a flat bottom piece, stacking them higher and higher until the vessel is finished.

Always deferential to her heritage, DuBray said she's not entirely comfortable with being called a master potter.

"I feel the ones that should be called master potters are people like my mom," she said.

Dubray is looking forward to teaching the class in Chelsea.

"I hope I can meet a lot of people because that's what makes the art world go better and that's the only way I know to make money to survive."

The workshop, running from June 20 to 25, will cost $225, including clay, pit firing and a 6 p.m. reception Saturday at Chelsea Retirement Community, 805 W. Middle St.

Class space is limited. To register for the class or for more information, contact Kolleth at 433-9187 or log on to www.potterymill.com.

Study finds distorted view of breast cancer

While breast cancer is a significant health threat, striking 211,000 American women each year, a new study finds most women have a distorted view of their risk.

When asked to estimate the lifetime risk of breast cancer, 89 percent of women overestimated their risk, with an average estimate of 46 percent, more than three times the actual risk of 13 percent, according to a study by University of Michigan Health System researchers.

"Breast cancer is so commonly in the news, and most of us can think of friends or relatives who have been diagnosed with it. That leads us to overestimate how common it really is. We forget that we know a lot of people with breast cancer because we know a lot of people," senior study author Dr. Peter Ubel, professor of internal medicine at the University of Michigan Medical School and director of the Center for Behavioral and Decision Sciences in Medicine, said in a press release.

Results of the study appear in the June issue of the journal Patient Education and Counseling.

In the study, researchers surveyed 356 women. Half the women were asked to estimate the average woman's lifetime risk of developing breast cancer, and half were not asked for an estimate. Both groups then received information on breast cancer risk.

The group that did not estimate risk beforehand was asked whether the 13 percent risk was higher or lower than they had expected. Only 37 percent said the actual risk was lower than they had expected compared to 89 percent of women in the other group who initially thought the risk was much higher.

The researchers then asked women from both groups how anxious or relieved the information made them and whether they thought a 13 percent risk was high or low.

The women who did not give an estimate first were more likely to feel anxious about the breast cancer risk information, 25 percent versus 12 percent of women who gave an estimate first. At the same time, twice as many women who gave an estimate beforehand said they were relieved by the actual risk, 40 percent versus 19 percent.

"After estimating that 46 percent of women will be diagnosed with breast cancer, when they find out it's actually 13 percent, that seems relatively low and women feel a sense of relief," said lead study author Dr. Angela Fagerlin, research investigator in internal medicine at the U of M Medical School and with the Veterans Affairs Ann Arbor Healthcare System.

The researchers suggest doctors can use these findings to help patients who seem particularly concerned about their risk of breast cancer.

"Doctors need to be in touch with their patients' needs. If a woman is unduly anxious about her risk of breast cancer, and that anxiety is ruining her life, it might help to ask her what she thinks her chance of breast cancer really is. She is likely to overestimate that risk, and now the doctor will have a chance to tell her the true risk and, potentially, put her mind at ease," Ubel said.

At the same time, the researchers stress, overestimating the risk does not diminish the importance of prevention strategies, such as yearly mammograms and monthly breast self exams.

Fund-raiser to benefit playground

In response to the concern expressed by parents about the condition of the playground at North Creek Elementary in Chelsea, the Western Washtenaw Democrats plan to do their part by using their first fundraiser to help the children at North Creek enjoy new playground equipment.

A fund-raiser will be held 6:30 p.m. June 25 at the Chelsea Train Depot and will feature an authentic Texas-style pit barbecue.

Kent Martinez-Kratz, a parent of children in the Chelsea School District and a member of the Western Washtenaw Democrats, expects a large turnout.

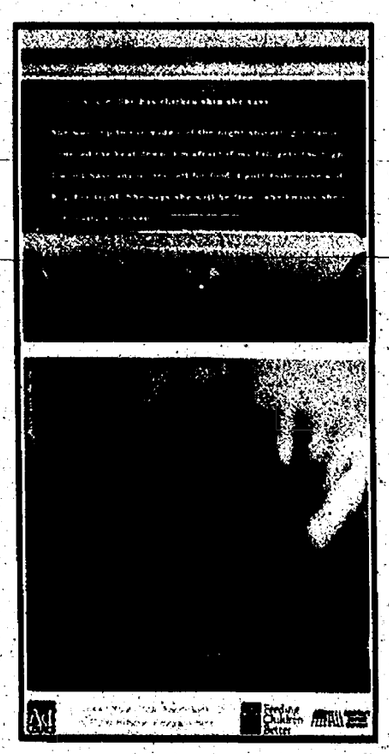

"We felt that, since this is our first WWDems fundraiser, it should be something for the community, like helping our kids have a safe and fun playground," he said in a press release. "To do that, the WWDems decided to give all proceeds to the North Creek Elementary PTO for playground improvements."

Dinner will be provided by West Texas Barbeque Co., which specializes in authentic Texas-style pit barbecue.

A local favorite, Bigfoot Bob and the Toe Tappers, will provide the entertainment.

A silent auction will feature such items as a week's stay at a beautiful home on Oahu.

The suggested donation is $30 per person, which includes dinner, beverages and music. To purchase tickets in advance or for more information, call 433-1583.

Organize those papers

This week we're tackling the paper flow that comes into the house. It's like a paper monsoon. And because there's so much, I can't emphasize enough that taking care of it must be a daily job.

I suggest going through the mail as soon as it's brought into the house. Stand by the garbage and toss anything you don't need. Make sure to shred credit card offers. You don't want anyone getting a hold of those. File bills in a bill box to be paid. A bill box should contain bills, stamps, envelopes, return address labels, pencil, pen, checkbook and calculator.

The other source of paper is school papers. Don't run away screaming because this is definitely something that can be managed. You need two items: a plastic organizer with three to six drawers that hold 8-by-10 sheets of paper. The other is a basket or box to hold 8-by-10 sheets.

Have the kids put all papers from their backpacks in the basket immediately after school. All papers that need to be held for reference go in the plastic organizer, each drawer labeled with your child's name. All other papers should stay in the basket to be handled.

Some papers can actually go in recycling. I have an extra large bulletin board in the kitchen where I put permission slips and other reminder notes.

The 8-by-10 basket should then be empty. All papers should be put somewhere out of the way. That leaves a clean counter for the next job: cooking dinner.

SCIO TOWNSHIP

Shelter gets new playground

Junior League of Ann Arbor and Ronald McDonald House Charities came together Saturday to give the children at Alpha House, a homeless shelter in Scio Township, a new playground.

Ann Arbor Mayor John Hieftje, Washtenaw County Administrator Bob Guenzel, Scio Township Supervisor Charles Nielsen and Brian McKenzie, who was representing state Rep. Pam Byrne's office, participated in the event. Julie Steiner, executive director at Alpha House, Jennifer Pinto, incoming president of the Junior League, and Rosie Fellhauer, representing Ronald McDonald House Charities, cut the ribbon to signify the completion of the project.

"They have experienced a lot in their life and this new play area will hopefully give them a nice outlet and a chance to be kids and have fun," Kim Lyon, a volunteer with the Junior League, said in a press release about the playground project.

The new playground was made possible through contributions from local individuals and companies. Ronald McDonald House Charities gave a $21,442 grant to Junior League of Ann Arbor to help fund the project, which totaled $45,570. Various local retail outlets and restaurants also helped in the fund-raising process.

The project idea was conceived in 2001 when Dana Burkley of the Junior League was speaking with Barbara Penrod of St. Joseph Mercy Hospital about Junior League's need to start a new project that would fit in its mission of focusing on children and women at risk. Penrod mentioned Alpha House, a facility owned by the hospital, and the families who live there.

A committee was formed, the Ronald McDonald House Charities grant was received and, after two years of fundraising, execution of the project got under way.

"It sounded like a great opportunity for us to get involved with Alpha House and be able to add a bit more to the wonderful things that they do for families by giving the children staying at Alpha House a great place to play," Lyon said.

It took four years to come to fruition. The equipment was brought to Alpha House, located on Jackson Road, by Landscape Structures. Almost 30 Junior League volunteers and their friends helped build it.

The estimated 45 families and 135 children who stay at Alpha House each year will benefit.

"The families here cannot take their kids to the park every day," said Patti Hanks, development coordinator at Alpha House. "This gives the children access to a real playground."

The Interfaith Hospitality Network, which runs Alpha House, is a nonprofit organization that supports local homeless families by providing them with shelter, food and support to find permanent housing. More than 30 local congregations provide a coordinator and a group of volunteers to come to Alpha House to provide meals and other necessities to the families. They provide shelter for up to six families at a time.
