CIVIL WAR VETERAN KILLED AT CROSSING

Aged North Lake Resident Meets Death in Path of Michigan Central Flyer Saturday Afternoon.

Failure to close the Main street crossing gates in ample time to prevent his driving onto the main tracks of the Michigan Central railroad cost the life of Richard Whalian, 78, North Lake resident, at 12:50 Saturday afternoon when the machine which he was driving was struck by a fast passenger train, eastbound. Mr. Whalian body was thrown clear of the demolished machine, landing several feet to one side of the track. A fractured skull and other injuries caused almost instant death, he lying only a few minutes after the crash.

Confusion on the part of both Mr. Whalian and the crossing watchman may be partially to blame for the fatal accident. According to persons who claimed to be eye-witnesses of the accident, the south gates were not lowered until after Mr. Whalian, who was approaching from the north, had driven onto the tracks. Apparently realizing he was caught in a trap it is thought the aged driver became confused and was neither able to stop his car or drive it headlong into the south gate, either move calling for quick action on his part. As fate would have it, the machine was brought to a stop directly in front of the onrushing flyer.

Efforts on the part of the engineer to avoid the crash were unavailing. Noting the machine in the path of the train, brakes were applied and warning whistles blown, the train being brought to a stop in less than its own length. Train officials quickly made an investigation into details of the accident before proceeding with the flyer, names of witnesses being taken and other notes made in this connection.

Physicians called to the scene were unable to render assistance and Undertaker Mapes was summoned to remove the body.

No inquest has been held, officials believing it unnecessary to go into details to clear up the accident. Claim Agent Frank H. Lutton, of the Michigan Central, from Detroit, was in Chelsea Tuesday, preparatory to clearing up the affair.

Richard S. Whalian was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1845. Following the death of his father when the son was ten years old, his mother was united in marriage to Daniel Haggerty and the family moved to Michigan in 1855, settling in Lyndon. Many years ago Mr. Whalian purchased a farm in Dexter township on the east shore of North Lake where he has resided since. He received his education in the district schools and at the Normal College at Ypsilanti.

In 1862 he enlisted in the Seventh Michigan Cavalry, known as the "Custer Brigade" and served three years and 41 days. He served four months in Andersonville prison and two months in Milan prison, being captured by the confederates May 11, 1864. He was discharged from the U. S. Army July 15, 1865, after having fought in 42 battles and wounded by a saber cut on the forehead. Up until the time of his death Mr. Whalian was the only surviving member of the Custer Brigade in this part of the county.

Mr. Whalian was twice married. In 1867 he was united in marriage to Harriet E. Johnson, who died in 1873. The second marriage was in 1877 when he was united with Mrs. Emma J. Glenn.

The deceased is survived by his widow, one son, Emmet Whalian of Larimore, North Dakota, one daughter, Mrs. C. J. Tremmel of Ann Arbor, and several grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. Whalian had made arrangements to spend the winter in Ann Arbor and had moved part of their household goods to that city previous to the fatal accident Saturday.

Funeral services were held from the North Lake M. E. church at 2:30 Tuesday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Harvey Pearce of Flint. Prof. Webster Pearce of Mt. Pleasant and Rev. Leigh Hagle, Interment in North Lake cemetery.

MRS. ROXANA GLOVER CALLED BY DEATH

Mother of Mrs. J. D. McManus Passes Away at Home of Daughter on West Middle Street, Friday.

Following an illness lasting over a period of several months, Mrs. Roxana Glover passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. D. McManus, on West Middle street, on Friday, October 5. Taken ill last November, Mrs. Glover was removed to the home of her daughter here in August and has remained here since that time.

Roxana Reed, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elson Cole, was born in Colebrook, Ohio, May 7, 1859. On April 10, 1876, she was united in marriage to Samuel Glover, of Morley, Michigan, and to this union was born one daughter, Mrs. Stella McManus, who survives along with the husband, one sister, Mrs. Jane Canfield, of Lansing; two brothers, Cyrus and Orenius Reed of Clare; one half-brother, Thos. Olds, of Loomis and a host of friends.

Fraternally Mrs. Glover was a member of the Royal Neighbors and W. R. C. at Morley, Michigan. Funeral services were held at the McManus home at 1:30 Monday afternoon, conducted by Rev. E. L. Sutherland of the Congregational church. Interment at Oak Grove cemetery.

MONDAY IS BIG DAY FOR UNCLE SAM

Over $150,000,000 in interest on Liberty and Treasury bonds will be paid out by the government on October 15th. Holders of Fourth Liberty Loan Bonds are urged to clip their interest coupons on this date and present them for payment at any bank or post office. The U. S. Treasury now issues "Baby Bonds" which sell for $20.50 each. Thousands of Americans have acquired the habit of buying one or more every month and have thus established a "reserve fund" the safety and growth of which is guaranteed by Uncle Sam.

All postmasters have been authorized to accept Liberty Bond interest coupons, which are due, as part payment toward the purchase price of a new "Baby Bond." Holders of Government securities in this way can make their interest earn more interest.

CAR ABANDONED AFTER COLLISION

Dodge Sedan Overturned and Occupants Injured in Accident at Freer's Corner.

A Dodge sedan, occupied by two men and three ladies was overturned on M17, at Freer's corner, Lima, at 11 o'clock Sunday forenoon. The party in the sedan were travelling west, and a Ford touring coming from the south, ran into the rear end of the sedan.

One of the ladies, mother of the driver, was quite badly injured and the other members of the party were more or less bruised.

After the collision the driver of the Ford abandoned his machine and left for parts unknown.

The Dodge car was taken to Jones' garage and the repair bill will be between $300 and $400. The body, top and fenders are practically ruined. The Ford was taken to Palmer's garage and the work on this car will amount to quite a sum.

Under the new auto law passed by the last legislature all drivers of motor vehicles should come to a full stop before they drive upon any trunk line as drivers on these thoroughfares have the right-of-way. Deputy Sheriff E. P. Steiner was called to the scene of the accident.

ADVENTURER WILL BE HERE SHORTLY

Author of "Captains of Adventure" is Practical Seaman; Stories Now in Standard.

The yacht Frontiersman, commanded by Roger Pocock, author of "Captains of Adventure" and numerous other novels of life in the open, is making its way here under sail, according to late advices from South America. The Frontiersman recently met with a slight accident off Manzanillo, Mexico, and later ran out of fuel at Serros Island after encountering heavy weather. It planned to stop at San Diego to take coal and then proceed to Los Angeles.

The yacht left London two months ago carrying a group of aviation experts, naval officers and scientists, thirty in all. The expedition is in command of Roger Pocock, and includes Captains Norman MacMillan and G. H. Malins, British air ace; Captains R. L. Spaulding and Robert Price, naval officers, and a number of arctic and antarctic explorers. The yacht is spying out a route for next summer's around-the-world flight in which MacMillan and Malins will participate as aviators.

The Standard is pleased to announce that it has secured publication rights to Commander Pocock's latest series, "Captains of Adventure" which appears weekly on another page. No man is better qualified, at the present time, to write such virile stories of adventure as this man who himself dares fate every day of his life.

PLAYERS MAY ORGANIZE LOCAL HORSESHOE CLUB

Organization of a "Barnyard Golf" or Horseshoe club in Chelsea, within the next few days is quite likely if "signs of the times" mean anything. The "klik" of iron on iron is to be heard from many directions these days as enthusiasts of the game get together to decide who shall make the most ringers. Sometimes they ring and sometimes they don't, but a lot of interest is being created in this sport which is gradually gaining popularity among those who go in for exercise of the "less violent" type. Regulation shoes have been purchased and games are being played "according to the rule book."

NEW PAPER CURRENCY

The new paper currency will soon be out. The faces of the new bills will carry portraits of well known figures in American history mostly presidents and the best known faces have been chosen for the bills most used. The one dollar bill for instance will have Washington's portrait the five Lincoln's and the ten Jackson's. Cleveland's likeness will appear on the twenty dollar bills while for the fifties and one hundreds the portraits of General Grant and Benjamin Franklin respectively have been selected. As for the two dollar bill a new design for it was not included in the changes since its discontinuation is being considered.—Ex.

Among the names registered at the convention of the American Oil Men's Association, held at the Congress hotel, Chicago, last week, were those of E. W. and J. Fred Staebler, of the Staebler Oil Company, Ann Arbor. A program mailed the Standard from Chicago, shows three days of lively entertainment for members of the association.

Editorial

WHEN LEADERS BICKER

The suit of Secretary of Agriculture Meredith against Senator Brookhart, of Iowa, for thirty cents damages for libel, is fundamentally serious even though newspaper paragraphers are making merry with the Secretary's apparently low self-valuation.

Mr. Meredith doesn't feel his reputation is damaged; he does think the Senator and others should think twice before they vent personal opinions, so he turns reformer for the universe.

It was all over a minor issue, of course. These public quarrels are usually but quibblings, their subject and developments unworthy of the opponents. Big men in high places decrease their stature and position by such bickering over trifles. Little wonder decades must pass before school histories can forget their littleness before recording their greatness.

It is obvious, naturally, that speaking ones mind about another is not a necessary concomitant of constitutional free speech. Telling a thousand people that a man is a crook violates the law, even though the charge be justified. Printing and promiscuously broadcasting a slur on a man's character is unworthy of any person, especially one a few inches above the multitude. Mr. Meredith feels himself slandered because the Senator blamed him for aiding in the ruin of farmers. Such a sweeping, vague accusation is of common occurrence, a political catapult, and should be discouraged the more because it can be so lightly made.

Apparently humanness isn't forsaken for laurel wreaths. The scepter doesn't always imply perfection. Man's frailties survive his ascendancy to high places, and creep out at moments when he and the world most need his greatness. When great men learn to remain great, suits for libel will be restricted to the madding crowd, where they belong.

A MAN OF SORROWS

Old letters now show the late Emerson Hough never got over being rejected by his first sweetheart, and his friends insist the moving beauty of his novels was due to his wounded heart. If this disastrous affair did occur really gave us "The Covered Wagon," we are tempted to wish modern chroniclers of imaginary mawkish sentiment could be similarly afflicted.

The old adage about sorrow expanding the heart instead of warping it seems justified by history. Lincoln heard pickaninies crying in Dixie because he lost Ann Rutledge. Goethe was sighing for Charlotte von Sise when he wrote "Liber allen Gipsels." Blind Milton pictured Paradise for men, who could see because he could go nearer than they. Tennyson, with his painful sensitiveness, immortalized heroic deeds of gallant knights, while Stevenson dragged his frail body across seven oceans and thrilled posterity's children with pirates bold and swarthy buccaners.

No man is complete unless he has known poignant sorrow. All great men have been greater because of suffering endured. The physician is a better healer, the minister a better comforter, when they have experienced mighty physical or spiritual agony. Grief gives a power of sympathy for mankind, an understanding and tolerance of human failings, which nothing else can. It adds warmth to a handclasp, a glance, a word. It brings an ineradicable kindness to the face. The Nazarene could never have won the world except by way of the cross. The sufferers of all time have been immortalized; those untouched by affliction have perished unsung. Stephen and Job belong to the ages; the names of their enemies are forgotten.

FAST EVEN WHEN SLOW

The voyage of the German-built airship ZR-3 across the Atlantic, planned for November, will be 4,500 nautical miles long, a route being chosen that promises freedom from storms. No attempt is to be made to speed the craft since it will be adventure enough for so large an airship to have the open seas. Nevertheless, the allowance of time for the voyage is only 140 hours, or less than six days. Not many steamers are doing better than this by following a route a third shorter than that of ZR-3. Aerial navigation has reached the stage where even the slowest and most experimental of flying vessels are certain to cover space more swiftly than other forms of transportation.

Wife Always Late.

Guide (in Yellowstone)—"Now, ladies, this phenomenon occurs every three minutes. Maybe you'd like to look down into the geyser before the next eruption." Mr. Smithers (calling to wife) "Not you! It's just like you to be late." —Wisconsin Outrigger.

AN ARMY OF CENTENARIANS

Somebody must have been taking a census of the centenarians. A medical writer says that there are 3,500 men and women in the United States over one hundred years of age. If that is true, there is no more distinction in longevity. The death of a centenarian is no longer important news, save for possibly neighborhood gossip. This staggering total would give at least one human century plant to every city, town and village in America. There is even a "One Hundred Year Club," with headquarters in Chicago, says the Tacoma News-Tribune. And let it not be said any longer that women will not reveal their age. In this club are many women who not only admit their matronly age, but brag about it. "Young at fifty, efficient at eighty, remain happy at one hundred," is the club's motto. This is certainly a better ideal than passive acquiescence in the casual remark attributed to Solomon about man's life being "three-score years and ten," and an extra ten years being nothing but "labor and sorrow."

KEEPING THE FAITH

One of the greatest outstanding examples of the journalistic code appears in the way the combined New York City newspapers wrote up daily developments in the pressmen's out-law strike which tied up every paper in the city.

The strike cost each paper thousands of dollars daily, and was admittedly unjustified. Yet when the newspaper combined for one morning and one evening edition, bulletins of the strike were written in the same impartial manner a trolley crash would have been. Not a line was editorialized; not a word was bitter or prejudiced. The same fair, unbiased attitude was observed which makes modern newspapers what they are; respected and trusted purveyors of legitimate news.

Most newspapers are as careful of their honor as any maiden. They have more rules than a co-educational boarding school, and usually follow them. Good journalism is a mania with the press as a whole, and the primary regulation is calm, impartial news articles. Editorial opinion is reserved for the editorial page. Readers have a right to cold facts, and to form their own opinion, and the press respects and encourages this right.

The strike offered editors and news writers a big chance to denounce the workmen; to present the publishers' side along and win public sympathy. It was an opportunity for pettiness and peevishness, as well as legitimate defense. Few laymen would have blamed the papers for calling the strikers every bad name in the calendar. Yet newspaper men all over the nation take a firmer grip on their ideals of journalism, and stand up a little straighter, because the profession held true in the hour of trial.

The strikers may not reciprocate by avoiding future disturbances. The average reader is so accustomed to fairness from the press this example may be unheeded. Newspaper men responsible claim no credit; it is all in the day's work. But if there is ever a final settlement, a general distribution of reward and censure, here or elsewhere, perhaps the ideals the newspaper cherishes will be weighed and not found wanting.

A KING WHO STICKS

Alfonso XIII of Spain still gazing out upon the world through the windows of the Palacio Real, must be getting some satisfaction from the present situation in his troubled land. Perhaps to him 13 doesn't seem such an unlucky number. A king since birth, he inherited what seemed the most insecure throne in Europe. Threatened by the fierce and rebellious Catalonians from within, with Carlist pretenders abroad forever conspiring to drive him out, with the disastrous wars with Cuba and the United States fought during the regency of his mother, Alfonso ascended the throne of a well nigh bankrupt nation. He is a young man yet, but he has seen the finish of almost every monarch who reigned when he was a youth. Death, violent or natural, revolt and abdication have accounted for a host of royal rulers, but Alfonso still is king of Madrid. The great modern epoch of monarchical elimination seems to have started right at his door, when Carlos of Portugal and his eldest son were assassinated and young Manuel was chased from the throne. On the surface, Spain is farther from a republic now than for some time, for since the war to make the world safe for democracy, countries along the Mediterranean have shown a decided trend toward the rule of the aristocrat.

Dwellers in Cities.

About 30,000,000 of the world's inhabitants live in 18 centers of population having a million or more residents each, according to German statistics. About 10,000,000 people live in 303 cities, or one person in every fourteen Wordsworth.

And then one goes back to his poetry—and his prose—and hears a voice of almost unsurpassed grandeur speaking the deepest of one's unexpressed thoughts, appealing to and drawing out all the divinest powers in man's nature. . . . He speaks direct to the laboring intellect and the sensitive heart; and the enjoyment of him, if great, is usually enjoyment of the austere kind, like mountain-climbing. —J. C. Squire.

THE GUNMAN'S DAY

The future student of these times, taking their measure and setting down their characteristics, say about the year 1950, is likely to describe the gunman as the outstanding figure.

Citizens and residents who were over-easy upon the trigger we have always had with us. But today we have more of them than we ever had before. They dwell in every section of the country. They are almost as bold as the "bad men" of the gold camps and the cattle towns of a half century ago and there is reason to believe that they shoot quite as straight.

Bootleggers hire gunmen to fight off prohibition officers and the gunmen of "hi-jackers," outlaws preying on other outlaws. The beer war now going on in Chicago is a war between rival bootlegging gangs, each apparently as well armed as the other and as ready to do murder. Gunmen have had a hand in the building labor disputes. They have provided the outward spectacle of the struggle between Sicilian feudists. They are attached to Chinese highbidding societies. Gunmen out of employ are thought to be the chief agents in bank hold-ups, payroll robberies and the raids on postal property.

Carried to its logical development, the use of gunmen must enter into national as in places it has entered into local politics. The private and law-abiding citizen may feel compelled in time to hire gunmen for his own protection against nomad gangs of other criminals, picking up chance dollars here and there. A man may be known less by the company he keeps than by the gunmen he subsidizes.

Waves of violence are seldom as long-lived as the present outbreak of thugery. Sooner or later some particularly vicious outrage arouses the public to a sense of its peril and brings gunplay to a sudden, death-rattling stop. The gunman is not a person of moderation. He is an extremist carrying in his system the germs for his own extinction. It is not hard to predict that within the next three or four years every gunman in the country will be underground, in the penitentiary or in flight for his life.

Turpentine Cleans Rugs.

An excellent way to keep carpets and rugs in good condition is to go over them once a week with a broom dipped in hot water to which a little turpentine has been added. This treatment not only prevents moths but freshens up the color of the faded carpet marvelously.

Grass Lake—On Wednesday of last week by order of the village council the clocks of this village were turned back one hour.

Parma—The Class of 1924 has closed a contract for a lyceum course to be given at Masonic Temple during the fall and winter months.—News.

Clinton—After about two weeks' work on a well at the home of E. A. Carney, 140 feet of water was obtained after going to the depth of 223 feet.—Local.

Brighton—Deerfield township farmers are complaining that Sunday duck hunters are shooting their sheep, either by accident or intent. In either case we don't blame them a bit for complaining.—Argus.

Dexter—A poultry culling demonstration was held Saturday forenoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gerhart Lesser. An expert from the M. A. C. was present and there was a good attendance.

Howell—The township of Hamburg held a special election Monday to grant the Detroit Edison a franchise. The result was unanimous in favor of the granting of the franchise.—Democrat.

Stockbridge—The Senior class of the high school of this village have made arrangements for a lecture course to be given during the coming season. The first number on the program was given on Monday evening of this week.

Grass Lake—E. A. Croman has an English Walnut tree in his yard which is now six years old. Last year the tree bore a few nuts which failed to mature. This year the tree ripened its fruit and the nuts seem to be of good quality.—News.

Freedom—Miss Ina K. Feldkamp, teacher in district No. 5, reports the following pupils neither absent nor tardy during the month of September: Lucile Bauer, Raymond Bauer, Carl Bilmeyer, Roy Bilmeyer, Florence Kuebler, Hildegard Lueckhoff.

Manchester—To further adorn the highways passing through the village would it not be a good plan to have flower beds made at the municipal plant and the public square next spring? Boxes filled with flowering plants might be placed at each end of the bridges.—Enterprise.

Lodi—Fire of unknown origin last Thursday night destroyed three new buildings, tool shed, garage and shop, and icehouse, on the farm of Fred Schlee about 11 o'clock. The fire had gained considerable headway before discovered by neighbors and passersby. Other nearby buildings were saved by quick work on the part of neighbors. Many of the tools and the automobile also was saved. The loss is covered by insurance.

Sharon—School district No. 2, Miss Emma Schlicht, teacher, has an enrollment of 24 pupils. Those neither absent nor tardy during the month of September were: Marie Bruns, Erwin Blumenauer, Dorothy, and Charles Dorr, Leroy Dresselhouse, Eleanor Feldkamp, Marian and Reta Frey, Alton Gieske, Edna Margaret, Homer and Robert Kappler, Dorothy Middlemiss, Lester Widmayer. Star speller for the month was Homer Kappler.

Manchester—Clayton E. Deake of Ypsilanti, county drain commissioner was in town Wednesday on business and called at the Enterprise office. This has been a pretty busy season with him and he has let over $41,000 worth of drains. Two were joint drains, one with Oakland and Wayne counties, and their expense in it was $9,600. Brooklyn—Since the steam shovel, dump cars and miniature railroad started operations improving the Chicago turnpike east of the Siam schoolhouse in Cambridge there has been much interest in the work of the Kalamazoo Construction Co. at that point in the Irish Hills. Between the schoolhouse and the Herbert Watkins farm house the curve in the road is being straightened by taking out trees along the south side and making quite a fill. The still sharper kink in the road between Will Brighton's and Ed Kelley's will be eliminated by slicing through the hill on the north side of the road and filling it into the deep gully on the right. Just east of Ed Kelley's two more sharp turns will be eliminated by cutting through the north edge of the orchard across the road from Ed Brighton's.—Exponent.

BUICK

Not Only 4 cylinder Car in America with Four Wheel Brakes!

In designing four wheel brakes upon its wonderful new four cylinder models, Buick provides a four cylinder motor car unequalled for sturdiness, power, beauty, comfort and safety. The widespread demand that met their introduction evidences how fully these models answer the need for a small car of proved dependability and performance.

All Buick 1924 six cylinder cars likewise have four wheel brakes.

Ford
THE UNIVERSAL CAR

New Touring Car

Looking at the new touring car from the side, you are at once favorably impressed with the all-steel of longer, more graceful lines secured by enlarging the cowl and raising the radiator.

Slanting windshield and cream top lend material aid in giving the entire car a lower, more stylish appearance.

An air-conducting radiator with the leader skirts is also a decided improvement.

A comfort feature much appreciated by owners, is the additional leg room provided by the enlargement of the cowl.

Allow us to show you the entire line of new Ford cars now on display in our show room.

These cars can be obtained through the Ford Weekly Purchase Plan.

NURSE FINDS A PERFECT REMEDY

"From my long experience as a nurse I do not hesitate to say that I consider Tanlac Nature's most perfect remedy," recently declared Mrs. L. A. Borden, 425 Pontus Ave., Seattle, Wash. Mrs. Borden is a graduate of the National Temperance Hospital, Chicago, and her wide experience in caring for the sick lends particular emphasis to her statement.

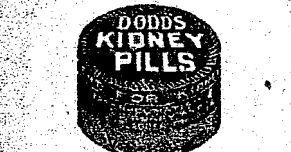

"I have used Tanlac exclusively for seven years in the treatment of my charity patients," continued Mrs. Borden, "and my experience has been that, for keeping the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels functioning properly and for toning up the system in general, Tanlac has no equal. Recently I had a woman patient who could not even keep water on her stomach for fifteen minutes. Six bottles of Tanlac fixed her up so she could eat absolutely anything. Another patient, a man, seemed unable to digest any food at all. Three bottles of Tanlac put him in such fine shape he went back to work. These two cases are typical. My confidence in Tanlac is unlimited."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists. Take no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

"ALINE'S MOTHER!"

Aline Laverne owns Cypressmont, a plantation in the Louisiana bayou. She leaves the management to John Philbrick, an old retainer and faithful but not a good business man, as Ah Lee, the Manchou, who is trying to help Aline, explains to the mysterious John Solomon. Aline's uncle, David Macarty, and his son, Felix, under pretense of looking after her interests, plot to get control of the plantation. One of their schemes is to dam the bayou and thus dry up her rice fields. Then they try to get rid of Philbrick. Aline suspects the Macartys and consults Jack Fortier, a young lawyer, who takes her case. He finds a big fight on his hands for the Macartys are as powerful. They try to bribe him off. Then they have him beaten up, but he is rescued by John Solomon. The Macartys drop over hostileities and invite Fortier and Aline to go on their yacht, the Watersprite, to inspect the plantation. Solomon has secured the job of steward. Aline gets a telegram from Philbrick, saying that he is going away for a while and has left the plantation in charge of Captain Wrexham. The Watersprite starts on her hundred-mile voyage. Quartermaster of Watersprite found dead on deck with second mate's knife in his back. Captain Wrexham entered at Cypressmont. Takes charge and pockets contents of safe. Philbrick charged with murder. Sheriff searches for him. Macarty attempts to bribe Wrexham to betray Aline. Laverne. Wrexham blows up the dam. Ah Lee and Wrexham, ancient foes, join hands. The Macartys steal Wrexham's schooner.

Wrexham sat alone in the library and suffered. Even had there been a launch to use, he knew how futile were any search. Within five miles there were a score of places where the little schooner might be hidden. Long ere this, no doubt, she had been perfectly concealed. A dozen boats might search in vain.

He cursed himself for having slept ashore, for having abandoned her. He could have awakened at the first step of an alien foot on her deck, at the first quiver of her parted cable. For her sake he had broken more than one law, had committed more than one crime. She was indeed deeper to his heart-strings than any creature of flesh and blood could have been.

For the moment, all fight was gone out of him. For the moment, the spirit in the man was broken. The thought of enemies on her deck, of stranger hands at riving and wheel, burned into him intolerably. He looked up and saw the picture of Aline Laverne cowering down at him. From his lips fell a curse. "I've staggered to his feet and shook his fist, all the worst of him at the surface."

"If it hadn't been for you!" he cried, hysterically. "If it hadn't been for you!"

He groaned, swept suddenly by helplessness. At whom to strike? There was none. He had come into a web of unseen enemies. Unless he were to go forth and run amuck like a crazed Lascar, he could do nothing. The breathing came from his nostrils harshly, chokingly. Suddenly he flung out his hands and glared at the picture from bloodshot eyes.

"I'm done!" he cried. "I'm done. I tell you. Played the d-d fool all the while. Set in at another man's game and got cooked. Served me right! I'm done!"

He heard Uncle Neb appear and instinctively invite him to breakfast. Wrexham blurted out a curse, strode to the door, slammed it until the house shook. He wanted only to be alone.

A Stranger Was Standing There.

He went back to the fireplace. For a space he gazed at the photograph there, looking into the eyes that met his so quietly, so serenely.

"I am a ruddy fool," he said, at last. "My place ain't here, man. I'm from know that you've ruined me, brought me to the gallows? Well, you have! I'll go out now and shoot that David Macarty—and the schooner—gone—and they'll get me. Oh, I'd better wait here! Macarty will be along soon enough with an offer. If it hadn't been for you, I'd not be here now. And what'll I do? What'll you do about it? Tell me that!"

He gazed at the photograph, as though expecting some answer. Then he shook his head, and plucked at his beard with trembling fingers. His eyes widened strangely, self-reproach coming into their depths.

"No, I shouldn't blame you for it," he said at last, struggle for his voice. "No—no! I'm just a fool, man. God or the devil has been waiting around the corner all this while to hit me when I wasn't looking, that's all. And I'm fit, no mistake about that! Well, I'm done in. Lost my grip on things. This affair has—well, it's jolted me clear to the keelson. But I can't blame you, girl. I don't know about it. I'm just a fool."

He rested his arms on the mantel and looked into the eyes of the photograph for a time. Presently his brow went down on his arms and he stood there motionless. He was lost to all extraneous things, completely wrapped in his own wretched thoughts.

At length, compelled by some agency outside himself, he lifted his head and stood erect. He slowly turned, and perceived that the door was open again. A man, a stranger, was standing there, silently regarding him.

Wrexham returned the look in astonishment. The man was strong, henchy, frank, and keen of eye. One could see that he stood foursquare. Wrexham acknowledged inwardly that he liked this man on sight.

"Hullo!" he exclaimed. "And who the devil are you?"

"The stranger came in, ignoring the pose in which he had surprised Wrexham. He held out his hand.

"You're Captain Wrexham, of course? My name's Fortier—I just reached here. Glad to meet you, captain!"

Wrexham put out his hand, confusedly. Fortier turned and beckoned another man.

"And this is my friend John Solomon—he wants to say how for a while. Wrexham, and reach a friend of his up the bayou, a Chinaman by the name of Ah Lee. Do you suppose one of the boys could take him in a canoe? He'll have to be guided, of course."

Wrexham shook himself into a semblance of action—only a semblance. He seemed fascinated by the round, blank features of Solomon.

"What's this?" he said brusquely.

"Ah Lee? You know that beggar, do you?"

"Yes, sir," returned Solomon. "If I can find him, sir, I'll take care of me all right."

Wrexham waved his hand. "Canoe down there," he said abruptly. "Go get into it. I'll have one of the boys take you—those black devils know Ah Lee, right enough."

"Thank you very much, sir," returned Solomon, and disappeared.

CHAPTER XII

"And where's Miss Laverne?" demanded Wrexham, with his first show of interest.

The two men sat at luncheon. Hours had passed since the arrival of Fortier. During those hours, Wrexham had gradually recovered himself.

"She's at L'Anouche," returned Fortier. "There are some business matters she must attend to in person. David Macarty had to stop there, too; we had trouble on the way and got held up for a time. Only reached there last night. I got a launch early this morning and came on, with Solomon."

The talk languished again. The two men bit in silence.

Luncheon over, Uncle Neb produced a whisky decanter and the two men adjourned to the gallery. By degrees Wrexham lost his sullen air, and talked. At any other time he would have been entirely too concerned to say anything to Fortier about the picture on the mantel. Now, however, with the Nautilus gone, the man's mental barriers were down. He spoke frankly enough, in a detached way as though he were telling some other man's tale. He told of the influence exerted upon him by that photograph, and of the resultant consequences. He apprised Fortier that the Manchou who called himself Ah Lee was a friend and a man to be trusted, and went into the reasons for this.

Fortier wondered.

"The eyes of Aline Laverne," he mused aloud, when the seaman had fallen silent, "seem to have a strange power to reach men. Wrexham! A singular thing."

"Not a bit of it," said the skipper coolly. "Not a bit of it! Not singular at all. It's like Ah Lee said—that girl has the sweet purity of a flower. Well, then! When a lad's like me or Ah Lee looks into eyes like hers, something's stirred inside 'em. A man who has lived hard, who has seen life, knows what a cursed wonderful thing it is to be good. And that's all."

Fortier smiled.

Presently Wrexham departed, by himself, in the launch that had brought Fortier from town. He was gone for the remainder of the afternoon, searching nooks and corners of the bayous for those missing boats. When he returned, the stoop to his shoulders told his own tale of failure.

During this afternoon, Fortier was not idle. From Uncle Neb he added to Wrexham's story and gained supplemental details. Also, he learned a most extraordinary fact about that picture over the mantel in the library—a fact which he did not dare breathe to Captain Wrexham, however!

With dinner, Wrexham drank heavily and had fallen into a black and ugly mood. The meal helped to fetch him out of it, but Fortier saw plainly that the man was ripe for any sort of action that offered itself. The mention of Aline, too, made Wrexham uneasy.

Suddenly his eyes struck up at Fortier with keen, inclusive force.

"See here! D'you ever hear of the Gemini, or the Sea-moon—ah! So you have, eh?"

Fortier had not been able to repress an involuntary start at those names.

"There's some mystery about it," he responded. "Mr. Laverne died suddenly. He left these names scribbled on a bit of paper—that's all we know. I'd been hoping Philbrick might have more information. Did he tell you about them?"

"No such luck," Wrexham's face fell. "I don't like mysteries. I can tell you! What's the game these Macartys are playing? Tell me that!"

"I wish I knew it," said Fortier uneasily. "David Macarty is trying now to induce Aline to take a little cruise aboard his yacht. There's something here they want to grab. She'll probably be here, tomorrow, and we can go over matters in detail."

A Man Was Urging the Canoe Forward.

Wrexham fell into a frowning silence.

Dinner over, they sought the library and smoked. Fortier showed the skipper that scroll made by Laverne on the back of the document, but it threw no light on the situation. He put his papers with the others, in the safe, and was content to await the return of Aline before probing deeper.

It was still early when Fortier said good night, and followed Uncle Neb to the room prepared for him.

Not so Captain Wrexham. After going up and down the library for a long while, the seaman stuffed some cigars into his jacket pocket and escaped to the open air. He passed down to the wharf and resumed his careless strolling up and down the length of the planks. Under the glow of starlight, his clear tip burned steadily, a red dot of light.

Wrexham was in no mood to meet Aline Laverne on the morrow. As he gazed across the bayou at the darkness which enveloped the Macarty house, he promised himself a raid with torch and bullet in the dawn, unless something first turned up. That something would turn up, he firmly believed. Macarty would come to him with some offer, some bribe; he could have the Nautilus back, upon some sort of condition. Thus, it was, really for the coming of Macarty that Wrexham waited here upon the wharf.

Time fled, however, and Felix Macarty came not. Wrexham watched the waters with savagely burning eyes. He had almost decided to go to bed and get some sleep before his meditated raid of solitary vengeance, when he discerned a gliding shape down the bayou—a long silver of darkness against the starlit water.

He lighted a fresh cigar, patted the pistol in his pocket, and waited grimly. Slowly that dark shape drew near, heading for the wharf, and Wrexham saw that a single piddler, a man, was urging the canoe forward in silence.

"Come to make a deal, have you?" said the seaman.

A maddish laugh answered him. "News for you!" said the voice of Philbrick.

Wrexham stifled a curse and went down to the landing. Philbrick, by a miracle, got ashore and stood reeling. He was drunk. Also, he was tattered, and stained, and disreputable. His beard was a wild, tangled mass.

"Just been aboard your boat," he said, with a hiccup. "She's about four miles down the bayou, moored. Nobody there. Got some whisky. Have a drink?"

Wrexham disregarded the proffered bottle. He stood stiffly, staring at this apparition. His schooner—safe! He again, for the taking, it was incredible.

He shoved a cigar into Philbrick's hand and laid the bottle and drank lustily, clapped the graybeard on the back. "Good for you!" he exclaimed. "Good for you. Let's sit down and talk it over. There's no hurry. We got all night."

"You've been drinking a lot, out in the canchakes?" he asked.

"Aye," blurted Philbrick, with a ghastly grin. "Aye. Nothing to do but drink an' dream. You know what Aeschylus said about old men? 'Dreams left wandering in the day.' That's me, I'm far gone."

"You look it," said Wrexham brutally. "Why don't you lay off whisky?"

"Can't," Philbrick lifted the bottle and drank again. "It'll kill me."

Wrexham laughed. "Cure you, you mean! I'd cure you quick enough, if I had you aboard the Nautilus. By the Lord Harry, but I'd cure you! I've a notion to do it, too. I've a notion to shanghai you, make a man o' you, Philbrick. Can't do. You'd split like a—

at first, but a few weeks and see you a new man, I tell you!"

"You leave me alone," said Philbrick. "By the way, Miss Laverne comes home here tomorrow," observed Wrexham.

The effect of this remark upon Philbrick was extraordinary.

For a moment the man sat absolutely motionless, arm outstretched, maddish grin frozen on his lips. Then, over his tattered and filthy body ran a tremulous shudder.

"Oh, my Heaven!" he groaned. The words seemed fairly wrung out of his heart.

"What's the matter o' you?" demanded Wrexham in astonished wonder. "Ain't you glad? Thought you'd be glad to see her. And that man Fortier's here. He's a real un and no mistake. I can tell you! A real man. Worth a dozen o' you and me. Here, what's the matter?"

Wrexham rose in alarm. For Philbrick had come to his feet and was swaying unsteadily.

"Can't you see, fool?" groaned the overseer. "Look at me! I—I'm drunk. I'm all gone to pieces. Can't live an hour without whisky. All gone. Look at me! Think I can let her see me like this—ever?"

"It was true. Under the starlight Wrexham could see that the man's face was working terribly with the fear that was on him. Those days of steady drinking must have been frightful in their effect."

"Well, go slow, now," said Wrexham coolly. "I owe you something big, my man! You got to show me where that schooner is laid up, savvy? But wait a minute—I want to ask you something. Ever hear of the Gemini? Or the Sea-moon? Or the Queen of Sheba? Fortier wants to know about 'em. So does Macarty. So do I. What the deuce are they, anyhow? Stars?"

Philbrick put one hand to his head and groaned.

"No, no! They're in the desk in the library—two boxes of 'em. Stones. I don't know what. Laverne brought 'em home from Asia with him—he's keeping them for somebody. They don't belong to him, Jewels, maybe. Oh, my Lord! To think of her coming home tomorrow—and me like this! A dream left wanderin' in the day—"

"Shut up and talk," snapped Wrexham. "Jewels? Balders! More of your nonsense! See here, where's that schooner o' mine? Can you find her?"

"Four miles down the bayou, moored inside that little island," said Philbrick in a dazed voice. He gripped for the bottle, found it, lifted it to his lips for a long swallow.

"Ah!" he exclaimed. "I must get out of here before she comes home, cap'n! Must get out of here, understand? I'm all gone to pieces. Not as bad as Ah Lee, though! He'll be dead in a few days. Says so himself. Devils eatin' him up inside—arrr! But I made her laugh, all right, when I told him that joke on you. Made him laugh!"

"Hah!" growled Wrexham. "What joke's that?"

Philbrick uttered a wild laugh and flung out his arm.

"Joke, all right! You and that picture. Fell in love with that picture—ho, ho!"

Wrexham's hand fell on his shoulder, twisted the man around suddenly. The fingers gripped and bit like iron. The seaman's voice was cold as ice.

"Spill it! What's that joke, you old fool? What about it?"

"Picture of a dead woman!" mouthed Philbrick wildly. "Dead woman—Aline's mother! And you thought—you thought it was her all the while—you—"

There was a quick, low sound as the fist of Wrexham went home. Philbrick staggered, hung on his arms, whirled half around, then fell heavily. He lay on his face, motionless.

For a moment Wrexham stood over him, looking down. One would have thought that he was about to lash into the senseless old man with his boot—perhaps, indeed, he was. But he stood motionless, silent, for a long moment. Whatever emotion lay in his bearded face, could not be seen under the starlight.

Suddenly he stooped. His hands caught Philbrick's legs, ripped them savagely. In a moment he had bound the old man hand and foot, bound him hard and fast. Then he lifted the bound, senseless body and laid it in the canoe.

Without a word, Wrexham turned and strode up to the house. As a matter of fact, his brain was in a whirl, yet he knew exactly what he was going to do. As all came to him in a flash—came to him as he had stood there looking down. Despite his confusion of mind, despite the jumble of thought, he knew exactly what he must do.

He quietly walked into the house, went to the library, and sat down at the desk. There he penned a short, curt note to Fortier, telling him what he had learned from Philbrick. His lips curved in a sardonic twist at the mention of Jewels. He concluded:

"The old fool's drunk as can be. He'll be dead in a week if I don't take a hand. So I'm taking it. I'm going to make a man of him yet. We're off to sea."

"The plantation's in your hands. I've resigned. Yours truly,

"TOM WREXHAM."

Wrexham folded the note, placed it in an envelope, sealed it, and left it lying on the desk in plain sight. Then, a candle in his hand, he rose and walked to the mantel.

For a space he stood there, looking into the pictured eyes of the girl.

"So you're not Aline Laverne—but her mother!" he said at last. He was quite calm now. "It's a run go, this—a run go, I tell you! If it hadn't been for you, young Macarty wd be here now, and no mistake. Were you watchin' over her, I wonder?"

This thought must have awakened strange things in him. He stood there fascinated by those eyes which gazed down so sweetly and frankly into his. At last a sigh came surging from his lips.

"Oh, I knew it wasn't possible!" he said at length. "I knew no such such as you was living on this earth; and it's so. Maybe your girl's like you—I don't know. I ain't going to wait and see, neither."

He turned away. Then, as though loath to go, he turned again and looked at the picture. Those protruding eyes of his, which at times could blaze with so fierce and predatory a light, were now strangely softened. There was a tenderness in his air.

"Maybe," he said, hesitant, "maybe, now, you—wouldn't mind going along to sea with me and Philbrick? The old man has dreamed o' going to sea all his life and never dared. Now I'm taking him—going to make a man of him. Do you think it wd be worse o' me to take you along, miss? Would you mind going?"

He blinked at the picture. Then, suddenly, a smile touched his bearded lips. He reached up for the enlarged photograph, took it down from its place.

An instant later he blew out the candles.

He had gone.

CHAPTER XIII

Ah Lee lay gasping, until the pellet of opium eased his pain.

He who had worn the imperial yellow, now lay half-naked. He who as prince-delegate had guided the plow before the altar of Earth, now lay, a dying yellow man, on the threshold of death. The glorious tiled roof of the Manchou palace no longer covered him but the thatched roof of a hovel L, the cypress swamp, instead of sandalwood incense, there drifted across the night the sour odor of rice marsh, from the vats where the coals worked in the bayou's edge. He who had been served by princes and lords now had but one companion to witness his departure to the long home.

This companion was John Solomon.

Since these two men had last met, in the dirty restaurant in New Orleans, the Manchou had changed. Fate had overtaken him. His face had become a contorted mask of suffering; his body, a cauntly helpless machine that had suddenly run down.

"Did you ever read," said Ah Lee suddenly, "the books of a Frenchman called Hugo?"

"Not to speak of," answered Solomon, cheerily. "I've tried worry 'ard, but I don't like to be mistook in my details, as the old gent said when 'e was took up for Mickey. That there man was chuck full o' details, 'e was, and a mortal lot of 'em all wrong. 'E never bothered to look up 'is facts—'e just went it blind."

"Yet he was wise," said Ah Lee. "In one of his books he asks a question. It is this: 'Is there a providence of demons, as well as a divine providence?' He was right. The Macartys are served by a providence of demons. We are beaten and helpless."

"Look 'ere, you're all wrong!" said Solomon earnestly. "That's natural, 'cause why you're a Manchou, and you take stock in such things. Not me! Providence is Providence, I says, and I don't 'nd with demons and such."

Ah Lee made a weary, futile gesture.

"I 'ave me 'opas just like that," said Solomon. "That 'ere Fortier 'e ain't nobody's fool. They can't twist 'im around their finger."

"But what do they want?" said the dying man. "Why do they persecute her? What is the meaning of those words—the Gemini—Sea-moon—Queen of Sheba?"

"Didn't Philbrick know?" parried Solomon.

Health is the Most Valuable Asset You Have

Newage, Mich. "Some years ago I was troubled with dizziness, palpitation, loss of appetite and sore and painful stomach. I tried the best physicians I could hear of, and also several put-up medicines, but nothing did me any good. Some physicians said it was my heart; some said it was my stomach; while others said it was my nerves. I got so bad I could not work very steadily, when a friend came to see me and insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I was discouraged, but tried it anyway, and after taking the second bottle I felt much better. I then bought six bottles and believe the 'Discovery' saved my life. It was rightfully named 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I would recommend it to all who need such a medicine.—Chas. E. Backus.

Growing Sponges From Seed.

So important has the sponge become in every-day life that it is now grown from "seed" like ordinary land plants. Before 1914 the finest sponges came from the Mediterranean.

Pinckney—The late John G. Chalker during his lifetime filed a claim on government land on the shores and in Patterson lake and abutting the John Chalker farm. Other parties had asked for the same government land and after long delay the land was last week awarded to the John G. Chalker heirs. While most of this tract is in Patterson lake, about five acres is shore land containing valuable lots desirable for summer cottages and gives the Chalker estate frontage of about one-half mile on the lake shore.—Dispatch.

RESULTS THAT REMAIN

Are Appreciated by Chelsea People. Thousands who suffer from backache and kidney complaint have tried one remedy after another, finding only temporary benefit. This is discouraging, but there is one kidney medicine that has earned a reputation for lasting results and there is plenty of proof of its merit here in Chelsea.

Here is the testimony of one who used Doan's Kidney Pills years ago, and now makes her testimony even stronger.

Mrs. W. D. Arnold, E. Middle St., Chelsea, says: "I suffered greatly from dull, nagging backaches and a distressing pain through my kidneys which gave me a great deal of trouble. Doan's Kidney Pills from Fenn's Drug Store helped me wonderfully. They rid me of the backaches and corrected the action of my kidneys. I was better in every way after using Doan's."

The above statement was given July 7, 1909 and on April 27, 1920, Mrs. Arnold added: "I have the same good opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills now as I did when I recommended them before. They cured me and the cure has lasted."

LAPEER COMPANY WINS
OPENING TILT IN FIGHT

Of late years there has been an apparent growing jealousy between the Michigan Mutual Windstorm Insurance Co. of Hastings and the State Mutual Cyclone Insurance Co. of Lapeer. The Hastings company is the older company and paid little attention to the Lapeer company until in recent years when the local company began to make inroads on the cyclone insurance business in all parts of the state. Slowly, but surely, the Lapeer company has crept up on the older company, until its volume of business is almost the same and the company is rated as one of the best in the United States.

Apparently this state of affairs worried and chagrined the officials of the Hastings company. Detectives in the pay of the Hastings company have trailed agents of the Lapeer company, endeavoring to find where the agent would misrepresent or falsify about the Hastings company. They have already served notice on C. H. Rood, secretary of the State Mutual, that they had started suit for misrepresentation and falsifying about the Hastings company. The affair to date culminated last week when G. H. Cary, Jr., an agent of the State Mutual Co., was arrested at White Cloud in Newaygo county for obtaining money under false pretenses. The Hastings company contended that Mr. Cary sold a policy in the Lapeer company but told the party that he was selling them a policy in the Hastings company. When the matter got into court the Lapeer company won an easy victory when they showed that the insured party signed a regular application blank and could not swear that Mr. Cary stated he was an agent for the Hastings company. The jury was out just two minutes and returned a verdict of not guilty. Mr. Cary states that the party to whom he sold the insurance policy in question was an elderly woman who might have possibly gotten the impression that he was representing the Hastings company. But he feels that this is hardly probable, as her daughter, a school teacher, was in the room when the transaction took place. He believes that John Halloran, a detective of Grand Rapids, who was hired by the Hastings company, was largely responsible for the position the woman took in the matter. For, rather than have her dissatisfied in any way and giving her the benefit of the doubt, he went back and offered to cancel her policy and return her premium money. This she refused to do and was determined to bring the matter into court.

The officials of the Lapeer company are much pleased over the result of the White Cloud case and feel that it is only a forerunner of the victory they will achieve against the Hastings company when the other suit is tried.—The Lapeer County Press.

October is the month of changing colors. Bright shades of summer are giving way to the more somber shades of fall. The new colors and materials are lovely as the changing season. Brown seems to be the most popular shade, followed by blue in all its grades and the ever dependable black.

Charmeen is the favorite material and well it deserves to be. This soft, silky material drapes perfectly or falls into graceful lines. Trimmings are rich and add much to the beauty of the frock. The coat dress is of course in the lead, followed by the bloused frock. No matter what your choice may be you'll find it here.

Chappie coats are here in colors to suit anyone.

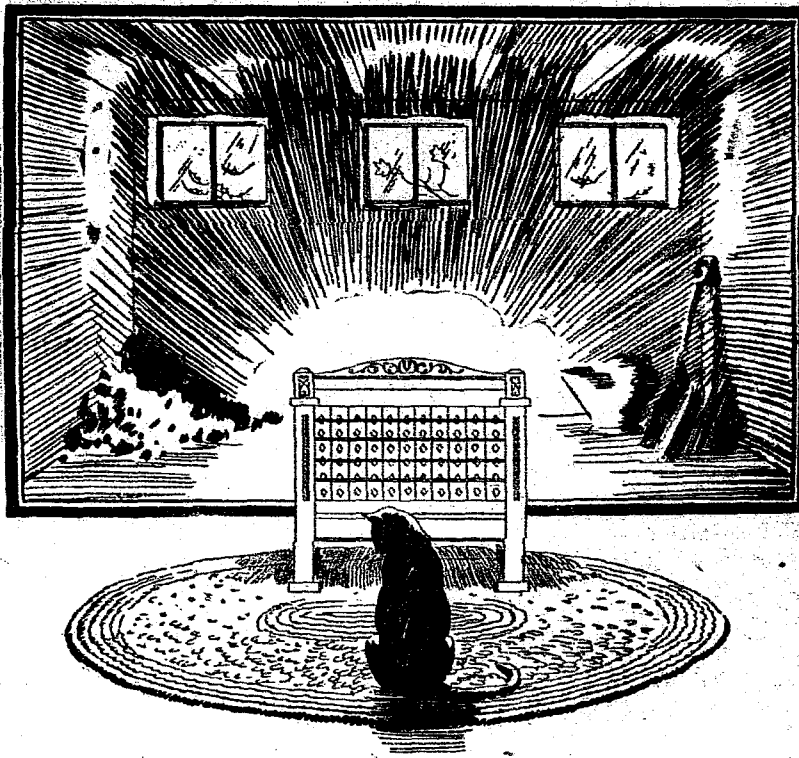

Skirts are smart to wear with sweaters or blouses, in camel's hair and heavy woolens.

Sports coats are plain or fur trimmed as you choose.

Lovely evening frocks are arriving for winter parties.

Dainty lingerie comes in pastel shades as well as white.

Is the distinction between success and failure the difference between great opportunities and small ones, or is it the difference between a weak and a strong ability to utilize the opportunities open to all? How many of us dare keep record of unused opportunities?
The Church gives to men's minds a perpendicular turn. Too often we live on the horizontal, dealing with material things.
The church helps us to lift our eyes to the glory of the spiritual, to the value of character, to God, the goal of the soul.
So we invite you to worship with some church, somewhere, and receive the above blessings.
