

A Good House

Leaving a good house unprotected is as imprudent as leaving greenbacks out in the rain. A house unprotected by good paint cracks and rots and is unsightly all the time.

HIS MISSION 'N CALLENTA.

Miner in Town During Flood Was Not After Water.

Kenneth C. Kerr, of the Salt Lake route, is telling a story about a flood in the south end of the great Meadow valley in the Nevada "arid" district. The streets of Caliente were almost entirely under water. Before that time Caliente was a dry, desert town, and the miners came there with pack horses to take water from the local supply out to the mines. The second day Caliente was flooded an old miner who worked beyond the limits of the flood came into town with two pack animals bearing receptacles for water. He waded through about two feet of water and finally reached the hotel. In the doorway of the building stood a local man. When the latter saw the old miner he smiled.

"Hey, Dick!" he called. "I see you've swum to town to get a little water."

"You're wrong," came the reply. "I ain't after water."

"What do you want, then?"

"I'm going to take a few gallons of good dry land back with me to that arid country," said the miner, solemnly.—Denver Post.

GOOD PROOF OF HIS SKILL.

Frank Miles Day, the well-known architect and essayist of Philadelphia, stepped carefully from a Persian rug of dull green and old rose to another rug of rich blue, for the polished floor between was dark and smooth and slippery like ice.

"Rather a good polish there, I think," said Mr. Day's host.

"Remarkably good, indeed," said Mr. Day.

The host just then slipped and nearly fell, and the architect, with a laugh, went on:

"A friend of mine has beautiful floors, and the other day sent for a floor polisher."

"I want these floors polished," said to the man, as he led him about the house. "They are, you perceive, fine ones. They ought to come out as lustrous as rosewood. Do you think you're capable of doing them justice? Give me some proof of your thorough competence."

"That's easily done, sir," the polisher replied. "You just go and ask Col. Snow, next door but one, about my work. He'll tell you. Why, governor, on the polished floor of Col. Snow's dining room alone five persons got broken limbs last winter, while two ladies slipped down the grand staircase during the Easter week ball, and one dislocated her hip, while the other fractured three ribs. You ask Col. Snow, sir. I polished that floor and that staircase of his."

USED RUSE TO SECURE MONKEY

Animal was Unacquainted with Utilities of Opera Glass.

A professor well known in the scientific world recently hit upon a novel method of capturing a pet monkey which had escaped from the house and taken refuge in the branches of a tall tree.

He looked at the animal through a pair of opera glasses, pointing the small end at him, and then retired to a short distance, leaving the opera glasses on the ground. The imitative monkey descended from the tree, and, taking the opera glasses, gazed in a similar manner, at his master, who seemed to the deluded ape to be many yards distant.

The monkey, continuing to look through the same end of the opera glasses, supposed his master, who was walking slowly toward him, to be still a long way off, when the professor, reaching out, secured the chain and led the victim back to his cage.

The Part of True Wisdom.

The freest government, if it could exist, would not be long acceptable if the tendency of the laws was to create a rapid accumulation of property in a few hands. In the nature of things, those who have not property and see their neighbors possessed of much more than they think them to need cannot be favorable to laws made for the protection of such property. When this class becomes numerous it grows clamorous. It looks on property as its prey and plunder, and is naturally ready at all times for violence and revolution. It would seem, then, to be the part of political wisdom to found government on property, but to establish such distribution of property, by the laws which regulate its transmission and alienation, as to interest the great majority of society in the support of the government.—Daniel Webster.

Courtesy in Copenhagen.

Copenhagen, Denmark, is a city of canals and cleanliness—a land of pure delight, free from beggars, organ-grinders, and stray dogs. The inhabitants thereof are born courteous, and seem never to have recovered from the habit. When a passenger boards a car in Copenhagen, he exchanges greetings with the conductor; a gentleman, on leaving the car, usually lifts his hat in acknowledgment of a salute from that official. When a fare is paid, the conductor drops it into his cash box, thanks the passenger, and gives him a little paper receipt. He offers change with a preliminary "Be so good," and the passenger accepts it with thanks. If, in addition, transfers are required, complimentary exchanges go on indefinitely. Yet there is always time enough in Copenhagen.—Four Track News.

The Advice of Experience.

It has sometimes been remarked by the student of child life that the only child learns to read sooner than the child belonging to a large family. There may or may not be psychological reasons for this; but the story of the small boy of five, who was struggling with his alphabet blocks for the first time, may be enlightening to those who wish for reasons. The small boy was really rather interested than otherwise in a large A that fulfilled its usual function of standing for an apple tree; but he had a brother who was "very eight." "You leave 'em alone," advised the brother; "You once begin to read you can never leave 'em."

It causes energy, develops and educates, it is nervous life, arouses the courage of youth, it makes you young again. That's what Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea will do. 25 cent, ten cent, and five cent bottles.

The state tax rate for the present year will be $1.95 on each $1,000 valuation as compared with $2.45 on the same valuation, last year. The state tax is lower in total amount this year by almost a half million dollars than it was last year. With Michigan's rapid growth in all directions and the consequent increased demands upon all of the many state institutions and the different lines of state service it requires a degree of care and economy worthy of sincere commendation to keep the total requirements for state purposes within the figures given for the coming year.

Governor Warner's recent reference to the fact that nine out of ten of all the agricultural counties of Michigan will pay a smaller proportion of state tax under the new state equalization than they have been paying during the past five years, is a brief but complete disposal of demagogic discussion in that direction. It is also a very interesting bit of information, especially for the taxpayers of the nine out of ten agricultural counties.

The September onion crop report of the J. B. Rice Seed Co., of Cambridge, New York, contained the following for Washtenaw county acreage 1906, 224; for 1905, the acreage was 254; yield per acre for 1906, 410 bushels; for 1905, 123. Total crop bushels for 1906, 91,840, for 1905, the crop bushels was 30,996. According to this report Washtenaw is the leading onion growing county of Michigan.

The Junior class of the Chelsea High school has organized and has an enrollment of thirty members. The following officers were elected: president, Carlton H. Runelman; vice president, Edna C. Raftery; secretary, Minnie Kalmbach; treasurer, H. D. Runelman.

September 1st the hunting season opened in North Dakota and the Crary Public Opinion in its write up of the days hunt credits Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Stevens of that place with being the most successful, they having captured twenty-three prairie chickens. Mrs. Stevens will be remembered by her Chelsea friends as Miss Edith Foster.

The Standard-Herald received three letters recently from W. H. Glenn, who is in North Dakota for a visit, but owing to lack of space we have been unable to publish them. Mr. Glenn says in the last one that the harvest is fast nearing completion, and that some of the farmers have commenced threshing, but it will be months before all of the grain in that part of the country is all threshed.

Lewis Ernst, of Lyndon, lost a valuable horse last Sunday, which had been bitten by a dog owned by him, one week ago last Sunday. A few days afterwards the horse's head became badly inflamed, and the entire system of the animal was badly affected from the bite. The dog showed symptoms of rabies and was killed by the owner. Dr. H. J. Speirs, who treated the horse, says there were no indications of its suffering from rabies.

Empress Eugenie's Dresses.

Some recently published figures as to extravagance of American women in dress give interest to the statement of the Empress Eugenie to a friend in this country that but three times in her life did she wear a dress that cost as much as $200. Once it was for her wedding, once for the baptism of the prince imperial.

Know Little of Anatomy.

Most Chinamen know little of anatomy. They have an idea that the heart and stomach are connected and that the epigastrium is the seat of thought. They also imagine that the gall bladder is the seat of boldness and that all schemes requiring that quality originate in it.

Must Answer for Our Deeds.

One of the brightest jewels in the crown of the teachings of the great moralists is all eyes in unquestionably the dog that sins are of three kinds, in thought, in word, and in deed. But of the three the deed is that for which we are most fully responsible.

Punishment Too Severe.

"A boy assassin hanged," read Mrs. Hason from the newspaper. "Well," she remarked, "a assassin boy is a great trial, but I don't think he ought to be hanged for it."

His Money's Worth.

The man who was fined five dollars for punching the head of a chap who annoyed his wife probably thinks he got the worth of his money in advance.

The Movement for Anti-Fraud Laws.

There is to-day, all over our country, a decided movement toward the enactment of laws that will protect consumers against substitution and adulteration.

Many states now have very stringent pure food laws, and a national pure food law is to go into effect all over the United States on January 1, 1907.

New York State has also a law prohibiting the stamping of cotton as linen, and a law compelling all silver sold as sterling to be .925-1000 fine.

Other states have other laws along the same lines.

North Dakota has taken the lead in enacting a law for the protection of property owners against a very common and serious kind of fraud—the selling of adulterated paints and paints containing ingredients, worthless or worse than worthless.

The law passed by the North Dakota legislature compels all makers of adulterated paints to label their kegs with the exact ingredients of their paints.

Pure white lead and linseed oil is accepted as the standard paint by the law-makers, just as it is by paint authorities everywhere.

Breakfast to Be Improved.

The most staunch supporter of vegetarianism are women, and they do not all belong to the "faddy" persuasion, writes an English correspondent. And, consequently, there is good ground for the supposition that soon the old-fashioned English breakfast will be a thing of the past. Nut cutlets, cream eggs on toast, or an omelette with fruit, and perhaps almonds and raisins or a grapefruit, suggests the perfect summer breakfast, whereas bacon and eggs and the everlasting boiled eggs are weariness to the flesh.

The Political Ladies.

The political ladies are not making revolution; they are making a routine. The report of every meeting will say, in a fixed formula, "The minutes having been read and confirmed and the ladies ejected, the business of the meeting began." It will be put on the agenda as a regular thing. At last it will become a quaint old ceremonial. A woman will be technically assaulted to make a meeting valid.—Illustrated London News.

NATURE'S WARNING.People Must Recognize and Heed It.

Kidney ills come quietly—mysteriously. But nature always warns you through the urine.

Notice the kidney secretions. See if the color is unhealthy. If there are settlements and sediment, Passages too frequent, scanty, painful, It's time then to use Doan's Kidney Pills.

To ward off Bright's disease or diabetes.

Lawrence O'Toole, of 1825 Hill street, Ann Arbor, Mich., says: "The pains across my back were almost constant, and were so severe at times that I was often obliged to get my back against the wall before I could straighten. I could hardly rest in any position and was as tired in the morning as the night before. I could not stoop to pick anything off the ground and was, generally speaking, used up. The kidney secretions deposited a heavy sediment and were too frequent, greatly disturbing my rest at night. I was bothered much with head ache and spells of dizziness. I wore plasters until I was tired of them, and took a lot of medicine, but it did me no good. When I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised, I felt confident they would help me, and I got a box. They helped at once and, in a short time, thoroughly cured me."

For sale by all dealers. Price, fifty cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

An exchange says: "The farmers in southern Michigan should receive great benefit from the hay crop this season, as there is a shortage all over the country outside of southern Michigan. Hay is selling for $10 per ton in parts of Ohio and Indiana."

Hon. A. A. Hall, of Stockbridge and publisher of the Sun in that village received the nomination on the republican ticket at the primary election held Tuesday of last week as a candidate for treasurer of Ingham county. Mr. Hall was a former superintendent of the Chelsea public schools.

Estimates made by crop experts indicate that the United States this year will have a total production of wheat in the neighborhood of 750,000,000 bushels. This may be cut down by the fact that there has been some damage done to the crop. It is predicted that there will be $1 wheat before January 1st, 1907.

NOT ALTOGETHER HIS FAULT

Mountaineer's Appearance in Court by No Means Voluntary.

A brawny moonshiner from the north Georgia mountains was on trial. Though weighted with the outward evidences of many years, the old fellow was straight in form, keen of eye, and ready of tongue. It was his first offense, or at least the first time he had been caught "with the goods on." The judge determined to be light on him, and administer a small fine, accompanied by a lecture and some soft words of warning.

"Old man, I am going to be light on you this time, because it is your first offense, and you are old enough to know better. I warn you, however, that if you ever come before me again, it will go hard with you."

Sudden humor wrinkled the grim old mouth and made the eyes twinkle, as he drawled in that inimitable mountaineer: "Bleeged to yo', judge. But honest, I never come this 'ere time; I was fitched."

CUTTING THEIR WORDS SHORT.

Writers of English No Longer Use Extended Sentences.

"The English sentence grown shorter and shorter," said an essayist. "Spencer, Sir Thomas More, Lyly and Sidney used sentences of the average length of 55 words. Nowadays the sentences of the average journalist are only 15 words long. Bacon introduced the short sentence. At a time when everybody else was using 50 words he took 22. Praise be to Bacon!"

"Macaulay used a very short sentence. Its average length was 23 words. Dickens' average was 28. Thackeray's was 31. Matthew Arnold's sentences are long, but beautifully balanced. They are of 37 words. Henry James' are longer and, though intricate, graceful and well worth puzzling out, for in each of them a powerful meaning is concealed. They are 39-ers."

"Kipling's sentences contain 21 words, George Moore's 24, H. G. Wells' 23, Upton Sinclair's 22."

WIFE HAD HER TRIBULATIONS.

Hard Time Indeed With Such an Unaccommodating Husband.

"John," asked his wife as he was beginning to dream that he had patented something and made a million, "did you lock the door?"

"Yes."

"The pantry window's open!"

"No 'taint. I shut it."

"Hurry down and turn off the gas stove. I'm almost sure Hulda forgot and left it burning when she went to bed."

"No, 's all right. I looked."

"You didn't fasten the side screen door. Go and hook it or it'll flap all night and keep us awake."

"S all right. I hooked it."

"John Pritchard, get up quick. Don't you know that I shan't be able to go to sleep to-night unless you go and look around to see whether you haven't forgotten something? My goodness, it's a wonder you haven't driven me into nervous prostration long before this!"

Where Shelley Wrote "The Cenci."

On the walls of the palace on the Corso, where Shelley lived for a time, until the death of his child, the Roman municipality have affixed the now usual tablet. And this tablet shows a very curious little misunderstanding, and divergence of verbal habits, between Italy and England. "Here," says the inscription, "Shelley wrote 'The Cenci.'" But the words of the Italian are "La Cenci." Now, no Englishman could possibly read Shelley's title but as a family name—"The Cenci," in the plural. That an Englishman should call Beatrice "the Cenci" in the feminine singular, as one may speak of "la Duse" or "la Patti," is altogether inconceivable. To the Italian municipal mind it seemed that Shelley naturally called his heroine and his tragedy "La Cenci." What a pity that none but editors decline English articles!

Did You Know This?

"Say, d'you know anything 'bout hosses, hey? D'you know they'll eat pork? Well, they will, when it's fed 'em an' they have to. The heaves stops, subsequent, though they're an all-fired sight wuss afterwards. Belle went right onto a meat net, hog-meat an' oil cakes. Yep, linseed oil—it'll fat a rail fence. Belle took on weight amazin'. Cur'us thing 'bout oil cakes, though; once a hoss has been fattened on 'em, an' then grows pickled agin, there ain't nothin' in God's world'll put flesh onto him a second time. You can try as much as you're a mind to; it ain't no use."—American Magazine.

The Breath of Life.

It's a significant fact that the strongest animal of its size, the gorilla, also has the largest lungs. Powerful lungs means powerful creatures. How to keep the breathing organs right should be man's chiefest study. Like thousands of others, Mrs. Ora A. Stephens, of Port Williams, O., has learned how to do this. She writes: "Three bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery stopped my cough of two years and cured me of what my friends thought consumption. O, it's grand for throat and lung troubles." Guaranteed by the Bank Drug Store. Price, 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

CENTENARIANS OF THE WORLD

Bulgaria Easily Holds Record for Long-Lived People.

A German statistician has made a careful investigation to discover in which countries the greatest age is attained. The German empire, with 55,000,000 population, has but 78 subjects who are more than 100 years old. France, with fewer than 40,000,000, has 213 persons who have passed their hundredth birthday. England has 146; Scotland, 46; Denmark, 2; Belgium, 5; Sweden, 10; and Norway, with 2,000,000 inhabitants, 23. Switzerland does not boast a single centenarian, but Spain, with about 18,000,000 population, has 410. The most amazing figures come from that troublesome and turbulent region known as the Balkan peninsula. Servia has 573 persons who are more than 100 years old; Roumania, 1,084, and Bulgaria 3,883. In other words, Bulgaria has a centenarian to every 1,000 inhabitants, and thus holds the international record for old people. In 1892 alone there died in Bulgaria 350 persons who had exceeded the century.

Proved Her Proposition.

Timothy Woodruff tells of a family in Duchess county who recently took into their employ a rosy-cheeked Irish maid of all work, whose blunders afford amusement to compensate for any trouble she may entail.

One day the owner of the place sat in the girl's hearing that he intended to have a woodhouse built on a piece of ground which at that time inclosed a well.

"Shure, sor," said the inquiring Margaret, "will you be movin' the well to a more convenient spot whin the woodhouse is builded?"

As a smile crossed the face of her employer, Margaret at once perceived she had made a mistake.

"It's a fool I am, shure," she added, hastily, bound to retrieve herself. "Of course, whin the well was moved ivry drop of wather would run out of it!" —Harper's Weekly.

Itching, bleeding, protruding or blind piles yield to Doan's Ointment. Chronic cases soon relieved, finally cured. Druggists all sell it.

FIFTY CENTS

In some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion is very rapid. For this reason we put up a fifty-cent size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children. In other conditions the gain is slower—health cannot be built up in a day. In such cases Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment; a food rather than a medicine. It's a food for tired and weak digestions.

"Work! What kind of work? I think for once you are on the wrong scent. We shall be butchered like cattle in this infernal Hades."

"Wait and see," murmured Deneau, who was again creeping forward into the chamber. "Come," he continued. La Prade rushed to the side of his companion, and the two were soon pulling and tugging at a small device, which seemed to be half-buried in the rocky wall. It is impossible to describe the look upon the faces of the men as they gazed at this strange little machine—a look of mingled alarm and triumph.

They worked desperately, frantically, but the iron moved not, nor did any result accrue from their labors.

"What is it for?" asked La Prade, as he was on the verge of despair.

"Wait," cried Deneau. "We have not yet pressed it downward," and he then began pushing and pulling, his eyes ablaze with excitement, when suddenly there was a grating sound, and the two started back in amazement, for one side of the wall seemed to fall slowly apart, revealing to their astonished gaze another room. Into the opening they madly plunged, and thrusting their lights forward, they beheld rows of little bags, piled one upon the other in perfect order.

The scene that followed this discovery was indescribable.

Deneau, unmindful of all danger, and overwhelmed by the sudden appearance of so much treasure, shouted in triumph and waved his torch wildly above his head, crying:

"We are now kings—Kings of the Earth—Rulers of Nations—richer than Croesus—hurrah! hurrah!"

The fat eyes of La Prade bulged and sparkled, and he, too, shouted in an ecstasy of joy.

Deneau removed one of the bags and read the number on it.

"I shall soon see what they contain," and he tried to break the end, but in vain.

"Burn it," cried La Prade, "hold the torch to it, and the fastenings will give way."

Deneau seized the torch and applied it to the end of the bag. Immediately the material of which it was made began to soften and melt away, and a thousand brilliant lights flashed from within. He had opened the one that contained the great diamond.

"Let us hurry," said he, his eyes afe, and his hand trembling, and one little bag after another was opened and emptied of its contents, until their rubber sacks were filled with jewels and bank notes.

They could carry no more—they would return for the balance.

They now stood gazing upon the treasure as if loth to leave the enchanted chamber, but at last La Prade found his tongue.

"We cannot remove all of it," he said with a sigh.

"We will return," replied Deneau. "But what of the Czar?"

"To Hades with the Czar."

"And Pellet?"

"To Hell with Pellet!"

"And France?"

"To Hell with France!" and then they shouted together:

"To Hell with the Czar—to Hell with Pellet—to Hell with France!"

Suddenly they paused, their hands blanched, their eyes started, their faces blanched.

"What is that?" cried Deneau, for in the distance they could hear the sound of many voices, which echoed with awful distinctness throughout the caverns behind them.

Their faces became ashen, and they stood rooted to the spot. The sounds grew nearer and the tramp of feet could be heard.

"Out with the lights," cried Deneau. The lights were extinguished and the two men dashed through the passage which led into the Chamber of Silence, and in their mad flight they buried themselves against the stone walls which were lying upon the floor, watching their priceless booty in all directions, until, bruised and bleeding, they found their way into the shelter of a dark passage. Here they paused for breath and listened. The voices came nearer, and the tramp of many feet became more distinct.

"Where are we?" gasped La Prade, fearing to move lest he should fall into some horrible chasm and be dashed to death.

"Stand near me, and I will light a match," whispered Deneau.

A match was lighted, they concealing its rays with their bodies. Perceiving an opening which led off to their right, they made a rush for it, and hid themselves about twenty feet from the main passage, and listened.

The voices came nearer and nearer, and it seemed as though an army had entered the caverns, so great was the noise.

At last they could distinguish the words of the newcomers, who had entered the chamber, through which they had so precipitately fled, and which was only separated from their hiding place by the passage in front of them.

"Ah," said a voice, "we have not reached here too soon, for the odor of gas has entered our Council Chamber."

"Yes," replied another, "but why is Gershon not here? I thought he would be in readiness to receive us."

"Ah, he comes now, for I see the light of his torch as he approaches."

Just at this moment the two Frenchmen, peering through a crack, saw the stately figure of Gershon coming from an opposite direction pass in front of the opening and disappear beyond. Many voices cried out to the newcomer, but one, which sounded like the rumble of thunder and rose high above all the rest, was heard with awful distinctness.

"Look, my brothers," cried the great voice, "can you not see the floor is sprinkled with our jewels?"

At this a hundred cries rang out upon the air:

"Traitor! Traitor! Let the traitor be found!"

Then all was quiet, and a voice unlike the others, soft, gentle and sweet, said:

"Some one has discovered the pass and entered these caverns. Let us first look to the treasure, and then search the passages that lead from the entrance."

It was Gershon who had spoken.

The hearts of the detectives sank within them, for they knew that they were doomed.

"Draw your pistols," whispered Deneau, "we shall not be ashamed to die; we are Frenchmen," and rising from their concealment, they crept from their shelter, ready to face what knew to be a horrible death. They looked into the Chamber of Silence. It was deserted, as the men had rushed back into the passage to search for the unknown invaders. They entered the chamber, and peered into the vault in an opposite direction. They glided on like shadows, until they were in the very midst of the excited crowd, and when they had neared the mouth of the main tunnel, they plunged forward for their lives. Then there arose a great commotion.

"Who were they that left us?" said one excited voice.

"Were not they of our Order?" cried another, for so great was the excitement incident to the discovery that the desperate stratagem of the two detectives had partially succeeded.

"Follow me," cried the desperate Deneau, as he blindly groped his way into a connecting tunnel.

Here they crouched in silence, until all the searchers had reassembled in the Chamber of Silence. Taking advantage of the deserted passages, the two wretched creatures leaned forward and sped onward.

Ere they had gone twenty yards a hundred men were in hot pursuit, led by the mighty giant, Gideon, while the air resounded with the firing of pistols. Gideon, who was many yards in advance of all the pursuers was rapidly gaining upon La Prade, whose very limbs were swollen and bleeding and whose fat body was fast succumbing under the terrible strain. He staggered frantically forward in a mad effort to reach the side of Deneau, but the latter moved with marvelous swiftness, bounding like an antelope from stone to stone.

Suddenly, the giant, with a great bound, had seized the unhappy La Prade by the middle, and, lifting him aloft, he dashed out his brains against the stone walls, and throwing the quivering body into a pit he again started in pursuit of Deneau.

The multitude stood appalled at the frightful deed of Gideon, and I turned away in horror, for the sight was more than I could look upon.

When I again turned, I saw a hundred white, speechless faces, and all were fixed upon Gideon, who was now almost within reach of Deneau, shouting and firing his pistol as he sped onward.

I could see the devil-like face of the doomed detective smiling, even then, as he paused and raised his pistol in deadly aim at his pursuer. I could hear his wild laughter, as he stood upon the brink of a chasm, until his last bullet was spent; then, with a wild defiant shout, he threw his pistol from him and leaped into the depths below.

Gideon, the giant, plunged forward, and gazed into the abyss, then drew his revolver.

There was a loud report, but before the echoes had died away a flame of light shot from the chasm and leaped toward the dark walls. The earth trembled and vibrated, and great boulders swayed backward and forward upon their foundations. A suppressed murmur of terror fell from the lips of a hundred men, who stood motionless, as they had halted upon witnessing the mad plunge of Deneau. Not a man stirred from the spot. The assemblage stood holding their torches and gazing fixedly upon the glowing sheet of fire that rose from the chasm, reflecting the gigantic outline of Gideon, who stood between them and the flame.

The horror that this light revealed would send terror into the heart of the bravest man, for the feeble light of the torches had only given vague glimpses of the awful wonders of this subterranean world.

New sheets of flame sprang with hissing fury from all sides, lighting up the vaulted roof with terrible distinctness, and filling the air with weird shadows, which flitted from one space to another, like a vast legion of aerial spectres who seemed to revel in the gloom that surrounded them, while a rumble as of thunder caused the earth to vibrate and tremble under our feet.

The hundred spectators, too affrighted to move, petrified with the horror of the scene and motionless, gazed upon the flames, as they wound their fiery folds among the rocks or licked the arched roof with their seething tongues. The dazzling splendor of the scene increased with every moment. The heated rocks began to crumble and fall apart, and still the flames spread. A terrific gust of wind burst into the chamber and fanned the fires, until they roared like a storm-tossed sea, which hurled itself madly against the walls, and howling through the lofty arches, dashed its way onward. In its wake huge boulders lay shattered and scattered through the defiles and gorges of the labyrinthine passages.

Valdemere, who had stood silently watching the tragedy, now rushed among the throng, and, pushing them onward, cried at the top of his voice, while his long beautiful hair floated in the tempest and his eyes blazed with the light of despair.

"Fly for your lives, my brothers. Fly for the catacombs, for no fire can reach us there—for your lives fly!"

A desperate cry arose from a hundred throats, and a mad plunge set the stampede in motion.

Onward we dashed in a body, while flash after flash of vivid fire shot athwart our pathway, as we ran forward, our eyes almost bursting from their sockets; our tongues lolling from swollen and parched lips, while flakes of foam fell from our heated nostrils.

At last we turned at an angle, which led us in the direction of the chamber where the brilliant colors of the stalactites and stalagmites were illumined by the flames, sending forth their capricious shadows which danced over the dazzling walls like a million lambent spectres.

On through this glorious scene we sped, ignoring the grand spectacle which all the art of science could never imitate.

The air was hot with the breath of the encroaching fires, which drove us onward, until at last we neared the river over whose depths hung the rope ladder, but, alas, many had fallen dead and dying, and as I looked about me, I was appalled to find not more than a third of our number.

Among these I searched for Mr. De Taverne, my heart standing still, but I saw him dash to the brink of the river, and kneeling, he dipped the cold water to his lips and face, his eyes red and swollen. I drew near to him—spoke to him, but he heard me not.

He drank the water with eager thirst, and, as he attempted to raise, he fell back into my arms, an unconscious burden. I laid his head upon my coat, and bathed his face and parched hands lips until he revived.

He looked into my face, and even then he smiled and pressed my hand.

My heart was flooded with a great pity, and I was unmindful of the roaring fires and the rocking pillars; unmindful of the death-marked faces around me. My mind was far away among the cypress trees, which, alas, I was to see no more, and my heart had stolen back to that old house, and I could see the face of Marie, the angel of my life—the angel to the end, for her fair sweet image never left me even in that dread moment.

NEW AND INTERESTING LIGHT ON EGYPTIAN HISTORY.

British Explorers Find Habitations of the Ancient Shepherd Kings of the Israelites, Centuries Before Christ.

At University College this year the annual exhibition of the year's work that has been done in Egypt by the British School of Archaeology and the Egyptian Research Account has very wisely been so subdivided as to present distinct foci of interest, so that the intelligent visitor in surveying the tokens which Prof. Petrie and Mr. Duncan and Mr. Gilbert Smith have brought home, is conscious of the meaning and the implications of the discoveries, says the London Graphic.

The exhibits are elucidated by plans and models; and the rather formal and concentrated descriptions offered by the published reports are supplemented each day by little lectures, which are delivered in the morning and afternoon by some one or other of the archeologists.

Last year the chief work of the British school was along the eastern side of the delta between Cairo and Ismailia; and it has brought to light, after many centuries, the habitations of the ancient shepherd kings of the Israelites, the Hyksos and one of the cities that they built. At Tell-el-Yehudiya the excavations laid bare a great camp which is certainly older than the eighteenth dynasty and enshrines within its confines many graves and tombs which are of the period of these shepherd kings of Israel who ruled 2,500 years before the coming of Christ.

The defenses of the camp, not unlike a great "fenduk," such as now exists in the Sahara as a refuge for traveling caravans, were chiefly earthenworks; and it is evident that its dwellers relied on their archers and slingers to keep off the enemy on the long "glacis" of the approaches to the walls. But the camp reveals that the relations between Israel and Egypt were not always such as have been supposed; that time brought its revenges, and that a great wall was built around the camp by the skilled masons of Egypt—a wall of finest limestone, in blocks from the hills 25 miles away. Truly, when one contemplates this link of continuity of labor between the pyramids and the Assuan dam, one begins to sympathize with the Egyptians as a race who have never been allowed to cease from their building. A very interesting model of this primeval camp is among the exhibits. Not less fascinating is a piece of temple sculpture representing Ramesses II. slaying a Syrian before the god Atmu. It formed one side of the temple at the Israelite city of Raames at Tell-el-Retabeh. By the ancient site of Avaris was found the great mound and temple which Onias, the high priest, built. He had fled from the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes, and came to Egypt about 150 B. C. to found a new Jerusalem and raise a temple to Jehovah where the Jew might worship in peace. One of the most singular discoveries in connection with this temple was a piece of the builders' account showing bricks to have been delivered by a Jew named Abram, together with other details which corroborate those that are set down in the history of Josephus.

HOW THE SWIMMER FLOATS.

Inhalas Through the Mouth, Exhalas Through the Nose.

To float go out into the water as far as your waist, says August Country Life in America, throw yourself on your back facing the shore. Hold your chin up as high as possible. This will submerge your ears, but don't let this strange sensation worry you. If the water closes over your head simply close your mouth and remain still and straight; you will go under for a second only.

Now throw your arms out wide behind your back and throw out your chest. Hold your chin high. Inhale through the mouth. Exhale through the nose. You are now in the ideal floating attitude. Never lift your head. Keep straight and still, chest up, toes showing, chin high and ears submerged. Try to float as long as possible, because this exercise forms the basis, not only for swimming on the back and for life-saving, but also for sustaining yourself quietly in the water for hours. A 30-minute float is a very respectable performance.

The Age of Lead.

We are wont to speak of this era as the "age of iron," and there is no gainsaying that, industrially speaking, iron is a "precious metal."

Nevertheless, few people realize how useful, if not absolutely necessary, to modern civilization, is that other metal, lead. Soft, yielding, pliable, it is not much like its sister metal, but those distinguishing qualities are what give it such a prominent place in the arts and industries.

Modern plumbing, requiring many turnings and twistings, but with tight joints, would be almost impossible without lead pipe. The great civilizing agent in the world—the printing art—is absolutely dependent on lead. Hand-set type, linotype "slugs," monotype type—all are made of compositions of which lead is the chief component—to say nothing of the bearings in the presses as well as all other kinds of machinery in which "babbit" metal is used.

Solder is another lead product—what a field of usefulness that one form opens up.

Then there is the most important use of all to which lead is put—paint, that necessary material which keeps our houses looking pretty—inside and out—and preserves them from decay.

How many of us thank metallic lead for the comforts of paint? Yet the best house paint is nothing but metallic lead corroded by acid to a white powder known as "white lead." Of course, there are many imitations of "white lead," some of which are sold as white lead and some which are offered by the name of ready-prepared paint under the familiar pretense that they are "just as good" as white lead. But all good paint is made of the metal, lead, corroded and ground to a fine white powder and mixed with linseed oil.

White lead is also used in the coating of fine oil cloths and for many purposes besides paint.

"Red lead" is another product of metallic lead and is what is known as an oxide of lead, being produced by burning the metal. Red lead is the best paint known to preserve iron, steel or tin, and is used largely in painting metal structures, such as skyscraper skeletons, mills and bridges.

There are many other products of the metal lead, such as litharge, orange mineral, etc., which are essential to many of the arts in which we never imagine that lead would be of the least use.

Verily, we live in an age of lead as well as of iron.

Lincoln as a Lawyer.

A leader of the Lincoln party told the other day in Philadelphia a story of the astuteness of Lincoln as a lawyer.

"When Lincoln was practicing law," he said, "he had a case involving a disputed will. The opposition claimed the will was genuine and for several hours adduced proof of this. For Lincoln, who had to prove the will a forgery, things looked black."

"Lincoln, however, only called one witness, a retired paper manufacturer, renowned the country over for his wealth and probity."

"Mr. Dash," Lincoln said to this witness, handing him the disputed will, 'please hold that paper up to the light and tell us what is the water mark on it.'"

"The water mark of my own firm, Blank & Co.," the witness answered.

"When did your firm begin to manufacture paper?"

"In 1841."

"And what's the date of the document in your hands?"

"August 11, 1836."

"That is enough. Gentlemen of the jury our case is closed."

Fail to Select Food Nature Demands to Ward Off Ailments.

A Ky. lady, speaking about food, says: "I was accustomed to eating all kinds of ordinary food until, for some reason, indigestion and nervous prostration set in."

"After I had run down seriously my attention was called to the necessity of some change in my diet, and I discontinued my ordinary breakfast and began using Grape-Nuts with a good quantity of rich cream."

"In a few days my condition changed in a remarkable way, and I began to have a strength that I had never before possessed of before, a vigor of body and a poise of mind that amazed me. It was entirely new to my experience."

"My former attacks of indigestion had been accompanied by heat flashes, and many times my condition was distressing, with blind spells of dizziness, rush of blood to the head and neuralgic pains in the chest."

"Since using Grape-Nuts alone for breakfast I have been free from these troubles, except at times when I have indulged in rich, greasy foods in quantity, then I would be warned by a pain under the left shoulder blade, and unless I heeded the warning the old trouble would come back, but when I finally got to know where these troubles originated I returned to my Grape-Nuts and cream and the pain and disturbance left very quickly."

"I am now in prime health as a result of my use of Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup.

That in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with women's diseases covers twenty-five years.

The present Mrs. Pinkham is the daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, and for many years under her direction, and since her decease, her advice has been freely given to sick women.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing full well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty impels them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. It is unnecessary. Without money or price you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation:

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good-will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.—LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO., LYNN, MASS.

Following we publish two letters from a woman who accepts this invitation. Note the result:

First letter.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham—

"For eight years I have suffered something terrible every month. The pains are excruciating and I can hardly stand them. My doctor says I have a severe female trouble, and I must go through an operation if I want to get well. I do not want to submit to it if I can possibly help it. Please tell me what to do. I hope you can relieve me."—Mrs. Mary Dimmick, 36th and E. Capitol Streets, Washington, D. C.

Second letter.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham—

"After following carefully your advice, and taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I am very anxious to send you my testimonial, that others may know their value and what you have done for me."

"As you know, I wrote you that my doctor said I must have an operation or I could not live. I then wrote you, telling you my ailments. I followed your advice and am entirely well. I can walk miles without an ache or a pain, and I owe my life to you and to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I wish every suffering woman would read this testimonial and realize the value of writing to you and your remedy."—Mrs. Mary Dimmick, 36th and E. Capitol Streets, Washington, D. C.

When a medicine has been successful in restoring to health so many women whose testimony is so unquestionable, you cannot well say, without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." If you are ill, don't hesitate to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once, and write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for special advice—it is free and always helpful.

HAY FEVER

"Having used Peruna for catarrh and hay fever, I can recommend it to all who are suffering with the above diseases. I am happy to be able to say it has helped me wonderfully."

—Mayme E. Smith.

MISS MAYME SMITH.

444 E. Second Street, Columbus, Ohio.

HAY FEVER is endemic catarrh. It is caused by some irritating substance in the atmosphere during the late summer months. It is generally thought that the pollen of certain weeds and flowers is the cause of it.

Change of locality seems to be the only rational cure. The use of Peruna, however, stimulates the nervous system to resist the effect of the poisonous emanations and sometimes carries the victim through the hay fever season without an attack of the disease.

A large number of people rely upon Peruna for this purpose. Those who do not find it convenient to change their location to avoid Hay Fever, would do well to give Peruna a trial. It has proven of priceless value to many people.

Three Great Conversationalists.

The three greatest conversationalists with whom it has been my good fortune to come into touch were Mazzini, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes and Bismarck.

Of these, Dr. Holmes was the most spirited in the bel esprit sense; Bismarck the most imposing and at the same time the most entertaining in point of wit, sarcasm, anecdote and narrative of historical interest, brought out with rushing vivacity and with lightning-like illumination of conditions, facts and men.

In Mazzini words there breathed such a warmth and depth of conviction, such enthusiasm of faith in the sacredness of the principles professed and of the aims pursued by him, that it was difficult to resist such a power of fascination.—Carl Schurz, in McClure's Magazine.

His Scheme Worked.

It is related that a certain man was recently very sad because his wife had gone out of town on a visit, which she would not shorten in spite of his appeals to her to come home. He finally hit upon a plan to induce her to return. He sent her a copy of each of the local papers with one item clipped out, and when she wrote to find out what it was he had clipped out he refused to tell her.

The scheme worked admirably! In less than a week she was home to find out what it was that had been going on that her husband didn't want her to know about.—Pittsburg Press.

STOMACH PAINS

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Brought Relief and Cure for Splitting Headaches as Well.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, a remedy which has been before the American people for a generation, is still accomplishing wonderful results as is evidenced by the following interview with Mrs. Rachael Gardner, of Wilsey, Kans.

"It was very strange," she says, "I never could tell what caused it and neither could anybody else. For a long time I had had spells with my stomach. The pain would commence about my heart and was so deadly agonizing that I would have to scream aloud. Sometimes it would last several hours and I would have to take laudanum to stop it. Besides this I had a headache almost constantly, day and night, that nearly crazed me, so you see I suffered a great deal. And when I think of the agony I endured it still makes me shudder."

"Doctors," did you say? Their medicine made me sicker. I couldn't take it and I kept growing worse until a friend advised me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I did. I began to feel better and was soon wholly converted to this wonderful medicine. It did me more good than I had ever hoped for. I kept on with the pills and now I recommend them to all who suffer."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured severe cases of indigestion, bloodlessness, influenza, headaches, backaches, lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, nervousness and spinal weakness. The genuine Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are guaranteed to be free from opiates or any harmful drugs and cannot injure the most delicate system. ONE OF GOD'S INNOCENTS

By MARY A. DICKERSON

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Paxley was very fond of children. Everybody knew that, from the scrub woman, who invariably did him out of sundry dollars when there was an extra cold spell in winter or a particularly unhealthy spell in summer, to the chief himself, who always showed him the latest pictures of his own small flock and let Flossie, the smallest, go to the big outer office to kiss "her Paxley" whenever she came downtown to visit.

At the same time, Paxley abhorred women, and insisted that he would never marry. People said it was too bad, for Paxley made a good, comfortable salary, was well enough to look at, and as steady a chap as one would care to meet. Paxley himself always declared that he was going to devote himself to an orphan asylum, and actually haunted two or three until scared off from each by a succession of wily and designing nurses, who made his life a burden. Then he fell back on newsboys and stray acquaintances of the parks and street cars, until one morning he electrified the office with the news that he had acquired a baby.

"I really suppose I ought to feel mournful," said he, as he explained matters to the interested but bewildered crowd that gathered about him; "but I'm not—I'm gleeful! You see it's this way. The baby's my cousin's. You remember, maybe, that I had a cousin who died last spring? Well, this kid was only about a month old at the time. Now, eight months later, the mother dies, too. She had no parents. My cousin hadn't any. There's no one for that blessed baby to fall back on but me! And I've got him!"

Paxley went systematically to work to enjoy his new blessing.

He left his comfortable bachelor apartments, where he had been ensconced for years, and set up a small house in the suburbs because he said that city air was bad for children.

Wheeled Around and Nearly Knocked Haines Down.

He imported an aged relative of the feminine persuasion to look after the baby, and hired a waiter with whom he had grown familiar at his restaurant, to go out and do the cooking and fire building.

Most of the people in the office felt rather sorry for Paxley, in spite of his evident joy. But he bore the hurried rush for his suburban cars, the long rides, and the lack of many of his old amusements with a smile, and, if he minded, he never told. In some ways Paxley was a hero.

When the baby first arrived upon the scene he had remarked to his cronies, inside the office and out of it, that as soon as the youngster became interesting they should come out.

It was Jenkins who first noticed the change in Paxley. Jenkins was too busy, both at home and at work, to see much of the other fellows, so when he did happen to wake up and look at them he was the more apt to notice slight changes. And in July he announced that Paxley was looking tired. When Jenkins spoke of it, the rest realized that it was true.

"I don't think very much of that kid of yours, Pax," announced Haines one day with a sounding thwack on Paxley's shoulder. "He can't be very bright."

Paxley, red as a turkey gobbler, wheeled round, and nearly knocked Haines down before that astonished gentleman could conclude—"or he'd be saying of the strength of his guardian angel."

When Paxley heard that he calmed down and apologized to Haines, and took the whole crowd out to dinner. The boys told him his outlandish nervousness was only another proof that he was worn out and needed a rest. Paxley said he guessed they were jolly near right, and the next day he asked for his vacation. He got it in August and went away. But every one groaned when they heard that he had not gone to the country, but to New York, and that he had taken the ancient relative and the baby along with him.

"Most foolish thing I ever heard of!" stormed Haines one night, as a crowd of Paxley's friends hung about the cool club library.

"Of all things to take a kid along on your vacation! And then, to go to a hot, jammed-up city! What'd you let him do it for, Doc?"

But Dr. Donald McArthur, Pax's

chum for 20 years and family physician for seven months, only shook his head.

"Don't ask me," he remarked brokenly, as he ate the ice from the bottom of a tall, cool glass, "the movements of Paxley, and of young James Chesterley Braden are quite beyond my authority. But I tell you what," and the doctor rose and stared across the table at the rest impressively. "Pax knows what he's about. Don't meddle." And he stalked away.

When Paxley came back, it was easy to see that the vacation had done him not the least particle of good. He was not only tired—he was thin, and there was something fierce, and yet pitiful about his eyes. The boys got over joking with him as they had done, and nobody spoke of his private affairs, especially after little Cummins suggested that it was time the great and only James Chesterley Braden should be put on exhibition.

Paxley glared at him so darkly, and turned the subject in such a queer, unhappy sort of way, that after that nobody mentioned the child again, till Paxley himself began to do it.

It was after Jenkins had been telling of some of the funny sayings of his little brood.

"Jim gets off a good thing occasionally, now he's beginning to talk," said Paxley, and every one felt better. It was so unusual not to be able to talk about anything and everything with Paxley.

The next day he had some bright saying to retail, that made the boys laugh heartily and honestly—not the conventional giggle that is generally reserved for such accounts of juvenile wit.

The respect for "Paxley's kid" grew. That he was an exceptionally bright and clever little fellow everybody admitted, and Cummins, who went out with Pax and the doctor one Sunday night and saw the boy in his crib, gave an enthusiastic account of his beauty.

The crash came one stormy December night, when Paxley had been a parent-in-law, as the boys expressed it, for about a year.

A number of his friends, Haines, one or two more from the office, and others who were members of his club, were gathered again in the library as they had been the summer before.

As usual, Haines started the conversation. "Paxley's clean daffy after that kid of his, isn't he? Can't hire him to go out this winter, and he's thin as a wire fence."

The others grunted. Then little Cummins, rather red and altogether embarrassed, spoke.

"Well," sputtered Cummins, "you know that story he told about the boy's asking if the clouds were God's dust cloths?"

There was a grunt of assent. "Too precious—too precious by far," muttered Jenkins, who had got a night off, and was enjoying the society of adults untroubled by children.

"I don't know about that," went on Cummins, "for I don't know anything about children. But I do know that that's an old story. I read it myself in a magazine last night. And the magazine was dated more than a year ago."

There was an odd, strained silence. "Yes," said another man, "I—I've had my suspicions myself. I told two or three of Pax's stories at a dinner not long ago, and the people just howled—said they were every one of them gray-bearded with age."

"I've done that, too," remarked Haines, "but I thought maybe two kids could say the same funny things—they're capable of anything, you know."

The doctor rose and walked undecidedly up and down the room a few times.

Then he stopped by the table, leaning forward, with his long fingers resting lightly on the polished wood.

"Boys," he said, and there was something solemn in his voice which made the others lay down their cigars and look expectantly at him. "Boys, I am going to do something I've never done before—I'm going to betray the confidence of a friend."

"If you would stop and think," the doctor went on slowly, as though choosing his words, "I would not have to tell you would understand. But you have not seen, and you must—your own good, and Paxley's—and little Jim's. Do you remember when he flew at Haines when he said, jokingly, he didn't think much of the boy? The strange trip to New York? The style and the sorrow in his face for months now? And these stolen stories? For they are stolen, every one. He's stolen them for months. They've been his last weapons in the hardest fight he's ever fought. For he's been fighting against God this year. And he has not won. Oh, don't you understand? For the first time the doctor raised his hands and threw them out as though asking help and strength from the men before him. "Don't you see? Little Jim will never say any bright things of his own. Because"—and unconsciously the doctor lapsed into the Scottish tongue of his boyhood days—"because, lad's Paxley's found his wee lamb is one of God's poor innocents."

And only the waiter, who had just come in, noticed how blindly the doctor walked across the room.

For all the other men were strangely blinded, too.

Stupendous Railway Enterprises.

If the information conveyed in a dispatch from Paris prove correct, a beginning is about to be made in the most stupendous enterprise of its kind ever undertaken. The report from the French capital is to the effect that the syndicate represented by Baron Loeq de Lobel has been authorized, by an order issued by the czar of Russia, to start operations on the Trans-Siberian-Alaska railroad project. This involves nothing less than the construction of a railroad line from Siberia to the American territory of Alaska by bridging and tunneling the intervening waters, including Bering Strait. Previous statements that the work is to be financed to the extent of $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 by American and European capitalists are repeated, and the story has every indication of being put forth in good faith. As has already been shown, says the Troy Times, should the projected line be carried through it would mean the possibility of riding without change of cars from any railroad center in the United States to the capitals of Europe. With the tunnel under the English channel and the completion of the "three Americas" system in this hemisphere, one will be able to go by rail from remote points in South America directly to London. And with the carrying out of the "Cape to Cairo" scheme in Africa there may be a through route from "the Horn" to Good Hope. Who knows?

Great Night for the Onion.

The onion has served as the basis for many quips and flings at the hands of the humorous paragraphers. And yet it is an extremely wholesome plant and one of high rank with the ancients, particularly the early Egyptians. For these reasons it is pleasant to note that the taboos of the old world with deserved recognition at what was termed an onion reception and banquet in an interior New York town called Union, which in this case might plausibly seem a corruption of onion. It was arranged, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, in honor of the sixteenth anniversary of the special guests of the evening and the onion was the center and scenter of attraction. The house was decorated with onion blossoms, an onion center piece graced the table, and the bill of fare included onions and onions only—top onions, sliced onions, stewed onions, onion salad and fried onions. Needless to say, the guests, who departed at a late hour, went away breathing many encomiums of the fragrant bulb of honor.

Something of the importance of the American tourist trade may be gathered from the statement sent out from London that the steamship fares paid by Americans landing in England in one week amounted to $5,000,000. And that is but one item of expenditure. Americans are liberal spenders, and the amount paid out for hotel bills, transportation and in a multitude of other ways, to say nothing of the inescapable tip, carries the total far up into the millions. It is easily believable that there are sections of Europe where the residents practically live on American tourists. And the foreign-owned steamship lines get their richest patronage from the same source. The money taken abroad in these ways goes far toward offsetting the big balance of trade in our favor which represents the excess of our exports over imports.

What the public thinks of the noise which the motor omnibuses make is shown by the effect it has had upon the value of house property along their routes, says the London Spectator. The decline has been general, and in many cases it has been extraordinary great. It is not merely that houses fetch less money when they come into market. They have become practically unsalable. The process has been impartial in South Kensington, and large ones in Portman square or Grosvenor place. Wherever the motor omnibus comes the resident disappears, if he can afford to leave his house unoccupied, or else lives on in it in the hope that the tyranny may some day be overpast.

England has in its midst another agitation aimed at revolutionizing the style of men's dress suits. The movement will run along for a time and die out, just as others have done. Such crusades seem to be accompaniments of the silly season.

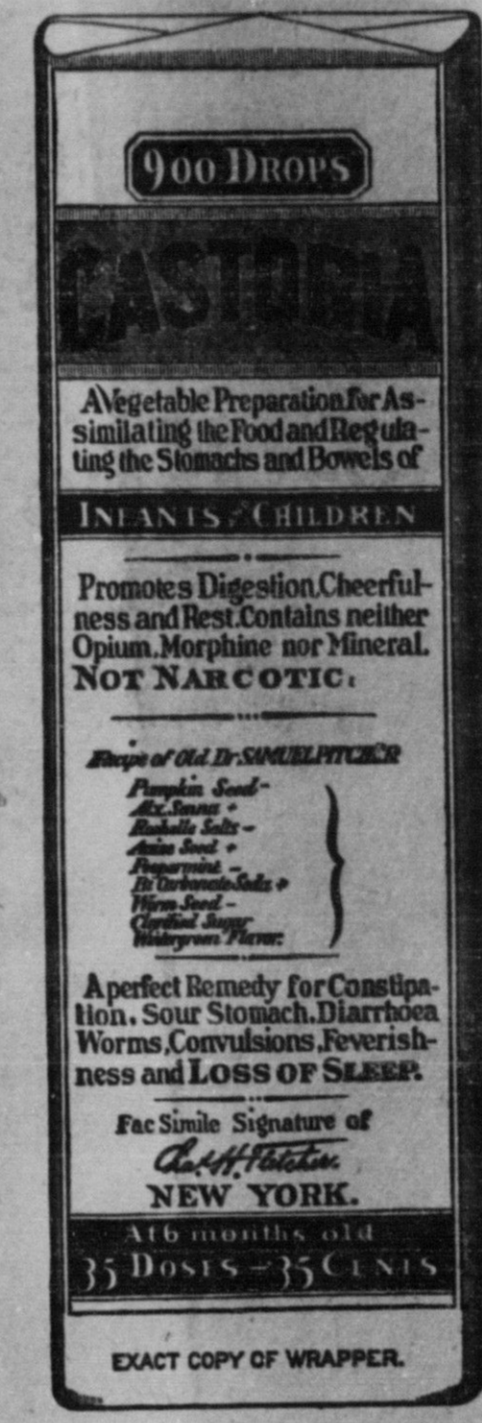

F. W. Martin, of Beloit, Wis., has just paid $3,000 for Lord Bacon, the highest price ever given for an American-bred hog. It is a pity that Mr. Donnelly is not here to enjoy this triumph.

An outbreak of the Igorrotes in the Philippines is inexplicable, as they have been friendly heretofore. Possibly they are seeking advertising for their next American tour.

The Methodist preacher who stopped service to help put out a fire can't justly be tried for heresy or neglect of duty.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. B. Halstead Scott, of Chicago, Ill., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr. Wm. J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The name that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

Subject for Another Lecture. "Oh, dear," exclaimed Mrs. Slapdash, when they were finally seated in the carriage, "I've only got one of my earrings on. I left the other on my dressing table."

"Huh!" grunted her husband, "just like my lectures on your carelessness—in one ear and out the other."

"Cut out hot cream of tartar biscuit" used to be a common, everyday remark among physicians when discussing items of diet for their patients. But alum baking powder biscuits are never mentioned in this respect. Why? Because it's the cream of tartar that is objectionable and injurious, and yet there are some people who to-day continue to use the old cream of tartar baking powder, and wonder why they are always ailing.

When Woman isn't Young. The report is that a local religious institution which is for "young women" has drawn the deadline of youth at 35. Every woman over that age will be marked 23 and requested to skidoo. This is painful. It is unkind. What is worse, it is impracticable. We are glad the task is to be performed by women. No man nor set of men would ever have dared tackle such a problem—not they. This is simply another example of woman's inhumanity to woman.

We have been told for many ages that a woman is as old as she looks and a man is as old as he feels. Just now, we say it with regret, most women look like 60 and most men feel like Methuselah. But the general rule seems a good one. It is a plain, unpalatable fact that women will deceive as to their age as long as possible and then openly lie about it. There are many women who were born during the ravages of the civil war who still claim sweetly to be in the thirties.
