WE'VE GOT MAIL

"In the past, Michigan has failed to cultivate knowledgeable political leadership committed to this issue. For example, like all transit start-ups, Michigan's system will require federal funding. The current federal transportation grant structure could not have been more thoroughly designed to exclude Michigan from starting a new system. Who wrote it? Folks from states who already have transit systems and seek to expand them!"

Sylvan Township sued for breach of contract

By Edward Freundl
Staff Writer

A developer has sued Sylvan Township alleging breach of contract and fraud in connection with sewer and water service to property just west of the city.

Law firm Dykema Gossett PLLC, of Ann Arbor is representing Norfolk Development Corp. of Ann Arbor in the suit, which seeks unspecified damages against the township for actions dating back to September 2000.

Norfolk's 27-page complaint, along with about 130 pages of supporting documentation, was filed with the Washtenaw County Clerk's Office on Aug. 3, and Sylvan Township Supervisor Michael Williams announced it at the Oct. 2 township board meeting.

Defending the township is Onsted-area attorney Fred Lucas, who counts approximately a dozen townships and other municipalities in Washtenaw, Jackson and Lenawee counties among his clients.

Lucas is not Sylvan's attorney of record for ordinary legal matters, but was appointed by the township's insurance carrier for this particular litigation.

Williams declined to discuss the specifics of the lawsuit at this time, but expressed satisfaction in the selection of Lucas.

"We're happy that Fred is defending us," said Williams, "and we're very happy that the insurance company has stepped forward in this case."

Lucas was optimistic that a settlement could be reached with Norfolk long before the case reached Circuit Judge Donald Shelton's courtroom.

"At this point it's a fascinating claim, and I'm hopeful we can resolve in some fashion," Lucas said.

"It does nobody any good to have the township go broke. We have to figure out a way to make this work for everybody, something that's agreeable and fair to everyone."

It is a complex case, not only because it spans more

CCFA pursues agenda of city accountability

By Edward Freundl
Staff Writer

A grassroots group of Chelsea residents continues to refine its role of being a watchdog on the city's spending habits.

The Chelsea Citizens for Accountability held another public meeting on Sept. 26 to present its responses to the city "Q&A" prepared in September by City Councilman Frank Hammer and his wife Elizabeth.

The 17-page document, "Questions and Answers About City Governance," was presented to the council in mid-August, and covers several topics to address controversial issues that the CCFA has brought to light.

The topics are: property values and taxes, city cost increases, water treatment, land acquisition, privatization and the budget process, and miscellaneous expenditures.

CCFA member and city council candidate Rod Anderson said one of the topics of discussion was the city's purchase of real estate parcels such as the former Bookcrafters/Sheridan Books plant on Buchanan Street for some $995,000 in 2002.

Previewing National Adoption Month: Part I

Family cherishes life with child from China

By Sheila Pursglove
Special Writer

An old Chinese proverb states, "When a child is born there are invisible red threads that connect the child to all who are destined to be in their life. It may stretch or tangle but it will never break."

Two years ago, Dianna and Jeff Kause of Chelsea, and their son Vince, followed destiny's thread to Chongqing, China, to adopt a 10-month-old baby girl. It was the final turn in a 13-month path to adopt a child, using the services of the Great Wall China Adoption Agency in Texas.

"Life with Julia in our family is a continuing journey of challenges, education, inspiration and love," says Dianne Kause, a lifelong Chelsea resident who runs a hair-styling business from home.

"Julia came to us with a virus, and this seemed to be a constant problem for the next 18 months. She had many different viruses, illness-induced asthma, and even had a complex febrile seizure.

"It was a difficult time for us all. Canceling plans, missing work, and the endless worrying that she would not heal, were all challenging. With the help of our pediatrician and an allergist, the past six months have brought us to good health. Julia is thriving."

The family also discovered Julia needed glasses when, at 18 months old, she was only crawling and content to sit on laps and study a toy or book closely.

"We learned that nearsightedness

Treating patients like family nothing new at the podiatry offices of Reznick and Wolf

By Edward Freundl
Staff Writer

People simply shouldn't live with foot pain, especially when they don't have to. That's the expert medical opinion of owners Drs. Daniel Reznick and Barth Wolf. "There is no reason to put up with foot pain; it's preventable," said Reznick, who is literally following in the footsteps of his father, Dr. Howard Reznick, who began his own podiatric practice in 1963 in Ypsilanti.

"A lot of people don't realize how much pain they're in until it's gone; they've just gotten used to it over time," added Wolf, who joined the practice in 1987. That focus on pain management has made Reznick and Wolf very popular with their patients, most of whom can be seen within 24 to 48 hours of calling for an appointment.

"Neither one of us wants anyone in pain to wait," said Wolf. "We do our best to get them in, possibly even the same day they call."

To do that, the doctors depend on a top-notch office staff. "Our staff is amazing at getting people in," said Reznick

In many cases those patients began being treated by Dr. Howard Reznick, and simply chose to stay after his son and Wolf took ownership of the practice on Jan. 1, 2001. "I'd say 50 to 60 percent of our current patients started with him," the younger Dr. Reznick said.

"It's been six years but not a day goes by that somebody doesn't ask how my father and his wife Joyce are doing," said Dr. Reznick. Joyce was the office manager for both the Ypsilanti and Chelsea offices and is as responsible for the success of the practice as is Howard Reznick. "They're doing great; my father is playing a lot of golf and Joyce keeps herself busy with her garden. They miss their patients and say hello to everyone," added Reznick.

Reznick and Wolf specialize in the medical and surgical treatment of foot and ankle disorders as well as diabetic foot care, which can include routine screenings, treatment of ulcers, painful nails and pain associated with loss of sensation called neuropathy. They can even make custom molded shoes if needed. Pediatric foot problems are treated including in-toeing, out-toeing, growth plate injuries, fractures and sprains.

Adult foot disorders include ingrown nails, heel pain, neuromas (nerve tumors), foot and ankle sprains, fractures, arthritis and sports injuries.

A TYPICAL DAY

What's great about podiatry is that there are no "typical patients."

"Our day may start with a high school student with an ingrown nail, and our next patient will have heel pain," said Dr Wolf. "A poor choice of shoes with inadequate arch support is the cause of much heel pain, and is completely preventable," adds Dr Reznick.

The doctors may see people with skin lesions of the lower leg and foot. Another patient may have mycotic nails, which is a fungal infection causing a yellow, thick and painful toenail. Patients may have symptoms that can lead to the diagnosis of a systemic disease such as diabetes and rheumatoid arthritis. In such a case the doctors would refer these patients to their primary care doctor or specialist for a complete workup. "We often will work with the primary care doctors and other specialist to help treat these patients from head to toe," said Wolf.

"We see patients with diabetic foot complications such as poor circulation and/or diabetic neuropathy, which is a condition causing a loss of sensation," said Dr Reznick, a professional member of the American Diabetic Association.

"This can be very painful in some individuals. Fortunately, there are some new treatments available that can reduce this pain."

Some conditions such as hammertoes and bunions may require surgery. The doctors will always discuss conservative (nonsurgical) treatment options with the patient. They understand that some people just can't take the time off work.

"Unfortunately," said Dr. Reznick, "there are many misconceptions about bunion surgery." If you are a surgical candidate there are many different options available. According to the doctors, "most patients are able to return to work within three days after their surgery." Bunion surgery is not as painful an experience as most people think, said Dr. Wolf. "Many of our patients come back to have the second foot treated if need be."

REWARDS OF THE PRACTICE

Both Reznick and Wolf find podiatry to be a rewarding career. "This is a nice specialty to practice in, because there's so much good you can do," Reznick said.

"Someone can come in here limping, and they will leave feeling better."

Wolf said he enjoys the family oriented aspect of the practice. "I chose this profession because family is important to me," he said. "I can practice medicine, help people and still spend time with my family."

Some patients really stand out in their minds. Reznick recalled a patient who brought him a model of a lighthouse as a sign of gratitude. "The fact that he made that for me took the time to paint it and everything is what it's all about," Reznick said.

Another patient who has been treated for 10 years is now in a pre-medical program in college and considering a career in podiatry.

Wolf told of a diabetic patient who was facing a double amputation before coming to him. "(He had) chronic ulcers in his heels. It took a year, but we got them healed up and he kept his legs," Wolf said.

"It's just a matter of taking the time to work with people it's a challenge to us. We treat people like they are our own family."

The office takes most private and commercial insurance plans like Blue Cross Blue Shield, Medicare and PPOs; Blue Care Network and Priority Health.

Office hours in Chelsea are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday; the phone number is 734-475-1200. Ypsilanti hours are Monday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Friday 8 a.m. to noon. The number there is 734-482-1117.

Detroit man drowns in Losee Lake

By Sean Dalton
Staff Writer

A 25-year-old Detroit man drowned in Losee Lake in northern Dexter Township on Saturday, marking the second fatal boating accident in Washtenaw County this year.

Washtenaw County Sheriff's deputies, the Dexter Area Fire Department and Huron Valley Ambulance arrived on the scene at 12:05 p.m. after receiving a report that a canoe had overturned in the lake.

Deputies found two Detroit men on the shore of the lake, who told responders that a third man was submerged in the lake, according to a police report.

A sheriff's diver entered the water and recovered the victim about 30 feet offshore in 12 feet of water.

The man was transported to the University of Michigan Hospital by ambulance, where he was later pronounced dead.

Details of the investigation are still limited, according to Sheriff's Department Public Information Officer Commander Dave Egeler.

The initial investigation has revealed that at approximately 11:40 a.m. the three men were fishing in a canoe on the lake when one of them stood up.

The canoe tipped over and the men entered the water. One fell below the surface and didn't emerge.

The other two men were able to make it to shore, and flag down a passerby who called 911.

By the time a diver pulled the submerged man from the water, he had been submerged for at least 75 minutes.

The deceased man was identified as Ousman Jobe of Detroit. He was fishing with a 51-year-old man and a 57-year-old man, both of Detroit. Both were treated for exposure and released from U-M Hospital.

The canoe was equipped with the proper number of Type IV personal flotation devices, according to Egeler, although Jobe did not use one.

"Basically a non-swimmer ended up in the water," Egeler said. "The water temperature is cold, but it's not freezing cold yet. It's probably between 60 and 65 degrees."

According to Egeler, Jobe was not characterized as a "strong swimmer."

"Once he was in the water he was unable to grab hold of anything floating and ended up submerged," Egeler said.

The cause remains someone standing up in the canoe, "Which isn't necessarily a safe activity since they tip over so easily," Egeler said.

"The vessel was equipped with the legal number of personal flotation devices, three seat cushions, but again it goes to show here that personal flotation devices are no good if you don't wear them," he said.

"Someone who isn't a strong swimmer should have a vest on rather than a floatation cushion."

The accident remains under investigation.

The autopsy is completed, according to Egeler, who added that the investigation will include a toxicology report, although he doesn't expect it to have any impact on the investigation.

"We'll close it out just to make sure we haven't missed anything," Egeler said.

CCFA

The original plan was to use the building for municipal offices, but further inspection revealed the structure was unfit for that purpose due to soil and groundwater contamination.

In addition, according to the CCFA, the purchase price was more than $200,000 above the property's 2002 taxable value and almost double the price per acre of other commercial property that is not contaminated.

"One of the things we've said all along is, what is the city doing in the real estate business?" Anderson said.

Anderson

"It shows the parts of the council that don't work, that it's not transparent. We are concerned with accountability and transparency, which are related."

A millage increase approved by the council in June was the spark that ignited the CCFA.

"Residents, workers, visitors are all stakeholders, and each has different needs," Anderson said.

"The ordinary resident is not being taken into consideration. It's possible to tighten the belt before raising the millage."

The city had projected an increase in revenues in its 2007-08 budget, based on rising taxable values and increasing development.

However, the CCFA contends that current home sales figures does not support the revenue expansion assumed in the budget.

Believing the city was taxing itself out of reach of many current and potential residents, CCFA member Jeanne Olinyk used her real estate background to research affordability issues.

According to figures from the Ann Arbor Board of Realtors, Olinyk said, 45 homes were sold in the city from Jan. 1 to Sept. 1 of this year.

Of those, while 38 percent sold for prices exceeding both state equalized value (SEV) and taxable value, 27 percent sold below SEV and taxable value and 30 percent sold below SEV.

Looking at the average prices of homes within the Chelsea School District, Olinyk said 68 homes outside the city sold for an average of $310,578, while those 45 homes within the city sold for an average price of $199,375.

Due to differences in township and city millage rates, taxes inside the city for a home that price are $4,320; for a home at that same price outside the city but within the school district, taxes would be $3,045.

"Taxes are 29 percent higher in the city for that price home," Olinyk said.

"If the city wants to remain competitive, they should really try to keep that as close as possible."

Anderson said the CCFA is concerned about a failure of vision among city leaders.

"They are doing an excellent job managing the wrong things," Anderson said.

"They have to think differently, and they need to have these discussions with the public."

Unlike the CCFA's first public meeting in July, at which City Councilman Kent Martinez-Kratz was present along with dozens of residents, Mayor Ann Feeney and councilmembers Cheri Albertson, Joe Merkel and Jason Lindauer attended the Sept. 26 meeting at the McKune Memorial Library.

"I compliment their efforts to find out the facts of how city government runs," Feeney said.

Lindauer said he gave the group "high marks" for being well-organized with respect to the agenda and mix of speakers.

"It struck me as having an evenhandedness about it," he said.

"Anytime you bring more people into the process, it's good for the population at large."

Martinson takes over Chelsea Center for the Arts

Aubrey Thornton Martinson returns to the Chelsea Center for the Arts as the group's executive director. Martinson left the CCA in 2006 to become managing director of the Dance Gallery Foundation in Ann Arbor.

"The Board is thrilled to welcome back Aubrey Martinson," said CCA Board President Carol Stygles. "We feel that she will bring energy and a realistic view to the CCA. For those who remember, Aubrey spearheaded a successful visual arts program and is well known and liked in the Chelsea area."

One of Martinson's priorities is to build upon the work done by the previous director and the board in gathering input from the community.

"We already have much to offer to the community and hope we can find more ways to connect people with creative experiences and services," Martinson said. "Also, this place is bursting with positive energy - we need to find more avenues to share what we do with more people."

Board Vice-President Dr. Misha Strauss Moore says: "Aubrey's personal warmth and creativity make her a great match to lead the CCA in carrying out its core mission of increasing the availability of the arts in our community. We are delighted to welcome Aubrey back to the CCA."

Because Martinson had worked at CCA previously as program coordinator, she says it feels more like a homecoming than a new position.

"My very first day, I found a flower arrangement from board president Carol Stygles with a ribbon that says 'Welcome Home Aubrey,'" she said. "It feels great to be back."

Martinson fills the position left vacant by Jennifer Goulet who is now working with ArtServe Michigan. She joins a staff consisting of Music Director and Co-Founder Lisa Hinz-Johnson, Gallery Director Linda Leatham, Program Director Leslie Greeneisen and Administrative Assistant Karen K Smith.

Martinson begins her position right before the Oct. 20 Autumn Jubilee "Denim & Diamonds" fund-raising gala. "Autumn Jubilee is a great chance for me to reconnect with familiar faces as well as meet new supporters and vol Aubrey Thornton Martinsonunteers," said

Aubrey Thornton Martinson

Martinson, who lives in Grass Lake with her husband Chris.

The Chelsea Center for the Arts, located at 400 Congdon Street in Chelsea, offers programs in music and visual arts to students of all ages. For more information, call 1-734-433-2787 or www.chelseacenterforthearts.org.

Chelsea History

Glazier descendants discover Chelsea

By Kathy Clark
Special Writer

It has been 54 years since Nancy (Glazier) Smith, 82, last visited Chelsea. On Sept. 21 she and her four sons left Santa Barbara, Calif., to visit Chelsea.

Nancy grew up at Cavanaugh Lake, married and left the Chelsea area in the 1940s. Last month's 100th anniversary of the Clocktower building inspired the Smith family to make a trip home to find their Glazier roots.

Nancy is the last living granddaughter of Frank P. Glazier, who built the Clocktower in 1907.

She is the daughter of the late Henry Glazier and Doris (Whitaker) Glazier. Henry was the youngest of Frank and Henrietta Glazier's seven children.

This was the first trip to Chelsea for Dean, David, Donald and Douglas Smith, great-grandsons of Frank Glazier. They have lived in California their entire lives.

After settling into the Chelsea House Victorian bed-and-breakfast on East Middle Street, the Smiths dined at the Common Grill.

They then took an evening walk down North Main Street toward the factory complex for a sneak preview of the Clocktower and surrounding buildings.

A guided tour of the Glazier historical buildings

The next day started with a gourmet breakfast served by inn owner Jim Myles. Representing the Chelsea Area Historical Society, I accompanied the family as a guide.

All the Glazier sites, except for the Chelsea Retirement Community, were within walking distance of the inn.

We walked uptown to look through the former Glazier Savings Bank, Glazier Bank and drugstore building, one art gallery with robots and Zou Zou's.

Frank Glazier's great-grandsons did not know what to expect, and had not read books or seen many photographs depicting the Glazier family history 100 years ago.

Their cousin, John Dauser, was the first of Henry Glazier's grandchildren to visit Chelsea in early 2000.

Dauser was shown around by John Keusch and Katie Wagner, and highly recommended to his cousins that they plan a trip to Chelsea.

It didn't take long for the four brothers to become excited with all the sights and connections to Frank P. Glazier — four cameras clicking everywhere, running across Main Street to get better shots of the buildings. The excitement grew in way of smiles, questions, laughter and exclamations. Chelsea, their great-grandfather's old "stomping grounds," thrilled them.

Mark Ptaszek from Washtenaw County District Court accompanied us into the Beaux Arts-style former Glazier Savings Bank, a 1901 memorial to Frank's father, George Glazier.

It now serves as the 14th District Courthouse. Doug Smith, an interior designer, pointed out the "egg-and-dart" ceiling trim, and the white Carrera marble throughout the interior.

The tour included hallways lined with historical portraits, the jury room under the domed ceiling, Judge Richard Conlin's chambers, and the basement with jail cells. The former bank's walk-in vault has been remodeled into a prisoner holding cell. Ptaszek allowed the Smith brothers to be "locked up" in the cell for a souvenir photograph.

The tour ended up at the former Glazier Stove Company factory complex. We sat over coffee and conversation with Tom Diab in the Chelsea Historical Museum.

The Smiths perused and stocked up on Glazier history material — the books "Our Hometown" and "Less Than Immortal," Glazier photo CDs, a custom-made Glazier photo album and Glazier family tree charts.

Next door, Janice Ortbring of Edgar Norman Creative opened up the former 1892 Glazier Electric & Water Works building, and let the brothers borrow the Glazier stove for a family photograph.

The Smiths departed to meet with longtime friends, Katie (Staffan) Wagner and her daughter, Sis Canton, at the Common Grill, where Nancy and Katie shared old Chelsea memories.

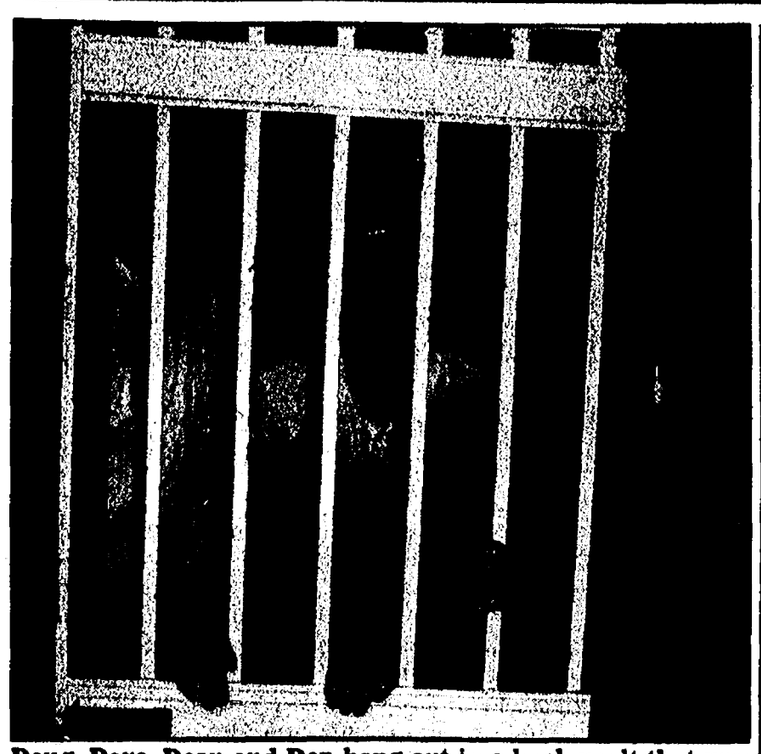
After lunch they drove out to Cavanaugh Lake for a leisurely boat ride with Steve Kiss and cousin Carolyn Rudd's family, then on to Katie Wagner's cottage on Crooked Lake.

Sunday was a perfect opportunity for the Smith family to attend the First United Methodist Church.

The church is another cut-fieldstone building built by Frank Glazier and his favorite architect, Claire Allen of Jackson. The Smiths were warmly welcomed by the congregation as special guests.



Doug, Dave, Dean and Don hang out in a bank vault that was made into a jail. The Glazier family visited Chelsea last month.

Family memories.

Late Sunday morning while sitting around the dining room table at Chelsea House, all the brothers referred to Henry and Doris Glazier as their "Babba" and "Nanna."

Henry lived from 1899 to 1965. His wife Doris lived until 2003. The oldest boys had spent their childhoods with their parents and grandparents swimming in pools, vacationing at Catalina Island, diving for and feasting on abalone and scallops, vacationing in and sailing the coast of California in their family sailing vessel.

Henry Glazier was a distributor of the Los Angeles Times, and Nancy's husband, Dr. Dean Smith, was an orthopedic surgeon and chief surgeon at a California hospital.

Oldest son Dean Smith is a CPA. He recalled Henry Glazier "loved his Lions, and Nanna and Babba had one of the first colored TVs." He remembered watching Detroit Lions games with Henry during fall weekends.

"It's pretty incredible," Dean said, commenting on Frank Glazier's achievements. "Because we never heard anything from Babba about the Glazier side of the family and very, very little from Nanna about any of this; we just knew at some point we had ancestors that had done something."

As for this trip to Chelsea, Dean said, "The biggest thing for me is getting pictures and being able to pass these on to my kids. The (Glazier) buildings are beautiful; it was just neat seeing this whole area."

Nancy added, "Growing up, my father never talked about this area, because Henry was 8 when his father was convicted and later went to prison. He would never talk about this. From the time he was able to vote, he voted Democratic and my mother voted Republican."

Frank Glazier, a Republican, was treasurer of the state of Michigan when he was convicted of misappropriating state funds and went to Southern Michigan Prison in Jackson for two years.

"It all added up as I grew older. I understood why my father never wanted his picture in the paper," Nancy added.

David Smith, second oldest, was surprised to learn his great- and great-great-grandfathers were pharmacists. He became a pharmacist himself and currently owns two pharmacies in Salinas, Calif.

David said he liked learning the accomplishment of the stove factory best.

"I was just reading about their lives. Obviously Frank and his dad must have been very tight," David said.

"I read this morning that Frank went to pharmacy school, he only worked eight years and they opened up the stove factory!" David was very excited about his great-grandfather's accomplishments.

The stove factory in Chelsea became the largest gas and oil stove company in the world. Larger manufacturers whose stoves used coal and wood were located in Detroit and other large cities.

The third son, Don, is in finance and real estate and competes in Lake Michigan yacht races.

"This was a great trip," he said. "We enjoyed it. Our boys are both water polo players and we're going to investigate the University of Michigan Glazier Scholarship we found out about."

Nancy explained how Frank had given a large donation to the university in the early 1900s, which her children did not take advantage of.

Doug Smith, the youngest, works for Ty Warner, creator of "Beanie Babies" plush toys.

As an interior designer he procures furniture, fixtures and equipment for Warner's mansion on the Pacific coast and other hotel properties.

Doug talked about his favorite part of the trip to Chelsea being a trip out to Cavanaugh Lake.

"After hearing all of Nanna Doris' stories about the lake and life on the lake and having all the family out there with her, it was a real sense of connection to finally go out there," he said.

Circling the lake they looked for Henry and Doris' cottage, which is now was a vacant lot.

"The funny thing was, as we were going around the lake where all those beautiful new homes are being built, it was actually when 'your cottage' (one of two preserved Glazier cottages) was pointed out to us that I felt like I got a sense of what it was," Doug continued.

Nancy added, "I felt very sad that our cottage had been torn down." She also was quite surprised there was no island.

Nancy had lived at the lake with Henry and Doris until she finishing nursing school and college. She remembered swimming out to the island, canoes, fishing boats, sailboats, and cookouts on the beach with her aunts and uncles and cousins.

"We grew up in the water," she said.

After the trip to the lake, Doug decided their lives near the ocean may have mirrored their grandparents and Nancy's life at Cavanaugh Lake.

At around 1 p.m., after one more hike down the hill to Diab's chocolate shop, the Smith family checked out of the Chelsea House and drove out of town.

than seven years, but because the property changed hands in 2004 when Norfolk bought the parcels of property (and assumed all responsibilities and liabilities) from the original developers, Magellan and Hamill.

The property involved encompasses approximately 180 acres west of the city, bordered roughly by Sibley, Conway and Cavanaugh Lake roads, up to the industrial park.

The original development agreements specified $4 million in special assessments for water, sewer and road improvements for a planned unit development, allocated "in proportion to the number of REUs (residential equivalent units) allocated to each parcel."

The first annual payments from the developers to the township were not due until each system was "operational," which was defined as "all government requirements have been satisfied and systems are ready to accept sewage and ready to provide water at a point at the outside boundary of the Subject Property."

The development agreements provided that if the township collected tap fees for connections to the systems from outside the special assessment district, they would be credited pro rata to the sewer and water assessment payments in proportion to the unused REUs allocated to each parcel.

The sewer system was supposed to include a new treatment plant, two pumping stations and transport piping, all for less than $4 million.

The water system was to consist of two 12-inch water wells, a treatment plant, land acquisition costs, elevated water tank and distribution piping, all for less than $4 million.

According to the suit, the water system proceeded more or less to plan, but without consultation to Magellan and Hamill, the township board voted to abandon the planned sewer system and replace it with a completely different one.

That turned out to be an existing sewer system based in Leoni Township and routed through Grass Lake to the treatment plant located between Grass Lake and Michigan Center.

The cost of tapping into that system was $7.5 million, far in excess of the original plan of less than $4 million for a standalone treatment plant.

Further, the suit alleges, the cost of the water system increased from less than $4 million to about $5 million.

To finance the systems the township had to approach the county for a guarantee on $12.5 million in construction bonds.

In the meantime, Norfolk said, they had been making payments on both utility systems while the township contended they were not "operational" under the terms of the development agreements.

As a result, the lawsuit is seeking two counts of breach of contract, a judgment of violation of law regarding collection of tap fees, judgment of invalidity of the township's attempt to terminate the Hamill development agreement, fraud and misrepresentation, denial of due process, denial of equal protection and a permanent injunction from collecting further special assessments.

The ninth and final count seeks a writ of mandamus, which Williams defined loosely as "a judge having to tell a municipality to obey the law."

Lucas said he is looking forward to working with Norfolk's legal team to reach an agreement.

"Fortunately for us, the attorney on the other side is a well-respected attorney Alan Greene," Lucas said.

"He's a good guy, he's always been a capable litigator and a decent guy to work with. I'm hopeful as we sit down with him we can work something out."

Community outreach vital for school district

By Edward Freundl
Staff Writer

Although each of the four goals established by the Chelsea School District Board of Education is equal in importance to the others, the connection between the district and the community is vital.

Ingall

Without that input from and interaction with residents, school administrators and staff can feel like they are left on their own to make decisions that ultimately affect every child in the district. "This is the most frustrating goal in some ways because you want desperately to have that contact," said Chelsea School Board President Laurel McDevitt.

The series

Over the next few weeks, The Chelsea Standard will take an in-depth look at each of the goals established by the Chelsea School District, and how it proposes to reach them.

"(The community is) your support base, they are entrusting you with their children, they are paying for it, and they want to know how you are taking care of those things."

Andrew Ingall, Executive Director of Instruction and Community Services, listed some of the strategies the district is employing to reach Goal 3: Promote interaction between the school district and community:

Expand use of technology.

The district Web site, Chelsea.k12.mi.us, was revised over the summer to make it easier to use.

"We utilize a variety of ways to communicate with the public," said Chelsea Schools Superintendent David Killips. "People are more in tune with the Internet, and we think it's important for people to know what's going on in the district."

McDevitt said it is "always a struggle" to find an effective way to communicate with district residents. "That's why we have 'The Communicator' published in the newspaper, and we try to update the Web site," she said.

"It's easy with elementary kids, you can give them something to take home; but it's not so easy with older students when you can't always depend on those things reaching home."

Another exciting tool the district is using to keep parents in the loop is the ParentConnect system.

"It links parents to schools for student achievement, attendance and discipline information," Ingall said.

After a successful trial run at the high school, it will be implemented at South Meadows Elementary and Beach Middle School. "Parents can essentially look in the teacher's grade book," Killips said. "It's hard for a kid to say he's done an assignment when the parent can see he hasn't turned it in," he added.

"It's one more way we try to keep parents informed."

Provide forums for parents and community members.

This is an ongoing practice the district adopted several years ago, and goes far beyond the usual school open house.

"We will be offering forums for parents and community members to present information about programs and the opportunity to ask questions and provide input," Ingall said.

One such forum, about the proposal to change to a trimester schedule at the high school, is set for 7 p.m. Tuesday in the High School Media Center. Other forums include curriculum/assessment topics, the healthy schools grant, school safety and adolescent drug and alcohol use.

Something people would be surprised to know about you: I love old movies.
Most influential person in your life: Right now it's Rick Catherman. His professionalism and go-for-it attitude really get me excited about my job and all of the possibilities. If I can learn to work half as hard as he does, I'll feel I've accomplished a great deal. In my entire life, my middle school orchestra teacher Doc Walker is the one that inspired me to be successful in music plus he was cool because he built airplanes and made hand guns.
Quote to live by: Everything in life is negotiable except death so let's just make it work.
What do you like most about teaching? Seeing the amazing things kids can accomplish.
What do you like least about teaching? Getting started in the fall.
What is the most challenging part of teaching? Attempting to teach so many kids at a time and give them all what they need and stay positive doing it.
What are some of the goals you set for students? To perform great music well. To understand the nature of art and the importance it has in society.
How do you handle a disruptive student? One on one How do you handle a student who doesn't focus well? Draw them in with humor.
What do you tell parents about being involved in their children's education? It's about quantity time - you never know when you will have a teaching moment.
Are students feeling more pressure to succeed today? Absolutely. The absurd cost of a college education is forcing kids to be as successful as possible in school of provide as many opportunities as possible after they graduate.

1:30 p.m. Two classes of either 5th or 6th grade orchestra
3:30 p.m. Home or the High School. My afternoon schedule varies by what lessons are needed or small groups.
Has your job changed over the years? Not really. We do play much more difficult music than we did when I started. In addition, in 1985 we had only 53 string players total in grades 6-12. Now we have over 350 students playing string instruments in the Chelsea schools in a given year. There is a bit more work involved, but hey, music is music. The violin hasn't changed in close to 400 years.
What do you like most about teaching in Chelsea? The high expectation and the great support we have from the administration.
What makes the Chelsea school district unique or special? I think it is the feeling tohe of the schools. I have worked in other districts and Chelsea does enable the teacher to a great extent. The small size of the district allows students to feel attached to the district, yet we offer a very broad curriculum, including an orchestra program.

Measuring student learning for learning

By Shawn Lewis-Lakin
Guest writer

This month students in elementary and middle schools are once again participating in the Michigan Educational Assessment Program, known as MEAP. All students, including those with disabilities and those with limited ability to speak or understand English, are taking these assessments, or alternative state assessments, required by the No Child Left Behind (NCLB) Act.

The MEAP tests now being taken by students are a single measure of student learning. The Michigan Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development, (ASCD) supports assessments and accountability based on information from multiple data sources rather than a single measure.

The MEAP assessments, which are administered to students once each year, are used to report a school's ability to meet adequate yearly progress targets required by NCLB. However, no single assessment can adequately measure the full breadth of student learning. More importantly, because of the delay in receiving data from MEAP testing, such data does not provide the most valuable help teachers need to improve their instruction.

In order to improve the achievement of their students, teachers need to know what their students have learned on an ongoing basis not what the students learned from lessons taught weeks or even months ago. Teachers need to know what their students have learned daily, so that they can adjust their instruction. Information from multiple types of assessment administered on a frequent basis provides classroom teachers with valuable information to modify instruction to meet students' individual needs. When teachers measure student learning properly, it is an essential tool for educating children.

As the debates and discussions continue about the reauthorization of NCLB, Michigan ASCD calls for flexibility in the law to allow additional assessment data for school accountability, including project based assessments and other formative assessments of students at the classroom level.

Better assessment systems with multiple measures, that are valid and reliable, mean better accountability for schools and better data for teachers to help students succeed.

Teachers and students need assessments of learning that occurs over time. More importantly, they need assessments for learning, which provide feedback to students, teachers and parents about the learning that is taking place every day.

Lewis-Lakin is the President of Michigan ASCD. Michigan ASCD is the state affiliate of the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development, an international organization of diverse educators committed to excellence in teaching and learning. More information about Michigan ASCD is available at www.michiganascd.org.

Tax code changes create planning opportunities for traditional IRA account owners and beneficiaries

money WISE

By Sharee Mosher

There used to be one universal rule for estate planning: Don't get caught dead with an Individual Retirement Account (IRA). After years of tax-deferred savings, these accounts came front-loaded with built-up tax liabilities. And under the old laws, those tax bills became due and payable by any non-spousal heirs almost immediately — wiping out as much as 80 percent of an inheritance.

No longer. Changes to the tax code have created tremendous planning opportunities for traditional IRA account owners and their spousal and non-spousal beneficiaries. The right strategy can turn an IRA into a tax-efficient asset transfer that could potentially generate income for your heirs for decades to come.

Loosening of restrictions

The most important change is that the IRS has revised the formula that determines how much account holders must begin withdrawing from their IRAs when they reach age 70?. The amount of money you must withdraw is now lower, giving you the ability to continue deferring taxes and compounding the growth so there is more for your heirs.

Spouses, the most commonly named beneficiaries on IRA accounts, have several choices when inheriting an account. They can roll their inheritance into an existing IRA, set up an entirely new IRA account with the assets, or disclaim their right to the account and pass it directly to secondary beneficiaries such as their children.

Consider an example. John passes away with an IRA worth $200,000, naming his wife, Jane, as his primary beneficiary and his two children as contingent beneficiaries. With a spousal rollover, Jane rolls his entire IRA into her own account. She can name her own beneficiaries, and if she doesn't need the income, she can hold the IRA until she has to begin taking required minimum distributions (RMDs) from the account at age 70?. In the meantime, the assets in the IRA account continue to grow tax-deferred.

Beyond the spouse

Non-spousal beneficiaries, including unmarried domestic partners, now also have more attractive options available when they inherit an IRA. Under the old law, any non-spousal beneficiary had only two choices — a single lump-sum distribution or a five-year distribution plan. Since IRA distributions are taxed as current income, taxes could siphon off a substantial portion of the inherited assets, even under the five-year plan.

But current law now allows non-spouse beneficiaries the additional choice of setting up an inherited, or decedent, IRA, and permits them to take RMDs based on their single life expectancies. This stretches the income from the account through their lifetime, allowing the assets to continue growing tax-deferred.

Here's how the math works: John retires when he is 61 with an IRA of $200,000. He and Jane, age 58, don't need the income, so they allow the assets to grow — let's assume an annual rate of 6 percent. At age 70? John begins taking RMDs based on his single life expectancy until his death at age 80. Over those 9? years, he will have withdrawn $175,000, but Jane will inherit $415,000, thanks to the continued growth.

Intergenerational payoff

When Jane inherits the IRA, the RMDs are recalculated based on her life expectancy, and she continues taking distributions until her death at age 80, drawing more than $64,000 in income from the account. If their two children, ages 56 and 52 when they inherit, choose to stretch the IRA, they can set up separate accounts, and each can use their own single life expectancy. Together they will draw another $1.27 million in income from that account over the course of their lifetimes.

In this case, the original $200,000 IRA is worth more than $1.5 million in total family income, thanks to careful planning.

The key to stretching the IRA is choosing proper beneficiaries and educating them on how they can use the assets to plan for their own future. It can help open up an intergenerational discussion about estate planning.

Account owners who have plenty of outside assets to pass on to their heirs may want to consider naming their favorite charity as their primary beneficiary. Because charities don't have to worry about those built-up tax liabilities inside the account, they receive the full amount of the IRA tax-free. In addition, those assets stay outside of the estate, trimming the tax bill for the heirs.

With IRAs making up a growing portion of most families' investment portfolios, it is more important than ever that your overall financial and estate plan address the disposition of IRA assets.

Hatch Stamping receives supplier award

Chelsea-based company employs nearly 280 people

By Edward Freundl
Staff Writer

Hatch Stamping, a leading automotive supplier headquartered in Chelsea, is the recipient of the Gold North American Supplier Performance Award presented from Johnson Controls Inc. (JCI).

The award was presented Sept. 18 at the JCI's 2007 Supplier Awards event in Holland.

Hatch Stamping employs nearly 280 people from Washtenaw, Jackson and Livingston counties in its plant in Chelsea's industrial park, with additional manufacturing facilities in Fowlerville, Howell and Mexico employing more than 200 people.

The company manufactures stampings and assemblies for automotive seat, brake, fuel and safety restraint applications.

In a letter to Hatch from Terry Nadeau, JCI vice president of purchasing, noted that the reward is reflective of the commitment and dedication of the Hatch organization.

"We are very proud of this award that clearly portrays the strong commitment and dedication of our employees," said Dan Craig, Hatch Stamping President and CEO.

"It is gratifying to be recognized for strong performance in a highly competitive industry."

Craig added that Johnson Controls has been "a very strategic customer" since 1991.

Sales Manager Steve Emmert explained the importance of the award to Hatch's future.

"JCI has a matrix that they judge suppliers on, based on performance, quality and delivery," Emmert said.

"When they source new business, it allows them to source Hatch more easily than if we did not get it."

Hatch has been in business since 1952, and is not only surviving but thriving in difficult economic times.

"We have experienced significant growth in the past 10 years in an otherwise poor economic automotive environment," Craig said.

"Hatch has grown and really bucked the trend in the industry."

Dexter company honored by trade group

By Sean Dalton
Staff Writer

API Network Corp., a Dexter-based technology firm, was recognized by 2007 Innovation Michigan this month.

On Oct. 4, the Ann Arbor and Oakland Business Review magazines honored 15 companies, including API Network, for innovations in process, product and business strategy.

The company's proprietary software application, Cloud9, allows easy access to the Web for a wider range of individuals and organizations that might not typically be able to afford to hire a Webmaster and developer to create launch and operate a Web site.

The idea was to provide non-profit organizations and small businesses with this ease of access, according to owner Kasey Kasemodel.

Kasemodel started out as an employee with one of the Big Three automakers. He was laid off, which spurred his entrance into the technology sector as a company-level player.

Kasemodel said his years of experience in the auto industry are incorporated into his company and products.

API Network initially was aimed at aiding beleaguered Michigan manufacturers, but changed focus mid-stride.

"Having an online method to generate sales and collect money is crucial to almost all businesses," Kasemodel said.

Cloud9 is based on an open source content management system called Joomla!, which allows business owners to maintain their own online business model.

"I wanted to create a cost-effective package that offered everything that nonprofits and small businesses needed, but might not be able to afford," Kasemodel said.

He said some businesses will still need to go another route if they need a higher-end site, but Cloud9 would be more than sufficient for most operations.

"Content management systems like Joomla! and Cloud9 empower businesses by giving them the ability to maintain and grow their own Web presence," Kasemodel said.

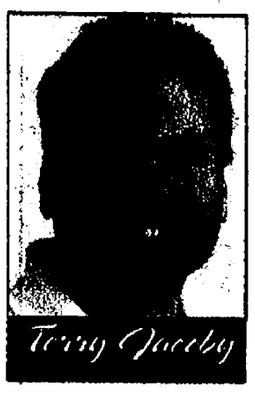
A dad tries to protect his family

Ron Montange and I walk into Thompson's for some lunch and conversation. We don't get 10 feet into the place when someone walks up to Ron and shakes his hand. There is a shout, "Hey, Ron," from across the room. A few more steps and Ron is greeted by a hug.



In a small town, news travels fast. Bad news travels even faster. But what makes small towns even more unique is that the news affects everyone. Ron's son, Michael, was seriously wounded in August while serving his third tour of duty in Iraq, and the entire Chelsea community has felt Michael's pain. Michael is one of our own and when one of our own suffers, we all suffer.

Ron orders a bowl of clam chowder and looks up at me. He looks down for a moment and then right back into my eyes. "You know, you would think it would get easier, but it doesn't. It really doesn't."

Ron and his wonderful wife, Nancy, are starting a new business. He has just returned this morning from visiting Michael at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. He shows me his "to-do list," prepared for him by his wife.

"I've been getting these for as long as I can remember," Ron says, somehow managing a smile. The conversation briefly heads to the coffee shop the family is scheduled to open next week in Stockton and you can hear the excitement trying to break through. But the subject always comes back to Michael and any anticipation of the new business is dashed by the reality of what has happened to his family.

As most of Chelsea knows, Ron is a pretty tough guy. He's a proud man. He talks about all the support he's gotten and the outpouring of love he's received from his extended family. He's not big on taking handouts or asking for favors.

So I will.

Ron and Nancy and Michael need your help. They need Chelsea's help to protect their family — your family. They don't need your money or your sympathy. They need your voice.

Ron and Nancy have another son, Jeff, also in the military. Jeff is stationed at Fort Wainwright in Alaska. As Michael, 28, prepares for another surgery — he's had more than 25 since being hit by an explosive device while riding in a Humvee – the Montanges are trying to get the Army to change Jeff's orders. They don't want another son wounded, or worse, in Iraq.

In other words, the Montanges believe they have given, suffered and sacrificed enough. A family shouldn't have to fear going through this again. And while it seems like a reasonable request, there seems to be rules and regulations and resistance pushing them back.

The military simply doesn't have a cut-and-dry policy the Montanges can turn to or point to. Some people have had to deal with the death of a family member while another one continues to fight. The Sullivans, who served during World War II come to mind as a family whose suffering resulted in a change of policy. The Montanges aren't looking to rewrite the rule book. They just don't want another son to suffer — or worse.

U.S. Rep. Tim Walberg (R-Mich.) recently visited Michael at Walter Reed. Ron was impressed with the gesture, but "disappointed" at the reaction of his request to keep Jeff away from military action. Let's hope the congressman is on the phone this week looking into what can be done so we can save our voice.

But as the saying goes, don't hold your breath. This is Washington and the federal government and the military we're talking about. In other words, what may appear as easy decisions sometimes are the most frustrating and difficult ones to make happen.

So Chelsea and the surrounding community can try to help make this happen. E-mails, letters, phone calls and political pressure won't hurt. While there is a good chance even this won't matter in the end, it's worth trying — because this is family.

Throughout history every town in America has had to deal with loss and sacrifice while defending our freedom. Many towns have had to deal with it recently, including Chelsea. This community has already had to bury a few of our own since the war in Iraq broke out.

In a way, Ron realizes he is lucky. Michael could very easily have been killed. And Ron and Nancy think about that every day. Other families, they know, have suffered more. Still, their pain returns. "It doesn't get any easier."

Since the end of August, Ron and Nancy haven't been in their home together for more than a night — and one is usually coming or going. Family is always by Michael's bedside as he comes and goes from one surgery to another. Ron says his spirit is high — but so is the pain. And it's not easy on mom and dad to see their son suffering.

Sending another son to Iraq and having to worry about him is too much to ask. Isn't it? This family has been through enough — and they aren't close to the finish line. They have sacrificed enough. They have given to their country enough.

True, Michael is still alive. But Michael will probably never be the Michael they once knew. That Michael was lost Aug. 21.

Ron talks about how hard it is to see other young men get wheeled into Walter Reed, many without arms or legs or an idea of where they are. The Montanges are not alone. They know other families are going through the same thing they are. They know there are other families with other children still fighting and they feel their pain.

Earlier this year Chelsea lost a brave son in Iraq. What if that family had another son fighting on the front lines. Would they bring him home?

Maybe a new policy needs to be written. Maybe exceptions need to be made. Maybe sacrifice needs to be factored in. Maybe someone should at least voice their concerns. A lot of maybes, but not a lot of answers. It's time their country says thank you in a meaningful way. Keep Jeff out of Iraq is all they are asking.

Sounds simple. But nothing is ever simple.

One family's suffering changed the rules

The Sullivan brothers enlisted on Jan. 3, 1942 with the stipulation that they serve together. George and Frank had served in the Navy before but their brothers had not. On Nov. 13, 1942 during the Naval Battle of Guadalcanal the Juneau was struck by a torpedo and had to withdraw. Later that day as it was leaving the Solomon Islands area the Juneau was struck by a Japanese torpedo. The ship quickly sank. Eight days later 10 survivors were retrieved from the water. The survivors reported that Frank, Joe and Matt died instantly. Al drowned the next day and George's survival of four days was a miracle.

As a direct result of the Sullivans' deaths, the U.S. War Department adopted the Sole Survivor Policy. The policy describes a set of regulations in the U.S. military that are designed to protect members of a family if they have already lost family member in military service.

Web site includes messages from Mike

Chelsea's Mike Montange, who was seriously injured in Iraq on Aug. 21, can be reached online at a Web site set up by his parents. Mike's father, Ron, reports that Mike now has a laptop and frequently checks his messages. The Web site also includes updates on how Mike is doing. To send Mike a message or see how he's doing, log onto www.caringbridge.org/visit/michaelmontange. The following are some of the many messages sent to Mike on his Web site.

Hi Mike, It is amazing to hear of your continued recovery. We will continue to pray, and look forward to the time that we will see you again in Chelsea.

Mike, I have been reading your updates from the beginning and we have been praying for you everyday. My husband went to school with your dad. I am so glad that you are getting better and it is wonderful to read your own updates. Keep up the good work.

Mike, It is great to see that you're able to get around and that you are able to write in the journal. I love seeing all the messages that you receive, especially the ones from the NCO's and soliders that you have touched when you were with them and from being as courageous as you are. Please keep up the great work.

Mike, I was literally overwhelmed today to see that you are writing messages and going outside. You truly are an inspiration to us all. I am glad that you finally got to pin on those SSG stripes. Congratulations! I can't think of a more deserving NCO. Wish I could have been there to pin them on you myself. We try to keep up with your progress as much as possible and all of the Ruff Ryders are praying for you. Keep getting better and we'll keep praying.

Mike, First off, CONGRATULATIONS on the promotions; Staff Sergeant! I see that you are doing better everyday. I have been following your journal for awhile but just figured how to send you a message on this site. I know with your fighting spirit you will be back to the game of life as soon as possible Your are a fearless leader! Thanks for setting the example of what a NCO is about!

Mike, while you don't know me from a hole in the ground, I've known your mom and dad since long before you were a twinkle in their eyes. I can't even begin to tell you how thrilled I am to see a message that you've written and that you got to go outside today. Being an outdoor freak myself, I can certainly appreciate what a special thing that must have been for you. I'm thrilled that you're doing so much better.

Mike, I'm so very glad that everyone's prayers are being answered. Just want to let you know that if you're feeling weak or down or upset you can lean on any one of the people who have signed this book.

Hey Mike! Glad to see you are online! Our family is so pleased to read about the progress that you are making. Everyone back here in Chelsea and the church are watching your progress. Keep up the hard work of your recovery.

Mike, although we've never met, we've been "watching" your progress every day and praying for you. So excited that you got your Internet, and more importantly that you are able to use it! Keep up the good work ... we'll keep up the prayers on behalf of you and your family.

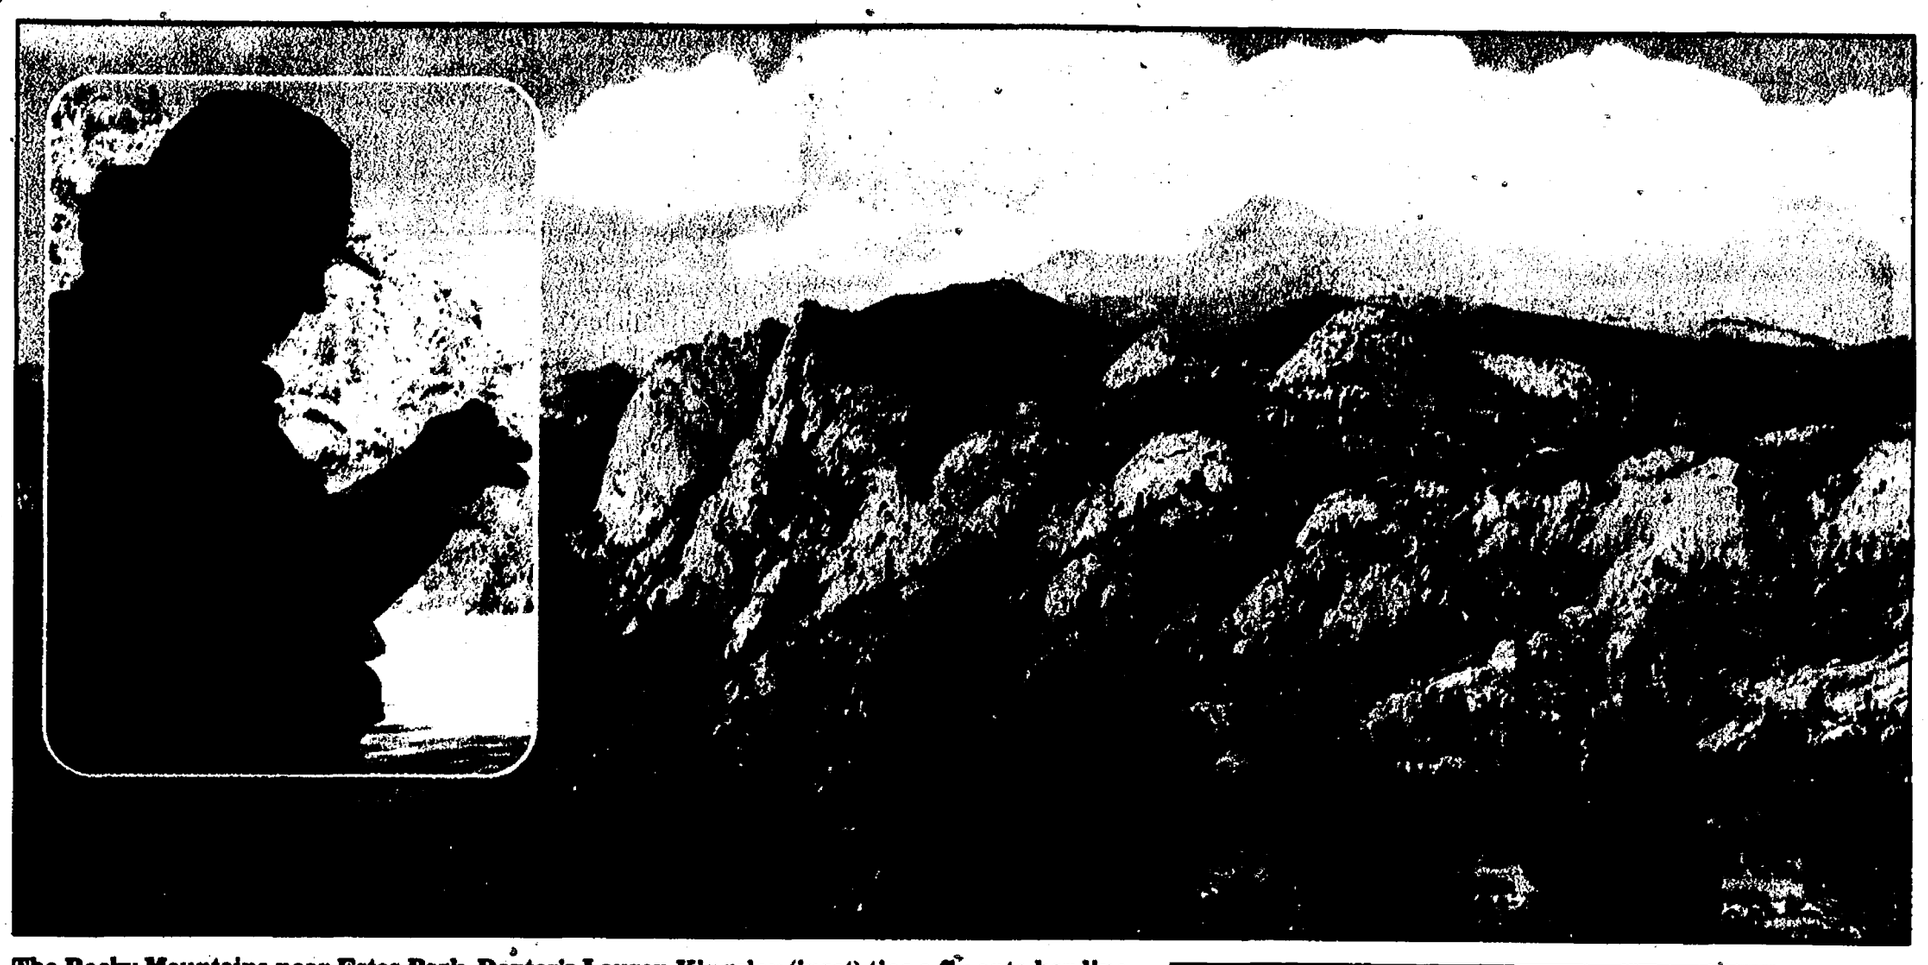
On the road with Marsi and Lauren: Part III

Road trip heads into the mountains

By Marsi Parker Darwin
Guest Writer



The Rocky Mountains near Estes Park. Dexter's Lauren Kingsley (inset) ties a fly onto her line.

After four days of gazing at the Rocky Mountains through the seventh floor of our hotel room, my friend Lauren Kingsley and I were more than ready to head into them. The Fly-Fishing Retailer's show ended at 3 p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 18, and we were packed up, checked out, and ready to go by 5.

I had dreamed about those mountains for many years after moving to Michigan, and I hadn't been back for 14 years. As we got closer and closer, my excitement grew. We drove through Boulder, which had grown so much I hardly recognized it, then fifteen miles northwest to Lyons. We watched the subtle browns, reds, and ochres of the plains and foothills grass shift into the blues and yellows of the mountains as we climbed.

It was suppertime when we arrived in Lyons, a small town at the base of a red sandstone bluff, or cuesta, as my geologist father informed me, named Steamboat Mountain. Lyons is home to less than 2,000 people, many of them artists, musicians, writers, and athletes.

We easily found Oskar Blues Grill and Brew, where we had been told we could get a good meal and listen to the great bluegrass jam they have on Tuesday nights. As we devoured our crab cakes, coconut shrimp, and sweet potato fries, tables were being moved around us to accommodate the growing number of "pickers" with guitars, banjos, and fiddles who were arriving on the scene, so we had a front row seat.

They played in a circle, led by a great bass player named Eric Thorin. Eric is a friend of Lauren's friend K. C. Groves. He greeted us in a friendly Colorado drawl and promised to show us where we'd be staying later. I was in heaven, listening to the voices and instruments around us. There was even a Dobro player! I knew "dobro" means "good" (I had a Czech grandmother) but the name actually comes from the Dopera Brothers, (Do-Bro) who developed the steel guitar with an aluminum resonator, usually played flat on the lap.

Around 11 p.m. that night, Eric took a break and led the way north out of town a few miles up Apple Valley Road to the guest house on the river where K.C. had made arrangements for us to stay. He helped us with our luggage and insisted we keep his flashlight for the walk to the cabin from the truck. We had already heard a few bear and mountain lion stories. Our hostess, Betsy Burton, was written up in a Good Housekeeping "Survival Story" a few years back, when she and her dog encountered a cougar while walking nearby.

The next morning I was up at dawn, exploring our surroundings. The smell of the cottonwoods on the river in the cool morning air and the sight of the sun rising behind the sandstone cliff above us made my heart sing. There was a hot tub on the porch, a hammock in the trees, and a table and chairs on the banks of the river, where I could SMELL the trout.

We had breakfast at the Lyons Café, where the cooks took their time cooking, bantering with the locals seated at the counter. We wolfed down bacon, eggs and home fries, then stopped at the South Fork Fly Shop, where we talked to the owner, Mike Clark. He sold us some flies tied by A.K. Best and told us we should fish the north St. Vrain and the Big Thompson. We got fishing licenses at the hardware store and drove up into one of two canyons leading out of Lyons and into the mountains.

We took a serendipitous detour at the intersection of Hwy. 7 and 36, where I wondered if Cal-Wood Ranch still existed, where my father taught geology field methods years ago. We didn't find it, so we drove into Jamestown, where I asked a silver-bearded gentleman leaving the post office. He drew a map, and gave me his address, as he owned some gold mines in the area and wondered if my dad still had any old maps. He then invited me to tour his museum-in-progress down the road, while Lauren made a few casts into Jamestown Creek.

I remembered The Elk Palace from my trips to this old mining town back in the 1970's. The gentleman I had just met, Tom Maloney, was turning it into a monument to the Arapaho Indians killed near here in the Sand Creek Massacre, a blot on Colorado history.

The tipi near his place was beautifully painted with animals of the area. He had photographs and relics of early Jamestown in his museum, and showed me his future barroom, where he

Our policy
It is our policy to run all local letters to the editor that deal with local issues and are not personal attacks.

Right to know should trump 'lords' rulings

They don't call it the House of Lords for nothing. The Michigan Senate has a checkered history of dealing with the news media.

Back in the 1950s, Capitol correspondents sat on the floor and actually advised Senators how to vote. Then in the '70s Senate leadership tried to block reporter access to the Senate floor by proposing glassed in press cages.

Tim Skubick

More recently, the current Senate GOP leadership caused an unnecessary flap by censoring staffers from reading a political blog.

Now this dandy: preventing the media from taking pictures of the Senate voting board.

We demand very little of our elected lawmakers. We don't force them to be on time or that they show up every workday. They don't have to return phone calls and they can even go hunting for sheep in Russia for three weeks during a contentious budget battle and nobody seems to give a hoot.

But voting ... that's a horse of a different color. We do expect our lawmakers to vote and it's the media's assignment to report how they vote. It's rather basic to our democracy.

In the Senate when a bill is up for final approval, they call it third reading, and there is a record roll call where every Senator's vote is tallied.

The media can have a copy of the voting list and can report it to you. But there are tons of other votes that are not recorded and any attempts by the media to photograph those votes can get you in trouble with the senators.

Such was the case during the recent government melt down. During a critical vote on the sales tax, the media tried to photograph several votes and was shouted down by some senators, who objected. The sergeant at arms intervened and shutdown the cameras — and one station was forced to erase its tape.

Complicating the issue was a Senate Democratic Party staff photographer who also was taking pictures and got caught by the GOP. They were convinced the Dems would use the voting information against the Republicans in the next election.

Senate Democrats, who seldom get to play offense against the GOP "enemy" in the majority, dusted off their copy of the First Amendment.

"We have no right as Senators to cast votes in secret," Minority Leader Mark Schauer bellowed.

Republicans parried that Senate tradition has never allowed the recording of procedural or any other votes. That's the way it's always been, and they dismissed Schauer's protests about "secret" votes as a feeble attempt to gloss over the fact that one of his own employees broke the rules.

The GOP also argued that if Schauer wanted a record of the roll call vote, all he had to do was ask for it.

Defenders of the no-photo policy do have a legitimate beef: If every vote was recorded, some senators might be afraid to vote because they might offend the voters back home.

While one can understand the reluctance to make enemies, if senators are overly concerned about that, they should find another calling.

When it comes to the public's right to know how senators are voting vs. the "right" to protect politicians by not reporting all their votes, even the House of Lords should be able to figure out which is the more hallowed ground.

Tim Skubick is the host of the TV show "Off the Record" and does regular commentary for WWJ Radio 950.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor: It's right to be skeptical of this mass transit effort.

To be clear, a "Commuter Rail" is a common passenger train running on existing tracks shared with freight trains. "Light Rail" has dedicated tracks, is slower and best suited for dense urban areas with many stops and relatively few miles to travel. "Rapid Rail Transit" (RRT) has a much faster dedicated track system then LT with fewer stops. RRT can reasonably cover much greater distances, such as Detroit to Metro Airport and Ann Arbor. "Busses" are busses that run every 15 minutes on time.

Start from the beginning: Michigan home rule laws serve to empower municipal villages, townships and cities. While great for zoning, DDA's, and defining local interests, these laws have left a tremendous strategic gap in our ability to plan our future. Michigan has no regional planning authority that considers state and regional (county) interests with the authority of state law.

This fact becomes apparent when studying mass transit issues that are inherently complex, litigious, involve significant spans of time and disperse benefits unevenly across a region: track locations/easements, stops, benefits, costs, etc. all create a stew of issues that are insurmountable when addressed within our current legal framework.

If you are familiar with the unstable histories of both of bus and train systems in Michigan then you know why we have systems today that are more symbolic then functional and with few exceptions more trouble then they're worth. On the other hand, abandoned train stations have made very nice craft stores, local museums, restaurants and day care centers.

A fully functioning metropolitan area transit system is composed of passenger rail trains, Regional Rapid Transit Trains, busses and even taxies. The main RRT line is constructed first followed by planned expansion over decades.

The primary goals of transit systems include more then transporting residents. They attract new businesses to the state, improve the health of our overall transportation system (including freeways), attract tourism/convention business to cities and foster high density development around transit stops in areas that are today under utilized properties. In short, it's about ECONOMIC REDEVELOPMENT and Michigan's future.

Private investors will not risk capital to develop areas around bus or train stations that can be shuttered with the stroke of a pen. However, once a new $4 billion dollar RRT system paid for by the Federal Government and operated by RRT revenue supplemented with state funds is in place, it's here to stay. There are many excellent examples throughout the country and without exception they have become vital components of those state economies.

Soon, vacant or under utilized land near RRT stops becomes new high density, car optional residential communities that enjoy the all the services offered by linked cities. Google Golden Spike Michigan.

With very few exceptions, public transit is a publicly funded amenity that fosters private investment. Just as importantly, it provides Michigan with the prestige required to pursue major convention and tourist events that are presently beyond our reach. The reasons for RRT are not new or unique. To the contrary, they are extensive and pervasive and it's time to recognize that Michigan has become a stagnant embarrassment as metro areas a third our size continue to invest in the expansion their transit systems.

The Ann Arbor to Howell line is a near term substitute for the hard work necessary to create and implement a comprehensive plan. Without such planning, this line is likely to remain isolated and eventually doomed. Even if the study is to proceed, Rep. (Pam) Byrnes' first challenge will be the study itself. Parsons Transit, the engineering firm who created the 2005 SEMCOG transit studies, it will likely fail as the excitement is drained away under a mountain of charts, graphs and toneless slide shows.

From what I have witnessed, they do not appear remotely equipped to evaluate and promote a project of this magnitude and complexity. If, like the 2005 study, there is no political focus, vision or leadership, it will soon blur into a confusing mess before it finally lands in a government filing cabinet within a government warehouse. In my humble opinion, the transit presentation I attended in 2006 was a pathetic embarrassment.

In the past, Michigan has failed to cultivate knowledgeable political leadership committed to this issue. For example, like all transit start-ups, Michigan's system will require federal funding. The current federal transportation grant structure could not have been more thoroughly designed to exclude Michigan from starting a new system.

Who wrote it? Folks from states who already have transit systems and seek to expand them! Money was available to originate systems in other states but sorry, no more - not for us. Most disturbing is that our senior federal "representation" appears convinced that Michigan's economy is not worth the investment and any discussion that includes the word "billion" causes them to run for the shelter.

But that word does not frighten others! Michigan's share of Federal Tax Dollars has greatly benefited other states: $14.5 billion for the Big Dig to bury 3.5 miles of the I-93 freeway in Boston; $32 billion to rebuild levees in New Orleans; and $1 billion for Katrina damage for Florida alone. I guess they all "needed" our tax dollars - sure. But what does Michigan need?

If Michigan had the federal representation capable of bringing 4 billion in RRT funding here tomorrow, we would still need a state funding mechanism to operate it. It will not be self supporting, although the long term ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT benefits will far outweigh the support cost.

A. Solicit political support and leadership who leads rather then hold endless focus groups.

B. Hold a national search for the best (not cheapest) team of consultants with superior, recent experience originating new RRT transit systems from conception, studies, planning, funding, elections, design and construction.

The team will include planners, engineers, attorneys, public relations, funding specialists and mediators who have made NEW RRT systems happen for other states. Before proceeding, understand why our existing planning agencies have failed Michigan's mass transit efforts in the past.

C. Confer with transit states to develop a body of state law that supports a regional transit planning authority. Once passed, hold a national search for the best, most experienced

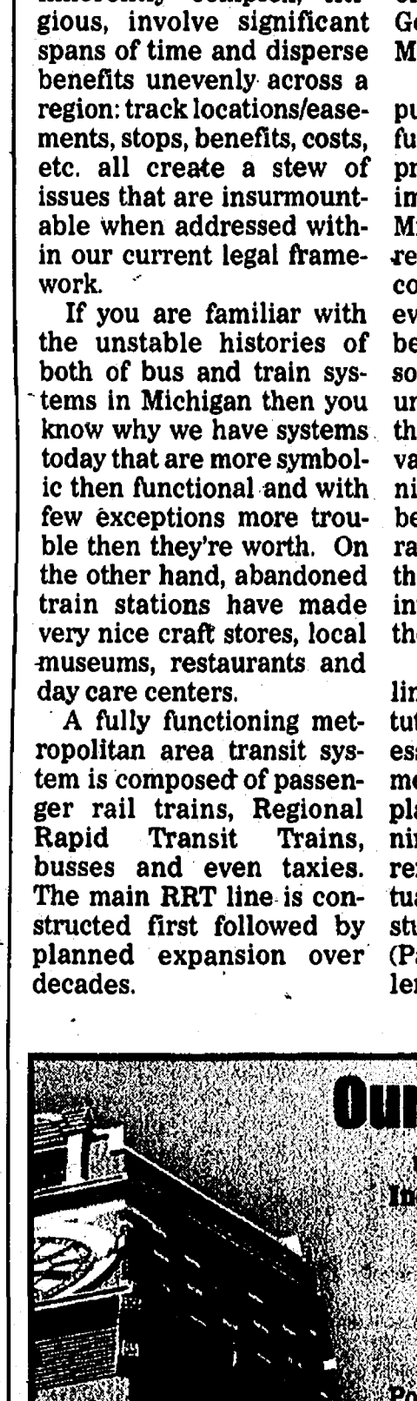
Our Chelsea History



What crops did the Algonquian-speaking Potawatomi Indians grow in the Chelsea area?

A. Corn, squash, beans and melons.
B. Indian corn and strawberry popcorn.
C. Pumpkins, rice and squash.
D. Giant tomatoes and peppers.

Answer A. The main crops cultivated by local Potawatomi Indians were corn, squash, beans, a "kind of melon" and tobacco. Excellent corn land was utilized by Indians in the southern part of Michigan, stretching from Detroit to Lake Michigan. In the Chelsea area, some of the Potawatomis' agricultural fields were tilled where Chrysler Proving Grounds is today. The land and marshes were rich for gathering nuts, raspberries, huckleberries and wild cranberries.

Within a village each family cultivated a plot of land which it received by mutual consent of the tribesmen or by a chief. Crops were shared by the whole village. The introduction of iron kettles by white settlers led to maple sugar harvesting.

Around Washtenaw County

Dexter/County

The Southeast Michigan Council of Governments sought feedback from the Dexter Village Council for the first phase of the organization's community forecast.

The projects go out to 2010 and are based on employment data from the years 2000, 2002 and 2005.

According to the report, employment in the village will decline while number of households will go up as unsold homes and new developments pave the way for growth.

Census numbers show 1,013 households in the village in 2000 and 1,506 households in 2005. That figure will rise to 1,629 in 2010, the study says.

Number of households grew by 493 during the 2000-2005 period, compared to a projected increase of only 123 additional households for the 2005 to 2010 period.

Employment figures in the village were 2,940 for 2002 and 3,058 in 2005. The employed numbers for 2010 forecast 2,847 in 2010. Job growth was positive at 118 between 2002 and 2005, but SEMCOG's prediction of 211 lost jobs will set the village back to pre-2002 levels, according to the study.

The projections take into consideration the proposed Wallace Building mixed-use redevelopment, the Village of Dexter Library, Katie's Restaurant and other proposed sites and those currently under construction, such as Dexter Plaza.

The countywide results of the study show a projected growth in the number of households alongside a decrease in the average number of occupants per household in Washtenaw County.

The 144,718 projected households in 2010 are a 6,771 increase from the 137,945 households of 2005.

While the county is growing in that regard, the projection represents a 54 percent decline in household growth compared to the five-year period between 2000 and 2005.

Population growth is projected similarly, with 7,811 more people for 349,658 in 2010. Between 2000 and 2005 the county's population went from 324,251 to 341,847.

Employment throughout the county is projected to improve, as 3,148 state government jobs, 6,129 health care and social services jobs and 838 professional jobs are created, despite a projected downtown in manufacturing jobs to the tune of 4,167 positions.

The employment figure for 2010 is projected to be 254,504. Employment in 2005 was 242,702 and in 2001 was 243,173.

Milan

A Milan police officer was asked Oct. 10 to help a local resident get her car back after she traded it for crack cocaine.

The officer met with the woman after she called to report her tan, four-door 1986 Mercury as missing. The woman told police she was in an intense amount of back pain, had not been able to obtain a prescription for pain medication, and had decided to trade her car for a large rock of crack cocaine to help her deal with the pain.

The local resident told the officer she had driven the vehicle to Ypsilanti, located a drug dealer and arranged for him to drive her back to her house and leave with the vehicle in exchange for approximately $100 worth of crack cocaine.

The woman said that due to the pain, she didn't remember the name of the dealer or even if the dealer had ever told her his name.

She asked for police assistance in retrieving her vehicle and told police where she believed the car might be in Ypsilanti.

Milan police passed on the vehicle's identification number to Ypsilanti law enforcement and advised them of the incident.

Saline

Friday morning throughout the Saline School District, classroom lessons were discreetly interrupted as teachers proceeded with prescribed security measures in reaction to a threat posted by a former Saline student on the Internet.

Saline Police Chief Paul Bunten received a call in the early hours Friday from Ann Arbor police, who traced a threatening chatroom message linked to a gaming site to a computer at a home in Saline.

Bunten called Interim Superintendent Scot Graden, who instructed the staff and teachers to proceed with security measures.

Bunten sent his officers to the home in Wildwood subdivision and took an 18-year-old man, a recent Saline High School graduate, into protective custody, transporting him to University of Michigan Hospital for A psychiatry evaluation.

"He had been in court Thursday, for an unrelated incident and was very angry," Bunten said of the man in custody. "He said he realizes he made 'stupid statements.'"

No charges have been filed.

Doug Bacon, Saline Area Schools director of facilities, said the district has a very strict and practiced security protocol to protect students and staff.

"The threat was not specific to any one school building, so we took the most careful measures in all of our buildings," Bacon said.

A firearms-sniffing dog swept Union School, where the student had recently attended alternative high school classes.

Teachers were instructed, before the school day began, to commence with the appropriate security procedures.

"We constantly update our manual for this, based on new information and lessons learned," Bacon said.

"Everything went very smoothly and we're on top it if," Interim Superintendent Scot Graden said Friday.

A debriefing of the day will be scheduled this week, he said.

This was the first such incident for the district during the current school year.

"We will periodically have public forums on topics of great interest," Killips said.

"The Oct. 23 forum will be on trimesters, and the board would like to hear from the public on that; as well as the all-day, every day kindergarten."

Forums on that proposal, to change from traditional half-day sessions, took place Tuesday and Wednesday, and conclude tonight at 6:30 p.m. in the cafeteria at North Creek Elementary School.

The bottom line is to get the information into the hands of those who need it as quickly and effectively as possible, and like most goals, it is a constant work in progress.

"We try new ways to communicate with parents," McDevitt said. "It's always something you're working on improving."

D. For decades we have heard mumblings that the Big Three will "never allow" a viable transit system in Michigan. Have they ever been asked on the record what they think of mass transit? And if they are against it, what basis they have to believe they are equipped to plan Michigan's economic future?

Solicit a statement from each of the Big Three and signed by their CEO's indicating their corporate positions on Rapid Transit Trains along with the support they will pledge, if any. Whether for or against it, we need to know NOW.

AN EAGLE EYE VIEW

Join the EMU Wrestling Buzz

By Derek DelPorto
EMU wrestling head coach

Derek DelPorto

Hello. My name is Derek DelPorto and I am the head wrestling coach at Eastern Michigan University. I'm in my second season at the helm of the Eagles and optimism is flowing through my veins.

That optimism stems from a couple things. We have 16 true freshmen on the team that made up the No. 23 ranked recruiting class in the country (Intermat Wrestling) along with several key returners and two transfers coming off red-shirt years surely to make an impact. All of this and only three Seniors!

I am well aware of the time it takes to build a team and find success, but if you know anything about me and my coaching staff, we are doing everything we can to make that happen sooner than later. We just hired a great addition to the program in David Bolyard, a former All-American wrestler at Central Michigan University. In my opinion, David is one of the up and coming great young coaches in the Country.

I already mentioned the recruiting efforts that paid off for us last season and look forward to producing EMU's next Mid-American Conference champion and Division I All-American.

Last year was a great start in rebuilding EMU Wrestling. We finished the year 8-7 which was the first regular-season winning record in 17 years. We hope to carry on that tradition for many years to come.

The 2006-07 season also saw senior Jermain Thompson win the MAC Championship and qualify for the Division I NCAA Championships in Auburn Hills, MI. Jermain drew the No. 2 seeded wrestler from the University of Oklahoma and had everyone in the Palace on their feet in an exciting action-packed triple-overtime loss. Jermain sent a message throughout the wrestling world that EMU will compete with anyone!

I urge the people in the community to come out and support this young and energetic team as we try to raise the awareness of Eastern Michigan Wrestling. I also want to challenge the community to get involved with ALL of the Michigan schools and support them as whole. That is, only when we don't compete against each other!

You can catch us at home several times this year and once in Ann Arbor. Go to EMU's website at www.emueagles.com and join the buzz. I hope to see you at one of our events.

Derek DelPorto is in his second year as EMU's head wrestling coach. He spent the previous two years as the head wrestling coach at Slippery Rock University before that school discontinued its program. As a collegian, DelPorto was a Division I All-American as a heavyweight wrestler at Slippery Rock in 1999. The 2007-08 Eagles open their season Saturday, Nov. 3, when they host the EMU Open in Bowen Field House.

is common in Asians, and Julia has an extreme case," Kause says. "Once she put glasses on, she began exploring her environment at a rapid pace.

"Her development is exactly where it should be."

If Julia had not been adopted, she would have been in the orphanage, and there would have been no money available for glasses or treatment of asthma and viruses, Kause says.

"This would have caused her to be sickly and delayed, with a possibility of not surviving the harsh environment at the orphanage. I believe fate placed her in our family."

As Julia grows, the family struggles with the lack of diversity in the Chelsea area, where Kause grew up and where she has extended family, and where the family would like to continue living.

"Sadly though, since Julia became my daughter I have had the experience of understanding racism first hand," Kause says. "However, because of these types of incidents, there are people working diligently on raising awareness and educating others.

Chelsea's own grassroots organization, "One World One Family" has been successful in teaching about race and diversity, she says. "It's encouraging to me that there are people living in my community who share a similar viewpoint."

The family's joyful experience of international adoption has inspired others in their immediate family. Kause's brother and his wife adopted an 18-month old girl from Russia in May, and her brother-in-law and his wife are in the process of adopting a 10-year-old boy from foster care.

"Both stories are unique in their process but alike in the choice of creating families through adoption," she says. "We're pleased to have so many adoption stories in our family tree."

Last year, after bringing Julia home, Kause formed a Families with Children from China playgroup that meets once a month in Chelsea.

"The idea of the FCC playgroup is, as the children grow up they see that there are other families just like theirs," she says.

From her involvement in this group she have seen a need for other support and adoption-centered activities and celebrations.

"It's important for anyone who has been adopted to know that there are many other people who are just like them," she says. "It's also crucial for parents to have a network of people that they can rely on as well."

Kause and her husband, together with several others, are forming a group, "Touched by Adoption" and hope to offer support and an annual Adoption Festival each November, National Adoption month.

As time passes, the family finds it hard to even recall life before Julia's arrival.

"She loves to laugh and sing, so the house is filled with her voice," Kause says. "She and her brother, Vince, share a special sibling bond that is remarkable to Jeff and me. Vince wanted a sibling for a long while and Julia was definitely worth the wait.

"Jeff and I are in awe of this beautiful little girl with a fun, loving soul who came into our lives and made us all love deeper."

Frequently asked questions

Dianne Kause of Chelsea, mother of a little girl from China, answers some frequently asked questions:

Is adoption expensive?

Costs can vary from $2,000 to $40,00 depending on circumstances and type of adoption. Adopting from foster care has a minimal expense but traveling abroad for international adoption can add a lot to cost. An adoption tax credit allows a $10,000 deduction after an adoption is finalized. There also are grants, low interest loans, and employee adoption benefits available. For information, visit www.theadoptionguide.com/cost.

Did you adopt because you couldn't have children?

Can you imagine how hurtful this question is if heard by adopted children? Adoption is still a choice, not second best. I love and wanted my daughter and biological son equally. And any child I am raising is "my child."

Do you know anything about her "real" parents?

Plain and simple, the parents raising the child are "her parents." The biological or birth parents are the ones that passed along genetics, and are referred to as the child's biological or birth parents.

Are you going to raise her to know about her culture, learn the language?

Children who are adopted internationally or trans-racially are raised in their family's culture. Being part of a family is an important part of bonding. The child's birth heritage should be honored and explored at his or her own curiosity.

Why didn't his birth parents want him? Didn't they love him?

They loved him very much but knew they could not take care of any child at that time. They wanted him to have a family that loved him and could take care of him forever. Adoption happens for adult reasons and are not a result of anything the child does. This is a general answer for questions that no longer need to be asked. Please be respectful to the privacy of an individual or family.

Is she adopted?

I have had strangers ask me this question and although I am happy that there is adoption in our lives, it gets tiring for someone who was touched by adopted, to repeatedly hear this question. Please be sensitive to pointing out family differences, as most children do not want to feel different.

wants an antique slot machine. I told him I knew where he could get one, and I'm hoping to be able to deliver it! When Lauren came to pick me up, we were sitting in the front yard with Tom's friend and his wolf dog.

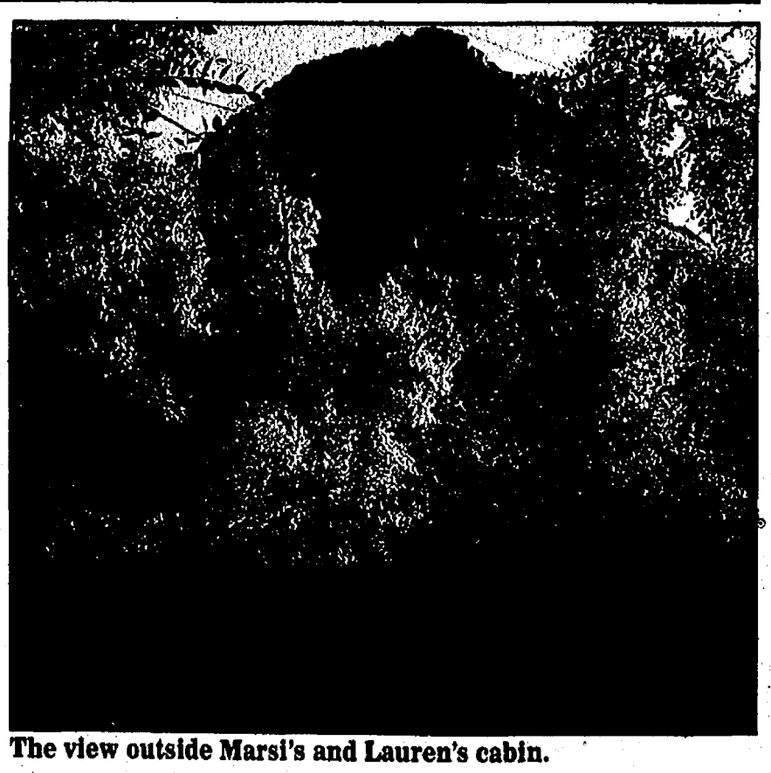
We then went up to Cal-Wood, which was virtually unchanged.

From there, we made our way to the Wild Basin area at the south edge of Rocky Mountain Park, where we happily, although unsuccessfully, fished the north St. Vrain. We kept wondering who Saint Vrain was, so I looked it up, and learned that the river was named for Cerran St. Vrain, an early French trapper who was involved with Bent's Fort, the first trading post established by white men in what is now Colorado.

We drove back to Lyons and met K.C. at her home, where she had just returned after a national tour with her bluegrass band, Uncle Earl. We were all tired, but we managed a walk downtown to The Gateway Café, where Lauren and I ordered from a surprisingly gourmet menu, and dined on salad and four-cheese lasagna with elk chili on the side.

The next day, we drove up to Estes Park and fished the Big Thompson River east of town. The waters there are catch-and-release, so the fish are wily. But the weather was gorgeous, as it was every day of our stay, unseasonably warm, and sunny as it is 300 days a year in this area.

At the end of the day, we were invited to K.C. and Eric's, where a chef had prepared filet mignon wrapped in bacon with cream sauce, asparagus with almonds and onions, and diced sweet potatoes dredged in butter. Dessert was raspberry almond cake with raspberry coulis and vanilla custard, garnished with fresh kiwi and peaches grown on the western slope.



The view outside Marsi's and Lauren's cabin.

Thank goodness we were getting a lot of exercise! A rancher friend of K.C.'s from Wyoming wandered by in his ten-gallon hat and was invited to join us. After dessert, Lauren and I drove to Lafayette, east of Boulder, where my friend Kevin Dooley was playing in a club with his Irish band.

With only a few days left in Colorado, we were packing it all in.

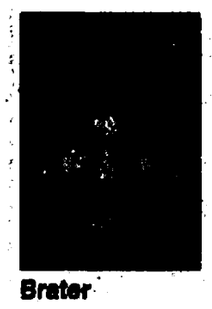
State Sen. Mark Schauer urging Congress to override President Bush's veto of an expansion of funding for a children's health insurance program.

Senators urge congress to override Bush SCHIP veto

By Edward Freundl
Staff Writer

Two state senators used Mott Children's Hospital in Ann Arbor as a backdrop Monday to lobby Congress to override a presidential veto of funding for a children's health insurance program.



Brater

Sen. Liz Brater, who represents western Washtenaw County, and Senate Minority Leader Mark Schauer of Battle Creek introduced Senate Resolution 117, which urges Congress to override the Oct. 3 veto in a vote scheduled for today.

Six Republican Congressmen who voted against the bill - Tim Walberg, Mike Rogers, Joe Knollenberg, Peter Hoekstra, David Camp and Thaddeus McCotter –were singled out to get them to change their minds.

"We heard from the director of Mott Children's Hospital how important it is for coverage for children," Brater said.

"It's important that, as a country with so many resources, we provide children with access to health care."

The $60 million Congress proposed would expand coverage for the State Children's Health Insurance Program, or SCHIP, from 6.6 million children to more than 10 million nationwide.

That would translate into tens of thousands of kids being added to Michigan's MIChild program that already covers 55,000 children, Schauer said.

"The bill the President vetoed would allow us to continue covering those kids and allow us to find another 25,000," he said.

"Health care for kids shouldn't be a partisan issue. It's a question of values."

Schauer said Republicans are propagating "myths" about what the bill actually would cover.

"It's private insurance, not government-sponsored health care," he said. "I wouldn't support this if kids were moved off private insurance.

Families would pay on a sliding scale based on their income, with eligibility based on 200 percent of federal poverty guidelines.

"That's about $41,000 a year for a family of four," Schauer added.

The numbers being quoted by opponents of the bill are about double that, but it is difficult to determine where those numbers are coming from.

In an editorial published last week in National Review magazine, Congressman Republican Tim Walberg of Tipton specified his opposition to the expanded coverage.

"House Democrats ... would like you to believe that Republicans do not care about poor, needy kids.

"I support renewing S-CHIP to provide health care to children in low-income families, but I also believe we need to ensure that the children's health program is available for children who need it, and not for adults, people who enter the country illegally, or families who already have private insurance.

"The Democratic legislation takes a program originally meant for children of low-income families and expands it to cover some families earning up to $83,000 and illegal immigrants, while moving millions of children from private health insurance to government programs."

The Wall Street Journal further described this problem in its Aug. 9 editorial:

"The bill goes so far as to offer increasing 'bonus payments' to states as they enroll more people in their SCHIP programs. To grease the way, the bill re-labels 'children' as anyone under 25, and 'low income' as up to... $82,600 for a family of four."

The text of the bill, introduced in the House of Representatives in May, makes no reference to a particular dollar amount.

It does refer to a state's option not to limit coverage to children, but in no case does eligibility go beyond age 21:

"At the option of the State, the plan may provide that eligibility requirements (including such requirements applicable to redeterminations or renewals of eligibility) for medical assistance relating to income, assets (or resources), or citizenship status are met for a child who is under an age specified by the State (not to exceed 21 years of age) ... "

Brater explained why approximately 700,000 adults are included in the program, which is one of the criticisms against the bill.

"The parents of kids get access to health care because it doesn't help a child to have health care if the parents are not healthy enough to take care of them," Brater said. "That's the logic behind it."

behind Cloud9's development was to provide enterprise-class software with features and value that businesses haven't previously seen, according to Kasemodel.

"Think of it as something for serious organizations that want power and security, but don't want to pay IBM prices," he said. "With this program, businesses can manage memberships, collect money, manage and share documents or even host and manage events all in a secure package.

"Essentially, Cloud9 allows small businesses to act like big ones, giving them a competitive edge they might not otherwise have."

Being nominated is an honor in itself, Kasemodel said.

"This year's nomination was a treat and a great pleasure, but one of the greatest joys of all is seeing how this program helps 'the little guy' grow and prosper."

'Going Out of Business' fee is out of business

State Rep. Pam Byrnes (D-52nd District) announced last week that her bill to allow the clerk of a city, village or township to waive the $50 fee that is currently required when applying for a "going out of business" sale has become Public Act 65 of 2007.

"This legislation allows businesses to cut through the bureaucratic red tape," Byrnes said. "In these tough economic times, the last thing a failing business should be burdened with is more fees."

The $50 fee was originally required as a consumer protection measure in order to discourage companies from holding fraudulent going out of business sales. Byrnes was made aware of the fee by Saline Mayor Gretchen Driskell, who asked Byrnes to fix the issue in the legislature.

"The purpose of my job is to work on behalf of the people in my district," Byrnes said. "I'm pleased that I was able to take a concern from the public and create legislation to fix the problem."

Byrnes honored

Byrnes recently received a Distinguished Key Partner Award from Michigan State University Extension during the organization's annual state conference at the Kellogg Hotel and Conference Center on the MSU campus.

Byrnes was honored for her longtime support and appreciation for MSU Extension programs for Michigan's families, communities, agriculture industry and natural resources, according to a news release.

In his remarks, MSU Extension Director Thomas Coon noted Byrnes' ongoing efforts to increase her knowledge of MSU Extension at the state level, and how she has called on the organization's educators to address issues in her district.

"Representative Byrnes' efforts to not only support our mission, but to engage our staff members in meeting the needs that face her constituents make her a truly unique partner," Coon said. "The result is that she understands our contributions to Michigan and our potential for the future in a way that few others can appreciate."

Walberg fights taxes

U.S. Congressman Tim Walberg (R-Michigan) last week called for Congress to pass a law making the Internet tax moratorium permanent. Current law allows Americans to use the Internet without paying taxes, but this law expires on Nov. 1, 2007.

If Congress allows the tax moratorium to expire, Americans could face taxes of up to 20 percent every time they access the Internet. Rather than permanently protecting the public's tax-free access to the Internet, Congressional leadership wants to keep the door open for states and local governments to impose taxes in the near future.

"When shoppers go to the mall, they don't pay a 20 percent tax when they walk through the door," Walberg said. "Imposing a tax on Internet usage is essentially the same thing. The Internet has revolutionized our communication, the way our children learn and the way we conduct business. I am committed to continuing this remarkable success by protecting the Internet and making it tax-free."

Walberg is a co-sponsor of H.R. 743, the Internet Tax Freedom Act, legislation that would make the Internet tax moratorium permanent.

Walberg also recently voted in favor of an amendment to the Tax Collection Responsibility Act of 2007 that would repeal the death tax. Under current law, the death tax rate will climb from 0 percent to 55 percent in 2011, and death will once again become a taxable event.

New releases send children on exciting journeys

By Jennifer Sinkwitts
Special Writer

When was your last trip? I take one every day. I see the world for free and my visa doesn't suffer along the way.

This week I traveled all the way to Mali, Africa. Award-winning author Gloria Whelan and artist Peter Sylvada took me there, courtesy of Chelsea's publishing house Sleeping Bear Press. Their recent book, "Yatandou" stole my heart and opened my eyes to life outside our material world of the $3 coffee and $80 pair of blue jeans. Life in Mali is different, especially for the young girl Yatandou who works hard, dreams big and yearns for hope.

Peter Sylvada captures the spirit of this story completely. His use of deep colors and blotchy strokes create warmth and add depth to each sentence Whelan writes. You see Yatandou, an 8-year-old girl hard at work. There is joy missing from her face. In fact, all you see is a glimpse of her face throughout the entire story.

On most pages, standing behind her is her goat, her most prized and probably her only possession. His fur is soft and warm, and she loves the feel of it on her face. She fought to keep her goat and now she fights the urge to sell it.

Yatandou's family works hard. Life is hard in Mali. Even the youngest village members have jobs to do. The men work in the fields while the women pound millet using pounding sticks. Yatandou's stick is the stick her mother used when she was a girl.

"To get enough millet meal for one day's food, we must pound the kernels for three hours. My arms and back hurt. While I pound I dream about a new pair of earrings. I think of what it would be like to go to school and learn book sentences like my brother did. I watch a fish eagle fly where it wants to," writes Whelan.

"The women talk of bringing to the village something that will eat the millet kernels and spit out meal. My pounding stick grows heavier and heavier. I ask Mother, 'How soon will the thing that chews up the millet come to our village?' 'Not until the women in our village have enough money,' she says."

Yatandou wants to help her village. She wished she had something to sell. All she has is her soft goat, and she thinks about the fur against her cheek.

When the pounding is done, she continues with other chores. She helps to carry firewood upon her head; she serves water from gourds to her hardworking father and brother, she helps with dinner – a dinner that is often served late.

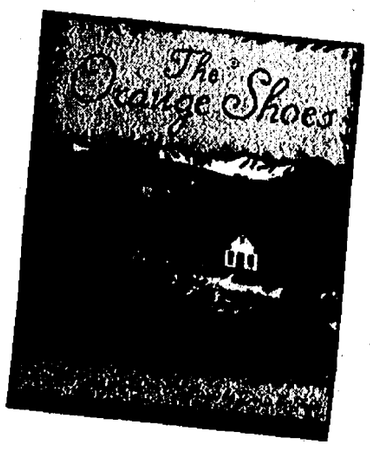
Finally, towards the end of the story she goes to the market with her mother to sell onion balls. She takes her goat. She sits by his side. With her face looking towards the ground, and arms in her lap, she thinks of her goat. Her friend. Her pet. His warm fur against her face is now just a memory locked inside. A memory. Her hope. Her future. She thinks.

"The Orange Shoes" by Trinka Hakes Noble and Illustrated by Doris Ettlinger is a story about a girl who is proud of what she doesn't have.

Delly Porter, a young school-aged girl, has a happy life. She chimes that "There was never a better Momma or Daddy than mine." Even despite their poverty and her walks to school shoeless she is content.

"So I walk a mile to school in my bare feet. But that's fine with me because I love the feel of our dirt road under my feet; the sandy places and the dried mud places and the smooth places after the road scraper's gone through."

She was content until one day a classmate, Prudy Winfield, ridiculed her for being shoeless and poor. She teased Delly saying that come winter she would get frostbite, turning her toes black until eventually they fell off. In the end, Prudy says, she would have to drop out of school because she wouldn't be able to walk, and she would end up dumb and poor.



Doris Ettlinger paints the picture beautifully. Delly's dirty feet after she walks through dirt, sand and mud to get to school and Prudy's turned up nose and sneering attitude reminds you of Nellie Olsen from the long ago series "Little House on the Prairie."

Ettlinger complements the story with her clear depiction of each character. She helps the readers see the Porter family struggling to make ends meet. Delly's mother hangs laundry outside to dry, while also watching after Delly's four siblings. Meanwhile, Delly sits off to the side, quietly drawing on the inside of old envelopes that she has opened up, laid flat and sewn together to make full-size pieces of paper.

Her nubby, eraser-less pencil performs her craft well. She imagines her picture, perfectly, in her mind and practices her strokes prior to actually drawing it. It was a good thing she doesn't have an eraser – otherwise she may not be able to draw real works of art, she thinks.

Then one day her glass half-full optimism begins to drain. Her teacher assigned a special project that requires her to decorate a shoe box, pack it with supper and then auction it off to the highest bidder at a school assembly.

"The shoebox social will be more fun because each of you will stand behind the curtain when your box is up for auction, and stick out just your shoes so the families have a clue as to who you are. Then you will eat dinner with whomever buys your box," says the teacher.

Delly returns home that evening silent. She wants to share the event with her parents, but her tight chest and pit in her stomach keeps her tongue at rest, for a while.

The look of concern on her face mixed with her gentleness makes you want to hug her tight and tell her things will get better. She asks for nothing and, is grateful for everything, especially the beautiful pair of orange shoes she saw glistening in the window of a department store. You want to cry with Delly when you learn her father spent their few dollars on the shoes instead of the tires he so desperately needed for his truck.

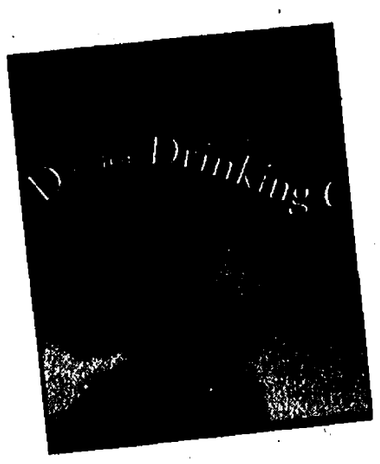
Her excitement flails as she parades her new shoes at school, but a fit of jealousy and rage ruins them and Delly returns home, silent again. To quench her tears she squeezes her eyes tight. She begins to see her art. It comes alive. It saves her shoes. It saves her heart and her family wins in the end.

Take a history lesson with Sleeping Bear Press in another release, "An African American Alphabet: D is for Drinking Gourd."

Author Nancy I. Sanders and Illustrator E.B. Lewis take us back in time to explore the contributions of African Americans from A through Z.

Our travels begin at the letter A. A is for abolitionists. "Let our people go!" they cried in speeches or with pen in hand. A is for abolitionist who were willing to take a stand." Following each rhythmic phrase is a lesson and description of the term.

"In the years before the Civil War, abolitionists were a group of people who tried to bring slavery to an end." We learn how men and women fought for their rights; and how the efforts of Frederick Douglass, an abolitionist leader escaped from bondage to lead his people to freedom.



Our journey leads us to the letter I. "I is for inventions, new gadgets for people to use. Inventors have ideas for all sorts of items from hair products to machines that make shoes."

E.B. Lewis captures the spirit of African History in his use of color and detail. Here, on the letter I, we see a scientist studying a test-tube, inventing a product.

From Cranesbill Books: Jan's blog

By Jan Loveland
Guest Writer

On Oct. 18, Cranesbill Books hosts an event that is really special. Never mind that the 16th is our 4th anniversary of opening the new store at 108 East Middle Street, although there will be some joy on my part that this milestone has been reached. The "other" occasion is the publication of "From the Vine: Exploring Michigan Wineries," a new book that is co-authored by Chelsea author Sharon Kegerreis and Lorri Hathaway of East Lansing. The evening will be a bit glitzy, with tastes of four Michigan wines and a bit of food to complement them. The authors will be in attendance to sign books, and we hope that everyone will find a new vintage that can be found within our state. Because of strict laws about this type of event, we can't admit those too young to legally imbibe, and yes, we will check.

My first experience with Michigan wine came when I was a freelancer in 1980 for the Detroit News, assigned to visit PawPaw, Mich. to write a story about Michigan's fledgling wine industry.

Suffice it to say that since then, the Michigan wine industry has grown exponentially. Who could have known that a quarter of a century later there would be enough places to visit and vintages to sample that the new book features four separate touring routes through our state, with vintages that compete internationally. As luck would have it, I am also somewhat familiar with the wine country in the Grand Traverse region, and know that for one trip up north, you can visit many tasting rooms in some of the most beautiful landscape on earth. The whole area could be the perfect getaway for an ideal combination of great views, fancy to funky cuisine, and many chances to get close to nature. Or, you could create your personal version of the movie Sideways, perhaps minus the obnoxious friend. As long as there was a designated driver, who would know what the heck you were up to.

Please join us in greeting Sharon and Lorri from 6:30 to 8 p.m. on Thursday, Oct. 18. "From the Vine" has really got the same combination of beauty and substance as the Mitten State.

Drivers gawking at police traffic stop cause tractor-trailer rollover

By Edward Freundl

Motorists slowing to observe a police traffic stop on Interstate-94 on Oct. 10 ended up causing a worse problem when a tractor-trailer rolled over and crashed in the median.

According to a Michigan State Police report, several cars were slowing down to look at a traffic stop by the MSP Hometown Security team on the right shoulder of the westbound lanes near the Jackson Road/Fletcher Road offramp.

"As traffic began to slow, other vehicles did not and began to swerve all over," said Trooper Steven Temelko of the MSP Sylvan Detachment.

The driver of the semi lost control of his rig, began to go toward the troopers, overcorrected and overturned next to their patrol vehicles.

The cab of the semi had to be cut open to remove the driver, who suffered minor injuries.

The trailer also had to be cut open to remove the cargo of flat and rolled steel and flip the truck upright.

Police did not release the identity of the truck driver, and listed "driver's error" as the cause of the accident, the report stated.

Freeway traffic was disrupted for several hours. Westbound traffic was routed onto the offramp, across the Jackson Road overpass, then back onto the onramp.

Is the man in the picture Lewis Latimer who invented the filament used in light bulbs or is it Norbert Rillieux who invented the processing of sugar or maybe it is supposed to be Thomas Mensah who was known for his research in fiber optics.

On the next page we see musicians playing their instruments. We can almost hear the trumpets and the jazzy notes rolling off the page.

"Trumpets playing to a syncopated beat, crowds forming to hear, J is for jazz and jazz musicians. There's a new song in the air!"

The jazz music fills my ears and makes me recall times spent in New Orleans or Memphis, Tenn. The taste of barbecue and collard greens satisfy my appetite and the sounds of the south are remembered.

Louis Armstrong was a genius with his trumpet, Duke Ellington brought jazz into the homes of America, and Ella Fitzgerald voice was one we failed to emulate. The artists rock on this page.

Rocking and rolling, we land on the letter O. "Outstanding athletes each do their best, inspiring both young and old. O is for Olympic medals – the bronze, the silver, the gold."

Since we can't compete with Ella Fitzgerald above, we try with Jesse Owens. But, he leaves us in the dust and has us sweating.

In 1936 at the Berlin Olympics Jesse Owens wins four gold medals in track and field. Fifty years later, Carl Lewis followed in his footsteps and also took home four gold medals in the 1984 Olympics. Remember Muhammad Ali? Well, he took home a gold medal, too.

Other recognized and award winning athletes include gymnast Dominique Dawes and ice skater Debra Thomas. And, just recently we met Vonetta Flowers at the 2002 Olympics. Flowers was the first African American to take home a gold medal in the Winter Olympics for her bobsledding victory.

Our journey ends with Y and Z.

We meet York. "Y is for York, a mountain man with the Lewis and Clark expedition. His brave explorations opened the way to new worlds for the next generation."

And, Z is for Zion and churches of faith.

"In the years leading up to the Civil War, many African American churches became stops along the Underground Railroad. Fugitive slaves were sheltered in secret hiding places on their way north to Canada, which was often referred to as the Promise Land."

Sanders and Lewis reminds us of significant moments. This is a history lesson for both young and old. Where would we be without these moments in time, these significant acts, these gems in history that have made our world glisten today.

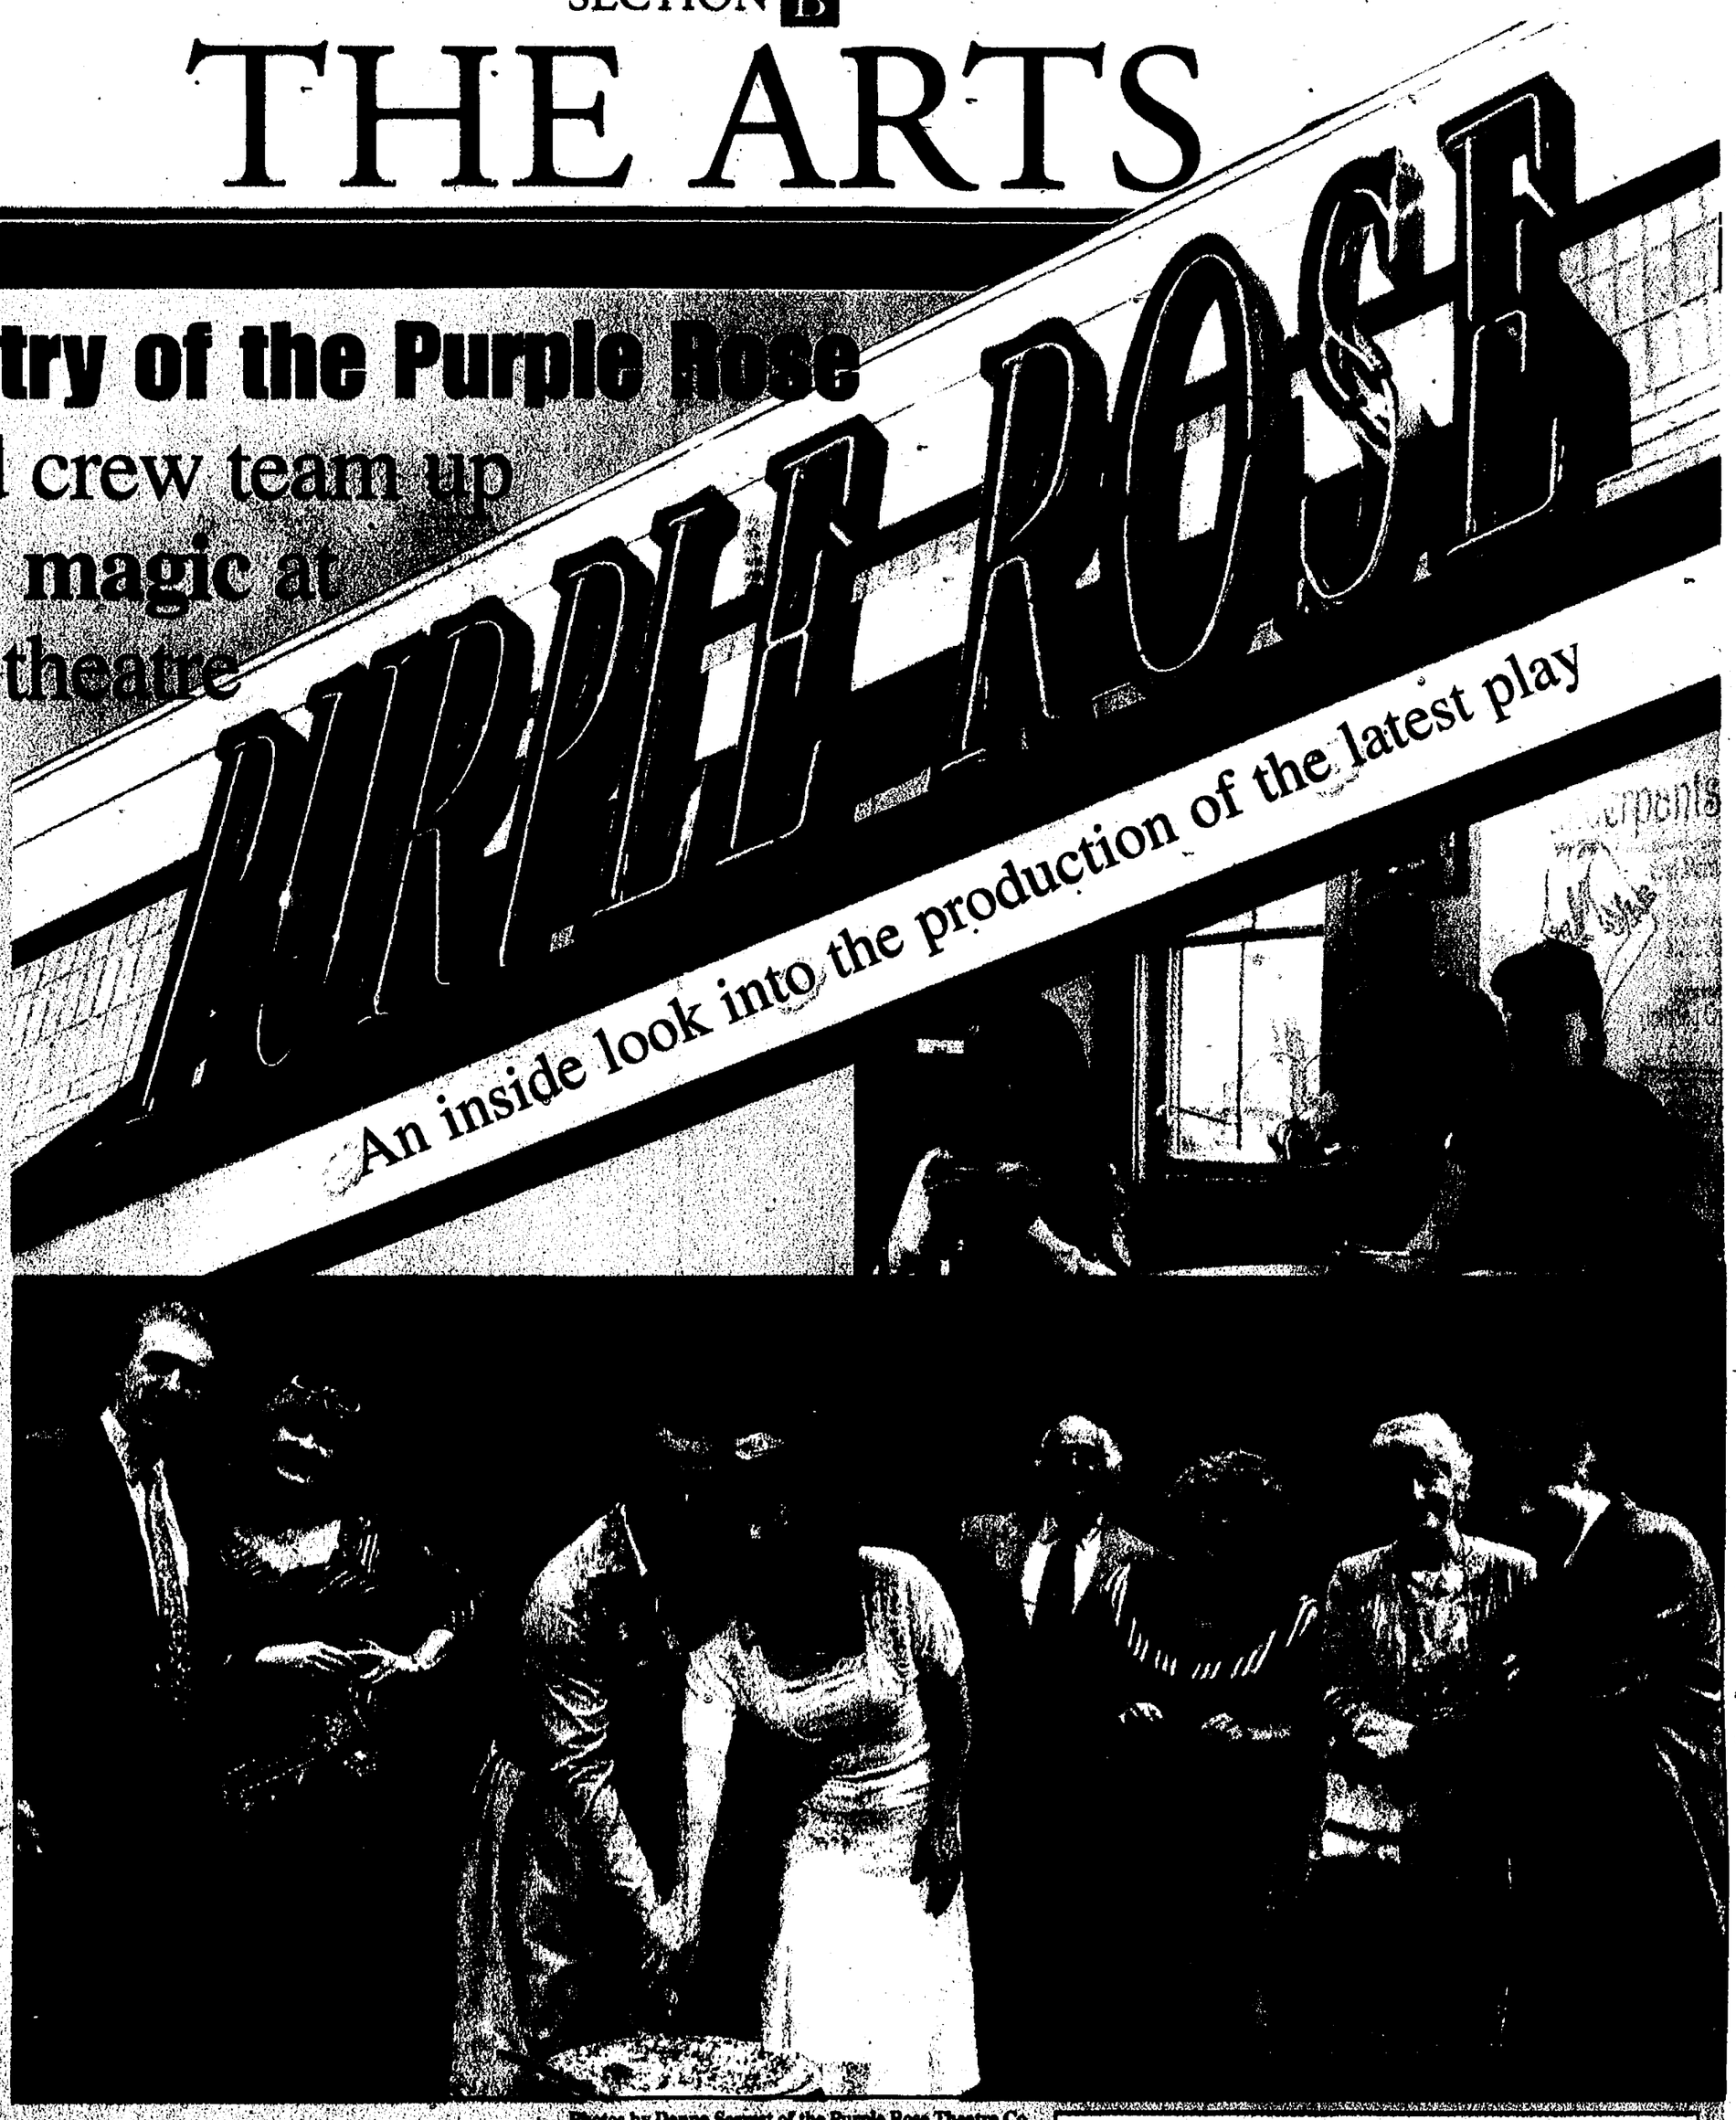
The Poetry of the Purple Rose

Cast and crew team up to create magic at Chelsea theatre



Photos by Danna Segrest of the Purple Rose Theatre Co.

The cast (above) and crew (top photo) help create a slice of life that has helped make the Purple Rose one of the most unique theaters in the country. Hours and hours of hard work by a group of dedicated - and highly talented - people help set the stage for the highly acclaimed shows theater goers have come to expect and enjoy in Chelsea.

By Terry Jacoby
Heritage Newspapers

Danna White is the lighting designer on "The Poetry of Pizza," the latest play to hit the stage at Chelsea's Purple Rose Theatre. White, who has been on the production team for the Purple Rose Theatre Co. for more than 20 years, turned the spotlight on himself during a production meeting just a few days before "Poetry" would hit the stage.

"It's a privilege to do what we get to do here and we should never take that for granted," he tells his fellow production team members. "The next few days will be very difficult and challenging. They will be long days and everybody will be working really hard, but there is no better group of people than the group we have sitting here today."

A few days later audience members gather in the lobby for some food, beverages and conversation about the latest play. Among the attendees are some local dignitaries, one of [illegible] comments about [illegible] are to see [illegible] credible high-quality performances time and again at the Purple Rose.

While White and the production team don't take the Purple Rose for granted, they should know that the audience and community don't take them for granted either. The audience gave the cast a standing ovation inside the theatre and outside the theatre they were still applauding the performance with praise and accolades.

It's this relationship – between those who put on these wonderful plays and those who get to enjoy them – that makes the Purple Rose a special place.

The Purple Rose has earned such a dramatic reputation for excellence because the people never take what they do for granted. They all understand not only the joy that comes with working at the Purple Rose, but the responsibility to live up to the reputation that they have helped create.

Longtime Artistic Director Guy Sanville says it all starts with Jeff Daniels and trickles down through the ranks. The goal, no matter a person's role, is always the same. And when the audience rises to its collective feet like it did Friday night, the goal has been met again and the reputation plays on.

Production meeting notes

- Dennis is getting the columns ready for painting.
- Bart will be repainting the proscenium rocks.
- The moon needs to be installed before the Wisteria goes up.
- Qarie's character shoes are scuffing the floor and Meghann will take a look to see what she can do.
- Danna brought in samples of embroidered and printed pillow colors.
- Guy likes the black and chrome pizza cutter and would prefer a steel blade.
- Danna is considering different colored lights for the "glow" coming from the pizza boxes.
- Meghann will still need to fit Qarie, Sarah and Hugh.
- Jessie will meet with Meghann after the dress parade to discuss the dress list for the show.
- Meghann will go shopping tomorrow for Grant's coat and Dave's shoes.
- Tom has finished the sound cues and has phone rings ready to use.
- Dennis is getting the columns ready for painting.

Production meeting

The "cast" of the Purple Rose gathers around a conference table as the afternoon sun begins to fade outside through the windows. But this particular cast is void of actors, but certainly not of characters.

Meghann O'Malley Powell, the show's costume designer, puts her Diet Coke on the table and begins taking a string of pink fabric out of a sweater. "The pink doesn't match the shirt," she says.

This is O'Malley Powell's debut as costume designer at the Purple Rose. But she is fitting in like a comfortable . . . well . . . a comfortable sweater – with or without the pink.

Next to her is Bartley Bauer, who is at the other end of the experience timeline. Bauer helped build the Purple Rose, lending a hand to Jeff Daniels' dream of bringing a world-class theater to his hometown. Since then, Bauer has built more than 20 sets "in his spare time" away from his full-time job at the Chelsea Lumber Co.

Across the table is Danna Segrest, who is the properties designer. She volunteered to help out backstage during the Purple Rose's first production and has been helping out ever since. She now wears the dual tag of Associate Artist and Production Photographer.

Alan Ribant enters the conference room and takes a seat – on the floor. There are no more chairs to be had and the room becomes sitting-room-only. Even Ribant, who like Segrest is an original member of this Purple Rose behind-the-scene's cast, is treated just like everyone else "in the family."

While everyone sitting around the table – and on the floor – are dressed differently, they all share one of the Purple Rose signature accessories – a smile. It's impossible to pick out which "cast" member is new and which one has been here since the first walls were erected.

Welcome to production meeting No. 9 for "The Poetry of Pizza." And "yes," there is even a pizza box sitting on the table. But "no," apparently not everyone is sick of pizza – yet.

Also on the table are details, details and more details. Today, those details include when the lead actress is getting highlights put in her hair, what style the table cloth should be, the color of the backdrop and the tassels in the pillows. Nothing – the pizza needs to be precut and put in the refrigerator so the toppings aren't so hot they slide off when the actors take a piece – is taken for granted.

Production meetings are an essential part of a production. "They help everyone stay focused on what needs to be done," Ribant says.

While at times it may appear that everyone is doing their own thing, the reality is everyone knows what everyone else is doing. And that's the only way this cast can pull this off. And this is tearing down the set of "Sea of Fools" and opening the curtain on "The Poetry of Pizza" in just two weeks.

earlier by a group of local musicians, is played and greeted with oohs, aahs and applause. It seems to be a perfect fit for a particular scene. But things can, and often, change.

"What we leave out is always more important than what we leave in so don't get married to anything," Sanville says. "The show got better today. No doubt about it."

Magic

Sanville likes to talk about how "things just happen" at the Purple Rose.

"We had a glorious experience today," says Sanville, who celebrated his 12th year as the PRTC's artistic director in May. "I mentioned to the sound designer that I wanted a classical guitar sound. Just a little riff.

"Today, Sound Designer Tom Whalen asks me to come upstairs and there is a trio up there. All young men. A classical guitar player, a violinist and a drummer. And they play me something they wrote, and I am fighting back the tears because I could hear it fitting perfectly under one of the love scenes.

"That's the kind of magic that happens here."

While some of that "magic" is luck or happenstance, much of it comes from Sanville's ability to surround himself with people capable of pulling rabbits out of hats. Qarie Marshall's road to Chelsea began on the other side of the world. But what started off as a pit stop appears to have ended at the finish line.

"I never want to leave," says Marshall, who is hopelessly brilliant as the hopelessly in love Soran Saleen.

And it all started with a phone call to Daniels.

"I was heading out to Los Angeles and I was looking for some advice because I had never auditioned there before," Marshall says. "I didn't know Jeff, but my mom grew up in Chelsea and I still have an aunt and uncle who live here so I thought he might take my call.

"I then heard from Guy who asked if I would have a look at this so I stopped here and he asked me to do a couple of monologues so I did one. Then I got one sentence into my second one and he stops me. I figure, this can't be going good.

"He then asks me if I would read a scene with Michelle (Mountain). So we went and read the scene and he asks me if I can do a cartwheel. I was like, yeah, do you want me to show you. He said no and we went to his office and asked me if I wanted the part. I read the play and fell in love with it."

Mountain has a similar story on her first meeting with Sanville. But she didn't come from the other side of the world. More like the other side of the street.

Mountain, who plays Professor Sarah Middleton in "The Poetry of Pizza," was moving to Michigan from the west coast because her husband landed a job at the University of Michigan.

"We didn't know anyone in Michigan and I thought my life was over," she says, laughing at the thought now. "An actress friend of mine from Seattle told me about the Purple Rose and suggested I check it out."

After meeting Sanville, Mountain landed an audition for "Book of Days."

"I think he rigged it because there were only four other people auditioning for my part and about 20 for another part," Mountain says. "And he told me what to do with my hair."

Mountain then tells her "favorite Guy story."

"My husband was doing design on the next play so he was in meetings with Guy, and Guy told Vince that I had been cast but asked him not to tell me because he wanted to call and tell me himself. And you never did," says Michelle, glaring at Guy. "Five days went by and a good friend of ours from Seattle was visiting and finally my husband couldn't take it anymore and yelled out that I got the job."

Talent scout

Whether its finding Qarie from across the pond or discovering Michelle from across town, Guy Sanville has always been able to spot talent.

"That's my job," he says. "I have to find and attract talented people and not just actors but other people as well. I think with all humility that I'm a scary judge of talent. But I think talent is only 1 percent of it and 99 percent is about other stuff."

Sanville also doesn't need a whole lot of time to determine if that 99 percent can cut it at the Purple Rose. Not everyone who walks through the door has what it takes to make it all the way to the stage.

"I can look in someone's eyes and know," says Sanville, who has helped fill such wonderful casts as "Escanaba in Love," "Guest Artist," "Across the Way," "Rain Dance," and "Bus Stop." "I can give someone a hug and know. I can listen to someone do three sentences of monologue and know if they got the chops to work here. I know that can be rude, but I don't need to hear the rest of the monologue."

Sanville didn't have to hear a word from Mountain to know she had the chops.

"I was moved just watching her walk into the room," he says. "There are people who expand a room when they show up. That's something these two people (Mountain and Marshall) share. There are other people, for whatever reason, who suck the air out of the room."

There isn't one adjective to describe a person who has what it takes. Charisma, confidence, charm, emotional, humor all play a role in an actor landing a role. Sanville's checklist also includes industrious, ambitious, honest, generous and fearless.

"We now have seven people in our company who are fearless when they are on that stage," he says. "And by that I mean when they walk out onto that stage, they put everything out there. All the pathetic sides of their nature is on display. All the joyous sides of their nature. Everything they are as a human being is there to see because that's all you have as an actor. All you have as an actor is yourself."

Confidence

Mountain says "support breeds confidence" and the actors at the Purple Rose get so much support they can't help but feel confident when they step out under those hot lights.

"You can't get out on that stage without a measure of confidence," says Mountain, who has successfully transformed herself from a neglected and lonely wife in "The Subject was Roses" to the wife of a football coach in "When the Lights Come On" to now a single woman in Copenhagen who suddenly falls in love with a pizza maker in the "The Poetry of Pizza."

Marshall says confidence is about believing you belong on that stage, at that moment and in that part.

"You have to have a level of self-belief to do the job successfully," says Marshall, who is just as likeable as his character Soran Saleen. "Self belief is not arrogance. Self belief is realizing you belong and that you can learn and that you can get better."

Where arrogance comes into play, he says, is when you start believing you can't learn or you can't get better.

"Confidence is a good starting point to where you can be open and allow yourself to grow," says Marshall, who brings the conversation back to inside the walls of the Purple Rose.

"Guy spots this incredible talent, just look at the understudies, they are such talented people. They can all do it. And it's because they are allowed to do it here because this is such a non-threatening place. It's like Guy says, it's magic."

"It all starts with Jeff," Sanville says, when describing not only the mystique, but the purpose of the Purple Rose.

"The place is a reflection of his personality. He's very busy these days, but he knows everything that's happening here and he's writing a new play for us.

"But acting is scary and good actors make it look easy, but it's really, really hard. We are very lucky to get the quality of actors we get here.

In Review: 'The Poetry of Pizza'

Requesting a second slice, please

By Sean Dalton
Staff Writer

If Deborah Brevoort's "The Poetry of Pizza" was actually a deep-dish pie you could probably accuse it of being a bit busy when it comes to the toppings.

Despite that, the current Purple Rose Theatre production is still very entertaining and seemed to be an even bigger hit with female audience members.

This might have something to do with the performance leaning more in the direction of romance than comedy.

The heart of this story involves the love that quickly buds and slowly blossoms between Professer Sarah Middleton, an American poetry professor on a fellowship in Copenhagen, and Soran Saleen, a pizza maker and refugee from Iraqi-occupied Kurdistan.

That blossoming is the major source of conflict throughout the production's plot, as the pair of unlikely lovebirds must bridge personal and cultural chasms before they can truly embrace.

To put it bluntly, "Pizza" is a great live performance to invite a wife, girlfriend or general date to see.

The first thing that strikes the viewer is just how busy things are on stage. With the Purple Rose's limited stage space, it's a wonder that director Guy Sanville was able to have multiple scenes happening simultaneously without the audience missing a slice of the action.

The concurrent scenes were jarring at first, but after their second appearance it became a welcome style choice for delivering the story.

In retrospect, they added a much needed element of action to a play that would have otherwise only reached such highs at key points in the dialogue or during some of the silly pizza-tossing moments in the pizzeria.

Essentially the show's direction went a long way to make it entertaining, as imagining the combined scenes broken up individually conjures up thoughts of a longer, duller performance.

While the busyness of the scenes was welcome, the themes were a little too busy.

The story of love, tolerance and cultural differences between main characters Middleton, played by Michelle Mountain, and Saleen, played by Qarie Marshall, were a great focus.

Unfortunately, those themes overlapped with the other characters, each of whom seemed to have their own variation of one or all of those themes taking place between them.

Right before the curtain falls, you'll scratch your head at how some of the relationships are concluded due to the above or some of the characters meeting for the first time and crossing the finish line with pairings that had struggled mightily over almost the entirety of "Pizza's" two acts.

With the aforementioned multiple actions happening, it can be difficult to catch every little detail, but judging from reviews of some of the prototype performances of "Pizza," it's easy to take the good with the bad.

The theater company's performance of Brevoort's play is considered its world premiere, since the play had gone through multiple prior performances to work out the kinks. Apparently the polishing time was well spent.

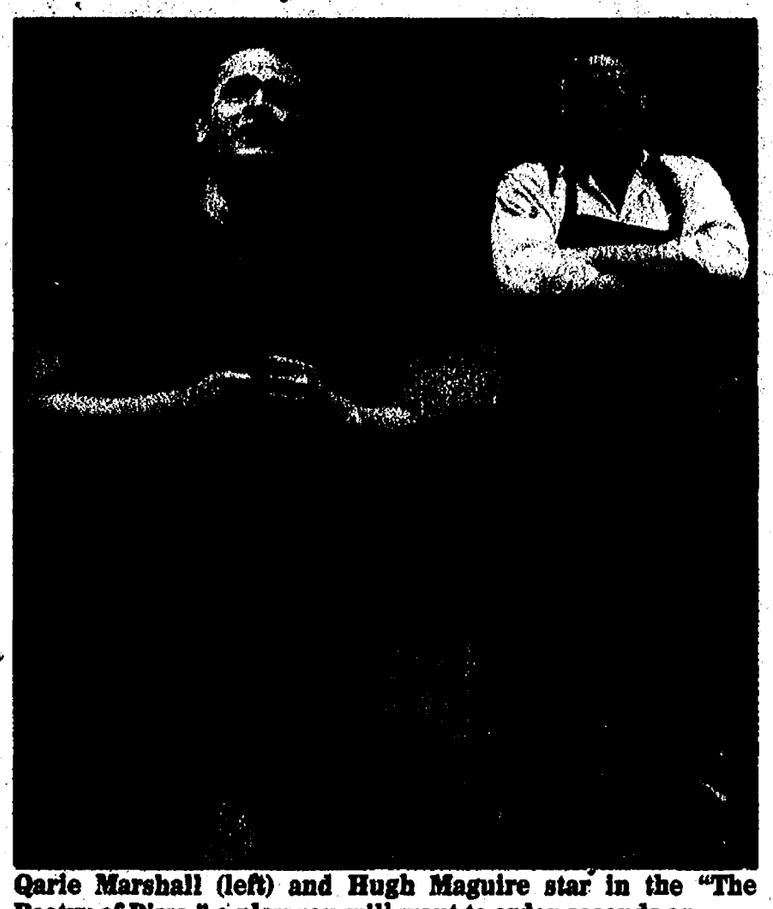
The cast did a wonderful job of bringing these characters to life and infusing them with their own charm and sense of humor.

Sandra Birch was wonderful as Middleton's best friend and telephone girlfriend, Pam Adams.

The pair mostly converse over the phone, which isn't all that different from two characters conversing in person on the Purple Rose stage.

Birch is used sparingly, but knows how to amp up the laughs and smiles when on stage, with a surgical knowledge of audience funnybones.

Grant R. Krause plays morally suspect Danish professor, Heino Anderson.



Qarie Marshall (left) and Hugh Maguire star in the "The Poetry of Pizza," a play you will want to order seconds on.

Krause's skill at not making Anderson hated should be noted, as it's important to understand that the character's intellectual alignment is the reason for his actions at a couple of key moments in the story. It should also be noted that Krause was singled out in our review of "Sea of Fools." After seeing "Pizza," it's obvious that it was the part and not the performer that was slightly lacking.

Both Krause and Birch were like anchovies here — delicious and even used a little too sparingly.

Sarah Benoit and Ruth Crawford do a great job of playing a pair of Danish recluses who mostly interact over the telephone via their agoraphobia support group.

Benoit, as Olga Ouland, is a great character who starts out as absurdly comedic, but crosses over into more dramatic parts of the production later on.

Crawford, as Inga Enebold, more falls into the background and surfaces occasionally for comedic support, until the end.

David Daoust's performance as Ule Enebold, Inga's husband, starts out strong as a great source of laughs as he frequents the pizzeria that is the major setting of "Pizza," but the character never really works as a component of the more dramatic, serious part of the story.

Poor Ule ends up wearing out his welcome, more due to the script's strength than Daoust's doing.

Hugh Maquire also turns in a great performance as Rebar Frie, the proprietor of the plot-central pizzeria.

The character is a bit uneven at times, appearing comedic and charismatic like a smooth-talking international visitor, but at others can be a bit antagonistic.

He is obviously a counterpart to Pam Adams' many Middle Eastern prejudices, with his own misconceptions about Americans.

Luckily these parts of the script deliver some of the heartier guffaws.

Audiences will walk out of the theater feeling good the night of the performance, but upon reflecting on "Pizza" the next morning might feel that some things were a little too convenient.

What's most important is that there is a good time to be had here.

PURPLE

"Michelle was like me when she got here. She just wouldn't leave. I knew I had found a creative home and if I had to bring a shovel to work and shovel the sidewalk I would. This was where I wanted to be."

Waking up excited

While Sanville is comfortable on the stage, he's at home in rehearsals, shaping and creating a play worthy of being put on the Park Street marquee.

"Directing is what I was meant to do and to be in that rehearsal hall and that's what it's all about for me," Sanville says. "And I would love to just rehearse this play for the next six months because not only do I love the play, but I like being around this cast of people. They are a beautiful, smart, funny, talented and gracious people. My prayer is to just not screw this up and it's all right there. We just have to execute it. This is one of those special ones."

It didn't take Marshall long to realize that the Purple Rose is one of those "special ones."

"The major difference is the actors here have everything taken care of for them," says Marshall, who has was trained at The Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts in London and has been performing mostly in England. "It's not spoiling the actors, it's facilitating them so they think of absolutely nothing else but their job. This allows them to throw themselves into their job. Everything else is taken out of their hands."

Marshall hasn't experienced this level of care at any other theater. "I have never come across this anywhere else," he says. "And every actor who walks through that door never wants to leave. I certainly don't.

"I wake up every morning and the only thing I have to think about is the play and the other actors and what we're going to do together. This is the way things should work in the rest of the acting world. Everyone is allowed to focus on their job and it takes away the excuses and you know you can just show up and throw yourself into your work. It's a joy to come here. You go home exhausted, but you wake up excited."

Says Mountain: "If you need a band aid, you turn around and someone is handing you a band aid. If you need water, someone is handing you a water."

Sanville and the two lead actors agree that "The Poetry of Pizza" is one of those special plays. When they talk about it they smile and laugh, reflecting on the play's powerful reach.

"It's a very funny play, but it's a play about hope and I think we can all use a little hope in our lives," Sanville says. "It's a man, a woman and a problem. People can overcome their differences."

Sanville says that each play at the Purple Rose is a "glorious adventure into the unknown." And the cast – both on and off the stage – work hard to make each adventure meaningful and enjoyable.

And you can be sure they don't take the opportunity for granted.

Athletes take game to next level

Chelsea and Dexter athletes are busy making their marks athletically at colleges across the state and throughout the country.

This listing is by no means the end all and be all regarding local athletes suiting up for their respective colleges, but simply a short rundown highlighting a few individuals. Look for future columns to spotlight additional athletes and give credit to as many former local standouts as possible.

Over in Chelsea, freshman Maggie Manville has earned the starting nod at keeper for Eastern Michigan University's women's soccer team. Last season, Manville was named first-team All-State. Freshman Sarah Reinhardt, a second-team All-State selection last [illegible] for the Bulldogs, made this season's University of Michigan's women's club soccer team. Freshman Kait Ehman, an All-State honorable mention pick last year for Chelsea, earned a spot on EMU's women's soccer squad as a walk-on this season.

Dexter freshman Sarah Christian is a key member of Albion College's women's soccer team in 2007. At Hope College, Chelsea sophomore Ausable Schwiebert is currently in his second season as a midfielder for the Flying Dutchmen men's soccer squad.

Chelsea's Maggie Dusbiber helped lead Albion College's volleyball team to a 27-30, 30-27, 30-25, 30-27 victory over Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association opponent Tri-State University last week. The sophomore libero finished with a team-high 27 digs. Also playing for the Britons this season is Chelsea's Hannah Osbeck.

Dexter sophomore Jenny Streiter is an outside hitter for the University of Michigan-Dearborn volleyball team this year.

Chelsea trounces Pioneers

By Don Richter

Chelsea put the pedal to the metal and never let up last Friday defeating host Ann Arbor Pioneer 30-16 at Hollway Field.

The Bulldogs (8-0, 7-0 Southeastern Conference), ranked No. 2 in the state in Division 3, were unstoppable on the ground against the Pioneers (2-6, 2-5 SEC) rushing for 290 yards on 42 attempts.

Sophomore standout Nick Hill led the running attack finishing with a game-high 197 yards on 25 carries with four touchdowns.

"Pioneer is a very good team," said Chelsea coach Brad Bush. "This is a very good win. For us to go undefeated in the league, that was a goal. We want to go 9-0."

After Chelsea blocked a 28-yard field goal attempt on Ann Arbor's opening drive, the Bulldogs scored on their first drive of the night as junior Michael Roberts split the uprights on a 32-yard field goal. With the boot, Chelsea led 3-0 with 2:36 left in the first quarter.

Bulldog senior quarterback Jeff Adams hands off to senior halfback Chris Schmelz in Chelsea's Southeastern Conference match-up against Ann Arbor Pioneer last Friday.

Pioneer answered as Jeremy Ross kicked a 27-yard field goal tying the contest at 3-3 with 7:19 remaining in the second quarter.

On the ensuing kickoff, Bulldog senior Chris Schmelz returned the ball 49 yards to the Pioneer 41-yard line. Eight plays later, Hill scored on a four-yard run. With Roberts' point after touchdown kick, Chelsea led 10-3 with 3:59 left in the first half.

As the second quarter ended, Ross blasted a 41-yard field goal, trimming the Bulldogs' lead to 10-6 as the two teams entered the locker room.

To begin the third quarter, Chelsea drove 60 yards in three plays as Hill busted up the middle for a 20-yard TD run, giving the Bulldogs a 16-6 advantage with 11:06 remaining in the third frame.

Pioneer responded on its next possession as Ross nailed a 24-yard field goal closing the gap to 16-9 with

Bulldogs third at Gabriel Richard invite

By Don Richter
Sports Editor

Chelsea's boys' cross country team finished third at last Saturday's Ann Arbor Gabriel Richard Invitational at Hudson Mills Metropark.

The Bulldogs ended up with 57 points.

Winning the 10-squad race was Flint Powers Catholic with 51 points. Hanover-Horton was second with 53 points.

"This meet featured three very closely matched teams," said Chelsea coach Eric Swager. "We were still able to earn a trophy in spite of our top finisher being disqualified for a technical reason. This doesn't take away the fact that six of seven varsity runners ran within five seconds or under their lifetime bests."

Leading Chelsea was August Pappas who stopped the clock in 16:54. Apparently Pappas was disqualified for wearing a watch while competing.

Placing seventh overall for the Bulldogs was Peter Wilke with a time of 17:09.

Teddy Eyster was eighth, also in 17:09, while Nick Hewitt was 10th in 17:13 for Chelsea.

Mark Smith crossed the line 15th in 17:43, while Geoff Smith-Woolams was 17th in 17:49 and Dominic Conybeare 30th in 18:04 for the Bulldogs.

"Nick Hewitt, Mark Smith and Dominic Conybeare all had exceptional races," Swager said. "They battled hard and moved up during the last two miles. I was truly pleased with the entire squad's competitive effort."

Chelsea lost to the host Wildcats 13-25, 22-25 in the invitational semifinals.

In pool play, the Bulldogs played well, defeating Grosse Ile 25-18, 25-16, Salem 25-15, 25-18 and Allen Park Cabrini 25-22, 25-20. Chelsea split with Walled Lake Central 25-23, 16-25.

Junior middle blocker Carolyn Olsen (6-foot) added 23 kills for Chelsea.

Junior setter Megan Dunn finished with a team-high 93 assists for the Bulldogs.

"The team played well in pool play throughout the day and earned the second seed in the tournament," said Chelsea coach Laura Cleveland.

On Oct. 9, host Chelsea lost a five-game dual match marathon to Ann Arbor Pioneer.

The Bulldogs won Games 2 and 3.

"We were ahead 22-20 in Game 1 and were not able to pass the ball effectively enough to get an effective attack," Cleveland said. "We played very well in Games 2 and 3. In Game 5 it was a see-saw battle to the end with Pioneer being able to kill the ball effectively on the last couple of points that decided the match."

Despite dropping the last two games and eventually the match, Cleveland said she was pleased with how her squad performed.

Maher paces Chelsea

By Don Richter
Sports Editor

Chelsea's girls' cross country team finished seventh at last Saturday's Ann Arbor Gabriel Richard Invitational at Hudson Mills Metropark.

The Bulldogs ended up with 176 points.

Winning the 12-squad meet was Marshall with 57 points. Dexter was second with 61 points, while Flint Powers Catholic was third with 79 points.

"We ran very well today," said Chelsea coach Pat Clarke. "The field contained four state-ranked teams which explains the seventh-place finish even though we ran well."

Leading Chelsea individually was sophomore Courtney Maher who crossed the line 27th with a season best time of 21:12.

Julie Beaumont was 35th in 21:36, while Samantha Newbound was 36th in 21:37 for the Bulldogs.

Junior Nicole Hopp finished 41st in 21:56, while senior Nikki Oberholtzer was 42nd in 21:56 and junior Katie Lindauer 50th in a season best 22:19.

"Nicole and Nikki ran in the 21's for the first time," Clarke said.

In the JV race, Jenny Squires paced the Bulldogs placing 11th in a season best clocking of 22:35.

Bailie Simpson finished 18th in a season best 22:53, while Lauren Johnson was 21st in 23:08 and Stephanie Becker 26th in 23:22 for Chelsea.

Stasi Kanellopoulos ended up 30th in 23:27, while Nikki Laeder was 41st in 23:44, Katy Martin 81st in 25:26 and Emma Argiroff 98th in 28:06 for the Bulldogs.

"We continue to improve and our attitude is intense heading into our most important time of the season," Clarke said. "I hope we can peak in the next two weeks."

Cleveland said Pioneer is a strong offensive team with good height.

"That caused us some trouble defensively," she said. "They (Pioneer) have won a couple of tournaments this year, so for us to play them as tough as we did signals the improvement our team has made and is continuing to make at the right time in the season.

"I look for us to get stronger as a group and to continue to improve through our last two league matches as we head toward districts. The competition we have played in our league and tournament schedule will prepare us well."

Stewart led Chelsea scoring three goals for a hat trick. Lotz scored the Bulldogs' final goal.

Recording the shutout in net for Chelsea were keepers Cameron Beatty and Beneteau.

"This was the most complete game we have played this year," said Chelsea coach Matt Pedlow. "At both ends of the field we dominated play. All of the players were able to see significant time in the game."

Chelsea wins regional

By Don Richter
Sports Editor

Chelsea's boys' tennis team finished first at last Thursday's state Division 3 regional at Trenton.

The title was the Bulldogs' fifth straight regional championship. With the win, Chelsea qualified for the Division 3 state final for the sixth consecutive year.

"Of the five regional championships, other than the first, this was the most rewarding," said Chelsea coach Rahn Rosentreter. "With three returners from last year and nine new players, I was proud how they blended together and played hard through many difficult times."

The Bulldogs bested the competition with 25 points.

The host Trojans placed second with 15 points, while Dearborn Divine Child ended up with 10 points.

"We finished with seven teams (or individuals) in the finals," Rosentreter said.

In singles play, Chelsea's Josh Stiles finished first capturing a regional title at the No. 1 flight. Stiles ended the competition undefeated on the day. He won the regional final in straight sets 6-1, 6-1.

At No. 2 singles, Chris LaDuke placed first winning a regional title for the Bulldogs. He also went undefeated for the tournament. LaDuke won his final match 2-6, 6-1, 6-2.

"Chris, who has three regional medals from playing doubles, now has one in singles," Rosentreter said.

At No. 4 singles, Chelsea's Mike Kozma was a regional champion, going unbeaten throughout the regional. He prevailed in the final match 6-2, 4-6, 6-2.

In doubles, all four Bulldog flights advanced to the regional final.

The Chelsea duo of Wesley Fritzemeier and Zach Gier won 6-4, 7-6(3) at the No. 1 flight.

"They showed true grit battling back after falling behind 5-2 in second (game)," Rosentreter said.

At No. 2 doubles, Corey Vandervoort and Jordan Veenstra finished first winning 7-5, 6-1 in the final for the Bulldogs.

William Dark and T.J. DeRosia earned a regional title winning a three-set marathon 6-4, 2-6, 6-1 for the crown.

The Division 3 state final is Friday and Saturday at Stowe Stadium on the campus of Kalamazoo College.

Beach runners earn medals

Chelsea's Beach Middle School cross country team competed in the Chelsea Invitational Sept. 29 at Hudson Mills Metropark.

Earning medals for the Bulldogs were Jessica Battaglia, Danielle Dahl, Megan Hall, Elaine Johnson, Laura Lodewyk, Miranda Ostrowski, Bryce Bradley, Simone Cone and Bourke Lodewyk.

"At the Chelsea Invitational, the weather was great for running," said Chelsea coach Stephanie Roehm. "I am very excited to announce that 15 runners ran their personal best time for the season at that race. I am very proud of the entire team for their hard work and dedication this season so far."

On Sept. 26, Beach participated in a jamboree at Hudson Mills. The Bulldog boys' and girls' teams both placed fourth out of six squads at the meet. Placing in the top 10 for Chelsea at the jamboree were Bradley and Dahl.

On Sept. 21, Beach competed in the Jackson Invitational. Receiving medals in the race for the Bulldogs were Bradley, Dahl and Johnson.

Schwarze makes final

By Don Richter
Sports Editor

Chelsea junior Krystin Schwarze qualified for the Division 2 state final at last Thursday's regional match, shooting an 83 at El Dorado Golf Course in Mason.

As a team, the Bulldogs were unable to advance to the final. Only the top three teams qualified for the Division 2 state match.

Winning the regional was DeWitt with a score of 345.

East Lansing was second carding a 359, while defending Division 2 state champion Dexter was third with a 360 tally.

Schwarze, who missed last year's state final by one stroke, qualified as an individual. Her 83 was the 15th best score in all the Division 2 regional matches throughout the state.

The top Division 2 score was recorded by DeWitt junior Liz Nagel with a 77. East Lansing sophomore Bea Murray and Mt. Pleasant senior Leah Grawburg each shot a 78.

The two-day Division 2 state final is Friday and Saturday at Forest Akers West Golf Course on the campus of Michigan State University.

Last year, Emily Hardcastle, now playing Division I golf at the University of Toledo, led Chelsea finishing 12th individually. As a team, the Bulldogs were unable to qualify, though their regional score of 377 was better than seven squads that advanced to the state match.

3:50 left in the third quarter.

In the fourth quarter, Hill scored on a two-yard run, leaping over the pile for the TD. Roberts hit the PAT and Chelsea upped its margin to 23-9 with 8:43 remaining in the game.

On Ann Arbor's following possession, senior receiver James Wade (6-foot-3, 185), one of the area's best all around players, nabbed an eight-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Nader Furrha. Ross kicked the extra point, bringing the Pioneers closer at 23-16 with 6:11 left on the clock.

The Bulldogs' running game was too much for the Pioneers, however, as Chelsea scored on its next drive as Hill bolted through a sliver of a hole scoring on a 21-yard run. Roberts' PAT was good and the Bulldogs ended the scoring at 30-16 with 2:35 remaining in the fourth quarter.

Besides Hill's 197 yards, senior quarterback Jeff Adams added 65 yards rushing on nine attempts, while Schmelz had 24 yards on four tries and Donny Riedel four yards on four carries.

Marshall Thomas led Ann Arbor with 57 yards on 15 attempts.

Adams finished 4-of-4 for 30 yards passing. Furrha was 17-of-27 for 191 yards and one TD.

Bulldog senior linebackers Taylor Hopkins (left) and James Connelly look to the sideline for the defensive call versus Ann Arbor Pioneer last Friday.

Schmelz led the receiving corps with two catches for 18 yards.

Wade had eight receptions for 96 yards for Ann Arbor.

Defensively, Stu Mann, Justin Swarthout and Justin Hoffman each recorded a sack for the Bulldogs.

Senior linebacker Taylor Hopkins led Chelsea with 11 tackles. Mann added eight, while Dean Roberts had seven stops and sophomore Scott Rhodes six tackles for the Bulldogs.

"I'm very pleased with our guys," Bush said. "But they know we have a chance to do something special. Our guys never seem to get too excited. They've stayed focused all season."

Chelsea next hosts Milan (7-1) Friday at 7 p.m. The Big Reds are ranked No. 7 in the state in Division 4.

JV Football

Chelsea's JV football team lost to visiting Ann Arbor Pioneer 28-14 last Thursday.

The Bulldogs (4-4) have dropped their last three contests.

"The good news is that we've been very competitive in all of our games this year except one," said Chelsea coach Chris Orlandi. "The team is frustrated right now, but we're looking to end our season on a great note against Milan next week."

Scoring for Chelsea against Ann Arbor was Zack Giller, with two touchdown runs. Tyler Zegarzewski kicked both extra points.

Dakota Cooley and Luke Dehring also played well for the Bulldogs offensively. On defense, Trevor Mattson, Kasey Whitley and Scott Devol stood out defensively for Chelsea.

The Bulldogs conclude the regular season visiting Milan Thursday at 7 p.m.

Freshman Football

Chelsea's freshman football team lost to visiting Ann Arbor Pioneer 42-22 last Thursday.

"We had seven turnovers in the game," said Chelsea coach Dennis Strzyzewski. "We threw four picks in the first half and three of them led to easy touchdowns. Really, that was the game."

Scoring for the Bulldogs (3-4-1) were Matt Gillespie, Joey Newland, Andrew Koch and Charlie Hess.

Playoff pairings Sunday

High school football teams around the state will huddle around their television sets Sunday at 6:30 p.m. to find out the qualifiers and pairings for the 2007 Michigan High School Athletic Association football state playoffs during the Selection Sunday Show, exclusively on Fox Sports Net Detroit.

The 30-minute program, hosted by FSN's Mickey York and Cameron Wong, will provide a rundown of the 256 teams that have qualified for the MHSAA playoffs, as well as their first round match-ups and game sites.

"The Selection Sunday Show has created a great atmosphere for the beginning of the playoffs, as teams gather together to celebrate their great season, and then watch to find out about their tournament draw," said John Johnson, communications director for the MHSAA. "Selection Sunday is one of the biggest television shows we do with FSN all year long, and it's also one of the biggest nights of the year for our Web site, mhsaa.com."

Following the completion of the Selection Sunday Show at about 7 p.m., the MHSAA Web site – mhsaa.com — will provide the complete list of playoff qualifiers and first round pairings. Actual game times will be added to the list the following day as they are determined and provided by the participating schools.

For the pre-district and district rounds of the playoffs, the game time will be determined by the host school when the distance between the competing schools is within 75 miles. Friday games may be played at 7 or 7:30 p.m. For pre-district games scheduled Oct. 27, unless the participating schools mutually agree to a different time, games will be played at 7 p.m., and if a facility does not have lights, the game time will be 2:30 p.m.

District final games scheduled for Nov. 3, may be played at 1, 7 or 7:30 p.m., or a mutually agreed upon time.

The pre-district Saturday times were set by the MHSAA Representative Council to minimize conflicts with statewide standardized testing taking place that day.

The hunt is upon us

Technological advances making things much easier

By Mike Zielinski
The News-Herald

Technology has changed deer hunting in a number of ways, especially when it comes to clothing.

Warm, lightweight, waterproof clothing is the norm today. For archers, camouflage colors come in various hues and patterns to match the terrain. While some Michigan hunters are adept at still-hunting, most opt for treestands or ground blinds.

Being a stand hunter also means being prepared to stay in the woods the whole day if you really want the best chance for success. This is especially true here during the rut from the middle of October into late November.

A daypack, properly stocked, can make staying on a stand a lot easier, especially if it contains plenty of good, nourishing food.

I have two packs for deer hunting — a small fanny pack I take on every trip and a larger, full-size backpack that I carry during cold weather or if I'm planning on spending the whole day on a stand.

My fanny pack is not meant for survival gear although it can be very handy in that situation. It contains my cellphone and portable radios.

The hunting pack is more of a comfort carrier to be used throughout the day. It also should include standard items most hunters will carry during the hunting season: A small first aid kit, a compass and GPS unit, a map of the hunting area, insect repellant, toilet paper, sanitary wipes (both kept in separate, zipped plastic freezer bags), a flashlight and extra batteries, extra gloves, waterproof matches or a lighter, a drag rope, plastic bags for the deer's heart and liver and a sharp knife to field dress an animal.

The knife I prefer has a blade with a rounded tip. I can put a small hole in the animal's loose gut skin and, using the dressing blade inserted under the skin, make my main incision quickly and cleanly without cutting into the membrane that surrounds the entrails.

Every hunter should have one.

In addition to the items I've listed, a set of trail markers are a neat way to get to and from your blind quickly and safely in the dark. I prefer a plastic type that clips on to the tree.

It has reflective tape on both sides and is easy to place on the tree or remove when the season is over.

A small vacuum bottle I received as a gift keeps hot beverages incredibly hot for long periods of time. It will keep about 10 ounces of tea, coffee, hot chocolate or soup hot for more than 10 hours. No matter how much or how little you drink, the liquid in the bottle stays hot.

Another piece of gear I love is a small, steel knife sharpener. The blade is drawn through a pair of angled pieces of high-speed steel. I haven't found anything else that will put an edge on a dull knife faster.

It's a bit pricey at $25, but great to have nonetheless. It will even put an edge back onto a used broadhead.

If your pack isn't waterproof, line it with a plastic or canvas bag. I never plan on spending any amount of time in the woods without some type of plastic, waterproof sheet to use as shelter against both wind and rain. I'm a freak for anything waterproof or that can be used for shelter if needed.

While I don't pack extra clothing during the first part of the archery season, I do make some changes for the much colder period during gun season, especially if I am hunting in the Upper Peninsula.

That's when I add the large pack to my gear. It carries extra socks and gloves and a polar fleece vest. I also carry a polar fleece scarf and full facemask.

When going to my stand in cool or cold temperatures, I generally shed my heavy outer coat, strap on the backpack and carry the coat in. I'm still cool when I get there and keep sweating to a minimum, which is where cold weather problems all begin.

Get rid of cotton long johns and undershirts as they absorb and hold sweat. Look instead for a good set of synthetic underwear that includes a shirt, long johns and briefs or shorts.

A backpack is an outdoorsman's best friend out in the bush or forest. Most accidents are unforeseen and the only way to fight this is be prepared with the proper gear.

And, as always, hunt safely and be sure of your target.

Hunters: Don't let heart trouble ruin your season.

Every year, an unknown number of hunters never make it back home because their hearts suffer problems brought on by the strenuous exercise and dramatic bursts of activity that hunting can bring.

Fortunately, U-M experts say hunters can take steps now to protect themselves from heart problems during the hunt - and to make sure they know what to do if a fellow hunter goes down.

This year's archery season began statewide on Oct. 1 and continues through Nov. 14.

Archery deer hunting season comes to life

From the DNR

October is a fantastic month to be in the woods. Most mornings are cool and the days warm. Being in a tree stand, archery hunting for deer, as the sun peaks over the horizon is worth getting out of bed a couple of hours early.

Watching the sun highlight the fall leaves is just one of the enjoyments of archery deer hunting.

"Deer hunting has been a popular pastime in Michigan for a very long time," said Rodney Clute, big-game specialist for the Department of Natural Resources.

The first regulations restricting deer hunting were established in 1859, when a portion of the year was closed to the taking of deer. However, there was no bag limit or restriction of the method of take.

"The first deer license was required in 1895, which really marked the beginning of deer management in Michigan," Clute said. "It cost 50 cents and 14,500 were sold."

By 1937, the number of people purchasing a deer license had increased over 10 times to 157,000. At that time, department biologists reported there were about 1.1 million deer in the state (about one-third in the Upper Peninsula and two-thirds in the northern Lower Peninsula – only a very few deer were present in southern Michigan).

In response to hunters who wanted the opportunity to hunt with a bow and arrow, Michigan established a special archery season in 1937 in Iosco and Newaygo counties.

During that first archery season, Nov. 1-14, 186 archery hunters took only four deer, but hunters regarded the season as a success. In their opinion, "seeking game with a bow and arrow instead of a long range gun requires much more skill on the part of the hunter."

The sport grew rapidly. By 1948, almost 10,000 people purchased an archery deer license and 67 of Michigan's 83 counties were open to archery deer hunting. The bow and arrow deer season also was extended to Oct. 1 through Nov. 5.

"Archery deer hunting continues to grow," said Michael Bailey, supervisor of the Wildlife Division's Species/Habitat Section. "In 2006, over 300,000 hunters participated in the archery deer season and harvested 125,000 deer."

But on average, Bailey said only 40 percent of archery hunters will bring home venison. According to the hunter surveys, the average archery deer hunter spends 14 to 15 days afield, and, in 2006, all archery deer hunters spent 4.5 million days deer hunting.

"It takes a tremendous amount of skill and perseverance," said Clute, who is an archery hunter himself. "Archery deer hunters must understand white-tailed deer behavior and daily movement patterns. They must spend time selecting their hunting locations and have great patience. And, even with all that work done, there is never a guarantee that a deer will come within shooting range."

This year's archery season begins statewide on Oct. 1 and continues through Nov. 14. Then following the firearm deer season, archery season again begins Dec. 1 and concludes Jan. 1. DNR biologists estimate Michigan's statewide fall whitetail population to be slightly above the estimated 2006 deer population.

According to the DNR's annual statewide deer hunting forecast, the deer herd is dynamic and not evenly distributed across the state. The whitetails' reproductive capability and their ability to adapt to the variety of habitats across the state have resulted in a Michigan deer herd estimated to be over 1.6 million animals.

This is exciting to citizens who enjoy hunting or observing deer, but is problematic

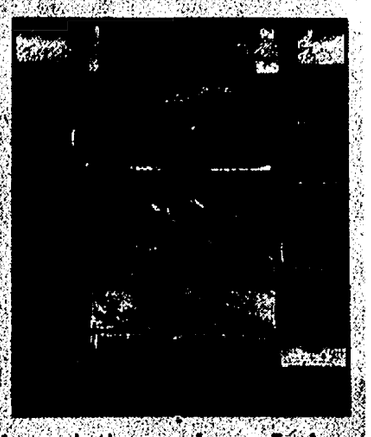
Chelsea Gallery hosts Jan Dorer



Chelsea Gallery is hosting a very special event – an opening reception for Chelsea resident, Jan Dorer.

Dorer's work is conceptual in nature, developed through years of painting and experimentation.

"She strives to keep her painting unique and fresh; rarely does she begin with a preconceived idea of a finished painting," said Doris Galvin of the Chelsea Gallery. "Each brush stroke suggests a new and challenging direction as the painting evolves. In her abstract, impressionistic style, she does not draw what she sees, but paints what she feels."

Dorer has received numerous awards and recognition, including National Arts Club Open Watercolor Competition, New York, Georgia Watercolor Membership Exhibition, Georgia, Dallas 500 Art Festival, Dallas, Art on the Square, Belleville, Ill. and 135th annual International Exhibition of the American Watercolor Society in New York.

The opening reception is from 6 to 9 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 10. The exhibition will be on display until Dec. 31, 2007.

The Chelsea Gallery is located at 115 S Main Street in Chelsea. For more information, call 1-734-475-1008 or log onto www.chelsea-gallery.com.

Nature's artist

Falcone has spent a lifetime capturing natural outdoor beauty

By Sheila Pursglove
Special Writer

As a child, Susan Falcone's first word was "bird" – the start of a lifetime fascination with all kinds of flora and fauna.

Falcone will exhibit a selection of her nature paintings and Celtic nature pieces at Art On The Farm in Dexter on Oct. 28, and the "More Friends Holiday Gift Show," Nov. 10 at the Chelsea Fairgrounds.

Falcone, a member of the 4 Friends art group and also a member of West of the Moon artist's cooperative gallery on West Middle Street in Chelsea, was a naturalist and painter from childhood, collecting and identifying feathers, shells, rocks, and fossils, and studying and sketching birds, animals, insects and wildflowers.

So it's not surprising to find her toe to toe – so to speak – with a cooperative heron, capturing the beauty and majesty of one of her favorite birds during a recent sketching outing.

"That heron posed for me for about an hour, and I was able to do many detailed sketches," she says. "I believe he thought that I had a bait bucket – I had a knapsack – and was hoping to snitch something. It made me feel a little guilty that I didn't have bait to give him!"

To capture such intimate beauty, Falcone spends a great deal of time observing nature. She and her husband enjoy a rural lifestyle near a small lake where they enjoy watching local wildlife, and have planted thousands of native wildflowers to attract hummingbirds, butterflies, moths and songbirds – the subjects of her award-winning watercolors.

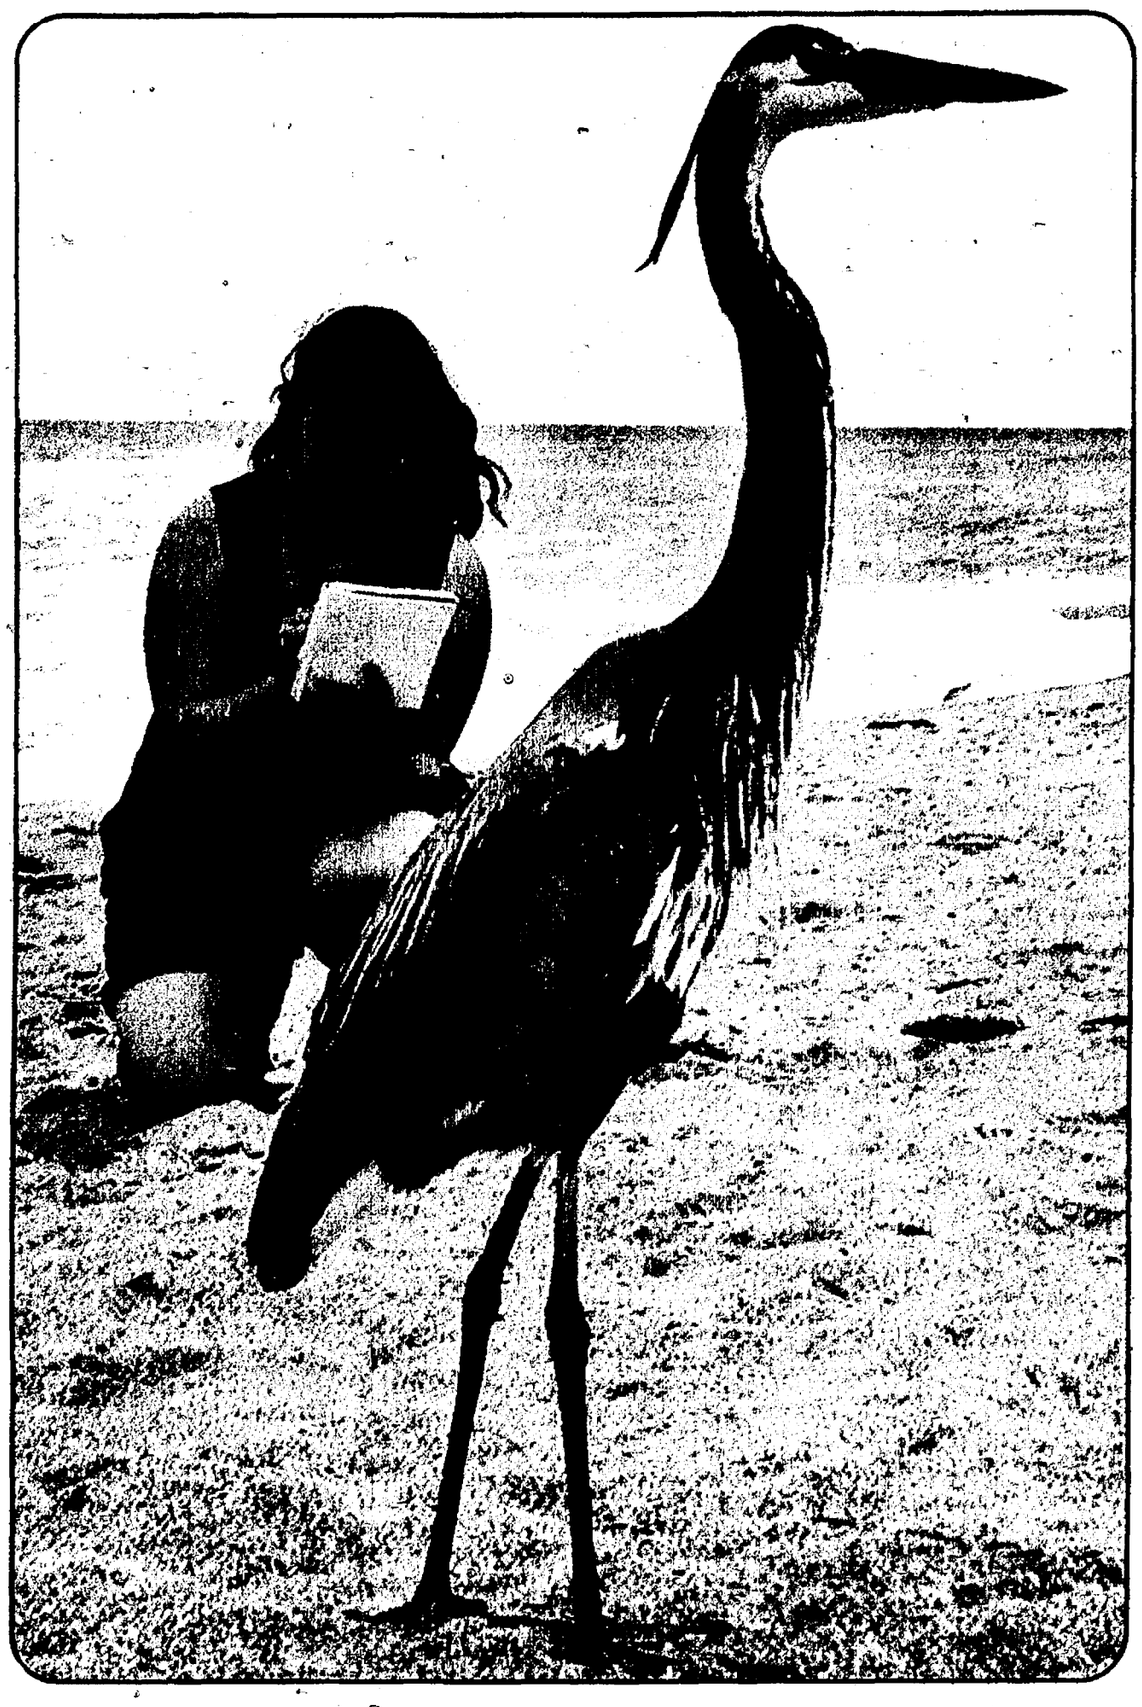
When Falcone starts to pull ideas together for a painting, she does field sketches of the bird and its surroundings, pulls sketches from her files, and may visit the Museum of Natural History in Ann Arbor, before working out preliminary drawings on tracing paper.

After sketching and re-sketching, until satisfied with the composition, she transfers the final drawing to watercolor paper.

She uses maskoid – a rubber-cement-like substance – to seal the main subject to stop paint from getting on it while she paints the background. With watercolor, she saves the lighter areas until last as she can't paint light over dark, the way oil painters can.

Using a technique called "glazing," she paints several transparent layers of color to produce a final glow and illusion of depth. The background may take days or weeks, after which she peels off the maskoid and begins painting the bird, again with many pale layers.

Although watercolor is a difficult medium to use, she likes it for its freshness and light, finding oils and other mediums too opaque, and not quite delicate enough for her preference.



She also does detailed ink drawings with watercolor glazes and leaves the background white. For butterfly paintings, she often use colored pencils on paper made for pastel drawing, its rougher texture holding the color of the pencils well.

Falcone may not paint an entire bird but just feathers, which play an important role in many cultures. Birds are often viewed as messengers between man and the otherworld, and feathers may stand for the powers denoted to the bird and are also important in varied rituals, she says.

After careful sketches taken from life, and painting on watercolor paper in many layers, she cuts out the feather and mounts it so it appears to float, surrounded by an ornate matte.

Having spent several summers in Ireland, Falcone is especially attracted to bird and animal motifs in early Celtic art, finding inspiration from carved stones, battle gear, pottery fragments, jewelry and illuminated manuscripts. For her Celtic art, she uses transparent watercolors and metallic, luminescent, and interference colors – sometimes adding gold leaf – on knotwork patterns commonly found in Celtic design, and creates matboards resembling stone or metal.

Falcone, whose work can be found in national and international private and corporate collections, exhibits in one-person and group shows, takes part in art fairs, and competes in nature-oriented competitions.

She recently had a one-person exhibit at Moonwinks Café in Dixboro near Ann Arbor, will be at "Art on the Farm" in Dexter on Oct. 28, "Old Friends" in Chelsea on Nov. 23 and 24, and hold her own annual Studio Open House in Ann Arbor on Dec. 1.

Her illustrations have appeared in the Audubon Society's Whitefish Point Bird Observatory Migrant, Michigan Birds and Natural History, and the Michigan Nature Conservancy's Newsletter. She also donates artwork to local, state and national charitable, wildlife, habitat, and natural preservation groups for fundraising.

Falcone is looking forward to joining her friends for the holiday gift show.

"It's been awhile since I've been able to exhibit with the 4 Friends, since my own regular annual studio open house date has coincided with the 4 Friends Holiday Show, so I'm thrilled to be able to participate this year," she says.

"It's always exciting and inspiring to exhibit with so many other accomplished and varied artists, and I'm greatly looking forward to this event."

Historical society to host tour of Oak Grove

By Tom Diab
Guest Writer

Located at the east end of Middle Street is the beautiful Oak Grove Cemetery, established in 1860.

It was organized by many of Chelsea's founders and continued to be maintained by most of its prominent citizens.

A quote from the 1881 history of Washtenaw County reads, "The monuments bespeak the character of the people: on every terrace there may be seen a magnificent tribute to departed worth, a work of the sculptor's hands, which time itself will scarcely cause to fade away. Such is the quiet home of those who have gone up higher - the pioneers and their children who died in the village of their adoption or nativity."

The Chelsea Area Historical Society invites you to join us for an educational cemetery tour of the Oak Grove Cemetery from 4 to 6 p.m. Oct. 27.

The tour will consist of 10 actors portraying the roles of prominent citizens from Chelsea's past.

The actors will give a brief oral biography of each person as you stroll by in a walking tour or on a hayride. Golf carts will also be provided for those who need them.

Historical citizens being portrayed include: Elisha Congdon, town founder; William Bacon, prominent businessman; Frank P. Glazier, prominent businessman; Gertrude Daniels, community advocate; Frank Staffan, mortician and businessman; Isaac Taylor, distinguished farmer; Mabel Holmes, Jiffy Mix inventor; Harmon S. Holmes, prominent businessman; and John Lingane, farmer and victim of the R.M.S. Titanic sinking.

The tour will begin at the cemetery entrance off Freer Road. Hot drinks and snacks will be provided.

Ticket prices for the event are $10 and $8 under 12 years old, and advance tickets will be $8 and $6; and can be purchased at the Gourmet Chocolate Café, 312 N. Main St. Call 475-1071 for more information.

Tom Diab is president of the Chelsea Area Historical Society and owner of the Gourmet Chocolate Café.

The meeting will take place from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 24 at the Washington Street Education Center. Reservations for the bus ride to the meeting are recommended, and can be made by calling 433-1000, ext. 427.

Lucille Wiarda
Chelsea

Lucille Wiarda of Chelsea died on Oct. 11, 2007 at the Chelsea Retirement Community. She was 86. She was born on Feb. 6, 1921 in Prairie du Chien, Wisc., to Daniel and Sylvia (Kahoun) Swingle. Lucille was a delightful soul whose kindness, hope and trust were unshakable, even when beset by arthritis and memory loss.

Mrs. Wiarda was proud to be a teacher. She put herself through college, graduating from the University of Wisconsin in 1943. She taught in several Wisconsin school districts, but her goal was to teach in Madison. When she lost out on a Madison position in 1949, she interviewed in Ann Arbor and took a post at Jones Junior High. She said many times that life in Ann Arbor had proved to be an acceptable alternative.

She married Jerry Wiarda in 1950. He was a widower with two small boys. Her willingness to marry him, be a mother to their children, and "make a home," was a source of amazement to him throughout their 52-year marriage. She was in charge of her household. She had the respect of her husband and children. Her grandchildren thrived under her attention, and benefited from her sharp teacher's instincts.

She worked for many years in the Cancer Registry department at St. Joseph Mercy Hospital. She was a member of First Presbyterian Church of Ann Arbor, and served on its Board of Deacons. She was a volunteer visitor to hospital patients. She opened her home to out-of-town guests whose family members were receiving long-term treatment at the University of Michigan Hospitals. None left a stranger.

She moved to the Chelsea Retirement Community in 2001. Her family is profoundly grateful for the friendship and love shown to Lucille by the CRC staff.

She is survived by her children: John (Patricia) of Winsted, Conn.; David (Sharron) of Grand Rapids; Richard of Tucson, Ariz.; and Edith (Robert Christie) of Chelsea. She also leaves one sister, Betty Nolan of Prairie du Chien, Wisc., as well as seven grandchildren and one great-grandson. Her husband, Jerry, died in 2003. Her beloved step-mother, Stasia Swingle, died in 2004.

At her request, her body has been donated to the University of Michigan Medical School. Memorial contributions may be made to First Presbyterian Church of Ann Arbor, or to the Heritage Foundation of the United Methodist Retirement Communities.

A memorial service will be held at 10:30 a.m. on Friday, Oct. 19, 2007 at Chelsea First United Methodist Church, 128 Park Street. The family will receive visitors beginning at 10 a.m. Arrangements by Staffan-Mitchell Funeral Home.

Guest column: By Elaine Owsley

New technology isn't only just for the dogs

Watching our new dog have her identity chip implanted recently made me wonder why we humans don't have the same process available. A tiny little needle was used to insert the "chip" and the dog barely noticed. I've seen bigger needles used for human injections. So the actual implanting wouldn't be a problem.

Human chips could be constructed to contain different kinds of information, which could only be "read" by those entities with a need to know. The chips would be injected in the arm, near the wrist. One would obviously contain your identity – name, address, phone number, and perhaps next of kin with a contact number for general identification, especially if you were unable to provide that information yourself.

You would use it when you voted, or any other occasion that required identification. You might have one, or a separate portion of one, that contained any vital medical information. You know, the kind they repeatedly want you to fill out on the forms you get at the doctor's office. Only your medical facility or an emergency service could access that information. When your medication changes, your doctor could phone in the change to the responsible chip provider and it would be electronically added.

Another chip, or portion of one, would contain your bank identification. You could just wave it at the drive up window instead of having to fish out a card; lean way out the window and poke buttons to say you wanted English or Spanish. It would access your account the way your pin number does now.

You and your children would be identifiable without having to carry cards and papers of various kinds, necessitating hauling your wallet out of awkward places like your rear pocket – the one you are sitting on in the car.

If you are a traveler and need identification your chip would have whatever immigration needed and you could just run your arm under a "reader" and continue on your way to the habitat and the overall deer distribution also varies within every deer management unit, and most of the deer population is found on private land.

Think of the savings in time, paper and hassle. Not to mention the unlikely event of having this information stolen. The only way that might happen is too grisly to think about.

A thief could hardly expect to be served by carrying a severed arm around, or a chip without the arm it belonged to.

The wave of a wand tells the vet or humane society that our dog is Sarah and where she belongs and how to contact us; simple, painless, technology that works. How come a dog's life is easier than ours?

"In the last decade, the southern half of the Lower Peninsula has contained an increasing proportion of the statewide deer population," said Clute. "For the past four years, the estimated southern Michigan deer harvest has exceeded 50 percent of the statewide harvest."

And that figure, he said, has increased to 60 percent over the past two years, and DNR biologists expect that trend to continue in 2007.

"Our goal has been to reduce the size of the herd in southern Michigan, but that's only realistic if hunters cooperate and if landowners allow hunters on their land," Clute said.

But even though a deer may not be harvested, the time spent in a tree stand waiting for a deer is never boring. Many hunters say they enjoy the solitude and the scenery.

Squirrels and chipmunks are scurrying around storing acorns and walnuts for the winter. Ducks and geese are migrating south in large formations and fox can been seen hunting for dinner.

Depending upon your hunting location, not so common animals also may be seen as well, such as a moose in the Upper Peninsula or an elk in northern Lower Michigan.

Most archery hunters feel successful just sitting in a tree stand with the anticipation of taking a deer.

VILLAGE OF DEXTER PLANNING COMMISSION NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

Pursuant to Michigan Public Act 110 of 2006, as amended, notice is hereby given that the Dexter Village Planning Commission will hold a public hearing on Monday, November 5, 2007 at 7:30 pm at the Dexter Senior Center, 7720 Dexter Ann Arbor Road, Dexter, Michigan, for the purpose of hearing public comment regarding amendments to Article 5, Parking and Loading Standards, of the Village of Dexter Zoning Ordinance. The proposed amendments are to Section 5.07G, as follows:

G. The Planning Commission may permit deviations from the requirements of Section 5.07 and may require more, allow for less, or waive off-street loading and unloading requirements whenever it finds that such changes are more likely to provide a sufficient number of off-street loading and unloading spaces, or that no loading space is required to accommodate the specific characteristics of the use in question.

The Planning Commission may attach conditions to the approval of a deviation to the requirements of Section 5.07 that bind such approval of the specific use in question. Where a deviation results in a reduction or complete waiver of off-street loading and unloading spaces, the Planning Commission may further impose conditions, which ensure that adequate reserve area, is set aside for future off-street loading and unloading spaces, if needed in the future.

Information regarding the amendments to the Village of Dexter Zoning Ordinance Article 5 is available for public inspection at the Village Offices, 8123 Main Street, Dexter, weekdays between 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. or by phone at (734) 426-8308 Ext. 15. Written comments regarding the proposed Ordinance amendments should be submitted to the Village Offices, and must be received no later than 5:00 p.m., Tuesday, October 30, 2007. Sign language interpreter, or other assistance, is provided upon request to the Clerk, at least 72 hours in advance of the meeting. 'Deliver us from evil'

MINISTERIAL Message

By Pastor Mark Porinsky
Faith Lutheran Church

The greatest song of the 20th century was voted on a few years ago. The winner was "Over the Rainbow" from the Wizard of Oz. That certainly would have been my pick too, not just because of the beautiful melody, but because the song recognizes the troubles of this life, and seeks a solution, longs for an escape, somewhere beyond the rainbow.

The troubles of this life are what most often motivate people to pray. But in fact, this is the last thing Jesus tells us to pray about in the Lord's Prayer. Jesus tells us there are six higher priority things to pray for, things we take for granted, like daily bread and forgiveness, or things we don't even think about, like God's Name, His Kingdom, His will, and being kept away from temptation. Our own comfort is not nearly as important as those things.

The word "evil" in the Lord's Prayer refers to moral evil, something wicked and malicious; in fact, this phrase could be translated, "Deliver us from the evil one," meaning the devil. But when we pray this part of the Lord's Prayer we think mostly of the bad things that happen in life: the physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual problems that Satan and the sinful world are constantly heaping upon us. Their goal is to discourage us, or at least to get us disgusted with our Father in heaven for not making our lives run more smoothly, and to turn away from Him.

There's only one acceptable solution for the bad things in life that confront us, and that is to call on our Father in heaven to deliver us from evil. We ask Him either to keep evil away from us, or give us the strength to bear it, and not let it deter our faith. Because, after all, that is the ultimate evil – to give up one's faith in Jesus Christ. All other evils are temporary; even if our bodies and lives are destroyed, our Savior has come to give us an eternal life of glory, and if we can just maintain our faith in Him, no evil can harm us forever.

Only our Father in heaven has the real solution. No one else can, ultimately, deliver us from evil. Your doctor can't deliver you from all evil, nor can your attorney, or the government. Enjoyment of pleasure, or appreciation of art, can take our minds off the evil in this world, but only temporarily. In the long run we can rely only on our Father in heaven.

So we pray for the day when there will be no more evil, no more bad things. For us who know Jesus and are children of the heavenly Father, "over the rainbow" is not just a pretty song – it is a reality we look forward to. There is a place prepared by Jesus, where all this evil, all this trouble, all this pain and frustration, will be a thing of the past, and we will live in joy and security forever. Can you imagine that? Can you imagine an eternity without anything bad? But you don't just have to imagine: You can experience it, through faith in your Savior Jesus Christ.

If someone could free you from troubles in marriage, in your health health, in your finances, in your relationships, and troubles with your car, that would be great. But it would be nothing compared with what Jesus does offer: An eternal escape from all evil.

The Bible says, "Weeping may remain for a night, but rejoicing comes in the morning" (Psalm 30:5b). For anyone who trusts in Jesus Christ, there will come an eternal morning, when we will no longer have to pray, "Deliver us from evil."

Mark Porinsky is the pastor at Faith Lutheran Church, 9575 North Territorial Road, Dexter.

Dexter Community Band presents Halloween concert

The Dexter Community Band will open its 26th season on Sunday, Oct. 28 with a free concert at 3 p.m. in the high school Center for the Performing Arts. The audience is encouraged to join the band members in dressing for the Halloween season. The band is directed by William W. Gourley and sponsored by Dexter Community Education.

The program will include several numbers which are well known in movie scores for thrillers and spooky scenes. They include "The Ride of the Valkyries" by Richard Wagner, "Die Fledermaus" by Johann Strauss, "Night on Bald Mountain" by Modeste Moussorgsky and "Orpheus in the Underworld" by Jacques Offenbach.

"Tony's Favourite Cartoons" by Pascal Devroye revives memories for all ages as it speeds through many favorite theme songs for the entire audience. It includes current hits as well as classic themes from the childhood of mature audience members. Toss in a couple of marches and you have a full fledged community band concert certain to please those in attendance.

The band's next concert is planned for 3 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 16 in combination with the Dexter Community Orchestra.

The band includes members from many surrounding towns and is supported by Dexter Community Education. Rehearsals are Thursday nights at 7 p.m. in the Dexter High School band room and prospective members are encouraged to join the group.

Dexter Community Players to perform 'Urinetown'

By Sean Dalton
Staff Writer

The Dexter Community Players will be putting on their version of an award-winning Broadway musical with a very curious name — "Urinetown."

In an improbable "What if?" alternate vision of the future, the downtrodden poor masses are forced to use public pay toilets which are controlled by a greedy, power-hungry corporate monopoly. In lieu of private "loos," what has the potential to be a gloomy and depressing dystopian situation ends up being an enjoyable parody of some of musical theater's finest works.

The show's narrators are fully aware of how awful the title is, as they guide audiences singing and dancing through the story of love, rebellions, greed and kidnappings.

Director Jason Smith, who brought the critically successful "Sweeney Todd" to Dexter Community Players audiences, returns with some of community theater's finest.

Choreographer is Stacey Smith and the energetic Brian E. Buckner is musical director.

The cast includes Brendan Bachman as the heroic Bobby Strong, Thalia Schramm as the sweet Hope Cladwell, Edmond Reynolds as the diabolical Caldwell B. Cladwell, and Leo Babcock as the omnipresent Officer Lockstock.

Music was composed by Mark Hollmann and book and lyrics are credited to Greg Kotis.

Performances are scheduled for 8 p.m. on Oct. 26, 27 and 28 and Nov. 1, 2 and 3. There will be a 2 p.m. performance as well on Oct. 28.

Performances will be held at the Copeland Auditorium at 7720 Ann Arbor St. in Dexter. The building is wheelchair accessible.

Tickets are $12 in advance and $15 at the door. For more information or to make reservations, call 424-4100. ext. 7327; or visit dextercommunityplayers.com.

Chelsea's Folts featured artist

Chelsea resident Martha Folts will be the featured keyboard artist Oct. 27 commemorating the 300th anniversary of the death of Dietrich Buxtehude (1637-1707).

Buxtehude was a master of baroque music in northern Europe. His concerts attracted prominent visitors from all over Germany, including George Frederic Handel and 20-year-old Johann Sebastian Bach, who both visited in 1705. The young Bach walked 250 miles from Thuringia to Lubeck, drawn by Buxtehude's reputation as a virtuoso.

The instruments Dr. Folts will play are a two-manual harpsichord (built by Manchester resident Keith Hill in 1992) and a clavichord (by Midge Ploger and Keith Hill built in 2007). This is a rare opportunity to hear a live performance on the clavichord.

The concert will take place at 8 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 27 at St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, 306 North Division in Ann Arbor. Open-seating tickets available at the door from 7:30 p.m. are $15 general admission, $12 for seniors and $5 for students. For more information, call 734-665-5758.

Chelsea Senior Center

Grant to create oral history

The Chelsea Senior Center recently announced that they have been the recipient of a generous grant from the Chelsea Community Foundation to create an oral history project about the lives of students who attended one-room school houses.

The McKune Memorial Library and Chelsea Historical Society will be taking lead roles with the Senior Center in creating a permanent record and displaying these fascinating stories, photos and artifacts.

The Senior Center is looking for people who will share their stories and be photographed for a book to be created from the actual experiences of people who lived in and around Chelsea and attended one of the many one-room school houses.

The Senior Center also would like to speak with the teachers, principals and others who were involved with this part of our history.

If you have a story you are willing to share, call the Chelsea Senior Center at 1-734-465-9242 so they can include you in what will surely be an important addition to the community.

Health Watch: From Chelsea Community Hospital

Should you be concerned about food allergies?

Food allergies are making the news, as the number of reported cases is growing. Up to 8 percent of children and 2 percent of adults in the United States are estimated to have food allergies.

What is causing the increase is still unknown. Some experts feel that there is not an increase in allergies, but rather just an increase in awareness and reported cases to physicians. Some feel that exposure to common allergy-causing foods early in life, even before birth, can cause an allergy to develop in children.

Ever hear someone say they are "allergic to" a certain food? Many people confuse food allergies with food intolerance. True food allergies are much less common.

"A food intolerance is a reaction to food that does not involve the immune system," says Tonya Sexton, DO, of Family Medicine of Stockbridge. "A person with lactose intolerance, for example, lacks an enzyme needed to digest milk. When the person eats milk products, symptoms such as gas, bloating, and abdominal pain may occur. Although they are bothersome, they are not life-threatening."

A true food allergy causes an immune system reaction, which may include hives, asthma, swelling of the throat, or even death.

"An allergy is simply the body's response to something it believes is harmful," says Benjamin Song, MD, of Allergy and Immunology Associates of Ann Arbor. "If you have an allergy, your body will create antibodies against it when you are first exposed to the food. When you are exposed to the food again, your body will use its antibodies to mount a defense against it, which is commonly known as an allergic reaction."

Though there are unanswered questions about the cause, once a food allergy is discovered, it is important to educate yourself about how to avoid reactions.

How do I know if I have a food allergy?

Often, a food allergy is discovered on accident when a food is eaten. A reaction can range from mild itching or swelling to a more severe reaction – called anaphylaxis – that can involve life-threatening constriction of airways or shock.

"If you suspect a food allergy, the best place to start is to keep a 'diary' of your symptoms and what you ate before they appeared," says Song. "It's also important to note when the symptoms started, how long they lasted, and whether you have experienced them before. Having a good record helps pinpoint the problem."

What do I do if I have a food allergy?

"The most important step to avoid a reaction is being aware and educated about your allergy," says Song. "You will need to read food labels very carefully, and strictly avoid the food – especially if your allergy could be life-threatening. If your physician prescribes medication, carry it with you at all times."

Epinephrine, also called "adrenaline," is the medication of choice for controlling a severe reaction. It is available by prescription as a self-injectable device (EpiPen® or Twinject®). Milder allergies may be controlled with antihistamines and skin creams.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) requires food companies to label the most common allergy-causing ingredients. If there is no label, do not eat the food. Those with severe allergies should beware of eating at restaurants, where cross-contamination of food is likely. Wear a medical alert bracelet to let others know of your allergy in case you can't communicate.

"I tell patients that there are a lot of resources out there for people with food allergies," says Song. "Support groups and other organizations specifically for people with food allergies can be valuable resources for patients and their families."

Potato drop

They call it a "potato drop," but that doesn't mean they'll be spilling spuds all over the place.

Instead, about 20 tons of potatoes are on their way to Chelsea to be distributed to area food banks.

The United Methodist Men from the Chelsea First United Methodist Church and throughout Michigan will help unload a tractor-trailer load of potatoes from 10 a.m. to noon on Saturday in the parking lot of the Washington Street Education Center.

They will be assisted by volunteers from Scout troops, athletic teams and church youth groups.

The pallet-sized containers will be unloaded from the semi, bagged and placed on smaller trucks for delivery to food banks.

Organizers are hoping to attract at least 100 volunteers to make the unloading go quickly.

"We could use a few people to set up before the main group gets there, particularly if it rains," said Norm Colbry of the Chelsea First United Methodist Church.

"With the containers, instead of the bulk load, we will be able to bag the potatoes rain or shine because we can keep workers and, more importantly, the potatoes under tents."

St. Andrew's celebrates

On Sunday, Oct. 21, St. Andrew's UCC, Dexter, will kick off a year long celebration of the church's 125th anniversary with one service at 10 a.m.

The children's choir will present the anthem and the senior choir and congregation will join in singing a hymn written to celebrate the 100th anniversary in 1983.

Following worship, attendees are invited to a cider and donut reception hosted by descendants of one of the church's founders in the Dexter Historical Museum, which was the original St. Andrew's church.

Conservation deal

The Washtenaw Land Trust announced the completion of a conservation deal to protect 43 acres of prime farmland at the Kendall Rogers farm in York Township. This deal expands a contiguous block of already-protected farmland just outside of Saline to more than 500 acres. Under the terms of the agreement, the land can continue to be farmed, but cannot be developed.

This is the fourth conservation project completed by the Land Trust this year. It brings the total land protected by the Land Trust to 2,942 acres of natural areas and farms throughout Washtenaw, Jackson and Ingham Counties.

The successful completion of this project is thanks to a wide range of individuals and organizations. The Rogers family agreed to forego 40 percent of the overall price of the project, appraised at $608,000.

More than 350 people, local family foundations, and businesses contributed toward the Farmland Protection Challenge goal. Local support was demonstrated by gifts from the majority of the members of the Charter Township of York Board of Trustees and Planning Commission. Matching funds include grants of $25,000 from the Carls Foundation and $215,000 from the federal Farm and Ranchlands Protection Program.

"This is an exciting project," said Charity Steere, chair of the Land Trust's Land Protection Committee. "It's great to know that the southern entryway into Saline will look just as lovely 100 years from now as it does today."

Rotary celebration

The Chelsea Rotary Club is celebrating its 20th anniversary with a party on Oct. 27 at the St. Louis Center.

The event, open to all current and past members, begins with socializing at 6:30 p.m. followed by dinner and a cash bar at 7:30 p.m. Special speaker is Fr. Joseph Rinaldo.

RSVP by Monday to Scott McElrath at 475-3660 or DangerousArch@worldnet.att.net

The St. Louis Center is located on Old US-12 west of Chelsea.

World War I display

A World War I display at the Chelsea Historical Museum is now open. The display includes many items from the private collection of George Lindauer of Chelsea, who served in France and Germany from 1917 to 1919.

Lindauer was a wagon driver whose job was to deliver supplies such as food and ammunition to the men on the front lines – an often dangerous task. In one instance, a bridge exploded in front of him and he collected the shrapnel that landed around him. The display items were loaned to the museum by George Lindauer's children, Art Lindauer and Loretta Lindauer Eder.

The museum is located inside the Gourmet Chocolate Café, 312 N. Main St. For more information, call 475-1071.

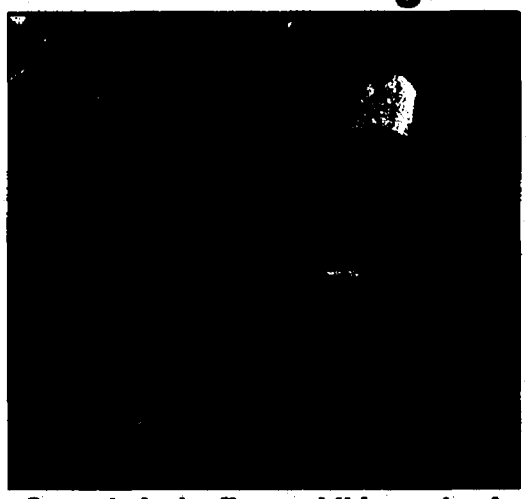
AS HEARD ON PAUL HARVEY NEWS

New advanced portable heater can cut your heating bill up to 50%

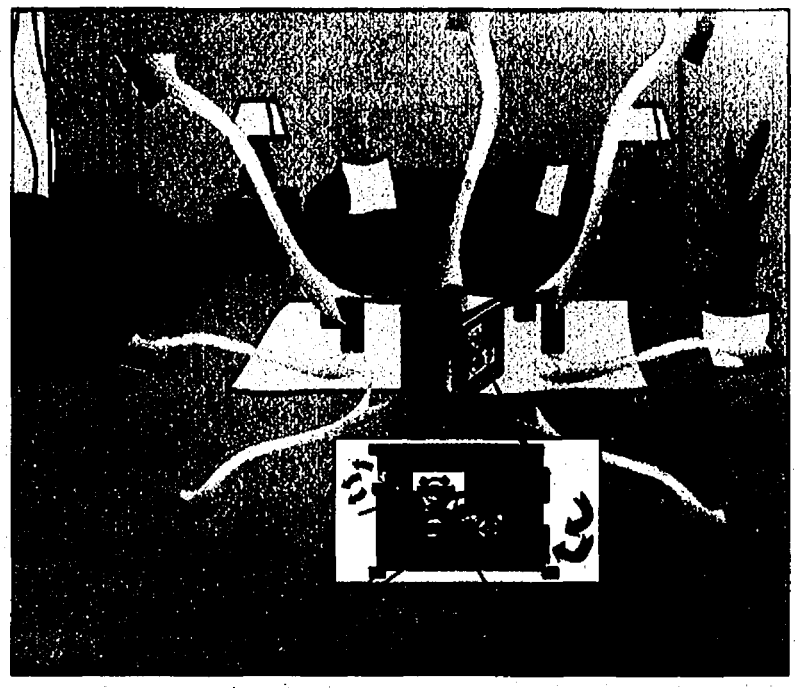
Heats a large room in minutes with even heat wall to wall and floor to ceiling

Does not get hot, cannot start a fire and will not reduce humidity or oxygen

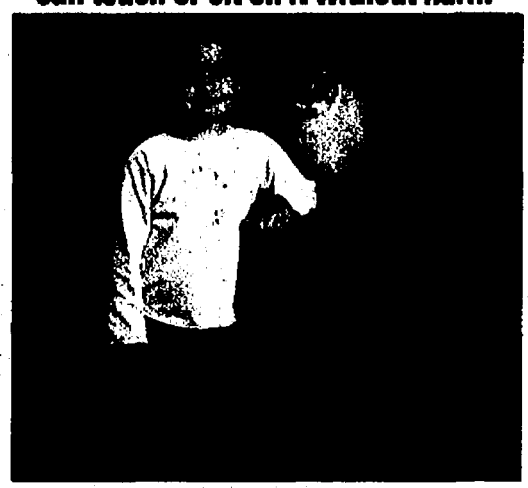
Never be cold again



How it works:



Cannot start a fire; a child or animal can touch or sit on it without harm



A new advanced quartz infrared portable heater, the EdenPURE®, can cut your heating bills by up to 50%.

You have probably heard about the remarkable EdenPURE® as heard on Paul Harvey News and on television features across the nation.

The EdenPURE® can pay for itself in a matter of weeks and then start putting a great deal of extra money in your pocket after that.

A major cause of residential fires in the United States is portable heaters. But the EdenPURE® cannot cause a fire. That is because the quartz infrared heating element never gets to a temperature that can ignite anything.

The outside of the EdenPURE® only gets warm to the touch so that it will not burn children or pets. Pets can sleep on it when it is operating without harm.

The advanced space-age EdenPURE® Quartz Infrared Portable Heater also heats the room evenly, wall-to-wall and floor-to-ceiling. And, as you know, portable heaters only heat an area a few feet around the heater.

Unlike other heating sources, the EdenPURE® cannot put poisonous carbon monoxide into a room or any type of fumes or any type of harmful radiation.

Q. What is the origin of this amazing heating element in the EdenPURE®?

A. This advanced heating element was discovered accidentally by a man named John Jones.

Q. What advantages does infrared quartz tube heating source have over other heating source products?

A. John Jones designed his heating source around the three most important consumer benefits: economy, comfort, and safety.

In the EdenPURE® system, electricity is used to generate infrared light which, in turn, creates a very safe heat.

After a great deal of research and development, very efficient infrared heat chambers were developed that utilize three unique patented solid copper heat exchangers in one EdenPURE® heater.

Q. How can a person cut their heating bill by up to 50% with the EdenPURE®?

A. The EdenPURE® will heat a room in minutes. Therefore, you can turn the heat down in your house to as low as 50 degrees, but the room you are occupying, which has the EdenPURE®, will be warm and comfortable. The EdenPURE® is portable. When you move to another room, it will quickly heat that room also. This can drastically cut heating bills, in some instances, by up to 50%.

The EdenPURE® comes in 2 models. Model 500-XL heats a room u, o 300 square feet and Model 1000-XL heats a room up to 1,000 square feet.

End of interview.

The EdenPURE® will pay for itself in weeks. It will put a great deal of extra money in a users pocket. Because of today's spiraling gas, oil, propane, and other energy costs, the EdenPURE® will provide even greater savings as the time goes by.

Readers who wish can obtain the EdenPURE® Quartz Infrared Portable Heater at a $75 discount if they order in the next 10 days. Please see the Special Readers Discount Coupon on this page. For those readers ordering after 10 days from the date of this publication, we reserve the right to either accept or reject order requests at the discounted price.
