Ex-firefighter files whistleblower suit

By Art Aisner
Special Writer

A former officer that resigned from the Chelsea Area Fire Authority late last year is claiming department officials retaliated against him for speaking out publicly against a superior, according to a federal lawsuit filed earlier this month.

Matthew Rose, a former lieutenant with the department, says that he was demoted, subjected to a significant pay reduction and forced to tolerate a poor work environment after he felt a higher-ranking officer made a poor decision that impacted the care of a gunshot victim in July, federal court documents show.

The suit names the Chelsea Area Fire Authority and Chief Jim Payeur as an individual. He declined comment and referred all questions regarding the suit to Ronald Richards, a municipal law specialist based in Lansing.

Richards also declined comment Monday and said he would be filing a formal response to the suit in federal court within a few weeks.

Rose, now a paramedic with Huron Valley Ambulance, seeks past wages, punitive damages, equitable relief for the time he was allegedly retaliated against, and any court associated costs, including attorney fees.

The suit was initially filed in Washtenaw County Circuit Court, but then transferred to the federal court because it is the proper venue. The suit is filed under the Michigan Whistleblower's Protection Act, which protects employees from retribution for the disclosure of violations of law.

The law specifically prohibits employers from firing, threatening to fire, or discriminating against any employee who reports or is about to report a violation or suspected violation of law to a public body or authority.

An unpopular decision

The suit stems from a July 18 incident where members of the department's second shift, including Rose, were dispatched to assist a woman who was shot in the torso and in transit to a local hospital in a civilian vehicle.

Firefighters intercepted the vehicle and began administering treatment when Capt.

Chris Smyth ordered them to transport the woman to Chelsea Community Hospital.

Rose, a Chelsea resident, objected, and noted the sirens of a Huron Valley Ambulance could be heard fast approaching. He also knew that the hospital would not have the appropriate trauma-level equipment or expertise that could be needed to treat the critical wound, and noted that the woman's complete vital signs had not been taken to determine if Smyth's order was the best course of action.

Meloche to instruct Dale Carnegie class

By Sheila Pursglove
Special Writer

Linda Meloche, an instructor of the Dale Carnegie course in Ann Arbor, will offer the program for the first time in Chelsea, her home for over a decade.

The 13-session personal and professional development course will be held at 6 p.m. on Monday evenings at the Comfort Inn starting March 14.

Meloche, who recently celebrated her 25th year teaching and marketing the Dale Carnegie program, previously worked in sales - a great position with a car and perks, but Meloche found the job mindless. Then she took a job with a non-profit, a more meaningful job but with a low salary.

"I was looking for a happy medium," she said. "I wanted to find a career that left me feeling like I was doing some good in the world, but was also paid fairly for it."

The third time was a charm when this MSU graduate heard about the Dale Carnegie program. She went through the 13-week course, became a graduate assistant and eventually became an instructor.

"It's an incredibly good job and a really a life-changing program," she said.

Since its inception in 1912, the Dale Carnegie program has helped people to face fears, whether speaking in front of groups, dealing with people more effectively, being an out-

Commission OKs new police station plans

By Sean Dalton
Heritage Media

The new Chelsea Police station construction project is back on track after receiving combined preliminary and final site plan approval from the Chelsea Planning Commission Tuesday night.

Despite the council's initially strong enthusiasm to approve the plan, the city's planning commission has held the project to very high standards, rejecting prior drafts in the past year. The commission, which included members whose terms were not renewed by the council, originally denied rezoning parcels where the station would have been built.

More recently the current planning commission tabled the combined site plan approval process last month amid several concerns.

The drawings for the now 6,600 square-foot, $2-to-$2.5 million dollar building include many concessions such as a reduced size and other reconfigurations brought about last year.

Concerns from last month's planning commission meeting, such as Casey Blair's concern for a property owner across the street from the building, were discussed but affected no change in the approved plans.

The two driveways on Orchard Street will remain despite the property owner's concern about lights shining into her windows. Darlene Stanley maintained that landscaping could solve the problem, but the commission Tuesday ruled that it was within the city's purview to acquiesce to the property owner's concerns or not.

Planning Commissioner Ann Valle did not relent in her concern, calling for her colleagues to "put (themselves) in the position of (the) homeowner" and warning that it would be a mistake to trust the city to address the issue.

City Council member Cheri Albertson took exception to the comment, adding that she had been in personal contact with the homeowner and that the city would address her concern. Planning Commissioner

Sarah Haselschwardt continued to voice concern over a trash enclosure visible as people turn in from M-52, but the approved plan included no changes to the dumpster location, leaving it a "prominent landmark" when entering the site.

Architect Bob Overheiser of Ann Arbor-based Architects Design Group did discuss several concerns that his team incorporated into the plan as presented.

Chelsea's new branding has arrived and was previewed by the Chelsea First Committee this month.

The logo and website - oriented both toward traditional desktop PCs and laptops and mobile devices - were shown to a large gathering at Chelsea Comfort Inn on Wednesday.

A total of $50,000 was spent between the Chelsea Downtown Development Authority and the city government to fund the Chelsea Area Chamber of Commerce driven marketing effort.

Matt Friedman and Scott Pryor, co-founder of strategic consultancy firm Tanner Friedman and owner of Ann Arbor-based Pryor Design Company respectively, discussed the ideas behind the log and the website, which will be live at www.chelseamich.com later this year.

standing leader, dealing with stress or just being more confident in every aspect of their life.

"I've never seen anything work like this course does," Meloche said.

Several local residents would agree.

Rob Bertoni, a physical therapist at Chelsea Community Hospital, said taking the course was a life-changing experience. In fact, he said his wife was so impressed that she signed up for the next available course.

"I gained a wealth of knowledge and skill that I continue to use every day in my personal and professional life," he said. "As a result of the principles taught in Dale Carnegie, my ability to become the best version of myself and help others has continued to grow."

Sharon Golka, a human resources executive at Chelsea Milling Co., had been interested in taking the Dale Carnegie course for years to gain confidence when talking to large groups. She finally took the plunge and took one of Meloche's courses in Ann Arbor.

"Not only did I accomplish that goal, but the lessons I learned about life were immeasurable," Golka said. "The others in the class came from all walks of life and of all ages. Even though each and every one of us became more confident, less shy, better speakers, the thing that was most impressive to me was the trust that our group developed in each other. People shared things they had never shared with anyone else, and with that a bond developed and grew each week."

"I can say without a doubt that Linda is one of the most uplifting incredible instructors I've ever met. Her knowledge, enthusiasm and positive attitude kept the class exciting and wanting more."

has a strong performance and public speech background, but said she always felt her public speaking skills failed her when she had to speak "on the fly."

"I would find myself babbling on, wishing somebody would stop me," she said. "Linda's class gave me the tools necessary to consolidate and clarify my thoughts, to prepare in a way that still allowed me to be extemporaneous and natural, but not give way to rambling under pressure. Economy of words was never my strong suit and Carnegie really helped with that."

Another benefit was in dealing with conflict-resolution situations, she said.

"One of the key components of the course is how to communicate effectively with colleagues in the workplace. I can't tell you how many times I've used Carnegie techniques to nurture positive relationships in the workplace, in my teaching studio, or at home. I've also used the techniques in conflicts, and it's truly astonishing to see how quickly a volatile situation can be diffused."

All three of Meloche's children have taken the course and her two daughters, Emily and Carly, have been graduate assistants many times. Her son, Jack, will be a graduate assistant for the first time in the Teen-Adult Dale Carnegie Course that starts May 17 in Ann Arbor.

Meloche, who has trained thousands of people throughout southeast Michigan, said that teaching Dale Carnegie is similar in some ways to doing her "Around Town with Linda" show on cable television in Chelsea.

"With both, I'm hearing people's stories of their lives. They share their challenges, their joys and heartaches, their passion in life."

For more information, call Meloche at 475-4334 or e-mail meloche@dalecarnegie.com.

pedestrian walkways were further highlighted, as well as adding windows to bring the police station more in line with the city's Comprehensive Plan which calls for buildings on Main Street to have 50 percent window coverage on a building's front.

Trees were repositioned as well, addressing a prior concern that some of the evergreens in the plan would overlap when fully grown.

The commission had also expressed concern that the new police station would not fit into the Chelsea aesthetic, which was addressed by Overheiser.

"(This) tries to be a blend between contemporary and blending what's already in Chelsea without outright copying (other noteworthy buildings)," he explained.

Haselschwardt continued to be concerned about the setback after expressing a desire to "pull back" the building from Main Street.

When the council overrode the previous commission's refusal to rezone the three parcels last year, the property became C-5 zoned, which has no setback requirement and left the planning commission no recourse to pull the police station back.

Concerns aside, the planning commission praised the alterations to the design plan, which fuses elements from the Clocktower complex, the post office building and McKune Library.

City officials believe the construction phase of the project will commence this spring and take roughly a year to reach completion.

The police station's construction was supposed to be well underway by now, according to estimates. However, this estimate was prior to the failure to receive rezoning approval from the planning commission and public outcry over the necessity of a new police station and the potential costs to taxpayers last year.

The design was originally a "pre-designed" blueprint to save money, prior to the recent changes to the plan and a nearly 20 percent reduction in size of the overall building.

The revised plan received unanimous combined site-plan approval despite the continued airing of concerns by planning commissioners.

Local woman honored for event planning

By Sarah Rigg
Special Writer

A Moment in Time Wedding and Event Production, owned by Milan resident Jennifer House, has received WeddingWire's Bride's Choice Awards 2011. The award recognizes the top 5 percent of local wedding professionals from the WeddingWire Network who demonstrate quality and service excellence in the wedding industry.

A Moment in Time Wedding and Event Production, an event planning firm based in Plymouth, has won the award for four consecutive years, and House's business has received several other honors during the brief time — just five years — since House made wedding and event planning her full-time job.

"I'm so grateful to have been honored with the Bride's Choice Award again this year," said House, who is a certified bridal consultant. "A Moment in Time could not have won without the feedback, positive reviews and support from the amazing couples that we work with."

House said that the award is based on the number of reviews and scores on those reviews, mostly unsolicited, and that makes the award more meaningful to her.

In addition to winning the WeddingWire Bride's Choice four years in a row, AMIT was also a "Best of Weddings" 2010 pick on The Knot, a wedding planning and resource website.

House said she's not really sure what makes someone a good wedding and event planner.

"I think you're born with the DNA or something to be a wedding planner," she said. "You have to have a bit of a 'Type A' personality. You have to be social, organized and love social gatherings."

House said she may have gotten some of those traits and talents from her mother, who was always the party organizer in the neighborhood and threw extremely popular parties at her childhood home.

"She could make everyone feel comfortable coming to our home, and we did not live in a big house until my teens. So it was a tiny little house, but we'd have barbecues, winter birthday parties, Super Bowl parties."

For many years, House looked at event planning as a hobby, not as a serious long-term career choice. She worked at the nonprofit Shelter Association in Ann Arbor and was part of their event planning team, and she also helped friends plan weddings and parties.

"After a while, I realized this could be a niche for me," she said. "My boyfriend at the time, now my husband, said, 'You should pursue this.' So, I got certified as a professional bridal consultant. I thought I'd do it on weekends, and it would be fun to plan an event here and there."

House said she took on a lot of events for free at first. "Anything I could get my hands on," she said.

But then eight months after launching her website, www.momentsintime.biz, she quit her day job because the event planning business was going so well. She transitioned to doing wedding and event planning full time in 2008, and has since added a half-time lead planner. She also takes on a few interns each season.

House said she has a few ideas about why her business became so popular so quickly.

"I think it has to do with a lot of things, but one is that I'm nicknamed 'the friendly planner.' I have a lot of clients who come to me who have met with other planners, and felt the others were too controlling. They hear I get things done with a smile. The vendors I work with also like that — they know I'm not going to micro-manage them. You get more flies with honey."

House earned a degree in human services — a blend of psychology, sociology and communications — from Eastern Michigan University and has worked in the counseling field before. As a result of those experiences, she said she knows how to work with all different kinds of personalities, which is important for event planners.

"Every couple is incredibly different. Some are quiet and shy, and aren't quite sure what they want," she said. "Others are really outgoing and outspoken and know exactly what they want down to a T, and they just want me to make it happen."

House said that being friendly and outgoing and assertive, but not aggressive, is another important trait for an event planner.

"Some planners are aggressive, some are passive, but clients are usually looking for someone in the middle — someone who can express an opinion, but not run them over with that opinion," House said.

"It's important to learn to listen and be quiet and let the client get out their wants and needs. Instead of jumping in, I take notes. It's important, too, to be really delicate with the pros and cons of what they've decided."

She said clients sometimes have "off-the-wall" ideas that may work in theory, but may be hard to execute, and she tries not to shoot down those ideas immediately.

"I like it when people think outside the box," House said. "I love traditional and classic weddings, but I do 35 to 40 weddings a year, and it's nice to have something different."

Some of the more unique weddings she's helped plan have included a wedding at the Detroit Institute of Art, a vintage barn wedding with vintage tea table cloths and an Arabian Nights-themed wedding with belly dancers and cigar rollers.

At another wedding held at Cobblestone Farm in Ann Arbor, the client wanted to include lawn games as part of the reception.

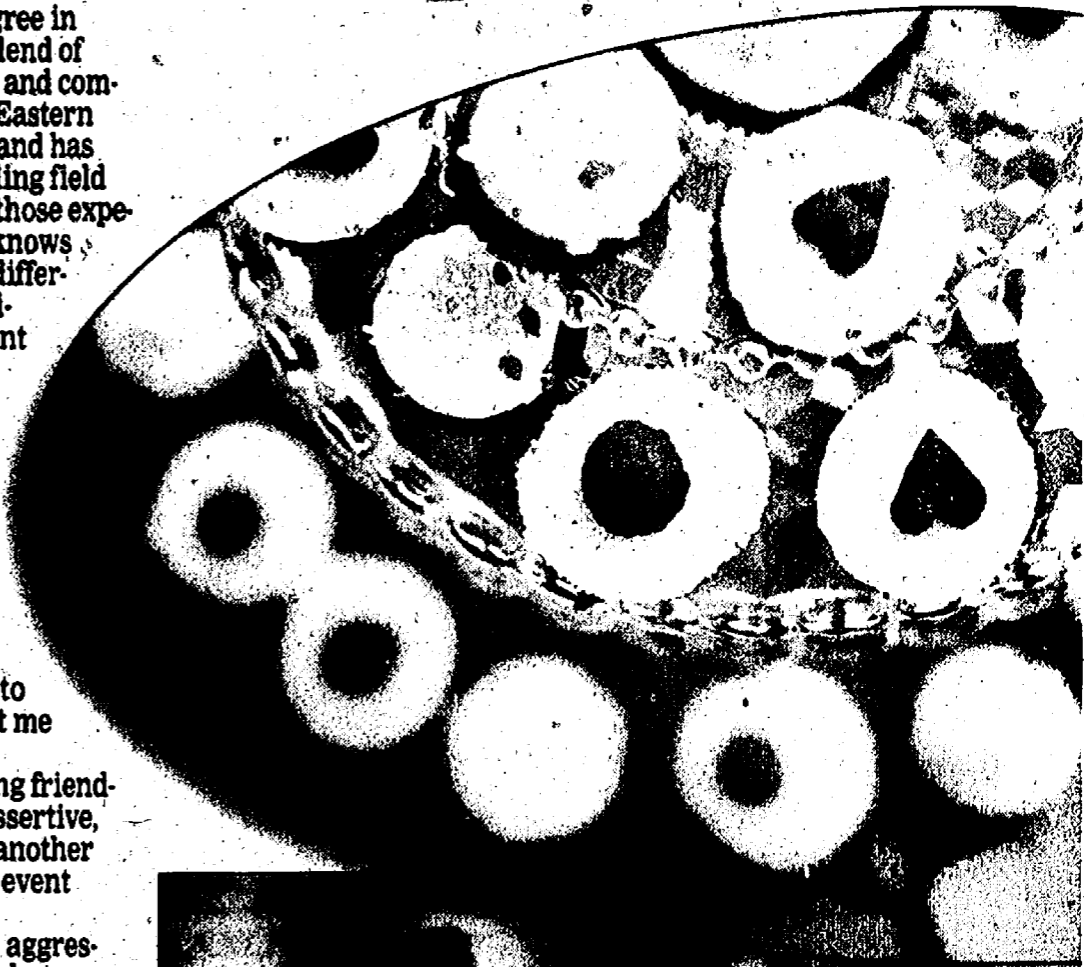

"The bride went out there with a croquet mallet, and the guests were having more fun playing lawn games than the traditional partying and dancing. It was so creative and great."

House said the biggest challenges of her work include budget and money issues, keeping all the relatives happy and unpredictable weather.

"Boy, do I have weather stories," House said. "I might wake up and it's sunny and 85 degrees, and then dark clouds that weren't predicted roll in, and then there's a monsoon going on and the bride is crying."

House said even her own wedding experienced unpredictable weather.

"I had a 60-degree day in

From place settings to desserts, every detail is important.

January when I got married," she said with a laugh.

Looking to the future, House said she is booked halfway through 2012 and expects to keep doing mostly wedding planning through 2012, though she does occasionally plan other types of events. Eventually, she would like to start a family, but plans to keep working in some capacity.

She said she always hopes to keep A Moment in Time a small, intimate company, because most brides want one person they can depend on as a liaison, rather than being shuffled around to various "team members" at a larger company. "I'm always thinking like a bride," House said. "If I were a bride, what would I think, what would I want?"

House grew up in Ann Arbor and went to Pioneer High School. She and her husband moved to Milan about seven years ago because, she said, they thought it was going to be a good real estate investment. Milan was predicted to be an "up and coming" community like Saline, but then the real estate bubble burst.

"When we moved into this house in Milan, we thought of this as starter home," she said.

"But now, we've fallen in love and really love living here. It's a great city where you know your neighbors."

Jennifer House plans weddings in variety of locations, from the Detroit Institute of Arts to a vintage barn.

Ann Arbor offers bike choir experience

By Sheila Pursglove
Special Writer

Sue Zielinski enjoyed singing in the shower, in the car, and as she rode her bike around Toronto, Ontario, where she helped to found "Song Cycles — the Choir on Bikes" in the early 1990s.

"I had heard a great version of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on the radio one morning. I was singing it while riding to work, realizing I could hardly even hear myself because of the traffic noise around me," said the Ann Arbor resident. "I thought, 'This would be so much better with 20 others singing.'"

"So, I started tentatively talking about the idea and eventually found Greg Furlong, who became our fearless choir director every Monday night and every gig for 10 years. When we started the bike choir in Toronto, I was able to sing every week and learn a lot more." When Zielinski moved to Ann Arbor in early 2006 to work with Sustainable Mobility & Accessibility Research & Transformation, a University of Michigan project, she brought the idea with her.

"Laura Russello, the executive director of Michigan Peaceworks, invited me to make a presentation on sustainable transportation in Ann Arbor. For some reason, I started talking about the Toronto bike choir. I can't remember if I actually sang one of the songs, but it's possible," she said. "Laura approached me after and said something like, 'We so need that in Ann Arbor,' and she immediately started organizing the first meeting at Ann Arbor Brewing Co., which actually drew more people than we thought it would — and we've never looked back."

The choir sings a wide-ranging repertoire, including classical, jazz, world, pop and theater, changing the words and customizing the songs to sing the praises of bicycle transportation. Songs include "Mass Ride," "Thoughtless Drivers," "Two-Wheel Tango," "Way-O," and "Bicycled Ode to Joy."

The cycling choristers have performed at several venues in the area, including the annual Peace Concert at The Ark in December, the Ann Arbor Brewery on the Worst Day of the Year Ride, last fall's potluck of the Ann Arbor Bicycle Touring Society, the 90th birthday of an AABTS member and at Kerrytown during last May's Bike to Work Week.

Zielinski, who is passionate about two-wheel transportation, has a commuter bike specially designed for commuting year round in a city like Toronto or Ann Arbor, and a foldable bike that fits into her two-seater hybrid Honda Insight car or can be folded up and carried on a train or bus.

"Cycling is free, independent, physical, convivial, fun, and symbolic of a livable sustainable city, which we need these days," she said.

"It never ceases to amaze me how a combination so simple as singing and cycling can draw such different people together and be so incredibly fun. What started as a cockamamie idea ends up having so many benefits you never would have imagined."

Time for local governments to prepare for emergencies

The new governor was not a Boy Scout, but he has quickly adopted the group's motto: Be prepared.

Faced with the high probability that some cities could end up in bankruptcy on his watch, Gov. Rick Snyder has ordered his team to hop to it and prevent such an occurrence.

The new administration is moving on two fronts:

(1) It is training new emergency financial managers to run financially challenged cities.

(2) It has asked lawmakers to revamp the EFM law, which has opened up a new can of worms pitting labor unions against the new governor.

When the word went out that the state needed help, 200 applicants applied for the chance to become bureaucratic czars. The state could not handle them all in one sitting, so about 65 showed up, eager to learn the ins and outs of running a city in a financial mess.

And there are plenty of them.

The perfect storm has hit many municipalities. They live off the local property taxes, but as home values fall off the cliff, the incoming tax collections go right along with them.

Combine that with the ever-decreasing amount of state aid to those entities, and let's just say going into the red is not just a thought any more.

The Snyder folks don't want to wait until that happens. The last thing the business-guy governor wants is nationwide headlines that shout, "Michigan Cities Go Bankrupt."

But in addition to sending these EFMs in early, lawmakers are considering beefing up their powers to avert a financial meltdown. This is where the fun begins.

Under the proposal pending in the Michigan House of Representatives, the emergency manager would have the authority to — get this — void current contracts with government employees; revamp their pensions; force the consolidation of services; and, if a city owns a utility, the money-czar can sell it.

Does this remind you of a dictator? State Rep. Maureen Stapleton (D-Detroit) says, "It sure does."

Her city owns water and makes money by selling to the suburbs. If Detroit goes into the red, it could lose this lucrative asset.

And then there are the labor unions that represent city workers. They have contracts that were created fair and square, but this czar could tear them up.

State Rep. Al Pscholka (R-Stevensville) has introduced this legislation and is taking incoming fire from local governments. In Benton Harbor, the City Council adopted a resolution condemning him personally.

He points out that there will be "due process" before any of these Draconian unilateral decisions. Workers will be given the chance to slash their own benefits first, but if they don't, it will be done for them.

Robert Bobb, who is the EFM running the Detroit schools because they are in debt up to their eyeballs, warns that cities better act now before the state takes them over.

All of this leaves the Michigan Municipal League in a quandary.

It represents local governments. On one hand, it has to defend the time-honored tradition of local control.

But on the other, faced with mounting labor costs, including health care and retirements, cities might jump at the chance to cancel all those and start anew.

This situation has "ugly" written all over it. Let's see if the non-Boy Scout governor can dialogue his way out of this one.

OUR TAKE: Editorial

Everyone should get their financial house in order

Balancing budgets has been in the news for the past few years. It has particularly taken on a new focus because of the recession.

Usually, news stories discuss the horrible debt and financial situation of the federal government, as well as state and local entities.

Certainly, all three levels of government need to get their financial acts in order. But for average citizens, there's not much they can do other than hope their elected officials get serious about making expenditures match revenues.

However, on a personal level, there is a lot that individuals can do to straighten out their finances — and there's plenty of help available.

National financial expert Dave Ramsey has gotten the attention of numerous Oakland County churches that are sponsoring what Ramsey calls his Financial Peace University classes. The two-hour sessions that meet once a week for 13 weeks are videotapes of Ramsey detailing his methods for becoming debt free and, as he puts it, "becoming wealthy."

Members in each congregation are allowed to decide what times and what days the sessions will be conducted. In many cases, because they are churches, Ramsey sells the programs to congregations at discount rates. Online, the program sells for about $119 and includes materials. Discounts can be as low as $99 per family.

Ramsey's system may seem extreme to some and is often difficult for others to follow because of the poor spending habits they've developed over the years. But the program works and can help anyone — in any income level — to become financially independent.

One of his basic principles is to pay off all credit card debt and never charge again. In fact, for the best results, he suggests people tear up their credit cards while they pay down and eventually pay off their balances. His philosophy is, if you haven't got the cash to make a purchase, you can't afford it.

Obviously, banks and other financial institutions aren't excited about Ramsey's methods, which also include tips on investing after you're debt free to grow your wealth and to be disciplined enough to support your local church and other charities. The latter is probably why the financial guru is so popular with churches throughout the country.

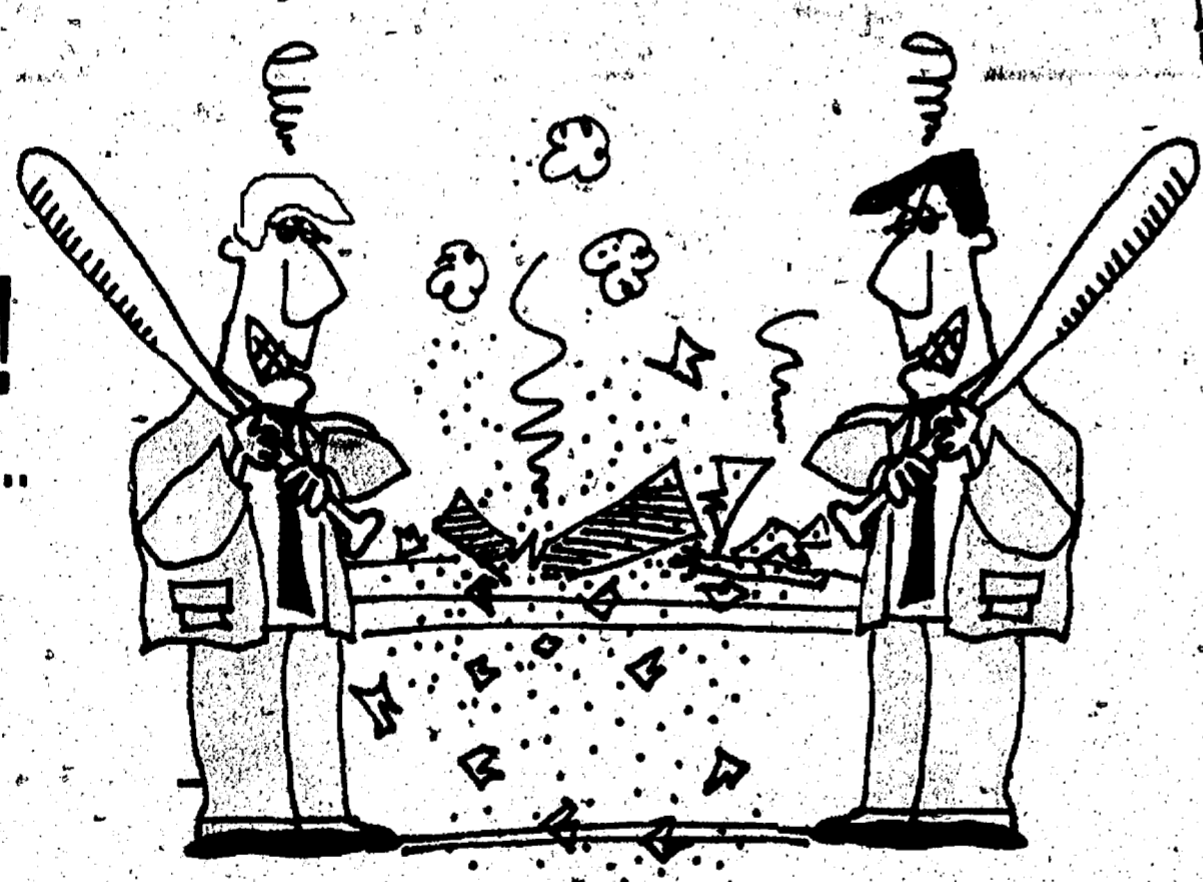

Of course there are other sources for financial help and many of them are free. The MSU Extension has free, three-week classes from time to time.

Many people, admittedly, won't make the effort to straighten out their finances. They'll continue to spend, even if they have to get the cash, using some convoluted logic that they're entitled now to whatever they want to purchase. The reckless spending will eventually catch up with them.

In the meantime, those people who are trying to get their personal finances in order shouldn't be afraid to read or take advantage of the help that is available. Some of it is free; for some of it there's a fee. But you'll never know what useful financial tip you'll pick up unless you explore and examine the resources at your disposal.

"TAKE THAT WATSON..."

The Civil War and the safety net

By Sarah Anderson Guest Writer

With this year marking the 150th anniversary of the Civil War, get ready for grand pontificating on its meaning for whites, African-Americans, the nation, and the world.

Here's what it meant for my family:

My great-grandfather, Albert Corder, was a private in the Union Army. In a pocket-size diary, he recorded battlefield experiences that were the stuff of movies.

"Commence the fight at daylight," he wrote on Sept. 17, 1862. "First we drove them and then they drove us. Then we drove them back again. The fight lasted all day."

The next day's entry: "No fighting today. We are burying the dead."

This was the battle of Antietam, the bloodiest day in U.S. history, with 23,000 casualties.

Few movies have bothered to explore what happened to Civil War soldiers after the South surrendered. Looking at great-grandfather Albert's experience, I'm struck by the efforts of a young nation, ravaged by war, to invent new ways of creating economic opportunities and protections — at least for one segment of its citizens.

As today's deficit hawks push for massive spending cuts, it's revealing to look back at these early experiments with social safety nets.

After three years at the front, Albert mustered out with all of his limbs still attached. He was one of the lucky ones. One out of every three men who served in his unit wound up dead, wounded or missing.

Back in Rhode Island, Albert got a job as a mail carrier on a route from Westerly to Newport. During the war, President Abraham Lincoln had introduced free postal delivery service in a few areas. In peacetime, the government expanded the service, in part as a way to create jobs for former soldiers.

Some years later, Albert set out for new adventures as a homesteader in Dakota Territory. The Homestead Act required that applicants spend five years on a plot of land before they could claim ownership. As a Union Army veteran, Albert could deduct his time served from the residency mandate.

Homesteading was no picnic for this East Coast city slicker. "Mr. Corder has been unfortunate in grain raising," the Bismarck Tribune reported in 1890. "His crops have been hurt by hail twice since he located here and one fall he lost his barn and several head of stock and some farm machinery by fire."

In these rough times, Albert got another leg up from the government. According to his pension records, which my nephew and I found at the National Archives, his payments began in 1890. They started at $6 per month and rose to $24 in 1906, which would be $566 in today's dollars. After he died, the pension passed to his widow.

The Civil War pension system was a precursor to Social Security, at one point accounting for 37 percent of federal expenditures.

It's important not to paint too rosy a picture of these benefits programs. Some historians note that the pension system was biased against African-Americans.

At 160 acres, Homestead Act plots were so small that it was tough to make a decent living off farming them. Far too many veterans lived out their post-war lives in grinding poverty.

And yet, we should reflect on how these modest benefits from long ago may still be paying off.

My great-grandparents had received good public educations in Rhode Island and probably would have been fine without these perks. But the public jobs and land giveaway programs certainly expanded their horizons — and their children's.

Albert's son followed his path into the U.S. Postal Service and became the North Dakota postmaster. The security of that post helped insulate the next generation from the Great Depression. It paid for my mother's advanced education, which she used to teach children, including her own.

So thank you, 19th century legislators, for making those early steps toward building a nation that cares for its citizens. Let's hope we aren't about to take a massive slide backwards.

Sarah Anderson directs the Global Economy Project at the Institute for Policy Studies.

Levin leaves out facts in column

Sen. Carl Levin's guest column about ObamaCare published Feb. 17 fails to include some very interesting facts.

The senator fails to mention that 26 states are suing the federal government over the constitutionality of ObamaCare and that it has been declared unconstitutional by two federal judges. There is nothing in the U.S. Constitution that gives the government the power to mandate citizens purchase health care.

He also fails to mention the recent congressional budget office report that ObamaCare will result in the loss of more than 800,000 jobs over the next decade. Gallup already estimates the real unemployment rate at approximately 10 percent with underemployment at almost 20 percent.

The senator also fails to mention the thousands of new IRS agents who are necessary to enforce ObamaCare. The IRS and health care should not go hand in hand.

Lastly, he fails to mention that more than 700 ObamaCare waivers given to certain corporations. If this bill is so good for everyone, then why the need for waivers?

This $1 trillion government monstrosity will not result in better health care, but rather higher taxes, a depressed economy, larger government and less freedom. Gary Knechtel Ypsilanti

Driving safely should trump the need for breakfast

This is an open letter to the woman leaving the Saline McDonald's about 7:45 a.m. Feb. 17.

Could you really not wait until you crossed all the traffic on Michigan Avenue, to head west, before shoving half of that Egg McMuffin into your mouth, then pulling out of the driveway with the balance of the sandwich and wrapper in your left hand, on top of the steering wheel?

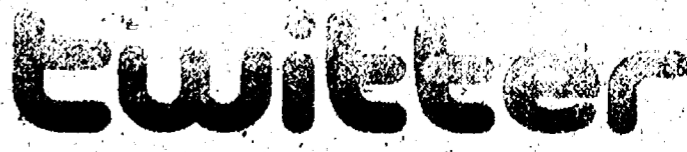

Were you really that hungry? Had we both not slammed on the brakes just in time, I'm sure my vehicle would have hit you broadside, not only ruining the day for my wife and myself, but causing significant harm (and possibly death) to yourself.

This is the same time of day that many Saline High School kids are driving to school, many of whom likely aren't as experienced as myself and able to avoid such a terrible accident.

Was it really that important to get that McMuffin shoved into your pie-hole, within seconds of leaving the drive-thru window?

LAWSUIT

The lawsuit states that protocols implemented by the Washtenaw/Livingston Medical Control Authority - which administers medical and first-responder guidelines - specifically state a patient must be stabilized before firefighters are to transport them anywhere.

"By not taking the fully prescribed vitals, not waiting for the ambulance to arrive and not immediately taking the patient to a level one trauma center, there was a likelihood of an ultimate waste of time, which could place the patient's prompt and proper treatment and optimum recovery in jeopardy," the suit states.

The woman was moved from the truck to a waiting ambulance as soon as it arrived at the hospital, and that ambulance sped her to the University of Michigan Medical Center, the closest location with a critical trauma care center.

The suit estimates that Smyth's decision delayed the proper care by more than 19 minutes. Her condition was not detailed in the suit and was unknown at press time.

Rose noted the fire truck was unsuitable for patient transport, and as a result, the woman was forced to lie down on a bench seat in the cab of the truck for the ride.

He voiced his frustration after a nurse and Huron Valley paramedics reacted negatively to Smyth's decision upon arrival at the hospital. He ultimately apologized to Payeur, the suit states.

Still, Rose was switched to third shift directly under Smyth's command, and placed on an unpublished probationary period, the suit claims. His salary was also scaled back to match one of the three lower-paid Staffing for Adequate Fire and Emergency Response (SAFER) grant positions within the department.

The aftermath

Rose claims that he was deliberately forced into an intolerable working environment that would get to the point where he had to resign, which he ultimately did late last fall.

Not only had the department switched his shifts and reduced his pay but Rose went from an officer's status with some degree of job security and seniority, to the SAFER grant position, which is set to expire in 2013.

In the 13-page claim, Rose's attorneys said he was acting as a concerned citizen while voicing his opinion and that his freedom of speech is guaranteed by the Bill of Rights.

Payeur's actions violated Rose's First Amendment rights and have the potential to silence other employees from raising concerns in the future, they argued.

"Payeur and the CAFA fostered a chilling effect on free speech by creating a paramilitary atmosphere of antagonism, hostility and distrust from employees," the lawsuit states.

The lawsuit also recounts an internal memo that Payeur reportedly sent to Rose on Nov. 9, 2010, that admonished the veteran for conduct unbecoming of an officer.

"You need to know that a lack of confidence in you on the part of your leadership skills and abilities has been brought to my attention," Payeur wrote, according to the suit.

"There's a feeling out there that you don't have their backs. You lost a lot of credibility from your actions on the engine transport; speaking out in public against the action taken by Capt Smyth.

"Professionalism, responsibility, and maturity would follow the chain of command, and in a manner that does not embarrass the Department."

Rose's departure was not the only notable loss for the department since last fall. Just before the end of the year, Lt. Mike Milliken left the department for another job. And in January, eight-year department veteran Capt. Sam Norton, Rose's direct supervisor prior to the July incident, resigned following an internal investigation into conduct that Payeur described as creating a hostile work environment.

Norton was placed on paid administrative leave in December amid allegations that he brought a rifle to the station and allegedly pointed it at a co-worker. Police found no evidence of a crime.

Chelsea City Manager John Hanifan said he was aware of the lawsuit but that the fire department operates under the Chelsea Area Fire Authority, and that it would be inappropriate for him to comment.

Attempts to reach LuAnn Koch, director of the CAFA and Sylvan Township Clerk did not return messages seeking comment.

The sued parties have 21 days from Rose's filing to respond before U.S. District Judge Robert Cleland.

the brand identity build," said Pryor, a Chelsea High School graduate with deep roots in the community.

Pryor's firm was one of 35 firms that responded to requests for proposal to develop the branding and website and was ultimately one of 10 finalists in applying for the job.

"We gave a presentation about 10 things I believe about Chelsea - we wrote a story for it and it was 20 minutes long," Pryor said. "I think our local connection sold them on us."

Now Pryor says that local connection and understanding of what Chelsea has to offer are going directly into the DNA of the proposed branding, which starts with a logo incorporating the city's name and an action phrase: "see something else, shop something else, live something else."

Pryor said that the mobile version of the website was a late addition to the overall marketing and branding package offered.

"Many folks on the committee and elsewhere mentioned that they felt like a mobile application would be a great addition," he said. "We started working on (the overall) effort in early fall."

The website will feature pages for participating businesses in town, an events calendar and other features designed to help businesses and people interested in visiting Chelsea better communicate.

Annual Home, Garden and Lifestyle show scheduled

By Steven Howard
Heritage Media

The Builders and Remodelers Association of Greater Ann Arbor will host its annual Home, Garden and Lifestyle Show March 18 at the Washtenaw Farm Council Grounds, and organizers are promising interesting exhibits that will make spring feel closer.

Peter Nowakowski, marketing and communications director for BRAG, said the show, which is marking its 21st year, has been going on for many years and is something area residents look forward to at the end of winter.

This is the second year under the show's current name, which was changed to reflect the fact that more than just remodeling businesses populate the vendor booths.

"There are all kinds of things, from lawnmower displays to an auto dealership," Nowakowski said. "There are over 200 exhibitors."

The sheer scale and intricate design of some of the displays is also a big draw, he said.

"One of the nice things is that there are a lot of pretty elaborate displays," Nowakowski said, citing patio setups, waterscapes, rock gardens and gazebos.

The BRAG website features a full vendor list of participating businesses and an itemized map that can be printed for visitors who want to plan out their day with certainty.

Nowakowski said the map is helpful for those with a small amount of time to see the show.

Those wanting the full experience, he said, can take in seven buildings worth of exhibit space.

"The key thing about the show is it's kind of a one-stop shop," Nowakowski said. "You don't have to drive around to different shows because they're all there under one roof. It's an efficient way of starting your project."

"Plenty of concessions will be on hand for hungry attendees to enjoy," Nowakowski said, noting that there will be cooking demonstrations throughout the weekend.

Times differ for each day of the show, so visitors need to plan accordingly.

"The show is Friday Saturday and Sunday, March 18, 19 and 20," Nowakowski said. "Friday, it's 3 p.m. to 8 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. and Sunday 11 a.m. to 5 p.m."

Children ages 12 and younger are admitted free of charge to the show.

"It's $5 for adults, which is anyone 13 and over," Nowakowski said.

Those looking to save a little cash on admission can visit the BRAG website at www.bragannarbor.com to print a coupon in advance.

"We're offering a two-for-one coupon for admission," Nowakowski said. "They can go there print it out."

More information on BRAG can be found there, as well as a complete list of sponsors for the show.

The Washtenaw Farm Council Grounds is located at 5055 Saline-Ann Arbor Road in Lodi Township.

Authorities catch up to man who tried to assault police, motorists

An Ann Arbor man who allegedly confronted police after swinging a tire iron at moving traffic on New Year's Eve is expected in court this week for a preliminary hearing.

Zehua Zhu, 45, is charged with malicious destruction of police property and two counts of resisting and obstructing officers for the Dec. 31, 2010, incident in the 4500 block of Washtenaw Avenue.

Officers responded to reports of a man swinging an object at about 6:30 p.m., according to police reports. They found the man standing outside an Ann Arbor Transportation Authority bus screaming at the driver to let him in.

He had a silver object that was later determined to be a tire iron in his right hand and a mailbox in the other, reports stated. Officers commanded him to drop the items, and he started to walk toward them.

Just as one officer was about to deploy a Taser, the man turned around and returned to his vehicle parked along Washtenaw Avenue.

He pulled away from police and parked behind a business nearby, where officers blocked him in, according to reports. He then backed his vehicle into one of the police cruiser.

Officers then deployed the Taser and arrested him. He was referred to a local hospital for a psychiatric examination, and released while prosecutors reviewed the case. Court records show Zhu did not appear for arraignment on charges.

He was arrested Feb. 17 by Washtenaw County Sheriff's deputies assigned to Scio Township, according to reports. He was arrested in the 700 block of Miller Road by deputies attempting to serve an arrest warrant on the multiple felony charges.

Deputies arrested him without incident and he was transported to the Washtenaw County Jail.

Pittsfield Township rape suspects delay initial court hearing

The preliminary hearing for two men charged with sexually assaulting a Pittsfield Township woman multiple times was adjourned until next month.

Maurice Ron Manning and Michael Martell-Deshawn Brown each opted to delay the hearing in Washtenaw County District Court last week until March 3, records show.

Manning, 22, is charged with four counts of first-degree criminal sexual conduct, one count of unlawful imprisonment, and one count of prostitution and pandering.

He faces between 15 years and up to life in prison if convicted, court documents show. He remains in custody at the Washtenaw County Jail on $300,000 cash bond.

Brown, 32, faces six counts of first-degree criminal sexual conduct, unlawful imprisonment, prostitution and pandering, and assault with a dangerous weapon.

He was denied bond at arraignment.

Police said the alleged

COURT BRIEFS

ing death and robbery of an Ypsilanti Township man last fall will stand trial together in June.

Court records show James Daniel Lester, Keywone Walker and Willie Walker will stand trial on open murder and armed robbery charges on June 13 in Washtenaw County Circuit Court.

They are accused of trying to rob 28-year-old Jason Hoover inside a residence at the Schooner Cove Apartments in the 5000 block of Bosuns Way on Nov. 6, 2010.

Hoover was shot once in the chest and was declared dead on arrival at St. Joseph Mercy Hospital in Ann Arbor.

Washtenaw County Sheriff's detectives identified and arrested the men within days of the shooting. Willie Walker, 30, is accused of firing the handgun.

Lester, 22, was inside the apartment at the time, and Keywone Walker, also 22, allegedly drove the men there for a drug deal.

All three suspects stood mute to the charges at a recently pretrial hearing and not guilty pleas were entered on their behalves, records show. They remain in custody at the Washtenaw County Jail without bond.

Independent psychological exam ordered for indecent exposure suspect

A man accused of repeatedly exposing himself outside the occupied homes of residents in several different communities across western Washtenaw County will have an independent psychological examination before his criminal case proceeds.

William Engle, 48, was granted permission to have an independent psychologist evaluate his capacity to understand the charges against him and assist with his own defense, records show.

He is scheduled to appear in Washtenaw County Circuit Court March 10 for a pre-trial hearing before Circuit Judge David Swartz.

Authorities arrested Engle in August after he allegedly left the scene of an indecent exposure complaint at a Lima Township home. He is suspected in at least a dozen other similar incidents in Scio Township, Dexter Village and Ann Arbor, and is charged with four counts of indecent exposure by a sexually delinquent person.

He waived his preliminary hearing in district court late last year as his attorneys with the Washtenaw County Public Defender's Office indicated they would seek the insanity defense, court records show.

Records claim Engle lacks the understanding of criminal responsibility.

A judge ordered a mental competency examination at the Center for Forensic Psychiatry in York Township following a similar examination at the Veterans' Administration Hospital in Ann Arbor after his arrest.

Engle is a veteran of the U.S.

military.

He remains in custody on $50,000 bond.

EARL BOYKINS' JERSEY RETIREMENT SET FOR FEB. 27
Paid Advertisement

YPSILANTI, Mich. (EMUEagles.com) — One of the greatest men's basketball players in Eastern Michigan University men's basketball history will have his jersey retired Sunday, Feb. 27.

Guard Earl Boykins, a four-year letterman for the Eagles from 1994-98, and an honorable mention All-American as a senior, will be the fourth EMU basketball player to have his jersey raised to the rafters.

Boykins' No. 11 jersey will join former men's greats George Gervin, Grant Long and Kennedy McIntosh along with women's standout Laurie Byrd as the only basketball players to have their jerseys retired.

Boykins will be honored at halftime of the EMU-Western Michigan University Mid-American Conference West Division game which is set for a 2:07 p.m. start, Feb. 27, in the Convocation Center.

The first 500 fans will receive a free Boykins "Shersey" at the game. All EMU alumni can attend the game for $3 which includes a hot dog, pop and ticket. Anyone 18 or over can enter to win an iPad.

Boykins began his career as a freshman in 1994-95 and became an instant starter at point guard, a position he would own for four consecutive years.

Boykins averaged 12.5 points and 4.5 rebounds in his first season and helped the Eagles finish with a 20-10 record and a berth in the NIT post-season tournament.

In his sophomore season, Boykins averaged 15.5 points and 5.8 assists as the Eagles recorded a 25-6 overall record, a Mid-American Conference Championship with a 14-4 record and an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament.

The 5-foot-5 Boykins helped the Eagles defeat Duke in the first round of the NCAA before bowing out to a No. 1 seeded UConn team.

He was even better as a junior, scoring 19.1 points a game and averaging 4.7 assists as EMU finished with a 22-10 mark.

The star point guard saved his best play for his senior year, finishing second in the nation in scoring at 25.7 points a game, earning the MAC Most Valuable Player Award at the league tournament and being named an honorable mention All-American. The Eagles were 20-10 that year, winning the MAC Tournament title and earning another NCAA Tournament bid, losing to Michigan State in the first round.

He left EMU as the second-leading scorer in history with 2,211 points and is still playing professional basketball, this season with the NBA's Milwaukee Bucks.

Gov. Snyder to slash state aid to schools

Officials fear major impact of proposed cuts

By Erica McClain
Heritage Media

Michigan public schools could face a potential $700 per pupil reduction in spending based on Gov. Rick Snyder's proposed budget plan revealed Feb. 17.

The reduction figure hails from three sections of state proposed plans. Snyder's plan recommends cutting 4.1 percent per pupil in spending, which is about $300 per student. However, two other key figures weigh funding down — a secondary cut carried over from last year would take away $170 per pupil for schools, and an increased retirement rate for public schools would seize $230 per student.

"It is a devastating total," said Shawn Lewis-Lakin, superintendent of Manchester schools.

Lewis-Lakin said the retirement rate increase skyrocketed from 16.54 percent to 24.46 percent between 2009 and 2011.

"This is not a cost over which local districts have control," he said. "Rather it is a function of the retirement plan design, which needs to be addressed by the state Legislature. I urge them to act."

Mary Marshall, Dexter Community Schools' superintendent, said it has to be noted that a retirement increase of even a few percent means a loss of "hundreds of thousands of dollars for us."

Marshall said the current proposed cuts will equal no less than $1 million in funding for her district.

"We've been enduring cuts for the last seven or eight years," Marshall said. "To find another million of expenses to reduce — it's no longer possible for us not to touch programs that affect kids. We have tried really hard to keep cuts away from programs, but we're at a point now where it's no longer possible."

In addition to employee retirement costs, Marshall said another key issue for state officials to recognize is the lack of ways schools can raise funding.

The superintendent said it's unlikely that her district will be able to recoup the losses any time soon by putting a millage to a vote.

"We have got to fix our funding system in our state," Marshall said. "It's critical that we fix our funding. We can't grow as a state if we don't focus on education ... We have got to fix system because it is broken."

For Intermediate School districts, Snyder's budget cuts go even deeper. The governor's budget plan would cut 5 percent from ISDs, where public schools face a 4.1 percent reduction.

"A 5 percent cut to this (state aid) funding will mean an additional $75,000 lost that would have been used to help support innovative programs that impact student achievement such as our community's early childhood education program," said Rick Leyschock, interim superintendent of the Washtenaw Intermediate School District.

Leyschock said state aid for the WISD has been reduced by more than $600,000, or more than 32 percent, since 2004.

"We will work with our governor and our legislators to do our part," Leyschock said. "But, with the size of the cuts and next year's school budgets going in to effect July 1, four months is not enough time for districts to adjust to these significant losses."

Leyschock said he invites area legislators to learn more about the implications for students and to continue to work with the WISD to minimize the impact.

In addition to public and intermediate school district cuts, the governor's budget plan also slashes support for university and colleges. Higher education will receive about 20 percent less in operations funding under the proposal.

And in an attempt to drive tuition increases down, Snyder's plan would have universities share $83 million in funding as long as the institutions keep fees increases below 7 percent.

For the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, the state reduction would be $47.5 million, a 15 percent loss from fiscal year 2011, providing that the school would meet the tuition increase requirement.

U of M President Mary Coleman said at a recent board of regents meeting that the university had anticipated a reduction in state funding and has been preparing for continued cuts for several years.

"There is no denying that this will be painful," Coleman said, "but we are fully prepared to do our part."

AUTO

To regain its lead, Honda introduced the 2012 Civic in Detroit's North American International Auto Show as a concept car that will enter production this spring.

Honda Civic sets the company's pace in U.S.

By Richard Williamson
Scripps Howard News Service

Accord may be Honda's bestseller in the United States, but the Civic is and always has been the heart of the lineup.

Introduced in 1972 as a subcompact coupe, Civic represents the second-longest continuously sold nameplate from a Japanese manufacturer behind the Toyota Corolla, introduced four years earlier.

Although Honda is correctly known as a Japanese brand, North America was the motorcycle maker's proving ground for autos and its most important market. The first Civic's charm and reliability impressed baby boomers in much the same way the Apple Macintosh would a few years later.

With its flagship Ohio plant in Marysville producing Accords, Honda now ranks as the fourth-largest manufacturer of autos in the United States. In Canada, Civic is the best-selling model for 13 years running, while in Japan the compact came to the end of its run in 2010.

"Over there, we meet consumers' small-car needs with a variety of smaller vehicles, and Civic has not played a major sales role in many years," said William Walton, manager of Honda product planning for American Honda Motor Co. "It's a decidedly different story in North America. In fact, our customers are continuing to make Civic a top-10 selling vehicle in the U.S. in 2010, and Civic is our No. 1-selling vehicle in Canada."

The eighth-generation Civic continues to attract younger buyers, introducing on average more than 90,000 new-car customers under age 35 to the brand every year, company officials say. More than 95 percent of all Civics sold in the U.S. were built in North America at manufacturing facilities in either Greensburg, Ind., or Alliston, Ontario in Canada.

U.S. Civic sales rose to 260,218 at the end of 2010, representing a 0.8 percent increase over 2009. But Civic has some catching up to do in 2011, as Chevrolet blazes a bright trail in the better-equipped and more fuel-efficient Cruze and Hyundai plays one-upmanship in the new Elantra.

"To regain its lead, Honda introduced the 2012 Civic in Detroit's North American International Auto Show as a concept car that will enter production this spring.

John Mendel, executive vice president for sales at American Honda, said that the new model would deliver 40 mpg on the highway and that a hybrid version would still be available. The hybrid with the first lithium ion battery pack is just one of several Honda initiatives to run cleaner, more efficient cars, including a Civic GX fueled by natural gas.

"Civic has an incredible legacy, consistently one of the industry's most popular and trend-setting vehicles," Mendel said. "Along the way, it earned the trust of our customers as the most trouble-free car in its class."

Mendel did not announce prices and withheld other details, but gave the Detroit show goers a look at the new design for the Civic sedan and Si version.

"The Civic is known for providing a balance of 'just-right' packaging, fun-to-drive character and outstanding fuel economy, at a price that even first-time buyers can afford,"

Mendel said.

With the widest array of engine choices available in its class, the 2012 Civic includes a sedan and a coupe bearing the "one-motion" mono-form shape. Both versions feature steeply raked windshields, wide stances and bold character lines along the profile. The lower character line on both models broadens toward the rear fenders. The front fender surface treatments form a three-dimensional look, adding depth against the deep-set headlights.

The sedan's front grille features a solid bar bearing a chrome Honda emblem. The coupe has a more angular front fascia, mesh grille and a tapered rear roofline that flows smoothly into the trunk.

The coupe is also equipped with a rear air diffuser, a center-mounted exhaust outlet and a rear deck lid spoiler with dual vents. The show car had 19-inch machined alloy wheels.

Honda continues to use Variable Valve Timing and Lift Electronic Control technology on the 4-cylinder engines powering the new Civic. Civic GX model is the only natural gas-powered passenger car built in the U.S. by a major manufacturer.

Horsepower in this class is typically 140 horses or less. The Cruze's base engine is rated at 138 horsepower. With a base price of $16,995, Cruze offers a far superior load of standard equipment than the current Civic.

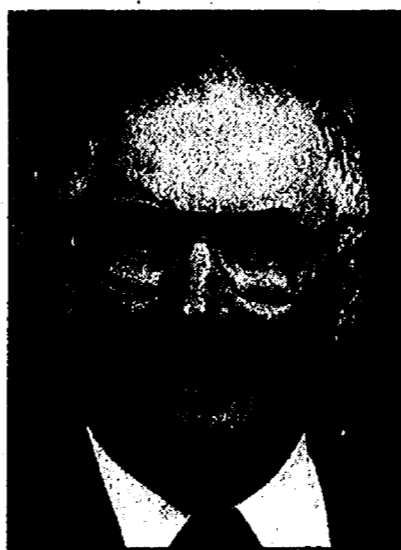

So far, Elantra appears to be the benchmark, with a base sticker price of $15,550 and a 1.8-liter, 140-horsepower engine that rates a class-leading 29 city and 40 highway mpg.

ASK DOCTOR CRANKSHAFT

Does reader really need to have these things replaced at 60,000 miles?

Q: My car, a 2004 Taurus, has close to 60,000 miles on it. I change my oil every 5,000 miles, but if I go to the Ford dealer, they'll want me to change all the fluids, oil, antifreeze, transmission, rear axle.

They'll also want to charge for a list of inspection items and the costs will be over $600, which I don't have budgeted. Can you tell me if I really need to have these things replaced at 60,000 miles? Thank you.
— Robert

A: The short answer is a "qualified" no, but you should have the car's overall condition assessed by a shop to have a baseline from which to work.

Every manufacturer publishes inspection/replacement intervals for components in their models and these are listed in the owners' manuals. Each item on the list and the mileage at which it should be serviced is based on statistical data only, as so much is affected by the type of use. These mileage intervals are very conservative and are meant to help the owner practice preventive maintenance, if so desired.

Antifreeze should be replaced every 3-4 years to maintain its anti-corrosion properties and things like belts, brake pads, tires, transmission fluid, etc., should be replaced when significant wear/discoloration is observed.

Q: How long does a car float? If somebody accidentally drives into a flooded road and it's deeper than it looks, how long will the car float to give enough time to get out? My roommates and I disagree on whether you could get out the window in time or the car would sink.

Is there a formula to figure this out?
— Stan in Poughkeepsie, NY

A: There's no such formula because no two different makes/models are manufactured in the same way. How quickly a vehicle will sink depends upon the quality and fit of the door seals, openings in the body shell where wires and lines pass through, weight and several other factors, but the key issue is that it will definitely sink.

The problem with driving into a flooded roadway isn't so much the depth of the water but the flow rate. Even if the water level is just 2-3 feet, in a flowing stream, you'd be in serious danger because the stream would push the vehicle along with it.

The chances of tipping over or being pushed into deep water would be great and therefore life-threatening.

Local dirt: Edible plants, herbs help control pests

By Mary Jo Frank
Guest Writer

Gardeners pondering what to plant this spring should seriously consider co-mingling vegetables, herbs and edible ornamentals among showy annuals and perennials, advised Linda Whitlock, an advanced master gardener.

Whitlock, a consumer horticulture coordinator at the MSU Extension Service, spoke at a recent Chelsea Area Garden Club meeting. She said that in addition to providing scent and flavor, edible flowers and ornamentals bring color, texture, repetition and intriguing shapes - all elements of good landscape design - to home and public gardens.

"Herbs planted along walkways are a wonderful way to welcome guests," Whitlock said.

Strongly scented herbs, including basil, oregano and thyme, also are great deterrents for deer and rabbit.

Whitlock uses those herbs to protect hostas from four-legged predators. She keeps slugs at bay by creating a barrier of sharp, rough stones used as mulch around the plants.

Herbs and edible ornamentals work well in formal and semi-formal settings as well as informal cottage gardens, where plants are expected to "mingle and form relationships," she noted. Two of the many eye-catching combinations she suggested were mixed lettuces among pansies, and multiple cabbages co-planted with parsley.

Parsley and fennel, with their fern-like leaves, make beautiful filler for container gardens and in garden beds, and thyme is an excellent ground cover, she said. For drama, artichokes, chard and kale are stars. Basil plants, which come in a variety of colors and sizes, make attractive borders, particularly when allowed to bloom.

Many gardeners plant marigolds around tomatoes and other vegetables to ward off insects, Whitlock said.

Marigolds and salvia planted around the base of tomato plants also help hide the discolored bottom leaves that develop on tomato plants in late summer.

Selecting the right plants can help gardeners maintain a healthy, bio-diverse environment while limiting the need for pesticides. Whitlock recommended choosing plants that have lots of nectar - parsley, alyssum, cosmos, tansy and violets - to draw in birds and predator insects, which also feed on garden pests. Lady beetles, parasitoid wasps, praying mantises, assassin beetles and dragonflies are among the most effective predator insects. Frogs and snakes also help rid gardens of unwanted pests, she said.

Borage, chives, daylilies, impatiens, nasturtium, roses and squash produce some of the most popular edible flowers. For cooking and eating, the blossoms are best harvested mid-morning when they are fresh and dry, according to Whitlock.

As part of her talk, Whitlock showed images of gardens from around the world, including Chicago's Grant Park and the Chicago Botanic Garden, where designers frequently combine edible ornamentals and flowers, fruit trees, herbs and vegetables.

She also talked about the Gagie School Garden, which won the Kalamazoo Garden Council's 2010 Inspiring Garden Award. Colored peppers, varieties of lettuce, spinach and millet thrive among annuals in the garden maintained by students attending the kindergar-

Whole Foods customers can donate bag refund to nonprofit

At Whole Foods Market, customers who reuse their grocery shopping bags receive a 10-cent refund. A new program called "One Dime at a Time," customers may keep the refund or donate it to a specified nonprofit organization. You can donate by telling your cashier to apply your 10-cent bag refund to the One Dime program. The One Dime at a Time recipient for January, February and March is FLY Children's Art Center.

Through March 31, customers' dimes will benefit this organization, a nonprofit mobile open studio for kids, located in Ypsilanti. The program's volunteer staff packs up supplies and heads out into libraries, schools, coffee shops, community centers and living rooms to bring art making experiences to children. Because of support from the community, many of those classes are free to the students who take them. The tuition in the fee-based classes is kept intentionally low so that programs are accessible to all kids.

FLY staff said that young children need opportunities to learn how to be critical thinkers, risk takers and creative problem solvers, and the art center's programs are a part of that growth. The programming at FLY Children's Art Center is open studio format. Supplies and tools are arranged cafeteria style, inviting children to select whatever they wish. Children in these sessions engage in the process of decision making, problem solving, creative ingenuity and, ultimately, art making. For more information, visit <http://flyartcenter.org>.

Grant to connect low-income people with healthy foods

Washtenaw County Public Health has been awarded a two-year, $294,000 grant from the Kresge Foundation, and the award will expand the "Prescription for Health" program, which connects low-income patients at local medical clinics to farmers' markets, ensuring greater access to healthy foods. "We are thrilled that this grant award will allow us to take this successful program to additional clinics throughout the county and greatly enhance the nutrition education element of the program," said Sharon P. Sheldon, program administrator for the Health Promotion/Disease Prevention Division, in a news release. The aim of the program is twofold: to increase consumption of fresh fruits and vegetables among populations at higher risk for chronic disease and to train staff at local clinics about the local food system and how to connect their patients to healthy food resources. The Kresge Foundation is a $3.1 billion private foundation that supports nonprofit organizations in health, the environment, community development, arts and culture and human services. More information is available at <http://publichealth.ewashtenaw.org> or by calling 544-6700.

Food bank launches new website

Food Gatherers, Washtenaw County's food rescue and food bank program, has launched a new website, www.foodgatherers.org, designed and developed by DesignHub Inc. of Saline. Visitors to the new site can get connected to local emergency grocery and hot meal programs, learn about Food Gatherers programs and find information on county-wide and national hunger trends. The site offers detailed information on how to hold a non-perishable food drive and donate funds, with a form to make secure online financial donations. Several pages detail Food Gatherers' growing initiatives like Faith and Food and The Gathering Farm, which connect low-income individuals and families with locally grown produce. There is also information for individuals, groups or families who wish to volunteer at Food Gatherers warehouse or Community Kitchen. Elsewhere on the site, visitors can find the latest news from Food Gatherers, a calendar of events, and links to Food Gatherers' Facebook and Twitter accounts.

Historic artwork featured at fair

By Sean Dalton
Heritage Media

Rounding out the eclectic group of artists that will be at the 38th Annual Pioneer Arts Fair March 19 are broom maker Ron Lindgren and fly tier Rusty Kalmbach.

Although they may not be considered art in the traditional sense by casual passerbys, Lindgren and Kalmbach hold that their serves a message both aesthetic and historical.

"The techniques I use to make the brooms date back to the colonial era in the United States," explained Lindgren.

Later devices were developed that allowed broom makers to bind the fibers onto handles with wire. These devices are known as "kick winders" and are widely used today, according to Lindgren.

He learned how to make brooms in Norfolk, Va. in 1993 just prior to retiring from the Navy.

"The method I use is a foot spindle to tightly bind the brooms ... the fibers are all broomcorn, a plant related to sorghum which at one time was used to make sweeteners," Lindgren said.

All of the brooms he makes are hand tied, either to a handle for use as a hearth broom, floor broom or cobwebber.

The smaller whiskbrooms are bound-fibers, which are then covered with stalk material using a "plaiting" or weaving technique which serves as a decorative but functional handle.

"The types of brooms I make vary from a small 'cake tester' which consists of a bundle of broomcorn fibers tightly bound that are then used to test baked goods and cakes to a range of large double and triple headed floor brooms," Lindgren said.

The variety of brooms Lindgren makes include whisk brooms, round and flat; Turkey Wings and Fantails, as well as many different hearth brooms.

Lindgren says there's a story behind each and each is unique in its own way, and that he finds his unique handles from northern Michigan woods where he lives along the shorelines of the Great Lakes when he isn't buying Sassafras, Hickory or Hawthorne woods from the south.

Kalmbach's fly tying goes back centuries as fly fishing, which always goes hand in hand with fly tying, has a history as "a sport of King's."

"Fly tying has always gone hand in hand with Fly Fishing," Kalmbach explained. "It has been a part of early American History with roots dating back to the mid 1800's in the Catskill region in up state New York."

Fly Fishing and Fly tying in Michigan has been around almost as long with Michigan's Au Sable river being known historically as a Blue Ribbon quality trout river, according to Kalmbach.

"We are truly favored in Michigan to have this fishery available for sport fishing," he said. "Modern fly tying falls into two categories: people learning the sport before the movie 'A River Runs Through It,' and those who started fly fishing after."

"I first learned to tie flies and fly fish in the Upper Peninsula with my grandfather in the mid-1960s. At the invitation of a close friend, I became more involved in Fly tying in the late 1970s and began teaching in the mid-1980s."

Rusty Kalmbach works on tying a fishing fly. The artists will be featured at this year's Dexter Pioneer Arts Fair.

Now, more than 30 years later, Kalmbach looks forward to showing people how some of the more intricate fly patterns and the secrets of fly tying really are easier than most people think.

The arts fair will be held at Creekside Intermediate School, at 2615 Baker Road in Dexter from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., where more than 50 artists and crafters will showcase and offer their jewelry, quilting, wood-carving and other wares.

Scholarships available for Chelsea students

The Chelsea Education Foundation scholarship application period has now begun for Chelsea students.

The completed application and its supporting documentation are due by April 15.

Numerous scholarships are awarded annually to graduating seniors and college students for the college of their choice. This past year, 44 scholarships totaling $22,000 were given away to help defray their cost of tuition. These funds were made available from sponsors, fundraising events and countless hours of work from volunteers.

Please see the application on our website for complete instructions at <http://www.chelseaeducationfoundation.org>.

The Chelsea Education Foundation also provides funds to schools and nonprofit organizations in the area for beneficial educational programs offered to children and adults. Since its incorporation in 1990, more than $140,000 has been given in grants alone. Past recipients include the Chelsea District Library, the Waterloo Natural History Museum, the Adult Learners Institute, the Eighth-Grade Washington, D.C. Trip, the Grandparent Connect Program and several field trips for the Chelsea School District.

In these hard economic times, the foundation has been able to provide grants for students to enroll in the Chelsea Children's Cooperative and Chelsea Community Preschools.

The major fundraiser for the year is the annual CEF Gala. Therefore, the Chelsea Education Foundation would like to invite all adults to a Mexican fiesta. It will be at 6 p.m. Saturday, March 26 at the Chelsea Comfort Inn and Village Conference Center. There will be a silent auction and drawings followed by a live auction.

Dinner and dessert are included along with a cash bar and music provided by a mariachi band. The cost is $60 per person or $100 per couple and is tax deductible excluding the cost of dinner. Please contact Susan Wellman at 734-475-9050 for more information and/or to reserve tickets, or mail your check to: CEF, P.O. Box 281, Chelsea, MI, 48118.

The CEF Gala is a fun evening and a wonderful way to help your community in this trying time. Please consider enjoying the evening with us and helping a worthy cause.

St. Paul United welcomes new pastor

Members of the St. Paul United Church of Christ in Chelsea voted unanimously to accept James Cameron Coyl as their new pastor on Feb. 13.

There were tears of joy throughout the congregation as Pastor Coyl was welcomed following the congregational meeting.

The congregation extends its gratitude to interim pastor Curt Demars-Johnson for his faithful service during its time of transition.

The search committee formed in March 2009, and during their tenure reviewed more than 120 pastoral profiles, performed 27 phone interviews, and 4 face-to-face interviews.

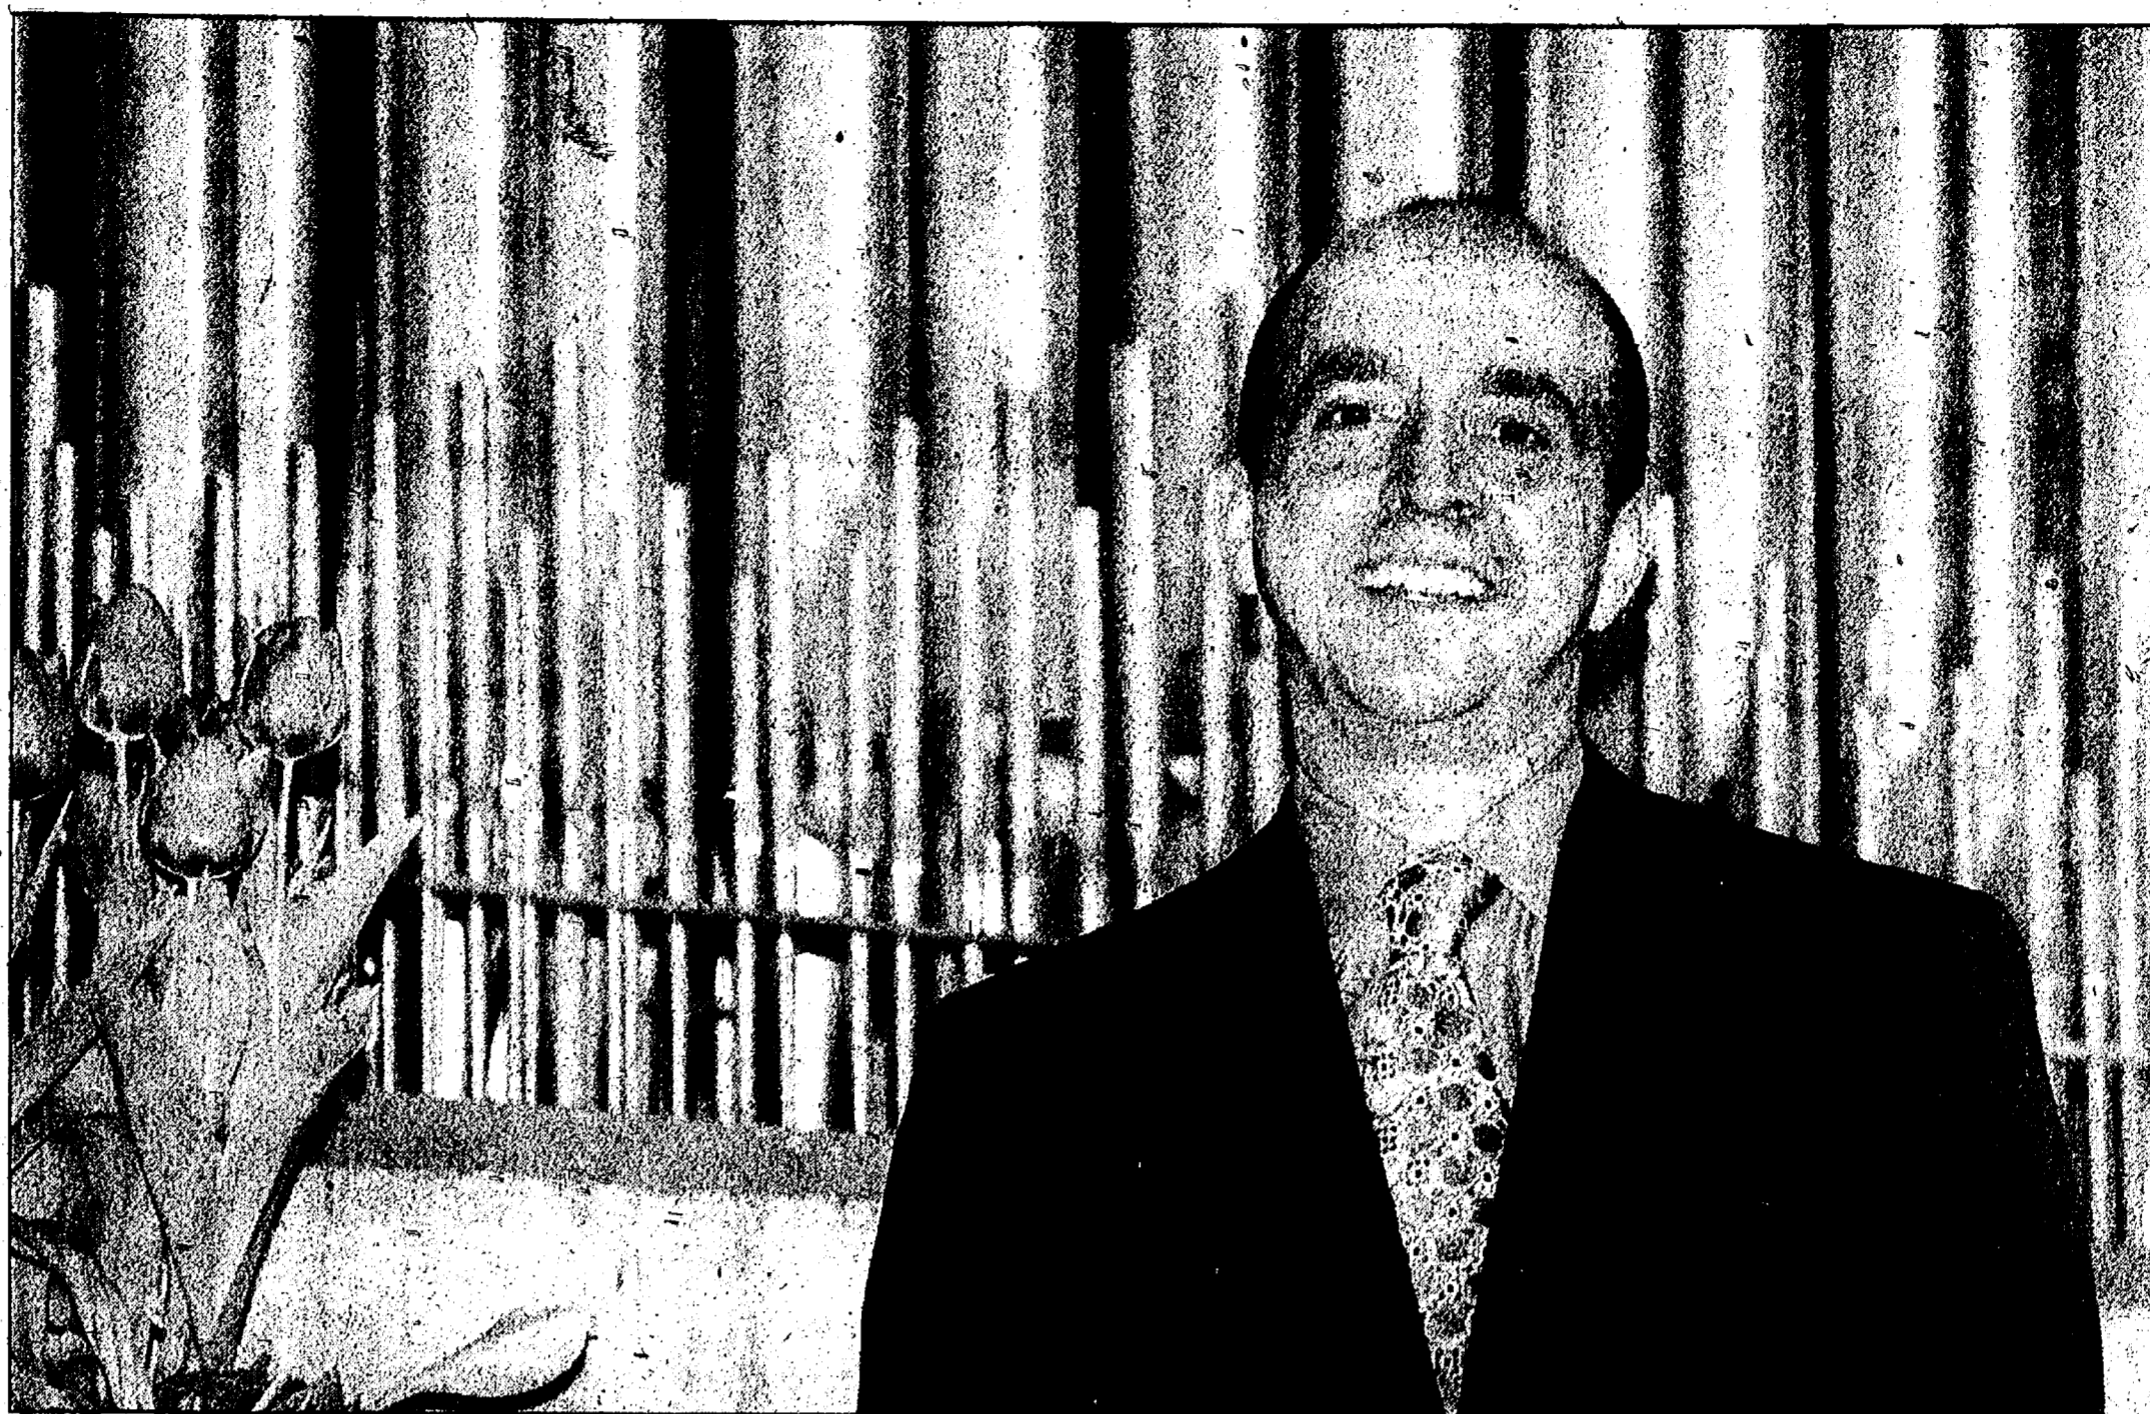

During the process, a few promising candidates were identified but declined a call to the church for varied reasons.

The committee was reminded with these "rejections" that the search process is indeed spiritual, and trusted that God had another plan for St. Paul.

Following Coyl's telephone interview, the entire committee of 14 was so impressed they immediately called him back, inviting him to Chelsea for a face-to-face interview. Coyl accepted and traveled to Chelsea to meet the search committee, tour the town and present a "neutral pulpit" sermon, where the search committee traveled to another church to hear him preach.

Again, the members of the committee felt sure they were on the path God intended them to follow.

The service Sunday included a "trial sermon" during which Coyl preached about humility as a means of allowing the Holy Spirit into one's life. A very brief congregational meeting ended with a joyful vote of affirmation and the celebration and praise began for all.

James Cameron Coyl stepped in as the new pastor the St. Paul United Church of Christ in Chelsea. Coyl is from western Chicago and will begin his ministerial duties March 1.

Coyl and his family live in the western Chicago suburb, Glen Ellyn. He attended Garrett Evangelical Theological Seminary on the Northwestern University campus. He and his wife Susan have six children, age 2 through 15. The family enjoys music, and the children play violin and piano.

Coyl's ministry will begin at St. Paul March 1. His family will move to Chelsea when the school year is complete.

The members of St. Paul are happy that the Coyl family has found a congregation in a city like Chelsea, where the schools support music and athletics, where there is a wonderful district library, and where there is love and joy in the neighborhoods.

St. Paul members trust that the entire Chelsea community will be blessed by the presence of the Coyl family.

They welcome any who would like to visit the church, as the installation of a new permanent pastor is a time of great excitement and joy. You may find more information at St. Paul's website,

Cat emerges from charred home days after fire

By Art Aisner

Special Writer

Julia Clark didn't have much use for superstitions in her life, but if you ask her now, there's a time-tested saying about cats that she now firmly believes.

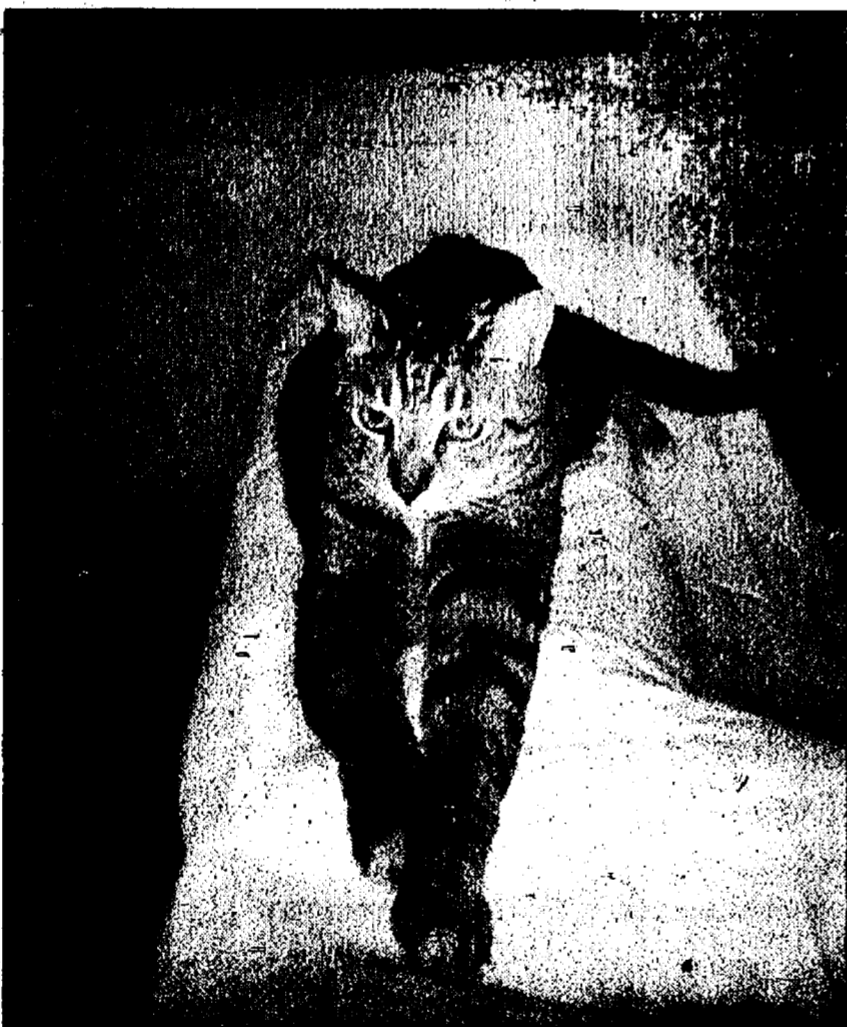

Cats do have multiple, if not nine lives.

The relatively new Saline resident had hoped it to be true earlier this month on the day after a fire in the residence downstairs at 658 W. Michigan Ave. gutted the structure's interior and caused enough smoke damage to incapacitate four household pets left home alone during the afternoon. Three out of four survived, but Clark's cat, Picasso, was nowhere to be found and presumed dead by first responders.

Clark, who rescued the gray-haired tiger cat from an inner-city shelter close to a year ago, had a hard time letting go. And a harder time believing her 2-year-old companion was gone.

Just in case, she filled up Picasso's food bowl with his usual meal the day after the fire and hoped for the best.

"I was in total denial and wasn't going to accept it," the 56-year-old Toledo native said.

Picasso

neath a couch on the main floor, also unconscious and clinging to life, officials said. They belonged to Janie Young, who lived in the downstairs apartment with her teenage son.

The animals were rushed to the Huron Valley Ambulance outside and a paramedic immediately began administering oxygen through standard breathing masks. They saved three of the animals, but one cat could not be revived.

Young received all of her animals back from the Saline

Veterinary Service within a few days and they all are expected to make full recoveries, officials said.

In the sense of emergency, Hoefft said it's common for an animal's survival instincts to kick in. Many are able to escape on their own, but it largely depends on how long they've been exposed to the smoke and the contents of what's burning.

If they can't get out, they go somewhere familiar when scared.

"In that situation, they're like children in the sense that that they go somewhere that they think is safe to try and wait it out," Hoefft said.

'Going batty'

With Gracie safe and many of her most cherished personal belongings spared the bulk of the damage, Clark couldn't help but worry about Picasso.

She said she thought often about how he earned his name by repeatedly stealing her paint brushes and hiding them in different places around her home.

Had he been smart and nimble enough to get out? Was he hurt somewhere? And if everyone else was right, did he suffer?

The thoughts swirled for two more days until she returned to the scene to pick up more belongings and the food bowl was completely empty.

She crept into the bedroom and called out to him, and out from a crawl space in the closet he came, blackened with soot.

"I just knew. I just felt that I'd see him again, and if anybody heard me at that moment they would have thought I was batty. I was really freaking out," Clark said recently via telephone from a friend's house in Ohio.

She said she plans to stay there temporarily while figuring out long-term living arrangements.

She later learned the property owner was able to reestablish the heat the day after the fire to avoid freezing pipes, which coincidentally probably prevented Picasso from freezing.

"I have no idea how he survived that smoke or soot, but it was an amazing sight," she said. "But he's always been an odd sort of a cat."

Odd enough to avoid contact with the scores of firefighters, investigators, property owners and maintenance workers who were inside the structure on numerous occasions before he surprised Clark.

She said she thinks Picasso had the mentality Hoefft described, apparently, hiding away and waiting to appear until he heard a familiar voice or a trusted face.

The cause of the fire remains under investigation and has been labeled as potentially suspicious because investigators have not been able to determine an accidental cause or reasonable explanation for what sparked it, according to police reports.

Animal Instincts

No people were injured in the Feb. 4 blaze, which remains under investigation, but firefighters wanted to be sure and went in looking for human survivors to rescue. Instead, they located four household pets that were unconscious and close to death.

Clark's golden retriever, Gracie, was found upstairs and had the least amount of smoke inhalation exposure among all the animals. She was treated by a local veterinarian and released to Clark later that night.

The other dog and two other cats were found huddled under

Civic Theatre to produce thought-provoking 'Doubt'

Ann Arbor Civic Theatre will present John Patrick Shanley's Pulitzer Prize-winning drama "Doubt," directed by Matt Martello; March 10 through 13 at the University of Michigan's Arthur Miller Theatre.

In "Doubt," the principal of a Catholic grade school, Sister Aloysius, becomes suspicious of the behavior of the parish priest toward a young student, Donald Muller.

As Sister Aloysius investigates the potential misdeed, she draws in those around her and casts doubt among even the most faithful.

"I saw 'Doubt' twice on Broadway," said Martello in a news release.

"After each performance, the audiences were divided about the essential mystery of the play. I love the artful ambiguity of this drama and how even the littlest choices the actors make can make such a difference in the audience's perceptions."

The cast of "Doubt" includes Liz Greaves-Hoxsie as Sister Aloysius, John Hill as Father Flynn, Kimberly Elliott as Sister James and Dorothy Burrell as Donald's mother, Mrs. Muller.

Performances are at 8 p.m. March 10 through 12 and 2 p.m. March 13.

Tickets for performances Friday through Sunday are $20 for adults, $18 for seniors and $10 for students. All tickets for Thursday performances are $15.

Tickets and information are available online at www.a2ct.org, through the A2CT office at 971-2228, or at the door of the theater before each performance.

Theatre to hold auditions

Ann Arbor Civic Theatre will hold auditions for its production of the Noel Coward comedy "Hay Fever," directed by Wendy Wright.

Auditions take place 7 p.m. March 10 and 2 p.m. March 12. Callbacks, if needed, take place at 7 p.m. March 14.

Actors need attend only one of two regular auditions but should be available for callbacks.

All auditions take place at the Ann Arbor Civic Theatre Rehearsal Studio, 322 W. Ann St., in Ann Arbor.

In "Hay Fever," an eccentric family invites four unwitting guests to their home in the English countryside.

By the end of the weekend, the hapless guests are desperate to leave the flirting, feuding family any way they can.

"Hay Fever" has roles for four men and five women, ages 20 through 65.

Auditions consist of cold readings from the script. Those auditioning are asked to bring a resume and headshot, if available.

A British accent is required for the production.

No pre-registration is required. Production dates are May 5 through 8 at the University of Michigan's Arthur Miller Theatre.

For further information and character descriptions, visit the audition page of the Ann Arbor Civic Theatre website at www.a2ct.org or call the box office at 971-2228.

Ann Arbor's Performance Network features "The Piano Lesson"

Ann Arbor's Performance Network will produce "The Piano Lesson" by Pulitzer Prize-winner August Wilson March 3 through April 3.

Set in Pittsburgh in 1936 in the home of an African-American family from Mississippi, the story centers around a piano that was once traded for two of their ancestors.

Boy Willie wants to sell the piano and make a new future, while Berniece clings tightly to the memories it engenders.

Wilson is a two-time recipient of the Pulitzer Prize for Drama, the second of which was awarded for "The Piano Lesson" and the first for "Fences." Performance Network also produced "Fences" in 2009.

Wilson has received other accolades, including the Tony Award for Best Play, two Drama Desk Awards and seven New York Drama Critics Circle Awards. "The Piano Lesson" was produced on Broadway in 1990.

"When we produced 'Fences' two season ago, we received an overwhelming response from our patrons asking to see more of August Wilson's work, which didn't surprise us in the least bit," said Artistic Director David Wolber in a news release.

Wolber said Wilson is "one of the best and most honored playwrights of the 20th century, and he's got an entire canon of plays to choose from."

"We've got some of the same artistic team members that we had with 'Fences,' so I think that we're going to again be able to make magic on stage."

Weekly performances are at 8 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday and 2 p.m. on Sunday, with 3 p.m. matinees on March 19 and April 2.

Tickets can be ordered at the Performance Network Box Office at 663-0681 or online at www.performancenetwork.org.

They may also be purchased at the Performance Network Theatre, 120 E. Huron St., Ann Arbor, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday or one hour before a performance.

Tickets are $22 to $41, with discounts available for seniors, members, students and groups. There is a pay-what-you-can performance March 3 with a suggested donation of $10.

"The Piano Lesson" is directed by Tim Rhoze and features scenic and costume design by Monika Essen, lights and sound by Andrew Hungerford and properties by Charles Sutherland.

Chelsea senior Andrew Noid (above) won 1-0 to stamp his ticket to the state finals. Ben Doll (below) was one of several regional qualifiers for the Bulldogs.

What's next for Chelsea?

Chelsea senior Mason Borders says the Bulldogs have "big games left on the schedule." And he's not kidding. Chelsea hosts Lincoln tomorrow night. The following week features a home game with Ypsilanti before playing at Dexter to finish the regular season.

Bulldogs run up 18-2 1st quarter, rout Adrian

By Terry Jacoby
Heritage Media

The JV game before Thursday's varsity matchup between Chelsea and Adrian was decided at the buzzer. And so was the varsity game - although it was the opening buzzer that signaled the end of the varsity game.

The Chelsea boys' basketball team came into this season with high expectations. They came into Thursday's game struggling and trying to play up to that level they know they can reach.

The low point came last Friday with a home loss to Ann Arbor Pioneer. The "put up" or "shut up" moment had arrived and the Bulldogs "put up" a blowout 50-35 win over the visiting Maples.

"It was mainly about coming out and getting ready to play," said Chelsea senior Mason Borders when asked about why the Bulldogs had been struggling. "Our focus before the games has not been good. We had a big meeting last week about the need to come out and be ready to play. We did that (Thursday) night and it paid off."

The big meeting went something like this: Coach talks. Players listen. Team responds.

The Bulldogs came flying out of the blocks Thursday night with a 12-0 lead. Chelsea Athletic Director Wayne Welton could have saved on energy costs right there by shutting off the lights and sending everyone home.

The Bulldogs continued to light up the scoreboard and led 18-2 after the first quarter. It's tough to decide at which end of the floor the Bulldogs were more impressive. Charlie McCalla nailed a triple to

Senior is lone Bulldog to qualify for states

By Terry Jacoby
Heritage Media

There is a reason so many wrestlers celebrate just getting to the state finals.

"It's hard," says Milan's Matt Schultz, sweat dripping down his face as his smile lights up the moment just after earning his second trip to the Big Dance. Schultz is a big, tough kid. But that smile says it all.

Wrestling is anything but easy and the best of the best fought it out Saturday at the Division 2 Individual Regional Tournament at Mason High School. The top four would qualify for the state finals March 3-5 at The Palace of Auburn Hills while everyone else would go home.

It's a day filled with close matches, celebration, heartache and plenty of emotion. And tears of disappointment and even tears of joy flow throughout the day. Because...it's hard.

There were plenty of excitement and plenty of hard-fought, down-to-the-wire matches. One of the coaches said that you could hold this event the next day and get an entire different field going to the finals - that's how competitive this event can be.

D-2 regionals

Of course, there were champions. And none more impressive than Milan's Tim Sims. The senior, who also took first at the district tournament a week earlier in Dexter, was impressive from start to finish at 152 pounds. One doesn't get to be 55-0 without skill, experience and determination.

Sims won his first match on a fall in 2:28, his second on a 20-7 decision and beat Dexter's tough Drew Barnes in the final on a fall in 51 seconds. Sims clearly will be one of the favorites at the state meet.

Radio heads Longtime duo the voice of HS sports

By Dave Merchant
Heritage Media

Many people have seen Jim Stark and Al Fellhauer at local sporting events. Even more people have heard them on the radio. They have become the "voices" of high school sports in this area and even though the duo has been doing this for awhile, they still enjoy it - and you can hear it in their voices.

Stark and Fellhauer have been covering sports together on the radio since 1993 when they started out in Jackson. More recently the two have called games for WTKA out of Ann Arbor.

"Our first preference in games is to have Ann Arbor schools," Stark said. "We cover games with Pioneer, Huron, Skyline and Ann Arbor Gabriel Richard."

For basketball, the duo has made the trip to East Lansing several times over the last few years. They have

Andrew Nold, Chelsea

Andrew Nold had added pressure placed on his shoulders when his four Chelsea teammates who qualified for regionals came up short in their chase of the state finals. Nold, a senior, won a 1-0 match in the blood round to qualify for the state meet.

Adam Bruley, Saline

Saline's Adam Bruley is headed to The Palace of Auburn Hills. The 119-pound wrestler stamped his ticket to the state finals by finishing in fourth place at Saturday's regional at Saline High School. He lost 7-4 in the third-place match after locking up a spot in the state meet.

Brendan Papin, Belleville

Belleville's Brendan Papin (135 pounds) will making a return trip to The Palace of Auburn Hills after taking second place at Saturday's regional at Saline. The senior lost to Angelo Latoro from Portage Central 6-3 in the finals. Papin is 43-2 on the season.

Austin Deacons, Manchester

Austin Deacons, who knew his road to the regional title would be difficult, defeated Joe Stolp from Michigan Center and JD Waters from Hudson. The championship match pitted him against Cody Kimble from Addison who had previously defeated him. Deacons won on a 6-2 decision.

Huron guns down Ypsi's elite status

GENERAL ADMISSION

BY MIKE LARSON

Last Tuesday, I got to see one of the most impressive basketball games of the season. But what was almost even more impressive than the game was the fact that so many other people wanted to see the action too.

The game, of course, was the matchup between the Ypsilanti and Huron boys' basketball teams.

Huron had to travel to the unfriendly confines of Ypsilanti High School to try to hand the Phoenix their first loss of the season.

And they succeeded, defeating Ypsilanti 73-53 in a game that wasn't really close after the first quarter.

But that didn't stop the crowd, which was comprised of over 1,200 screaming fans, from taking in the game. "It was a big crowd out there," Huron coach Waleed Samaha said. "But we're used to that."

Huron had no trouble playing in front of the huge crowd.

After all, this is a team that played in the Class A State Finals last year.

So far this season, the River Rats have played in packed gyms around the state, taking on the likes of Romulus, Dayton Dunbar and Kalamzoo Central.

This group is used to playing against the top opponents and in front of the biggest crowds. Ypsilanti however, couldn't boast the same thing.

seen Pioneer, Richard and Huron make the trip to the Breslin Center.

"Huron is one of the top teams in the state right now," Stark said. "I like to see teams at the start of the year and see how they change. Some don't grow but you see a lot of the kids grow up."

Stark said this area has many excellent coaches and they are fun to talk with and have on the air.

"There are coaches to steer clear of but they are in the minority," he said.

Boring games also are in the minority.

"After you have done this for a few years, once the game starts, it flows. The biggest challenge is a mismatched game."

When that happens they have to find a way to fill the air space and have something to talk about.

"I am going to continue doing this as long as it is fun," Stark said. "Sports is not brain surgery. It is about having fun."

Sometimes they just flip a coin as to which game to cover. After the game they usually don't talk to the players.

"It is different with college age kids," he said. "The kids are there to be kids and at that age you don't always know what they will say."

One thing the group is very proud of is the fact that they have never missed going on the air.

"One time the person who was supposed to set us up showed up to Riverview Gabriel Richard instead of Ann Arbor Gabriel Richard," he said.

Stark has interviewed a lot of people in his career and some are well known sports people.

"I interviewed Ernie Harwell and he was a great guy and great interview," he said. "Not everyone is like that but Alan Trammell also was great to talk to."

Radio is one of those businesses that can change in an instant.

"In radio nothing lasts," he said. "Eighteen years is a lot in this business."

Stark's full-time day job is as the executive director of the Michigan Hall of Fame. He has been working for the non-profit organization for eight years.

Felhauer said he met Stark in Lakeland, Fla. when he was supposed to be doing a live show with some of the Detroit Tigers at spring training. He said it rained and was moved so he had no one to talk to for his scheduled live show.

Stark stepped in as a special guest and the two have been together ever since. They have even moved from several different radio stations over the years.

"This is our third season back with WTKA," Felhauer said. "They offer more shows and opportunities to cover high school football and basketball."

The show they do on Friday is the "Big Show" from 4 to 6 p.m. where they talk about everything from University of Michigan football to high school sports and everything in between.

"Our one goal is to get on the air," he said. "We used to have to get it all ourselves. It is hard to set up with an electrical cord."

"Once at a Major League All-Star Game we had to ask a bar owner if we could do our show from there."

"We have never missed going on the air," Felhauer said. "We have been late a couple of times. "But it's fun and I love doing this."

Felhauer's full-time job is owning and operating three McDonald's franchises in Washtenaw County. He said his son does a lot of the work.

Stark and Felhauer are valuable members of the WTKA family. Ira Weintraub has been the executive producer/sports director for Sports Talk 1050 WTKA for a year and a half. He enjoys having Al and Jim working for him and the station.

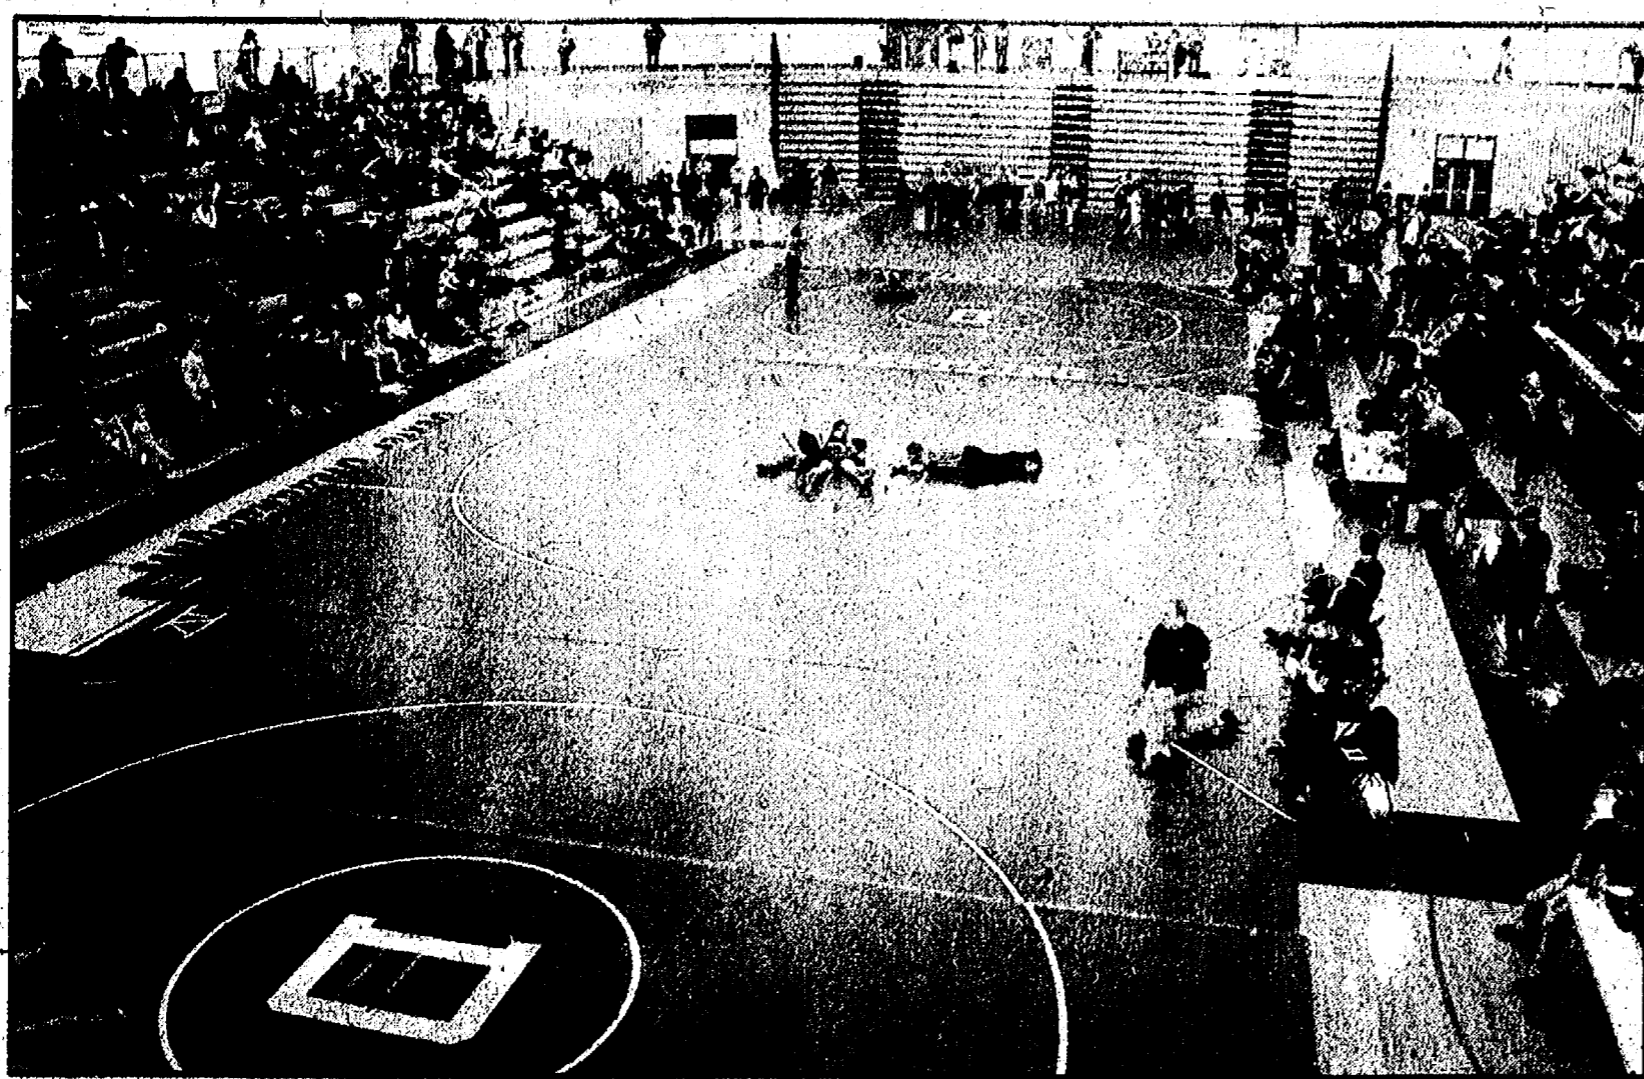

"These guys are great with Michigan sports," Weintraub said. "They connect with the community and really represent us by being out there every Friday."

He said they cover the Southeastern Conference (SEC) very well and that is a big part of the community that the radio station serves.

"They also help with our afternoon show every Friday," he said. "Sports radio is often imperfect and these guys are very flexible and helpful to get on the air."

Field hockey team scores in Orlando

Current team members from Ann Arbor Pioneer, Greenhills, Dexter, Washtenaw Whippets and Ann Arbor Huron participated in a United States Field Hockey Showcase event Feb. 9-13 in Orlando, Fla., as members of the Pinnacle Field Hockey Club.

The team was comprised of athlete representatives from nine different schools.

Pinnacle is a field hockey club formed by previous Pioneer and Michigan Head Field Hockey Coach Nancy Cox to provide both regional and national competition opportunities for field hockey athletes in Michigan and northwestern Ohio. The Disney competition is a recruiting showcase event hosted by US Field Hockey on an annual basis in Orlando.

The Pinnacle team practiced eight times prior to the Disney competition and beat club teams, from the east coast, most notably Lanco out of Lancaster Pa., who have competed together for years. Only one third of the starting field earns a competitor's slot on the last day of competition and Pinnacle was there competing against the eventual Gold Medalist, Washington Wolves on Sunday morning losing that contest 2-1.

What is most impressive regarding the 3-2-2 Pinnacle finish is that the group participated in the under-19 grouping with one-third of the Pinnacle team under 16 years of age.

Local representative athletes on the Pinnacle team included: Ann Arbor Pioneer - Molly Thompson, Anjela Galimberti, Eliza Stein, Sydney Supica; Ann Arbor Huron - Lexi Collins, Anna Masini, Cassie Ammerman, Taylor Standiford, Kelsey Gradwohl, Tori Westhead; Dexter - Megan Flocken; Greenhills - Sierra Patton and Dexter

Whippets - Casey Fry. Since retiring from the collegiate ranks in 2008 Cox has worked on promoting and providing instruction and competitive opportunities for the interscholastic field hockey athlete in the region.

"This was a tremendous group of athletes who were receptive to learn and grow each day and the results from the tournament reflect their commitment to improve as hockey athletes and teammates, they represented our region both on and off the field in an exemplary fashion," Cox said.

Novi coach and previous Pioneer and Michigan alumna Amy (Helber) Kilgore served as assistant coach for the trip.

Don't get me wrong, the Phoenix have been one of the most pleasant surprises of all this season when it comes to prep basketball.

Ypsilanti managed to start the season 14-0.

That's an outstanding feat for any team. But for a Class A squad, that really means something.

It means the Phoenix should be in the conversation for a state championship.

But I just don't think that is in the cards for Ypsi.

After watching the team play against Huron, I just have a hard time believing that the Phoenix could hang with the River Rats if the two teams met again.

Sure, Ypsilanti has had a great season so far with wins over Flint Northern and Detroit Catholic Central, but after the beating I saw the River Rats hand down to the Phoenix (on Ypsilanti's home floor no less), I just don't think the team could upset a team like Huron.

I know this will draw ire from the Ypsilanti faithful, but I just don't think the Phoenix can do it.

It's not because their team isn't good or they are poorly coached.

I don't think it really has anything to do with Ypsilanti. On the contrary, I think it has to do with Huron being so good.

Anyone who watched Tuesday night's game against the two teams had to come away thinking that Huron was the better team.

And it isn't that Huron has better athletes. If you want the honest truth, I think the players from Ypsilanti were, as a whole, more athletic than the River Rats.

The Phoenix have speed, length and jumping ability.

Yet the River Rats won by 20. Why is that?

It's because Huron has the experience, depth and discipline to win big games.

Ypsilanti looked great in the first few minutes of the game, taking control and making good shots and equally good decisions.

But as soon as the shots stopped falling, Ypsilanti couldn't figure out how to get back on track.

Between the final seconds of the first quarter to about the 4:40 mark of the second quarter, the Phoenix were outscored 12-1.

Some of that stretch can be attributed to Huron's defense, but overall, it's a telling sign that while undefeated before taking on the River Rats, the Phoenix just might not be ready to compete for the big title.

Ypsilanti is a team of athletic run-and-gun players who all have talent, but lack the cohesive discipline to weather those big scoring droughts and come back and win.

Huron is a complete team that has at least three reserve players who could start on almost any other team in the Southeastern Conference.

In my opinion, Huron is just better than Ypsilanti.

However, perhaps the team will prove me wrong.

Perhaps Ypsilanti will be ready to make a run when the tournament starts.

I, along with a lot of other basketball fans in the area, fully expect Huron to be in the mix for the state semifinals.

Coincidentally, because of the way the district and regional tournaments were drawn up this season, in order for the two teams to play again, they will have to meet in the state semis.

Think it could happen?

Over 1,200 people watched River Rats blow out the Phoenix last week.

I imagine the majority would say it probably won't.

Rough stretch

Lady Bulldogs fall to Pioneer, Adrian

By Dave Merchant
Heritage Media

The Chelsea girls' basketball team hit a little bump in the road last week picking up two league losses. The Bulldogs ran into a hot Ann Arbor Pioneer team on Tuesday night.

Pioneer came away with an easy 57-45 win. In the fourth quarter they went on a 15-0 run to help seal the victory. Chelsea played well in the fourth quarter hitting 5-of-6 shots from the field including four threes. Despite that run the game never seemed in doubt for Pioneer.

Chelsea coach Todd Bloomquist said it was a tough game and a tough battle against Pioneer.

"We were out rebounded mightily," Bloomquist said. "Pioneer had almost twice as many field-goal attempts as we did. Tough to win when rebounding is not a priority."

On Thursday a poor fourth quarter in which the Bulldogs only scored two points doomed them to a 35-28 loss on the road against Adrian.

Chelsea led 9-6 after the first quarter and was up 18-12 at the half. The Maples played well in the third quarter outscoring Chelsea 14-8.

Megan Hall led Chelsea with nine points. Rachel Cooperrider had five points in the loss.

"We struggled in the second half and only managed 10 points including two points in the fourth quarter," he said. "We shot 7-for-30 for the game and were 3-for-13 from the free throw line in the second half."

Bloomquist said there are a few things his team needs to work on to be ready for the playoffs.

"We need to be able to play defense, rebound and make our free throws to have a chance at a postseason run," he said.

Bulldogs swim to split in season's final meet

The Chelsea swimming and diving team finished the dual-meet season with a win against Ypsilanti but didn't have quite enough to beat Pioneer during last week's Senior Night.

Chelsea beat Ypsilanti 138-45 but fell to Pioneer 117-69. Many positives came out of the meet as Chelsea had many season and career best times. It left all in attendance anticipating great things at this week's SEC Championships.

Chelsea placed 2nd and fourth overall in the 200 medley relay to get the meet started. Chelsea's A relay of Nick Deppner, David Alday, Logan Simpson, and Nick Burris swam to a 1:50.77 clocking while the B relay of Robby Everard, Zach Ousley, Andrew Wickens, and James Hansen swam a strong 1:55.91.

Deppner was the top placer for the Bulldogs in the 200 freestyle earning 4th place honors and posting his best time of the season at 2:07.17. John Mangner also had an outstanding swim swimming a season best as well to take fifth place at 2:11.00.

David Alday continued to impress as he had all season. Alday won the 200 IM with a solid time of 2:09.36. He will be amongst the favorites at this week's championships. Simpson was 4th with a good time of 2:17.65 and will be another bulldog to look out for this weekend.

Jacob Bogarin was the top placer for the Bulldogs in the 50 freestyle. He took 2nd place overall with a time of 24.07 which was a season best for the talented senior. Andrew Wickens had a time drop as well as he swam to a season best as well with a clocking of 24.17 and 3rd place. Fourth place went to Burris who stopped the clock at 24.24. Chelsea's sprint relay will be ready for this weekend with performances like these.

Chelsea's divers were up to the task as they earned 2nd and 6th place overall. Colby Wrathall was Chelsea's top score with a second-place 224.95 points. Everard was 6th with a score of 138.05 points.

Simpson was 3rd overall in the 100 butterfly with a time of 1:02.12. Andrew Wickens was 3rd at 1:02.45 and Will Wickens was 7th at 1:08.38.

Burris would not be out done again as he slated a 2nd place finish in the 100 freestyle sticking his hand on the wall for 2nd place at 53.43. Bogarin was 3rd at 54.23 and Olsen was 7th overall with a strong 59.75.

The next event was special as two freshmen swam to season best times in the event.

Sophomore Austin Horn led the way for the Bulldogs with a 3rd place finish at 5:52.95. Freshman James Hansen cruised his way to a best of 5:57.55 to take fourth. The big surprise of the event was freshman John Mangner dropping 13 seconds to post his best in the event at 5:57.91 and 5th place overall.

Wickens, Bogarin, Simpson, and Burris combined for a 2nd place in the 200 freestyle relay at 1:36.67.

Robby Everard was on fire in the 100 backstroke as the junior swam a season and career best of 1:03.81 which earned him 2nd place. Deppner was 3rd place with a solid time of 1:03.82. Horn swam a season best 1:15.77.

Alday was 3rd place in the 100 breaststroke with a good time of 1:09.48. Zach Ousley was 5th place at 1:14.32 and Olsen earned 6th place honors at 1:15.98 which was his best of the season.

Chelsea's 400 freestyle took 3rd place to end the meet. Bogarin, Hansen, Alday, and Deppner combined for a 3:47.75.

Chelsea next prepares for the SEC White Conference Championships to be held at Ypsilanti High School this Friday and Saturday. The meet begins at noon both days.

Pioneers clip Bulldogs

The Chelsea boys' basketball team hung around with Pioneer until the fourth quarter but couldn't stop the big guys inside at big moments down the stretch. The Pioneers knocked off the host Bulldogs 54-44 in a Southeastern Conference game Tuesday night.

James Kelly scored 11 of his game-high 19 points in the fourth quarter to lead Pioneer. Jeremiah Strode scored eight of his 17 points in the fourth quarter as Pioneer got scoring from only two players in the final period. But it was more than enough considering it was 19 points.

Charlie McCalla led the Bulldogs with 17 points. Jake Steinhauer had eight points and Jack McDougall scored six for Chelsea.

The Pioneers lead 16-15 after one quarter and 27-25 at half-time. Pioneer took a 35-33 lead into the fourth quarter when the dynamic duo took over.

"We had a couple of turnovers early in the fourth quarter and got down by five or six points and had to scramble to get back into it," Chelsea coach Robin Raymond said. "We did get a couple of turnovers but didn't convert at the other end. They eventually got the ball inside and Kelly had a couple of dunks to help them put it away."

The Bulldogs will host Lincoln tomorrow.

make it 12-0 and then Jack McDougall hit a jumper and then scored off another Chelsea steal to give the home team a 16-2 lead. Mike Steinhauer knocked down a shot inside to finish off the first quarter in which six Chelsea players scored.

After Adrian scored inside to open the second quarter, the Bulldogs went on an 11-3 run to take a 29-7 lead into halftime. During that stretch, Borders scored six consecutive points. McCalla and Aaron Zynka had nice passes to help set up easy buckets in the second quarter.

The Maples knocked down a couple of three pointers early in the second half, finally reaching double figures with just over a minute gone in the third quarter. But Spencer Mykala hit from inside and McDougall scored off the break to make it 35-13. A Roberts jumper put an end to the third quarter with Chelsea leading 37-15.

McDougall, a junior guard, led Chelsea with 12 points. McCalla had 11 points, Borders 10 and Roberts eight for the winners.

A home game against a struggling Adrian team wasn't necessarily one that the Bulldogs circled on the schedule at the beginning of the year with a "must-win" magic marker. But Chelsea coach Robin Raymond admitted afterwards that this was indeed a "huge" win.

"We have been playing inconsistent and really needed this game," Raymond said. "I told them after the game that our challenge now is to get better from here. We know we can play but we can't afford to take a step back."

The quick start was a huge factor and something the Chelsea coaching staff stressed the importance of before the game.

"We talked a lot about energy," Raymond said. "When we are playing our best, we play hard. We came out with a full-court trap right from the start and I thought our energy level was outstanding. We always pass the ball well so that's not an issue. I thought we played really well on defense. I liked our enthusiasm and our intensity."

Raymond also liked the results of how they played. The high energy translated into open shots, fast-break layups off turnovers and a huge deficit that Adrian had little chance of ever climbing out of as early as the second quarter.

Along with their new-found energy level, the Bulldogs also threw a new look at Adrian.

"With the way they play the zone I thought this was a way to get Charlie some looks from the top," Raymond said. "We moved Patrick to the high post and they were going to have to concentrate on him. Jack did a great job of pushing the ball up the court. And this was the quickest I've ever seen Patrick play. He ran the court and was aggressive."

Dynamic duo leads Bulldogs over Adrian

Basketball can sometimes be a two-man game. But the Chelsea junior varsity team took that concept to another level last Thursday night in a dramatic 40-38 win over visiting Adrian.

Luke Hollandsworth had 23 points and Logan Brown scored 15 points as the duo accounted for 38 of Chelsea's 40 points. Hollandsworth also hit the game winning basket at the buzzer to win the game. "We have been playing really well the last three weeks," said Chelsea coach Mark Scheese. "Alex Maloney made some big free throws and played his best game of the year against Pioneer. Hollandsworth made the game winner at the buzzer against Adrian and has had some big scoring nights. Logan Brown has been shooting well from three. Zach Rabbitt has been a great leader."

"Overall, the team has really started to jell together and we have made some great progress of late."

Earlier in the week, Chelsea defeated Tecumseh, 51-40. Brown had 12 points and Maloney 11 to lead the Bulldogs. Jayden Sweeny had seven points and seven rebounds.

The Bulldogs also beat Pioneer, 54-49. Hollandsworth (20 points), Maloney (16), Brown (nine) and Craig Centafanti, who played well defensively, led Chelsea.

Barnes, only a junior, finished second overall to earn his first trip to the finals.

"The day went well," Barnes said. "I believed in what I was doing, got my moves done and did what I had to do. I just have to keep wrestling hard."

Barnes opened with an easy 11-0 win over Niles' Fritz Findiesen.

"He was really strong," Barnes said. "I just had to stay in good position. He wanted to reach back and try and grab my head. I just had to keep my head back and stay in good position so I can't get turned." The Dexter junior then defeated David Tucker of Coldwater 6-4 to earn a trip to the finals to meet Sims.

"I wrestled (Tucker) my freshman year in my first match at regionals and he beat me 9-7," Barnes said. "He's very strong so I had to stay in position, work hard on top and not let him get away."

Barnes, who is now 48-7 on the season, will take a level-headed approach with him to the state finals.

"I have to keep a level head and not worry about what's coming next," he said. "I just have to take it step by step."

As good as Barnes wrestled on Saturday, his teammate Steven Bleise took it one step further. The freshman followed up his district title with a regional championship at 103 pounds. He is 103 pounds of not only muscle and speed, but toughness.

Bleise opened with a victory of Vicksburg's Zach Bennett on a fall in 3:42. He never looked back after that, winning his semifinal match 6-2 over Mattawan's Joe Rodriguez to earn a spot in the final. Even though he had the states locked up, you could see in his eyes he wanted more.

When someone congratulated him before that championship match, he said, "thank you, but I have one more match."

That one more match was against Adrian's Joe Garcia whom he beat in the district finals at Dexter. Bleise won champion status on a fall in 1:18 and will take a 48-5 record with him to the state finals.

Andrew Nold had added pressure placed on his shoulders when his four Chelsea teammates who qualified for regionals came up short in their chase of the state finals. The Chelsea coaching staff didn't know exactly when, but it's been a long time since the Bulldogs haven't sent anyone to the individual state finals.

"It's tough to know that you are the last one to represent your school," he said. "I had to push through for all the other guys who tried their hardest."

This was Nold's third trip to the regionals and as the saying goes, third time is the charm.

"It was a tough day," Nold said just moments after earning the biggest win of his impressive career. "I won my first match which put me in a good spot to get me to (the finals)."

The match that sent him to The Palace was as close as close can get in wrestling. For awhile it appeared both wrestlers were afraid to make a mistake - something that can cost you whole season.

"I wrestled that guy earlier in the year and I beat him pretty bad so I wasn't that nervous going in," he said. "But it was tough. We both came out and we were both strong and we kept hitting moves back and forth and nothing seemed to happen."

When Nold held that 1-0 lead with 10 seconds left he only had one thought in his head.

"Just don't let him score," he said. "I've been there before so don't let him score."

Nold would like to place in the top four at the state meet. One of the most memorable moments of the meet was seeing Nold's teammates all huddled around the mat to offer their support. They didn't want to be the team that got shut out.

Ypsilanti's Trey Sweeny continued his outstanding season with a second-place finish at 215 pounds. The senior will take his impressive 52-5 record with him to Auburn Hills.

The Phoenix standout opened with a win over South Lake Shore's Spencer Lemley on a fall at 3:59. He advanced to the second round where he faced Milan's Matt Schultz. These two met in the district semifinals a week ago at Dexter with Sweeny pulling off a close 3-1 victory to advance to the finals.

Sweeny again won a close match with a 3-0 win over Schultz. But just like last Saturday in the district final, Sweeny lost to Fowlerville's outstanding wrestler Adam Coon in the championship match. Coon, who is 52-0 on the season, won on a fall at 2:41.

Sweeny won't be the only local wrestler at the state finals at 215 pounds as Schultz did what he needed to do after his loss to Sweeny and placed fourth at regionals. This will be a return trip for the Big Reds senior.

"My first match went good, I got the guy who took first in the other district," Schultz said. "This is the second time Sweeny got me. I went out and tried my hardest but he's a good wrestler, a strong wrestler."

Schultz wouldn't object to a third meeting.

"Maybe if I see him again at states I will get another chance," he said with a smile.

Schultz defeated Benton Harbor's Cameron Jenkins on a fall at 2:55 in his first match. After losing to Sweeny, the super strong senior took care of Logan Friel on a fall at 4:57 to stamp his ticket for Auburn Hills. He lost the third-fourth place match 9-5 to Fowlerville's Brian Moran.

Schultz, who is now 47-8 on the season, said the "blood round" is pretty intense.

"It's a tough situation to be in because you can be out at anytime," he said. "It's much scarier at state. I can tell you that much."

Schultz is satisfied with how things have gone in his final year of high school wrestling.

"It's gone pretty well," he said. "I've run into some decent kids and some really good kids. It's been a pretty good season. I've had a few losses I shouldn't have had, but more or less it's been good."

"I would like to place in the top four (at states)," Sims and Schultz will have some Big Red company in Auburn Hills.

Milan's Dillon Farrell started his day with a 7-3 win in the opening match at 145 pounds. After losing 8-0 to Nick Starzec of Mason, he dropped down to face Ypsilanti's James Andrew in the blood round. Farrell dominated the match to earn a 7-1 victory and earn a spot to The Palace.

Farrell ended up losing the third-fourth place match but improved to 20-5 and is headed to the state finals.

Andrew lost his first match to Donte Stevens of Niles 11-5.

Milan's RJ Gaskill opened the day with a win over Mattawan's Brett Dempsey on a fall in 5:57. The Big Reds 160-pounder then lost a 9-5 decision before losing in the blood round 7-6 to Derrion Mathews of Sturgis. Milan's Chris Gaskill lost his first match 7-2 and then fell 2-1 in his second match.

Dexter's Zeke Breuninger and Shawn Chamberlin also made it to regionals but fell short of making it to states. Breuninger, who is only a freshman, lost his first match 19-7 and then lost 4-0 at 183 pounds. Chamberlin, a junior with a lot of promise and skill, lost a close 5-3 decision in his first match before getting caught on a fall in 19 seconds of his second match at heavyweight.

Chelsea's Charlie Kempf lost a 3-2 heartbreaker in the blood round at heavyweight after defeating Derrick Scott of Niles on a fall in 34 seconds. Teammate Mike Hovater also started the day with a victory, beating Benton Harbor's Harold Johnson on a fall in 3:25 at 171 pounds. But Hovater lost 13-0 to Tecumseh's Tom Carney before losing in the blood round 6-4 to South Lyon East's Jacob Haddad.

Chelsea's Ben Doll lost on a tech-fall at 2:14 in his first match and 4-0 in his second match at 112 pounds. Teammate Avery Osentoski lost 17-0 in his first match before falling 10-8 in his second match at 130 pounds.

Ypsilanti's Anthony Simmons lost his first match 11-2 but beat Cam Hunsberger of St. Joseph's 14-6 to earn a spot in the blood round at 135 pounds. Simmons lost on a fall at 4:31.

'Turtle City' prepares oil-contaminated reptiles

There's a new housing complex in Marshall. The developers call it "Turtle City." The 471 residents don't call it anything. That's because the residents are 470 turtles and one toad.

The housing complex is a large, heated, pole barn-like building filled with metal stock watering tanks.

The turtles (and toad) are survivors of last summer's oil pipeline leak that fouled miles of the Kalamazoo River. They were brought in for treatment after running afoul of the oil and are spending the winter in a warm environment instead of hibernating in the mud.

Turtle City is one of the projects oil-pipeline company Enbridge, Inc., has in place to help restore the Kalamazoo River corridor recover from the more than 830,000 gallons of oil that flowed from a burst pipeline last July 26.

"The thing that has fascinated me about this project was the degree to which everyone got the sense that saving the wildlife was important," said Bob Doherty, a consultant assisting Enbridge on the oil spill clean-up. "The whole community of people involved in the spill response felt that way. We'd get calls from landowners or workers out on the project - that they saw an oiled goose or a turtle - and we'd send someone out to get the animal. And sometimes people would bring a turtle to us in a box."

Doherty said. There are a wide variety of turtles wintering at Turtle City. Common map turtles are the most numerous, but the residents include painted turtles, snapping turtles, Blanding's turtles, soft-shell turtles, musk turtles and one common box turtle.

The more easy-going species - painted, Blanding's and map turtles - are in community housing, up to five or six in a tank. The more aggressive turtles - snappers, soft-shells and musks - have their own digs.

But even the community-living specimens are assigned roommates according to their needs, explained Jenny Schlieps, the animal care manager from Focus Wildlife International, a West Coast company that specializes in rehabilitating oil-contaminated animals.

"It depends on the social hierarchy," Schlieps said. "You don't want three strong alpha turtles in with a turtle that is weaker."

The turtles have been cleaned up after their oil exposure, though some have medical needs - skin burns or lesions - caused by the spill. They're receiving veterinary care from nearby Binder Park Zoo.

But the majority of the turtles are healthy and just waiting until the time is right to return to their natural homes. Doherty said animal handlers took GPS coordinates when they picked up the creatures so they can be returned their old neighborhoods.

The tanks are outfitted with basking platforms, built from branches to simulate wild river conditions, and have heat lamps to mock sunlight so the creatures can resume as much of their normal lifestyle as they can, considering the circumstances.

The turtles are fed "nutritionally balance pelletized diet for freshwater turtles as well as natural prey items that they would normally eat in the wild in Michigan," Schlieps said. "Depending on the species, that would be snails, crawdads, pan trout worms and nightcrawlers. Snapping turtles may get fish, but the large map turtles have more of crustacean-based diet.

"Natural prey items are live, though some of the fish are not, depending on the species of fish."

The idea is to make sure the turtles can be self-sufficient when they leave. Schlieps said the tanks are set up so the critters have minimal interaction with humans and do not become habituated.

"We want them to be as wild as they can be after being in captivity for this length of time," Schlieps explained. "If everything continues to go well, we'll see a lot of happy turtles when we release them."

Jason Manshum, a senior advisor for community relations with Enbridge, said building Turtle City just something the company could do to restore the area.

"We made a big mess in this community and we affected the lives of many, many people - and it's not just the people, it's the wildlife," he said. "We want to make sure we get this area back to the condition it was pre-spill and we can't really do that unless we do something for the wildlife."

"We want to be a good neighbor," Manshum said. "This wildlife center we established is just part of being a good neighbor."

The wildlife intervention project has already been quite successful, Schlieps said.

Dexter hockey trips WL Western

By Dave Merchant
Heritage Media

Hockey season for high school is in the third period and the Dexter Dreadnaughts are looking at the "new" season with new hopes.

Dexter had a rough week on the ice last week but started this week on a positive note.

On Monday night the Dreadnaughts battled tough and finished with a 5-3 win over Walled Lake Western.

Dexter coach Gary Howell said it was a good game for his team.

"We played a very good game," Howell said. "We controlled the play most of the game as we out-shot them 46-25."

The score was tied 2-2 after the first period and Dexter led 3-2 after two periods.

"This might have been our most complete game of the season," he said. "A key to the game may have been scoring with 1 second left in the first to tie the game. We kept the momentum heading into the second."

Evan Sanford had four goals and one assist to lead the Dreadnaughts to victory.

On Friday the Dreadnaughts fell 7-1 to Woodhaven. Woodhaven only led 2-0 after one despite outshooting Dexter 23-5.

"Our goalie Cameron Rooks played well," Howell said. "They got up 5-0 at about the halfway point." Howell said his team started playing better and finished the game well.

"Woodhaven is a very good team and possibly the best team we have seen this year," he said. "I was happy with the way the guys played the second half of the game."

The lone goal was from John Grover.

On Feb. 16, the Dreadnaughts fell 4-3 to Bedford. "We had a 3-2 lead late in the game," he said. "They got a power play with 1:30 left on the clock and they pulled the goalie to score with just under a minute."

They also scored on the next shift with 25 seconds left in the game. Goals were scored by Andrew Erber, Sanford and Blake Miller.

"We played pretty well. Just didn't seem to finish the game," he commented. "We had a power play just before they got theirs at the end that we couldn't convert on. We felt like we let this one get away."

Rooks was in net for the loss. The locals play Ann Arbor Gabriel Richard in the first round of the playoffs on Monday.

Saline also got a goal in the first period Doug Mitchell who assisted on the Olson goal and one in the third from Seth Giles who also assisted on the Mitchell goal.

Real solutions for staying healthy, meeting your wellness goals

Whether you are still working on that New Year's resolution, or just trying to shape up for swimsuit season, you probably know that making healthier lifestyle choices is sometimes easier said than done. Sometimes when you aim to make significant lifestyle changes, you set lofty goals without necessarily thinking about what it will take to achieve them.

But not to worry, a little conscious effort and careful planning can focus your efforts to banish bad habits and achieve your goals.

By coming up with some real solutions that you can stick to, you'll be well on your way to achieving the wellness goals you set for yourself.

Whether it's restoring balance by unplugging for a little "me" time, spending more quality time with family, eating healthier, getting organized or losing those last 10 pounds, here are a few quick tips to keep on track.

Restore balance and simplify

- Set aside time for R&R, no matter what - Relax a little this weekend by reading a book or taking a bubble bath.

- Front load chores - Run errands in the morning and spend the rest of the day doing something restful or fun.

- Leave work at work - Be more productive at work by enjoying time away from the office.

- Switch it up - Do something new every day. Try a new recipe or a new route to work and keep life interesting.

Eating right

- Stick to one serving - Eat the foods you love. Just eat one serving and stick to it.

If you find your portion size creeping up, try buying snacks already packaged into single servings, like Kettle Brand Baked Potato Chips 100-calorie packs.

- D-fense - Vitamin D may ward off colds, so be sure to eat plenty of vitamin-rich foods like fish, milk, soy products and high-fiber cereals, especially in the winter.

- Go nutty - A handful of nuts in the afternoon can help restore your natural energy and keep you alert and productive until dinner time.

For mid-afternoon cravings, try Emerald Cocoa Roast Almonds with a satisfying chocolate taste and zero added calories.

- Potato power - When eating a potato, don't forget the skin. It's a great source of fiber, vitamins and even protein.

And when it comes to snacks, try Kettle Brand Baked Potato Chips - the only baked potato chips made from whole slices of potato, sliced with the skin still on.

They taste great and offer 65 percent less fat than regular chips.

Make time to exercise

- Set a meeting with the gym - Treat exercise like any other appointment. Nobody wants to cancel on their boss.

- Walk this way - Resist the urge to hop into your car for short trips whenever it's possible. With every step, the body gets a little more energy and exercise.

- Get cracking up - A minute-long laugh may have the same mood-boosting benefits as 10 minutes of exercise.

- Get the kids moving - Don't have time to exercise? Take the kids for a walk and the whole family will reap the benefits.

This year, let go of unrealistic resolutions and find real solutions for meeting healthy living goals in small, easy changes for lasting results.

Making the daily routine just a bit more balanced, nutritious and active will lead to real progress toward a healthier lifestyle in the long run.

Try getting the family, office or friends involved. It'll make staying on track that much easier and much more fun.

New treatment fights cancer, protects brain

Receiving the diagnosis of a brain tumor can be terrifying.

Learning that the treatment needed to save your life may also cause serious side effects, including personality changes, memory loss, blindness or even paralysis can be equally as terrifying, if not more so. So what would you do?

Thousands of Americans face this dilemma each year; 210,000 people are diagnosed annually with primary brain tumors or metastatic brain tumors (cancer that spreads from other parts of the body to the brain), according to the National Brain Tumor Society.

The American Brain Tumor Association (ABTA) cites brain tumors as the second-leading cause of cancer-related deaths in children younger than 20, the second-most fatal type of cancer among men 39 and younger, and the fifth leading cause of cancer-related death in women 20 to 39.

A cancer diagnosis is always frightening even though advances in treatment mean many patients survive their disease and go on to live long, productive lives. For people diagnosed with brain tumors and brain cancers, the treatment - or more specifically its potential side effects - can be as frightening as the disease itself.

Standard radiation, one of the most common cancer treatments, can damage healthy tissue at the same time it is destroying cancer cells. When the target of the treatment is the brain, life altering, serious side effects can result. Radiation therapy can cause decreased intellect, loss of memory, confusion and even personality changes, according to the ABTA.

Karen Schabes, 22, of Chicago, was diagnosed with a form of brain cancer after she collapsed at work in June 2010. An MRI revealed her cancer.

After having surgery to remove the tumor, Schabes was referred for radiation therapy but learned the position of her tumor, near her optic nerve, could mean the treatments would leave her blind.

Concerned about the risk, she sought out another opinion.

Her neurosurgeon recommended she consider proton therapy. Schabes had heard about proton therapy on the radio and knew that a new proton therapy center had recently opened in the Chicago area.

"I did my research and found out that the proton therapy beam is much more precise than standard radiation therapy for brain tumors. Less of my healthy brain tissue would be exposed to radiation so it was an option worth pursuing," Schabes says.

Better precision means the cancer-killing radiation focuses on the cancerous cells, causing less damage to surrounding tissue.

In the human brain, with its sensitive tissue and critical role in all our body's functions, less damaged tissue means less risk of potentially life-altering side effects like vision or hearing loss, speech impairment, memory loss, personality changes and loss of cognitive functions.

Like standard X-ray radiation therapy, proton therapy kills cancer cells by preventing them from dividing and growing. Unlike X-ray radiation, protons deposit most of their energy directly in the cancer tumor, meaning brain tumor patients can receive higher, more effective doses, with less damage to surrounding tissue.

Studies have shown proton therapy to be effective in treating a number of types of cancer including brain, central nervous system, gastrointestinal, head and neck, lung and prostate, tumors at the base of the skull and along the spinal cord as well as sarcomas and many pediatric cancers.

Proton therapy is particularly preferred for treating children, because they are very sensitive to the side effects from radiation treatment.

Although proton therapy has been successfully used to treat cancers for decades, many doctors remain unaware of it because only a handful of centers in the U.S. offer the therapy - nine in all, with the new CDH Proton Center, A ProCure Center opening last October in suburban Chicago.

For Schabes, proton therapy not only gave her renewed hope of beating her cancer, it spared her eyesight. "Because of the location of the tumor - it was a frontal temporal tumor - traditional radiation would have passed right through my optic nerve, causing serious damage," she says. "Instead of blindness as a possible side effect, which may have resulted had I been treated with standard X-ray radiation, I experienced only minor, transient side effects with proton therapy."

"I'm very thankful my doctor recommended proton therapy. I urge other patients to be sure they have looked into all their treatment options," Schabes says. So far, follow-up MRIs have shown no sign of remaining cancer for Schabes. "It looks like I'm going to have a normal life."

Is your home causing your health concerns?

When you get the sniffles - do you blame your allergies, or the air inside your house? Surprisingly, air pollution trapped inside your home could be the cause of many of your family's health concerns - especially if members suffer from asthma or allergies.

Poor indoor air quality is a health threat. Indoor air is one the top five environmental threats to the country, according to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. And in the winter months, your family is probably spending a lot more time inside, breathing in the polluted air.

Indoor air pollutants come from many different sources. The combustion fuels you use - oil, gas, kerosene, coal and even wood - add chemicals to the air. So do tobacco products. Pets and carpeting can add dander and dust particles to the air. And even the cleaning products you use can build up. Newer homes are built to be more air tight, which helps to keep the heating bill lower in the winter months, but does nothing to freshen the air inside the house.

Minor health consequences from breathing poor quality indoor air include watery eyes, a scratchy throat and runny nose. But more serious consequences could show up after years of breathing in poor quality indoor air, and those include respiratory diseases, heart disease and even cancer, according to the EPA.

You can clean the air inside your home to help reduce the pollutants, dust and dander in several ways:

- * Take a peek inside your air ducts. Use a flashlight and mirror, or a digital camera to see if the walls of the ducts are coated in dust bunnies and grit. That build up of dust signals you need to have your heating and cooling system cleaned. Your heating unit will continuously circulate any dusty and dirty air throughout your home, so that your family is always breathing it in. Hiring a National Air Duct Cleaners Association member to clean your HVAC system will help you keep the air circulating throughout your home free of dust, pollen and dander. NADCA members must carry general liability insurance and must have at least one certified air systems cleaning specialist on staff.

"Cleaning your ducts isn't something a do-it-yourselfer should try to tackle," says Bill Benito, board member of NADCA. "NADCA-recommended contractors will loosen contaminants with brushes and compressed air, then use negative pressure collection equipment to collect all the debris so that nothing is blown into your living areas." Visit www.nadca.com to find a NADCA member near you.

- * Replace your furnace filter frequently, and use the highest efficiency filter recommended by the manufacturer of your heating and cooling system.

- * Run bathroom and kitchen exhaust fans when needed, and make sure these units circulate to the outdoors, rather than blowing back into the house. If you have the opportunity, take the covers off the fans and clean off the fan blades to help remove additional particles from the air.

- * When the temperatures warm up, open up your screened windows and doors to help circulate the air inside your house.

Nobody likes having a runny nose or scratchy throat, and if your family members are exhibiting these symptoms, you may need to review the air quality in your home. To learn more, visit www.nadca.com.

Physical Therapy in Motion is expanding

Physical Therapy in Motion is the only 'Certified McKenzie Clinic' in SE Michigan

The McKenzie Method of physical therapy was developed by Robin McKenzie, a New Zealand physical therapist, and introduced to the United States in the early '80s.

Since then this system of evaluation and treatment for spine and extremity joint disorders has been taught in over 40 countries, has been extensively researched and is recognized around the world as one the most effective approaches in the management of orthopedic joint conditions.

David Oliver, Physical Therapy in Motions director, and his team of physical therapists have extensive training in the approach, and Oliver is a member of the U.S. teaching faculty of the McKenzie Institute, which educates physicians, physical therapists, and chiropractors in the application of the McKenzie Method. Oliver will also be traveling to New Zealand in March to celebrate Robin McKenzie's 80th Birthday.

Whether you have joint pain, sore muscles, or are just fatigued from everyday activity, the solution to your problems can be found at Physical Therapy in Motion. The clinicians have the skills to alleviate pain and restore function effectively and efficiently. We welcome clients with conditions that may not have responded to therapeutic treatment previously. Every appointment is made with a licensed physical therapist. Our flexible scheduling allows appointments available within 48 hours. While a wide variety of insurances are accepted, we do offer reasonable payment options.

We look forward to continuing to work with area residents and their physicians to establish an individualized treatment plan that will give relief and improve quality of life.

Helping children cope with cancer treatment

As frightening as a cancer diagnosis is for any adult, it can be infinitely more terrifying for parents hearing the dreaded diagnosis applied to their child's illness.

Parents of children with cancer not only must make daunting medical decisions on their child's behalf, they also face the challenge of helping their child cope with the emotional impact and physical side effects of cancer treatment.

While innovations in cancer treatment mean many children who are diagnosed with cancer will go on to lead long, full lives, the life-saving treatments can be painful and cause stressful side effects, such as chemotherapy-induced nausea, weakness and hair loss. It's important for parents to help children deal with these side effects both physically and emotionally.

Emotional side effects

From the stress of having a chronic illness to physical and emotional isolation from their friends, cancer and cancer treatment affect children on a deeply emotional level. Children seek guidance on how to cope with their own feelings, and how to talk to their friends about their illness. Online resources like kidshhealth.org can offer parents a wealth of information and good advice.

Cosmetic side effects of chemotherapy can be particularly stressful for some children. Hair loss, a common side effect, is an outward sign that a child is sick and he or she may feel very self-conscious about it.

Parents should reassure children that their hair will grow back when their treatment is over, and discuss options for the meantime, including wigs, hats, or even shaving their head before the hair falls out.

Parents should be sure to seek help for their children in dealing with emotional issues related to cancer. Physicians, nurses, psychologists and clergy can all be resources for families.

Physical side effects

Cancer treatment can cause numerous physical side effects, including nausea and vomiting, fatigue, nutrition and eating problems, fever, skin changes and even confusion and memory problems, according to The National Cancer Institute.

Cancer nausea and vomiting are among the most common side effects, and can be particularly troubling for children, who may already be suffering nutritionally from a lack of appetite. While some medications can effectively treat nausea, parents may hesitate to add yet another drug to the combination their child is already receiving.

Acupressure is proving helpful in relieving nausea and vomiting for children undergoing cancer treatment.

A study of children undergoing cancer treatment at Brenner Children's Hospital in Winston-Salem, N.C. indicated that acupressure provided by the Sea-Band brand wristband helped reduce nausea and vomiting among the children, ages 5 to 19, who participated in the study. A plastic stud inside the wrist band places mild pressure on an acupressure point that is associated with relieving nausea and vomiting.

The Brenner study notes that "in general, acupressure was safe and well-received, and the patients believed it to be efficacious ..." The study authors also called for more research into the use of acupressure to prevent chemotherapy-related nausea and vomiting in children.

"Sea-Band wristbands can give patients a sense of control, and they are simple enough for children to use effectively," says Leonard Nihan, president of Sea-Band Ltd. "When patients feel in control of their symptoms, they spend less time in the hospital during therapy." The FDA-approved bands are reusable and available in drugstores everywhere. Tips to keep diabetics in step with good foot health

It makes sense to take care of your feet at any age and any health level - after all, they're the foundation on which we walk through our daily lives.

For people with diabetes, however, caring for their feet takes on a new importance, as diabetes-related complications prompt the amputation of more than 1.5 million feet and legs every year.

In fact, more than 60 percent of non-traumatic, lower-limb amputations in the U.S. are performed on people with diabetes, according to the American Podiatric Medical Association (APMA).

If you or someone you love lives with the disease, knowing how to take care of your feet, and how to recognize signs of diabetes-related complications, is an important element of successfully managing the disease.

"Research has shown that up to 25 percent of people with diabetes will develop a foot ulcer in their lifetime," says Dr. Kathleen Stone, president of the APMA. "Foot ulcers and infections are the most common reason for hospitalization of those with the condition. However, these problems are largely preventable."

Common foot problems related to diabetes include neuropathy, skin changes, calluses, foot ulcers, poor circulation and infections.

Because diabetes can cause nerve damage in extremities, a person with the disease may not immediately be aware of, or feel pain from, an injury or ulcer. Small wounds or cuts on the foot that are slow to heal can develop into ulcers, which, if left untreated, can become infected and lead to partial or full amputation of the foot or lower leg, according to the APMA. However, regular care from a podiatrist can reduce amputation rates 45 to 85 percent.

People with diabetes should inspect their feet daily and be vigilant for these warning signs of ulcers, the most common type of diabetes-related foot complication:

- Irritation
- Redness
- Cracked or dry skin (especially around the heels)
- Drainage on socks

Ulcers can appear anywhere on the foot or ankle, but are typically found on pressure points on the foot, like the ball of the foot or bottom of the big toe.

If you discover an ulcer or have any symptoms, see a doctor immediately.

In many cases, the foot can be saved with early treatment by a podiatrist working as a member of the health care team caring for a person with diabetes.

In addition to examining your feet every day, and keeping your blood glucose in your target range, make sure to follow these foot health tips:

- Trim toenails straight across and file the edges.
- Never go barefoot. Shoes should be comfortable and fit well (the APMA website, www.apma.org, offers guides on how to choose footwear that fits properly). Check the inside of shoes before putting them on to be sure there is nothing inside the shoe that will irritate or harm your feet.

• Since diabetes risk can be hereditary, people with diabetes should talk to their families about monitoring their own blood sugar and foot health.

• When sitting, elevate your feet. Wiggle toes and move your ankles up and down several times a day for five minutes.

• Diabetes is a hereditary disease, and is often passed down from parent to child. Families affected by diabetes should openly discuss the hereditary nature of diabetes, and its negative physical effects.

"Podiatrists are an integral part of the diabetes management team, and are experts in wound care," says Stone. "They can help patients with diabetes avoid ulcers and treat foot problems that arise."

To find a podiatrist in your area, visit www.apma.org.

Stay healthy and avoid making difficult decisions

Health officials emphasize that Americans should stay home from work when they are sick, but for many, the decision isn't that easy.

While staying home from work to rest, recover and avoid infecting coworkers makes sense to most people, other factors come into play. One in five Americans report feeling pressure to go to work when sick, and one in three Americans say they would not get paid when taking a sick day, according to a recent survey conducted by HALLS, America's number one selling cough drop.

With those numbers in mind, and added pressure from a lagging economy, it's not surprising that 44 percent of the survey's respondents would consider going to work with a fever and 32 percent said they would go to work no matter how sick they are.

Staying home sick is never an easy decision, especially if some of these added pressures apply. The best way to avoid staying home - and protect your health - is to take precautions to help you stay healthy. Here are a few tips to help you stay well and working this flu season and beyond:

* Get a flu shot. Getting a flu shot each year is the most important step you can take to protect yourself against seasonal influenza, according to the Centers for Disease Control.

* Wash your hands frequently. Use soap and warm water and scrub for at least 20 seconds - about the time it takes to recite the Pledge of Allegiance or sing "Happy Birthday" twice.

* Keep your desk stocked. Keep hand sanitizer for disinfecting when you can't get to the sink to wash your hands. Keep lotion handy to avoid cracking skin that can result from frequent hand washing and disinfecting.

* Disinfect common surfaces. By frequently using a disinfectant on surfaces that experience frequent contact with multiple people, you can prevent the spread of germs. This may include shared desks, phones, doorknobs and computer keyboards.

* Practice healthy habits. A diet rich in fruits and vegetables and regular exercise can help boost your immune system to ward off sickness. Drink eight to 10 glasses of water a day to help flush toxins from your system. Get the proper amount of sleep - eight to nine hours for many people - to also help keep your immune system functioning at peak capacity.

* Keep things fresh. Keeping rooms properly ventilated in the winter can be challenging and germs can circulate more easily indoors, so the more time you spend outside, the less you'll be exposed to other people's germs. Getting outside can also improve your mood and reduce stress, which helps in fighting off sickness.

* Stock up on the essentials in the event you get sick. Make sure you're prepared by having cough drops, tissues, soap, hand sanitizer, vitamins and fever reducer while you're still healthy.

If you do get sick, it's best to stay home, rest and recover, if possible, to prevent spreading the illness to your coworkers and expedite your recovery. But your most prudent course of action is to take preventative action to avoid becoming sick in the first place.
