Automobile Accident.

Mr. and Mrs. William Stimm, of Brooklyn, while enroute from their home to Ann Arbor last Sunday met with an accident that seriously injured Mrs. Stimm and made a wreck of the auto. Mr. Stimm is the engineer at the electric light plant in Brooklyn. When near the Freedom church a rolling stone in the road caused his auto to skid, the front wheels dropping into the ditch and the machine turning a complete somersault. Mrs. Stimm was thrown headfirst into a stone and wire pile, a distance of about 40 feet, cutting her head, face and otherwise injuring her. Mr. Stimm was pinned under the auto until rescued by some of the farmers in the immediate vicinity.

Excellent Entertainment.

The Old Colonial Band of twelve pieces, under the directorship of E. Carmelny, gave the second number of the Brotherhood entertainment course in the Sylvan theater last Thursday evening. The band was without a doubt the best organization of the kind that ever appeared here. The members of the band appeared on the stage in costumes of the Colonial days and their closing number, "The Spirit of '76," called forth round after round of applause. In fact all of the numbers of the program were heartily enjoyed. Pleasing features of the evening were the vocal solos by Ambrose Wyleck, Miss Nina Belle Wurster playing the accompaniment. Mr. Wyleck is an excellent singer and was called before the audience several times before he was allowed to resume his part in the band.

Has Gasoline Warning.

John T. Winship, state insurance commissioner, is out with a warning against following the advice of an advertisement that points out a cheap and easy way to do dry cleaning at home. The advertisement indicates that housewives can save $5 by doing their own dry cleaning, by the purchase of two ounces of solvite and putting it into two gallons of gasoline. The "ad" then goes on to state that a wash boiler completes the dry cleaning outfit.

Mr. Winship says the advertisement is disturbing him somewhat, not that there is any inherent danger in the use of solvite and gasoline, but the attention of housewives should be called to the danger of using gasoline within the home. Since January 1, Mr. Winship points out, the lives of 20 women and children have been sacrificed in Michigan through the careless use of gasoline.

Mr. Winship says that housewives, if they follow the directions of the "ad," should do their dry cleaning in the open air.

Andrew J. Wood.

Andrew J. Wood was born in Ontario county, New York, July 26, 1836, and died at his home in Glen Elgin, Illinois, Sunday, October 31, 1915.

In his boyhood days Mr. Wood resided at North Lake and was well known to many of the residents in that vicinity. His parents, Garret and Mary (Ashley) Wood were residents of Dexter for many years. Mr. Wood and his brother, Theodore E., were both students in the normal school at Ypsilanti, when the call came for men during the Civil War, and they enlisted in Co. E, 17th Michigan Infantry and served three years together. When the deceased was mustered out of the service he was a second lieutenant.

At the close of the war Mr. Wood became superintendent of the Union City school, which position he filled for three years. He had charge of schools in this state and Wisconsin. For 33 years he was an instructor in the Chicago schools, retiring seven years ago while principal of the John Ericsson school in that city.

Mr. Wood was twice married, his first wife Nellie (Burkhart) Wood died several years ago. She was a sister of O. C. Burkhart of this place.

He is survived by his second wife, Mrs. Kate L. Wood, two brothers, Theodore E. Wood of this place and S. L. Wood, of Chicago, two sisters, Mrs. Sarah Brown, of Pinckney, and Mrs. Elizabeth Walz of this place and a number of nephews and nieces. The funeral was held at 10 o'clock Tuesday forenoon from his late home. Interment at Graceland cemetery Chicago.

BURGLARS VISIT CHELSEA

H. S. Holmes Mercantile Co.'s Store Robbed Monday Night.

Twice during the past year the department store of the H. S. Holmes Mercantile Co. has been visited by burglars. The first entrance was during the night of November 27, 1914, and the second time on Monday night of this week, and both times the burglars have made liberal hauls.

On Monday night the burglars tried to make an entrance to the store from the front basement stairway and finally gained access to the store by breaking a window in the east end of the basement under the clothing and shoe departments. A wall case under the window gave the men an easy means of reach the floor. When Mr. Wurster entered the store, after being called by the parties who discovered that the store had been broken into, the salesroom looked as if a cyclone had struck the interior of the store, merchandise being strewn from the front to the rear of the room, the thieves taking what they wanted and leaving the rest scattered on the floor.

The haul consisted of three overcoats, three suits of clothes, three pairs of shoes, a quantity of underwear, two suit cases, one hand bag, shirts, stockings, handkerchiefs, neckwear, toilet soap and what small change there was in the cash register. From the number of suits, etc., that were stolen it is quite evident that there were three men in the party, and so far no clue has been discovered that might lead to the guilty parties.

The burglars evidently became frightened before they had packed all of the goods they had laid out to take away with them. About three o'clock Tuesday morning Geo. P. Staffan was called to the country and he passed the store when he went to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. S. Gorman to call Galbraith Gorman to accompany him, and while waiting Mr. Staffan walked up and down the sidewalk in front of the store several times.

Mr. Wurster called Deputy Sheriff Brooks, who notified the sheriff, and Deputy Sheriff Eldert, of Ann Arbor, was sent here to assist in locating the thieves if possible.

One of the men who wore No. 10 shoes left is old pair in the store when he fitted himself with the new ones, is the only clue that the officers have to work on.

Warning.

If the person who recently took a full set of pocket surgical instruments inclosed in a black leather case from a hand bag in Dr. Schmidt's office, will return the same as quietly as when they removed them, it would be greatly appreciated by the Doctor. These instruments certainly cannot be of any use, either in money value or otherwise to the party now having them in their possession.

Further, as a warning to anyone handling these instruments there is danger of serious infection, as some in this set were used in operating on a dangerous case a short time before their removal and were only temporarily cleaned for a later sterilization.

Was Not Boosted Twice.

The committee on equalization of the board of supervisors left Sylvan's valuation this year practically the same as last year. The article in last week's Standard was misleading, though printed in good faith, as while last year Sylvan was equalized at about $400,000 over the assessment, inasmuch as the assessment of the supervisor was the same this year as last, and being equalized at a like amount, it appeared that we were twice boosted, which was not a fact.

Ann Arbor Wine Grange.

According to an announcement received from the executive committee of the state grange, the annual meeting of the state grange will be held in Ann Arbor the second week in December.

Last year the grange voted to hold 1915 meeting at Muskegon, but according to word received from the executive committee Muskegon failed to make proper arrangements, and it was decided to meet this year at Ann Arbor.

She is survived by one son, one daughter, her parents, one brother, three sisters, her grandmother, Mrs. Barbara Manz, of Chelsea, and a number of uncles, aunts and cousins.

The funeral will be held from St. John's church, Rogers Corners, at 10 o'clock Friday forenoon, Rev. G. Eisen officiating. Interment at St. John's cemetery.

DETROIT REJECTS CAR PURCHASE

METROPOLIS TURNS DOWN MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP PROPOSITION.

THREE FIFTHS IS NEEDED

Plan to Acquire Property of D. U. R. in the City Had Indorsement of Administration.

Detroit—The voters of the city on Tuesday rejected the plan to purchase the street car system for the D. U. R.

The plan proposed to take over the lines and pay for them out of the earnings. The agreement with the company was made by the city street railway commission and had the backing of Mayor Marx and the entire administration.

The vote on the contract stood 35,585 to 32,628 against it.

As a three-fifths vote of the people would have been necessary to carry the proposed contract the project was defeated by a total of 8,278 votes.

On the charter amendment, which was voted upon along with the contract for purchase, the vote was 32,589 in favor to 32,331, against, a majority of 258 voting "yes."

The vote on the amendment would be sufficient to carry it, as a majority only is necessary, but the amendment is void without the contract.

MEETING OF DRYS OF STATE

One Thousand Gather in Lansing Tuesday and Plan Fight.

Lansing—Over 1,000 of the Michigan "dry" held a big rally here on Tuesday. A complete plan of organization for the coming fight in Michigan was laid out by a committee and adopted at the evening's meeting. Grant Hudson, L. E. Stewart, of Battle Creek, and other state leaders gave short talks in which they urged cooperation. The fact that the grange, the gleaners and the farmers' clubs, the churches and the organizations which tend for the uplift, have swung into line only makes individual work of the highest importance, they insisted.

Tuesday afternoon an offering was taken up and according to an estimate of Superintendent Grant Hudson about $3,000 was raised.

Will Continue Fight.

At a banquet before the evening meeting, State Senator Henry E. Straight and Lieutenant-Governor Dickinson spoke of the work of the "dry" in the last legislature.

JITNEY ORDINANCE HELD UP

Auto Bus Men in Flint Secure Injunction at Last Moment.

Flint—Flint's jitney bus ordinance, which was passed over the veto of Mayor McKelighan recently, and was to have taken effect Tuesday, was held up at the last minute by an injunction granted in the circuit by Judge Howard West, of Lansing. This is the second injunction the jitney operators have secured. The first ordinance was held up by an injunction so long that the council decided to pass a new ordinance and rescind the original one.

The principal contention of the petitioners for the injunction, William Gilmore, president of the Safety Auto Service club, an organization of jitney men, is that the ordinance is arbitrary and would amount to confiscation of the business because of the license fee and a bond, which, it is claimed, are excessive.

Last Strike Case Settled.

Houghton—The last of the thousands of criminal cases growing out of the 1913 strike was cleared from the docket Monday, when Judge O'Brien nolle prossed cases of second degree murder against James Johnson and Emil Strang, charged with killing John Laitala, a striker, in January, 1914.

The defendants were working miners and Laitala an alleged Socialist. Strang has been enjoying his liberty because he is tuberculous. Johnson has been in jail nearly two years.

HERMAN RIDDER DIES IN NEW YORK

AMONG MOST PROMINENT AMERICANS OF GERMAN BIRTH.

EDITOR OF STAATS ZEITUNG

Distinguished Figure in Newspaper and Political World—Was Treasurer of The Associated Press.

New York—Herman Ridder, president and principal owner of the New Yorker Staats Zeitung and a leader of German publicists in the United States, died at his home here shortly after 4 o'clock Monday afternoon in his 65th year, after suffering for almost a year from Bright's disease.

During the past two weeks Mr. Ridder's condition had been such that his death was expected at any time.

Mrs. Ridder, who was a sister of the late Justice Amos, of the supreme court, was with her husband when he died. At the bedside also were Mr. Ridder's three sons, Victor F., Bernard H., and Joseph E. Ridder and Mr. Ridder's brother, Henry.

Among a large number of prominent German-American citizens of the United States, Herman Ridder was one of the most conspicuous figures. In the newspaper publishing business and in politics. His associates in the publishing business had honored him at one time with the presidency of the American Newspaper Publishers' association and for many years he held high offices in the Associated Press as treasurer and a director.

In politics he was such a factor that he was talked of at the national Democratic convention at Denver in 1908 as a possible nominee for vice-president. He also was discussed later as a likely selection for ambassador to Germany.

Following the nomination of Bryan at the 1908 convention, after former Governor Charles N. Haskell, of Oklahoma, had resigned as treasurer of the national Democratic committee because of his affiliation with Standard Oil interests, Mr. Ridder was chosen as treasurer and, in his own name and those of his brothers he contributed $37,000, the largest single contribution to the Bryan campaign.

Mr. Ridder was owner and editor of the New Yorker Staats Zeitung, one of the foremost German newspapers in the United States, and through this he was particularly conspicuous recently in his ardent defense of the German position in the European war.

Great Actress Had Been On Stage for More Than Twenty Years.

Cleveland, O.—Blanche Walsh, the actress, died Sunday night in a hospital, where she was taken two weeks ago for an illness which required an operation.

In private life she was Mrs. William H. Travers. Blanche Walsh was born in New York city, January 4, 1873, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Walsh. Her father at that time was a locally well known politician of the old sixth ward. He was once warden of the Tombs prison. She had been on the American stage for more than twenty years.

Isosco was the lucky county selected out of 26 in the state where the mortgage might have been filed.

Members of the Kalamazoo branch of the Y. W. C. A., have launched a campaign for a $100,000 fund for the purchase of the Hannah Cornell property, on South Rose street, on which it is proposed that a magnificent Y. W. C. A. building be erected.

HEIR TO BELGIAN THRONE WOUNDED IN AIR RAID

PRINCE LEOPOLD.

New York—Word has just been received here that Prince Leopold, heir to the Belgian throne, who is now at Etton, was in London the evening of the big Zeppelin raid and was slightly injured.

The prince and another Belgian boy who is at Etton, went to London on the night of the raid intending to spend three days. The boys went to dine at a restaurant. As they came out of the restaurant the first bombs began to fall. One exploded within about 60 yards of the party.

Prince Leopold was knocked down by the force of the explosion and his arm was cut by a piece of the bomb, the other boy escaped unhurt.

BIG MINE IS ABANDONED

Leading Property of Gogebic Range Is Shut Down After Twenty Years of Great Production.

Ironwood—The "Big Norrie," for 20 years and more the leading mine on the Gogebic range, and around which grew its leading city, Ironwood, has been abandoned by its hitherto operators, the Oliver Mining Co. This mine was opened in 1886 by the then Metropolitan Mining Co., which sold out its lease and interest in the property 15 years ago. From its first opening to the recent surrender of its lease it has produced 25,000,000 tons of ore, the royalties alone on which run up to close on $10,000,000, of which the Keweenaw Land Association, better known up here as one of the Longyear land pool, is the sole beneficiary. And all this "velvet" was from only one "eighty" of land, and without spending a single dollar in development, operation or otherwise.

The ore trend on what is known as the north vein, from which this Big Norrie draws its main ore supply, dips northward into what is known as the North Norrie, still operated by the Oliver people, some 2,000 feet below the surface. As the ore at that depth is richer in both quality and quantity the abandonment of the Early Norrie means no slacking up whatever in mining by the Oliver company. In fact, this company would have kept the early mine as well were it not for the minimum royalty of $100,000 to be paid whether any ore was produced from the property or not.

Local parties have now obtained an option to the "eighty" or more favorable terms and expect to drill for the supposed south vein found elsewhere on this range, but never, so far, located here.

New Hospital for Lansing.

Lansing—Lansing is to have another hospital, and because the city already has one, the gift of a former resident, it is possible that this one may be for the care of contagious disease cases. Dr. Julius A. Post died last week, and Saturday his will was opened at Mason. It leaves everything to build a hospital in Lansing as a memorial to his late wife Ellen A. Post. The will was made in 1897 and estimates the value of his property, mostly real estate in Lansing, at $5,000. Since then the property has increased in value until it is now figured as worth $100,000.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Seventy-five survivors of the Thirtieth Michigan infantry attended the fifty-first annual reunion of the regiment at Kalamazoo Thursday and Friday.

Grand Rapids, through action of its council Monday night, extended an invitation to Michigan State Teachers' association to meet in that city in 1916.

The city commission of Owosso has ordered the poles removed from the streets in the business section of the city by July 1, 1916. The action has been fought by several public service corporations, who resented the term "cedar swamp," as applied to the poles. The action is in movement with the plan for a boulevard system of lighting.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE LOSES IN EAST

NEW YORK, MASSACHUSETTS AND PENNSYLVANIA REJECT VOTES FOR WOMEN.

WETS WIN AGAIN IN OHIO

Main Interest in Tuesday's Contest Centered About Amendments Submitted in States.

New York—Woman suffrage was decisively defeated Tuesday in all three of the states where the proposition was submitted to the voters—New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.

Early returns indicate that suffrage was beaten in New York by not far from 200,000. The majority against it in New York city was 92,600.

The vote on suffrage from 2,467 districts out of 5,713 in New York state gave 241,928 for and 321,418 votes against the measure.

In Massachusetts the majority against was more than 100,000, villages, towns and cities returning figures of about two to one against the suffrage proposition. Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and New York voted heavily against the gallantly aspiring women.

In Pennsylvania, where suffrage received considerable support in the rural counties, the Republican organization, swinging state and big cities, smothered the suffragists. The count of votes was so slow that no accurate estimates could be supplied but the opinion was that Pennsylvania voted down suffrage by 250,000.

Everywhere the vote on suffrage seemed to be cast quite irrespectively of party lines or affiliations.

Wets Win Again in Ohio.

Columbus, O.—For the second time in two years, Ohio voters Tuesday rejected a state-wide prohibition amendment to the constitution.

Estimates based on returns received up to midnight show that the proposal was defeated by a majority which may reach 40,000. Last year's majority was $4,000.

Incomplete returns from 55 counties gave the following results:

For prohibition, 45,200; against, 120,500.

McCall Wins in Massachusetts.

Boston—Samuel McCall, Republican, was elected governor of Massachusetts by 3,500 plurality over Governor Walsh, Democrat, Tuesday. The entire Republican state ticket was elected. The legislature shows gains for the Republicans in both branches. The Progressive party failed to cast 3 per cent of the total vote for governor and by law will not have a place on next year's ballot.

New York Defeats Constitution.

New York—In New York state the returns at midnight indicated that only three counties voted for the new constitution.

This is said to be the severest jolt ever given to a proposed fundamental law for the Empire state of the union. Elihu Root, former United States senator and former secretary of war and of state, was the chairman of the constitutional convention and he threw all the weight of his influence for the constitution's adoption.

FEW CHURCHES DIE THAT WAY

Colored Preacher Unlikely to Be Called Upon to Fulfill Vow That He Had Made.

The following story comes to us from old Virginia:

A devout colored preacher, whose heart was aglow with missionary zeal, gave notice to his congregation that in the evening an offertory would be taken for missions and asked for liberal gifts. A selfish, well-to-do man in the congregation said to him before the service: "Yes, give to kill this church of yer goes on sayin' 'giver' No church can stan' it. Yer gwine ter kill it."

After the sermon the colored minister said to the people: "Brother Jones told me I was gwine to kill this church if I kep' a-shakin' fer to give; but, my brethren, churches doesn't die dat way. Ef anybody knows of a church that died 'cause it's been givin' too much to de Lord, I'll be very much obliged if my brother will tell me what church is, for I gwine to visit it, and I'll climb on de walls of dat church, under de light of de moon and cry: 'Blessed-am de dead dat lie in de Lord.'"—Cleveland Intelligencer.

SYNOPSIS.

Confederate Sergeant Wyatt of the 10th Cavalry is sent on a mission to the Green Briar by General Jackson. Wyatt meets a mountaineer named Ned Cowan. They ride together to a house beyond Hot Springs. In the house Wyatt and Taylor meet Major Harwood, father of Ned Cowan, and an old neighbor of Wyatt, who is sent to bed while the two men talk. Wyatt becomes suspicious, and finds that Taylor has murdered Harwood and escaped. Wyatt changes to the U. S. cavalry uniform he has with him, and rides away in the night, running into a detachment of Federal cavalry, to whom he identifies himself as Lieutenant Raymond, Third U. S. Cavalry, by means of a paper with which he has been provided. Captain Fox finds Harwood's body and follows Taylor's trail. Fox and Wyatt believe Taylor to be old Ned Cowan. The detachment is ambushed. Wyatt escapes to the Green Briar country and goes to Harwood's apparently deserted home where he finds Ned Cowan alone, and he does not recognize him, and he introduces himself as Lieutenant Raymond.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

My lips were dry, but I nodded, half fearful I might be slipping into some trap, although her words and manner were surely innocent enough.

"We were acquaintances, not friends," I replied, hoping the retort might cause her to change the subject. "Most of the boys seemed to like him. He was very pleasant to me, and I had a splendid time. I met one cadet named Raymond; he had dark hair and eyes."

"Oh, yes," I managed to answer, now desperately alert. "There was another in the class—James R. I believe."

"I did not learn his first name, but when I heard that a Lieutenant Raymond was coming here, I hoped it might be he. That was why I was so deeply interested. It is not such a common name, you know."

I made some answer, and she sat there silently, her face turned now toward the fire in the grate. The profile told me in fascination, as I wondered what these seemingly innocent questions could signify. Anyhow, let the truth be what it may, there was no other course left for me, but to keep on with the deception. I was in the heart of the enemy's country, in disguise, my life forfeit in case of discovery, and the time had not come when I could entrust her with so dangerous a secret.

The wind rattled the blinds, and the rain beat heavily against the side of the house. The thought of venturing out into the storm, not knowing where I could seek shelter, was not an alluring one. Nor had I any excuse to urge for immediate departure; indeed as a gentleman and soldier my duty called me to remain for her protection. She could not be left alone in this desolate house. It was my steady gaze that roused the lady from whatever dream the flames of the grate had given her. She turned her head to meet my eyes—then sat suddenly erect, the expression of her face instantly changing, as she stared beyond me at the open door. I wheeled about to look, startled at the movement.

A man stood in the doorway, water streaming from his clothes on to the floor. I was on my feet instantly, a hand gripping my revolver, but before I could whip it from the leather sheave, the girl had taken the single step forward, and grasped my sleeve.

"Do not fire!" she exclaimed. "He is not a fighting man."

The fellow lifted one arm, and stepped forward full into the light. He was a man of years, unarmed, a tall, angular figure, a scraggly beard at his chin, and a face like parchment. His eyes were two deep wells, solemn and unsmiling.

"Peace to you both!" he said gravely. "I ask naught save fire and shelter."

"To these you are welcome," the girl answered, still clinging to my arm. "You travel alone?"

"Even as my master in rags and poverty, having no place wherein to lay my head. The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests—you know me, young woman?"

"Yes; you are Parson Nichols."

"An unworthy soldier of the cross. I address the daughter of Major Harwood—and this young man?"

"Lieutenant Raymond of the Federal army," she explained simply. "He sought refuge here from the storm."

The man's eyes searched my face, but without cordiality, without expression of any kind. Saying nothing he crossed to the fireplace, and held out his hands to the warmth of the blaze. The girl's eyes met mine almost unconsciously. Then she stepped forward.

"We were just completing our meal," she said softly. "There is not much, but we will gladly share what we have."

"The flesh needeth nothing," he answered, not even looking around, "and the spirit liveth on the bread of life. I seek only converse with you. The young man is an officer?"

"Yes—on recruiting service."

"You know him well? You trust him?"

"I have not known him long," she replied hesitatingly, and placing back to me, "Yet I have confidence in him. The man did not answer, or move, and, after a moment of silence, she asked:

"Have you ridden far?"

"From Lewisburg."

"Lewisburg!" in surprise. "Then you knew I was here? You came seeking me?"

He turned on his stool, his eyes searching her face gravely.

"On a mission of ministry," he replied solemnly, "although whether it prove of joy, or sorrow, I am unable to say. I am but an instrument."

The man's reluctance to speak freely was apparent, and I stepped forward.

"If you prefer conversing with Miss Harwood alone," I said quietly, "I will retire."

"The words I would speak are indeed of a confidential nature—"

"No, no!" she broke in impulsively, her eyes of appeal turned toward me. "Do not leave us, Lieutenant. This man has nothing to say I am afraid to have you hear. He has not come here as a friend; there is some evil purpose in all this, which I cannot fathom."

She faced him now, her slender body poised, her eyes on his. "Tell me what it is—this mysterious mission? Ay! and who sent you to find me? I will not believe it was my father."

The minister rose to his feet, a tall, ungainly figure, his solemn face as expressionless as before, but a smoldering resentment was in his deep-set eyes. He possessed the look of a fanatic, one who would hesitate at nothing to gain his end. To me he was even repulsive in his narrow bigotry.

"No, it was not your father," he said almost coarsely, "but it is a part of my mission to bring to you, young woman, the news of your father's death."

"Death? My father dead?" she stepped back from him, her hands pressed against her eyes. Obeying the first instinct of protection, I stepped to support her as she seemed about to fall. "That cannot be! You lie! I know you lie! You were never his friend. You come here to tell me that to frighten me, to compel me to do something wrong."

The man exhibited no trace of emotion, no evidence of regret, his voice the same hard, metallic sound.

"I expected this outburst," he continued unmoved. "Indeed, it is no more than natural. But I harbor no resentment, and in this hour freely forgive all. 'He that taketh the sword, shall perish by the sword,' and my words are true."

"But I saw him four days ago."

"On his way east to Hot Springs, with an escort of soldiers. It was there he was killed, together with his servant. A messenger brought the news."

"A soldier? One of Captain Fox's men?"

A sardonic smile flickered an instant on the preacher's thin lips.

"No, but equally reliable; one of Ned Cowan's mountaineers. Captain Fox is a prisoner, wounded, and his men mostly dead."

A moment she rested unknowingly against my arm, her face covered with her hands. There was that in the man's words and manner which convinced her that he spoke the truth. The face she finally lifted was white and drawn. The girl had changed to a woman. She stood erect, alone, one hand grasping the back of a chair.

"You say my father is dead—killed," she said, in steady, clear voice. "But be that one or the other, you never came here tonight, through this storm, to bring me such a message alone. Who sent you, Parson Nichols? What devilry is on foot?"

"My dear young lady," he began smoothly, spreading his hands deprecatingly. "Be charitable, and just. I realize that in the first shock of thus suddenly learning of your father's demise, you naturally speak harshly. With me the past is forgotten, blotted out, covered with the mantle of Christian charity. I felt it my duty to break to you this sad news in all possible tenderness."

"And you had no other object?"

"Certainly not; what other could I possibly have had?"

The man lied, and I knew it; the suave, soft tones of his voice irritated me. The girl stood motionless, silent, her breath coming in sobs. Then she turned her head slightly, and her eyes met mine. The piteous appeal in their depths was all I needed. With a grim feeling of delight, I took a step forward, and the muzzle of my revolver touched his breast.

"Now, Minister Preacherman," I said shortly, "we'll have done with this play-acting. Not a move!"

CHAPTER VIII.

The Jawa of the Trap.

If eyes alone possessed the power to kill, his would have done the deed, but the face with which I confronted him was sufficiently grim to make him realize the danger of a movement. He gave back a step, but my revolver pressed his side.

"Don't try anything with me, Nichols," I said sternly, "you are either going to talk, or die. I'll give you one chance, and one only. I despise your kind, and will kill you with pleasure."

Now answer me—who told you of Major Harwood's death?"

"I have said already; the message was brought to Lewisburg by one of Ned Cowan's men."

"Yes, so you did; but you never received it at Lewisburg. Oh, yes, I know something myself. The fact is you never came here tonight from Lewisburg. Now are you ready to talk to me? Oh! you are! Very well, who sent you—Cowan?"

I ran my gun muzzle hard into his ribs, and he nodded sullenly, his lips drawn back in a snarl. All the soft palaver had vanished, and he had become a cowed brute.

"I thought so; you belong yourself to the Cowan gang?"

"Not—not in their deeds of blood and violence," he protested. "The calls of my church compel me to minister to my scattered flock—"

"Never mind that kind of palaver, Nichols. Now what did he send you for?"

I waited, my eyes on his. I could not see the girl, and dare not avert my gaze for so much as an instant. The man wet his lips, as if they were parched, and I could perceive the nervous movement of his throat.

"I—I don't know."

"Don't know what?—this is my last call!"

"I don't know whether he is coming, or not," he blurted out reluctantly. "He was hurt in the night."

"And if he cannot come himself he means to send others. What for? What does he want of the girl?"

My hammer clicked, and the man cringing back, read the stern meaning of my face. A terrible suspicion surged over me, and I was ready to kill. He knew his life hung by a hair.

"To—to marry her," the words barely audible. "Not old Ned—his son, Anse."

I heard the startled exclamation of the girl behind me.

"Anse Cowan!" she cried, her voice full of undisguised horror. "Marry me to that low brute. Did he ever imagine I would consent, even ever look at him?"

I touched her with my hand in restraint, the revolver still at the preacher's heart. The whole foul plot lay exposed in my mind.

"There was no intention of asking your consent, Miss Harwood," I said, satisfied that she should know all, and face the truth. "There is a reason for this desperate act which I do not wholly fathom, but it has to do with the property here, and the feud between Cowan and your father. If Major Harwood be dead, as this man reports, you are the sole heir, and old Ned has conceived the idea of marrying you by force to his son. He has learned you are here alone, and unprotected, and in this creature of his—this canting preacher—he has found a fit tool ready at hand to do his dirty work. Is that it, Nichols?"

He muttered something inaudible.

"Answer, you black-hearted cur; you have confessed too much to hide any thing now. How many are coming with Anse Cowan?"

"Maybe a half dozen of the boys. I don't know; they were talking about it when I left, and thought it was going to be a great lark."

"Well, it is; you are finding that out already. When were they to be here?"

I shook him to loosen his lagging tongue.

"They were to ride out an hour after I did."

I threw the wretch back into the chair before the fire, but held him still covering before the point of my revolver. The dog had told us all he knew, and there was a snarl to his thin lips, drawn back and exposing his yellow teeth, showing that his only thought now was revenge. Any moment that gang of ruffians might appear, and I was helpless there alone to contend against them. I dared not move, dared not avert my gaze from the preacher; there was hatred and treachery in the depths of his eyes.

"Is there a lock on the parlor door leading into the hall?" I asked.

"A bolt—yes."

"Please close and bolt it, and then come back here."

I heard her turn and cross the room; caught the sound as she shot the bolt, and her light step again on the floor.

"Now, something to tie this man with. We must be quick—the tablecloth will do. Sweep that clutter of dishes on to the floor. Good! Now cut me the cord from that picture."

I had no thought of glancing about; I can scarcely conceive even now that I did, yet my eyes must have wandered an instant, for Nichols had the wrist of my pistol hand in his grip, and the revolver went spinning across the floor. There was a moment of fierce, breathless struggle. The fellow possessed no skill, but the wiry strength of a tiger. I found his eyes with my fist, and dazed, his hands released their grip, and I broke loose, my throat livid from his finger marks.

The flap of a gray skirt touched my face, and a blow fell—the man went limp under me, his head upheld by the angle of the wall. I struggled to my knees, still staring at him, uncertain as to what had actually occurred, struggling for breath. The girl stood over me, white-faced, her eyes wide open with horror, the remnant of the teapot in her hand. Suddenly her hands covered her eyes, the fragment of crockery falling noisily to the floor.

"I—I struck him," she sobbed, unnerved. "I—I have killed him!"

"No such good luck," I answered, recovering myself, and grasping her hands, so that I could look into her eyes. "The man is not dead—only stunned by the blow. He will be conscious in a minute. Do not become frightened; you did right, and we have no time to lose. You have a horse somewhere?"

She hesitated, her hands still held in mine unconsciously.

"You—you mean I am to ride for Lewisburg—and—and you?"

"Oh, I must do the best I can on foot. We'll keep together as long as possible. Go, and hurry. Get a wrap, and your revolver."

She slipped out of the room, and up the stairs, her light steps making no sound on the soft carpet. I bent over Nichols, and as I touched him he stirred, and opened his eyes, staring up to my face.

"Don't hit me!" he whined. "I'm no friend of Anse Cowan."

"So you've had enough! Then take orders from me."

I gathered in the picture cord the girl had dropped on the floor. His wrists were big and knotted, and I drew the cord tight enough to make the fellow wince, despite his groans and pretense at severe suffering.

"Go up the stairs," I commanded sternly, "and keep close to the wall. Oh, you can walk all right, my friend, and I advise you to do as I say—you see this gun?"

The scowl on his face was malignant, and his eyes glowed like coals, but he moved on ahead of me across the hall, and up the carpeted steps. The lamp held high above my head in one hand, sent a stream of light through the black shadows, and revealed his every movement. At the head of the stairs the girl suddenly appeared, her face showing white in the glow of the lamp. A brown cape, fastened closely at the throat, enveloped her figure, and a cap was drawn down over her hair.

"What is it?" she questioned swiftly. "Is there any room up here windowless, and with a door that can be locked?"

She glanced about, uncertain.

"Why—oh, yes! there is a large closet off my room."

"Turn to the right, Nichols; into that room, where the light is burning. Oh, yes, you will! Kindly open the closet door, Miss Harwood. Don't stand growling there. Get in, I say!"

INDIANS IN UNITED STATES

How the Red Man is "Turning Defeat Into Triumph"—Increasing Attendance Shown at Schools.

No longer can it be said that the only good Indian is a dead Indian. That statement, born of ignorance of the real character of the Indian, is now definitely eliminated from the list of epigrams by a report of the census bureau on the present Indian population in the United States.

While the report shows a much lower rate of growth for the Indian population than for the white, an increasing mixture of white blood, and decreasing vitality of full-blood Indians, indicating a tendency to disappear altogether, it also shows increasing attendance at school and decreasing illiteracy, an increase in the percentage of the self-supporting and a decrease in the number of reservation Indians.

While the report shows that there were 265,683 Indians in the United States, exclusive of Alaska, in 1910 an increase of 17,430, or 7 per cent over the number reported in 1890, there are about 300,000 Indians in this country at the present time. Among them are to be found manufacturers, bankers, United States officials, mechanical engineers, locomotive engineers, telegraph operators, actors, artists, clergymen, college professors, physicians, surgeons and lawyers. The Indian has turned defeat into triumph. He has played the game according to the rules laid down by civilization and has won.

Marriage by Capture

By GREGORY GREEN

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

"And it's a shame, to see a girl of your age, who could still have her choice, remaining unmarried," said the old lady emphatically.

Little Miss Duffree smiled, for she knew the old lady's frankness. At thirty, she was still unmarried. She had been a belle once; her face told her that evening that she was still attractive, in spite of the hint of a line at the edge of the mouth, and of a thread or two of gray at the temples.

Once little Miss Duffree had been in love, madly in love. But he had gone away West, and after a while his letters ceased. Then she had plunged into work, never regarding her other suitors with any seriousness. She was the busiest mortal alive. In the morning she did her housework, and sewed, and marketed; in the afternoon she read the newspapers, skinned the latest book, sewed some more, dressed, visited the sick, put up preserves in season, and did the thousand odd tasks that any woman can find to do. And the thought of getting married had simply never occurred to her since Jack went away.

She really was an old maid. She could not have torn herself away from her round of duties.

It was three weeks after the old lady had gone away, shaking her head, that Jack came home. He had been gone seven years, and he was the talk of the village, with his money, his good looks, and the fact that he was still unmarried. He called upon little Miss Duffree almost as soon as May Duffree had heard of his return.

If the heart beneath the prim dress was beating faster than usual, little Miss Duffree gave no sign of it. Jack shook hands, sat down, and talked like an old friend. Sometimes Miss Duffree, looking up, found his eyes fixed upon hers in a puzzled way. At length he broke the comparative silence that had grown up between them.

"May," he said, "why have you changed so much?"

"I changed?" she asked in surprise. "Yes. You have been telling me all about the things you do; they seem to fill your life. Well—you used not to be like that."

"How do you mean?" asked Miss Duffree.

"Well, you—why, May, don't you remember how we went to the picnic and walked home together and talked poetry to each other all the way?"

"But that was eight years ago, Mr. McCallum. People grow staid as they grow older."

"But—May, listen! You have filled your life with a lot of inanimate things that mean nothing. You have become enslaved to them. They don't represent anything. There ought to be more humanity in your life."

Miss Duffree rose. "I know you mean well," she said icily, "but I have chosen my life."

He rose also. He took her by the hands. "May," he cried, "don't you see that I love you still? I have always hoped some day to return and ask you to be my wife. I felt I had no right to continue writing to you, when I had no prospects. May—"

She took her hands from his. "No, it is impossible, Jack," she said, with a touch of tenderness nevertheless. "But why?"

"I am what I have made myself. I loved you once, and I will admit I like you now as much as any man alive. But—well, I am cut out to be an old maid, I think. I couldn't face the prospect of beginning a new life. If any man married me it would be by force."

"I will carry you away captive," he began, half seriously.

She smiled. "I hope we shall always be friends," she said. There was finality in her tone.

Jack went away. He saw her several times afterward. But it was true, what he had realized: Miss Duffree's heart seemed to have been frozen years before. She was really an old maid by instinct. Jack McCallum had this view confirmed by the old lady.

"It's a great pity," she said, "but some women are like that. I don't know that there's any cure, except marriage."

"Is that a cure?" asked Jack, bewildered.

"A certain cure," said the old lady decisively. "Never known to fail."

"But you have got to marry them to cure them, and if they refuse to be married?"

"That's the point," said the old lady reflectively. "How are you going to make them?"

"And you think there's no chance for me?"

"I think," said the old lady, "that May Duffree cares for you as much as she is capable of caring for anybody. But she doesn't love you. She couldn't love—now. What in the world did you do to her, Jack, before you went away? Broke her heart?"

"If I had thought that," he answered, "I would have married her, money or no money."

"It's the safest way," said the old lady.

In spite of the old lady's warning Jack tried his luck again. He declared his love. Little Miss Duffree stopped him promptly.

"Now, Mr. McCallum, if we are to remain friends," she said, "you must realize that this cannot be. Won't you try? You know, I am fond of you, as a friend."

Jack told her it was impossible. He stayed away a whole week. At the end of that period, meeting her in the street, he fancied that she looked a little worried.

"I was expecting you to call last night," she said, and the point made little Miss Duffree look uncommonly pretty. Jack McCallum was more madly in love with her than ever.

"I meant to come," he answered penitently, "but I had an engagement. I had promised to call on the Duponts."

"O, those girls!" said little Miss Duffree acidly. "I hope you enjoyed your visit, Mr. McCallum."

With every nerve urging him to about that he hadn't, that he hated them, Jack managed, by a superhuman effort, to maintain silence. He had scored his point, he had piqued little Miss Duffree.

"You're clever," said the old lady, patting him on the shoulder. "But you won't win out that way, my dear boy. There's only one chance for you, and even then it's a hundred to one against. And if you lose you'll be the ridicule of the town."

"I'll take it," said Jack decisively. "I don't know," said the old lady. "I shall have to ask the minister what he thinks of it. If he agrees that it is a possible plan I'll tell you."

Before the old lady told him Jack had resumed his visits to Miss Duffree. His infatuation was evident. He had lost all that he had scored that day in the street. Miss Duffree lived in terror of the proposal that came again at last.

"May, if you'll be my wife you shall live on in this house and I'll only come on Sundays," said Jack. "You shall sweep and cook and dust and sew and—"

"O dear!" sighed May Duffree. "Won't you ever be sensible and understand, Mr. McCallum?"

He took his hat and stamped out of the house. But on the next day the old lady told him that the minister had endorsed her scheme.

"We must get her out of her house for the day," she said. "How can it be arranged?"

"Tell her about the new cooking demonstration downtown," said Jack bitterly.

"The very thing," said the old lady. "I'll get her to go with me and bring her here for lunch, and keep her till four in the afternoon, if I have to lock her in this room."

And she did it. If little Miss Duffree became vaguely uneasy about her home as the old lady chattered away, she concealed it as long as possible. The old lady was so insistent. She showed her one thing after another, until at length four o'clock came, and the suspense was over.

"And now, my dear, I've kept you so long that I shall just walk over with you in atonement," said the old lady. It seemed a queer sort of atonement to little Miss Duffree, but she accepted the old lady's company. But at the door the old lady showed no signs of going away, and Miss Duffree had to ask her in. The old lady walked in with her—into a transformed living room.

For, where the piano had been, was an improvised altar, at which the minister stood, and in front of him was Jack, and on little Miss Duffree's other side was Jack's chum, Kenneth Gray, who had known all about the affair, but of whom no mention had had to be made before.

SOUTH ISLAND NEW ZEALAND

ON MILFORD SOUND

THOUGH not generally known as a field for tourists and not often visited by American travelers, the South Island of New Zealand is so rich in scenic attractions that it merits more attention from those who seek the beautiful or imposing places of the earth. Moreover, it is not at all difficult of access. There is a direct railway running from Bluff to what is known as the "cold lakes" district, a distance of about two hundred miles. The visitor to that region usually begins his tour of the lakes at Kingston, where a government steamer meets all trains and conveys the traveler up Lake Wakatipu to the pretty town of Queenstown, a distance of 25 miles, writes W. D. Hornaday in Grit. Another steamer plies between Queenstown and the upper head of the lake.

Good driveways skirt the shores of this and other inland bodies of water, and running out of Queenstown is a road to the summit of Ben Lomom mountain, which has an altitude of 5,747 feet. Other pleasant drives may be made to picturesque towns and villages scattered through the rugged region. Lake Wakatipu is of great depth, soundings having been made to 1,242 feet in one place. "There are several perpetually snow-capped mountains in New Zealand, and on the North Island, a smoldering volcano, which emits smoke at frequent intervals, affords diversity to the view. Some of the glacial mountains are so Situated upon the sea-tossed shore of the South Island is the town of Bluff, which has the distinction of being what might be called the jumping-off place of the southern hemisphere. Its citizens claim that it is the most southern municipality in the world.

There is an element of romance in the very atmosphere of the community. It was there that several Antarctic expeditions paid their adieu to civilization and entered upon voyages into unknown seas. In the earlier days Bluff was the headquarters for many whaling expeditions. This industry gradually decreased, until it is now conducted only on a small scale. Living there today are a number of the sea-hardened men who belonged to whaling outfits. Some of them still have enough strength left to bring in their daily catch of fish, and others of their comrades spend their time idling about the wharf, watching the steamships and sailing crafts go to and fro, and regaling any listener that they may find with stirring tales of their ocean-going experiences. It is from Bluff also that most of the sea-elephants and penguin oil expeditions set forth. Some distance to the south of here lie the Macquarie group of islands, where most of these expeditions operate during a certain season of the year.

Tasman Sea Is Rough. It is 931 miles across the Tasman sea from Bluff to Hobart, Tasmania. The most popular route of travel beprecipitous that they offer extraordinary opportunity for the exercise of prowess on the part of mountain climbers. It is considered quite a feat to reach the summit of the highest of these rugged peaks.

Many natural phenomena are to be seen in both the North and South islands. Besides the wonderful and awe-inspiring outbursts of fire and water that greet the eye in the thermal district of the North Island there are some remarkable caves and other manifestations of an unseen power in the different parts of the Dominion.

Not long ago a new set of stalactite caves was discovered in the Nelson district. Of the two or three caves, one is supreme. It is tunnel-like in formation, a huge underground way, beautiful in its whiteness and the superlative decoration of deposited silica. A river that loses itself is also an attraction.

between New Zealand and Australia is that which runs from Auckland to Sydney. Auckland is about 1,740 miles north of Bluff. While the distance between Bluff and Hobart is some less than that between Auckland and Sydney, the former route is usually much rougher. There are few days in the year that the Tasman sea is not in a rage. A rough area of water extends far to the south and even borders the ice-locked land that surrounds the south pole.

So far as the town of Bluff is concerned, it presents few attributes of beauty. It occupies a site on the beach and running up into the hills a short distance and bordering it on all sides, except that which fronts the ocean, are rugged and desolate-looking rocks that give the spot a forbidding aspect. The country extending towards the interior of the island is well adapted to sheep-raising, and is taken up by large ranches or "runs."

STORAGE FOR APPLES DURING WINTER

1, 2 and 3 Are the Upper Ventilators, and 4, 5, 6 and 7 Show Positions of Lower Ventilators in Floor of Cave.

The possibilities of good or common storage for the apple crop and the profit that a good storage room might enable the grower to secure are often neglected. A good storage room would enable many growers to supply a local market for a large part of the apple season. Many small towns in orchard districts are poorly supplied with apples during the winter months, because the growers depend upon the commercial storage houses, which are located only at the larger towns. The cost of handling and shipping to and from storage may be saved in many cases by providing storage rooms that are clean and well ventilated, and in which the temperature may be well controlled.

The first requisite for successful storage is clean, sound fruit, picked before it begins to soften, carefully handled, and placed in storage with as little handling and delay as is possible. The grower should take every advantage of cool nights to get the temperature of his room as low as possible, closing all openings when the temperature outside is higher, and opening when the outside temperature is lower than it is inside. Fruit picked on a hot day may well stand in the shade until the next morning, when it will usually have cooled a considerable number of degrees.

At the Kansas experiment station a cave was made for storing apples, 24 feet long, 12 feet 6 inches wide, and 7 feet high, inside measurements. The side walls were eight inches in thickness, of concrete made of one part cement, three parts sand and five parts crushed stone. The inside of these walls received a finish coat of one-half inch thick of one part cement and one part screened sand, and troweled smooth with a steel trowel.

The slab forming the top of the cave was made eight and one-half inches in thickness, of concrete made of one part cement, two parts sand and four parts of crushed stone, reinforced with five-eighths-inch square twist bars, spaced four and one-half inches on the center, and embedded three-fourths of an inch above the bottom of the slab. The floor was made three and one-half inches in thickness, as follows: Base, three inches in thickness, made of one part cement to four parts of sand, and the top coat one-half inch in thickness, made of one part of cement and one part of screened sand, and troweled smooth with a steel trowel.

The top contained the three tile ventilators and the bottom four front ventilators—as illustrated—and the front contained a door 4 by 6 feet. This door was made in two sections, having a dead-air space of four inches between them. Each section was made of two thicknesses of flooring nailed together at an oblique angle, after the manner of an ice-house door.

This cave was constructed by contract, and cost, complete, not including excavation, approximately $300. Where sand and stone could be easily obtained a fruit grower could probably construct a similar cave for a less price.

From the experiments conducted with such caves, under favorable conditions, and by careful regulation it seems possible to carry a good grade of hand-picked apples until the first of March or later without serious loss. If the storage cave is located near the house so that it may receive constant attention, a storage temperature of 35 degrees F. or lower can be secured by the first of December and frequently much earlier than that. To secure this temperature the cave door must be opened each night that the temperature drops low, and closed again early in the morning. Several cold nights are required before a constant low temperature can be secured, as the cave walls being considerably above the temperature of the air admitted will cause a gradual inclination to return to the original temperature. Constant careful attention should be given the cave in order to have it about 40 degrees F. when the fruit is ready for storing, and to lower the temperature to 32 degrees F. or slightly lower within the following two or three weeks. If the cave is well banked, little trouble will be experienced in retaining a low temperature after it is secured.

Fruit kept in a cave usually remains more firm than when stored in a dry place; too much moisture, however, is to be avoided. By constructing the walls in such a manner that they will contain a dead-air space of two inches or more, it has been suggested, might eliminate this trouble. Good drainage around the cave is of great importance, both for the surface and subsoil. The surface waste can be run off by means of shallow ditches on either side of the cave.

BE PARTICULAR TO PACK BEST APPLES

Sort According to Size and Color
—Be Careful of Dampness in Storage Place.

If you have apples to sell and they have not been properly sorted and packed, now is a good time to do this work. Sort according to size and color, and pack in small boxes with paper between the layers, particularly if you have private customers, as most people like them better that way, than when packed loosely in barrels.

Be particular to select good apples of the same size for the top layer, but be just as particular to see that those in the middle and the bottom of the box are equally good.

Second quality apples should be packed in the same way, in boxes by themselves and the culls can either be made into cider or worked up for family use, or sold in the market for just what they are. If the second grade apples and the culls are packed in along with the best, you will get nothing more than the price for culls, as buyers always base their offering on the poorest quality of fruit.

If the fruit is stored in the cellar, it must be well ventilated and perfectly dry, although we have found that apples stored on a cement floor become too dry and are apt to shrivel. There is nothing better than an earthen floor for storing apples, or fruits of all kinds, provided the drainage is perfect.

If the cellar becomes damp at sudden thaws, the fruit should be looked over carefully and all imperfect specimens sorted out, and the sound fruit elevated two or three feet above the floor.

Green Food for Poultry.

Poultry need green food in winter. Mangels, turnips and cabbages are good. Alfalfa or clover cut early and cured green and lawn clippings are excellent. Some of these should be fed every day. Now is the time to prepare for a supply of such food for the coming winter.

FASTENER PREVENTS COW FROM CROWDING

Excellent Method for Fastening Cow.

The main feature of the cow fastener shown in the illustration is the bar L which prevents the cow from crowding too far forward. When eating she puts her head under the bar, which can easily be raised to H. The board J is eight inches by one inch, and four feet long. It is nailed on D and bolted through to F. This leaves a slot one inch wide between F and J for the bar to play in.

Do not try to save feed by turning to pasture too early.

Provide plenty of pure, fresh water, shade and protection against flies during hot weather.

Supplement poor pastures with corn silage or green soiling crops like rye, peas, oats, green corn fodder, cabbage and other available feed.

Feed cows daily one pound of grain in winter for every three pounds of milk produced, 25 to 40 pounds of corn silage, and what clover or alfalfa hay they will eat.

Do not turn cows out to remain and suffer in cold, stormy weather.

Allow them to have water which is not colder than that from a deep well twice or three times daily.

Brush cows daily if you can possibly find the time, for it pays better than does grooming of horses, which as a rule is not neglected.

Keep cows in clean, well-lighted, properly-ventilated stables.

Treat cows gently and avoid excitement.

Weigh the milk of each cow at milking time.

Get your neighbors to share with you in owning a Babcock milk tester and test the milk of each cow.

Discard the cow which has failed at the end of the year to pay market price for all the feed she has consumed.

A small four-bottle tester with glassware and full directions can be secured for about $5 of any creamery-supply company.

ESTABLISH THE MILK FLOW

Best Time Is When Cow Is Fresh and Should Take From Three to Four Weeks—Feed Liberally.

The time to establish the milk flow of the cow is when she is fresh. It should take three to four weeks to bring her to a full flow of milk and to eating a full ration. There is no other time in the period of lactation when care and judicious feeding have a more important bearing upon her year's record.

The dairy cow should be fed liberally, but care should be taken not to overfeed her and carry her beyond her capacity. This works injury not only to her milk function, but to her breeding powers.

Selling to Private Customers. Selling butter to private customers is almost a business by itself. You must have the market close to hand and you must be able to manufacture gilt-edged butter and give proper delivery and be a salesman besides. Really, furnishing butter to private customers might be separated from dairy farming. It is a separate business, but one man can handle both.

Going Down. The pastor looked over his glasses and shook his uncut locks. "Carrying out my original declaration," he said, "I'm about to call the names of those persons who are now asleep in the congregation. John Stackpole!"

There was no response. "John Stackpole!"

The stout man stirred again. "Be down in a minute," he drowsily called. "Keep things hot for me."

The pastor's voice rang out: "You're going down, all right, John Stackpole," he roared; "and things will be kept very, very hot for you! Let us now sing the ninety-ninth hymn."

Teddy Bear Saves Child. A teddy bear saved Grace Mower, five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Mower, from injury. Mr. Mower is the agent of the St. Paul railway and the family lives on the second floor of the depot building. The little girl was playing in one of the windows when the screen gave way and she fell to the brick wall. She held the teddy bear tightly in her arms and thus fell on it, preventing death or serious injury.—Cottonwood (S. D.) Dispatch to New York Sun.

Tailored Suit for All Weathers

A model in a tailored gown of serge, that made an early and successful entry into the race for favor, evidences the combination of two ideas. Loath to part with the trim-fitting and shapely coat that has held its own so long, the designer clung to the semi-fitted body, the revers and plain coat sleeves, but wandered into new fields in the matter of the coat skirt. This, instead of being plain and shaped, is straight and plaited, allowing a moderate flare. Even so, the plaiting is cleverly managed to preserve the severely tailored appearance of a style dear to the hearts of American women and with very good reasons for being a long time favorite.

The skirt is cut to fit at the normal waist line and about the hips. Thence downward it shows a gradual flare, as a concession to the mode. It is a little shorter than instep length, and an ideal model for a tailored walking skirt. Lapped seams and machine stitching, as in nearly all tailored gowns, give the required neatness of finish.

A leather belt in the color of the gown, piped with white, is a survival also of the preceding season. It might be made of the same material as the gown, and piped in self color.

This model is especially well suited to the heaviest materials used in tailored suits. Homespun, chevrons and the mannish worsteds might be chosen for it. In this case the lapped seams in the coat would be made with the raw edge of the lapped side showing and two or three parallel lines of machine stitching following the seam line with beautiful accuracy. Pique or dogskin or heavy washable gloves, tan-colored gaiters and a tailored hat are to be worn with this suit for all weathers.

Featuring Fur in Matched Sets

Perhaps it is because we are learning the value of unity in apparel that hats and neckpieces to match have been produced by milliners in greater numbers than ever. Or it may be that the fur for fur everywhere on everything has brought it about. At all events, hats with neckpieces to match make a feature not to be overlooked in the season's styles.

Turban shapes are usually chosen to use in these sets. When wide-brimmed hats are used the fur appears in a band about the crown, or in balls set at close intervals about it. Fur balls, especially those of opossum skin, are among the prettiest of trimming novelties. These and other fur balls all set at the back, front and sides of small velvet toques. A single large ball of opossum makes a pretty trim for a brimmed street hat.

In the picture above a turban of black velvet appears, having the coronet faced with Krimmer. A steel and velvet woodbine leaf is poised against the crown at the right front, where the coronet is cut away.

The neckpiece is a band of velvet edged with Krimmer, to which a plaiting of velvet is mounted. It fastens close up about the neck with a bow of satin ribbon at one side. A small rose and lark nestles just back of the bow against the velvet.

A short cape of velvet bordered with fur and velvet roll, trimmed in points and lined with satin, compose the other neckpiece. Pointed tabs of velvet fall from the cape at the front. It fastens under a small ornament having two hanging tassels of chenille.

Velvet cut in points appears about the turban brim and a fur band and tasseled ornament repeat the trimming features of the neckpiece.

Ornament for Table.

Sew a coarse flannel over the bowl of a broken goblet. Wet the flannel and sprinkle as much flaxseed or canary seed as will stick. Set this in a glass dish of water in a warm room. As the water soaks into the flannel add more. In two weeks you will have a beautiful center ornament for the table.

How to Tint Lace.

It may not be generally known that the beautiful parchment shade of lace which has been kept for any length of time can be obtained accurately by carefully dipping in a mixture of fuller's earth, to which has been added a pinch of saffron; but very little of the latter must be used.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Keep your heart open to the pleasures of generosity. Economy and prudence will put it in the power of the generous to give.

The measurements of heaven and earth are so very different that the things which seem to us only vexatious interruptions of our day's work, may be the greatest tasks given to our hands for the day.

GOOD EATING.

We may tire of various dishes, but breads are the standard which will always have a welcome; here is a new one:

Honey Bread.—Dissolve one yeast-cake in one cup of scalded and cooled milk, then add one-half a cupful of butter, a tablespoonful of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt, one beaten egg and three cupfuls of flour; beat three minutes; add more flour to knead; let stand to rise. Knead again; roll out and spread with half a cupful of walnut meats chopped, a cupful of honey and a quarter of a cupful of raisins chopped, all well mixed before spreading. Then roll and place in a pan to rise; bake in a moderate oven.

Tea Cakes.—To a cupful of scalded milk add four tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of sugar and a teaspoonful of salt; when lukewarm add a yeastcake dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of cold milk, one egg beaten, and three cupfuls of flour. Cover and let rise until double its bulk; cut down, rise again, then fill muffin pans two-thirds full. Let rise and bake in a hot oven.

Waldorf Oysters.—Peel and cut in thin slices half of a Spanish onion, fry brown in a tablespoonful of butter. Stir in a tablespoonful and a half of curry powder and another tablespoonful of butter. Pour on gradually a cupful of broth, cover and let come to a boil. Peel and chop a small sour apple and grate half a coconut. Put into the pan with the other ingredients and cook until the coconut is tender. Mix a tablespoonful of flour with a little stock, add to the mixture; season with salt and pepper and cook five minutes. Put a cupful of strained tomato into a saucepan with fifty oysters, their liquor and half of the milk of the coconut. Simmer until the oysters are curled. Add to the first mixture with a tablespoonful of lemon juice, then turn the curry on to a hot dish, garnish with croquettes and serve with a separate dish of boiled rice.

It can never be too early or too late to encourage the habit of observation; nor can we ever become too wise to be taught by influences which all created things are designed to exert upon the mind.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

Oysters are now on the market, and though expensive for a daily diet will be most welcome as an occasional dish.

Poached Oysters on the Half Shell.—Butter as many scallop shells as there are individuals to serve; put into each shell six oysters with their own liquor, sprinkle with salt and pepper, paprika, tomato catchup and a drop or two of tabasco sauce. Put a few bits of butter here and there on the oysters and set the shells in a dripping pan, then into a hot oven. Serve as soon as the oysters look plump and the edges are curled. Toast points or brown bread and butter sandwiches will be good to serve with these. Set the shells on paper doilies on plates to serve.

Baked Whitefish, Oyster Sauce.—Split the fish and lay open with the skin-side down. Season with salt and pepper, and place in a baking pan on a bed of diced pork. Bake in a quick oven, brushing it over once or twice with beaten egg and milk while cooking. Just before serving cover with buttered crumbs and bake until brown. Serve with oyster sauce.

Oyster Sauce.—Parboil a cupful of oysters in their own liquor, drain off this liquor into a cup and fill the cup with cream. Make of this a white sauce, season well with salt, pepper and celery salt, pouring a little of this over the fish, send the remainder to the table in a bowl to be served with it.

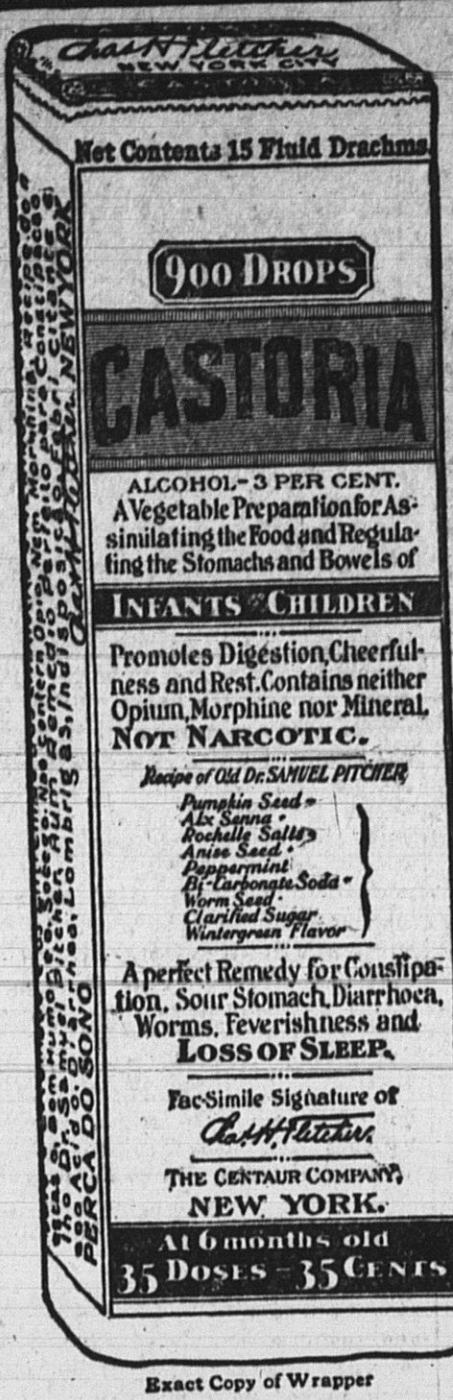

Creamed Fish Flakes on Toast.—Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add two of flour and mix well, then add a cupful of milk and a few dashes of red pepper. Add a can of fish flakes and let stand over the heat while toast is being prepared. Butter crisp rounds of toast and dip the edges in boiling water, then pour over the fish sauce.

ANURIC!
The Newest Discovery in Chemistry

This is a recent discovery of Doctor Pierce, who is head of the Invalid's Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N. Y. Experiments at Dr. Pierce's Hospital for several years proved that there is no other eliminator of uric acid that can be compared to it. For those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation—as backache, scalding urine and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, it is simply wonderful how surely "Anuric" acts. The best of results are always obtained in cases of acute rheumatism in the joints, in gravel and gout, and invariably the pains and stiffness which so frequently and persistently accompany the disease rapidly disappear.

Go to your nearest drug store and simply ask for a 50-cent package of NOTE.—"Anuric" is thirty-seven times more active than lithia in eliminating uric acid, and is a harmless but reliable chemical compound that may be safely given to children, but should be used only by grown-ups who actually wish to restore their kidneys to perfect health, by conscientiously using one box—or more in extreme cases—as "Anuric" (thanks to Doctor Pierce's achievement) is by far the most perfect kidney and bladder corrector obtainable.

"I suffered a long time with a very weak back," writes Fred Smith, 325 Main St., Green Bay, Wis. "A few boxes of Foley Kidney Pills completely relieved me of all soreness and pain in the back, and now I am as strong and well as ever."

One cannot help becoming nervous and feeling tired and worn out when the kidneys fail to filter and throw out of the system the poisonous waste matter that causes kidney troubles and bladder ailments.

Backache is one of Nature's danger signals that the kidneys are clogged up and inactive. It is often followed by rheumatism, annoying bladder or urinary disorders, puffiness under the eyes, swollen ankles and painful joints.

Foley Kidney Pills get right at the source of trouble. They invigorate the kidneys to healthy action and when the kidneys properly perform their functions the poisonous waste matter is eliminated from the system.

BREVITIES

JACKSON—There are 43 cases of diphtheria in this city.

JACKSON—Judge Parkinson granted eight divorces Friday.

ANN ARBOR—August Redis, 70 years old, charged with beating his wife, of about the same age, was sentenced to 30 days in the jail last Thursday.

JACKSON—Statistics show that Jackson's fire loss per capita is the second lowest in the state. All we've got to say about it is Jackson shows it, and a few good fires would help the architectural appearance of the city.

JACKSON—Supervisors of Jackson county have been warned by the tax commission not to spread any taxes for state and county purposes until the petition filed by City Assessor Cray for a review of the equalization has been disposed of.

STOCKBRIDGE—Fire broke out in the high school building here Sunday afternoon. Quick response by the fire department resulted in but little damage to the building. The cause of the fire is a mystery, and it looks very much as if "fire bugs" were beginning operations here again.

ANN ARBOR—C. Hour was taken before Judge Doty Monday, charged with being a drunkard and tippler. He was let off on suspended sentence, and was informed that if appeared there again he would be sentenced to 1500 hours in the house of correction.

MANCHESTER—A person started to read us the riot act the other day because we suppressed a certain unsavory piece of news. But when we mentioned a certain indiscretion of his which he thought was unknown he immediately saw the wisdom of our forbearance.—Enterprise.

JACKSON—That much local business, which would go to the Michigan Central railroad were it not for the strike of the clerks, is being turned to the electric road to Detroit, and to the Grand Trunk railroad, was the statement made by John C. Graham, traffic manager of the Jackson Chamber of Commerce.

YPSILANTI—Fearing Halloween celebrators might steal it, Irving Beach, a truck gardener west of the city, put $211 in cash he had in the house in a tin can, put the can in an old shoe and hid it in the bushes in his yard. Sunday night he discovered that the money was gone, and that his stepson had also disappeared.

JACKSON—Carl O. Neilson, of Cleveland is a patient at the city hospital suffering from injuries received Saturday night, when he was attacked twice and robbed within a space of five hours. The first time he was stabbed in the arm, and the next time received a blow on the head, and it is feared that his skull is fractured.

BLISSFIELD—There are some disadvantages as well as advantages in living in a village. A few nights ago a thresher ran his engine into town at 11 p. m. Stopped it at the triangle on the west side. Opened the escape valve and residents in that neighborhood were kept awake until 1 o'clock by the noise of the escaping steam.—Advance.

DEXTER—John Bross breaks the fishing record by catching a blue gill in Dunlavy's lake, that measured 104 inches in length. Mr. Bross, who is an old fisherman, says this is the largest blue gill he ever saw, with the exception of one, which he got in Zuke's lake about 40 years ago, and which was 11 inches long.—Leader.

DEXTER—The many friends of Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Honey, who have been life-long residents of this community, will learn with regret that they have decided to take up their residence elsewhere. Dr. Honey has sold his drug store, of which he has been proprietor the past 20 years, to H. W. Schall, formerly of Sparta, Mich., who has taken possession. Dr. and Mrs. Honey have not settled as to their future plans, but expect to spend part of the winter in California.—Leader.

GRASS LAKE—Stricken with paralysis Sunday morning while returning from Detroit, Adelbert W. Dwell died at his home here Monday night aged 65 years. He was a prosperous farmer, honored in political matters by his township, of which he was supervisor; later elected twice to the office of sheriff; active in the social questions of his home town; knight identified with Masonry; a Knight Templar and a member of the Elks, his acquaintance was wide and his good qualities prized by all with whom he was associated.

A Few Stray Epigrams or Otherwise BY S. M. B. F.

Undoubtedly there are many cases in which desire creates its own verification.

Some are always looking for slights; if we allow ourselves to be overcome by one, we thereafter look for a hundred.

No woman likes being set outside of love's list unless by her own choice, and the practicality of her sentence at will, is never a pleasing theme.

It is good to love and be loved! It is the purest well of happiness given us, yet how sure we are to trouble its crystal waters with our jealousy, or doubt, or selfishness.

There's a whisper of autumn in the air, a day that reminds one of active happy middle age life, the mellowness of autumnal light over plain and hill, is quite visible these days, surely.

It is in the details of life that character is shown. A man may go out very bravely to be beheaded if the world is looking on in pity or interest, but he may be a very disagreeable companion if the cobbler leaves a peg in his shoe.

Some pages of our lives are pasted down tight, and God knows how relieved we are to know and feel that it is so. There may have been a time when the mental and moral machine lacked a governor. They may have been just slips of a cog that was not counted seriously to our character in the end, but just the same we wish it might not have been counted against us.

A time ago I heard a somewhat celebrated divine say: "There was nothing original, there was no original sermons, essays or thought." I don't think he could have meant just this, but on the contrary wished to say all truth is one and that whoever had the genius to break through the shell of things and make his way into their very center and heart, brings back the same report of his deep seeing neighbor. The character of the report varies with the individual, but sometimes it happens to vary a little or not from his neighbor's story, and then comes the critic with the charge of larceny. The fact is, there are more parallel passages, and there's less plagiarism in the world than most persons dream. The greater our observation and the more comprehensive our thought on books and authors leads us to conclude that it is only the shallow critic who is forever detecting quotation or plagiarism and who mistakes the meaning of the phrase original.

They are the ideal laxative and those who depend upon them for results are the healthy, happy, care-free people who have no headaches, no bloating, no constipation, and who can enjoy both the work and the pleasure that come into their lives.
